A bill to plug up loopholes in the anti-trust laws, proposed by Rep. Celler (D. N.Y.), was passed by the House—but the Senate did not act.

Public Power

Hopes for "more TVA's" didn't have much encouragement during the 81st Congress. Neither the Columbia Valley Authority nor the Missouri Valley Authority projects — both supported by CIO—moved beyond the talking stage in various committees.

Efforts of the power lobby to keep the government from moving electricity over its own wires from government dams, were defeated, when the Senate refused, in 1949, to knock out important sections of the Interior Dept.'s appropriation for this purpose.

And the Senate, the same year, bowed to the power lobby's will when it refused to confirm Leland Olds, effective head of the Federal Power Commission, for another term.

Foreign Affairs

In the field of foreign affairs, Congress backed up the general policies of the President—although not without bitter criticism from dead-end isolationists in both parties.

The European Recovery Program continued to receive its appropriations, but they were somewhat less than the President requested in order to do the maximum job of strengthening Europe's democratic forces.

The North Atlantic Pact, aimed at further strengthening of Europe's democratic powers, was ratified in the Senate, and Congress gave an O. K. to the Military Assistance Program—to help those countries build their armed forces.

Technical assistance to underdeveloped areas—proposed by Pres. Truman as his Point Four Program—won Congressional authorization. But appropriations were so small as to weaken the program's effectiveness.

Economic and military assistance to Far Eastern nations was delayed. The Korean aid bill was defeated in the House last January—largely by GOP votes.

It was passed later—but only after America's friends in the Far East had begun to wonder how ready we were to back them against totalitarian foes.

Congress Passes 11 Of 47 Bills Asked By HST

Congress had passed, by July 1, eleven measures specifically asked by Pres. Truman during 1950.

A survey by Congressional Quarterly, independent reporting agency in Washington, shows that the President had made a total of 60 legislative proposals to the Senate and House.

In the six-month period, Congress took partial action on 47, completing its work on 11 of these; and ignored 13 of the Presidential requests.

THE CIO NEWS 1950 VOTING RECORD

This special 12-page Voting Record of the 81st Congress — from January 1949 to June 1950 — is being printed as a separate supplement, for distribution among union members throughout the country.

PRICES:

5c a copy; 100 for $4; 500 for $17; 1,000 for $24

Rates for larger quantities upon request

★ ★ ★

Send your orders for the 1950 Voting Record together with check or money order, to:

THE CIO NEWS
718 JACKSON PLACE, N.W.
WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

Send.....copies of The 1950 CIO NEWS VOTING RECORD to:

Name .....

Union ..... Local No. .....

Street Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

Accompanying is check or money order for $.....

Please bill my union [ ].

Big Business $ $ $ Fight Fair Deal

FOR EVERY dollar a member of the CIO voluntarily gives for political action, Big Business spends at least $100.

That's the story that's been told time and again this year in the election campaigns that have been held thus far—and that's the story that has been told in the halls of Congress.

Spending the dollars given by CIO members for political action is the CIO Political Action Committee. It reports regularly to the Clerk of the House of Representatives where its money comes from and where its money is spent.

The report of the CIO-PAC, made four times a year, lists names, dates, places and is a financial accounting down to the last penny of what happens to the buck for PAC you gave your shop steward.

Spending the dollars of Big Business are dozens of outfits with typical "front organization" names—like Committee for Constitutional Government, National Economic Council, Foundation for Economic Freedom.

They report their political activities only in the vaguest terms—some of them not at all—and their officials have preferred to take the risk of going to jail for contempt of Congress rather than reveal their sources of income.

CIO-PAC operates in the open. Its literature bears its name proudly. It hides behind no Committee For Super-Duper Constitutional Government. There is no secret about its opposition to or support of a candidate for public office.

The records and history of this year show that Big Business operates in a different fashion. Its funds are channeled in through devious sources. Its agents work behind the scenes. It has more front organizations than the Communist Party ever dreamed of in its most exalted moments.

So direct and so flagrant has been the entrance of Big Business on the political scene that officials of the Republican party, according to the Christian Science Monitor, are showing signs of concern.

Where formerly funds went to the GOP for the professional politicians to do with as they please, funds now are channeled directly to the candidate—regardless of party—and spent by the candidate or agents of the contributor.

The Republican Party is left holding the bag—empty.

Thus Ernest T. Weir, long-time treasurer of the Republican Party, was a heavy contributor to the Democratic opponent of Senator Pepper (D) in the recent Florida primaries, and an equally heavy contributor to the Republican opponent of Senator Morse (R) in the recent Oregon primaries.

HERE ARE some of the "front organizations" of Big Business and how they work:

1. Committee for Constitutional Government—Set up in 1937 by newspaper publisher Frank Gannett as one of the original "Hate Roosevelt" organizations, the CCG is now one of the richest propaganda outfits in the nation, usually topping all reports for lobby expenditures.

In 1949 the CCG spent $620,000 and in the last three years it has spent over $1,500,000.

The CCG's "front" is the publishing business. Between November, 1949 and April 1950 it distributed 600,000 copies of a book by a renegade New Dealer, John T. Flynn called "The Road Ahead." In addition it has distributed millions of copies of a reprint of the Flynn book prepared by the Readers' Digest.

In the Florida primary election the reprint bore the inscription, "With the compliments of George Smathers," opponent of Sen. Pepper. In North Carolina the compliments were from Willis Smith, opponent of Sen. Frank Graham (D).

40 Million Pamphlets

In the last four years, it is estimated over 40,000,000 pieces of literature were sent out by the CCG with the taxpayers footing the postage bill, thanks to CCG pals in Congress who can sign their names instead of putting on a postage stamp.

Rep. Ralph Gwinn (R. N. Y.), a star in the CCG heavens, has sent out nearly 3,000,000 pieces himself to school teachers, ministers, businessmen, and anybody else on a likely-looking mailing list.

Before the voters retired him, Rep. Sam Pettengill (R. Ind.) ran Gwinn a close second in making the taxpayers foot the postage bill for the CCG.

Because Edward A. Rumely, executive secretary of the CCG—a man who in World War I was convicted under the Trading With the Enemy Act—in 1944 and again in 1950 defied the request of a Congressional Committee for information, no complete list of CCG contributors is available.

2. National Economic Council—This is the outfit that then U. S. Attorney General Robert Jackson described on October 16, 1940 as "pro-fascist."

It is run by a man named Merwin K. Hart, who was described by former Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes on November 20, 1940 as "a native fascist." It is the organization that former Rep. Joseph Clark Baldwin (R. N. Y.) termed "unAmerican" on April 11, 1941.

Hart is also the person who on June 20, 1950, announced to a startled corps of Washington newsmen that the present Supreme Court of the United States is "dedicated to socialism."

The court had just outlawed racial segregation in the schools of the land.

Some of the major contributors in the past three years to the National Economic Council are:

Irenee duPont	$28,930
Lammot duPont	$34,513
Gulf Oil Co.	$ 7,000
Pure Oil Co.	$ 2,500
The Texas Co.	$ 9,532
Wm. Volker & Co.	$32,453

Between August 1, 1946 and December 31, 1948 Hart's outfit got a total of $422,969.

3. Foundation for Economic Education—Leonard Read heads this outfit, which goes in for printing material bearing such titles as Will Dollars Save the World? (an argument against the Marshall Plan); Illusions of Point Four (President Truman's plan for helping underdeveloped areas get on their feet is no good); Roofs or Ceilings (rent control is no good); and No Vacancies (there's plenty of housing).

Read, prior to coming to the FEE, was executive vice-president of the National Industrial Conference Board, an off-shoot of the National Association of Manufacturers. He was also general manager of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and western manager of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

Big Firms Pay Out

For its "economic education" the Foundation received $404,000 in 1948, $285,000 in 1949 (an off-year) and $389,000 by March 31, 1950.

Some of the major contributors in those years were:

Armour & Co.	$20,000
Bemis Bag Co.	$13,000
Chrysler Corp.	$40,000
Consolidated Edison	$40,000
duPont de Nemours	$40,000
Ford Motor Co.	$ 5,000
General Motors	$50,000
B. F. Goodrich	$35,000
Gulf Oil	$40,000
International Nickel Co.	$20,000
Kresge Foundation	$15,000
Libby-Owens Ford	$20,000
Montgomery Ward	$40,000
Republic Steel	$37,500
Sears Roebuck	$13,000
Sun Oil	$20,000
Texas Co.	$ 4,500
U. S. Gypsum	$41,000
U. S. Steel	$40,000

(Continued on Next Page)

How Big Business Fights Labor, Fair Deal

AMA Plans Million Dollar Ad Campaign

(Continued from Previous Page)

In addition to publishing books, the FEE also runs a College-Business Exchange Program. College professors and instructors who want to take a year off for study are given fellowships to "study" at FEE headquarters at Irvington-on-Hudson, New York.

4. National Association of Real Estate Boards—Executive vice president of NAREB is Herbert Nelson, who has written that he thinks democracy "stinks."

He said so in a letter to T. A. Maenner, then NAREB president, dated May 31, 1949.

Nelson's views were, "I do not believe in democracy. I think it stinks . . . I don't think anybody except direct taxpayers (real estate owners) should be allowed to vote. I don't believe women should be allowed to vote at all. Ever since they started, our public affairs have been in a worse mess than ever."

Realtors Pitch In

NAREB spends $130,000 a year, of which its executive vice president gets $25,000.

No estimate is possible of the amount spent by local realtors. That they have spent plenty to fight the effectiveness of the recently-passed housing law is evident in the fights that have been waged in cities from coast to coast.

Most local realtors have been furnished a kit from the NAREB which outlines steps to be taken to prevent a locality from taking advantage of the provisions of the law.

These steps range all the way from fighting the selection of a proper site to opposing in court the necessary procedure for the issuance of bonds and other official actions.

5. The National Association of Home Builders moves closely with NAREB.

NAHB in 1948, according to a letter from its president E. R. Carr to local affiliates, attempted to capture the American Legion for its fight against housing legislation.

Frank Cortright, executive vice-president of NAHB, in 1949 found occasion to thank radio commentator Fulton Lewis for his work against public housing. "It was an important contribution to the all-out campaign we are waging," Cortright wrote.

Big AMA Drive

6. American Medical Association—This organization of doctors, has, in recent years, turned its interest from the professional problems of doctors to politics; and, since its assessment of virtually all doctors in the U. S. of $25 each (Taft-Hartley doesn't apply to the AMA), it has led the list of all lobby spenders.

The AMA, while professing to stay away from politics, has nevertheless furnished doctors with a list of "do's and dont's" for politics and advised the doctors to pitch in.

On October 8 the AMA is breaking its big $1,000,000 advertising campaign in the nation's newspapers. The ads will stress the dangers of what the AMA calls "socialism" and newspaper advertising managers have been told to look for possible "tie-in" ads from other sources.

The way it works was shown in a letter from a Glendale, Calif. contractor to Frank Cortright of the NAHB.

Reporting on the job done in the San Francisco valley of California in lobbying against the housing bill, the letter added:

"Kindly note how they (the San Fernando contractors) lined up the doctors and dentists who are opposed to socialized medicine and consequently are sympathetic toward us in our fight against socialized housing."

IN ADDITION to these organizations this year has seen the growth of numerous other "front" outfits dedicated to the fight on labor and amply backed with Big Business funds.

Workers in the mid-west have been subjected to the "gas chamber"—their name for the room in which they are forced to listen to high and low powered pitchmen sell Big Business views on politics.

Frequently the pitchman comes from a place called Harding College in Searcy, Ark., which has prepared turnover-talks contending that the Truman Administration and the Stalin dictatorship are blood brothers.

Workers are paid for the time spent attending the lectures and in some cases get over-time. But no questions are allowed from the floor.

Anti-Labor Ads

The west coast is afflicted this year with the Wage Earners Committee of Los Angeles which was extremely active during the California primaries.

The Wage Earners Committee publishes a magazine and, during the campaign, took full page ads in Los Angeles papers. The ads, decorated with cartoons, were devoted to proving that all labor leaders ride around in bullet-proof cars and have incomes of upwards of a million dollars a year.

People of California were told that unless they voted for the candidates of the Wage Earners Committee the "labor bosses" would take over the state. It was intimated that if that happened the sacred honor of Hollywood's movie queens would not be safe.

FRED A. HARTLEY, late of the House of Representatives and the Taft-Hartley Law, has also sought to cash in and has established what he calls the Free Workers Political Action Committee.

Hartley's literature pleads for contributions and declares: "It is too late to stick to party lines. Today we must elect the individual, not the party."

Many of the names bobbing up on today's "hate labor" organizations are the same names that can be found in the pages of the report of the Senate civil liberties committee.

That committee in 1937 under the chairmanship of then Sen. Robert M. LaFollette (Prog. Wis.), traced the course of labor spies and finks across the pages of American labor history.

Some of the names are new recruits to the "hate labor" ranks.

But this year, as never before, both the new groups and the old groups are united in their determination to smash labor at the polls, in their determination to elect more men like Rep. Clare Hoffman (R. Mich.) and fewer men like Sen. Frank Graham (D. N. C.).

For every dollar the CIO member gives voluntarily to help elect his friends, Big Business puts up at least $100 to elect our enemies.

REGISTRATION CALENDAR

Ala.—1st and 3rd Mondays in each month.
Ariz.—For general election: anytime until Oct. 2.
Ark.—A 1948 constitutional amendment permits the legislature to enact new registration laws. None passed as yet.
Calif.—Through Sept. 14, for general.
Colo.—Through Aug. 23, for primary; through Oct. 18, for elections.
Conn.—Oct. 14 to 21, throughout state. Additional dates: (See PAC 1948 book.)
Del.—Oct. 21.
Fla.—Through Oct. 7.
Ga.—Ended.
Idaho—Aug. 12 to Nov. 4.
Ill.—April 14 to Oct. 9. (Cook County: also Oct. 11-17.)
Ind.—May 15 to Oct. 9.
Iowa—Varies locally, but not after Oct. 28. (Cities over 10,000: re-registration on Oct. 26 and 27 and Nov. 4.)
Kan.—Through Oct. 17.
Ky.—Aug. 15 to Sept. 8.
La.—Ended.
Me.—Varies by cities from Aug. 22 to Sept. 9.
Md.—Baltimore & Montgomery County: Sept. 21 and 22. Elsewhere: Sept. 21 to Oct. 7.
Mass.—Varies locally, but not after Aug. 18, for primary or Oct. 6, for general elections.
Mich.—Through Aug. 23, for primary; through Oct. 18, for general
Minn.—Continuous through Aug. 22 (primary) and Sept. 13 to Oct. 17 (general). (No registration in towns of less than 15,000.)
Miss.—Ended.
Mo.—Regulations vary, but registration is year round in all localities, with different closing dates before elections. In St. Louis and Kansas City, registration reopens from Aug. 7 to Oct. 14.
Mont.—Through Sept. 22 for general.
Neb.—Aug. 9 to Oct. 28.
Nev.—Sept. 6 to Oct. 7.
N. H.—Dates vary locally (usually within a couple of weeks before the election).
N. J.—April 19 to Oct. 5.
N. M.—June 12 through Oct. 7.
N. Y.—June 1 to Sept. 26. In addition: New York City and Westchester County: Oct. 9-14. Cities of less than 5,000: Oct. 7 and Oct. 14. Cities of more than 5,000: Oct. 6, 7, 13, 14.
N. C.—Ended.
N. D.—Oct. 24. None in towns less than 1,500.
Ohio—May 12 to Sept. 27.
Okla.—Oct. 8-28.
Ore.—Before Oct. 7.
Pa.—Closes Sept. 18.
R. I.—Ended.
S. C.—Regulations vary locally, but not after Oct. 7.
S. D.—Oct. 31-Nov. 7.
Tenn.—Varies locally, through Oct. 18.
Texas—None in Texas.
Utah—Oct. 10, 17, 31. Provision made for voters absent on regular registration days—anytime except 10 days preceding an election.
Vt.—Check list revised some time previous to 36 hours before an election—set by town clerk.
Va.—Ended.
Wash.—Through Oct. 7.
W. Va.—Through Oct. 7.
Wis.—Through Sept. 7, for primary; through Oct. 26, for general election.
Wyo.—July 24--Aug. 21 for primary; Oct. 9-Nov. 6, for general elections.

THE SENATE'S RECORD

Here's a short description of each of the 13 votes on the opposite page. Read these descriptions of the issues — then see how your Senators voted.

1. T-H REPEAL—LUCAS AMENDMENT (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: This was an Administration effort to knock anti-union injunction provisions out of Taft-Hartley law and out of Sen. Taft's 1949 revised T-H bill section on so-called national emergencies. Sen. Lucas' amendment met united labor demands for an end to injunctions against unions. It was defeated.

VOTE: To pass the Lucas amendment ..... 44 (R)
To defeat the Lucas amendment..... 46 (W)

DATE: June 28, 1949.

RESULT: Republican-Dixiecrat coalition, encouraged by victory, went on to pass other Taft white-wash "amendments" to Taft-Hartley, and to scuttle repeal of Taft-Hartley.

2. T-H—TAFT 'PACKAGE' (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: This amendment, with few minor changes in language, re-enacted all of Taft-Hartley Act. Its passage spelled end of hope of repealing T-H during the 81st Congress.

VOTE: To pass the Taft "package" amendment..... 49 (W)
To defeat the Taft "package" amendment..... 44 (R)

DATE: June 30, 1949.

RESULT: Passage of this amendment, confirming Taft-Hartley Act, defeated chances of repeal of anti-labor law during the 81st Congress.

3. MINIMUM WAGE—ELLENDER AMDT. (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: This was key Senate test in labor's fight to lift U. S. minimum wages from 40 to 75c an hour. Sen. Ellender (D. La.) proposed only a 65c minimum, which would rise and fall with changes in cost of living. Proposal under-cut whole idea of steady floor under wages. Defeated.

VOTE: To pass Ellender "flexible-65c" minimum..... 26 (W)
To defeat Ellender amendment ..... 51 (R)

DATE: August 31, 1949.

RESULT: Defeat of this and other hobbling amendments paved way for final passage of improved 75c minimum wage law.

4. REORGANIZATION PLAN 12 (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Pres. Truman's Plan 12 proposed to make general counsel of Natl. Labor Relations Board subordinate to the Board itself. Plan would have ended high-handed anti-labor actions and policies of Robert Denham, NLRB's independent counsel, and would have improved efficiency of NLRB. Motion to veto Plan 12 was proposed by Sen. Taft. His motion carried, and Plan 12 was killed.

VOTE: To disapprove Plan 12 ..... 53 (W)
To approve Plan 12 ..... 30 (R)

DATE: May 11, 1950.

RESULT: Labor Board continues as divided agency, with General Counsel's office continuing to stretch Taft-Hartley's language against unions.

5. RENT CONTROL EXTENSION (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Real estate lobby had tried to end rent controls in 1950. Final compromise version of bill, though far weaker than that sought by CIO, provided six-month extension of controls, with an additional six months for those communities voting for it. Bill was passed.

VOTE: For the rent control bill ..... 36 (R)
Against the rent control bill ..... 28 (W)

DATE: June 12, 1950.

RESULT: Rent control won another extension—even though bill contained too many loopholes. But passage prevented many rent rises, evictions.

6. MIDDLE INCOME HOUSING (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Test vote on middle income housing bill came on amendment by Sen. Bricker (R. O.) to kill major provisions for cooperative housing projects financed by low-interest, long-term U. S. loans. Bill would have made moderate-cost homes available to wage earners and others not eligible for lowest-rent public housing. Bricker's amendment, backed by real estate lobby, passed—and killed the program.

VOTE: To pass Bricker amendment ..... 43 (W)
To defeat Bricker amendment ..... 38 (R)

DATE: March 15, 1950.

RESULT: Program to provide better, cheaper homes for low income families was defeated.

7. CIVIL RIGHTS—WHERRY RULES (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Complete blocking of President Truman's civil rights program was at issue when Senate, early in 81st Congress, adopted new voting rules offered by Sen. Wherry (R. Nebr.). Wherry rules were falsely described as plan to end filibusters—but actually, by providing for limitation of debate only on approval of 64 Senators, it gave wide open door to filibuster bloc. NOTE: Under Wherry rules, two Senate votes to end anti-FEPC filibusters were meaningless; most Republicans voted to limit debate, being mathematically sure that Dixiecrats would muster votes to keep filibuster going.

VOTE: To adopt Wherry rules ..... 63 (W)
To defeat Wherry rules ..... 23 (R)

DATE: March 17, 1949.

RESULT: President's civil rights program was completely stymied in Senate.

8. SOCIAL SECURITY—KNOWLAND AMDT. (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Sen. Knowland's amendment to social security bill proposed to cut U. S. supervision over states' unemployment compensation administrations. It would permit states to get federal compensation funds, while cutting down standards or adopting strike-breaking rules. Amendment was adopted.

VOTE: To pass the Knowland amendment ..... 45 (W)
To defeat the Knowland amendment ..... 37 (R)

DATE: June 20, 1950.

RESULT: Knowland amendment, with dangers to workers' jobless rights, was passed as part of general bill improving social security.

9. KERR NATURAL GAS BILL (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Kerr Bill—long supported by utility corporations—would have barred U. S. from regulating rates charged by natural gas producers not owning their own pipelines. Effect would have been to permit charging of far higher rates for their gas—at cost of millions to consumers. Bill was passed ultimately, but vetoed by Pres. Truman.

VOTE: To pass Kerr Gas Bill ..... 44 (W)
To defeat Kerr Bill ..... 38 (R)

DATE: March 29, 1950.

RESULT: Bill, with provisions to enrich already wealthy natural gas corporations at expense of consumers, was sent to House for action.

10. COMMODITY CREDIT BILL (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Bill provided additional lending power on the part of the U. S. Commodity Credit Corp., to help farmers finance favorable selling of their crops. Crop loans are a major need of farm families. Bill was passed.

VOTE: For the farm loan bill ..... 35 (R)
Against the bill ..... 35 (W)
The Vice-President voted for the bill, thus breaking the tie.

DATE: June 26, 1950.

RESULT: Farmers received additional $2 billion in borrowing power to finance crops.

11. PUBLIC POWER FUNDS (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Friends of private utilities lobby tried to cut Dept. of Interior appropriation—in order to eliminate funds for building of power transmission lines from government-owned dams in various sections of the country. It would have set back government's program for cheap power. Amendment was defeated.

VOTE: To keep appropriation for public power lines 45 (R)
To eliminate funds for public power lines.... 38 (W)

DATE: August 23, 1949.

RESULT: Government's power line program was continued, over objections of one of Washington's most potent lobbies.

12. EUROPEAN AID—TAFT AMDT. (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Sen. Taft's amendment proposed to cut $500 million from authorization for funds for third year of European Recovery Program. Such a slash would have seriously crippled effectiveness of entire program during a crucial year. Amendment failed to get majority vote and was defeated.

VOTE: For the Taft fund-cutting amendment..... 40 (W)
Against the Taft amendment ..... 40 (R)

DATE: May 5, 1950.

RESULT: European Recovery Program received funds in line with Administration's requests, to carry out necessary economic aid during coming year.

13. POINT FOUR PROGRAM (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Sen. Connally offered amendment to foreign aid bill to include authorization for Point Four program, which provides technical and economic aid to peoples of under-developed countries. Program, proposed by Pres. Truman, is essential to building up of democratic forces throughout the world and helping lift living standards. Point Four proposal was passed.

VOTE: For the Connally Point Four amendment..... 37 (R)
Against the amendment ..... 36 (W)

DATE: May 5, 1950.

RESULT: Point Four program was written into law, and plans accelerated for giving technical and health assistance to peoples in colonial areas living under sub-standard conditions.

	1. Taft-Hartley—Lucas Amdt.	2. Taft-Hartley—Taft 'Package'	3. Minimum Wage—Ellender Amdt.	4. Reorganization Plan No. 12	5. Rent Control	6. Middle Income Housing	7. Civil Rights—Wherry Rules	8. Social Security—Knowland Amdt.	9. Kerr Gas Bill	10. Commodity Credit Corp. Loans	11. Public Power Funds	12. ECA—Taft Fund-Cutting Amdt.	13. Point Four Program
ALABAMA
Hill (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	Z	R	R	R	R
Sparkman (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	W	R	W	R	R	R	R
ARIZONA
Hayden (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	W	R	R	R	R
McFarland (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	W	W	R	R	R
ARKANSAS
McClellan (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	X	W	W	R	W	W	W
Fulbright (D)	W	W	W	W	R	W	X	W	W	R	R	R	R
CALIFORNIA
Downey (D)	R	R	R	A	A	A	R	A	X	A	R	A	A
Knowland (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	W
COLORADO
Johnson (D)	R	R	A	R	R	R	W	R	W	R	W	W	A
Millikin (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
CONNECTICUT
McMahon (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R
Benton (D)	*	*	*	R	Z	R	*	R	R	R	*	R	R
DELAWARE
Williams (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W
Frear (D)	R	R	W	A	R	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	R
FLORIDA
Pepper (D)	R	R	R	A	R	Z	R	R	A	R	R	Z	A
Holland (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	R	X	R	W
GEORGIA
George (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	X	Z	R	W	W
Russell (D)	W	W	X	A	X	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	W
IDAHO
Taylor (D)	R	R	R	R	A	R	Z	Z	R	X	R	R	R
Dworshak (R) (Sworn in 10/15/49)			*	W	W	W	*	W	R	A	*	*	W
ILLINOIS
Lucas (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	Z	R	R	R
Douglas (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
INDIANA
Capehart (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	X	X
Jenner (R)	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W
IOWA
Hickenlooper (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	X	W	X	A
Gillette (D)	R	R	R	W	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	X	A
KANSAS
Darby (R) (Sworn in Dec. 2, 1949)	*	*	W	A	X	*	W	W	W	*	W	A
Schoeppel (R)	W	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A
KENTUCKY
Chapman (D)	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	R	Z	Z	A
Withers (D)	R	R	R	R	R	Z	W	W	W	R	R	Z	A
LOUISIANA
Ellender (D)	X	X	W	W	X	W	W	R	W	R	W	W	R
Long (D)	R	R	W	R	A	R	W	R	W	A	Z	X	A
MAINE
Brewster (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	Z	X	A	W	W
Smith (R)	W	R	R	W	A	R	W	R	R	W	R	W	R
MARYLAND
Tydings (D)	R	W	R	W	Z	X	W	R	A	R	W	R	R
O'Conor (D)	R	W	A	W	A	W	X	A	R	A	A	Z	A
MASSACHUSETTS
Saltonstall (R)	W	W	R	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	W
Lodge (R)	R	R	A	R	Z	R	R	W	R	W	A	R	R
MICHIGAN
Vandenberg (R)	W	W	R	X	A	X	W	A	Z	A	W	Z	Z
Ferguson (R)	W	W	A	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	W	W	W
MINNESOTA
Thye (R)	R	W	R	W	R	W	W	W	R	Z	Z	R	W
Humphrey (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
MISSISSIPPI
Eastland (D)	W	W	W	W	Z	A	W	W	W	A	W	R	W
Stennis (D)	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	W
MISSOURI
Donnell (R)	W	W	R	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W
Kem (R)	W	W	R	W	A	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W
MONTANA
Murray (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R	R	A
Ecton (R)	A	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W

	1. Taft-Hartley—Lucas Amdt.	2. Taft-Hartley—Taft 'Package'	3. Minimum Wage—Ellender Amdt.	4. Reorganization Plan No. 12	5. Rent Control	6. Middle Income Housing	7. Civil Rights—Wherry Rules	8. Social Security—Knowland Amdt.	9. Kerr Gas Bill	10. Commodity Credit Corp. Loans	11. Public Power Funds	12. ECA—Taft Fund-Cutting Amdt.	13. Point Four Program
NEBRASKA
Butler (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	W
Wherry (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
NEVADA
McCarran (D)	R	R	A	A	R	A	W	R	W	R	X	X	A
Malone (R)	Z	Z	R	W	R	W	R	W	X	W	R	W	W
NEW HAMPSHIRE
Bridges (R)	A	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
Tobey (R)	A	R	R	R	X	Z	R	A	R	W	R	W	R
NEW JERSEY
Smith (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	R
Hendrickson (R)	W	W	R	W	Z	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	R
NEW MEXICO
Chavez (D)	R	R	A	R	A	R	A	A	R	X	W	X	A
Anderson (D)	R	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	R
NEW YORK
Lehman (D)	*	*	*	R	R	R	*	R	R	R	*	R	R
Ives (R)	R	R	R	R	Z	R	R	W	R	W	W	W	R
NORTH CAROLINA
Hoey (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	Z	W	R	W
Graham (D) (Sworn 3/29/49)	R	R	R	A	A	R	*	A	R	A	R	R	R
NORTH DAKOTA
Langer (R)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	A	R	A	A
Young (R)	W	W	R	W	A	A	W	A	W	X	R	W	W
OHIO
Taft (R)	W	W	R	W	W	X	W	W	W	W	X	W	W
Bricker (R)	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
OKLAHOMA
Thomas (D)	R	R	Z	R	A	R	A	A	W	Z	W	Z	A
Kerr (D)	R	R	R	W	A	R	W	R	W	R	R	R	R
OREGON
Cordon (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W
Morse (R)	R	R	A	Z	X	Z	R	A	R	W	R	Z	Z
PENNSYLVANIA
Myers (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R
Martin (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
RHODE ISLAND
Green (D)	R	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
Leahy (D) (Sworn 8/24/49)			R	R	Z	A	*	R	A	R	*	R	R
SOUTH CAROLINA
Maybank (D)	W	W	A	W	R	R	W	R	W	R	R	W	A
Johnston (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	X	W	A	R	W	W
SOUTH DAKOTA
Gurney (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
Mundt (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	R	W	W	W	W
TENNESSEE
McKellar (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	W	R	R	R	W
Kefauver (D)	R	R	A	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	R
TEXAS
Connally (D)	W	W	W	W	A	R	W	R	W	R	R	R	R
Johnson (D)	W	W	W	W	A	R	W	W	W	R	R	R	R
UTAH
Thomas (D)	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	R	X	R	R	R	R
Watkins (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	X	X
VERMONT
Aiken (R)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	A	R	R
Flanders (R)	W	W	R	W	X	R	W	R	R	A	W	R	A
VIRGINIA
Byrd (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	X	W	W	W
Robertson (D)	W	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	W	R	X	R	W
WASHINGTON
Magnuson (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	Z	W	R	R	R
Cain (R)	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	W
WEST VIRGINIA
Kilgore (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	Z	R	R
Neely (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
WISCONSIN
Wiley (R)	W	W	R	W	A	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	R
McCarthy (R)	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W
WYOMING
O'Mahoney (D)	R	R	A	A	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R	R	A
Hunt (D)	R	R	A	R	R	A	W	R	W	A	R	R	R

READING THE SENATE RECORD

Symbol R means a Right vote, from viewpoint of CIO.
Symbol W means a Wrong vote.
Symbol A means Senator was Absent and not paired.
Symbol Z means Senator was paired Right.
Symbol X means Senator was paired Wrong.
Symbol * means Senator was not in office at the time of vote.

HOUSE VOTING RECORD

Here's a short description of each of 12 key votes in the House of Representatives. Read the description of these important issues — then turn to one of the next three pages to see how your Congressman voted.

1. TAFT-HARTLEY—WOOD BILL (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Rep. Wood (D. Ga.) proposed substitute bill in place of Taft-Hartley repeal bill. The Wood Bill was just as bad, if not worse, than T-H itself. Wood's substitute bill was passed.

VOTE: For the Wood Bill ..... 217 (W)
Against the Wood Bill ..... 203 (R)

DATE: May 3, 1949.

RESULT: Bill stymied efforts in House to repeal T-H during first session of 81st Congress.

2. T-H—RECOMMITTAL OF WOOD BILL (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Day after Wood Bill had been passed, foes of Taft-Hartley moved to recommit it, that is, bury it back in committee and nullify House passage of the Wood anti-union measure. Recommittal was voted.

VOTE: To recommit the Wood Bill ..... 212 (R)
Against recommittal ..... 209 (W)

DATE: May 4, 1949.

RESULT: Action nullified passage of Wood Bill, which contained many provisions more anti-union than T-H itself. But 81st Congress failed to repeal Taft-Hartley.

3. MINIMUM WAGE—LUCAS BILL (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Rep. Lucas (D. Tex.) offered bill as substitute to Administration proposal to improve wage-hour law. Lucas Bill provided for mass exemptions of workers from protection of wage-hour law, and weakened enforcement. Lucas was defeated in effort to install 65c base pay, rising and falling with cost of living. But main elements of his weakening bill were approved.

VOTE: For the Lucas Bill ..... 225 (W)
Against the Lucas Bill ..... 181 (R)

DATE: August 10, 1949.

RESULT: Some of the worst elements of Lucas Bill were removed in Senate-House conference committee—but effect of coalition-supported Lucas Bill was to weaken the 75c minimum pay bill that finally was passed by Congress.

4. RENT CONTROL (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Real estate lobby had tried to kill all rent control in 1950. Final compromise bill, as it came from Senate-House conference, had plenty of loopholes—but was far better than nothing. Bill, supported by CIO in order to keep rent control on law books, provided for six-month extension of federal rent control—plus another six months for those cities which vote for it. Bill passed.

VOTE: To extend rent control ..... 176 (R)
To end rent controls ..... 145 (W)

DATE: June 21, 1950.

RESULT: Federal rent control law was kept on the books for minimum period up until Jan. 1, 1951.

5. MIDDLE INCOME HOUSING (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Rep. Wolcott (R. Mich.) offered amendment removing major section from middle income housing bill—the section providing for long-range, low-interest loans to cooperatives engaged in providing homes for families in middle income group. Wolcott amendment—like similar Bricker amendment in Senate—had strong support of real estate lobby. Amendment passed.

VOTE: For the Wolcott Amendment ..... 218 (W)
Against the Wolcott Amendment ..... 155 (R)

DATE: March 22, 1950.

RESULT: House gave final defeat to efforts to provide decent housing for big group of American families not eligible for public housing and unable to afford to buy their own homes.

6. RULES COMMITTEE BY-PASS (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: House conservatives tried to abolish reforms in House parliamentary procedures, which had been adopted early in 1949. They sought to end new practice by which committee chairmen can by-pass opposition in House Rules Committee and get bills directly to House for vote. Rules Committee in past had held up many vital pieces of liberal legislation, and conservatives wanted that Rules Committee blockade re-established. Their effort failed.

VOTE: To keep House rules reforms ..... 236 (R)
To abandon rules reform ..... 183 (W)

DATE: January 20, 1950.

RESULT: Effort to re-establish Rules Committee as czar over all House legislation, with power to pigeonhole liberal bills, was beaten.

7. FEPC—McCONNELL AMENDMENT (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Rep. McConnell (R. Pa.) offered amendment to Fair Employment Practices Commission bill to remove all enforcement teeth from proposed measure. It would have left government with only advisory powers on FEPC—and without methods of enforcing bans on discrimination in hiring. McConnell amendment passed.

VOTE: For the McConnell Amendment ..... 221 (W)
Against the McConnell Amendment ..... 178 (R)

DATE: February 22, 1950.

RESULT: Dixiecrat-Republican coalition stripped Administration's FEPC bill of most of its teeth—thus pleasing anti-FEPC southern poll-taxers and many northern Republicans who wanted to pass "some kind" of FEPC bill—if in name only. Then Senate filibustered entire bill to death.

8. SOCIAL SECURITY—RECOMMITTAL (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Ways & Means Committee reported out social security bill containing many of improvements long advocated by labor. Republicans sought to send the bill back to committee with instructions to report out another, much weaker GOP bill. Recommital motion was defeated.

VOTE: For motion to recommit social security bill 112 (W)
Against recommittal motion ..... 232 (R)

DATE: October 5, 1949.

RESULT: House went on to pass, almost unanimously, the social security bill—increasing benefits and improving coverage.

9. KERR GAS BILL (Opposed by CIO)

ISSUE: Kerr Gas Bill would have barred U. S. from regulating rates for natural gas sold by so-called "independent" producers—and would have cost consumers millions of dollars a year. Bill was key test of Congressional desire to protect consumers from big business practices. Bill passed—but was vetoed by Pres. Truman.

VOTE: For the Kerr Gas Bill ..... 176 (W)
Against the Kerr Bill ..... 174 (R)

DATE: March 31, 1950.

RESULT: Kerr Bill, already passed by Senate, was sent to White House—where Pres. Truman, heeding complaints that bill would enrich wealthy corporations at expense of consumers, vetoed the bill. His veto was sustained.

10. ECA—SUFFICIENT FUNDS (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: Major foreign policy objective is to keep European Recovery Program operating in effective manner, to help rehabilitate economies of Europe. Higher living standards, achieved through ERP, are best method of offsetting Communist propaganda. But "economy" bloc has sought to cut funds of Economic Cooperation Administration below point where it can do its work. In 1949 Administration made effort to amend ECA appropriations to restore $150 million cut by "economy bloc." Amendment was passed.

VOTE: For the additional ECA funds ..... 177 (R)
Against the additional funds ..... 124 (W)

DATE: Sept. 29, 1949.

RESULT: Vote helped carry on ERP program, gave faith to European people that U. S. would carry out its pledges of full-scale economic help.

11. POINT FOUR PROGRAM (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: President Truman's "Point Four Program" calls for technical and economic aid to under-developed areas of world—to help them help themselves through introduction of modern industrial and agricultural methods. It has been hailed as effective method for improving living standards abroad, as offset to Communist propaganda. House GOP sought to recommit foreign aid bill to committee in order to remove authority for Point Four program. Recommittal motion was defeated.

VOTE: To remove authority for Point Four ..... 150 (W)
To keep authority for Point Four ..... 220 (R)

DATE: March 31, 1950.

RESULT: Senate and House agreed to Point Four program, now getting under way. Program has been hailed throughout democratic world as major aid to peoples and buttress against communism.

12. KOREAN AID BILL (Supported by CIO)

ISSUE: In June, 1949 Administration sought $150 million appropriation for economic help to people of South Korea during period ending June 30, 1950. Republicans delayed action bill till January, 1950, then cut the fund to $60 million; then House conservatives defeated entire bill for aid to people of South Korea.

VOTE: To give $60 million to South Korea..... 191 (R)
Against giving economic aid to South Korea 192 (W)

DATE: January 19, 1950.

RESULT: Bill was defeated—with loss of U. S. prestige in Far East. Later, Democrats and some Republicans brought up a new bill, with aid for Korea and Formosa, which was passed in February. But delay and adverse propaganda effects of original House defeat of Korean aid were serious blows to U. S. efforts to resist Communist infiltration in Far East.

LINE-UP ON 12 MAJOR ISSUES

	1. Taft-Hartley—Wood Bill	2. T-H—Wood Bill Recommittal	3. Minimum Wage—Lucas Amdt.	4. Rent Control	5. Middle Income Housing	6. Rules Committee Changes	7. FEPC—McConnell Amdt.	8. Social Security—Recommittal	9. Kerr Gas Bill	10. ECA—Sufficient Funds	11. Point Four Program	12. Korean Aid Bill
ALABAMA
3 Andrews (D)	W	W	R	R	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	W
9 Battle (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	R	X	R	Z	R
1 Boykin (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	R	A	A
6 deGraffenried (D)	A	A	W	R	R	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
7 Elliott (D)	R	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
2 Grant (D)	W	W	W	R	R	W	W	R	X	R	A	W
4 Hobbs (D)	X	X	W	A	W	W	W	R	R	R	R	A
8 Jones (D)	R	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
5 Rains (D)	R	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	W	A	R	W
ARIZONA
1 Murdock (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	W	R	R	R
2 Patten (D)	R	R	R	W	W	R	W	A	W	R	R	R
ARKANSAS
1 Gathings (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	R
7 Harris (D)	W	R	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
5 Hays (D)	W	R	W	R	W	R	W	R	W	R	R	R
2 Mills (D)	R	R	W	R	R	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
6 Norrell (D)	W	R	W	R	W	W	W	A	W	W	R	R
4 Tackett (D)	W	R	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W
3 Trimble (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	W	R	R	R
CALIFORNIA
7 Allen (R)	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	Z
8 Anderson (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W
11 Bramblett (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	A	W	W
14 Douglas (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	Z	Z	Z	R
18 Doyle (D)	R	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
2 Engle (D)	R	R	W	R	R	R	W	A	Z	A	R	R
4 Havenner (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
20 Hinshaw (R)	W	W	X	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	R	W
19 Holifield (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
16 Jackson (R)	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	A	X	W	R	W
3 Johnson (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	R	R	R
17 King (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
15 McDonough (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	W	R	W
23 McKinnon (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	W	R	R	R
6 Miller (D)	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
12 Nixon (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	R	A	W
22 Phillips (R)	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	A	W	A	W	W
13 Poulson (R)	W	W	X	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	R	W
1 Scudder (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
5 Shelley (D) Elected 11/8/49	*	*	*	R	R	R	R	*	R	*	R	R
21 Sheppard (D)	R	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	W	A	A	A
10 Werdel (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
9 White (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	W	R	R	W	W	W
COLORADO
4 Aspinall (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
1 Carroll (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	Z	R	Z	R
2 Hill (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	W
3 Marsalis (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
CONNECTICUT
4 Lodge (R)	W	W	W	A	W	R	R	W	R	A	R	R
3 McGuire (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
5 Patterson (R)	R	W	W	R	W	R	R	W	R	W	W	W
1 Ribicoff (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	Z	Z	A	Z	R
AL Sadlak (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	R	W	W	W
2 Woodhouse (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	A	R	A
DELAWARE
AL Boggs (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	A	W	W	W

READING THE HOUSE RECORD

Symbol R means a Right vote, from viewpoint of the CIO.

Symbol W means a Wrong vote.

Symbol X means Representative was paired Wrong.

Symbol Z means Representative was paired Right.

Symbol A means Representative was Absent and not paired.

Symbol * means Representative was not in office at time of vote.

	1. Taft-Hartley—Wood Bill	2. T-H—Wood Bill Recommittal	3. Minimum Wage—Lucas Amdt.	4. Rent Control	5. Middle Income Housing	6. Rules Committee Changes	7. FEPC—McConnell Amdt.	8. Social Security—Recommittal	9. Kerr Gas Bill	10. ECA—Sufficient Funds	11. Point Four Program	12. Korean Aid Bill
FLORIDA
2 Bennett (D)	R	R	R	R	X	W	W	R	X	W	Z	X
5 Herlong (D)	W	R	W	A	W	W	W	A	W	R	R	W
1 Peterson (D)	W	R	W	R	X	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
6 Rogers (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	Z	W	R	R	W
3 Sikes (D)	R	R	W	A	W	W	A	R	W	W	R	W
4 Smathers (D)	R	R	W	W	A	W	A	R	A	R	A	A
GEORGIA
10 Brown (D)	W	W	W	R	R	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
4 Camp (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	W
2 Cox (D)	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
5 Davis (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	W	W
7 Lanham (D)	R	R	R	R	W	W	W	R	R	R	R	R
3 Pace (D)	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
1 Preston (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	W
6 Vinson (D)	W	W	W	R	Z	W	W	R	W	Z	R	A
8 Wheeler (D)	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	R	X	R	X	W
9 Wood (D)	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	R	A	A	X	W
IDAHO
2 Sanborn (R)	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
1 White (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	A	A	W	W
ILLINOIS
16 Allen (R)	W	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	W	X	W	W
17 Arends (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	X	W	W	W	W
26 Bishop (R)	R	R	R	W	W	R	R	W	R	W	W	W
4 Buckley (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	Z	R	Z	R
11 Chesney (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	Z	R	Z	R
19 Chiperfield (R)	W	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	A	W	W	W
1 Dawson (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	Z	R	Z	R
8 Gordon (D)	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
10 Hoffman (R)	W	W	W	A	X	W	R	R	A	X	X	W
23 Jenison (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
12 Jonas (R)	W	W	A	R	A	R	W	R	R	W	W	W
3 Linehan (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
21 Mack (D)	R	R	R	Z	Z	R	R	Z	R	A	R	R
15 Mason (R)	W	W	X	W	X	W	A	W	Z	W	W	W
22 McMillen (R)	W	W	W	A	W	W	A	W	W	A	W	W
6 O'Brien (D)	R	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
2 O'Hara (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
25 Price (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
14 Reed (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	X	W	X	W	W
7 Sabath (D)	R	R	R	A	Z	R	R	R	A	A	A	R
20 Simpson (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
18 Velde (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	W	W	W
24 Vursell (R)	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	X
9 Yates (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
13 Vacant—Church (Died) 3/21/50
5 Vacant—(Gorski (Died) 12/4/49
INDIANA
3 Crook (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
8 Denton (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
2 Halleck (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
6 Harden (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	R	A	W	W
10 Harvey (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	A	R	A	R	W
11 Jacobs (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	W
4 Kruse (D)	R	R	R	W	X	R	W	R	Z	R	Z	R
1 Madden (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
7 Noland (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
5 Walsh (D)	A	A	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
9 Wilson (R)	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W
IOWA
5 Cunningham (R)	W	R	W	W	W	W	R	X	R	W	W	W
6 Dolliver (R)	W	W	X	X	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
3 Gross (R)	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	W	R	W	W	W
8 Hoeven (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W
7 Jensen (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A
4 LeCompte (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W
1 Martin (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	W
2 Talle (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W
KANSAS
1 Cole (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
5 Hope (R)	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W
3 Meyer (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
4 Rees (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
2 Scrivner (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
6 Smith (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W

HOUSE VOTING RECORD

(Continued from Previous Page)

	1. Taft-Hartley—Wood Bill	2. T-H—Wood Bill Recommittal	3. Minimum Wage—Lucas Amdt.	4. Rent Control	5. Middle Income Housing	6. Rules Committee Changes	7. FEPC—McConnell Amdt.	8. Social Security—Recommittal	9. Kerr Gas Bill	10. ECA—Sufficient Funds	11. Point Four Program	12. Korean Aid Bill
KENTUCKY
8 Bates (D)	R	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
4 Chelf (D)	R	R	R	R	W	R	W	R	R	R	R	R
1 Gregory (D)	W	W	A	R	A	W	W	A	W	A	R	R
9 Golden (R)	R	R	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	W	W	W
3 Morton (R)	W	W	W	A	W	R	W	A	R	W	R	W
7 Perkins (D)	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
5 Spence (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R
6 Underwood (D)	R	R	W	R	W	R	W	R	W	R	R	R
2 Whitaker (D)	A	R	R	R	Z	R	A	R	X	A	Z	A
LOUISIANA
8 Allen (D)	R	R	R	R	W	W	X	R	W	A	W	W
2 Boggs (D)	R	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	W	Z	R	R
4 Brooks (D)	W	W	R	R	W	W	W	R	W	A	R	R
1 Hebert (D)	W	W	W	Z	W	W	W	A	X	A	Z	W
7 Larcade (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	W
6 Morrison (D)	R	R	R	A	Z	W	W	A	W	Z	R	R
5 Passman (D)	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W
3 Willis (D)	W	W	R	R	W	W	W	R	W	A	W	W
MAINE
3 Fellows (R)	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	X	A	A	A	W
1 Hale (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	R	Z	R
2 Nelson (R)	W	W	R	R	R	R	W	W	A	W	A	W
MARYLAND
6 Beall (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	A	W	A
2 Bolton (D)	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	R	R
4 Fallon (D)	W	R	W	R	W	W	W	W	R	R	R	R
3 Garmatz (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	Z	R	Z	R	R
1 Miller (R)	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	W
5 Sasscer (D)	R	R	W	R	W	A	W	A	A	R	R	A
MASSACHUSETTS
6 Bates, Wm. H. (R) appt. 2/14/50			*	W	*	*	*	*	R	*	W	*
4 Donohue (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	Z	R	A	R	R
2 Furcolo (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	R
8 Goodwin (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	W
10 Herter (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	R	R
1 Heselton (R)	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
11 Kennedy (D)	R	R	Z	A	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	R
7 Lane (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	R
14 Martin (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
12 McCormack (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R
9 Nicholson (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
3 Philbin (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	W	R
5 Rogers (R)	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	W	W	A	W	R
13 Wigglesworth (R)	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	W	Z	W	W	R
MICHIGAN
12 Bennett (R)	R	R	W	W	Z	R	W	R	R	W	W	W
6 Blackney (R)	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
8 Crawford (R)	W	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	A	A	X	W
15 Dingell (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	A	R	A	R	R
17 Dondero (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	X
9 Engel (R)	R	R	W	A	W	R	R	R	R	W	W	A
5 Ford (R)	W	W	W	A	W	R	W	W	R	W	R	W
4 Hoffman (R)	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
2 Michener (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	R	W	W
13 O'Brien (D)	A	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
11 Potter (R)	W	W	W	W	X	R	R	W	R	W	W	W
14 Rabaut (D)	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
1 Sadowski (D)	R	R	R	Z	Z	R	Z	R	A	A	X	W
3 Shafer (R)	W	W	W	W	X	W	W	X	W	W	W	W
7 Wolcott (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	A	A	A	W
10 Woodruff (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	A	W	W	W
16 Vacant—Lesinski Died 5/27/50
MINNESOTA
7 Andersen (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	W	W	W
1 Andresen (R)	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	A	W	W	W
8 Blatnik (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	A	R	A
9 Hagen (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	W	W
5 Judd (R)	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	W	R	R	R	R
6 Marshall (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	A	R	R	R
4 McCarthy (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
2 O'Hara (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	W
3 Wier (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A
MISSISSIPPI
4 Abernethy (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W
6 Colmer (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W
1 Rankin (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	W
2 Whitten (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	R	W	W
3 Whittington (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	A	R	R
7 Williams (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W
5 Winstead (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	W

	1. Taft-Hartley—Wood Bill	2. T-H—Wood Bill Recommittal	3. Minimum Wage—Lucas Amdt.	4. Rent Control	5. Middle Income Housing	6. Rules Committee Changes	7. FEPC—McConnell Amdt.	8. Social Security—Recommittal	9. Kerr Gas Bill	10. ECA—Sufficient Funds	11. Point Four Program	12. Korean Aid Bill
MISSOURI
5 Bolling (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	R
9 Cannon (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
8 Carnahan (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
6 Christopher (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	R
4 Irving (D)	R	R	R	A	Z	R	R	A	R	A	R	A
10 Jones (D)	R	R	R	A	W	R	X	R	W	R	R	W
12 Karst (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
13 Karsten (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
1 Magee (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	W
2 Moulder (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	W
7 Short (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	W
11 Sullivan (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
3 Welch (D)	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R	Z	R	Z	W
MONTANA
2 D'Ewart (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
1 Mansfield (D)	R	R	R	R	Z	R	R	A	R	Z	R	R
NEBRASKA
1 Curtis (R)	W	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
4 Miller (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	W
2 O'Sullivan (D)	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
3 Stefan (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	W	W
NEVADA
AL Baring (D)	R	R	Z	R	Z	R	R	A	A	A	R	R
NEW HAMPSHIRE
2 Cotton (R)	W	W	W	A	W	R	W	W	W	W	R	W
1 Merrow (R)	W	W	W	A	W	R	W	X	W	R	R	R
NEW JERSEY
11 Addonizio (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
3 Auchincloss (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	W	R	W
8 Canfield (R)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	R	R	R	R
6 Case (R)	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
5 Eaton (R)	W	W	X	W	W	W	A	W	A	A	A	R
2 Hand (R)	W	W	W	Z	W	R	R	R	R	X	W	W
14 Hart (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
4 Howell (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	R
12 Kean (R)	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	W	R	R	R	W
13 Norton (D)	R	R	Z	R	Z	R	R	A	A	A	A	R
10 Rodino (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
9 Towe (R)	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	X	A	W	X	W
7 Widnall (R) Elected 2/6/50				W	W	*	W	*	R	*	R	*
1 Wolverton (R)	W	W	W	R	R	R	R	R	A	A	R	Z
NEW MEXICO
AL Fernandez (D)	R	R	W	A	W	R	W	R	W	R	R	R
AL Miles (D)	R	R	W	A	A	R	W	R	A	R	A	W
NEW YORK
25 Buckley (D)	R	R	R	A	Z	R	R	A	R	A	R	A
32 Byrne (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	A	Z	R	R
15 Celler (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	Z	A	Z	A
4 Clemente (D)	R	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
39 Cole (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	A	W	R
17 Coudert (R)	W	W	W	Z	W	W	R	W	A	A	W	X
35 Davies (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R	W
6 Delaney (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
24 Dollinger (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
28 Gamble (R)	W	W	W	A	W	W	R	W	W	W	W	W
44 Gorski (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
27 Gwinn (R)	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
37 Hall, E. A. (R)	W	W	W	A	W	R	R	W	A	W	W	W
2 Hall, L. W. (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	A	W	R
11 Heffernan (D)	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R	Z	R	A	R	A
7 Heller (D)	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	R
21 Javits (R)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	R
31 Kearney (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	R	W	W	W
40 Keating (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	A	R	R	W	W
10 Kelly (D) Elected 11/8/49			*	R	R	R	R	*	R	*	R	R
9 Keogh (D)	R	R	R	Z	Z	R	R	Z	R	A	R	Z
34 Kilburn (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	X	W	W	R	A
19 Klein (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	R
3 Latham (R)	W	W	W	A	W	W	R	W	W	A	W	W
30 LeFevre (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
23 Lynch (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	A	R	R
1 Macy (R)	W	W	W	X	X	X	Z	A	X	A	X	X
18 Marcantonio (ALP)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	X	W	W
26 McGrath (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A
14 Multer (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	A	R	R
16 Murphy (D)	R	R	R	R	Z	A	R	Z	Z	A	Z	A
13 O'Toole (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
8 Pfeifer, J. L. (D)	R	R	R	Z	Z	R	R	R	R	A	R	R
42 Pfeiffer, W. L. (R)	W	W	W	X	W	W	R	W	Z	A	Z	Z
22 Powell (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	W	X	W
5 Quinn (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
45 Reed (R)	W	W	W	W	X	W	W	X	X	A	X	W
36 Riehlman (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	X	A	A	X	R
12 Rooney (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
20 Roosevelt (D) Elected 5/17/49				R	R	R	R	Z	R	A	R	R
29 St. George (R)	W	W	A	W	X	W	W	W	R	W	W	W
38 Taber (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W
33 Taylor (R)	W	W	W	A	W	R	R	W	W	A	W	W
43 Tauriello (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	A	R	W
41 Wadsworth (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	X	X	W	W	W	A

	1. Taft-Hartley—Wood Bill	2. T-H—Wood Bill Recommittal	3. Minimum Wage—Lucas Amdt.	4. Rent Control	5. Middle Income Housing	6. Rules Committee Changes	7. FEPC—McConnell Amdt.	8. Social Security—Recommittal	9. Kerr Gas Bill	10. ECA—Sufficient Funds	11. Point Four Program	12. Korean Aid Bill
NORTH CAROLINA
3 Barden (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	A	W	A	W
1 Bonner (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	A	W	A	R	R
11 Bulwinkle (D)	X	W	A	A	A	A	A	A	A	A	A	A
7 Carlyle (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	A	R	W
5 Chatham (D)	W	W	W	W	X	W	A	A	W	A	R	R
4 Cooley (D)	Z	R	W	A	R	R	W	Z	W	R	R	R
8 Deane (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	A	W	A	R	R
9 Doughton (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	A	R	A	W
6 Durham (D)	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	R	X	R	R	A
10 Jones (D)	R	R	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
2 Kerr (D)	W	W	W	Z	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	A
12 Redden (D)	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	R	X	W	R	R
NORTH DAKOTA
AL Burdick (R)	R	R	R	A	Z	Z	R	R	Z	W	X	A
AL Vacant—(Lemke died 5/30/50)
OHIO
22 Bolton (R)	W	W	A	R	W	W	R	A	W	Z	R	R
3 Breen (D)	R	R	Z	A	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	W
11 Brehm (R)	R	Z	W	A	W	W	Z	A	W	W	W	W
7 Brown (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
9 Burke (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
5 Clevenger (R)	A	X	A	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
21 Crosser (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	A	R	R
1 Elston (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	R	A	W	W
20 Feighan (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	Z	R	R
18 Hays (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	A	R	R
14 Huber (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	Z	R	A	R	R
10 Jenkins (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
19 Kirwan (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
4 McCulloch (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
17 McGregor (R)	W	W	A	A	W	R	R	W	A	W	X	W
16 McSweeney (D)	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R	A	R	A	R	R
6 Polk (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
15 Secrest (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	W	R	W
8 Smith (R)	A	X	Z	X	X	A	A	A	A	X	X	X
12 Vorys (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	R	W
2 Wagner (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
13 Weichel (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
AL Young (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
OKLAHOMA
3 Albert (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	W	R	W	R	R	R
1 Gilmer (D)	Z	Z	Z	X	X	A	X	R	X	A	A	Z
5 Monroney (D)	R	R	R	A	A	R	W	R	W	R	R	R
6 Morris (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	W	R	W	W	W	W
4 Steed (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	W	R	W	A	R	R
2 Stigler (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	W	R	W	R	A	R
7 Wickersham (D)	R	R	R	A	W	R	W	R	W	R	R	R
8 Wilson (D)	R	R	R	X	R	R	W	R	W	R	R	R
OREGON
3 Angell (R)	R	R	R	W	Z	R	R	R	A	W	X	W
4 Ellsworth (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
1 Norblad (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	A	A	A	A	R	W
2 Stockman (R)	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
PENNSYLVANIA
1 Barrett (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	A	R	A
33 Buchanan (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
23 Cavalcante (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	X	A
4 Chudoff (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	R
30 Corbett (R)	R	Z	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	A	R	W
9 Dague (R)	W	W	X	W	W	R	W	W	W	X	W	W
29 Davenport (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
32 Eberharter (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	R
12 Fenton (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W
11 Flood (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	A	R	A
31 Fulton (R)	R	W	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	A	R	R
19 Gavin (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	X	W	W	W	W
14 Gillette (R)	W	W	W	W	X	W	X	W	W	W	W	A
25 Graham (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
2 Granahan (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	R
5 Green (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	A	R	R
7 James (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	X	W	X	W
28 Kearns (R)	W	W	W	A	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	W
27 Kelley (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	Z	R	Z	R
18 Kunkel (R)	W	W	W	W	X	W	R	X	A	A	A	W
8 Lichtenwalter (R)	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	W	A	X	X	W
21 Lind (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
16 McConnell (R)	W	W	W	A	W	R	W	W	W	W	W	W
24 Morgan (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
10 O'Neill (D)	R	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
13 Rhodes (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
15 Rich (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	W	W
26 Saylor (R) Elected 9/13/49			*	R	A	R	R	W	R	W	W	W
3 Scott, Hardie (R)	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	W	W	A	W	W
6 Scott, Hugh (R)	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	X	W	A	R	W
17 Simpson (R)	W	W	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	W	W	A
22 Van Zandt (R)	W	W	W	R	R	R	X	R	R	W	W	W
20 Walter (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	X	A	Z	R
RHODE ISLAND
2 Fogarty (D)	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
1 Forand (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R

	1. Taft-Hartley—Wood Bill	2. T-H—Wood Bill Recommittal	3. Minimum Wage—Lucas Amdt.	4. Rent Control	5. Middle Income Housing	6. Rules Committee Changes	7. FEPC—McConnell Amdt.	8. Social Security—Recommittal	9. Kerr Gas Bill	10. ECA—Sufficient Funds	11. Point Four Program	12. Korean Aid Bill
SOUTH CAROLINA
4 Bryson (D)	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	R	R	W	R	W
3 Hare (D)	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	R	W	X	W	W
6 McMillan (D)	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	A	W	A	W	A
5 Richards (D)	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	A	W	A	R	R
1 Rivers (D)	W	W	W	A	A	W	W	A	X	W	X	W
2 Sims (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	W	R	R	R	R	R
SOUTH DAKOTA
2 Case (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	W
1 Lovre (R)	W	W	W	A	W	R	W	X	A	A	X	W
TENNESSEE
9 Cooper (D)	R	R	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
10 Davis (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	A	R	W
5 Evins (D)	W	R	R	R	W	R	W	R	X	Z	R	R
3 Frazier (D)	R	R	R	A	X	R	W	R	W	R	R	W
4 Gore (D)	R	R	R	A	W	R	W	R	W	A	R	R
2 Jennings (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
8 Murray (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	W
1 Phillips (R)	R	R	W	A	R	R	W	R	R	W	W	A
6 Priest (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	Z	W	R	R	R
7 Sutton (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	W	R	W	R	W	W
TEXAS
3 Beckworth (D)	R	R	R	W	R	R	W	R	W	R	R	R
15 Bentsen (D)	W	W	W	R	A	R	W	R	W	A	R	W
17 Burleson (D)	R	R	X	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
2 Combs (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	W	R	W	R	R	R
21 Fisher (D)	W	W	W	W	X	W	W	R	W	R	W	W
13 Gossett (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	W
18 Guill (R) Elected 5/6/50			*	W	*	*	W	*	*	*	*	*
20 Kilday (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	W
12 Lucas (D)	W	W	W	W	X	W	W	R	W	R	W	W
14 Lyle (D)	R	R	W	A	A	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
19 Mahon (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
1 Patman (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	W	R	R	R
7 Pickett (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	W
11 Poage (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	A	R	W
4 Rayburn (D) Speaker
16 Regan (D)	W	W	W	X	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	W
6 Teague (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	W
8 Thomas (D)	R	R	R	W	W	W	A	R	W	R	R	W
9 Thompson (D)	R	R	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	R	R	R
10 Thornberry (D)	R	R	W	R	W	R	W	R	W	R	R	R
5 Wilson (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	W
UTAH
2 Bosone (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	R
1 Granger (D)	R	R	R	A	Z	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
VERMONT
AL Plumley (R)	W	W	X	X	W	W	A	W	W	A	W	W
VIRGINIA
4 Abbitt (D)	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	R	X	A	R	A
6 Burton (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	R	R	A	R	R
9 Fugate (D)	R	R	W	R	A	R	W	R	W	R	R	A
3 Gary (D)	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	A	R	R	R	R
2 Hardy (D)	W	R	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	R
7 Harrison (D)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	Z	W	R	W	W
1 Robeson (D) Elected 5/2/50			*	R	*	*	*	*	*	*	*	*
8 Smith (D)	W	W	W	R	W	W	W	R	W	R	W	W
5 Stanley (D)	W	W	W	A	W	W	W	Z	X	R	X	A
WASHINGTON
4 Holmes (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	R	W	R	R	W	R
5 Horan (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	A	W	R
2 Jackson (D)	R	R	R	Z	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
3 Mack (R)	R	Z	W	R	W	R	R	R	R	W	W	W
1 Mitchell (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
6 Tollefson (R)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	R	R	W	W
WEST VIRGINIA
3 Bailey (D)	R	R	R	A	R	R	R	R	A	R	Z	R
4 Burnside (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	A	R	R
6 Hedrick (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	Z	R	A	R	Z	R
5 Kee (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	A	R	R
1 Ramsay (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	R	R
2 Staggers (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	Z	A	Z	R
WISCONSIN
5 Biemiller (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
8 Byrnes (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W
2 Davis (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	W	R	W	W	W
9 Hull (R)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	W	X	W
6 Keefe (R)	W	W	W	A	W	R	W	R	R	W	W	W
7 Murray (R)	W	W	W	W	W	R	W	R	R	W	W	W
10 O'Konski (R)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	Z	A	X	W
1 Smith (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	Z	W	R	W	W	W
3 Withrow (R)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	A	W	R
4 Zablocki (D)	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R	R
WYOMING
AL Barrett (R)	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W	W

A Message To You . . .

From:

PHILIP MURRAY

President, CIO

YOU—AND every other American—have an important date in November.

Your date is November 7—Election Day.

Your job is to vote—vote for liberal, pro-labor candidates for public office.

Your job is an easy one—but too many Americans too often neglect it.

In 1950, while the men of our military services are fighting Communist aggression overseas, we have a solemn obligation to strengthen the democratic process at home.

The secret ballot is the fundamental basis of our democratic society. We must use it.

WE MUST VOTE to make a better America—and in doing so, to help ourselves.

The American citizen who goes fishing on Election Day will catch only trouble for himself, his family and his friends. They are the people who will be hurt by a small vote, a typical "off-year vote." And reactionaries will benefit.

In 1946, the American people "went fishing"—and landed the disastrous 80th Congress.

In 1948, working men and women went to the polls. They turned out many of the officials who had flouted the public will. We gave the Fair Deal an endorsement, and we gave our Congress a mandate for action. But much of our program was frustrated by the coalition of Republicans and Dixiecrats who opposed almost every effort to produce a better America.

In 1950, we have a chance to carry forward the program on which the 81st Congress embarked.

This year, our nation is mobilizing its strength to halt the menacing challenge of Communist arms.

In fighting for the life of our democratic system, we can afford neither "business as usual" nor "politics as usual." If our country is to achieve victory for democracy throughout the world, we cannot permit reactionary political action to win by default.

THIS YEAR—in 1950—our CIO Political Action Committee is more important than ever. Conservative candidates, who would flout the best interests of labor and the people, are hoping that we as Americans will say: "In time of war, it really doesn't matter who gets elected."

That is false doctrine, and it will be rejected by thinking Americans. In time of crisis, we must have liberal government alert to our needs and to the hopes and aspirations of people everywhere.

To fight evil totalitarianism, we must live at home in a spirit of equality of sacrifice. As every family shares its sons on the battlefield, so every group in the country—business, agriculture, labor—must equitably share the home front tasks.

A reactionary 82nd Congress will tilt the scales in favor of big business and special interests. It will shift the costs of national defense to those in the lower income groups least able to pay. It will hurt our mobilization effort.

A liberal 82nd Congress will be committed to equality of sacrifice—in taxes, in price controls, in manpower problems, in every aspect of our fight for freedom for all peoples.

ON NOVEMBER 7, we will be voting for continuation of those fore-sighted policies that have made America great and respected.

YOU can do your part in this mighty effort.

Be sure that you are REGISTERED to vote.

Give your dollars to PAC—so it can bring the issues to all the people.

And, on Election Day, VOTE for candidates endorsed by labor and pledged to uphold the people's welfare.

Philip Murray

From:

JACK KROLL

Director, CIO-PAC

THE BEST JUDGES of what's best for the American people are the American people themselves.

That's the fundamental notion of American democracy. That's the basic idea that has made our nation the leader among the nations, our democracy the hope and dream of men and women around the world.

But in order for the people to be good judges they must have the facts. They must know the record, review the evidence, and render their judgment at the polls on Election Day.

If they do not perform their function as judges and act upon the facts their job will be taken over by others who will act for their own selfish interests instead of the best interests of all the people.

That is what happened in 1946 when only 34 million people voted while nearly 55 million people did not vote.

THOSE 55 MILLION, by their failure to perform their elemental duties of citizenship were responsible for the 80th Congress.

That 80th Congress gave us the Taft-Hartley Law. It was responsible for the upward surge of prices. It passed the Spare-the-Rich tax bill and gave us the present deficit. It blocked everything President Truman and his administration sought to do for the promotion of the general welfare.

In 1948 a majority of the people voted and sent a reaffirmation of American democracy ringing around the world.

This year the need for demonstrating the power of our democratic faith is greater than ever before. This year, as the forces of the United Nations are struggling to keep the peace, the American people cannot afford to have it said of us, "They don't care about their democracy. They don't even vote."

IT IS BECAUSE we believe in our democracy, because we believe that the American people are the best judges of what is right, that we in the CIO present this Voting Record.

I urge you to study it, to look at the votes of your Representative and your Senators and to ask yourself: "Is this man truly representing me?"

I urge you to be a good judge, a conscientious judge—so that, in the privacy of the polling booth, you may say with a clear conscience that you have done your full duty as an American citizen.

As American citizens, we members of the CIO enjoy great privileges. We live in a country in which we can be the masters of our own destinies.

We live in a country in which, together with our fellow citizens, we can by peaceful means remove from public office those who have been unfaithful to their public trust. And we can install and keep in office those who have served the people faithfully.

WITH THESE great privileges go great responsibilities. We have the responsibility of using our power wisely. We have the duty of informing ourselves, of acting on the basis of knowledge instead of prejudice, on the basis of fact instead of emotion.

Above all we have the supreme responsibility of participating in our democratic elections and adding our judgment to that of our fellow citizens.

Members of the CIO, I am sure, will not surrender their privileges and will not shirk their responsibilities.

Ours is a rich, clean, shining America. We cannot, we must not, we will not allow it to become otherwise through our negligence.

Jack Kroll

N

It Merely Added Insult To Injury

A GROUP OF organizers were sitting in a hotel lobby late one evening, swapping yarns about membership campaigns in which they had taken part.

One fellow said that he'd been in 10 hard campaigns in a row "and we won every one of them."

This was the signal for a bit of bragging—and some of the fellows smeared it on pretty thick.

One man who hadn't had much to say finally broke into the conversation with, "Yeah, I know you guys are a bunch of hot shots and that each of you has been in the smartest campaigns that has ever been conducted.

"But I want to tell you about the worst—not best—membership drive I was ever in."

And he told the following story.

SHORTLY AFTER the start of the CIO's membership drive in the South in mid-1946 a group of organizers was sent to a large textile center.

"This is going to be a tough one," said the late Van A. Bittner, director of the Southern campaign. "We may not win it on the first go-round but we're going to give it a try."

He was right. It was tough.

The first thing the organizers learned was that they were in a strong "company" town.

"We thought at first that the company only dominated the place," the story-teller related, "but we soon learned that nearly everything there was actually owned by the company.

"After we did a bit of checking we decided to open our headquarters in an adjoining town—and we were still trying to open headquarters when the campaign ended. The company didn't own the second town but it ran things there, too."

THE WEEKLY newspaper which served the area cut loose on the CIO almost as soon as the campaign started.

And it cut loose with both barrels.

Then the owner of a building in which the CIO had made arrangements for opening an office notified the organizers that the "deal is off."

Within a few days the company fired a couple of local union leaders.

Then the hotel manager decided that he could provide only two rooms—and those reluctantly—for the 12 organizers.

Efforts to rent a meeting hall were blocked by the company.

Then the company began bringing pressure on ministers who had indicated they were friendly to the CIO.

THE STORY-TELLER paused and then continued, "Yes, sir, it was the toughest campaign I was ever in.

"The only meeting we were able to hold during all the time we were there was in the church of a Negro preacher who believed in justice. And none of the white men in the plant—and most of the workers were white—showed up at the church.

"Finally we filed a petition with the NLRB—and then the Citizens Committee, organized by the company, went to work on us.

"The company then hired a couple of big thugs to work us over if they got a chance, but they never got a chance.

"We realized a week or so before the election that we didn't have a chance to win but we decided to fight to the last ditch—then come back later and conduct another campaign.

"We decided that we were at least going to have the satisfaction of holding the election on property that didn't belong to the company—a company that we were completely sick of by this time.

"We got the NLRB to conduct the balloting at the railroad station—and guess what?

"We not only lost the election but learned that the company owned the depot!" A.L.S.

IT JUST DOESN'T FIT!

A&P Accused Of Using Ads To Mislead Public On U.S. Suit

THE U. S. DEPT. of Justice in bringing suit against A&P is fulfilling its duty of enforcing the anti-trust laws enacted by Congress, first in 1890 and subsequently amended. The objective of the case is to restore active and vigorous competition to the retail food industry and make for greater overall efficiency by increasing competition.

Most emphatically the government has no intention nor desire to put A&P out of business. The assistant attorney general in charge of the Anti-Trust Division, Herbert A. Bergson, has stated that if A&P loses the case, it will not result in the closing of a single A&P store, not a single employe should lose his job, not a single landlord his rent, not a single trucker his haul.

AFTER OUTLINING the legal history of the case, which started in 1944 when the Dept. of Justice brought criminal charges against the company, was upheld by a U. S. District Court in September, 1946, and upheld again in February, 1949, by the unanimous opinion of the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals, Rep. Woodhouse continues:

The A&P did not appeal to the Supreme Court but paid fines of $175,000.

The criminal information filed by the Dept. of Justice against A&P in 1944 charged that a substantial part of A&P's expansion resulted from the abuse of its power by means of boycotts, blacklisting and price wars or threats; not from superior efficiency and enterprise. It was alleged that A&P forced manufacturers and farmers to sell to A&P at low prices and to A&P's competitors at high prices.

It was also alleged that A&P deliberately destroyed competition in selected local areas by selling below cost in these areas for as long as was necessary to take business away from retail competitors.

Why if A&P was found guilty in criminal suit is it necessary to bring a civil suit against the company?

IT HAS NOT discontinued the practice of which it was found guilty. The fine meant little to A&P. Rebates from two Chicago dairies in 1947 came to $313,000. From 1942-47 A&P collected $1,200,000 in secret rebates from these milk companies. Why did they give A&P these rebates? A&P is a big customer; the dairies had to bow to its demands.

A&P has defied the courts. In January, 1938, a cease and desist order was issued directing A&P to stop demanding discriminatory rebates and price preferences. The order was upheld by the U. S. District Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court found no grounds for review and refused to consider an appeal.

Yet note what A&P got from two milk companies in 1947! Further the court in 1949 found A&P guilty of continuing the practice of insisting on quantity discounts that bore no relation to any cost savings by the supplier due to size of the order.

The Dept. of Justice brings the current civil suit because of the refusal of the A&P to follow the court orders.

The Dept. of Justice is seeking to have A&P divided into several separate companies. Today it consists of 14 separate corporations tied together at the top by a holding company. Two Hartford, Conn., brothers control 99% of the stock. The A&P, which has thousands of warehouses and slaughterhouses in addition to its stores, is one of the biggest coffee roasters, one of the biggest canners and the second largest baker in the U. S.

A&P is telling the American public that it is being attacked merely because it has grown large and prosperous through its efficiency. The publicity campaign is reported to be costing $5 million (which the company will deduct from taxes as normal business expense) with full page ads in daily and weekly publications in addition to huge posters and tear-sheets in every store.

The government cannot answer. It has no funds for such publicity nor does the Dept. of Justice desire to try its case in the press. Private organizations interested are likewise unable to get the true facts before the public.

Congresswoman Gives Lowdown On A&P

You have probably seen those huge ads the A&P has been running in 2000 daily and weekly papers. The campaign is an attempt to discredit the anti-trust suit brought against A&P by the U. S. Dept. of Justice, and is said to be costing $5 million—which A&P will deduct from its tax returns. What are the real facts?

Congresswoman Chase Going Woodhouse (D., Conn.) has made a careful study of this case in response to the strong interest expressed in her district for the real facts behind the matter. Some highlights of her article contained in a newsletter she issued recently are given here.

Labor Board Outlaws Picketing To Get Jobs For Union Members

IN TWO rulings last week, the National Labor Relations Board held that a consumer boycott during a strike was legal but picketing or threatening to picket to compel employers to hire only union members was a violation of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Both decisions were the first rulings under Taft-Hartley on these points.

The boycott case involved a strike conducted two years ago at the main plant at Canton, Ohio, of the Hoover Co., vacuum cleaner manufacturers, by Local 709, United Electrical Workers, then a CIO affiliate.

LOCAL 709 called a strike in June 1949 and sent teams of strikers to visit other locals to urge them not to buy Hoover cleaners. The strike ended Aug. 12, 1949, and the company suspended 12 members of the executive board of the local, who were subsequently fired Aug. 30 after the union had refused to call off the boycott.

The board said that the boycott was perfectly legal under Taft-Hartley, provided that only peaceful means were used. The decision noted that such "concerted activity" was one of the traditional forms of collective action by unions.

Since the CIO ousted UE, most of the members of the local have joined the CIO-Intl. Union of Electrical Radio and Machine Workers.

THE OTHER ruling involved two cases: the AFL Building and Construction Trades Council of Denver, and Henry Shore, a highway contractor of Littleton, Colo.; and Local 16, CIO Longshoremen, and the Juneau Spruce Corp., Juneau, Alaska.

The Denver council and two of its affiliated locals picketed one of Shore's highway projects because he failed to hire only union members. The Longshoremen had continued to picket to compel the company to employ its members to load lumber barges after the NLRB had ruled that the Longshoremen had no legal right to make such a demand. Members of the CIO Woodworkers had been loading the barges.

The Board's decision referred to the rulings of the Supreme Court in a number of recent cases in which, the Board said, "the Supreme Court pointed out that picketing—even peaceful picketing—has aspects which are more than speech, and it may therefore be restricted at least where it is undertaken for an unlawful objective."

On the basis of these Supreme Court opinions, the Board ruled unanimously that Section 8 (c), the "free speech" provision of the Taft-Hartley act, does not protect picketing or threats of picketing to compel an employer to hire only union members in violation of the law.

In the Denver case the board ordered the unions "to cease and desist from this and related conduct," but pointed out "we do not go beyond the circumstances of this case," and that "our order is restricted in scope. It enjoins only picketing engaged in to compel the employer to discriminate against employes in violation of Section 8 (a) (3) of the act. Neither picketing for other purposes nor mere persuasion or speech for any purpose is enjoined."

L. A., Akron Plan Rent Control Referenda

WHILE the administration stalled about putting its separate rent control strengthening bill into the hopper, and the House turned down two rent control amendments to the general economic controls bill, there were the following developments last week:

Unrest in Los Angeles as a result of the City Council's rent decontrol vote of July 28 mounted to the boiling point, and the Tenants' Council, composed of eight liberal organizations including CIO and AFL, sought a court injunction to prevent the Office of the Housing Expediter from putting the decontrol order into effect.

(OHE said, however, that it doubted if the injunction could be granted under present provisions of the law, which clearly allows local option decontrol.)

THE TENANTS' Council also started getting petitions signed for a referendum to undo the council action, working feverishly to get the required number before Aug. 28, when the decontrol action is almost bound to go into effect.

OHE reported receipt of more than 800 letters and telegrams from anguished Los Angeles tenants, who said that landlords were daily serving notices of rent increases to go into effect Sept. 1. Typical instances were a boost from $34 a month including utilities to $60 a month without utilities; from $52.50 to $150 a month and from $12.50 to $50 a month.

One landlord firm served notice that all its rents would be raised to $150 a month, and three tenants complained to OHE separately. The rentals presently paid by the three complainants are $48, $46 and $42 a month.

Reps. Douglas and Holifield, both California Democrats, asked OHE to conduct a thorough investigation of the decontrol action and to stop it if possible.

IN AKRON, O., the CIO succeeded in getting approximately 12,000 signatures on a petition to hold a November referendum reversing the city council's decontrol action, although only 7500 signatures were required.

The city council of Zanesville, O., passed a city ordinance asking continuation of Federal controls through June 30, 1951, by a seven-to-one vote. (The present law states that Federal controls expire automatically on Dec. 31 of this year unless local governing bodies vote before then to ask for continuation.)

Four more communities voted to ask that controls be continued beyond the end of the year: Stoughton, Mass., Union City, N. J., North Arlington, N. J., and San Sebastian, Puerto Rico.

Murray Revokes Charters Of Three Cal. County Councils

CIO PRES. Philip Murray has revoked the charters of three California CIO county councils because they were "no longer representative" of the CIO membership in their areas.

They were the Alameda County, the Contra Costa and the San Diego Councils. All three councils had been given hearings before CIO representatives who reported their findings to Murray.

TYPICAL was the case of the Contra Costa Council. Murray's report pointed out that when charges were filed against that Council early in January, "only 1,600 members in five locals of four CIO unions were affiliated to the Council, out of approximately 10,870 members in 18 locals of 10 CIO unions.

"By the date of the hearing, July 10, 1950, the Council was even less representative of the CIO in its territory. On that date only 730 members of two CIO unions were affiliated, out of approximately 12,225 members in 16 locals of eight CIO unions."

Noting that that Council was "in fact defunct," Murray then declared:

"The certificate of affiliation of the Council to the CIO is hereby revoked, effective at once; the Council is herby expelled from the CIO; all connections or relationship between the CIO and the Council of whatsoever kind or nature are hereby for all purposes completely severed and terminated."

THE CIO president named three California CIO officials to assist local unions in prompt organization of new county councils.

They were Tim Flynn, Northern California CIO regional director, in Contra Costa; Richard T. Leonard, National CIO representative, in Alameda County; and Irwin L. DeShetler, Southern California CIO regional director, in San Diego.

In the Bay Area, preparations to establish the new councils got under way last week after pro-CIO committees and local union officers met in Martinez and Oakland with officers of the new CIO California Industrial Union Council.

Bail Revoked On H. Bridges

PRES. HARRY BRIDGES of the CIO Longshoremen's Union was ordered to jail last week in San Francisco, Cal., by federal district Judge George B. Harris.

Judge Harris revoked the $25,000 bond under which Bridges has been free since last April when he was sentenced to five years in prison for perjury. A federal district court jury decided at the time he had sworn falsely in his 1945 citizenship hearing by denying that he was a Communist.

Bridges was termed "probably one of the most cogent figures in the Communist party in America today" by Judge Harris.

"As such, his allegiance cannot be to the United States of America. His conduct since the beginning of the Korean crisis is of such nature as to justify this court in concluding that his loyalty and allegiance are and must be with the Communists," the judge declared.

At meetings of several ILWU locals in San Francisco since the outbreak of hostilities in Korea, Bridges has opposed motions to support US and UN policy in that country and has called for a "cease fire" order instead.

Shortly after Bridges was jailed 4000 ILWU sugar workers walked out of ten Hawaiian plantations in protest.

Another development saw Pres. Tom Kelly of ILWU Ship Clerks Local 34 in San Francisco, charge Bridges with endangering the recently restored jobs of longshoremen loading Navy and other military cargoes by his opposition to the union-maritime industry-government security screening program.

"The program has only one purpose," Kelly declared, "to keep dangerous subversives off the ships and piers, and Bridges knows it."

St. Louis UGCCW Wins Big Increase

A two-year contract providing wage increases and pensions has been won by 1800 members of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers employed by the Laclede Gas Co. at St. Louis.

The employes get a 7c increase retroactive to July 1, and 3c more effective July 1, 1951. The company-paid pension plan provides for a minimum of $100 after 25 years' service and up to $125 after 40 years. Pensions depending on earnings, may reach as much as $170.

New 'Independent' Union Bobs Up At Weirton Steel Co.

THE WEIRTON Steel Co., Weirton, W. Va., seems determined that its 10,000 workers will have an "independent" union to go through the motions of representing them.

Last week, five days after the U. S. Court of Appeals in Philadelphia had declared illegal the Weirton Independent Union, Inc., which had operated for 13 years, and ordered it broken up, a brand new "independent" popped up "spontaneously."

The "community-backed" Independent Steelworkers Union was organized at the American Legion Hall in Weirton. Among organizations backing the new group is listed the Greater Weirton Community Services Committee, a coalition of 41 "civic and service agencies."

At a meeting, the committee is reported to have adopted a resolution pledging its members to lend both moral and financial support to the "union."

The old WIU started out much in the same manner in 1941, following a National Labor Relations Board decision ordering the company to break up its predecessor, the Employes Representative Plan and Security League.

Drayton Heard, the special master whose findings on the contempt issue were adopted by the Circuit Court July 31, found that the WIU was not illegally dominated or assisted by the company at its inception.

Subsequently however, he stated, the company stepped up its interference in the so-called union's affairs.

"Independent" or not, the court order specified that there would be no union at Weirton for a period of three months.

Prices Up, Pay Way Down North Of The St. Lawrence

It's happening in Canada, too—and the situation is worse than in the U. S.

The Canadian Congress of Labour—to which CIO unions belong—recently addressed a letter to Prime Minister St. Laurent, warning that Canadian workers could not stand wage controls unless prices were rolled back at the same time.

"The cost of living in Canada," CCL said, "has now been shown statistically to be practically equivalent to that in the United States, although Canadian earnings are still far below those received by U. S. workers . . . From June, 1949, to June, 1950, the U. S. cost-of-living index advanced .6 points, while the cost-of-living index in Canada during the same period went up 4.9 points . . .

"There is an urgent need for a clear declaration of policy that neither unwarranted price-increases nor profiteering will be countenanced by the government of Canada."

UAW Signs Better Pacts For 18,000

THE CIO Auto Workers last week signed improved contracts with two companies covering 18,000 production and maintenance workers.

UAW won a new working agreement with the Electric Auto-Lite Co., Toledo, Ohio, which provides company-paid pensions of $100 monthly after 25 years' service and $125 monthly after 30 years for employes in 26 plants of the company.

The pact also provides health and accident insurance, wage adjustments for skilled and hourly rated employes, recognition of UAW as bargaining agent in any new plant established by the company and a modified union shop which requires a new worker to join the union as a condition of employment.

The agreement must be ratified by the 15,000 Auto-Lite union members before it becomes effective.

Three thousand workers at the Bendix Aviation Corps., Teterboro, N. J., will benefit under a three-year contract which grants a 3c-an-hour wage increase and an insurance program similar to the General Motors plan. An unqualified union shop also is provided.

Other features include a wage reopening clause which replaces so-called "merit" increases with automatic progression, and increased night shift premiums.

Meanwhile, new contract demands were being readied at Detroit by Hudson Local 154 of the Auto Workers, after the membership rejected a five-year pension-insurance-wage increase pact. The contract rejected was estimated to be worth 15c hourly to Hudson's 20,000 workers.

It was the 3c hourly boost which drew opposition at the meeting. The majority felt the wage boost should be higher. The non-pension provisions of the contract were to run for three years with wage reopenings provided for each year.

The 12,000-member Local 142 has approved strike action by an overwhelming majority in protest against Kaiser-Frazer Corp.'s stalling during current negotiations on non-economic issues. Local president J. F. Motsinger listed seniority, grievance procedure, farming out of work, seven day operations, speedup, vacation pay, representation and accumulated seniority for supervision and excludes classifications as the issues.

GM Rejects UAW Bid For Job Talks

General Motors Corp. last week became the second auto manufacturer to turn down an invitation from the CIO Auto Workers to join in industry-wide discussions of possible unemployment that might result from conversion to war production.

GM Pres. C. E. Wilson told UAW Pres. Walter Reuther that he doubted the talks would "be of assistance to our government in this emergency."

Reuther invited auto company presidents to meet to discuss the tightening steel supply that threatens automotive output. Chrysler had declined previously.

PAC Bucks Nifty To Lick 'Em In '50!

NLRB Strips Denham Of Control Of 219 Employes In Washington

THE FEUD between the National Labor Relations Board and its chief counsel, Robert N. Denham—which President Truman once tried to end—burst out in new fury last week.

In its latest move against Denham, the NLRB stripped the chief counsel of control over 219 employes in the main offices of the board in Washington.

Denham—whose ouster has been requested by the CIO executive board and a number of CIO and AFL affiliates—promptly struck back by recalling the board's two top legal advisers, Ida Klaus, solicitor, and William Consedine, assistant solicitor. Denham said that he had detailed them to board three years ago as a "courtesy."

MISS KLAUS lost no time in stating that she had no intention of working for Denham.

"The solicitor's post was created by the board," she said, "and I work for the board."

Denham touched off new union demands for his ouster—including that of the CIO executive board—last February when he made a speech urging employers to appeal to court any NLRB decision they didn't like.

The board hit back, ordering him to carry on his court work in behalf of and at the direction of the board. It further curtailed his powers by making his appointments of regional directors and officers in sub-regional offices subject to the board's approval.

President Truman later sought to end the quarrel by a reorganization order which would have transferred Denham's powers to the board. It was one of a number of reorganization proposals, which become effective unless one house of Congress decides otherwise by two-thirds vote.

The House of Representatives mustered the two-thirds vote against the proposal, and so chaos continued in the NLRB.

Denham got his powers from the Taft-Hartley law and the NLRB gave him additional authority August 22, 1947, when T-H became effective.

The NLRB's chief counsel has plenty power left. He still supervises approximately 900 of the agency's 1300 employes, most of them in the 30 field offices across the nation.

Layoffs, Delay Tactics Fail To Halt Union Shop Victory

Local 31 of the CIO Marine and Shipbuilding Workers recently won a union shop election at the Maryland Drydock Co. yards in Baltimore by an overwhelming vote—but it wasn't easy.

To begin with, by the time election day rolled around the company had laid off all but 350 of its 1541 eligible employes. Then management refused to allow the National Labor Relations Board officials to hold the election on company property.

NLRB representatives promptly went out and hired an auto trailer, parked it outside the main gate and opened for business.

It wasn't long in coming, much to the company's consternation.

From the time the polls opened in the morning until they closed at 11 p.m., 51 automobiles owned and driven by Local 31 members picked up idle workers at their homes, took them to the trailer to vote and then back home.

Charles Russell, Local 31 business agent, and Frank Plogman, the local president, acted as auto dispatchers.

The final tally showed: Eligible, 1541; For the union shop 979; against, 38; void, 30.

4 GCEOC Locals Win Pay Hikes

Four Michigan locals of the CIO Government and Civic Employes Organizing Committee have won wage increases ranging from 5 to 17½ cents hourly. Local 666 at Hamtramck won a 5c boost; Saginaw Local 466 won 6c across the board; Pontiac Local 100 and Flint Local 21, previously on a 45 and 44-hour week, respectively, won a 40-hour week, equaling 17½c an hour for Local 100 and 14c for Local 21.

Four new Michigan locals have joined the GCEOC. They are Local 25, Taylor township non-teaching school board employes; Local 25, Dearborn city workers; Local 201, Muskegon city workers; and Local 1155, Jackson.

Three Brewery Union Locals Win Severance

Three locals of the CIO Brewery Workers have won severance pay clauses in contracts with employers at Detroit. They also won a 3c boost across the board, and smaller increases each year for the next four years. In addition, they won an escalator clause, by which pay goes up or down 1c for each 1.14 point change in the Bureau of Labor Statistics cost-of-living index.

The employer will pay into a trust fund 3c an hour for every man-hour worked. If a man quits, is fired or retires, he gets a sum on the basis of a formula still to be worked out.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Saturday and Sunday the writer attended the Iowa State IUC Convention in Burlington, Iowa. The convention was unanimous in support of CIO policies on the international situation as were all the council officers.

Unity discussions with the AFL were postponed and will be continued at some later date when both groups have examined and analyzed the next steps to be taken. In the meantime, the fight must go on for more organizing.

Right now our biggest fight is for political action and we must all rally behind the CIO Political Action Committee and give it every support.

Reg. Dir. John J. Maurillo reports the following representation elections: Auburn Wood Products, Auburn, New York, CIO 32, no union 10, UE withdrew; C. H. Stuart & Co., Inc., Newark, New York, CIO 85, no union 2, independent 39; Silver Councelors, Inc., Newark, New York, CIO 41, independent 6. Field Rep. Peter Aversa conducted these campaigns.

Reg. Dir. William Mayo reports that in a representation election held at the Central Soya Co., Decatur, Ind., the Brewery Workers-CIO won by a vote of 178 for the Brewery Workers, 91 for AFL and 12 for the discredited Food & Tobacco Workers. Brewery Workers Intl. Rep. Dipple was in charge.

Reg. Dir. James J. Leary reports the following elections: The United Optical and Instrument Workers of America-CIO won a union representation election at the American Optical Co., St. Joseph, Mo. The employes voted unanimously in favor of the Optical Workers. UOIW Intl. Rep. W. J. Widman conducted the campaign. In a representation election held at the Council Grove Telephone Co., Council Grove, Kans., the employes of the company voted unanimously in favor of Division No. 20 of the Communications Workers-CIO. CWA Division 20 Rep. A. D. Hessling was in charge of the organizational work.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports a IUE-CIO victory at the Rilling Manufacturing Co., Bridgeport, Conn. At this representation election, of the 60 eligible to vote, 52 voted for IUE-CIO, 3 voted no union and 3 were challenged.

Assistant Reg. Dir. H. T. McCreedy reports that in a representation election held at Maccabees, Detroit, Mich., the 172 employes eligible to vote voted as follows: CIO Local Industrial Union 1687, 132; CIO-ousted Office & Professional Workers 13; no union 3, challenged 3. Twenty employes were on vacation.

Al Hartnett, Assistant to the Chairman of IUE-CIO, reports that in a representation election at the Adjustable Fixture Co., Milwaukee, Wis., the employes voted unanimously for IUE. UE withdrew.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports a union shop election victory at the Maryland Drydock Co., Baltimore, Md. Of the 1541 employes eligible to vote, only 350 were working due to layoffs. Under the direction of Reg. Dir. Jack Gersen of the CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, the employes were picked up by automobiles and 1047 employes voted. Of these 979 voted yes, 38 no and the balance spoiled their ballots.

CIO Unions Protest Plan To Aid Franco

CIO UNIONS are adding their voices to that of national CIO in protesting against the action of the Senate in approving a $100 million loan to Fascist Spain.

Three of the latest to condemn the proposed grant to Dictator Franco are the auto, textile and clothing unions. President of the latter union is Jacob S. Potofsky, who also is chairman of the CIO Intl. Affairs Committee.

In a letter to members of the House of Representatives, which has not acted on the proposal, UAW Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey recalled that Hitler and Mussolini put Franco in power "through a violent and bloody revolution against the duly constituted and democratically elected government of the Spanish people . . .

"If the United States is to assume the leadership of the world's free democratic forces against the threat of Communist totalitarianism—as we in the UAW-CIO believe most heartily it should—we can only damage our prestige and cripple our effectiveness by giving aid and comfort to a fascist totalitarianism like that of Franco Spain."

PRES. EMIL RIEVE of the Textile Workers told Pres. Truman in a telegram that "support for the Spanish dictatorship would make a mockery of the proclaimed purpose of the European Recovery Program as a measure intended to strengthen democracy."

Rieve called upon the President to use "all of your influence to prevent final passage of the loan."

"There is no justification for the measure on military grounds," Rieve said. "We cannot afford to compromise our democratic principles on this vital issue at this critical time."

General Officers of the Amalgamated Clothing Officers in a telegram to President Truman charged: "Under Franco, unions are still oppressed, free speech is still denied, civil right are still a myth and justice is a forlorn hope."

The wire further pointed out that during World War II, Franco openly supported Hitler and Mussolini and even went so far as to express the hope that New York itself would be bombed.

Potofsky said, in releasing the text of the wire, "The hope of democracy depends on the moral leadership which America provides in this time of crisis. It is the duty of every American to urge members of the House of Representatives to reject unqualifiedly the loan approved by the Senate."

Jarosz Seeks Seat Occupied By Lesinski

Wayne County CIO-PAC has endorsed the candidacy of Joseph Jarosz for Democratic nomination for Congress from Michigan's 10th district. This seat was occupied by the late Rep. Lesinski on whose staff Jarosz served.

Jarosz was a steward, recording secretary, and president of DeSoto local, CIO Auto Workers, and in 1948 was named co-director of the Detroit UAW-CIO region.

Kroll: Dixiegops Failed To Heed HST On Korea

DIR. JACK KROLL of the CIO Political Action Committee, on Aug. 5, told the Iowa State CIO Convention that the Dixiecrat-Republican coalition had given "a big green light" to Joe Stalin to attack South Korea when it succeeded, last January, in blocking $150 million for economic aid to the republic.

Now, Kroll said, the same forces which opposed aid are trying to blame the administration for the Korean crisis which ensued.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN requested economic aid for South Korea back in June, 1949, Kroll reported. At that time Truman said: "Korea has become a testing ground in which the validity and practical value of democracy which the republic is putting into practice are being matched against the practices of communism which have been imposed upon the people of North Korea."

The coalition succeeded in postponing action until January, 1950, and then defeated the proposal in the House, by a one-vote margin.

Immediately, the Communist radio in North Korea gloated: "The puppet regime cannot now enjoy the confidence of the Washington ruling circle. The House of Representatives voted down aid to the Syngman Rhee traitor gang."

THE KREMLIN guessed, on the basis of that vote, that the U. S. would not interfere if the North Korean Communists took over South Korea, Kroll said. The Kremlin was wrong, but that didn't make the coalition right.

"You'd have thought," Kroll commented, "that some of the people would have learned a lesson. You'd have thought they would stop putting partisan politics ahead of the interests of their country. Well, they haven't stopped. Today they're playing politics as usual with American lives in Korea and American pocketbooks at home."

The convention voted an all-out PAC drive.

The procession of primaries—in which the candidates for office are selected—continued last week.

In Kansas, Alf Landon, former Governor and GOP Presidential candidate, was indirectly defeated again when two of his picked men were turned down by Republican voters, in a hot race that drew out a record number of primary voters.

The GOP candidate for the Senate seat now occupied by Clyde M. Reed (R) will be present Gov. Frank Carlson, an anti-Landon man. He will run against Democrat Paul Aiken, who recently resigned as assistant U. S. Postmaster General. Labor made no endorsements in the Kansas races.

All eight members of Kansas' House delegation were re-nominated, and Attorney General Edward F. Arn secured the Republican governorship nomination, over Landon's objections.

In poll-tax Virginia, the primaries were uneventful and the vote was light. Three House members out of the nine-man delegation were opposed, none successfully. Primary winners in Virginia are as good as elected.

In West Virginia, isolationist Rush Holt, who formerly was Democratic Senator, switched sides and secured the Republican nomination to run against Democrat Cleveland Bailey for the 3rd House district.

IN MISSOURI, Thomas B. Hennings defeated Emery W. Allison, President Truman's choice, for the Democratic Senate nomination to run against Sen. Forrest Donnell (R.), in an extraordinarily large primary turn-out.

And in Tennessee, the vote broke all records numerically, since this was Tennessee's first primary without a poll-tax requirement, but the political scenery was not changed much, except that Carroll Reece, former GOP National Committee chairman, secured the Republican nomination for the 2nd House district, unseating John Jennings, Jr.

Results were uncertain in the most interesting primary race of all, as the CIO News went to press—the battle of Glen Taylor to get nominated again in Idaho as Democratic senatorial candidate. Taylor bolted the Democratic party in 1948 to run as vice-president on the Progressive Party ticket, later changed his mind and went back to the Democratic fold. His primary opponent was former Sen. D. Worth Clark, an isolationist, who campaigned against Taylor strictly on the Red issue.

Farm-Labor Unity Iowa CIO Keynote

FARMER-LABOR unity was the keynote sounded at the recent 12th annual Iowa State CIO Industrial Union Council convention in Burlington, Ia.

The 250 delegates attending the three-day meeting heard Albert Loveland, Democratic candidate for the U. S. Senate, say that "when the farmer's income drops there is a direct drop in the employment of all other occupations."

"Farmers and laborers are interdependent," Loveland declared, "and they'll go up or down together."

He referred to soil conservation as "soul conservation" and called on this country to recognize that the important question is, "How can we take the abundance which is ours and make it do good for our own people and the people of the world?"

WALTER W. KING, regional director of the wage and hour division of the U. S. Dept. of Labor, declared that "if we continue to recognize the interdependence of the farmer and the worker, it follows that a nation of prosperous and free farmers and a strong and free labor movement will lead mankind toward a better way of life for all."

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organizations, lambasted Russia and left-wing liberals who "hop and skip with the party line."

He declared that a third World War may happen "at any time." "The Russians," he said, "tell the world it can have peace—at a price." He said America does not want peace on Russian terms and warned the delegates not to be deluded by Red peace proposals.

(For CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll's speech to the convention, see story on this page.)

The convention approved a resolution excluding members and consistent followers of the Communist party or of any Fascist organization from being officers, members of the executive board or convention delegates.

The convention renamed Vernon Dale president and Kenneth Everhart secretary-treasurer for one-year terms.

Labor Leaders Attend Va. Educational Parley

The Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch in a news story credited labor with playing "an outstanding role" in a recent education conference held at Mary Washington College, Fredericksburg, Va.

Labor leaders present included Pres. Charles Webber of the Virginia CIO Council; Pres. Jack Smith and Secy-Treas. I. C. Welsted of the Federation of Labor.

Van Devander Gets Demo Publicity Post

Charles Van Devander, head of the Washington bureau of the New York Post and CIO Newspaper Guildsman, was named last week as director of publicity for the Democratic National Committee. He will succeed J. M. Redding, who has been nominated as assistant Postmaster General.

Beirne To Senate Unit:

Repeal T-H, Break AT&T Control For Bell Bargaining

PRES. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers on Aug. 10 told a Senate labor subcommittee that "two things are necessary and desirable" to give the more than half-million workers employed by the Bell Telephone System "the full benefits of collective bargaining."

"There should be industry-wide bargaining in the Bell System or the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. (which controls the system) should give up control over local bargaining," Beirne said.

His other recommendation was repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and restoration of the Wagner Act with appropriate amendments.

MEMBERS of the subcommittee, which is seeking to determine whether the Bell structure and practices create a favorable atmosphere for collective bargaining, are:

Sens. Murray (D. Mont.), Neely (D. W. Va.), Pepper (D. Fla.), Humphrey (D. Minn.), Taft (R. O.), Donnell (R. Mo.) and Morse (R. Ore.).

Beirne charged that AT&T "completely controls the labor relations and labor policies of the entire Bell system" operating in it as a "single, integrated business."

"DESPITE the fact that collective bargaining and the right of representation have become the law of the land and have been accepted by practically every industry in the country, the Bell System continues with its union-busting policy." Beirne said.

"While AT & T hypocritically covers itself with the mantle of the beneficent employer, in actual practice it has no real concern either for the welfare of the public or for the great body of its employes.

"The Bell System is the country's outstanding example of the iron fist in the velvet glove. It is a past master in rigid supervision, the speed-up, and other methods for the exploitation of the workers.

"Traffic operations are timed to stop watch limits and unfortunate is the poor little operator who is caught using the wrong phrase in answering a customer, or taking too long to perform her operating routines.

"Every operation is observed and timed. Even in commercial offices, ink wells and other devices serve as microphones so that trained observers can catch every word uttered by either the employe or the customer who is being served."

Commenting on collective bargaining relations with AT&T, Beirne said:

"There is no bottom to the bag of tricks which the Bell System uses to slow up and delay negotiations. With or without the Taft-Hartley Act there is no limit to what it will do to coerce and intimidate its employes or to discredit the unions and its leaders."

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taft-Hartley Repeal	Would repeal most viciously anti-labor bill, reinstitute Wagner Act.	Pigeonholed.	Give money to PAC; register; vote.
Social Security Improvements HR 6000	Extends, improves old age, survivors' benefits, etc. Lifts benefits, ups coverage by 10 million.	Conference report comes up this week. Pres. Truman has asked recommital for liberal changes.	Wire Senators and Representatives to support recommital, ask defeat of Knowland amendment, inclusion of House disability feature.
FEPC	Would bar job discrimination based on race, creed or color and provide penalties for violations.	Pigeonholed for this session.	Give money to PAC; register; vote.
Mundt-Nixon Bill S 2311 HR 7595	Endangers civil liberties, union rights, under guise of fighting subversive activities.	Reported by Senate Judiciary; House Un-American Comm. held hearings. CIO testified against.	Ask Senators, Representatives to oppose the bill.
Ratification of Genocide Convention	International agreement to outlaw mass killings for race or religious reasons.	Reported favorably by Sen. Foreign Relations sub-comm. (Requires Sen. action only.) Full comm. has not acted.	Ask Senators to give speedy approval.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

Bell Again Seeks Award Reversal

The New Jersey Bell Telephone Co. has appealed to the State Supreme Court a recent Superior Court ruling which affirmed an arbitrated wage increase for 12,000 operators and clerical employes, members of the CIO Communications Workers.

The company had attacked the constitutionality of the N. J. public utility anti-strike law in asking the court to set aside a $2.50 weekly wage increase granted by a board of arbitration appointed by Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll.

The Superior Court, to which the award had been appealed by the company, ruled that the increase granted by the board was "just and reasonable."

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00 A YEAR

5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST 21, 1950 No. 34

LIFE WAS EASED a little for old folks like these when Congress passed revised Social Security Bill last week. Though bill was far from perfect, it increases payments to aged. Other problems of elderly were explored on a long range basis at first National Conference on Aging in Washington. (See Conference story Page 6, Social Security story Page 7.)

Union Cooperation Pays Off At Armour's In 11c Increase

CLOSE COOPERATION between CIO and AFL unions in the meat packing industry is paying off. Armour & Co., Chicago, Ill., has just granted the two unions a flat 11c wage increase. Affected are 30,000 workers in 39 plants.

The agreement is expected to set a pattern for the other three of the Big Four—Swift, Wilson and Cudahy— and may also set a pattern for other wage settlements in the industry.

Aside from the 16c increase won in 1946 after five years of no wage boosts, the 11c hike is the highest in the history of the packing industry.

"WE'RE VERY happy about our success in working together," chorused Pres. Ralph Helstein, CIO Packinghouse Workers and Secy.-Treas. Patrick E. Gorman of the AFL Meat Cutters.

The unions held separate negotiation sessions with Armour, but conferred on their demands and agreed to act jointly in settling.

The UPWA represents 30,000 workers in 26 Armour plants. The Amalgamated represents 8000 in 13 Armour plants.

The new contracts with Armour, running two years, provide for three wage reopeners at six-month intervals. Also included are improvements in vacations, the piece-work rate, and sickness and accident provisions.

NEXT ON the bargaining list is Swift & Co., the nation's largest packer. Swift's organized workers are divided three ways: 30,000 with UPWA, 10,000 with the Amalgamated, and 14,000 with the National Brotherhood of Packinghouse Workers, unaffiliated.

Contracts with Armour, Swift, Wilson and Cudahy expired August 11, and possibility of a major strike loomed as rank and file pressure for a showdown increased. The unions had rejected an 8c offer from Armour, and settlement came after almost 65 hours of nearly continuous sessions.

New rates will be: Common labor, $1.26; hide skinners, $1.92. Wages in Southern plants are 2 to 4½c lower. Armour estimates the boost will cost the company $11 million a year. LPA

PAC, LLPE Set Good Example Of Unity In Passaic County, N. J.

Spokesmen for the political arms of CIO and AFL have assured each other's organizations in Passaic County, N. J., of mutual support.

Edward G. Wilmes, chairman of the county CIO Political Action Committee, promised the AFL League for Political Education a united labor front at a meeting in the AFL Central Labor Lyceum in Paterson.

"The politicians who have sought to divide and conquor labor on the political front during the past 15 years," he said, "are in for a surprise if they believe it impossible for the AFL and the CIO to work together.

"We have learned that politicians only respect the voting machine's results, and we will do everything in our power to register and vote every working man so that candidates friendly to labor will be elected."

Richard Donovan, chairman of the Passaic County League for Political Education, told a CIO-PAC meeting that "1946 taught us all a great lesson when workers stayed at home and elected a reactionary Congress."

"We have suffered since that date," he added, "and we can only correct it with the political unity of all labor."

"That's the chairman of the front office's 'safety committee'!"

Rent Control Saved In 18 Cities, Towns

ONLY 18 cities and towns have taken action to assure rent control after the present law expires next Dec. 31, according to a compilation made public Aug. 15 by Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods.

The communities have a combined population of about five million people, or approximately one-third of 1% of the country's population.

The local governing bodies passed resolutions during July, the first month of operation under the 1950 Rent Control Act, which Woods found legally adequate. The communities are:

Chicago, Ill.; Boston, Mass., and Jersey City, N. J., the only major cities; Hoboken, East Rutherford, North Arlington and Union City, N. J.; Auburn and Chelsea, Mass.; Pekin and Evanston, Ill.; Sophia, W. Va., and six Puerto Rican localities — Isabela, Cidra, Naranjite, Loiza, San Lorenza and Cayey.

In many of these communities CIO members working through their unions played an active role in staving off the rent boosts that were certain to come after Dec. 31 if controls were abandoned.

In some other cities, where no decision has been reached so far, CIO unions are fighting bitterly with the real estate lobby—and in others, they must take action soon if they want to avoid what amounts to a cut in take-home pay.

A FIERCE BATTLE is under way in Los Angeles, fourth largest city in the country, where the City Council ignored the preponderance of evidence and voted to drop rent controls when the federal law expires.

At the request of James Roosevelt, Democratic candidate for governor, Woods made a personal appearance before the council and asked members to reverse their position in favor of a compromise. Under Woods' proposal, neighborhood boards would determine "justifiable" increases for small landlords.

The council turned him down, 10 to 5, as real estate lobbyists picketed City Hall with signs reading "Tighe Woods, Go Home," and "Who Is the Law, You or Congress?"

However, in Washington Federal Judge James Kirkwood signed a temporary restraining order barring Woods from signing the Los Angeles decontrol order pending a hearing on Aug. 24.

He acted upon a petition filed by the unaffiliated Intl. Association of Machinists at the request of the Los Angeles Tenants Council, composed of representatives of CIO, AFL and the IAM. The petition charged irregularities in the City Council hearing on controls and in the council's legislation.

Talks Resumed In Packard Strike

EIGHT thousand CIO Auto Workers went on strike at the Detroit plant of the Packard Motor Co., Aug. 14, when contract negotiations which had been under way for 15 months broke down.

Management-union talks were resumed later last week with the aid of Federal conciliators.

The union indicated it would accept a 4c hourly increase every year during the life of a five-year agreement, and an escaltor clause tied to the cost of living.

The company offered a maximum pension of $117.50 a month, a 5c hourly increase, increased insurance benefits amounting to 3c an hour, and more-than-regular pay in lieu of vacations.

PRES. RALPH URBAN of Local 190 termed the latter offer "inadequate" but indicated it might be acceptable if the company upped its 5c an hour wage boost.

The bargaining position of the union was strengthened by the fact that the 1951 Packards are scheduled to go on display in showrooms throughout the country this week.

Another Detroit company, Federal-Mogul Corp., signed an agreement with UAW after an eight month strike.

The contract provides that the company pay a minimum hourly wage of $1.70 pending the development of a standard hour incentive plan.

Pensions of $100 a month at age 65 with 25 years service are included in the new pact.

Shortly after the Packard strike began, 20,000 UAW members ratified a revised contract proposal at the Hudson Motor Car Co., after having rejected an earlier proposal.

The approved agreement became effective immediately and gives the workers a 3c-an-hour wage increase retroactive to Aug. 6.

THE THREE-YEAR contract call for a pension plan paying $117.50 monthly to employes 65 years old with 25 years service. It may be reopened for wage discussions.

UAW Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey, meanwhile, called on the union members to build up a $25 million strike fund which he said would help "avoid many costly strikes," because "many companies would hesitate to force us into strike situations if they knew our union was capable of taking care of the immediate needs of our members."

Mazey urged that the union raise monthly dues from $1.50 to $2.50 monthly at the next annual convention. He also reported that the union's resources were more than $5 million, as of March 31.

Pressman Quits ALP, Charging Domination By Communists

LEE PRESSMAN, general counsel of the CIO until he resigned to help Henry Wallace's campaign in 1948, last week pulled out of the American Labor Party, New York affiliate of the Progressive Party.

Pressman, now in private practice in New York City, made public a letter citing his belief that "the policies, activity and political direction of the American Labor Party do not represent or reflect the democratic and progressive interests or aspirations of the American people, but rather of the Communist party."

SIMILAR ESTIMATES of the ALP's role had been made two years ago by practically all non-Communist unions throughout New York State.

In recent weeks the Progressive Party and its state affiliates have been having a series of internal troubles, with such people as Henry Wallace, Prof. Tom Emerson of Yale Law School and others making public their resignation. The Progressives have taken a position hardly distinguishable from that of the Communist Party in opposing United Nations action in Korea.

Pressman's resignation brought some hot comments from Rep. Vito Marcantonio, only ALP Congressman in Washington.

HE CHARGED that Pressman had hoped to get high fees "from the progressive movement" when he left the CIO post, and, Marcantonio complained, "not having received such fees, he has now joined the parade of fakirs."

Pressman was an ALP candidate for Congress from Brooklyn in 1948, but fell far short of winning the seat held by Rep. Multer (D.), who has had a consistently good voting record.

Pressman's letter of resignation voiced belief that "in the approaching political campaign, which will bring the various political parties and their candidates before the public . . . the American Labor Party cannot enlist the support or the confidence of any important segment of the voters.

"It is crucial for any progressive political party to have the full and energetic support of organized labor. This the American Labor Party does not enjoy."

The reason for this lack of public trust, Pressman added, is the belief that the ALP is a servant of the Communist Party. He continued:

"I FEEL THAT the service which every peace-loving American wishes to perform in relation to the important tasks confronting humanity today cannot be accomplished within the ALP. I am, therefore, submitting my resignation as a member of the American Labor Party."

Pressman has been engaged in the private practice of law in New York since leaving the CIO more than two years ago.

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

Steel Firm Ignores Pact, Strike Follows

THE GIANT Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Co.'s entire operation was shut down last week by a strike of the CIO Steelworkers at Birmingham, Ala., which was caused by the company's refusal to discuss job reclassification.

The strikers are ore miners or processors. Depletion of the ore supply necessitated closing of all plants.

R. E. Farr, USA-CIO district director, said 5000 men walked out when the company, a U. S. Steel subsidiary, turned down union proposals for an equity program which would have given workers pay increases ranging from nine to 12½c an hour.

He said re-classification was called for under the present contract and that U. S. Steel has made similar adjustments in other agreements.

Picket lines were set up by the union at three ore mines, a quarry, an ore-conditioning plant, furnaces and 10 open hearths.

Frank House, president of the USA-CIO Muckoda local, charged that the company "has locked us out."

THE DAY after the Steelworkers struck, 5000 United Mine Workers' members, employed at five TCI coal mines, walked out. Dir. William Mitch of UMW District 20 was reported as saying he did not know what caused the strike.

Also in Birmingham, a strike of 1000 CIO Steelworkers at the Pullman Standard Car Co. was reported near settlement.

CIO Leaders Set Labor Day Talks

CIO Pres. Philip Murray will deliver a Labor Day address Sept. 4, in Birmingham, Ala., to be broadcast over the ABC network at 4:30 p.m. EDT.

CIO Vice Pres. and Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood will be the principal speaker Labor Day at the 4-H Fair Grounds in Charleston, W. Va.

Controls Bill Seen Growing Into 'Fake And Fraud' By CIO

THE ECONOMICS control bill now in the Senate is apt to be amended into a "fake and a fraud upon the American people," the CIO wrote to Senators late last week.

Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, called for defeat of the amendments, which he described as "most destructive and dangerous," when they come up for vote in the Senate on Aug. 21.

"Instead of preventing rising prices and inflation, price escalators and profit guarantees have been built into the bill by votes taken without quorum calls, with only a few Senators present, and without a single rollcall vote," Cowan said. "Worse amendments are pending."

Effect of their adoption, he said, would be to interfere with the expansion of defense output, with the fight against inflation, and with stabilization of the American economy.

The CIO has pointed out that many of the loophole amendments which helped kill OPA after World War II are being written into the new bill at the very beginning. If they are finally adopted, it is doubtful whether the control bill will really be able to hold the line against inflation.

A controls bill has already been passed by the House, with numerous amendments added during the course of several days of debate. These were tacked on to a measure which incorporates the President's original request for minimum controls and production aids, plus price and wage provisions.

AS YET NO move has been scheduled to extend rent controls, which under present law are due to expire in most parts of the nation on Jan. 1. The CIO has also called for excess profits taxation, but a bill approved by the Senate Finance Committee contains no such provision.

The Senate bill is expected by its sponsors to provide about an additional $5 billion revenue a year, and is regarded by the administration as a "stop-gap" measure.

It would lift both personal income taxes and corporation taxes. The CIO in previous letters to members of Congress has called for much steeper taxes on corporation profits—now at record heights—and exemptions for persons in the lowest income brackets.

COWAN'S LETTER to the Senate contained analyses and bitter criticism of many of the proposed amendments to the controls bill—the Defense Production Bill (S. 3936).

It lashed out particularly at amendments by Sen. Bricker (R. O.) and Sen. Williams (R. Del.), providing for price and wage regulation.

"These amendments would perpetuate, for the duration of the emergency, inequities existing immediately prior to June 24 among wages, and between wages and profits," the CIO statement said.

Workers' buying power would be depressed for a long time to come if the amendments pass, the statement added.

If there is to be no rollback of prices—and the "trend of Senate action" doesn't point in that direction—"the inequities and severity of discrimination will be further increased by passage of the amendments," the CIO pointed out.

U.S. Union Leaders Warn French Workers' Morale Is Low

MARSHALL Plan policies need a "sharp change in emphasis" to give more bread-and-butter benefits to French industrial workers, an American trade union delegation reported last week after a six-week tour of France.

The American unionists, fresh from a series of visits to a score of French industrial centers, voiced frank alarm about the economic hardship endured by French workers' families, the reactionary attitude of French employers, and the failure of the French government to improve "backward" labor legislation.

The visiting Americans were William Belanger, vice-president of the CIO Textile Workers Union and head of the Massachusetts CIO Council; Harold Gibbons, of the AFL Teamsters in St. Louis; nad Carmen Lucia, regional vice-president of the AFL Hatters Union in the southeastern states.

The group, sent to France by the Economic Cooperation Administration, said it will file a detailed report and a list of suggestions with ECA during the next few weeks.

Members of the delegation said that in the first two years of the Marshall Plan, ECA has "necessarily devoted itself" to the job of getting food supplies, industrial raw materials and production machinery into France.

But if democratic morale among French workers is to be strengthened, they said, ECA must now buckle down to the job of seeing that those workers get the benefits of new equipment and machinery.

ALL THREE were shocked to find that prices had been rising steadily in France during recent years—while wages have been held down.

"The French worker at the time of the liberation had many hopes," Belanger commented. "Now there's too much disillusion.

"He wants to see positive results in increased wages, to give him an adequate standard of living. He's had many promises—now he wants decent food, shelter and clothing.

"The French worker has no faith in anything right now—and we could understand why."

Gibbons pointed out that "Communism is thriving by default" in France.

French employers, he added, have "contributed greatly to the manufacture of Communism in the country. French industry is highly cartelized, and it has a high profit, low-output outlook."

THE U. S. UNION group agreed that "unless a program can now be worked out whereby the French government and French industry—with advice and assistance from the U. S. government and the Organization for European Economic Cooperation, and the trade unions through their international activities—can improve the three basic living standard items of food, clothing and shelter, the French people will not be strong enough to resist totalitarian aggression."

At a press conference with labor paper reporters in Washington, the group cited reasons for what they frankly described as a "discouraging situation" in France today:

1. ECA, busy with relief work and helping bring the production apparatus back to normal, hasn't had time or energy to consider fully how the internal economic improvements should be handled.

2. The French goverment, acting under "backward" legislation, hasn't been helpful in bringing about internal economic reforms.

3. Workers, existing on painfully low living standards, have developed low morale in their efforts to win improvements—and the big, aggressive French Communist Party is capitalizing on the distress and low spirits.

4. France has "one of the best organized and most reactionary employer groups in the world—and it holds the line against corporations which would like to improve workers' conditions."

These stumbling blocks must be removed if French democracy is to withstand Communist challenges, the union delegation said. It called for "drastic steps" and a "sense of urgency" in handling the situation.

"Basically, the French will have to find their own solutions," Gibbons declared. "If the needs call for a vaster ECA, we should support it."

Miss Lucia said that more U. S. union delegations should go to France for home-town visits with the workers. She said the French workers told her that talks with the delegation provided a "new discovery" of America—and gave them a much different picture of this country from that presented by Communist propaganda.

She said her conversations had convinced her that Voice of America broadcasts aren't heard by many workers — since not too many workers have radios in their homes capable of picking up the U. S. transmissions.

And, she added, there's been a little too much selling of America as "utopia." French workers, Miss Lucia said, were interested in hearing of the struggles of American labor, and its setbacks—as well as its advances.

Members of the delegation said they had talked with hundreds of French workers—in such cities as Lille, Tourcoing, Roubaix, Paris, Lyon, St. Etienne and Marseille. They also met with union leaders, industrialists and goverment officials.

IN NEW YORK, meanwhile, Vice-Pres. John Livingston of the United Automobile Workers returned from Europe with much the same concern that steps be taken to improve conditions for workers in France, Italy and Germany.

LIVINGSTON headed a union delegation that toured auto and plane plants in the three countries.

"Unless something is done soon to improve living conditions in France, Italy and Western Germany," the auto group said, "we may soon find that all the aid given to date, that has been used to rebuild industries, may be in the hands of, or under the control of a dictator who is showing more and more, day by day, his lust for power and his hatred for the United States." The dictator, Livingston said, is "Joe Stalin."

The group said there was a good chance for building a strongly democratic Western Germany friendly to the U. S. if living standards rise. But Livingston voiced fear of an "upheaval" if they stagnate or get worse.

Industries benefiting by Marshall Plan funds are making huge profits, he reported, but workers aren't sharing the prosperity—and the Communists are hoping to make the most of the situation.

The UAW group plans to make a formal report after its return to Detroit.

Miners Tell Stalin

More than 100,000 members of the British National Union of Mine Workers have sent a cable to Stalin asking him to stop the fighting in Korea.

"It was a tight squeeze. But Joe made it."

It's The Same Old Struggle

But This Time It's Stalin And Communists Who Are Trying To Eliminate The Freedom Of Individuals

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE SON OF an old friend of mine was one of the first Americans killed in Korea—and chances are 10 to one that his first brush with the Communists occurred on the battlefield.

This boy grew up in a small Southern town, where the "Red menace" is something you read about in the newspapers. He entered the Army, was sent to Japan and was shifted to Korea on short notice.

A few days later he was dead.

He undoubtedly was told he was going into action against North Korean Communists but it's unlikely that he understood or appreciated the magnitude of the struggle of which he was a part.

In this respect he was like many Americans, because too many of our people look on the Korean war as being little more than a military engagement.

The average American had no difficulty understanding Hitler, Mussolini and Hirohito and their methods of operation.

They embarked openly on a campaign of conquest. They threw their own armies, navies and air forces into direct action.

And they made no pretense of being crusaders who were out to save the world from a fate worse than fascism.

Theirs was a military conflict—direct and comparatively simple.

It was a war—in the main—between democracy and dictatorship.

But this time it's more complicated.

The Communists are trying to capture men's minds and loyalties as well as their possessions.

Russia, which is running the show, hasn't declared war on anybody.

And the Politburo is conducting a worldwide campaign for "peace and democracy."

JOE STALIN AND his cohorts are as ruthless as Hitler or Mussolini ever dreamed of being.

But they're crusaders, too—at least on the surface. Their avowed objective is to save the world from the "curse" of capitalism and the Western European brand of socialism.

And they learned a long time ago that it's easier to bore from within than to invade and conquer.

Their followers throughout the world are zealots who breathe, sleep and eat Communism 24 hours a day. Their political-economic philosophy also is their religion.

They believe in what they're struggling for. They're trying to advance a new way of life. They're today's avid revolutionists, and they believe the world will go to pot unless they succeed.

And they're willing to make great sacrifices to advance their cause.

THE DOWNFALL of the United States is the No. 1 objective of international communism because our country is the leader of world democracy and because we have produced more of the comforts of life under capitalism than any other country has produced under any other system.

Aside from that, the U. S. is the dominant democratic force in the United Nations' campaign to restore world order and establish peace.

So, eventually, we must be conquered or must swing to communism if the Red revolution is to succeed.

Soon after the end of World War II the Russians tried to take over Europe but failed. Then they "turned on the heat" in the Orient. China swung to communism and now there's a bloody campaign in Korea.

Nobody knows what's likely to come next.

The friend's son who died in Korea gave his life to the same struggle we were waging when Hitler, Mussolini and Hirohito were in the saddle.

It's a struggle to preserve the individual dignity of man—to keep man from being subservient to the state or to individual rulers—to allow man a firm voice in determining his own future.

This is not difficult to understand.

But it's hard for many of our people to grasp the idea that in the current battle ideas are as potent as bullets.

We're fighting an ideological war but too many of our people are thinking only in terms of military tactics.

IT TOOK TOO LONG

In 1936, the first social security law went on the statute books—and in August, 1950, the first significant improvements in that law were finally adopted.

Fourteen years was too long a time to wait. Rising prices during those 14 years nibbled away much of the buying power in the old age pensioner's monthly check.

The new social security bill will help restore that buying power. It will increase those checks by an average of 77% per month—and it will bring another 10 million persons under the social security program.

There's still much room for improvement in the social security program. Coverage should have been broader; and anti-labor provisions, like the Knowland unemployment compensation section, shouldn't have been accepted by Congress.

Nevertheless, the improved social security program is a tremendous benefit for millions of the nation's senior citizens, who have received some pretty shabby treatment through the years.

The CIO, in winning a number of collective bargaining pension programs, truly helped the entire country. For with the development of programs like those in steel and auto, the last centers of corporation opposition to improved social security fell apart.

The CIO, which did so much to help bring about better social security, will continue to fight for the further improvements we think are necessary.

And we hope it won't be another 14 years until Congress again does right by our older generation.

TAKE A LOOK AT FRANCE

Members of Congress, now considering a series of amendments to the economic controls bill, would do well to ponder what's been happening in France.

Some of these big business-inspired amendments under consideration in the Capitol would, as the CIO has pointed out, "depress workers' wages in terms of purchasing power, and keep them depressed for the duration of the emergency."

What would it mean? Maybe a joint CIO-AFL delegation back from a visit to France has provided some of the answers.

The delegation found that French wages have been kept way down—and prices have been allowed to go way up. The American unionists blame the French government for "backward" labor legislation, and French employers for "reactionary" and "nineteenth century" attitudes.

They've resulted in demoralization of workers, a spirit of bitterness, a loss of fighting spirit—and a growth in Communist influence.

We're not saying it's bound to happen here; but we think Congress should defeat the One-Way Corrigan proposals which would hurt labor and hurt America.

While GIs Die Along The Naktong

By ALVAINE HAMILTON & CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

THE MOST important battles in our world are being fought in Korea. But we'd like to direct your attention to a couple going on in Washington. They go to prove that the forces of private greed can't tell wartime from peacetime. The fat cats fight the same way under either circumstance.

"It makes me sick in the pit of my stomach," Oregon's liberal Republican Sen. Morse told the Senate, "to see how the forces of private greed are trying to get the most they can out of the present situation."

Here are a few samples of what's going on while GIs die along the Naktong:

Oil Producers: The men who produce nearly half of the U. S.'s fuel energy are fighting their own little war in Washington to retain their special tax preference—the tax depletion allowances which have helped the oil industry become phenomenally profitable. These men are even threatening to slow down production of the fuel for jet planes and diesel locomotives, automobiles and snorkel submarines.

They want to strike two hard bargains: To be exempted from re-negotiating defense contracts with the federal government, even in cases where an unconscionable profit has been made from the taxpayers' money; and to keep control of the oil resources and the income from their leases with the states of Texas, Louisiana and California, despite an adverse Superme Court decision.

Meat Packers: They've written into the defense production bill a special provision whereby, if price controls are put on meat, the prices will have to be set high enough so that a processor is guaranteed a profit on each species—lamb, beef, pork, etc.

Homer Capehart: The Indiana Republican is a Senator who never misses a chance to strike a blow for big business. When Sen. Maybank (D. S.C.) proposed the meat packers' amendment in the Senate, Capehart proposed to be consistent. Why not, he and Sen. Taft argued, apply this to all manufacturing industry?

"The juke-box amendment," reporters labeled it. Why not allow a manufacturer to make money on each line he produces, even though that's never the way industry operates over the long pull? It's a good way to get rich quick—and legally. Capehart's proposal was licked on a voice vote, despite the valiant support of Sen. Taft.

Commodity Speculators: The cotton exchange lobbists manipulated "their" bloc of congressmen openly and effectively on the floor of the House to eliminate from the defense production act all of the powers President Truman wanted to prevent undue speculation on the commodity exchanges.

Meanwhile, soaring prices made it possible to have made a profit of over 900% on a January, 1950, investment in the rubber market.

And Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.) cited figures showing the entrance into all of the markets of a great number of traders who certainly wouldn't know what to do with a bale of cotton or a bushel of wheat if they got delivery on one. They know what to do with an extra buck though.

Taxes: The Senate's Finance Committee has succeeded in squelching the proposal for an excess profits tax on 1950 incomes—even though there's evidence of plenty of speculation right now at the expense of the housewife and small businessman, speculation that has only a psychological connection with war production purchases.

And the Senate committee has so tangled the proposal for a tax on swollen profits with a whole series of crack-pot tax proposals that in 1951 it probably will have to depend on the House tax-writing committee to draft any fair and workable excess profits levy to help pay for war costs as we go along.

But the picture isn't all black. Remember that Harry Truman is still the same man who exposed some of the biggest home-front scandals that grew out of World War II. As chairman of the Senate War Investigating Committee he knew about even more unsavory practices he managed to stop by the threat of exposure.

He has assured Chairman Mead of the Federal Trade Commission, and other individuals who've expressed concern over these problems that fair practices on the home front won't be pushed aside.

There's one other aspect of business-as-usual we'd better keep in mind, too.

If we're ever going to clean out the big-business spokesmen in Washington, we'd better start with their stooges in Congress. We have our chance at firing the current crowd in November.

There couldn't be a better home-front battle to win in any war.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher
Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII August 21, 1950 No. 34

Each Declared He Wouldn't Budge One Cent

THIS IS a story about two proud, stubborn men—the head of a prosperous small firm and the local representative of a big CIO union.

Each considered himself to be a man of firm convictions and neither liked to compromise as long as complete victory was in sight.

It was almost inevitable that they should eventually clash head-on because the firm had a contract with the union.

And when the clash came they squared off like a couple of angry gladiators and shouted harsh things at each other.

IT HAPPENED during contract-negotiation time and at a point where everything appeared to be moving forward smoothly.

Without any conflict, the two had agreed to make certain inequity adjustments and to change some of the working rules.

Then, calmly but very firmly, the union representative said, "We want a 10c-an-hour, across-the-board wage increase and we don't intend to settle for one penny less."

The company president, without batting an eye and with equal calmness and firmness, replied, "I'll give you 5c across the board and you won't get one cent more even if you shut the damn place down."

"I'll take your message back to the union—and I suggest you carry mine to your board of directors," the union man said.

"That's what I'll do," replied the company president.

A FEW DAYS later the two men got together again and the president of the firm asked, "What did the union say to my proposal?"

"They told me to hold out for 10c. And what did your board say?"

"They told me not to go one penny beyond 5c."

"Then why should we waste a lot of time yelling at each other? Let's go out and get a cup of coffee and talk about baseball."

So they drank coffee and discussed baseball.

As they parted, the company president said, "Better go back to the union."

"I will," replied the union man, "and you'd better meet with your board again."

"I will."

And they did.

And the union and the board told them to stick by their original positions.

Two weeks later they were still sticking, and arguing.

AT THIS point a newspaper reporter—a local Newspaper Guild official—entered the picture simply because he happened to attend a luncheon at which the company president was present.

The reporter and the union representative were close friends. So were the reporter and the company man.

They discussed the possibility of a strike at the plant and then the company president said, "There is no need for a shut down but that union guy and I are so darn stubborn we can't gracefully back down. I could go as high as 7½c if I had to but I don't know just how to approach him so he won't keep on insisting on 10c."

"Call him in an hour and say, 'Accept 7½c or shut the damn place down.' I'll do the rest," the reporter said.

The reporter then called the union representative. He said, "I've just talked to ..... and he said the same thing about 7½c as you did yesterday. When he calls you in an hour, tell him, 'Say, I was just getting ready to call you and tell you we'd settle for 7½c.'"

Within two hours the union had a signed contract—and two stubborn men felt that they had outsmarted each other.

That's because the union expected only 5c and the company didn't expect to settle for less than 10c. A.L.S.

BETTER—BUT STILL OUT OF BALANCE!

Canadian And Norwegian Unions Hit Aggression

SUPPORT FOR THE United Nations' action against the Communist invasion of the South Korean Republic is continuing to come from labor and other liberal forces in all parts of the world.

In Canada, Pres. A. R. Moser of the Canadian Congress of Labour—to which CIO unions belong—and Pres. Percy R. Bengough of the Trades and Labor Congress, AFL, issued a joint statement.

They called for "full support of the decisions and the actions of the United Nations Security Council in its attempt to meet the armed attack of the North Korean armies upon South Korea and re-establish peace and democratic government.

"We are pleased to see that free trade unionists throughout the world have taken the same position, and that the free nations of the world have thrown in their lot with the UN in the effort to preserve international law and order."

In Norway, the labor movement made a direct appeal to the workers to rally to the support of the UN defense.

Union leaders made a detailed review of the incidents which led to the UN action and published it in Arbeiderbladet, official organ of the Labor Party. Later they reproduced it in an illustrated, two-color pamphlet entitled "War In Korea," of which more than 500,000 copies have been distributed.

"OUR BEST WAY of guarding the peace," they added, "is to show a firm determination to defend, coupled with a desire to negotiate."

The Norwegians stressed that the defense action taken in Korea is that of the United Nations, not the United States. They posed the question, "Who started the war?" The answer was divided into two parts—"The Communists explain it this way," and "The UN report was this."

They left no doubt that they rejected the Communist explanation and classified it with the other lies by which "the peace-wreckers and invaders" have sought to turn facts upside down.

IN AUSTRIA, THE Socialistic newspaper Arbeiter Zeitung, one of the country's most influential dailies, branded the Communists' current "peace" campaign as camouflage for its aggression in Korea. It noted a parallel between Red activities now and the machinations of Hitler and Mussolini during the Spanish civil war.

"The Soviet Union," it said editorially, "in its imitation of Hitler's practices, even goes so far as professing a policy of 'non-interference' while . . . the Korean satellites are carrying on their attack with Russian tanks and Russian planes, just as Hitler and Mussolini, play-acting non-interference with endless conferences and diplomatic tricks, allowed their men-of-war to bomb Spanish harbors and their troops to stamp Spanish ground."

The difference between the present situation and that in Spain, the newspaper stressed, is that the UN went into action while the old League of Nations vacillated.

The Intl. Federation of Mineworkers, meeting in Stockholm, passed unanimously and without debate a resolution approving "the policies and action of the UN with respect to the Korean situation."

It hailed the "implementation of that policy by the member nations to make it effective in the interests of peace and freedom." The delegates represented six European nations and the United States.

Maybe North Korean Soldiers Fear Bullets Less Than State's Working Rules

Maybe one of the reasons the North Koreans are fighting so fiercely is that they don't want peace because they'll have to go back to work—and another session in the shops of the so-called "democratic people's republic" might easily be as fatal as a UN bullet or bomb.

The work rules handed down by the North Korean cabinet under Decision No. 27, dated last Jan. 31, are enough to kill off even the sturdiest worker in time.

For instance, workers must observe "labor discipline," and must carry out orders from plant management "at the correct time and exactly," without wasting time on "business which does not concern" them.

Not only must they fill their quotas, but "over-fulfill" them, and at the same time they are required to "take loving care of and conserve" their materials, machines, tools, etc. If their output is poor, they are "responsible materially under provisions of laws and ordinances of the state, irrespective of reprimand and punishment."

As for taking a day off—Heaven forbid, because if a worker is only 30 minutes late he is listed as an absentee and his state food ration is cut. If he violates any of the other rules, including one about preserving "secrecy of establishment," both the boss and the courts can punish him and he has no appeal.

Conference Plans 'More Years Of Productivity'

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

Present CIO's Viewpoint

ARE YOU afraid of growing old? The younger you are, the more fearful this prospect may seem to you. Old age sneaks up on you gradually. It doesn't come on any particular day or even any particular year, but it gets to all of us sometime. That's one thing at least, we all have in common — growing older year by year.

Since this is the fate of every citizen, you'd think the problems of old age would deserve a lot of consideration from public and private agencies concerned with the general welfare. Yet we're told that no field is more neglected, and that no group in society is treated more callously. America worships youth.

A long list of things wrong with the way the U. S. treats its "senior citizens" and an extensive program outlining what should be done to improve life for these older people were drawn up last week at the National Conference on Aging, held in Washington. The conference, sponsored by the Federal Security Agency, was the first of its kind ever held on a national scale.

CERTAINLY the whole field of problems confronting the aging population was exhaustively explored by the 800 delegates who attended, and the conference reports will offer a rich source of material for future study—and (let's hope) some action.

Present were outstanding doctors, psychiatrists and other specialists in the field of geriatrics —diseases of the aged. There were also educators, community leaders, social workers and representatives from numerous public and private organizations concerned with problems of older people.

The dozen or so labor representatives who attended were interested mostly in the section discussions dealing with the employment, income, social security and pension problems of older workers. In contact at closer range with the economic aspects of growing old, through their labor activities, the unionists were often able to bring a discussion out of the realm of abstractions down to earth.

OTIS BRUBAKER, CIO Steelworkers' research director, explained that so long as social security benefits were too low to provide a decent standard of living for the retired worker, unions would continue to push for private plans as a supplemental means.

He said it was imperative that social security be expanded at once to include disability insurance, and charged the insurance companies with using their influence to prevent the inclusion of disability insurance in both private pension plans and social security insurance.

Harry Becker, CIO Auto Workers' social security director, declared that "no matter how many private pensions there are, they are no substitute for government programs." He said that private plans must be supplemental to and integrated with the social security system.

Sol Barkin, CIO Textile Workers research director, speaking on the problem of more employment opportunities for older workers, recalled the slogan—"the scrap heap at 40"—prevalent in depression years, and stated that the attitudes of management on hiring should be revised.

AMONG THOSE PRESENTING CIO's attitude at the Conference on Aging at Washington were left to right: Otis Brubaker, Steelworker's research director; Sol Barkin, Textile Workers' research dept. head, and Harry Becker, Auto Workers' social security director.

One Delegate 103

Adelaide Johnson, 103-year-old sculptress, introduced to the delegates at the Conference on Aging by Federal Security Administrator Ewing, spent 20 years modelling the statue of three women's suffrage pioneers, Susan B. Anthony, Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Lucretia Mott, which stands in the crypt of the Capitol.

Kenneth Kramer, also from the Textile Workers, together with several other delegates, discussed an experiment in flexible retirement age now being conducted in the rug industry, under which the question of when to retire is left up to the worker within the retirement age range from 62 to 68. From 68 to 72, it is left to a joint decision of union and management, and from then on left up to management alone.

MURRAY LATIMER, industrial relations consultant, whose services were used by the CIO Steelworkers in drawing up pension plans, opposed arbitrary retirement. He said a man should be allowed to work as long as he wanted to and was capable of working. The compulsory retirement of older workers was one of the chief causes of the 1949 steel strike, he said.

Opposition to compulsory retirement was one of the subjects discussed at the conference on which there seemed to be general agreement. As President Truman expressed it in his message read to the delegates by Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing, "the great gift which medical science and an increasing healthy society have given us should not be more years on the shelf but more years of productivity."

Ewing himself also repeatedly expressed opposition to setting arbitrary retirement age limits. Pointing out the social waste in such measures, Ewing questioned whether America today does not put too much accent on youth—on the job, in the movies, on the radio and in its general attitude toward people.

"This is a country where it is wonderful to be young." he said, now "it must become a country where it is also wonderful to be old."

HERE ARE a few of the many other facts of general interest brought out in connection with the conference:

● America's population is growing older. Today there are more than 11½ million people, 7½% of the population, 65 years of age or over. Their number has quadrupled during the last half century, while the entire population has only doubled. In 1900 only 3 million people, or about 4% of the total population, was 65 or over. By 1975 it is estimated that we will have about 20 million in this age class.

● Employment of this older group of citizens is decreasing. For the last 50 years the proportion of men who continue to work after they reach 65 has been decreasing. In 1870, 80% of the men 65 or over were still working. Today only about 45% of this age class are employed.

● More than one-third of the old age group have no cash income of their own, according to figures compiled in 1948. Many of these have dependents — two-thirds of the men were married. Twenty-four per cent of them received social security assistance, and 23% of them received old age insurance.

The average old-age assistance payment in January, 1949, was $42.98 a month, and the average primary insurance benefit for a retired worker under Old Age and Survivors Insurance was only $25.40 a month, with $14 a month for his wife. (Under just-passed amendments to the Social Security Act, the average of about $39 a month for an elderly couple would be increased to about $70.)

● Housing is one of the most complex problems facing older people. The tensions created when they try to live in small quarters with the families of their children are commonly observed. In 1940 more than 75% of those 65 and over lived in their own homes, but the expense of this on a reduced income has forced many to double up with their relatives. Less than 5% live in homes for the aged.

Various churches and synagogues at present operate 800 to 900 institutions for the care of the aged, with a total of 50,000 to 80,000 inmates and a total staff of 5000 to 7000.

● Health problems increase with age. Chronic diseases are the major killers in the age group of 65 and over. But there is a lag in the development of facilities for the care of the chronically ill and infirm. Many more hospitals, nursing and convalescent homes and hospital home-care plans are needed.

Fear was expressed at the conference over the increase in the number of mental cases among the aged. If the present trend continues, it was predicted that the rate would be doubled in the next 30 years.

AGING POPULATION: This chart shows how the percentage of persons 65 years and over has almost doubled in the past 50 years. It is still increasing year by year.

CIO To Indonesia: Happy Birthday

On behalf of the members of the CIO, Pres. Philip Murray on Aug. 17 congratulated the Republic of Indonesia on its fifth anniversary.

"The CIO has always looked with warm and sympathetic interest," he said, "on the efforts of people everywhere who achieve national independence, liberty and self-government . . .

"The CIO believes that its policy of friendship and sympathy to the Indonesian people has been amply justified by the wholesome progress toward the achievement of a democratic and representative government that has been achieved during these five years. The people of Indonesia may now begin to realize the deep-seated benefits of freedom and to strengthen their institutions in the interests of rising living standards and greater security and welfare for all people."

Parley Recommends U. S. Council On Aging

Some of the problems facing the older citizens of the U. S. might have been solved already if the National Conference on Aging had been held 10 or 15 years ago, as it should have been, Federal Security Administrator Ewing told the delegates at the final meeting.

"But we are not too late—not by a long shot," he said, "for we are embarked on something more than an academic analysis of a theoretical problem. We are, in truth, embarked on a crusade."

Among the outstanding specific proposals which came out of the conference to speed this "crusade" in behalf of Americans growing old, were these:

● Formation of a National Council on Aging, presumbly under the Federal Security Administration, to function as a clearing house for information on matters important to the welfare of older people, similar to the services rendered by the Women's Bureau or the Children's Bureau for those groups.

● Establishment under the Public Health Service of a National Institute of Gerontology — the scientific study of old age — and Geriatrics—the field of medicine concerned with diseases of the aged—with an advisory council authorized to recommend research projects. This would be similar to the present Institutes on Heart Diseases and Cancer.

● Reasearch projects on the subject of age for retirement, to set up standards other than an arbitrary age limit, and with emphasis on ability to do the job rather than on age.

● An educational system geared to the needs and interests of older people, possibly under the public school system, making schooling "a life-time job," rather than for youth only.

Ewing told the conference at the closing meeting, that the next significant steps in the field will take place at the International Conference on Gerontology which will be held in St. Louis, Mo., in September, 1951.

Union-Opposed Provisions Retained

Congress Passes Improved Social Security Bill

THE COMPROMISE Social Security Bill, an improvement over the old law but still saddled with amendments that drew fire from President Truman and organized labor, was passed by the House on Aug. 16 by a 374 to 1 vote.

The Senate approved it by a voice vote on Aug. 17 and sent it to the President.

The measure expands coverage by about 10 million persons and increases benefits by an average of about 77½%.

Remaining in the bill, despite the plea of the President, were the Knowland strike-breaking unemployment compensation insurance amendment and the sharply curtailed House disability insurance provision. Truman had asked that the bill—a compromise version written by a House-Senate conference committee — be sent back to the committee for elimination of the Knowland amendment and substitution of the Senate version of disability insurance.

The House vote was taken after a last-ditch drive to bring the measure into line with the President's request was defeated by a vote of 188 to 186. It came on a motion by Rep. Byrnes (R. Wis.) to send the bill back to committee for some minor changes—a step taken to block action on another motion by Rep. Lynch (D. N. Y.) to knock out the Knowland amendment.

The parliamentary maneuvering, however, could not serve to stop Lynch from charging advocates of the amendment as enemies of labor.

"These enemies of decent labor standards," he said, "know they can no longer get away with forcing workers who have jobs to be scabs or sign yellow-dog contracts or accept sweatshop conditions. So they aim to hit workers below the belt when they are in the weakest position to maintain their gains—when they are unemployed."

Rep. McCormack (D. Mass.) described Knowland's amendment as "destructive" and charged that it was supported by "two of the most vicious lobbyists in the country." He did not identify them.

The Knowland amendment appears on the surface to be an innocuous technicality. It was introduced by Sen. Knowland (D. Calif.) at the request of Pacific Coast shipping interests after the federal government had threatened to withhold funds from California because the state had, in effect, tried to force men to scab during a waterfront strike.

The federal law sets up unemployment compensation standards upon which state legislation must be based, and specifically states that jobless pay cannot be withheld from an applicant who refuses employment made available as a result of a labor dispute.

The Knowland amendment ignores this section and prevents the federal government from withholding funds from a state which it believes has violated the federal law until the state's highest court has decided who's right. Its net effect is to permit a state to deny unemployment compensation benefits to a person who refuses to take a job left vacant in a labor dispute, and still collect from the federal government, until the state supreme court decides the case—a matter of three years or so.

The other provision opposed by Truman and organized labor provides for a limited form of relief to workers permanently and totally disabled after at least five years of coverage by the act, but before they reach the retirement age of 65 years. The House version, which the President and labor supported, would have authorized immediate benefits instead of forcing the disabled person to wait until he became 65 before collecting.

Benefits, which had a $10 per month floor for a single man in the old law, were increased to a minimum of $20. The most a single man could receive under the old law was $46 a month, compared with $80 under the new version. The maximum for a family under the new law is $150 a month, compared to $85 under the old.

Social security wage deductions will be 1½% of the first $3600 of annual earnings under the new law instead of the first $3000 at present. The rate goes to 2% in 1954 and is graduated upward to a top of 3½% in 1970.

In the Senate, only Sen. Butler (R. Neb.) objected to the compromise on the ground that it leaves too many people uncovered. If the measure is signed by President Truman by Aug. 26, the increased benefits will be paid on September claims, reaching the beneficiaries in October.

How House Voted On Anti-Labor Knowland Amendment

Here's the record of the vote on August 16, 1950, when the House of Representatives decided, in a technical parliamentary motion, not to send the Social Security Bill back to Senate-House conference committee with instructions to delete the anti-labor Knowland Amendment. The vote was 188-186. The amendment was added to the bill in the Senate; it could cut federal control over state unemployment compensation agencies, and permit those agencies to get federal funds even when not meeting federal standards. A vote against the motion is indicated by R; a vote for, W; a paired vote against is marked Z; and a paired vote for by X. A indicates Representative was absent.

ALA.—Andrews (D) ....W
Battle (D) ....W
Boykin (D) ....W
deGraffenried (D) A
Elliott (D) ....R
Grant (D) ....W
Hobbs (D) ....W
Jones (D) ....R
Rains (D) ....R
ARIZ.—Murdock (D) ..R
Patten (D) ....R
ARK.—Gathings (D) W
Harris (D) ....W
Hays (D) ....W
Mills (D) ....W
Norrell (D) ....W
Tackett (D) ....R
Trimble (D) ....R
CALIF.—Allen (R) ....W
Anderson (R) ....W
Bramblett (R) ....W
Douglas (D) ....R
Doyle (D) ....R
Engle (D) ....R
Havenner (D) ....R
Hinshaw (R) ....A
Holifield (D) ....R
Jackson (R) ....W
Johnson (R) ....A
King (D) ....R
McDonough (R) ..W
McKinnon (D) ....R
Miller (D) ....R
Nixon (R) ....W
Phillips (R) ....W
Poulson (R) ....W
Scudder (R) ....W
Shelley (D) ....R
Sheppard (D) ....W
Werdel (R) ....A
White (D) ....R
COLO.—Aspinall (D) ..R
Carroll (D) ....Z
Hill (R) ....W
Marsalis (D) ....R
CONN.—Lodge (R) ....W
McGuire (D) ....R
Patterson (R) ....W
Ribicoff (D) ....R
Sadlak (R) ....W
Woodhouse (D) ....R
DEL.—Boggs (R) ....A
FLA.—Bennett (D) ....W
Herlong (D) ....W
Peterson (D) ....R
Rogers (D) ....W
Sikes (D) ....R
Smathers (D) ....W
GA.—Brown (D) ....W
Camp (D) ....W
Cox (D) ....W
Davis (D) ....W
Lanham (D) ....W
Pace (D) ....W
Preston (D) ....W
Vinson (D) ....A
Wheeler (D) ....W
Wood (D) ....W
IDA.—Sanborn (R) ....W
White (D) ....A
ILL.—Allen (R) ....W
Arends (R) ....W
Bishop (R) ....R
Buckley (D) ....R
Chesney (D) ....R
Chiperfield (R) ....W
Dawson (D) ....A
Gordon (D) ....R
Hoffman (R) ....W
Jenison (R) ....W
Jonas (R) ....W
Linehan (D) ....R
Mack (D) ....R
Mason (R) ....A
McMillen (R) X
O'Brien (D) ....R
O'Hara (D) ....R
Price (D) ....R
Reed (R) ....W
Sabath (D) ....R
Simpson (R) ....W
Velde (R) ....W
Vursell (R) ....W
Yates (D) ....R
Church (Died 3-21-50)
Gorski (Died 12-4-49)
IND.—Crook (D) ....R
Denton (D) ....R
Halleck (R) ....W
Harden (R) ....W
Harvey (R) ....W
Jacobs (D) ....W
Kruse (D) ....R
Madden (D) ....R
Noland (D) ....R
Walsh (D) ....Z
Wilson (R) ....W
IA.—Cunningham (R) Z
Dolliver (R) ....W
Gross (R) ....R
Hoeven (R) X
Jensen (R) ....W
LeCompte (R) ....W
Martin (R) ....W
Talle (R) ....A
KAN.—Cole (R) ....W
Hope (R) ....W
Meyer (R) ....W
Rees (R) ....W
Scrivner (R) ....W
Smith (R) ....W
KY.—Bates (D) ....R
Chelf (D) ....R
Gregory (D) ....Z
Golden (R) ....R
Morton (R) ....W
Perkins (D) ....R
Spence (D) ....R
Underwood (D) ....R
Whitaker (D) ....R
LA.—Allen (D) ....R
Boggs (D) ....R
Brooks (D) ....R
Hebert (D) ....R
Larcade (D) ....R
Morrison (D) ....Z
Passman (D) ....W
Willis (D) ....R
ME.—Fellows (R) ....W
Hale (R) ....W
Nelson (R) ....W
MD.—Beall (R) ....R
Bolton (D) ....R
Fallon (D) ....R
Garmatz (D) ....R
Miller (R) ....W
Sasscer (D) ....R
MASS.—Bates (R) ....W
Donohue (D) ....R
Furcolo (D) ....R
Goodwin (R) ....W
Herter (R) ....W
Heselton (R) ....W
Kennedy (D) ....R
Lane (D) ....R
Martin (R) ....W
McCormack (D) ....R
Nicholson (R) ....W
Philbin (D) ....R
Rogers (R) ....W
Wigglesworth (R) W
MICH.—Bennett (R) ..R
Blackney (R) ....A
Crawford (R) ....W
Dingell (D) ....Z
Dondero (R) ....W
Engel (R) ....Z
Ford (R) ....W
Hoffman (R) ....W
Michener (R) ....W
O'Brien (D) ....R
Potter (R) ....A
Rabaut (D) ....R
Sadowski (D) ....A
Shafer (R) ....W
Wolcott (R) ....A
Woodruff (R) ....W
Lesinski (Died 5-27-50)
MINN.—Andersen (R) W
Andresen (R) ....A
Blatnik (D) ....R
Hagen (R) ....R
Judd (R) ....W
Marshall (D) ....R
McCarthy (D) ....R
O'Hara (R) ....W
Wier (D) ....R
MISS.—Abernethy (D) W
Colmer (D) ....W
Rankin (D) ....W
Whitten (D) ....W
Whittington (D) ..W
Williams (D) X
Winstead (D) ....A
MO.—Bolling (D) ....R
Cannon (D) ....R
Carnahan (D) ....R
Christopher (D) ....R
Irving (D) ....R
Jones (D) ....W
Karst (D) ....R
Karsten (D) ....R
Magee (D) ....R
Moulder (D) ....R
Short (R) X
Sullivan (D) ....R
Welch (D) ....R
MONT.—D'Ewart (R) A
Mansfield (D) ....R
NEB.—Curtis (R) ....W
Miller (R) ....W
O'Sullivan (D) ....R
Stefan (R) ....A
NEV.—Baring (D) ....R
N. H.—Cotton (R) ....W
Merrow (R) ....W
N. J.—Addonizio (D) R
Auchincloss (R) ..W
Canfield (R) ....R
Case (R) ....R
Eaton (R) X
Hand (R) ....W
Hart (D) ....R
Howell (D) ....R
Kean (R) ....W
Norton (D) ....R
Rodino (D) ....R
Towe (R) ....W
Widnall (R) ....W
Wolverton (R) ....R
N. M.—Fernandez (D) R
Miles (D) ....R
N. Y.—Buckley (D) ....R
Byrne (D) ....R
Celler (D) ....Z
Clemente (D) ....R
Cole (R) X
Coudert (R) ....W
Davies (D) ....A
Delaney (D) ....R
Dollinger (D) ....R
Gamble (R) ....W
Gorski (D) ....R
Gwinn (R) ....W
Hall, E. A. (R) ....A
Hall, L. W. (R) ..W
Heffernan (D) ....R
Heller (D) ....R
Javits (R) ....R
Kearney (R) ....W
Keating (R) ....W
Kelly (D) ....R
Keogh (D) ....R
Kilburn (R) ....W
Klein (D) ....R
Latham (R) X
LeFevre (R) ....W
Lynch (D) ....R
Macy (R) ....W
Marcantonio (ALP) R
McGrath (D) ....R
Multer (D) ....R
Murphy (D) ....R
O'Toole (D) ....R
Pfeifer, J. L. (D) R
Pfeiffer, W. L. (R) X
Powell (D) ....R
Quinn (D) ....Z
Reed (R) ....W
Riehlman (R) ....W
Rooney (D) ....R
Roosevelt (D) ....R
St. George (R) ....W
Taber (R) ....W
Taylor (R) ....W
Tauriello (D) ....R
Wadsworth (R) ....W
N. C.—Barden (D) ....A
Bonner (D) ....W
Bulwinkle (D) ....A
Carlyle (D) ....W
Chatham (D) ....W
Cooley (D) ....W
Deane (D) ....W
Doughton (D) ....W
Durham (D) ....A
Jones (D) ....W
Kerr (D) ....W
Redden (D) ....A
N. D.—Burdick (R) ....R
Lemke (Died 5-30-50)
OHIO—Bolton (R) ....W
Breen (D) ....Z
Brehm (R) ....A
Brown (R) ....W
Burke (D) ....R
Clevenger (R) ....W
Crosser (D) ....R
Elston (R) ....W
Feighan (D) ....R
Hays (D) ....R
Huber (D) ....R
Jenkins (R) ....W
Kirwan (D) ....R
McCulloch (R) ....W
McGregor (R) ....W
McSweeney (D) ....R
Polk (D) ....R
Secrest (D) ....R
Smith (R) X
Vorys (R) ....W
Wagner (D) ....R
Weichel (R) ....W
Young (D) ....R
OKLA.—Albert (D) ....R
Gilmer (D) ....R
Monroney (D) ....W
Morris (D) ....R
Steed (D) ....A
Stigler (D) ....R
Wickersham (D) ....R
Wilson (D) ....R
ORE.—Angell (R) ....R
Ellsworth (R) ....W
Norblad (R) ....W
Stockman (R) ....W
PA.—Barrett (D) ....R
Buchanan (D) ....R
Cavalcante (D) ....R
Chudoff (D) ....R
Corbett (R) ....R
Dague (R) ....W
Davenport (D) ....R
Eberharter (D) ....R
Fenton (R) ....W
Flood (D) ....R
Fulton (R) ....R
Gavin (R) ....W
Gillette (R) ....A
Graham (R) ....W
Granahan (D) ....R
Green (D) ....R
James (R) ....W
Kearns (R) ....W
Kelley (D) ....R
Kunkel (R) ....W
Lichtenwalter (R) W
Lind (D) ....R
McConnell (R) ....W
Morgan (D) ....R
O'Neill (D) ....R
Rhodes (D) ....R
Rich (R) ....W
Saylor (R) ....R
Scott, Hardie (R) W
Scott, Hugh (R) ..A
Simpson (R) ....W
Van Zandt (R) ....R
Walter (D) ....R
R. I.—Fogarty (D) ....R
Forand (D) ....R
S. C.—Bryson (D) ....W
Hare (D) ....A
McMillan (D) ....W
Richards (D) ....W
Rivers (D) ....W
Sims (D) ....R
S. D.—Case (R) ....W
Lovre (R) ....W
TENN.—Cooper (D) ....R
Davis (D) ....W
Evins (D) ....R
Frazier (D) ....R
Gore (D) ....A
Jennings (R) ....W
Murray (D) ....W
Phillips (R) ....R
Priest (D) ....R
Sutton (D) ....R
TEX.—Beckworth (D) R
Bentsen (D) ....W
Burleson (D) ....W
Combs (D) ....R
Fisher (D) ....W
Gossett (D) ....W
Guill (R) ....W
Kilday (D) ....W
Lucas (D) ....W
Lyle (D) ....A
Mahon (D) ....W
Patman (D) ....R
Pickett (D) ....A
Poage (D) ....W
Rayburn (D) Speaker
Regan (D) ....A
Teague (D) ....W
Thomas (D) ....R
Thompson (D) ....W
Thornberry (D) ....W
Wilson (D) ....W
UTAH—Bosone (D) ....R
Granger (D) ....R
VT.—Plumley (R) ....W
VA.—Abbitt (D) ....W
Burton (D) ....W
Fugate (D) ....W
Gary (D) ....W
Hardy (D) ....W
Harrison (D) ....W
Robeson (D) ....W
Smith (D) ....W
Stanley (D) ....W
WASH.—Holmes (R) W
Horan (R) ....W
Jackson (D) ....R
Mack (R) ....W
Mitchell (D) ....R
Tollefson (R) ....R
W. VA.—Bailey (D) ....R
Burnside (D) ....R
Hedrick (D) ....R
Kee (D) ....R
Ramsay (D) ....R
Staggers (D) ....R
WISC.—Biemiller (D) R
Byrnes (R) ....W
Davis (R) ....W
Hull (R) ....R
Keefe (R) ....A
Murray (R) ....A
O'Konski (R) ....W
Smith (R) ....W
Withrow (R) ....R
Zablocki (D) ....R
WYO.—Barrett (R) ....A

GE Locals Of IUE Get 'Go' Signal For Strike Votes

CONFRONTED by a meager offer from General Electric during more than two months of negotiations, the GE conference board of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers on Aug. 16 authorized its locals to take strike votes.

The union has 56,000 members in 50 GE plants.

Plans were pushed at the meeting for establishing a GE Defense Fund to finance IUE's fight for a decent contract with General Electric. The fund initially will consist of $225,000 in GE check-off dues won by IUE in the courts and distributed recently to locals, James B. Carey, chairman of the Administrative Committee, announced.

Meetings will be held by GE locals so workers can study the record of the negotiations, which began in early June and were broken off by GE two weeks ago, the board directed.

IUE is seeking a contract guaranteeing 10c an hour increase in wages, a $125 monthly non-contributory pension, liberalized holiday schedule and longer vacation periods.

GE HAS consistently refused to make any concessions from its stand-pat offer of its present contributory pension system and a 3c or 4c wage increase.

In his report to the board meeting in New York City, Carey charged GE with failure "to bargain in good faith." He cited the company's rejection of three IUE offers to settle differences by arbitration, panel procedure similar to that used by the Atomic Energy Commission, and binding or non-binding fact-finding commission.

Carey said GE has piled up tremendous profits in 1949 and the first half of 1950 at the expense of the worker and the consumer. He said GE has failed to keep pace with the economic gains made by workers in other industries. The company has refused to restore its profit sharing plan or its cost-of-living adjustment based on BLS statistics.

THE IUE leader charged GE wants to return to "the era of the 'robber barons' when American workers were considered a necessary evil and a faceless mass which had no right to presume any control over its economic destinies."

There's One Word For Profits—Bigger

The sort of humming noise that sings in the ears of the country club and steam yacht set these days—and grates somewhat more harshly on the plebian auricles of the workers—is the purr of Big Business as it checks up on its profits—after taxes—for the first half of 1950.

A couple of weeks ago The CIO NEWS told how second quarter earnings, as reported by the Wall Street Journal, were 46.5% above those for the same period last year.

Here are a few earnings figures for the first six months of 1950 and also of 1949, as reported by corporations to stockholders. The stockholders, remember, don't get the same earnings statements that go to the income tax collector.

U. S. Steel, for instance, clipped an estimated $7.7 million from its earnings and hid it under a depreciation charge label. That's all right for the stockholders but not for the Internal Revenue Bureau, which will collect on it no matter what tag is pinned to it.

	1949	1950
General Motors	$303,678,643	$485,277,389
U. S. Steel	119,079,238	94,052,265
General Electric	46,553,000	77,445,000
Natl. Dairy Products	16,537,423	17,587,399
Phelps Dodge (copper)	17,954,965	17,972,895
Ohio Oil	17,512,007	17,541,017
Studebaker	11,724,931	14,424,382
U. S. Gypsum	10,326,102	14,774,739
American Viscose	7,682,000	15,930,000
U. S. Rubber	6,655,010	8,848,757
Hershey Co.	5,913,929	6,827,248
Life Savers	974,697	1,172,540
Anaconda Wire	1,722,383	1,927,049
Bendix	28,572	1,617,548
Genl. Aniline & Film	2,756,000	3,047,000
Motor Wheel Corp.	1,445,726	2,311,235
Electric Storage Battery	669,569	1,701,410
Coos Bay Lumber	893,159	1,357,000
Maytag Co.	2,431,005	5,559,922
American Metals	2,559,270	2,722,110
Scott Paper	2,519,542	3,730,116
Sterling Drug	7,259,322	7,829,004
Curtis-Wright	1,909,309	3,385,267
Bristol-Myers	1,485,235	1,802,098
Commercial Credit	7,861,279	10,638,547
Sperry Corp.	3,700,525	4,263,374
CIT Financial Corp.	11,756,851	17,146,065
Celanese Corp.	6,174,659	21,441,284
Intl. Paper	24,649,329	33,767,240
Standard of Indiana	50,713,608	52,498,494
Budd Co.	7,316,026	11,001,104
Imperial Oil	8,667,178	10,975,499
Richfield Oil	59,128,339	67,202,500

MANY POTS FULL of PAC dollars are needed to make even a small percentage of the funds that conservative and reactionary forces are pouring into election campaigns. This platform and pot belonging to CIO Auto Workers Local 599, Flint, Mich., is moved from plant to plant to get dollars from workers. Left to right, Intl. Rep. Clifford Henry Weston, the designer of the platform; UAW Reg. Dir. Don Chapman, UAW-PAC Dir. Roy Reuther, and Local Pres. Clifford Rock, who is making a contribution.

Bridges' Own Local 10 Defies Him On 2 Issues

REVOLT continued to grow in the Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union against the Communist-line leadership of its president, Harry Bridges.

The union faces possible expulsion from the CIO. A hearing has been held on charges that it is Communist dominated and a report is awaited.

On Aug. 12, the ILWU's Local 10, Bridges' own local, sharply challenged him on two key votes.

By a thumping 1963 to 982, the local approved severing the ILWU's ties with the Communist-run World Federation of Trade Unions.

Then by an even more overwhelming 2082 to 887, the local voted to submit a resolution to a forthcoming ILWU convention calling upon Bridges to resign the presidency of the WFTU's Maritime Federation of the World or the presidency of the Longshoremen. Harry could take his choice, the boys of Local 10 figured. The resolution had already been adopted by Local 91, the "walking bosses."

Meanwhile, Bridges remained in jail where he was sent when a Federal district court upheld the contention of government attorneys that his views on Korea imperiled national security. Bridges had been free on $25,000 bail pending appeal of his conviction last spring for perjury.

A jury found him guilty of lying when he denied ever having been a Communist at a citizenship hearing in 1945. Two other ILWU officials were convicted with him. A federal circuit court was expected to rule shortly on an effort to obtain his release. LPA

"'Don't hoard!' the government says! With everything so high, I can't even hoard enough to last between paydays!"

Pal Of Reds Plugs Taft

The Montgomery County (O.) CIO Council has exposed Marion Patten, head of Sen. Taft's Labor League at Dayton, as a "turncoat" and "a prize opportunist" who "only recently jumped from the Communist Progressive bandwagon onto the Taft reactionary bandwagon." The statement accused Patten of working closely with the United Electrical Workers after that union was kicked out of the CIO as Communist dominated.

O'Dwyer Gets Nod As Mexico Ambassador

MAYOR William O'Dwyer, of New York, has been appointed U. S. Ambassador to Mexico. The New York City executive, elected with the support of the CIO and other labor groups, will retire about Sept. 1. He will then spend a month being indoctrinated in the State Dept. in Washington before going to Mexico City.

His resignation casts a new light on the fall elections, when New York State will pick a Senator, Congressmen, Governor and other state and local officers. Under the law, his successor will have to be elected on Nov. 7.

A hot mayoralty race in the city is expected to bring out a large number of voters who otherwise might stay home and whose ballots also will be marked for other Democratic candidates, politicos feel.

Announcement of O'Dwyer's appointment was made Aug. 15 after he had conferred with President Truman.

Vincent R. Impellitteri, president of the City Council, will become acting mayor as of the date of O'Dwyer's retirement and hold the office until Jan. 1. He has announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination and is expected to make a strong campaign. If elected he will fill out the three remaining years of O'Dwyer's term.

It also appeared possible that Controller Lazarus Joseph would be among the candidates. However, the ultimate choice will be determined in part by the party's candidates for governor and U. S. senator.

Statewide candidates will be selected at the party's state convention Sept. 6 and 7, and city and county candidates at conventions Sept. 9 or 10.

Taft Is Advised To Sue If CIO Book Is Libelous

SEN. ROBERT A. TAFT'S campaign manager last week made the mistake of opening his politician's bag in the Ohio Republican's campaign for re-election.

He was promptly slapped down by Jack Kroll, president of the Ohio CIO Council and director of the national CIO Political Action Committee.

The Ohio CIO-PAC had published a speaker's handbook on Taft which gave the GOP Senator's voting record and public statements that showed him on all possible sides of some public questions.

"It is a mass of plain lies, libelous statements, incidents that never occured and twisted distortions," howled Willis D. Gradison, chairman of the Taft-for-Senator Committee.

"It's really not surprising to find you so horrified at Mr. Taft's record," said Kroll in an open letter to Gradison.

"As the title page of the handbook aptly states, 'His record is against him.' You charge this record of Mr. Taft's stewardship to be libelous. I am sure you are aware there is adequate remedy at law for one who is libeled, and Mr. Taft has a perfect right to avail himself of that remedy.

"YOU HAVE chosen instead to use one of the oldest devices in a politician's bag of tricks—denouncing the opposition's statement as a 'lie' without answering the evidence.

"The handbook is on the record, Mr. Gradison. If that record disturbs and concerns you, remember Mr. Taft made that record."

Kroll also reminded the GOP campaign director that the record as printed in the handbook shows Taft voted against his own Taft-Ellender-Wagner public housing bill, against providing crop storage facilities, against soil conservation measures, against the school lunch program, and against full funds for the National Cancer Institute.

"Can I make each easy payment in several little installments?"

Oil Union Seeks Merger With Chemical Workers

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THEY CAME from places with such colorful names as Moose Jaw, Sask., Can., Calcashieu Parish, La., Cut Bank, Mont., and El Dorado, Ark.

They went into session at the edge of the Pacific, within sight of the derricks on famous Signal Hill.

And they tackled — head-on — many of the problems which confront CIO unions and the nation today.

There was much talk, of course, about the war in Korea and its possible effects on the world.

There was sightseeing and other entertainment along the ocean front.

But most of the time at the 20th convention of the Oil Workers Intl. Union at Long Beach, Calif., last week was devoted to the problems which confront the men and women who handle petroleum products.

PRES. O. A. "Jack" Knight of OWIU laid it on the line in his opening address—and he made no attempt to sell delegates and visitors the idea that the road ahead for the Oil Workers is an easy one.

The union, he said, deals with some of the most powerful industrial interests in the world and these giants have demonstrated time and again that they can play roughly.

Numerous efforts to smash the Oil Workers Union have been made in the past, he said, and such attempts can be expected in the future.

Although the oil companies compete with each other for markets and customers, he said, "when it comes to dealing with labor the industry is united."

He cited an example: During the recent OWIU strike, other companies supplied the struck Texas Co. with the products needed to continue serving the public.

THE ONLY way oil workers can deal successfully with the situation, he declared, is through unified action.

Then he proposed that a serious effort be made to bring about a merger of OWIU, the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers and the independent unions now operating in the petroleum and chemical industries.

"If we don't get together and unify our forces the big companies may knock us off one at a time," Knight declared.

Delegates, in a resolution adopted at a later session, supported Knight's unity proposal.

Knight and other speakers—and convention delegates, too—lashed out time and again at the Communists.

Knight pointed out that the problem of Communism isn't merely something which our armed forces are dealing with in Korea.

The problem, he said, is worldwide and it is one which has caused much trouble inside the ranks of the CIO.

The task of purging National CIO of groups which prefer to follow the Communist Party line in preference to CIO policy is nearing an end, he said.

But the task of battling Communists on an international scale, he added, has merely begun.

Then he called for full representation for labor on the various governmental programs in connection with the current war-defense effort.

Later the convention approved a resolution pointing out that there were no labor representatives during World War II on the Petroleum Administration for War and asking for a full union voice on any similar agency created as a result of the present emergency.

TOP OFFICERS of the Oil Workers International Union are shown here examining the program for the union's 20th convention, held last week at Municipal Auditorium in Long Beach, Cal. Left to right are Vice Pres. A. R. Kinstley, formerly of Houston, Texas, Secy.-Treas. T. M. McCormick, formerly of Taft, Cal., and Pres. O. A. "Jack" Knight, formerly of Hammond, Ind. All three now live in Denver, Colo., where OWIU national headquarters are located. They are shown with a miniature oil well installation, which OWIU delegates take with them to important meetings such as the annual CIO convention.

Long Beach Local Is 32 Years Old

The Oil Workers Union has had its ups and downs since it was organized back in 1918.

But through it all, Long Beach Local 128 kept right on fighting to maintain a solid organization.

This local—second largest in the union and host to the convention — is the only one in OWIU which has held regular meetings, without any real break in schedule, since the union was founded 32 years ago.

Vice Pres. A. R. Kinstley pointed out that this year's convention of OWIU "is the largest we've ever held."

He said progress is being made in the union's program to eliminate discrimination based on race, creed and color, and he called on delegates to step up their organizational work.

RESOLUTIONS adopted by the convention were, for the most part, ones which supported National CIO positions on political action, legislation and the war situation.

One resolution called on National CIO to create a mutual insurance organization to serve CIO members throughout the nation. Another proposed the establishment of a national daily newspaper which would carry general as well as labor news.

A number of speakers, including Western PAC Rep. George Roberts, said many of the problems facing working people are related directly to political action. They declared that CIO members—those in OWIU and elsewhere — should make more contributions to PAC and should register and vote.

Company unionism has for years been a thorn in the side of OWIU's organizational efforts, delegates pointed out at the convention.

The Standard Oil Companies, they said, has successfully blocked "real unionism" except in a few spots by establishing strong "employe representation" organizations.

DELEGATES also pointed out that:

Sixteen companies own or control about two-thirds of the wealthy, sprawling oil industry—and six of the 16 are part of the Standard Oil empire.

OWIU now has about 100,000 members, about a third of whom live and work in Texas. This makes OWIU the largest union in Texas.

A majority of OWIU members live and work west of the Mississippi River.

OWIU membership dropped to a few hundred during the depression, then started growing rapidly again.

The oil union was one of the group which left the AFL and became one of the founders of the CIO.

(OWIU elects officers by referendum vote. Candidates had not been named when this issue of the CIO News went to press. O. A. Knight has been president of the union for 10 years; A. R. Kinstley, vice president for nine years; T. M. McCormick, secretary-treasurer for four years.)

Veteran Members Get Union History

The Oil Workers held a special night session at its Long Beach convention to launch "The History of the Oil Workers International Union," written by Harvey O'Connor, the union's former editor and publicity director.

Copies of the book, which tells about the early struggles of oil workers, their battles with the oil companies and the growth of the union in recent years, were presented during a special ceremony to delegates who have belonged to OWIU for 20 years or more.

ARTHUR GOLDBERG, CIO general counsel, declared that "we of the labor movement are prepared to make any sacrifice necessary to protect our country—but I wonder if the business community is prepared to make equal sacrifices."

In the present situation, he said, there is no room for "profits as usual."

"Many selfish business interests are not only asking for 'profits as usual' but are asking for unusual profits," he said.

"We believe in business making a fair return, but we do not believe in profiteering."

The CIO, he said, is attempting to bring a halt to profiteering, to stop price increases and bring about imposition of an excess profits tax.

It is not necessary, he said, for wage controls to be imposed along with price controls. Wages, he explained, are already regulated by collective bargaining agreements—and new agreements negotiated in the future would be based on the prices-profits structure of industry.

Goldberg used the term "national scandal" to describe the appointment by Secy. of Commerce Sawyer of some 200 "production committees" which do not include any labor representatives.

He warned that the nation must not destroy its civil liberties in its campaign against Red totalitarianism.

SECY.-TREAS. T. M. McCormick reported that strikes during the past two years had placed a heavy financial burden on OWIU and its local unions.

During that period, he said, $400,000 from the OWIU international defense fund was used in 16 major strikes.

He charged that the Knowland Amendment was designed to make a strike-breaking organization out of the Social Security Agency because it would enable states to withhold unemployment compensation to workers who refused to work as scabs.

He also charged that a major effort was being made to shift a larger portion of the nation's tax burden to those in the lower-income brackets.

'Don't Duck—Give A Buck (To PAC)'

The Oil Workers—like other CIO unions — are stepping up PAC activities.

Officers reported that 20% of all OWIU members contributed to PAC last year although there were no congressional and senatorial elections and that "we're already ahead of that figure for this year."

The banner in the convention hall which seemed to attract the most attention contained the words "Don't Duck — Give a Buck (to PAC)."

Oil Workers Really International Union

Third word in the name of the CIO oil union—Oil Workers Intl. Union—now has real meaning.

This year's convention was first attended by voting delegates from outside of the United States. A dozen delegates from the southern provinces of Canada were present.

To provide adequate representation for this group the union established a new Canadian district.

Picketing Different In Oil Industry

The Oil Workers Union deals with some of the biggest giants of American industry. Its members are scattered over wide areas and many of them work in isolated spots.

Picketing during a strike is quite different from that at the average industrial plant. During the 1948 California strike, for example, pickets were strung along a line nearly 500 miles long.

'37 Bell Probe Gives Clue To Why Press Ignored Current Hearings

FOR FIVE days Pres. Joseph Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers testified before a Senate sub-committee investigating labor - management relations of the Bell Telephone System.

He might as well have been talking in a vacuum so far as the country's newspapers were concerned.

Virtually no stories about the hearings—Bell is only the largest private employer in the country—appeared in the big city papers. And there were none at all in most of the small town papers, even though they received accounts from wire services which covered the hearings, according to a study by the Labor Press Association.

THE INVESTIGATION was the first into the telephone industry since 1937, when the Federal Communications Commission conducted a study of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., the monopoly which controls Bell. The older hearings may supply the answer, for testimony before the FCC included the following:

"It appears to be the general practice of Bell System companies to effect personal contacts with newspaper editors, whenever items appear which are in any way critical of the company, in an effort to influence the attitude and course of action which editors will take in the future."

The FCC report also recounted a conference in 1927 at which publicity managers for various Bell companies reported on their activities. Some excerpts:

"Letters to the editor frequently are shown to our managers before published and the names and addresses of the writers given. In many cases the letters never are printed after our side of the story is told."—A. F. Hareman, publicity manager of Ohio Bell.

"Mr. O'Connor of the Southwestern company stated that his company plans to try rate cases in newspaper offices, that is, by presenting facts to the editors of newspapers before the case is presented to the commission for hearing. Representatives of this company will point out the plan of action proposed by the telephone company and emphasize to the editors the necessity of chronicling the facts. It is believed that public sentiment will be crystallized sufficiently to win the case." —H. W. Casler, assistant vice president of the New York Telephone Co.

"Through the constant contact of the publicity people with the press and that maintained for us by our commercial managers, we are enabled to more or less control items that go into the newspapers."— C. W. Hungerford, aide to the AT&T vice president:

The FCC commented:

"Correspondence found in the files of the Bell System companies indicates a practice of using advertising patronage to influence the attitude of the press toward the telephone company in connection with rate matters, and generally to secure the good will of the press."

BEIRNE CITED considerable testimony from the 1937 report and then told the Senate probers that AT&T hasn't changed much in the intervening years.

AT&T controls Bell's labor relations, he made clear on Aug. 14, and added that the situation "is responsible for the highly unsatisfactory conditions which exist in the industry today."

"It is our opinion," he said, "that the six-week strike in 1947 was forced upon its employes by the Bell system in an attempt to head off the conversion of the National Federation of Telephone Workers (predecessor of CWA) into the more closely knit international union that the CWA is today."

The CWA wants national bargaining. A spokesman for the unaffiliated unions, Edward J. Moynahan, told the Senate group that the AT&T had destroyed the bargaining rights of Bell employes and by its control of Bell companies has made "a complete farce" out of negotiations with the companies. However, he asked only that Bell companies be compelled to bargain in good faith with their unions.

AT&T REPORTED recently that in the first six months of 1950 it made a profit of $134.4 million, an increase of $26.4 million over net profits for the first half of 1949. And the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. made $21.5 million in the first half of this year compared to $11.9 million in the same period last year.

Despite its nearly 20% increase in profits, AT&T was still in the courts fighting against paying a $2.50 per week increase to CWA members employed by the New Jersey Bell Telephone Co., who won the boost in an arbitration award handed down on April 20.

Rehabilitation Change Asked

REHABILITATION of the physically handicapped has been seriously retarded because the states base it in departments of education instead of putting it in departments of labor or giving it independent status, Paul A. Strachan, president of the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped, asserts in an editorial in the current issue of the group's magazine, "Valor."

"The proof of this," he wrote, "lies in the fact that education, itself, is but one phase of rehabilitation, and the educators have little or no knowledge whatsoever of any of the other phases, some of which have developed very rapidly the past few years.

"Yet these so-called rehab experts hold on like grim death; and they blackguard and abuse any person who even dares to suggest that rehabilitation, after 31 years, has come of age and now should take its stand as a full-fledged adult, on its own base, and entirely apart from education."

Citing the deplorable condition of the nation's schools, as described in the recent report of Executive Secy. Willard E. Givens of the Natl. Education Association, Strachan charged that educators "have not shown any ability to sell the public a bill of goods on their own needs," much less provide the facilities and instruction that would permit the handicapped to take their place in society.

A Definition

The Freedom Foundation, a labor-hating outfit supported by contributions from reactionary employers, is defined by the CIO Auto Workers' education monthly, Ammunition, as: "A propaganda cartel outfit sponsored by a group of old America Firsters who never saw anything wrong with Hitler, and who believe that there is something about the sanctity of union-smashing chiseled on the original tablet edition of the Ten Commandments."

NLRB Finds Denver Post Guilty Of Spying On Guild

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board ruled last week that the Denver Post is guilty of espionage upon Local 74, CIO Newspaper Guild, and ordered the paper to reinstate with back pay an employe demoted because of union activity.

The board ruling upheld the findings and recommendations of Trial Examiner Horace A. Ruckel, which were handed down in April. It was signed by Members John M. Houston and Paul L. Styles, with Chairman Paul M. Herzog dissenting.

The case goes back to early in 1948, when contract negotiations had reached an impasse. James Ashe, a Guild member, became concerned about a strike which had been voted because it would have interfered with an impending assignment to Latin America.

Accordingly, he engaged in espionage for the benefit of the publisher, Palmer Hoyt, and persuaded the Guild to rescind the strike vote.

He was named a member of a committee which negotiated a contract that was not approved by the international. During his dealings with management he denounced Oscar Liden, veteran Post employe and an active Guild member, as one of the chief fomenters of the strike.

In September, 1948, management again approached Ashe and asked him for information about the union. Ashe refused, and confessed everything at an open meeting of the local soon after. Later he testified at hearings before Ruckel.

Liden was demoted in a series of steps from his combined job as editor of a section and an edition, and makeup editor of the editorial page, to copyreader, and his pay was cut from $100 to $92.50 a week.

The board ordered the newspaper to cease and desist from discouraging membership in the Guild by discriminating against members, and from interfering with the employe's right to organize, as well as to reinstate Liden in his original job with the back pay he lost made good.

The Guild filed a new charge of discrimination against the Post last April growing out of the unwarranted discharge of Doris Blackburn, a reporter, who charged discrimination against her began after she told Managing Editor Edmund Dooley that she was a Guild member.

A PHOTOGRAPHIC INTERVIEW WITH A

UNION LABEL GUY

Collier's Recognizes Labor As 'Potent Political Force'

"LABOR ISN'T waiting for November," says Colliers' magazine, in an article pointing out that "1950 is a year of political challenge—and decision."

The article, written by Sam Stavisky of the Washington Post, declares:

"Its (Labor's) achievements to date, and its blueprints for the 1950 Congressional elections, indicate that as a potent political force, nation-wide, it is not to be under-estimated."

STAVISKY notes the vital importance of voting registration by union members if they're to be effective at the ballot box. One AFL survey in 1948, he recalls, showed that in half a dozen cities, 65 out of 100 union members weren't registered.

"But labor's practical politicians also understand—and constantly stress—that it takes more than registration and a lot of ballyhoo to elect candidates," the article points out. Stavisky quotes Jack Kroll, director of CIO-PAC as saying:

"On election nights, they don't count the newspaper headlines or radio speeches or handbills or posters. On election night, they count votes."

THE NOVEMBER elections will give labor "a clear-cut opportunity" to test its political strength, Stavisky predicts.

One expert on election statistics—Dr. Louis Bean—says in the current issue of Look that unless there's a big voting turnout, liberals may be in for some lickings.

Basing his calculations on the pattern of voting in mid-term elections of the past, Bean guesses that Sen. Taft (R. O.) will go down to defeat. But he also thinks things look bad for three Senate liberals—Myers (D. Pa.), McMahon (D. Conn.) and Lucas (D. Ill.), as well as for conservative Sen. Millikin (R. Colo.).

Bean thinks the Democrats will maintain a narrow majority in the 82nd Congress, but that the party may lose 25 or 30 House seats and three in the Senate.

But heavy voting may completely change the picture.

Unit Formed In MC&S To Combat Communists

A RANK AND file "Committee to Combat Communist Influence" in the Marine Cooks & Stewards, which also will support the National CIO and the defense against the Red invasion of South Korea, has been established in San Francisco.

Chairman James Randall said that more than 100 members have joined and that the movement will be extended to other ports. The Cooks & Stewards is one of the CIO unions charged with being Communist dominated and is facing possible expulsion. A hearing has been held, but the hearing board has not reported as yet.

In San Francisco Randall listed the following among the committee's main objectives:

"Getting jobs; removing Communist influence from our union; disassociating ourselves from the (Communist) World Federation of Trade Unions, the Independent Progressive Party, the Communist press and all Communist front organizations, and achieving trade union unity with other seafaring organizations."

MEMBERS joining the committee sign a pledge card declaring:

"I, a member in good standing of the National Union of Marine Cooks & Stewards, pledge myself to give full support to the foreign policies of the Government of the United States and further pledge active support to the National CIO in its fight to prevent the labor movement of the United States from following the political line of the Communist party and thus giving aid to enemies of our country."

Formation of the committee came after MCS members on the S. S. Lurline and the S.S. President Cleveland protested statements by national union officers supporting Communist aggression in Korea. These statements were issued as MCS Pres. Hugh Bryson was in Europe for consultations with the WFTU.

"The jobs of MCS members," Randall charged, "are threatened by the actions of national officers who oppose U.S.-UN action in Korea and support the Communist party line.

"Because of the party-line politics of MCS officers, the big brass of the Army and Navy have been able to assign ships to Government operation rather than private companies, thus denying jobs to members of the MCS and other seafaring unions."

THE UNION backed down the previous week on an effort to block operation of the new maritime security program, which provides for screening of maritime employes. The program was set up by right wing CIO, AFL and unaffiliated unions and industry spokesmen at a meeting under Coast Guard auspices in Washington to which the MCS and the CIO Longshoremen—whose status in the CIO is the same as that of the MCS—were not invited.

The trouble developed when crew members began signing on the S.S. President Cleveland at San Francisco. Under orders from the union, 203 cooks and stewards refused to sign articles because of the screening. However, the union reversed its position the following day. Nine crew members were barred and are appealing to an appeals board which is being set up.

College Names Reuther

Appointment of Walter P. Reuther, president of the CIO Auto Workers and vice president of the CIO, to the board of trustees of Roosevelt College in Chicago, has been announced by Harold L. Ickes, chairman of the board.

HEALTH AND WELFARE program of CIO Woodworkers began to pay off recently with delivery of benefit checks to members of Local 10-364 at Lewiston, Ida. Above, Bill Anderson, still on crutches, receives two checks for $40 each from Ed Anderson, secretary of the IWA-CIO Inland District Council, while in the center Mrs. Charles Asbury displays check for $51.43 which she had received on behalf of her husband. The insurance program is completely union controlled and is welcomed in an industry where accidents are common.

CWA Wins Pay Rises At Lincoln, Neb.

THE CIO Communications Workers union has signed a contract with the independent Lincoln (Neb.) Telephone and Telegraph Co. providing for increases of approximately $82,000 annually.

Of this money $61,000 will go for pay hikes for 688 workers in the bargaining unit. Service assistants will share the remaining $21,000.

Employes having 15 years or more service will receive three weeks vacation. Previously, three weeks vacations were granted only after 20 years.

In New Jersey, the Appellate Division of the state Superior Court last week refused to delay payments of an arbitrated wage increase of $2.50 weekly to 12,000 CIO Communications Workers, pending a company appeal from the court's decision.

At Dover, Del., when CWA became active, the Bell-owned Diamond State Telephone Co. acted fast. Management called in the executive committee of the independent union and offered a contract. The chief officers turned it down and walked out. The others chose a new chairman, and without consulting the membership, signed.

CWA has now called for an NLRB election, and has presented evidence cards in the names of 50% of the workers in the traffic department. The cards were offered by former leaders of the independent union.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

With Labor Day approaching, the CIO, the AFL and the Railroad Brotherhoods are preparing demonstrations all over the Nation. The writer will address our members in West Virginia at Charleston on that day.

Get busy on PAC now. Get your dollar paid. It is your only effective political arm and is essential to remove the vicious Taft-Hartley Law from the statute books.

Many CIO conventions are shaping up between now and the National CIO convention in November. There will be an array of them. The writer plans to attend as many as he can.

Reg. Dir. James J. Leary reports that Local Industrial Union No. 1632 won a union shop election at the Wallace Manufacturing Co., North Kansas City, Mo., by a vote of 36 yes, 0 no. Henry A. Schwarzott, CIO field representative, was in charge.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports a union shop election at the Liquid Carbonic Corp., Indianapolis, Ind., in which the Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers won, 10 to 0.

Al Hartnett, Assistant to IUE Chairman James B. Carey, reports that at a representation election held at the Phoenix Products Co., Milwaukee, Wis., the employes voted IUE 34, no union 1, UE withdrew.

Reg. Dir. F. J. Michel reports that at a representation election at the Adjustable Fixture Company, Milwaukee, Wis., the employes voted unanimously for IUE. UE withdrew. IUE Rep. Harry Gordon was in charge.

IWA Director of Organization Adolph Germer of the Woodworkers reports that in a representation election at the Curtis Co., Sioux City, Ia., of the 119 employes eligible to vote, 77 voted for IWA, 37 AFL, no union 0. IWA Organizer Clifford Baker was in charge.

Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports that in a representation election at the U.S. Gypsum Co., Chicago, Ill., of the 380 Group A production and maintenance workers, 260 voted for Local 278, CIO Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers, 17 against and 10 challenged, and of the 14 Group B testers, 8 voted for UGCCW, 5 against. Union security elections: at the Chicago Malleable Castings Co., Chicago, with 24 eligible voters, USA Local 3611 polled 21 against 2, and of 431 eligible voters, 378 voted for USA Local 1135, against 16; A. C. Spark Plug Division, General Motors Corp., Springfield, Ill., eligible 433, UAW Local 438, 278, against 98: Lennox Mfg. Co., Chicago, eligible 114, IUE 95, against 2; Harris Hub Bed and Spring Co., Cicero, Ill., eligible 190, Furniture Workers 174, against 6.

Sub-Regional Dir. Sylvester Graham reports that in a union shop election at the Continental Oil Co. refinery, Billings, Mont., the vote was 63 for the Oil Workers, 8 against.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports a representation election victory for the Packinghouse Workers at the Swift & Co. vegetable oil refinery, Harvey, La., by a vote of UPWA 56, FTA 5, no union 1. This campaign was handled by CIO Rep. John Ritter.

Reg. Dir. Pete Mosele reports the following union shop elections conducted in Steelworkers' District 2: Local 4282, Irvington Smelting & Refining Co., Irvington, N. J., 219 for, 9 against; Local 2399, Carpenter Steel Co., Union, N. J., 204 for, 6 against; Local 4184, Rex Cutlery Corp., Irvington, N. J., 92 for, 12 against; Local 2504, Irving Subway Grating Co., Long Island City, N. Y., 78 for, 9 against.

Thomas Andert, president of the CIO Optical and Instrument Workers, reports a representation election victory at the American Optical Co. Branch in St. Joseph, Mo. UOIWA Organizer Widman was in charge.

Daniel New N. C. Director; Other Changes

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, CIO Director of Organization, last week announced the changes of CIO directors in three southern states.

William J. Smith, CIO Organizing Committee director in North Carolina for the past four years, has been appointed temporary CIO director in the state of Florida. Smith, formerly an officer of the CIO Shipbuilders, will fill in for Reg. Dir. Charles L. Cowles who has been called back by the Steelworkers to Cincinnati, O.

Franz Daniel, CIO Organizing Committee director in South Carolina since shortly after the beginning of the Southern Drive, will replace Smith in North Carolina.

Daniel is well known in the labor movement and has spent many years organizing in the south on the staff of the CIO Clothing Workers and the Organizing Committee.

FRANZ DANIEL

He will be replaced in South Carolina by Lloyd Vaughn, who becomes CIO district director in that state. Vaughn formerly worked in Virginia under the direction of CIO State Dir. Ernest Pugh.

Man, 85, Gets First Chrysler Pension

First Chrysler employe to receive a pension under the retirement plan won by the CIO Auto Workers is 85-year-old Charles J. Long. He qualified a few hours after applications were first taken.

In the motor assembly department at the company's Jefferson plant since 1925, Long will retire on Sept. 1 along with approximately 1300 other Chrysler workers.

Senate Unit Reports Hysterical Security Bill

CIO PRES. Philip Murray on Aug. 16 asked members of the Senate Judiciary Committee to kill the McCarran Omnibus Security Bill as a threat to organized labor and civil liberties, and to enact instead the recommendations President Truman made in a message to Congress on Aug. 8.

The following day two things happened:

1 In the morning, a group of seven Democratic senators introduced what they called the "administration bill" on security. It embodied the President's recommendations.

2 In the afternoon the Senate Judiciary Committee approved the McCarran Bill, which is named after Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.), its sponsor and the committee chairman. The vote was 9 to 3.

The McCarran Bill includes the Mundt-Nixon-Ferguson Bill, which is aimed at controlling Communists but is so broad it could be trained on any liberal or labor group. The Nevadan's measure is even broader. It also would enact:

1 Provisions authorizing the deporting of lower echelon diplomats and United Nations employes deemed guilty of subversion or spying, with revocation of their diplomatic privileges.

2 Authority to the Attorney General to keep in custody for six months deportable aliens who cannot be ejected for technical reasons.

3 Registration for foreign-trained spies and saboteurs.

4 Establishment of a semi-independent Bureau of Visas and Passports in the State Dept. which would have contacts with the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other intelligence agencies.

Before reporting the bill out, the committee deleted a proviso prohibiting the picketing of Federal Court buildings and the homes of federal judges and jury members.

The "administration" bill was sponsored by Sens. Lucas (Ill.), the majority leader; Myers (Pa.), Senate whip; Kilgore (W. Va.), Graham (N. C.), Douglas (Ill.), Humphrey (Minn.), and Green (R. I.). Later in the day two more Democrats added their names—Sen. Magnuson (Wash.), and Sen. Lehman (N. Y.)

Kilgore and Graham, members of the Judiciary Committee, voted against approval of the McCarran Bill along with Sen. Langer (R. N. D.). Magnuson announced he voted for it only to get it to the Senate floor, and said he will sign a minority report asking for substitution of the "administration" measure.

The "administration" bill would require registration of foreign-trained spies and saboteurs; extend the statute of limitations on espionage from three to 10 years; tighten laws on prosecutions of persons unlawfully in possession of classified information, and re-enact lapsed laws permitting security regulations for military and non-military areas.

IT ALSO would authorize the Dept. of Justice to retain in custody for six months aliens ordered deported but who cannot be ejected from the country for technical reasons, and to supervise their activities after the six months' period, and would empower the Dept. of Justice to exclude "certain dangerous aliens from areas vital to our national security."

In his wire to the Judiciary Committee, Murray said the CIO strongly believes that "every necessary step should be taken to prevent espionage, sabotage or subversive activity."

"But it is our considered opinion," he went on, "that the so-called Omnibus Security Bill goes far beyond the needs of the situation, and in fact threatens to produce unwanted and distasteful curbs on free speech, free assembly and free association.

"It contains definite threats to the continued functioning of bona fide labor organizations."

8-21

New Plea Made To Defeat Loan To Franco

THE CIO is "more than ever convinced that it would be a disaster" for U. S. aims if the proposed $100 million loan to Spain is approved," members of the House were advised last week in a letter urging defeat of the legislation.

"We believe now more than ever it is necessary for the United States to stand firmly against all systems of dictatorship which suppress all those who refuse to accept dictated opinions and who refuse to live like puppets," said the letter.

It was signed by Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the Clothing Workers and chairman of the CIO International Committee, and Legislative Director Nathan E. Cowan. A copy went to each member of the House, where action is due soon to make provision for the loan to the Franco government in connection with the European Recovery Plan appropriation.

The letter repeated a telegram sent Senate and House leaders on Aug. 3, shortly after the first legislative step was taken. The wire pointed out that the action "has already weakened the precarious position of democratic forces in Asia and will considerably weaken the struggle of our democratic European allies against the encroachments of Communism."

"It lends invaluable support," the telegram continued, "to the false propaganda arguments of the Communists against American foreign policy and jeopardizes the continuation of labor support which the ECA has obtained throughout the free world. Such action weakens American efforts to build positions of strength in opposition to Communism."

The letter asked members of the House not only to vote against the appropriation, but actively to work for its defeat as "important for the success of the United States' foreign policy as a whole."

T-H Act Fails, Strike Wins Union Shop

THE CIO Textile Workers now have a union shop at the Widder Bros. Manufacturing Co. plant, Emmaus, Pa., but it took 16 weeks of picket line duty by 180 TWUA members to get it.

The workers walked out April 20 when the company refused to agree to a program which all other broad silk shops in the Allentown TWUA Joint Board had accepted. Chief of the issues in dispute was the union shop, which the workers had voted for in a NLRB election.

In addition to the union shop, the workers won an additional paid holiday, surgical benefits in the group insurance program and various wage adjustments, including an increase for loomfixers to $1.70 an hour.

TWUA recently won a 10c hourly increase for 4000 workers at the Celanese plant in Cumberland, Md.

Non-Stop Parleys In Guild Strike

A three-man panel of Federal mediators attended a series of intensified bargaining sessions last week between striking members of the New York CIO Newspaper Guild and the World Telegram and Sun management in an all-out attempt to settle the 10-week-old walkout.

Sessions will continue until an agreement is reached, it is planned, with time out only for eating and sleeping.

The strike has resulted in a shut-down of the plant as members of nine AFL and independent unions refused to cross the picket line.

Meanwhile, efforts of 23 members of a so-called "Guild Committee for Common Sense" to break the strike were termed a failure. Suspension of 21 of the 23 has been recommended by a four-man fact-finding board appointed by the Guild executive board.

UFWA Sets Up Anti-Red Local In L. A.

THE CIO Furniture Workers, which threw the Communists out of the national administration at its convention in June, has chartered a new Local 1010 in Los Angeles, Calif., from the wreckage of the Red-dominated Local 576.

The charter was presented by William Gilbert, personal representative of UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer, at a meeting attended by workers from shops representing 75% of the membership of Local 576, as well as workers in unorganized shops who now have the opportunity to join a genuine CIO union.

Gilbert said it had become evident that the workers could not find democratic expression in Local 576 to challenge and defeat the anti-CIO party line leadership. Workers leaving the old local and joining the new will have full contract and insurance protection, he said, as these matters legally are under the direction of the international union.

Gilbert disclosed that Local 576 has rejected his offer of the international's assistance on legitimate trade union objectives because the international, on its part, would not agree to accept the local's anti-CIO, pro-Communist policies.

N. J. Council Board, PAC Opposed To 'Wage Clamps'

THE NEW JERSEY CIO Council executive board and the Political Action Committee for that state, meeting jointly in Newark recently, called for price and rent controls and standby rationing, but opposed placing of "wage clamps" on workers.

The 100-member group proposed that "sacrifices involved in domestic mobilization . . . be equally proportioned."

The program adopted urged more low rent and veterans housing construction; tax increases to start above the first $5000 of gross income and a stiff excess profits tax, but opposed the Mundt-Nixon-Ferguson bill as a threat to civil rights.

Simultaneously, the New Jersey Federation of Labor sent letters to U. S. Sens. Smith and Hendrickson, both Republicans, urging price and rent controls, a higher excess profits tax and price ceilings on real estate sales.

The AFL group also urged more Federal low-cost and low-rental housing. It said that excess profit taxes should be imposed rather than an increase in income taxes under which "the wage earner would get soaked."

Labor 'Shortage' Is Laid To Bias

Plans of Michigan manufacturers to recruit labor in the south were branded "unnecessary and premature" by Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the CIO Auto Workers, in a letter to Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan asking for a thoroughgoing investigation of the manpower situation.

"One of the reasons for the so-called 'shortage' of labor," Mazey wrote, "is the widespread practice of discrimination in hiring policies against certain groups of workers.

"The principle groups against which this discrimination is directed are Negroes, women and workers over 40 years of age. Many employers follow a deliberate policy of refusing to hire workers in those three groups, thereby leaving untapped a large reservoir of available labor. The UAW-CIO is prepared to submit documentary evidence to support this claim."

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taft-Hartley Repeal	Would repeal most viciously anti-labor bill, reinstitute Wagner Act.	Pigeonholed.	Give money to PAC; register; vote.
FEPC	Would bar job discrimination based on race, creed or color and provide penalties for violations.	Pigeonholed for this session.	Give money to PAC; register; vote.
Mundt-Nixon Bill, McCarran Omnibus Bill.	Endanger civil liberties, union rights, under guise of fighting subversive activities.	Reported by committees; action may be soon.	Ask Senators and Representatives to vote against the bill.
Ratification of Genocide Convention	International agreement to outlaw mass killings for race or religious reasons.	Reported favorably by Sen. Foreign Relations sub-comm. (Requires Sen. action only.) Full comm. has not acted.	Ask Senators and Representatives to vote against.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

Rep. George O'Brien 'Right' On Rent Curbs

Rep. George O'Brien (D. Mich.) voted "right" on two House roll-calls on rent control, although he was absent on the final vote listed in the CIO News 1950 Voting Record, the Congressman has pointed out.

Rep. O'Brien cast no "wrong" votes on any of the 13 issues listed in the Voting Record.

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., AUGUST 28, 1950 82 No. 35

Taft Was Absent

Capitol Hill observers were wondering why Sen. Taft (R. O.) was not present last week when a Senate Labor subcommittee—of which he is a member—was considering how the labor act bearing his name works. Had he been present at one of the sessions he would have heard Mrs. Earline Rochester (top left), an employe at the Tallapoosa, Ga., plant of the American Thread Co. and wife of a volunteer organizer for the CIO Textile Workers, tell how Durwood Teal (top right) beat her and her husband unconscious outside the mill gates (See Page 9.)

Taft's absence last week at the CIO-PAC rally at Columbus, O., the capital of his state, was perfectly understandable. As is shown in the signs the Youngstown Steelworkers (immediately to the left) are bearing, they want to replace Taft in the Senate by Joseph Ferguson. At the rally were 500 Youngstown Steelworkers, 2000 other CIO members from elsewhere in the Buckeye State, and speakers from other labor groups. Union opposition to Taft has done more to bring about working labor unity in Ohio than any other force. That unity, translated into registrations and votes, may give him another absence mark from the Senate during the 82d Congress. Although Taft is the focal point of the labor attack, the unity he has helped create may also send a few anti-union Ohio Representatives back to private life. (See Pages 6 and 7.)

NLRB To Employer: Get Court To Alter Ban Hampering Union

THE NATIONAL LABOR Relations Board last week ordered a Texas employer to withdraw or ask modification of a State court injunction it had obtained to prevent its employes from exercising their legal right to form a CIO union.

The order was directed against W. T. Carter & Brother, a partnership composed of 20 members of the Carter family in the lumber business at Camden, Tex. The firm owns all property in and about the town, where it has a plant with about 550 employes whom the CIO Woodworkers have sought to organize.

The injunction prohibited the holding of a union meeting on property owned by the firm. A majority of the board, composed of Members Abe Murdock and Paul L. Styles, held that the seeking of the injunction was an unfair labor practice and constituted a violation of the Taft-Hartley Act. Chairman Paul M. Herzog, third member of the panel, dissented on this point, but concurred in the rest of the ruling.

The board unanimously found that the company violated the act by refusing to permit the holding of outdoor union meetings in open areas on its property, by following IWA organizers to prevent such meetings, by engaging in surveillance of union meetings through having a shorthand reporter at them, by discharging one employe for union activity and another because of union activity and his testimony at an NLRB hearing in the case, and by evicting one of the discharged employes from his company-owned house.

THE BOARD ordered the firm, in addition to withdrawing or seeking modification of the injunction, to cease its illegal activities, to reinstate the two discharged men with back pay, and to restore the company-owned house to the evicted employe and reimburse him for any loss he may have suffered.

Several IWA organizers have been arrested since the injunction was obtained on July 13, 1948—one because his car went a few inches off the main street as he turned around to leave the town.

Your Retirement Will Likely Be Longer Than Your Dad's

THE GAP between the span of total life and working life for men in the United States is growing steadily longer.

Men today live longer than they did 40 years ago, but their working life is shorter. The total life expectancy of an average 20-year-old white male worker increased 5½ years between 1900 and 1940, but his work-life expectancy rose only 2½ years.

These figures come from tables developed by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, which will soon be published in BLS Bulletin No. 1001—"Tables of Working Life."

The tables were announced shortly after the closing of the National Conference on Aging, held by the Federal Security Agency, Aug. 13-15.

The BLS tables show that the number of years which the average male worker could expect to spent in retirement doubled in 1900-1940 from 2.8 to 5.7 years. If this trend continues, the BLS states, the gap between total life expectancy and work-life expectancy will have tripled between 1900 and 1975.

The average 20-year-old white rural worker in 1940 could expect to work almost three years more than an urban worker, according to the tables. The non-white 20-year-old had an average future work-life expectancy almost six years less than the white worker.

THE CIO NEWS 1950 VOTING RECORD

A special 12-page Voting Record of the 81st Congress—from January 1949 to June 1950—has been printed as a separate supplement, for distribution among union members throughout the country.

PRICES:

5c a copy; 100 for $4; 500 for $17

1,000 for $24

Rates for larger quantities upon request

★ ★ ★

Send your orders for the 1950 Voting Record together with check or money order, to:

THE CIO NEWS
718 JACKSON PLACE, N. W.
WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

Send.....copies of The 1950 CIO NEWS VOTING RECORD to:

Name .....

Union ..... Local No.....

Street Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State.....

Accompanying is check or money order for $.....

Please bill by union [ ].

Committee May Salvage Battered Controls Measure

A BADLY battered Economic Controls Bill passed the Senate by an 84-3 vote, and the CIO last week called on a joint Senate-House committee to make some major improvements in the final version.

Passage of the revised bill will probably not be long delayed.

A number of amendments to which the CIO had earlier objected were passed in the Senate, despite warnings that they were unfair and perhaps unworkable.

The bill grants considerably more powers than President Truman had asked in his message to Congress shortly after the North Korean aggression.

In general, it provides the President with powers to control prices and wages when he finds it necessary to do so; and authorizes rationing of scarce goods.

IT ALSO provides a number of powers which the President requested: a program of allocations and priorities for scarce materials used by industry; a lending program of $2 billion to speed defense production; authority for the Federal Reserve Board to tighten controls on consumer credit, like the World War II "Regulation W" concerning installment buying; and means of tightening credit on home buying.

The latter provision has been criticized as hurting low-income home purchasers, while having no effect on those with more money.

In a memorandum to members of the Senate-House conference committee, the CIO offered a number of suggested improvements.

It criticized the Senate bill's provision to leave all power over allocations and priorities in the Dept. of Commerce—the businessmen's department—and suggested that other agencies should have the say in fields in which they are intimately concerned.

The CIO said that a provision requiring the President to take no action on controls unless he orders stabilization of all wages and prices at the same time "is unwise and unworkable."

At present, the letter indicated, "only selective price control is needed to take care of price rises in a few commodities. To require blanket price and wage controls would be to use a cannon to kill a mosquito."

NET EFFECT of the Senate amendments, the CIO said, will be to "leave major sectors of the cost of living unstabilized." It predicted increases in food costs, rents or the price of houses, and miscellaneous items such as medical care, transport, recreation, etc.

These three categories account for about 63% of workers' living costs—leaving only about 37% of living costs covered by the control bill as it now stands.

"It is doubtful, however, that prices can be significantly stabilized in this sector while other living costs continue to rise," the CIO told members of the Congressional conference committee.

Rep. Flood Absent For Good Reason

Rep. Flood (D. Pa.) last week came up with a thoroughly convincing explanation of why he had been marked absent on two votes cited in the CIO News 1950 Voting Record.

Flood was absent from votes on Social Security recommittal and on appropriations for ECA. The votes were called in late September and early October of 1949.

In a letter to the CIO News Rep. Flood recalled that the House was called back into session in the latter part of September, 1949. He said:

"I had already made plans for my wedding at that time, and I think you will agree it will be pretty hard to find a better reason for being absent."

(Editor's Note: We agree).

Rep. Flood cast no wrong votes on the 12 issues listed by the Voting Record.

Murray Speech On Air Labor Day

The Labor Day address of CIO Pres. Philip Murray will be carried over the ABC network from Birmingham, Ala., at 4:30 p. m., EDT.

CIO members should check with ABC outlets in their communities and request that the broadcast be picked up locally.

Organizer Pitches Mean Horseshoe

An organizer on the staff of the CIO Stone Workers is the new horseshoe pitching champion of North and South Carolina.

He is Luke Rumley of Lexington, N. C., who won the title recently in the Amateur Athletic Union championships held at Winston Salem, N. C.

Rumley, who said he "just pitches in his spare time," formerly held the same championship, having won it five years ago.

CIO Board Meets Aug. 29

The CIO Executive Board this week holds its first meeting since early summer at the Hotel Washington, Washington, D. C.

The session is scheduled for Aug. 29, but it may carry over until Aug. 30. Pres. Murray, Sec.-Treas. Carey and the CIO's nine vice-presidents were to meet on Monday, the day before the board session.

Important policy statements—on such issues as home-front mobilization, legislative activity, and foreign policy—were scheduled to come out of the board meeting.

In addition, action on charges of Communist domination of three affiliated unions—the Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union; the Marine Cooks & Stewards, and the Intl. Fishermen—was expected.

Committees headed by Pres. O. A. Knight, of the Oil Workers, held long hearings on charges against the unions earlier this summer, and their reports and recommendations were to be given to the board.

Under constitutional changes made at the 1949 convention, the board may expel by two-thirds vote a union found guilty of following Communist Party rather than CIO policies.

TELLERS are compiling the vote by which members of the World-Telegram and Sun Unit of the CIO Newspaper Guild of New York ratified a proposed contract. The vote, which was 270 to 90, also ended the walkout which began June 13 and closed the paper. The New York Guild hailed the settlement as a victory. Members of AFL printing craft locals and unaffiliated unions respected the Guild's picket line. For terms of the contract see the column of CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood on Page 11.

Murray Calls Tax Bill Special Interest Legislation

THE SENATE last week began consideration of a special wartime tax bill which the CIO branded as a "brazen example of special interest legislation."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in a letter to Senators, assailed the bill as going too light on the wealthy, too heavy on families in the lower income tax brackets.

The bill was under heavy fire from labor and liberal groups because it carried no excess profits tax provisions, though profits are now running at the rate of $25 billion a year—and going up.

Sen. George (D. Ga.) claimed that the super-profits provision had been left out in the interest of speedy action. Sen. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.) has offered an excess profits amendment, for which CIO Pres. Murray's letter asked full support.

CIO RESEARCH DEPT. officials charged that the tax bill as it now stands not only keeps existing loopholes but enlarges them. It also creates new methods for high-income individuals to escape paying higher taxes.

Liberal Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) bluntly charged that the tax bill, as it now stands, will "breed dissatisfaction, distrust and dishonesty."

The bill was drawn up in answer to Pres. Truman's request for an interim $5 billion tax increase to help finance the military action in Korea. It was drafted in the Senate Finance Committee, which was working on a pre-Korea tax bill already passed by the House.

Never Thought We'd Live To See It Dept.

Things have come to such a pretty pass that Claude A. Putman, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, had to warn his members last week against increasing prices more than is necessary to meet higher production costs.

"The chiseling opportunist," he said, "who adds to his selling price a single penny which cannot be justified by an unavoidable increase in production costs is bartering away his own and his country's freedom."

As a final shot, he declared that the manufacturer who creates artificial shortages by hoarding materials in abnormal inventories is playing into the hands of those who want to fasten on this country "collectivist strait jacket controls from which they may never be freed."

The bill (H.R. 8920) is estimated by Senate staff officials as capable of raising about $4.5 billion, but it may be in for a face-lifting in the joint Senate-House conference committee after it has passed the Senate.

The CIO president's letter flatly accused the measure of containing "more escape hatches for wealthy taxpayers than have ever been proposed in revenue legislation.

"The bill," Murray added," is an affront to the people of the United States and a dis-service to the cause of national unity at a time when our fighting men are engaged with the enemy."

He added that the bill's discrimination "between men and money is immoral and indefensible."

MURRAY ASKED the Senators to "strike out, root and branch, all of the favors for wealthy taxpayers which have been written into it."

He cited a number of "escape hatches" preserved from present tax laws or invented for the new one:

1 The device by which a family can split a single income between husband and wife, to take advantage of lower rates. Murray said it "means little if anything to low income taxpayers."

2 A "family partnership" dodge, "by which wealthy families split up their large incomes not merely into two parts but into many parts, so that even lower tax rates apply."

Murray said that this "tax racket" had been knocked out by the courts on many occasions, but that the new tax bill not only proposes to legalize the loophole but also makes it retroactive to 1939.

"It would provide wealthy families enormous refunds from taxes of past years," he said, "and would reduce their taxes from here on—but average families will be paying the high wartime tax rates."

3 A corporation-stock deal for high-income corporation executives. It permits them to take a large portion of their salary in company stock, at prices under the market level, hold it for a while, then sell the shares at a profit, and pay low capital gains taxes rather than the higher scale personal income tax.

4 A special reward for holders of oil or other mineral rights. Through a number of technical measures, these people would escape all income taxes on the royalty payments for use of natural resources on their property.

Part of their income would be tax-free, and the other part would be taxed under capital gains, rather than income rates. The device will make some Texas millionaires a lot richer.

5 A provision to favor speculators on the commodity and stock exchanges. They need hold their stocks or commodities only three months—rather than six, as at present—before having their profits qualify as long-term capital gains. There's a 25% limit on such a tax, rather than the much higher rate of the personal income tax.

Murray charged that the bill "would transfer to those least able to bear it, the great burden of providing for our nation's needs in this time of great crisis."

Robert Nathan To Give Lowdown On Prices, Profits And Wages

Higher prices? What happens to wages? Are profits too high? Can we have guns and butter?

Questions like these will be the subject of a new series of eight CIO broadcasts on the ABC network. The series starts Saturday night, Sept. 2, at 7 p.m. eastern daylight time.

Robert Nathan, one of the country's leading experts on economic problems, will again be the speaker on the CIO radio series.

A former top official of the Office of War Mobilization & Reconversion after World War II, Nathan is now an economic consultant in Washington. He is the author of several "Nathan Reports" for the CIO and various unions.

Remember the time: Saturday nights at 7 p.m. E.D.T., on the ABC network.

Senate-House Unit OK's Franco Loan, But Cuts It

A SENATE-HOUSE conference was working on the $32 billion Omnibus Appropriations bill with a meat-ax last week.

However, it approved a loan to Franco Spain after cutting down the $100 million originally authorized in the Senate to $62.5 million. The House has not had a chance to vote on the appropriation, as the entire foreign aid section was added to the bill in the Senate.

The committee action virtually assures some money for Spain, as under House rules debate on a conference report is limited to one hour.

About the only possibility of getting rid of the Spanish section would be to recommit the measure with instructions to the committee to delete it, observers said. House leaders believe it would be impossible to put through such a resolution in spite of the overwhelming opposition of labor, liberals and many others to any money for Spain.

President Truman's Point Four program, which the CIO backed wholehearted, was made almost ineffective when the committee slashed the appropriations from the $26.9 million approved in the Senate to $15 million—far below the $45 million the President sought to effectuate his hope of helping the underdeveloped nations of the world to improve themselves.

The committee also knocked $200 million off Marshall Plan funds for the fiscal year, lowering the total to $2526 million.

One section it left intact was the $1,678,023,729 for arms aid to Europe voted by the Senate.

Goodrich Talks Set

Negotiations between the CIO-United Rubber Workers and officials of the B. F. Goodrich Co. on a new working agreement will begin in Cleveland, O., Aug. 30, it was announced by URWA Pres. L. S. Buckmaster.

The Rubber Workers recently adopted a 1950 economic program that calls for an across-the-board 25c an hour wage boost in addition to further increases based on the Bureau of Labor Statistics cost-of-living index and to correct area and plant wage inequities.

Reuther Says GM Pay Increase Will Be Paid In 'Wooden Nickels Of Inflation'

THE 5c hourly cost-of-living wage increase which will go to some 335,000 General Motors productions workers on Sept. 1, will be paid in the "wooden nickels of inflation," Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers said last week.

The increase was granted under a formula tied to the consumers' price index issued by the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. It provides for the adjustment of wages quarterly as the index rises or falls, on the basis of one cent an hour for every 1.14 points change in the price index. The formula was written into the historic contract signed in 1948 between the UAW and GM.

THE BLS announced last week that its index rose from 167.3 on April 15 to 172.5 on July 15, the highest point it has reached since October, 1948, and 2.4% higher than a year ago. Food prices made the biggest advance, rising 2.6% during the last month of this period.

Reuther, immediately after the GM cost-of-living wage boost was announced last week, sent a wire to Pres. Truman and leaders in Congress calling on them "to take decisive steps to protect the living standards of the people from inflation and profiteering."

He pointed out that the GM increase was based on BLS figures only to July 15, and that prices are still going up.

"THE RISE in the cost of living which brings about this wage increase is deeply disturbing news," Reuther's telegram stated. "It indicates that inflationary price grabs are weakening the American economy at a time when its strength and stability are crucial to the preservation of peace in the world.

"It means that the already inadequate living standards of millions of American families not protected by contracts such as the GM agreement are being undermined by profiteering and speculation.

"The GM workers are not being deceived by the 5c increase because it will be paid in the wooden nickes of inflation."

Since the UAW-GM wage formula went into effect in May, 1948, the rate has been changed five times. It went up once before, and was revised downward three times.

Ken Bannon, director of the UAW-CIO National Ford Dept., has asked Henry Ford II, president of the Ford Motor Co., to meet with the union to discuss the effect on Ford workers of the company's decentralization program.

Bannon's request was contained in a letter to Ford last week-end.

In the company's announcements of its plans, Bannon said in his letter, "no mention of the effect on the employes involved has been made. As a result, the employes of the Ford Motor Co. are faced with a serious problem. The fear of insecurity is something that always has and always will cause anxiety and apprehension among all people."

POSSIBILITIES of getting rent control clause in over-all Economic Controls bill were discussed in office of Rep. Douglas (D. Cal.), seated, by Los Angeles delegation in Washington for court fight against local decontrol resolution. Shown, left to right, are Leo Goodman, director, National CIO Housing Committee; Rep. Holifield (D. Cal.); Joseph DeSilva, AFL Clerks Union, Los Angeles; David S. Smith, Los Angeles attorney; Rep. Clyde Doyle (D. Cal.); Herbert Thatcher, AFL general counsel, and Maxwell Miller, executive secretary, Los Angeles Tenants' Council. See story on Page 12.

Some Thoughts On 'Dark Supremacy'

We're Going To Have Trouble Convincing Asiatics That Segregation And Democracy Go Hand-In-Hand

By ALLAN L. SWIM

NOT LONG AGO I had a lengthy, interesting "bull session" with a trade union official from India—a friendly, dark-skinned Hindu who knows from personal experience the meaning of racial discrimination.

The United States, he said, has a rocky road to follow in Asia and "one of your most difficult problems in the Orient results directly from the way you handle your race problem at home."

That's why this column on "dark supremacy" is being written—and I hope it is read by some of our white supremacy advocates.

LET'S THOSE OF US with white skin take an imaginary trip to Asia, where the struggle between democracy and communism has reached the shooting stage.

The first thing of which we become aware after landing in India is that we're the minority race and that we're in the minority, too, insofar as religion is concerned.

After doing a bit of sightseeing we arrange for a meeting with a group of intelligent Indians.

"The Communists," one of our hosts says, "are making considerable headway in Asia—and it is very difficult for you in the United States to counteract their propaganda.

"They've already taken over China and for a time it looked as if they were going to push your army into the sea off Korea.

"I have no doubt that you'll eventually win the shooting war in Korea but winning the ideological war throughout Asia will be much harder."

WE'RE IMPRESSED by the speaker and we ask him to continue. "And don't pull any punches merely because we're your guests," we say.

"Well, it's this way. For many years my own country was ruled and exploited by Great Britain, your closest ally in the battle against communism.

"You know as well as I do about the way in which the Dutch exploited the people of Indonesia—and one of your close allies is Holland.

"The United States, you know, placed strict limitations on immigration from China, and many of the Chinese people who visited your country were treated badly.

"In the struggle which had been brewing in China for a long time your government supported a regime which most of the people considered to be corrupt.

"These things are bad enough — but there's something else which troubles us, and it's the white supremacy attitude of so many of your people."

AT THIS POINT WE begin to squirm uncomfortably — because we know what's coming and because we have no defense to offer.

"Imagine how you'd feel if you visited the capital of any Asiatic nation and couldn't stay in any of the better hotels merely because you're white," our host says.

"You wouldn't like it if you weren't allowed in our good restaurants because of the color of your skin.

"And how angry you'd get if your children were placed in segregated schools merely because they are not dark complexioned!"

The speaker chuckles as if amused by a private joke, then says, "And would your newspapers at home use big headlines if you were threatened or perhaps beaten by an Asiatic Ku Klux Klan?

"It's true that white people have been treated badly in the Orient, but I can't recall any of our people organizing lynching parties merely because the victim was white."

WE'VE HEARD enough to know that our Indian host, who believes in democracy and is friendly to the U. S., is telling us something all of our people should hear.

Then we do a bit of thinking about Korea, where dark-skinned Commies have been giving us a bad time. And the South Koreans, we tell ourselves, have dark skins, too.

Then we mention that one of the crack outfits in the U. N. Army is composed of Negroes from our country. We mention this to our Indian friend and he replies:

"These Negro soldiers undoubtedly know that they're better off under your brand of democracy—even with the limitations placed on their civil liberties—than they would be under communism.

"I agree with them, and you don't have to convince me. Your job is to convince millions of Asiatics who are being told over and over again by the Reds that your country discriminates against all people who do not have white skins.

"And it seems to me one of the most convincing things you could do would be to wipe out segregation and do away with other forms of racial discrimination in the United States."

MEN IN SHIRT SLEEVES

The more we view the troubled world situation the more convinced we become that the United States needs some shirt-sleeve diplomats to replace those of the striped-pants variety.

This doesn't represent class consciousness on our part and our mission in life isn't to deprive the wealthy and "well-born" of the social life that often goes along with foreign affairs work in far-away lands.

Right now we're mostly interested in the practical aspects of the ideological war between the forces of democracy and communism.

A friend of ours recently summed up our views fairly well when he said, "Russia is seeking converts where potential Communists are but our State Department is fighting communists mostly where potential Communists ain't."

Maybe our friend's English isn't so good but his idea is.

What he meant—and what we mean—is that Red agents are working like eager beavers among people with whom many of our diplomats don't even have a speaking acquaintanceship.

There was a time in our history when big international deals were pulled off by foreign service men who knew how to dress faultlessly and always used the right fork.

But that was before communism became an international menace.

Now the big deal is being negotiated largely among people who don't know whether a tuxedo has tails and care even less.

Communism is winning most of its converts among the down trodden—among the underpaid, the overworked, the exploited.

The smart Commie agent can speak the lingo of the man of the street, the worker in the mill, the miner who goes underground.

Unfortunately, many members of our diplomatic corps can't do likewise.

MUST HIT THEM WHERE THEY ARE

The old expression, "You can't catch fish in the middle of a desert," applies with considerable force to the deadly serious ideological game in which the U. S. is playing a leading role.

And potential Commies are seldom found around tea tables or in banquet rooms.

It takes all kinds to make up a world and for that reason we think our government should have various types of diplomats. Included would be men who feel at home in striped pants and high hat and men who don't look or feel out of place when they're coatless and have their sleeves rolled up.

Let's put it another way:

We're not advocating that the State Dept. give the boot to all its diplomats and replace them with men who came up the hard way through the labor movement.

We are advocating that the State Dept. face the realities of the current world situation and use the men most capable of doing the jobs that need to be done.

There's a need—a big need—right now for shirt-sleeve diplomats who can work with real understanding among the people most likely to swing to communism.

And the job can't be accomplished merely by providing the shirt-sleevers with glorified office-boy posts.

Business' Double Standard Blasted

IF AN INDUSTRIAL concern announces a price increase, the news usually is reported calmly enough — unless it is said to be caused by a wage increase. Then what a howl is let forth.

This kind of "double standard" applied by press and radio to business concerns on the one hand and to trade unions on the other, is the subject of a bitter protest in the current issue of Textile Labor, semi-monthly publication of the CIO Textile Workers Union.

Larry Rogin, the union's publicity and education director, points to a recent example of it in the cotton mill industry, when cloth was withdrawn from the market in order to adjust prices to the higher cost of cotton. When the cloth was offered again for sale, a 5% increase was placed on the finished goods.

"No angry newspaper editorials attacked the mills for this price increase," Rogin exclaims, "nor did they denounce the rise in raw cotton which brought it about. But suppose a TWUA wage increase had been the mill's excuse? The union would have been blasted for causing inflation.

"THIS illustrates the 'double standard' of business morality, accepted by nearly all publishers, columnists and commentators. Under this standard it is both 'inevitable' and 'proper' for employers to raise prices when costs go up, no matter how high their profits are.

"But it is 'reckless' and 'greedy' for unions to seek higher wages, no matter how great the workers' needs are.

As another instance of this "double standard," Rogin cites the case of the 2500 gasoline dealers in New Jersey who voted recently to shut down in protest against a price war, and carried out a sort of "sit-down" technique. The leader of the striking dealers was quoted in the press as saying: "I don't mind some bloody noses, but I don't want any real rough stuff."

If this statement had been made by a union organizer, or a group of workers had staged a sit-down, Rogin comments, "newspapers would have published page one editorials denouncing 'violence' and defending 'free enterprise' and the 'right to work.'

"But the gas dealers aren't workers, they're merchants. They were treated sympathetically, even by those who disagreed with them. There were no injunctions, no troops, no police interference. No one even pointed out that price-cutting used to be a respected part of 'free enterprise.'"

"Remember, workers don't cause inflation; they suffer from it," Rogin says in conclusion. "Union wage gains don't start a 'wage-price spiral'; they're simply attempts to catch up. The 'double standard' is designed to hide these facts. It's time we put an end to it."

Tobin Praises Labor's Role In Heart Drive

Organized labor's "most gratifying" response to the 1950 campaign of the American Heart Association is reported in that organization's summary Labor Edition, just off the press.

Labor Secy. Maurice J. Tobin, chairman of the AHA's National Labor Committee, summarizing the results of this year's drive, said that more than 100 international and national unions from all branches of labor had contributed substantially to the overall $6 million goal.

Four CIO unions were among those that starred in the '50 Heart drive, the paper states. They are the Clothing, Rubber, Steel and Textile Workers. CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey are members of the Heart Association's labor committee, along with more than a dozen officers of various CIO unions.

Negro Student Sues To Enter Univ. of Md.

Parren J. Mitchell, 27-year-old Negro student, filed suit in Baltimore, Md., recently to compel the University of Maryland to admit him to its Graduate School of Sociology.

Mitchell contended that the university failed to act on his application for admittance because of his race, a violation of both federal and state constitutions.

The Maryland Court of Appeals ruled recently in a similar suit that Esther McCready, a Negro, must be admitted to the university's School of Nursing. The state is preparing to appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer

Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher

Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII August 28, 1950 No. 35

It Must Have Been A Big Shock To Boss

IT WASN'T a tough campaign—at least not on the surface. But the organizer in charge wasn't too happy about the situation.

He was pleased that the management of the company he was seeking to unionize wasn't throwing its weight around. Nobody was fired for union activity. There were no threats, no anti-union handbills.

On the other hand, however, the workers weren't displaying any great enthusiasm either for or against the union.

As the date for the NLRB election approached, the spirits of the organizer rose a little. He figured that the union would win unless there were some unexpected developments.

Then he heard about the company's "ace in the hole."

THE COMPANY, the organizer learned, had obtained at considerable expense an animated cartoon showing a contented worker employed at a non-union plant.

This was to be shown to employes—on company time, of course—the day before election.

"This is going to be hard to counteract," the organizer told local union leaders, "but I'll bet something can be done about it."

The local leaders agreed that a good free movie of the type the company was reported to have obtained might turn the tide away from the union.

There was a lot of discussion, a bit of argument, then somebody came up with a bright idea.

ON THE day before the election, company employes turned out en masse for the free movie.

The company superintendent, a somewhat pompous individual, took his place beside the screen. The lights went out. The projectionist went to work.

As the pictures flashed on the screen the superintendent provided a running commentary.

Local union leaders soon began to squirm. Soon they could see victory flying right out of the window.

Scene after scene flashed on the screen. On and on went the commentary of the superintendent. Local leaders could see that their fellow workers were impressed.

As the movie drew near a close the local leaders had long faces—very long faces. And the superintendent was bubbling over with good cheer.

THE STORY told by the cartoon was a comparatively simple one—easy to follow, easy to understand.

And the superintendent really poured it on in his commentary.

The picture showed a happy worker—a very happy worker—at a non-union plant.

One scene showed him discussing—and amicably settling—a grievance with management. It, of course, was his own grievance because there was no union to aid him.

In another scene the worker was portrayed depositing his check at the bank.

Step by step the worker climbed the ladder of success within the organization which employed him—without any help from a union.

YES, AS THE end of the movie approached, the local union leaders became convinced that the company's "ace in the hole" had turned the tide.

Then, as the worker's success story drew to a close the scene shifted quickly and spread across the screen in big letters were these words:

"VOTE FOR THE UNION TOMORROW."

The crowd chuckled, then roared with laughter.

The union won the election the next day.

And when asked who had done the film splicing job, the organizer just smiled and said, "Film splicing job? I don't know what you're talking about." A.L.S.

WHITE MAN'S BURDEN!

Tests Show Union Officers Brighter Than Foreman

SHOP STEWARDS and union officers will line up on the right and get ready to take a bow. They're more like plant operating executives than they are like foremen—in intellectual level, in interests, and in personality traits. In other words, they're smarter than their foremen.

The shop stewards and local officers have suspected this all along, of course. The confirmation of what they considered a foregone conclusion came from Harold F. Rothe, a management consultant, in an article in the magazine Factory Management and Maintenance, published by McGraw-Hill.

"This statement isn't based on guesswork," Rothe wrote. "It is the result of careful research, based on psychological tests given to 64 union stewards and officers in 14 local unions, 256 foremen in 50 companies, and 135 plant operating executives in 35 companies."

Rothe's conclusions:

"1. Foremen score low in vocabulary. The average executive answers 24 word-meaning questions correctly in four minutes. The average union steward or officer answers 20 correctly in the same time. But the average foreman gets only 13 right.

"Thus an executive is more likely to reach the steward than the foreman when trying to get ideas across. The foreman may not understand, but the steward is almost sure to.

"How important is this? Look at it this way: Only about 10% of the foremen tested have a vocabulary as large as that of the average operative executive. But about 40% of the stewards are up there with the executives.

"2. Foremen score low in logical reasoning. Two tests were used—logical relations and logical analysis. Again, operating executives came out on top, with stewards second and foremen a lagging third.

"On the average, the stewards tested seemed to think more logically than the foremen. This makes for easier communication, too. But, again, it makes it tougher for the foreman.

"3. Foremen score low in arithmetic reasoning. Here the pattern is repeated, though the differences are less marked. The average executive scores 10 on a simple test of arithmetic reasoning. On the same test, the average steward comes up with a score of 8, and the average foreman gets 7."

THE TROUBLE is, Rothe observed, management doesn't use much judgment in picking foremen. Leaders average slightly higher in intelligence than the people they lead, he pointed out, and they are more aggressive, better able to express themselves, and more skillful in dealing with people. The foreman's job is primarily a leadership job, he claimed, but management usually picks him for some other reason such as job knowledge, length of service and cooperativeness.

"But why is the selection of union stewards and officers any better?" he asked. "What do unions do that increases the chances they will pick 'natural' leaders—men who are alert, aggressive, intelligent?

"The answer is simple. Most unions operate on a primarily democratic basis, with the virtues and vices that such a system has. Stewards and officers simply don't get elected unless they are pretty alert, forceful and skilled in dealing with people. They must stand out or be passed by."

Rothe went on to point out that if leaders are generally more intelligent than those they lead—this has been proved by studies in leadership—foremen should be smarter than the workers under them. They are—but the difference isn't enough to bother about.

"Here are the results (of intelligence tests) for one plant," Rothe wrote. "They are typical of all:

"The workers got an average score of 15. The foreman got 15.5. The difference is so small that it doesn't count. So, on the average, foremen seem to lack one key leadership quality — higher intelligence than the workers under them.

"But averages can be misleading. So look at it this way: 44% of all the foremen had scores of less than 15. And 14% of the whole group scored 10 or less—away down in the low score area. In fact, two foremen couldn't even answer a single question correctly in the 15 minutes allowed. Obviously averages aren't deceiving in this case. There's nothing to boast about in a record like this.

"WHILE THE tests were being given in this plant, the superintendent was shown a list of the names of workers being tested. He was asked to check all the trouble makers. He listed 13 workers. Their test scores were then analyzed. Only three trouble makers were below average in intelligence. One was average, and nine above average. In fact, five of the trouble makers had scores of 20 or better.

"These results suggest at once that maybe most trouble makers are men who are too intelligent for their jobs. It's not a new thought, of course, but it makes sense to ask: Are these men perhaps the not-so-good mechanics who might make good foremen?"

Ohio CIO Rally Steps Up Drive On 'Wrong Robert' And For 'Right Joe'

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

IN OHIO, the contest is between "Wrong Robert" and "Right Joe." "Wrong Robert," of course, is Republican Senator Robert Alphonso Taft. "Right Joe" is Joseph Ferguson, present state auditor and Democratic nominee for Senator.

It's as clear a test of down-the-line conservative Republicanism and steady-going Fair Dealism as the country will see anywhere this fall.

And everywhere in Ohio, union members are bracing for a campaign to remove "Wrong Robert" from the U. S. Senate.

The campaign has been under way for a long time. Last week the Ohio State CIO began to move the drive at a faster clip.

THE KICK-OFF was a big statewide CIO rally in Columbus on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 20. Some 2500 CIO members from every part of the state went down to the capital city and pretty well filled up the grandstands at the Central High School Stadium.

DAVID J. McDONALD
Steel union secretary-treasurer predicted election of Ferguson, defeat of Taft.

It was football weather, and political weather: a bright sun, a spanking breeze, a touch of late September in the afternoon air. And there was no August dog-day lethargy in the crowd or on the speaker's stand.

It didn't take long to sense the enthusiasm in the air, or the deep air of confidence that Election Day is going to be a day of victory for organized labor up and down the Buckeye State.

Registration Up

Are CIO members registering to vote in Ohio?

Jake Clayman, state CIO Council secretary-treasurer, told the Columbus PAC rally that registration is going up all over the state.

In one day in Cincinnati, Clayman reported, 436 CIO members registered to vote.

The Ohio campaign shapes up as a battle that's going to be "strictly on the record." Three records, in fact.

One of them is the record of Robert Taft during 12 years in the Senate; it's there for union members to scowl at.

Another is the record of Joe Ferguson, a conscientious public servant who Ohioans say has served the people well for many years.

THE THIRD RECORD, equally important, is the record of voting registrations.

Ohio's registration laws tend to favor the rural areas, traditionally strongholds of Republican conservatism. In towns under 16,000, voting registration isn't required. But in the larger cities, where Joe Ferguson is going to get most of his strength, you can't vote unless your name is on the registration books.

Back in April, when registrations closed for the state primaries, there were 2,400,000 men and women eligible to vote. CIO voting experts say that there are a potential 1,200,000 other people who haven't registered—and who should by Sept. 27, if they want to vote in November.

During this last month before registrations close, every union in Ohio has one major project—to see that every eligible member is registered to vote. You get the impression that a good share of those 1,200,000 Ohioans are going to see their registration boards in the next three or four weeks.

The three records—the registration record, the Taft record and the Ferguson record—are getting home to the people of Ohio through joint labor political activity.

In Ohio, there is labor unity right now—on the subject of "Wrong Robert" Taft and "Right Joe" Ferguson. CIO, AFL, machinists, coal miners, railroad brotherhoods have put past grievances and disputes into second position. First place on the agenda is reserved for the "beat Taft" campaign.

That labor unity is working.

- Hundreds of thousands of copies of a "comic book" on Robert Alphonso Taft are being distributed to union members throughout the state.

A snappy, readable recital of the Taft anti-labor, anti-Fair Deal record, it bears the imprint of Ohio's CIO-PAC, AFL-LLPE, the railroad brotherhoods, the machinists and miners.

- The Columbus rally was basically a CIO show, attended by CIO members. But the is in the campai present Ohio au ing public serva president of the state AFL, a representati of the railroad clerks, and the director the United Mine Workers district we among the speakers.

And every union group in the state hammering hard at the Taft record.

Jack Kroll—director of the national CI PAC and president of the Ohio CIO Coun —summarized the campaign when he sai

"It's Taft's record. He made it. Make h run on his record."

During these last six years, Kroll aske "Where, oh where, was Bob Taft? Where always was—on the side of the big, ri corporations.

"He's given aid and comfort to o enemies. This year we have an opportun to replace an enemy of the people with friend of the people."

In the course of his speech, Kroll paid strong tribute to Ferguson.

"I am told that Joe Ferguson didn't to Harvard and Yale. I am told that som times Joe Ferguson doesn't use prop grammar. I have been told lots of thin about Joe Ferguson," he said.

"But no one has ever told me that J Ferguson doesn't know the everyday pro lems of the man and woman who work of the man and woman on the farm— the everyday American who didn't go Harvard and Yale, either."

LOOKING BACK at the Taft isolation record, Kroll snapped:

"America isn't rich enough to affo 'Wrong Robert' Taft.

"The greatest economy we in Ohio c make is to remove Robert Taft from U. S. Senate."

A featured speaker of the Columbus ra was Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of t United Steelworkers, one of the most i portant unions in the state.

"People around the country say to me McDonald recalled, "can you win in Ohio?

"The answer is: Yes, we can win in Oh 'Wrong Robert' won by three-tenths of a last time. This year, we can change th plus to a minus—and more.

"If you get out the vote in the industr areas, your next Senator is good Joe Ferg son."

PART OF THE 2500 CROWD at Ohio statewide CIO rally in Columbus on August 20. They came from dozens of industrial cities throughout the state. All of organized labor

Campaign Wins Night Registration

PROSPECTIVE voters in Newark and other communities in Essex county, N. J., now can register evenings, thanks to a vigorous campaign by the Essex-West Hudson CIO Council.

Registration centers will stay open 12 selected evenings up to the Sept. 28 deadline, Superintendent of Elections Miele announced last week.

Joel Jacobson, the CIO Council's PAC director, said that between 18,000 and 20,000 CIO members were not registered because of the previous failure to provide evening registration.

"Now we're launching our registration drive," he said, "and I'm hoping we can bring out our members in droves."

While yielding to the main demands of labor for increased facilities, Miele rejected the CIO's request for mobile registration units which could be sent into industrial plants or other centers where it could be shown that there were 10 or more non-registered persons.

DON'T BE A POLITICAL SCAB—REGISTER AND VOTE" is labor's motto in Ohio. Columbus really gave a big boost to "a good Joe"—Joseph Ferguson, running against Taft for the U. S. Senate. Sticking to Sen. Taft's record, speaker after speaker knocked his record in the Senate not only on labor matters, but on pretty much of everything else.

Taft's Record C

A DIRECT charge that Sen. Robe Taft's isolationist policies a those of his buddies in the U. S. Sena gave the green light to the Communis in Korea was made by CIO-PAC Dire tor Jack Kroll at the state CIO ral last week in Central High School S dium at Columbus, O.

"Let me read hrs record to you," Kr told the CIO gathering.

"On July 21, 1949—our Senator vot against ratification of the North Atlant

o replace Sen. Taft with Joseph Ferguson, , a veteran campaigner and an outstand- f long experience.

McDonald—and the other speakers—hammered away at the notion circulated by the Republican press that the Ohio Senator is the most sincere, honest and intelligent man on Capitol Hill.

" 'Wrong Robert' Taft is a very ordinary politician, a very ordinary politician," McDonald said, emphasizing his words. "He's made a tin halo for hmself. But it just doesn't fit."

The Ohio issue, like the issue in many other states in the 1950 election, will concern the break which "the poor people of America may expect," McDonald said.

"Without political action, all our economic gains can be wiped out—overnight, by our enemies.

"There are 10 million American families with an income of less than $2000 a year; four million American families with an income of less than $1000 a year," McDonald reminded the crowd.

"You have the rural poor—and 'Wrong Robert' is against them and Joe Ferguson is for them.

"You have the aged poor, and the Negro poor—and 'Wrong Robert' is against them, and Joe Ferguson is for them.

"You can throw out 'Wrong Robert' Taft and elect 'right' Joe Ferguson. When you vote for Joe Ferguson, you're voting against poverty in America."

And the crowd shouted its approval.

Taft Batting Average Only .076 In CIO Book

Ohio needs a pinch-hitter in the Senate, according to State CIO Council Secy.-Treas. Jake Clayman.

Flourishing a copy of the CIO 1950 Voting Record, Clayman noted that Taft had voted right only once out of 13 times.

"If you're a ball team manager and one of your players is hitting .076, what would you do with him?" Clayman asked the Columbus PAC rally.

"Take him out, take him out," the crowd yelled back from their seats at the Central High School Stadium.

Politics As Usual Termed 'Luxury'

OHIO CIO's election rally in Columbus pledged itself to:

1. Elect Joseph Ferguson to the U. S. Senate.

2. Elect a liberal Congress—since "in these times we can't permit ourselves the luxury of politics as usual . . . the antics of obstructionists like Taft and his ilk."

3. Elect a liberal stage legislature "alert to the problems facing the people, and determined that, as we fight for freedom and human welfare abroad, we shall not lose this freedom here at home."

4. Help bring about registration of every eligible voter.

"Every vicious attack on social progress, every failure to provide for the needs of the people, every special privilege for the few at the expense of the many . . . and every blow against our liberties can be attributed to the failure of the people to register and vote, the rally resolution said.

Approved by the 2500 CIO members in attendance was "Common Cause IV"—the program of the Ohio Political Action Committee.

The program was described as a document to "advance the welfare of all the people of our state, regardless of economic or social status."

"We must make of our democracy an example in deed and action that will win and hold the loyalty of free men and of men now in bondage everywhere in the world," the program said. "We must make it a beacon of hope and courage to people all over the world."

JACK KROLL
CIO-PAC Director cited the Taft record—and it doesn't look very good.

Comic Book On Taft Record Is Chucked With Chuckles

THEY'RE chuckling in Ohio over one of the neatest comic books yet produced—"The Robert Alphonso Taft Story—It's On The Record."

The "Taft Story" is a 16-page book, with a picture of sad-eyed "Mr. Republican" on the front page.

Taft-for-Senator officials howled as soon as the book came off the presses. They yelled that it was a "mass of plain lies, libelous statements, incidents that never occurred and twisted distortions."

TO WHICH CIO officials retorted: if you find libel in it, sue.

But there's not much chance of a libel suit, because the statements by Taft all came out of public speeches or the Congressional Record. And they don't make him look good.

The "Taft Story" is about the efforts of some wealthy businessmen to produce a movie to make Taft look good to the people. But they have to cut scene after scene because of Taft's statements.

They wind up without much of a film, but with hopes that campaign money will do the trick: "we've still got the money it takes."

The "Taft Story" also quotes some great Taftisms of the past:

Feb. 1939: "There has been an effort on the part of the President (Roosevelt) to exaggerate the danger of a European war."

Feb. 1941: "It is simply fantastic to suppose that there is any danger of an attack on the United States by Japan."

Or, coming closer to the present—

Sept. 7, 1949: "There is not much evidence that the Russians contemplate military aggression."

3 Petersons In Race

Notice to politicians:

If you need a candidate named Peterson, apply to the Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party in Minnesota. It has an abundance of them.

First it has former State Supreme Court Justice Harry H. Peterson, who won the nomination for governor at the state DFL convention and has been endorsed by the Minnesota CIO Political Action Committee.

No sooner had he filed, however, than the line began forming on the right. First, John C. Peterson, of Duluth, a painter, filed for the same job. Then August F. Peterson, of Mounds View, did likewise. So did Hjalmar Peterson, of Austin. Then J. C. withdrew.

Former Gov. Hjalmar Peterson, one of the original Peterson (Harry H.) for Governor boosters, got into the act, too. He issued a statement indignantly denying he is the Hjalmar Peterson, of Austin, who wants to be governor.

Only One Upset In New York

ONLY ONE major political upset bobbed up in New York State's quiet primary voting last week.

Dr. J. L. Pfeifer (D.), Congressman from New York's 8th Congressional District in Brooklyn since 1934, was defeated for renomination by Victor Anfuso, an attorney.

Pfeifer, chief surgeon at St. Catherine's Hospital in Brooklyn, had an excellent voting record—he cast no wrong vote in the CIO 1950 tabulation. Pfeifer's defeat was one of several sustained by "organization Democrats" in the district's voting.

Meanwhile, the resignation of New York's Mayor O'Dwyer produced a hectic round of conferences in the jockeying for strength before the party's state conventions meet on Sept. 6 and 7.

It seemed likely that Sen. Lehman would receive renomination from the Democrats, but no firm decisions appeared on the party's candidates for governor and mayor.

Rep. Franklin Roosevelt, Jr., and Federal Security Administration Oscar Ewing have been suggested, among others, as candidates for the governorship. Judge Ferdinand Pecora and others have been mentioned as the party's standard bearer in the Gotham mayoralty race.

Republicans were reported considering a "Draft Dewey" move. The New York governor has announced his decision to retire from public office.

ed As Encouraging Korean Aggression

Pact to set up a defense line against Communist aggression.

"July 26, 1949—our Senator voted to cut a billion dollars from the European Recovery Program's funds.

"September 22, 1949—our Senator voted against necessary military assistance to the foreign nations included in the North Atlantic Pact.

"September 22, 1949—our Senator voted to cut the funds for this military assistance by $200 million, and, when that lost, by $100 million.

"May 5, 1950—our Senator voted to cut the 1950 foreign economic assistance act by half a billion dollars.

"May 25, 1950—our Senator voted against the Foreign Economic Assistance Act and $100 million in aid for Korea.

"I charge that on the basis of this record, Senator Taft and his cohorts are responsible for giving the green light to the Communists to march into South Korea.

"And I charge that the policies advocated and followed by Senator Taft would leave us without a friend in the world. It would leave us isolated and surrounded, and the target for war and destruction."

OHIO CIO COUNCIL SECY.-TREAS. JACOB CLAYMAN unveils the "Taft" Story"—a 16-page comic book that gives the low-down on Ohio's senior senator. Hundreds of thousands will be distributed to union members throughout the state in the campaign to defeat the co-sponsor of T-H.

GE's Attitude Rouses Ire Of IUE Locals

THE RISING anger of General Electric workers at the company's refusal to meet their requests is being expressed in a series of demonstrations and strike votes by GE locals of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers.

In Schenectady, atomic energy workers of IUE Local 301 voted to strike, claiming that GE "has arbitrarily and arrogantly taken it upon itself to deprive employes of a just and living wage from their phenomenal profits, which are the highest in history."

In Pittsfield, Mass., more than 800 workers of the power transformer assembly section left their jobs to attend an "informative" meeting. The few United Electrical Workers diehards left in Local 255 ran from worker to worker urging them to stay on the job. The anger of the entire plant was displayed at a mass rally Friday.

Lynn, Mass., Local 201: Drop forgers struck over stalling by the company on the raise for skilled trades and the delay on the entire contract. A company press release threatened shutdown of the jet plant. One supervisor told the workers: "You deserve a raise and you'd be a sucker not to go for it."

Tell City, Ind., Local 805: Workers had one week's vacation earlier in summer, company asked them to forego second week's time off. At the union meeting Aug. 23 the workers voted to take their second week's vacation and work no overtime upon their return. They had been working up to 60 hours a week. The meeting also voted the officers authority to call a strike.

Syracuse, N. Y., Local 320: Workers at the GE electronics plant voted by an 87% margin to authorize a strike, calling GE's offer far too low and completely unacceptable.

Trenton, N. J., Local 455: The entire force walked out when plant manager refused to negotiate an interim agreement.

Bridgeport, Conn., Local 203: 250 workers in the home laundry department refused to work weekend overtime despite company's demand. Other divisions have started to hold "informative" meetings during working hours.

Fort Wayne, Ind., Local 901: The stewards' council pulled out of the plant, holding a series of long meetings. Overtime work is now barred by the local.

Philadelphia, Local 119: Workers unanimously approved the taking of a strike vote.

This series of harrassments began after a meeting of IUE's General Electric conference board voted to reject GE's latest offer as completely unacceptable. The union has 56,000 members in 50 GE plants.

"About those strictly fresh eggs you sold me yesterday . . ."

Puerto Rico Votes Aid To Citizens Here

THE PUERTO Rican Legislature has had to appropriate $117,400 to aid Puerto Rican workers taken to sugar beet farms in Michigan and subjected to mistreatment and exploitation until their plight was discovered by the CIO.

The insular legislature acted upon the request of Gov. Luis Munoz Marin after a report from Labor Commissioner Fernando Sierra Berdecia, who investigated and found justified the workers' charges of under-payment or no payment at all of wages, bad food, unfit living accommodations and exorbitant medical, travel and insurance costs.

Berdecia's report in effect accused sugar beet farmers in Michigan's Saginaw Valley of violating virtually every clause of the contracts under which some 5000 Puerto Rican workers were flown to the United States between May 31 and June 18.

The bill authorized the Labor Commissioner to give aid to the workers, whether or not they are still in Michigan, for subsistence or expenses in moving.

Top OWIU Officers Face Opposition In Referendum

THE THREE top officers of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union will be opposed for reelection in a membership referendum.

Pres. O. A. Knight, who received an almost unanimous ovation when he was nominated Aug. 20 as the union's convention at Long Beach, Cal., neared its end, will be opposed by Lawrence Doidge, president of the union's big Hammond, Ind., Local 210.

A. R. Kinstley was renominated for the post of vice president. His opponent is B. J. Schafer, director of the union's District 6, which includes the Great Lakes area.

T. M. McCormick, incumbent, and Dave Herring, secretary of Local 210, will run for secretary-treasurer.

Much of the convention's program was devoted to union financing and intra-union housekeeping problems.

On the financial front, the convention took three actions:

1. The constitution was amended to permit local unions to collect dues ranging from a minimum of $2.50 to a maximum of $5 a month. The old maximum was $3.

2. A 10-cent-a-month per capita tax for the next six months was levied to meet a temporary financial slump caused by the recent four-months-long Texas Co. strike.

3. A voluntary strike insurance plan was approved. Under this plan, members may voluntarily contribute a small sum to a strike defense fund. Then, in case of strike, those members who have contributed will be entitled to substantial strike benefit payments.

Hillman Fund Gives $10,000 For Study Of Textbook Bias

TRUSTEES of the million dollar Sidney Hillman Foundation, named after the late president of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, have allocated $42,500 for scholarships, grants-in-aid, merit awards and other prizes for 1950.

The awards are given to perpetuate Hillman's ideals in labor-management relations and in social welfare.

A $10,000 grant-in-aid was made to the social science department of the University of Chicago, covering a two-year period, to make a thorough analysis of school and college textbooks for the purpose of rooting out the teaching of prejudice and discrimination.

For the first time, in 1950, the foundation is setting up Hillman prize awards, which will be an annual event, in daily and labor journalism, the national magazine field, radio and television, fiction, theatre and motion pictures.

Five hundred dollars each will be awarded for the best series of newspaper articles, the best editorial, the best magazine piece, the best radio or television broadcast, the best work of fiction, the best play and film "dealing with a labor theme and honestly portraying the labor struggle."

Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the Sidney Hillman Foundation and Hillman's successor as Amalgamated president, said that $1000 has been set aside for the annual Hillman award for meritorious achievement, the recipient to be announced later. Last year Sen. Frank P. Graham, former president of the University of North Carolina, won this award.

The Hillman Foundation voted $18,000 in scholarships for 1950, to be distributed as follows:

Brandeis University, Waltham, Mass., $2000; Howard University, Washington, D. C., $2000; New School for Social Research, New York City, $2000; New York State School of Industrial and Labor Relations, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., $2000; Roosevelt College, Chicago, $5000 and the Chaim Weizmann Institute, Rehovoth, Israel. $5000.

For the Sidney Hillman Tool Fund in Israel, which helps rehabilitate refugees and turn them into skilled artisans, $5000 was appropriated. Another $5000 was set aside for the annual Hillman lecture series, the lecturers to be announced later. This year's Hillman lecturer was Harold J. Laski, the British economist.

Newsprint Stocks Dwindle

THE SHORTAGE of newsprint—the paper on which dailies and most weekly publications are printed—grew greater in July even though the paper mills produced more than in any other July in history.

According to the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, dailies reported they had a 40 days' assured supply compared with 49 days' supply on hand in July, 1949. Although production was up, so was newsprint consumption. Stocks of newsprint at the end of July totaled 144,641 tons, compared with 185,397 tons at the end of July a year ago.

The economic controls bill passed by the House provides that the President can control stocks of newsprint, make loans to encourage production and can slap price controls on newsprint if he finds any of these steps are necessary to the national defense.

Shortages of newsprint, according to the CIO Newspaper Guild, have had a lot to do with the fact that new, independent dailies aren't being started any more. And the high prices, the newsmen's union has charged before a House committee, endanger the lives especially of independent small dailies. The union has urged that the government act to stop the black market in newsprint.

LPA

Name Weightman To CIO-PAC Staff

PAC Director Jack Kroll has announced the appointment of Philip Weightman, former vice-president of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, as a PAC field representative.

For the last year or two Weightman has been on the staff of CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood. He recently returned from a special organizing assignment in the Panama Canal Zone.

Weightman is also a member of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination.

Two CIO Units At New Quarters

Two of the CIO's organizing committees are moving to new quarters and beginning Sept. 1 will be found at the following addresses:

Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee
805 G St., N.W., Washington
(Formerly at 718 Jackson Pl. N.W. Washington.)

Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee
718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington.
(Formerly at 1105 Bankers Securities Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.)

UPWA Wins 11c At Swift & Co.

Thirty thousand members of the CIO Packinghouse Workers get an 11c an hour wage increase under an agreement signed Aug. 24 with Swift & Co. covering workers in 26 plants.

The contract was the second that followed an agreement between the UPWA and the AFL Meat Cutters to work closely together to crack the industry's "Big Four" and not to sign without mutual consultation. The breakthrough in the "Big Four" front came when the UPWA negotiated an 11c boost at Armour & Co. The same increase was granted to the AFL union a few days later. At Swift & Co. the process was reversed—the AFL union signed first.

Ken Hunter, Steel Union Man, Dies

Ken Hunter, publicity representative of the CIO Steelworkers in the San Francisco area, died last week after a long illness.

A member of both the Steelworkers and the CIO Newspaper Guild, Hunter had been a member of the Steel staff since the mid-30s, when the Steel Workers Organizing Committee was set up. Until 1942 he handled organizing, bargaining and representation elections for Steel locals in the Bay Area, then went to Chicago and Pittsburgh, where he served temporarily as editor of Steel Labor. He returned to the Pacific Coast in 1945 as USA District 38 publicity director and contributing editor to Steel Labor, and to do educational work. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Frances Hunter, of San Francisco.

Bill To Remedy Shortage Of Medical Facilities Shelved

APPARENTLY nothing will be done at this session of Congress to remedy the critical shortage of doctors, nurses and medical facilities.

A bill previously passed by the Senate to set up a $250,000 program of federal aid to medical education has been shelved by the House Commerce Committee by a vote of 9 to 8.

This killed the bill for this session, according to Rep. Percy Priest (Tenn.), House Democratic whip and a committee member. He said that many medical schools faced financial ruin unless some emergency action was taken by Congress.

The measure would grant federal funds to pay the tuition of students and help build facilities for medical, dental and nursing schools. Pres. Truman had termed the bill "the most vital health legislation before Congress."

Deans of all 10 accredited schools of public health in the U. S. and 75% of the deans of medical schools endorsed the medical aid bill. Brig. Gen. James B. Simmons, retired, dean of the Harvard University School of Medical Health, appealed last week to Pres. Truman, in the hope that something might be done to rectify a "tragic mistake."

Senate Unit Hears Stories Of Anti-Union Violence

By WILLIAM WEISS

A STORY OF violence under the Taft-Hartley Act was unfolded by CIO representatives last week at a Senate Labor sub-committee hearing in Washington—but Sen. Taft, co-author of T-H, wasn't on hand to hear it.

Organizers and members of the CIO Textile Workers told the Senate Labor-Management sub-committee how they were threatened and beaten while trying to establish unions in Georgia.

They said privately outside the hearing they had hoped the Ohio Republican leader, a member of the sub-committee, would be on hand to get first-hand knowledge of how his pet labor measure was operating.

The signed testimony of Mrs. Edna Martin, a volunteer organizer who went to Tallapoosa, Ga., late in 1947 to help in the unionization drive at the American Thread Co. plant, was read to the Senate group. In it she told how she was "kidnapped" and threatened with death.

A GROUP OF armed men, she said, broke into her room late one night, put a gag in her mouth, ordered her at gun point into the back of a truck and later dumped her out on a lonely backwoods road.

"Don't ever come back to Tallapoosa or you will be shot on sight," she quoted one of the gang as saying.

Mrs. Martin later identified members of the mob as mill employes who had been encouraged by supervisors to head the anti-union drive within the mill.

Another volunteer organizer, C. J. Barnes, of nearby Dalton, related what happened when he attempted to pass out leaflets at American Thread.

Barnes said that "several men gathered around a tall, slim, well-dressed man wearing a tie in the doorway of the mill. They talked for a few minutes and then stepped back into the mill.

"Shortly after, a mob of 30 men came out of the mill led by some of the men who had been talking to the well-dressed man a few minutes before. In front of the mob were Elzie Teal and his son, Durwood, the latter brandishing a double-barrel shot gun in his hand. One other man carried a single-barrel shot gun.

"Young Teal told us to 'get the hell out of here,'" Barnes related. "We got out," he added.

DURING THE entire affair, Barnes said, a Tallapoosa city policeman was sitting in a police car, not 15 feet from the gate. The officer made no attempt to interfere, he said.

Bernell Rochester, another TWUA volunteer organizer, thought he had the right to pass out leaflets at the same plant on Aug. 19 last year, but found out others didn't agree with him.

He testified that the younger Teal, who stands over six feet tall and weighs about 220, walked out of the plant and without warning "struck me in the face and knocked me to the ground."

"He kept beating me with his fists as I lay there," Rochester declared.

His wife, Earline said that while Teal was beating Rochester, she came out of the plant where she had been working. When she saw her husband on the ground, she attempted to pull Teal off.

She said Teal knocked her down three times with his fists. The last time he knocked her against a telephone pole with such force that she fell unconscious, she said.

The elder Teal meanwhile held the crowd at bay with a shot gun, she added.

WHEN THE Martin "kidnapping" case was brought to court, a grand jury failed to return an indictment. It was also brought before the NLRB but the trial examiner ruled that mobs were not the agents of the employer and that therefore the American Thread Co. was not in violation of the Taft-Hartley Act.

In June, 1949, one-and-a-half years after the beginning of the company's anti-union acts, the board ordered the company to post a cease and desist notice.

WARRANTS FOR assault and battery and pointing a gun were sworn out against the Teals on three occasions, witnesses said.

Each time the county sheriff took the Teals to the court house prior to locking them up, prominent residents of Tallapoosa posted bail for them, it was brought out. The bondsmen included three city councilmen and the mayor.

Isadore Katz, TWUA general counsel, told the committee that despite the fact that unfair labor practice charges were filed against the company in August, 1949, one year ago, the union has still received no notice as to whether NLRB intends to make the company obey the law.

UNDER QUESTIONING by Sen. Pepper (D. Fla.), Wesley Littlefield, American Thread superintendent at Tallapoosa, said 99.9% of the common stock of the company was British owned.

Pepper asked Littlefield if he was opposed to the establishment of a labor union at the Tallapoosa plant. The latter replied, "I would prefer not to have one there."

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve charged before the committee that the southern textile industry is engaged in "a shocking conspiracy" to smash labor unions. Calling for a Congressional investigation of the alleged conspiracy by the subcommittee, Rieve said TWUA could present "a hundred cases, all of them very much alike."

"It is all part of a union-busting campaign," he declared. "Employers from Virginia to Texas use the same anti-union techniques and management lawyers are the connecting links in the conspiracy."

Rieve said TWUA "is not a detective agency" but promised that if the subcommittee would investigate, it will expose conditions "more shocking" than the "labor spy racket" of professional strikebreakers brought to light by the LaFollette Committee 20 years ago.

WESLEY LITTLEFIELD, superintendent of the Tallapoosa, Ga., plant of the American Thread Co. (left), tells a Senate Labor subcommittee he would prefer not to have a union at his mill. At the right is Frank A. Constangy, Atlanta attorney noted for union busting activities throughout the South. Constangy is a former employe of the NLRB and knows the techniques necessary to destroy unions. He represents numerous southern textile manufacturers, including American Thread. His services are much in demand by employers.

THE SENATE LABOR subcommittee heard Ross Groshong (center), CIO Textile Workers representative from Dalton Ga., relate that he was threatened with death if he attempted to distribute organizing leaflets at the American Thread Co. plant in Tallapoosa. TWUA General Counsel Isadore Katz (right), and Robert S. Cahoon, the union's southern counsel, charged that there is an undeclared conspiracy among southern textile manufacturers to smash labor unions. The Senate hearing continued for four days last week.

ELZIE TEAL, (shown here), is a leader of the anti-union campaign at American Thread Co. at Tallapoosa, Ga. He denied he was acting as an agent of the company when he and his son, Durwood, headed a mob which drove TWUA organizers away from the mill at gun point. On another occasion, he held other workers at bay with a gun while his son beat an orgainzer.

Soviet Radio Blasts Murray, Reuther, Curran

THE BEST comedy act in the world is being played to an international audience in Asia over the official Russian radio propaganda circuit.

For sheer entertainment value, it ranks at least even with Sen. Taft's about-face act in Congress.

The Red radio took off last week on the American labor movement, John Herling, editor of John Herling's Labor Letter, wrote in an article in the Washington Daily News.

"And throughout the country," he pointed out, "responsible labor leadership feel pride and importance in the new recognition of the role American labor plays in international affairs."

Some of the men Herling says were given the Reds' Grade A going over, with oak leaves, were:

"CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who approves 'the criminal U. S. intervention in Korea.'

"AFL Pres. William Green, who is the 'arch-traitor to the interests of the working class.'

"National Maritime Union Pres. Joseph Curran, for 'repeating the lying standardized assertions of the American official propaganda.'

"And CIO-Auto Workers Pres. Walter Reuther, for his 'acts of treachery to the working class'."

The Soviet radio dream-beam also carried such choice tidbits as:

"Murray and Green gave the lead to the American trade union bureaucracy. On their order the reactionary trade union leaders of all classes supported the American intervention in Korea."

The Russians made no particular effort to conceal the reason for their anger against U. S. labor, Herling wrote . . . "the systematic elimination of the Communist elements from the CIO by the CIO itself."

"THESE CIOers," he wrote, "are charged as follows: 'They are cruelly persecuting the progressive elements in the American trade union movement and slander in every possible manner the Partisans of Peace.'

"Moving along from one propaganda theme to another, it's also pretty clear the Soviet policy boys are boiling because the AFL, CIO and independent maritime unions have set up a voluntary anti-sabotaging program. Actually, the unions met in Washington a few weeks ago to make sure that union rights would be respected while national interests are protected.

"This leads the Soviets to charge:

"'There is a complete conspiracy between the government and the reactionary trade union leaders as to the best way to fool the American workers and to exploit them in carrying out the intervention against the Korean people.'

"Pounding his gums hard, the Soviet commentator charges: 'The reactionary trade union leaders are ready to aid the government to transform American trade unions completely into a branch of the military, bureaucratic U. S. state apparatus.'"

HERLING said the Russian propagandist bawled fulsomely because the UAW and Reuther, by signing a five-year contract with General Motors, "abrogated" the right to strike.

The labor press came in for a bit of a tar-brush job, too. Herling quoted the Reds:

"The trade union papers are no better than the American monopolist press in the vile slanders against the Korean people and the Democratic republic, the international camp of peace and democracy, headed by the Soviet Union."

Forced Labor 'Basic' In Soviet Law, British Declare

IMPRESSIVE additional substantiating evidence of the existence of slave labor in Soviet Russia was presented by the British delegation to the UN Economic and Social Council at its meeting in Geneva, Switzerland, this summer.

However, it was not sufficient—even with the support of the U. S. delegation—to move the delegates to revise last year's decision to vote on a worldwide investigation of forced labor at the council session beginning next February.

The British evidence consisted of translations of laws and articles in official Soviet publications, and served to document in detail evidence previously submitted by U. S. and British delegates. It also included a translation of the new Czechoslovakian forced labor law.

The translations reveal that the Russians use forced labor as an economic weapon as well as a punishment for lack of political orthodoxy, that it is an integral part of Soviet society, and that it is spreading. Exact figures on the number of people—Russians and foreigners alike—in slave labor camps are impossible, of course, to obtain. However, estimates based on discussions with former slaves fortunate to be freed range from eight to 24 million, and most observers place the figure at between 10 and 20 million.

THE RUSSIANS try to camouflage their version of slavery under the name of "corrective labor." But the texts show that "forced," "compulsory" and "corrective" labor are all the same.

Vol. 47 of the Large Soviet Encyclopedia, according to the British translation, reads:

"Forced labor consists in the sentenced person either being forcibly directed to work organized by corrective labor organs, or remaining at his normal place of work, in which case the sentence to forced labor carries a deduction from wages amounting up to 25%."

The same volume says:

"Forced labor is one of the basic measures of Soviet Socialist Criminal Law."

The translations show that persons can be condemned to slave labor camps without court trials and that they may be in slavery for months before even being told the charges against them or the length of their sentences. The Soviet law provides maximum sentences for those convicted of charges usually regarded as criminal throughout the world—robbery, murder, etc.—but only minimum sentences for the "socially dangerous."

The textbook, "Administrative Law of the USSR," published in Moscow in 1946 and rated as an official volume, is quoted as saying:

"The special council under the Ministry of Internal Affairs (MVD) of the USSR is granted the right to employ against persons considered socially dangerous the following measures: (a) deportation under supervision to localities named in a list drawn up by the MVD, and (b) imprisonment in corrective labor camps."

Note that "socially dangerous" is open to a wide variety of interpretations, and that the MVD has only to "consider" a person in this class if it wants to send him to a slave labor camp—not prove him guilty.

THE CZECH law, described as State Law 247, is clearly derived from the various Russian regulations and orders. The legal basis for forced labor, it sets forth that labor camps have been established "in order that certain categories of persons should be taught work as a civic duty and in order that their capacity for work may be utilized for the benefit of the whole community."

In introducing the evidence, the British said that all free peoples and their governments are concerned with forced labor in Russia and the countries within its orbit.

"His Majesty's Government," they said, "feel it to be their duty to bring the further evidence available to the attention of the United Nations for discussion at the proper time, and in the meantime to facilitate discussion by the peoples of the free world of the system of forced labor which has been instituted and organized in the USSR, and is now spreading to the states under Soviet domination, and which is based on a series of legal and administrative provisions amounting to a whole new province of law and administration."

Reds Using Slave Labor To Mine Uranium Ore, British Say

The Russians are rounding up slave labor, corrective labor, forced labor and volunteers at a furious rate in a new campaign to dig uranium ore from their mines in East Germany, the British High Commission in Berlin reported last week.

The Reds are extending their mining activities on a huge scale in the Hartz Mountains, the Erzebirge and the Thueringer Wald, the British said, and are concealing their actions beyond a highly-publicized "peace campaign sponsoring the banning of the atom bomb."

"They make no reference," the report said, "to another campaign which they are running at the same time and which provides Russia with millions of tons of German uranium ore."

TUC Will Vote On Backing UN

Delegates to the British Trade Union Congress conference, meeting Sept. 4, will vote on a resolution supporting the action of the United Nations and the United States in Korea and branding the North Koreans as aggressors.

The resolution will be offered by the TUC General Council, and will force the issue with Communists in the British labor movement. The TUC represents about eight million British workers.

The General Council in its report also opened the way to a fight with the left wingers on the British Peace Committee, which they support, by describing it as "a subsidiary of the Communist Party."

"New around here, aren't you?"

Eight Nazi War Criminals Released For 'Good Behavior'

EIGHT dangerous Nazi war criminals were scheduled for release from German prisons on Aug. 25—their terms cut short by one-third for "good behavior" by action of U. S. High Commissioner John J. McCloy.

Among them are Friedrich Flick, who became head of the German steel industry under the Nazis, and Karl Rasche, head of the Dresden Bank—both contributors to the Nazi war chest as early as 1938, according to evidence presented at their trials. Another is Heinrich Lehmann, who was in charge of slave labor at the Krupp arms plant. A fourth is Fritz Ter Meer, poison gas expert for the I. G. Farben firm.

A protest was filed with President Truman by Rep. Klein (D. N. Y.), who said, after learning of the forthcoming releases, that "the only possible explanation of this depressing information is that those Nazis, convicted in a duly constituted court of revolting crimes against humanity, are to be restored to power in postwar Germany."

JAMES S. MARTIN, former chief of the American Military Government's decartelization branch in Germany, blasted the releases in a letter to Secy. of State Acheson. Martin resigned his post in protest against failure to carry out policies laid down by the late President Roosevelt and confirmed by President Truman. He served as co-chairman of the Progressive Party in Maryland but withdrew shortly after the election last year.

"Their 'good behavior' has consisted," he wrote, "in remaining quietly warm and dry in prison and eating three square meals a day while serving sentences for participating in and profiting from the murder of more than 6 million human beings . . .

"Unless some positive action is taken, they will come back in time to assume positions of power and influence in the rearmament of Germany . . .

"The record of all these men, and the complicity of certain prominent American businessmen in their worldwide intrigues, were exposed during the first years of the occupation . . .

"The record of the occupation to this date has been that of repeating, one by one, the errors made in dealing with Germany after the first World War. At this critical stage it will be indeed unfortunate if the foreign policy for the United States becomes confounded with the Nazi's plans for postwar revival under cover of the confusion which the Nazi leaders have done so much to create."

Martin is the author of a book, All Honorable Men, soon to be published, on post-war Germany.

Murray Backs Memorial For Hero Striker

CIO PRES. Philip Murray has given his full support to the Edward J. Duffy Memorial Fund Committee, organized to raise funds for a memorial to the late member of the CIO Shipbuilders Union.

Duffy, a IUMSWA general executive board member and president of Local 39, was drowned while on picket duty in a boat during a strike at the Todd Shipbuilding Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1949. He left a wife and children.

The 1949 CIO convention voted to "commemorate the memory of Edward Duffy and pay homage to the great sacrifice he made for the cause of his fellow workers."

"The decision of your committee to raise funds for a fitting memorial to Brother Edward Duffy," Murray wrote the committee, "is completely in accord with the spirit and meaning of our CIO convention resolution and I express the hope that your efforts will be fully successful.

"I am sure that every CIO union will respond most warmly to your campaign to honor the memory of a great union member who died so valiantly for the cause he loved."

The following CIO leaders have been named to the committee: Chairman Allan S. Haywood; Vice-chairman Louis Hollander, president of the New York State CIO Council; Harold J. Garno, secretary-treasurer of the New York State CIO Council; IUMSWA Pres. John Green; IUMSWA Secy.-Treas. Ross Blood; N. Y. CIO Port Council Pres. John Grogan; Reg. Dir. Charles Kerrigan, Auto Workers, and Pres. A. S. Esposito, of the Playthings, Novelty and Jewelry Workers.

Also named were: Pres. Irving M. Simon, of the Retail and Wholesale Employes; CIO Reg. Dir. Pete Mosele, of New York; Reg. Dir. Jack Rubenstein, of the Textile Workers in New York; New York City CIO Council Secy.-Treas. M. Iushewitz; Pres. Michael Quill, of the Transport Workers; Pres. Patrick McGrath, of the Utility Workers New York Joint Council; Pres. Robert Creasey, of Div. 10, Communications Workers; Bus. Mgr. Earl King, of Local 33, Marine Engineers; Pres. Joseph Curran, of the Maritime Union; Vice-Pres. Thomas Murphy, of Local 3, Newspaper Guild, and Pres. Robert A. Brady, of IUMSWA Local 39.

Donations may be sent to the Edward Duffy Memorial Committee, Harold Garno, Secretary-Treasurer, 101 W. 31st St., New York 1, N. Y.

Cal. Packing Shed Poll Asked By CIO

After a whirlwind one-month organizing campaign, the CIO has filed with the National Labor Relations Board a petition for a representation election among about 3300 "fruit tramps" working in the vegetable packing sheds of the Salinas-Watsonville, Cal., areas.

The petition was filed in San Francisco on behalf of Local Industrial Union 78, United Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers, by Howard McNamara, assistant director of the organizing drive; James Spangler, CIO field representative, and Tim Flynn, CIO regional director for Northern California.

Local 78 is the union organized by the CIO on the ruins of the Food & Tobacco Workers, which was expelled from the CIO.

Longshore Votes To Quit WFTU As Left-Wingers Aid Move

LEFT-WING leaders who controlled the longshore and walking bosses' caucus of the CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union at North Bend, Ore., climbed on the anti-Communist bandwagon and joined in a vote to take the union out of the Red-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions and its maritime department.

The vote was 63 to 9 on a resolution for severance from the WFTU, which the CIO bolted more than a year ago. The ILWU membership had never voted on affiliation, which existed only for the waterfront section of the union.

No reason was given for the change of heart of the left-wingers who dominated the caucus by a three to one margin. The move to get out of the WFTU originnated among pro-National CIO rank-and-filers who are fed up with alleged Communist leadership which has brought their union to the verge of expulsion from the CIO.

HOWEVER, it was pointed out that Harry Bridges, president of the ILWU and honorary president of the WFTU's Maritime Federation of the World, was in an embarrassing position and that the recommendation might help take him off the spot. Many ILWU locals, including Bridges' home Local 10 in San Francisco, have voted full support to the United Nations' and United States' intervention in Korea. The Maritime Federation, on the other hand, has screamed its opposition and sought to impose a worldwide boycott among longshoremen and maritime workers on shipments to the UN forces.

BRIDGES, convicted of perjury because of his denial of Communist Party membership when he became a U. S. citizen in 1945, tried to carry water on both shoulders.

Abandonment of ILWU ties with the Maritime Federation—the attempted boycott was a flop anyway—was seen by many observers as eliminating one Bridges-Communist tie that might serve to help him win his freedom. Several right-wing locals had passed resolutions demanding that Bridges resign the presidency of the ILWU or that of the Maritime Federation.

Delegates to the caucus, herded by some 25 ILWU officials, adopted a series of resolutions offered by right-wing locals supporting the Korean war effort.

In one offered by Local 13, San Pedro, Cal., the delegates pledged that in addition to a fight "to maintain our union and the democratic structure that makes it possible . . . we will not tolerate, aid, assist or allow any political stoppages or demonstrations to delay or injure the war effort."

ANOTHER resolution, in which there was plenty of double talk, blasted the security program aimed at blocking Communist interference with shipments to Korea which was drawn up by anti-Red unions in the industry, representatives of the industry and the Coast Guard.

In earlier actions on non-ideological matters, the delegates agreed unanimously to demand a wage increase of 10%, or 18c across the board, in the wage review scheduled for Sept. 30. The Longshoremen got their last raise in 1948, when they called in the National CIO to help during a strike. CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood led negotiators who won a 15c-an-hour boost.

Bridges Freed

Harry Bridges, president of the CIO Longshoremen's and Ware Housemen's Union, was released in $25,000 bail on Aug. 25, pending his appeal on a perjury conviction, by a 2-to-1 ruling of the Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco. His bail had been revoked at the behest of the Dept. of Justice which held that at liberty he constituted a threat to national security.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The New York Newspaper Guild strike against the World Telegram and Sun for the past 10 weeks was successfully terminated last week by the signing of an agreement. The agreement was ratified by the Guild members by a vote of 270 to 90.

This represents a great victory over the Scripps-Howard chain, which has continuously resisted proper union recognition. This strike was notable in its demonstration of complete solidarity of all the workers. The AFL craft units and independent unions joined in this solidarity despite efforts of the publishers to break it. The agreement carried with it wage increases in the first and second year. The raises amount to $135,000 in the first year. Other features: reduction in hours from 37½ per week to 35 hours, five day week; four weeks vacation with pay after 15 years of service; increase in number of paid holidays; improved job security, including provisions for military service, with four weeks pay for those entering the service.

The success of this strike was due largely to the faith and ability of Executive Vice-Pres. Tom Murphy and Pres. Jay Nelson Tuck, and the other officers and members of the Guild.

The New York City and State Councils, as well as all CIO unions, gave splendid support to the strike. The publishers know now that the Guild cannot be pushed around and the best thing for them to do is approach such problems with a willingness to reach agreement on a basis of fairness and equity, and with a consideration of their workers.

Congratulations to all.

Al Hartnett, Assistant to the Chairman of the IUE-CIO, reports that the IUE won a representation election at Telex, Minneapolis, Minn., by a vote of IUE 96, no union 3.

Fred Fulford, secretary-treasurer of the United Furniture Workers-CIO, reports that in a representation election at the Dillingham Mfg. Co., Sheboygan, Wis., the UFW-CIO was victorious over the IUI-AFL by a vote of 74 to 7 with 26 voting neither.

CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports the following United Steelworkers' election victories: Belke Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill., eligible 93, USA-CIO 84, against 3; Garden City Plating & Mfg. Co., Chicago, eligible 289, USA-CIO 151, against 116; Chapman Industries, Chicago, eligible 10, USA-CIO 9.

Tom Andert, president, United Optical & Instrument Workers-CIO, reports that in a Wisconsin State Labor Relations Board election at the Badger Dental Laboratory, Milwaukee, Wis., the workers voted for the UOIW-CIO by a vote of 38 to 2 for no union. UOIW Rep. Drobic was in charge. In a representation election at the Minnesota Optical Co., Minneapolis, the workers voted in favor of the UOIW-CIO by a vote of 11 to 4 for no union. UOIW Rep. Widman was in charge of the campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that in a representation election at the Tenney Engineering Co., Baltimore, Md., the workers voted in favor of the Shipbuilding Workers-CIO by the following vote: eligible 74, IUMSWA 68, against 2.

CIO Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that the IUMSW-CIO won a representation election at the New Haven Copper Co., Seymour, Conn., by a vote of 66 to 19 for no union.

CIO Reg. Dir. Ben Henry reports that the United Automobile Workers-CIO won a representation election at the Brady Mfg. Co., Des Moines, Ia., by a vote of 21 to 5 for no union. Intl. Rep. Robert Johnston and Harry Booth, president of the Des Moines IUC, were in charge of the campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. Robert J. Davidson reports that the Steelworkers won a representation election at the Sheffield Corp., Dayton, O. The vote was USA-CIO 201; no union 193. Intl. Rep. Dorsie Childers was in charge of the campaign.

CIO Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that in a representation election at the River Brand Rice plant, Memphis, Tenn., the Brewery Workers-CIO were victorious over the discredited FTA by a vote of 40 to 2. Intl. Rep. E. W. McGory, assisted by the CIO staff, was in charge of this campaign.

The Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee has signed its first contract covering home office employes of an insurance company. The contract with the Golden Eagle Life Insurance Co. of New York, provided for a $4 across the board increase and raised minimum scales from $28 to $35 and maximums from $65 to $77. It also includes improved grievance procedures, arbitration of all grievances and an agreement to establish suitable pensions for the employes. The workers were formerly represented by the expelled UOPWA. Si Helfgott, vice-chairman of the committtee, signed for the IAWOC-CIO, and Mortimer Gellis, treasurer of Local 1706, signed on behalf of the workers.

State Dept.: Trying To End Canal Bias

THE DEPT. of State is consistently attempting to end discrimination against Panamanians and West Indians in the Panama Canal Zone, Lucius D. Battle, special assistant to the Secretary, has advised George L-P Weaver, director of the CIO Committee To Abolish Discrimination.

Wages in Army and Navy bases and on the Panama Canal and Panama Railroad average $1.36 an hour for Americans taken to the Canal Zone under contract, compared to 38c for Panamanians and West Indians, according to George W. Westerman, associate editor of the Panama Tribune and an adviser to the CIO in Panama. Westerman visited Washington last week on his way to an international conference of sociologists in Zurich, Switzerland, under the auspices of the United Nations.

"The terms and conditions of employment at Army and Navy bases in the Canal Zone," Battle wrote to Weaver, "are determined by the Dept. of Defense, and in the case of the Panama Canal and Panama Railroad, by their respective administrative offices, headed by the governor of the Panama Canal.

"The Dept. of State has a vital interest in these employment practices because of their relation to certain of our treaty commitments with the Republic of Panama and by virtue of their effect on our relations with other countries.

"THE DEPARTMENT'S interest lies in the general policies rather than in the details of their administration, but it is recognized that the specific practices followed under these policies with respect to workers in the Zone affect importantly our relations with Panama and other countries in the area. The department therefore consults frequently with the above-mentioned authorities to ensure that these practices continue to be in accord with treaty provisions.

"The department has consistently urged the removal of all evidences of discrimination in the Canal Zone as the only sound policy for this government to follow; it continues to support efforts to improve the conditions of employment for Panamanians and other non-United States employes in such specific fields as wages, retirement, leave regulations and the like."

WESTERMAN has been of great assistance in efforts of the CIO Government and Civic Workers Organizing Committee to erect in Panama upon the wreckage of the United Public Workers a democratically-controlled labor union.

Discrimination by Americans against native workers and West Indians brought into the Zone to work on the canal has long been a sore spot, he said.

"The everyday actions of many authorities toward fellow-workers and of the North American residents toward their non-U. S. neighbors in the Canal Zone betray the letter and spirit of the Good Neighbor policy," he said.

"Is it any wonder, then, that the Panamanian people have been alienated from the American government, and that in their minds American occupation of Panamanian territory has come to symbolize discrimination, exploitation and display of attitudes of a 'superior' race, instead of the friendship, progress and democracy that it should rightfully symbolize?"

Buchanan Tees Off On Saturday Evening Post

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A COUPLE OF members of Congress teed off on two of the country's largest magazines last week.

Sen. Morse (R. Ore.) picked Reader's Digest. He charged it with deliberately spreading malicious falsehoods about American institutions and American officials, and asked that the House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities investigate it.

Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.), chairman of the House Lobbying Committee, went to work on the Saturday Evening Post over an editorial. The editorial not only "repeated but expanded" the inaccuracies in an editorial against the committee which appeared in Life some weeks ago.

Buchanan said Life "obviously had been played for a sucker, had been taken in by the Committee for Constitutional Government, an anti-labor and anti-Fair Deal outfit." The Saturday Evening Post, on the other hand, "ignored the first principle of responsible journalism by failing to make any effort to check the facts on which they were basing their editorial."

Morse asked that Reader's Digest, which has grown into sort of a house organ for ultra-reactionary Republicans, big business, and brand new panaceas, be investigated "to determine whether (it) has not secretly conspired with powerful business interests to discredit governmental institutions and defame governmental administrators acting under the authority of this and other Congresses."

HIS CASE was based on an article, "What Does CVA Mean To You?" which appeared in a recent issue and which ostensibly was written by former Gov. Leslie A. Miller of Wyoming. The article, among other things, called Dr. Paul J. Raver, administrator of the Bonneville Power Administration since 1939, a Socialist—and in addition to that, according to Morse, is "a concoction of half truths and whole lies."

Editors of the magazine admitted that they, not the author, wrote in the description of Raver as a Socialist.

The "CVA" is the Columbia Valley Authority, to which Morse is opposed. But he charged a conspiracy by utilities to smear as subversive, un-American and socialistic all federal power, navigation and reclamation projects.

"If our nation's most widely circulated magazine can deliberately spread malicious falsehoods about our American institutions and our American officials, it is giving aid and comfort to the enemies of our democratic way of life," he said.

Worse than the propaganda of the power companies, he said, "is the subtle campaign they have launched to corrupt avenues of public information."

"It now appears," he added, "that Reader's Digest, that self-styled paragon of honest, wholesome publishing, has endorsed and deliberately embarked upon this campaign of smear and falsehood."

He wants the lobby investigators to find out if there is any connection between the private utilities, Miller and the magazine article.

"I think we have a right," he asserted, "to demand a retraction of the outright falsehoods that have been levelled against the power program on the Columbia River. I think we have the right to know whether these misrepresentations came from the pen of Gov. Miller or whether they were contrived in the editorial sanctum of the Reader's Digest, as part and parcel of a nationwide conspiracy to smear public power developments."

The Saturday Evening Post editorial which Buchanan protested described his committee's work as "a counteroffensive against the few conservatives who have waged effective war against the socialist drift of the Truman Fair Deal." It also deplored "the weak response" of too many businessmen and capitalists to the threat of the committee.

It said the Committee for Constitutional Government "is not charged with lobbying," although it has registered as a lobbying organization and spent more than $60,000 for that purpose last year, but that the Buchanan committee demanded an accounting of its income nevertheless.

SOME OF the CCG's income comes from gifts for which it accounts under the Lobby Act. The bulk comes from "sales" of its books for which there is no accounting.

In an extension of his remarks in the Congressional Record for Aug. 22, Buchanan pointed out that information as to the source of income was asked from all varieties of organizations — and that most of them supplied it (including the CIO).

"But we have not gotten it," he said, "from the Committee for Constitutional Government, and guess who else we did not get it from—the Communist-led Civil Rights Congress."

He ridiculed as phony the SEP's charge that the committee is concerned only with working out on "conservative" proponents of so-called "free enterprise."

"For every lobbyist or lobby which we have investigated on one side of the political avenue," he said, "we have investigated a counterpart lobbyist or lobby on the other; both were asked the same sort of questions; both were asked to provide the full financial detail on the organization; both were questioned as to techniques of influencing legislation; both were treated the same."

The Committee for Constitutional Government is believed by Buchanan to be the key organization among those groups fighting organized labor, the Fair Deal and the New Deal. Its executive secretary, Dr. Edward A. Rumely, has twice refused to tell who put up the money to pay for the propaganda the CCG broadcasts so lavishly. He was to have a third chance on Aug. 25, and faces a probable citation for contempt of Congress in case of another refusal.

ALSO FACING possible citations are William Patterson, executive secretary of the Civil Rights Congress, and Joseph P. Kamp, of the Constitutional Educational League. Kamp, like Patterson and Rumely, has declined to produce his organization's complete financial records. At present Kamp is serving a jail term growing out of a contempt citation because of his refusal to supply comparable information during a similar congressional investigation in 1944.

Plane Mishap Delays Court Fight Over Rent Curb

BECAUSE AN airliner lost a propeller 20,000 feet above the Colorado Rockies, a court hearing in Washington on a move to block enforcement of the Los Angeles ordinance killing rent control was postponed from Aug. 24 to Aug. 28.

When the propeller and a runaway engine tore loose from the plane and ripped open the cabin, Alex Schullman, counsel for the Los Angeles Tenants Council, en route to Washington to direct presentation of the case, was one of seven passengers and crewmen slightly injured.

His injuries were sufficiently serious, however, to force him to return to Los Angeles. When informed of the development, Judge Burnita Matthews, in U. S. District Court in Washington, granted the postponement.

Maxwell Miller, executive secretary of the Tenants Council, and David Smith, Schullman's associate, who were travelling with him, escaped injury in the freak accident and continued on to Washington after the plane landed at Denver.

THE SCHEDULED court hearing was on a petition for a permanent injunction restraining Housing Expediter Tighe Woods from ordering Los Angeles rents decontrolled. Under the 1950 Rent Control Law, he has no choice but to sign. A temporary restraining order is in force pending a decision on a permanent injunction.

The suit was filed by the unaffiliated Intl. Association of Machinists on behalf of the Tenants Council, composed of CIO, AFL, the Machinists and the railroad brotherhoods. It charged failure of the City Council to act in accordance with the law.

The National CIO has agreed to join in the suit.

Meantime, petitions were being circulated on a grand scale in Los Angeles.

Active union members were hard at work lining up signatures on one petition demanding that the City Council rescind its action, and on others calling for the recall, under the city charter, of Councilmen Ed Davenport and Don A. Allen, who led the real estate lobby's victorious fight for decontrol.

The Los Angeles CIO Council voted enthusiastic participation in the petition drive at a meeting at which Leo Goodman, director of the National CIO Housing Committee, recountered what is being done in Washington, as well as in other cities, to stem the greed of the real estate lobby. The campaign was in charge of Albert T. Lunceford, CIO Council secretary-treasurer.

LANDLORDS IN another Pacific Coast city, Portland, Ore., lost out in a frantic fight to have controls removed immediately. The City Council, after a day-long hearing, voted 3 to 2 to submit the issue to a referendum vote at the November elections.

Real estate lobbyists were bitter over the defeat. Arthur D. Jones, counsel for the Oregon Apartment House Owners Association, called the council members "derelict in their duty," although a survey in January showed a vacancy rate of but .7% for houses and apartments fit to live in.

The real estate lobby found apparent victory turned into defeat in Akron, O., thanks to CIO unions. The City Council there had voted to lift controls, but the CIO went out and rounded up enough petitions to force a referendum.

UNDER THE 1950 Rent Control Act, controls automatically end on Dec. 31 unless a community meantime takes action to continue them.

The real estate lobby has been conducting furious campaigns to end restrictions well in advance of that date and to fend off efforts to extend them beyond it.

It also has taken advantage of the confusion caused by the Korean situation, with its requirement that the whole national economy be re-examined, to kill off public housing.

It got itself involved in an embarrassing error, however, in a campaign to change the attitude of the American Legion, which went on record at its convention last year, as favoring public housing. The realty boodle boys want the legion to reverse its stand at the coming convention, scheduled for Los Angeles in October.

THE NATIONAL Association of Home Builders has been writing members to do what they can to stack the convention's legislative, resolutions and hearings committees with foes of public housing.

"It is of the greatest importance," members were advised by national headquarters, "that you contact the department adjutant and the department commander in your state, and urge them to recommend the appointment of delegates to the convention whose convictions on housing are in accord with the general policy and specific recommendations of the American Legion Housing Committee."

The American Legion Housing Committee fought actively to retain the features of the 1949 rent control law when the 1950 act was being drawn up in Congress. It has not changed its position since has not changed its position since.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taft-Hartley Repeal	Would repeal most viciously anti-labor bill, reinstitute Wagner Act.	Pigeonholed.	Give money to PAC; register; vote.
FEPC	Would bar job discrimination based on race, creed or color and provide penalties for violations.	Pigeonholed for this session.	Give money to PAC; register; vote.
McCarran - Mundt - Nixon 'Omnibus' Bills S. 4037 H.R. 9490	Bills endanger civil liberties, union rights, under guise of fighting subversive activities. Opposed by Administration leaders, liberal & labor groups.	Senate and House actions expected soon, possibly this week.	Ask Senators & Representatives to defeat. Ask support of S. 4061 to strengthen internal security laws.
Interim Tax Bill H.R. 8920	Sharply criticized by CIO as "special interest" bill. Provides new loopholes for wealthy, aid to corporations, etc.	Bill ok'd by Sen. Finance Comm.; Senate action due soon. Bill then goes to House-Senate conference committee.	Wire Senators to eliminate loopholes, add excess profits tax provision. Ask Representatives for "equal sacrifice" bill.
Ratification of Genocide Convention	International agreement to outlaw mass killings for race or religious reasons.	Reported favorably by Sen. Foreign Relations sub-comm. (Requires Sen. action only.) Full comm. has not acted.	Ask Senators to give speedy approval.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

Correction

Through a typographical error, the Keep Your Eye on Congress box in the Aug. 21 issue of The CIO NEWS urged readers to ask their Senators and Representatives to vote against ratification of the Genocide Convention. It should have requested the readers to call on their Senators to approve the convention speedily.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00 A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII | WASHINGTON, D. C., SEPTEMBER 4, 1950 | 82 | No. 36

CIO Presents Mobilization Program

The CIO Executive Board, meeting in Washington on August 29, raced through a heavy agenda of important actions.

In the course of the one-day session, the Board took these steps:

1. ENDORSED an economic policy program for the nation's mobilization effort. Pres. Murray will formally bring the program to the National Security Resources Board this week.

The program lists ways and means of increasing "our productive capacity even further—so that our military defense will be fully supplied, and our civilian population provided with all its essential needs." It also calls for price controls; excess profits taxes; rent controls; and wage adjustments to regain workers' buying power lost through price increases.

2. APPROVED a foreign policy statement endorsing the United Nations anti-aggression campaign in Korea.

The statement, covering a number of international problems affecting this nation, declared: "Condemning and resisting and halting aggression are only part of our task. We must provide, for millions of people, an attractive democratic alternative to Communism."

3. CONDEMNED the so-called "Stockholm Peace Petition" as international Communist propaganda concealing "a fog of misrepresentation, deceit and treachery."

4. ATTACKED the Mundt-Nixon, Wood and McCarran "anti-subversive" bills as dangerous to union rights, unworkable, and threatening to traditional American civil liberties.

5. COMPLETED the task of expelling 11 unions charged with being Communist-dominated and following policies of the Communist Party rather than of the CIO.

(See detailed stories on Pages 3, 6 and 7.)

THE SURPRISE AGREEMENT negotiated by the four men in this photo not only brought pay increases of from 10c to 15c for 120,000 members of the CIO Auto Workers at the Chrysler Corp., but likely hastened the signing of pacts bringing benefits to 46,000 UAW members at Packard Motor Co. and Briggs Manufacturing Co. The Packard agreement ended a 13-day strike. Left to right, Harold Julian, assistant director of the UAW Chrysler Division; Norman Matthews, director of the UAW Chrysler Division; R. W. Conder, Chrysler's labor relations director, and L. L. Colbert, a Chrysler vice-president and director of the Dodge Division. Chrysler is still doing all right. It declared a $3 dividend last week. (See story on Page 2)

Briggs Matches Chrysler Gains, Packard Settles

By WILLIAM WEISS

THE CIO Auto Workers within the past 10 days have won pay raises up to 15c an hour and other benefits for 166,000 employes at the Chrysler Corp., Packard Motor Co. and the Briggs Manufacturing Co.

Granting of the increase by Chrysler was interpreted by UAW Chrysler Dir. Norman Matthews as representing "a change in the thinking of the company" and in industry circles as blasting any hope of holding the line on 1949 wages.

Earlier in the year, UAW was forced to strike 100 days at Chrysler to win pensions and other benefits which UAW Pres. Walter Reuther termed a victory over the company's "blind selfishness."

AT CHRYSLER about 93,000 hourly rated employes will get a flat 10c-an-hour increase. Some 7000 skilled workers will get that plus an additional 5c an hour. Salaried employes will receive a 7% boost with a minimum of $17.50 monthly.

Quick to see the handwriting on the wall, Packard signed a five-year contract with the UAW, ending a 13-day strike of 8000 production workers.

The contract is based on the General Motors agreement which stirred the industry three months ago. Provided for are $125 monthly pensions, a sliding wage scale hitched to living costs and an automatic 4c-an-hour increase each year. A cost of living rise of 5c an hour became effective Sept. 1.

The Packard $125 top pension is higher than that obtained at GM, where the high is $117.50. Matthews said the contract would cost the company 19c to 20c an hour for each employe.

UAW AND BRIGGS reached accord on an agreement which gives immediate wage increases to 38,000 workers.

All hourly rated employes will receive a wage boost of 5c hourly while all skilled workers in the tool, die and maintenance departments will get an additional 5c an hour increase.

Salaried employes will receive a 7% increase, which amounts to a minimum monthly raise of $17.50.

Briggs matched the Chrysler settlement figure. The 5c boost was added to an agreement signed in June that gave the workers a 5% increase.

The Chrysler agreement left only the Ford Motor Co. of the industry's so-called Big Three—GM, and Ford—failing to grant wage increases over 1949 contracts.

Ford recently turned down a UAW request that the contract be reopened immediately for discussion of a wage boost and the executive board of the big Local 600 at the Dearborn, Mich., Ford plant authorized strike action on Jan. 2.

Ford UAW Dir. Kenneth Bannon said he was "optimistic" over an early response from the Ford company following the Chrysler pact.

He said Ford workers average hourly pay rate now trails GM and Chrysler by slightly more than 10c.

Murray Calls At Weirton, Finds Fear

PHILIP MURRAY, president of the CIO and the Steelworkers, dropped in on Weirton, W. Va., a few days ago and found "the last (steel) company town I know of in the United States."

"There is fear in the hearts of every man, woman and child in town," he told the handful of people brave enough to attend the meeting at which he spoke. "There is no freedom here."

Murray's visit to Weirton was his first since the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals at Philadelphia upheld the finding of the National Labor Relations Board that the Weirton Steel Co., which employes practically everybody in Weirton and across the Ohio River in Steubenville, O., was guilty of violating the Wagner Act—13 years after the Steel Workers Organizing Committee first filed charges against it.

Weirton capitulated to the court's decree and broke up its company union. A new one, the Independent Steel Workers Union, popped up as if by magic. That, too, is a company union, Murray told his Weirton audience. The company has helped it, and the company has intimidated some of its workers by threatening to fire them if they join the Steelworkers, he said.

The Steelworkers, he promised, will do their utmost "to drive fear from the hearts" of Weirton's residents, and to give Weirton employes an opportunity to exercise their "God-given right to join a union of their own choosing."

Changes Announced In Mediation Service

Appointment of James W. Greenwood, Jr. as associate director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service has been announced by Cyrus S. Ching, the service's director. Greenwood has been serving as director of administrative management for the Service since August 1947. He succeeds Howard T. Colvin, who retired July 31.

Ching also announced the promotion of Peter Seitz to the position of assistant to the director and general counsel. Seitz's new title is in recognition of added duties and responsibilities assumed during the past year. He has been serving as general counsel since August 1947.

Lawrence E. Eady was promoted to the position of director of administrative management succeeding Greenwood. Eady has been serving as assistant director of administrative management

IUE Strike Is Mushrooming As GE Fails To Meet Demands

NEARLY 30,000 General Electric workers were on strike Sept. 1, in protest over GE's refusal to meet the contract demands of the CIO Int'l. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers.

The strike movement snowballed since Aug. 30 when 13,000 members of IUE Local 301 at Lynn, Mass., voted at a mass rally to go out and stay until GE met their terms. They were immediately joined by the several hundred others who had not been at the meeting.

THE FOLLOWING day power house workers, who had remained on their jobs an extra 24 hours to comply with safety provisions of Massachusetts law, also walked out to make the strike complete.

A few hours after the walk-out at Lynn, the 800 GE workers in IUE Local 283 at Fitchburg, Mass., "took a walk to talk things over" as one local officer put it.

On Aug. 31, 7500 IUE members at Local 320, Syracuse, N. Y., joined the strike. Another 1500 office workers were affected. Local 264 in Holyoke, Mass., brought approximately 600 more out the same day.

The company admitted that work at the struck plants was at a complete standstill.

FURTHER strike action was expected to mushroom at GE's plants in other parts of the country within the next few days. Meanwhile, Bridgeport, Conn., Local 203 was holding a series of well-attended educational meetings. Providence, R. I., Local 283, and the widely scattered shops that make up Local 707, Cleveland, were also holding successful educational meetings.

LOCAL 805 at Tell City, Ind., where 1500 workers are employed, had taken a second week of vacation against the company's wishes and will go out again this week.

The following locals voted in the past week to give their officers authority to call a strike at any time: Atomic Energy Workers, Local 301, Schenectady, N. Y.; Local 402, White Plains, N. Y.; Local 455, Trenton, N. J.; Local 602, New Kensington, Pa.; Local 722, Warren, O., and Local 734, Youngstown, O.

This action from GE workers throughout the country followed a meeting in New York City on Aug. 16 of the IUE-CIO General Electric Conference Board, where GE's latest offer was unanimously rejected as a substandard contract.

After 23 meetings between union representatives and the company, James B. Carey, chairman of IUE, announced that GE, largest and most profitable employer in the electrical industry, "now stands revealed as the most backward in collective bargaining relations."

THE Conference Board adopted a detailed statement showing clearly how the company, in collusion with the Communist-controlled United Electrical Worker, had been making a travesty of true collective bargaining for at least 10 years.

Concerning the statement of G. H. Pfeif, GE's manager of union relations, that the GE offer was "not only very proper and equitable but is also in many important respects superior to current patterns elsewhere," IUE pointed out that GE's abandonment of a profit-sharing plan and a cost-of-living plan that were in existence in former years largely nullified increases in the past few years.

In 1947 General Electric abolished its profit sharing system under which, in 1950 for example, the workers would have received 6.7c an hour because of the sharp rise in GE profits, according to IUE. The profit-sharing plan for its executives was retained and increased, the union charged.

Termination of the cost-of-living plan which was in effect from 1936 to 1941 prevented GE workers from receiving a 27% increase in wages between April, 1941, and July, 1950, IUE said.

IUE's GE Board Calls Walkout

The General Electric Conference Board of the CIO Int'l. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers passed a resolution Sept. 1 at its meeting in New York calling upon the members of all locals to strike beginning Sept. 5, after the Labor Day holiday.

The resolution applies to all plants and other facilities not only of the General Electric Co. itself, but the mammoth firm's subsidiaries and affiliates as well.

It means that approximately 56,000 production workers in GE plants will refrain from work in protest against the company's stalling during negotiations and its failure to take the fledgling union's proposals seriously.

Edibles, Platinum—What Isn't Going Up?

The cost of living took another upward swoop in the week ending Aug. 29, according to the Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index.

The total wholesale price of the 31 foods used to determine the index jumped 13 cents to $6.69, the highest since Sept. 28, 1948, for a total of 75c since June 13. The figure compares with $5.78 a year ago.

Food wasn't the only thing to soar last week. Platinum went up too—$13 an ounce.

"Refresher courses?"

Steel Profits For 6 Months Set Record

THE STEEL industry is in a good position to take an excess profits tax in its stride, for it made more money in the first half of 1950 than in any six-month period in its history, according to a report by Research Director Otis Brubaker of the CIO Steelworkers.

Twenty companies representing 88.7% of the industry's total ingot capacity reported a net profit of $358,914,295 for the first half of this year, compared to $321,120,351 for the same companies plus Portsmouth Steel in the record-holding second half of 1948, Brubaker showed.

"This is only reported profit," he pointed out.

"The actual net profit would be more than $50 million greater if non-deductible Accelerated Depreciation (both the admitted and unadmitted) were added to this reported figure. This accounting device serves to reduce stated profits below actual levels; and it should be noted that these companies have already charged off as an operating expense in the first half of 1950 a proportionate share of their estimates of annual pension and insurance costs resulting from last fall's negotiations and strikes.

"U. S. Steel, in addition to charging off current and future pension costs, has deducted an extra $25 million in the second quarter to pay for past service pension costs. This had the result of decreasing net profit by $15 million in the quarter and half."

BRUBAKER recalled that no matter what the steel companies report to their stockholders, the Bureau of Internal Revenue writes the rules on what goes to make up total net profits—and collects income taxes on that basis.

The Steelworkers research head stated flatly that the profit increase was not due to increased operating rate, but resulted from "the unnecessary price hikes in December, 1949, increased productivity and operating economies derived from new plant and equipment, and from decreases in material costs"—all in spite of the coal strike early this year.

"It is exactly the result predicted by union representatives," he added, "before the Presidential Fact Finding Board and at the special steel price hearings before the Congressional Joint Committee on the Economic Report."

Executive Board Acts On War And Peace Tasks

THE CIO Executive Board meeting in Washington last week, approved a detailed "economic policy statement designed to insure the nation's military strength and to promote equal-sacrifice policies. on the home front."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray hailed the statement as an "unprecedented document." He said it represented the first time a labor organization had offered so complete an economic program to the nation.

The CIO leader said it would soon be presented formally to Stuart Symington, head of the National Security Resources Board, and other top government officials.

Approval of the economic program was only one of many actions taken by the 46-man Executive Board during its busy day's session. In other actions it:

1. Adopted a foreign policy statement which emphasized democracy's need of aiding exploited people in other parts of the world, in order that millions of persons may be immunized against the germs of international Communist propaganda.

2. Denounced the Communist-supported Stockholm "peace petition" as "a vicious fraud intended to mislead the American people, and particularly union members," and said that "peace can be attained only through the prevalence of justice and decent treatment of all people."

3. Supported proposed legislation to tighten present laws dealing with espionage and subversion, and recommended by President Truman. But the board warned that proposals like the Wood Bill, the McCarran Bill and the Mundt-Ferguson Bill will be ineffective against spies and saboteurs while creating "a threat to freedom of thought, speech and belief."

4. Called for removal by Congress of "crippling amendments" to the economic controls bill, extension of rent control and passage of an excess profits tax.

5. Completed the job of CIO internal "house-cleaning" started by the 1949 convention by voting overwhelmingly to expel, as Communist-dominated, the Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union—headed by Harry Bridges—and the Marine Cooks & Stewards—headed by Hugh Bryson.

THE economic policy statement noted that we have "greater experience," better skills and programs, new technical advances and improvements that we did not have in 1939.

"Our task," the CIO said, "is to increase our productive capacity even further, so that our military defense will be fully supplied and our civilian population provided with all its essential needs."

The government "must achieve price stability at pre-Korean levels—now," the statement also said. It called for an excess profits tax, income tax increases in the bracket above the first $2000 of taxable income, and extended rent controls.

The CIO said "selective price controls on basic commodities are necessary and should be established now at the pre-Korean level." It called for establishment of a new government price control agency to administer the program, noting that "rising food prices have already bitten deeply into the pay envelopes of all Americans."

ON THE wage question, the statement said:

"Labor enters the mobilization period at a decided disadvantage.

"Even before the Korean crisis, labor had not shared fairly in the fantastic profits made by big business since 1946. Since the Korean crisis, labor has lost further in purchasing power, due to unwarranted and greedy profiteering.

"Labor seeks to redress these inequities through collective bargaining.

"There is ample room for wage adjustments without disturbing existing price levels."

The foreign policy statement stressed the point that "ideas" as well as "bullets" are weapons in the world-wide contest with Communist forces.

"In this struggle for the minds and hearts of mankind," it said, "We must act to strengthen democratic institutions in every nation; to encourage rising living standards; to guarantee a better life for the millions who have enjoyed so little of our earthly blessings.

"It is both our duty and our defense to enlist these millions of people in freedom's cause. We can do it through adoption of far-sighted policies designed to bring about a better world.

"Mere denunciation of Communist propaganda is not enough; our government and the United Nations must offer to the people of every continent the tangible hope of bread, peace and freedom."

The resolution called for support of the UN action in Korea, sharply criticized proposed loans to Dictator Franco of Spain and Dictator Peron of Argentina, and urged expanded economic aid programs to peoples in other lands under the ECA, Point Four and other programs.

THE PROPOSED $62.5 million loan to Franco, the resolution said, "will not be used to improve the conditions of the oppressed people of Spain. It will be used to reinforce a cruel dictatorship which has suppressed free labor unions, as well as free speech, free thought, free press and free assembly."

"Bold new policies" are needed by ECA to help European workers, the CIO statement commented.

IT SAID THE time has come for "more positive programs" in the Marshal Plan countries 'to improve the standards of living of industrial and agricultural workers, and to insure full employment."

Representation for labor in the State Department; continued endorsement of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, of which the CIO was a charter member; endorsement of the principles of the Schuman plan for improving distribution of the products of Europe's heavy industries, were also contained in the resolution.

"Acceptance of these basic proposals," the CIO board said, "will do much to help win the present struggle in Korea, and to avoid the possibility of a new world-wide conflict—a war of horrifying proportions and destructiveness . . .

"The free world can—and must—provide that moral leadership and wise action which will provide democratic alternatives to Communist ideology for every citizen of the world."

Purge Of CP-Led Unions Completed With Ouster Of 3

THE LAST three of the 11 unions that faced expulsion from the CIO on charges they followed the Communist Party line rather than CIO policy have been sent on their ways.

The Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, the Fishermen, and the Marine Cooks & Stewards were expelled by the CIO Executive Board at its meeting in Washington last week.

Twelve unions were originally cited, but one of them, the United Furniture Workers, was found not guilty after delegates to the biennial convention at Chicago in June, under the leadership of Pres. Morris Pizer, kicked out the Communist officers and pledged support of CIO policies.

The ousters were voted on recommendation of committees which heard the charges brought by Pres. William Steinberg of the American Radio Association. They were contained in two resolutions—one covering the Longshoremen and the Fishermen, which have merged since the hearings, the other naming the Marine Cooks and Stewards. Both resolutions were based on detailed reports, findings and recommendations of the hearing board. Their wording was identical:

"THE EXECUTIVE Board finds and concludes that the policies and activities of the (unions) are consistently directed toward the achievement of the program and purposes of the Communist Party rather than the objectives and policies set forth in the CIO Constitution."

The hearing committees were the same for the three unions—Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers, chairman; Pres. Joseph A. Fisher of the Utilities Workers, and Vice Pres. J. J. Moran of the Communications Workers.

Their reports detailed at great length the evidence adduced against the unions. About the ILWU it said:

"By examining the publications of the ILWU, the reports of its officers to its conventions and its convention proceedings, and positions taken by ILWU representatives at CIO Conventions and Executive Board meetings, the committee has ascertained the policies which the ILWU, through its international leadership, has, over the years, followed.

"THE COMMITTEE has compared these policies with the program of the Communist Party of the United States. From this examination the committee finds that the policies and activities of ILWU have followed and continue to follow exactly, without deviation, the policies of the Communist Party.

"Each of the four major shifts in policy made by the Communist Party during the period since 1938 was faithfully followed by ILWU. At no time during that 12-year period has there been one single instance of ILWU's deviating in any appreciable degree from the line of the Communist Party."

To determine if the ILWU adhered to the party line, the committee used several Communist "key" policies as guides. Nine of these "keys" were postwar policies. They were:

Demand for withdrawal of U. S. troops from China, and support of the Chinese Communists; claims that the U. S. failed to live up to the Yalta and Potsdam agreements, and demands that U. S. foreign policy be based on friendship with Russia; opposition to the Truman Doctrine, the Marshall Plan and the Atlantic Pact; support of Henry Wallace and the Progressive Party in 1948; support of the World Federation of Trade Unions and opposition to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, which was sponsored by the CIO and AFL; denunciation of the CIO as a "tool of reaction and imperialism," and support of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers in its fight with the CIO.

Members Of Ousted Unions Are Welcome

A place will be made in the CIO for rank-and-file members of the Longshoremen, Fishermen and Marine Cooks & Stewards who support National CIO policy, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said after the three unions were expelled by the Executive Board last week.

Strong opposition to the Communist policies forced on these unions by their leaders has developed in many locals within the last few months.

IN ITS summation, the committee said:

"ILWU has continued up to the present moment to hew rigidly to the line laid down by the Communist Party. Never has ILWU adopted any policy which in any way ran counter to the policies of the Communist Party or to the interests of the Soviet Union.

"If the Communist Party program had been a consistent one this absence of conflict might not be significant. But over a period of 12 years the Communist Party has taken almost every conceivable position on ever issue of public importance in the U. S. . . .

"And the policies of the ILWU have, in each instance, undergone the same sinister shift."

The report also recounted evidence by Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers, and M. Hedley Stone, treasurer of the Maritime Union, placing Harry Bridges, ILWU president, at secret meetings with Communist functionaries at which union officers were instructed in the party line and told what they were to do in the CIO and in their own unions. The committee felt that Bridges' Communist Party membership was not relevant to its inquiry, but that it was concerned with whether or not he followed Communist instructions. It found he did.

OF THE Fishermen, the committee reported:

"Voluminous documentary evidence of IFAWA's adherence to the Communist Party line was introduced.

"Since the close of the hearing on the charges against the IFAWA, however, that organization has been merged into ILWU. The members of the committee, therefore, have concluded that it is unnecessary for them to make any separate report on their investigation of the charges against IFAWA. They wish to state to the Executive Board, however, that in their judgment those charges were fully substantiated."

The same "keys" were used to determine if the Marine Cooks & Stewards followed the CP line, and were compared to official MCS actions, policies and statements. The committee's conclusion was substantially the same. It said:

"On the basis of the evidence which has been submitted to the committee, only one conclusion is possible. MCS has followed the tortuous paths of Communist policy for years. MCS' shifting and contradictory positions cannot possibly have reflected any honest estimation of the interests of its membership. They can only have resulted from subservience to the interests of the Communist Party and the Soviet Union."

PRES. HUGH Bryson, of the MCS, and Vice Pres. J. A. Robertson, of the ILWU, were the only ones to vote against expulsion of the ILWU and the Fishermen. The vote automatically deprived Robertson of his seat on the board, so Bryson's ballot was the sole one cast against the ouster of his union.

He immediately announced that the MCS will appeal to the National CIO convention next November, as it can do under the CIO constitution. Meantime, the expulsion stands.

In San Francisco Bridges contented himself with claiming "we're better off out than in," an outstanding bit of self-restraint in view of his past language.

Unions deprived of their CIO affiliation in the house-cleaning, in addition to the three ousted last week, were the United Electrical Workers, Farm Equipment Workers, United Public Workers, United Office & Professional Workers, Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, Food & Tobacco Workers, American Communications Association and the Fur & Leather Workers.

Paper Held Guilty Of Monopoly Plan

The government won its first anti-trust suit against a daily newspaper on Aug. 29 when the Lorain (O.) Journal was found guilty of trying to create a monopoly by preventing advertisers from using the services of the Lorain Sunday News or radio station WEOL in nearby Elyria, O.

The verdict was handed down in Federal District Court at Cleveland by Judge Emerich B. Freed. He found the newspaper, its publishers, Samuel A. and Isadore Horvitz, and D. P. Self, business manager, guilty "of attempting to establish a monopoly by bold, relentless, predatory commercial behavior."

"The court cannot conceive," he added," that the First Amendment to the Constitution (Freedom of the Press) renders it impotent to enjoin the defendants' practices. This is a vice condemned by the Anti-Trust Act, and the evil may be restrained without touching the legitimate business of the defendants."

CIO's Big Housecleaning Job Completed

But That Doesn't Mean Organization's Campaign Against Communists Is Ended—Or Is Nearly Over

By ALLAN L. SWIM

A LOT OF WISE guys who pose as experts on labor matters said it would never be done—or that if it was done the job would take years.

It was done, and in a little less than 10 months!

And as a result the Communists have completely lost their toehold in an important segment of the American labor movement.

This doesn't mean that the Reds aren't still around and it doesn't mean that the CIO campaign against the Commies is over—or nearly over.

It merely means the CIO has completed the major housecleaning job which it cut out for itself last November during its national convention.

IT'S A GOOD idea now and then—especially in times of national tension—to look at a bit of history. So let's review the story of how the Commies got into CIO and how they went out.

Many of them came into the organization during its early days, when almost nobody paid any serious attention to domestic Reds.

They eagerly sought and obtained a number of key spots in CIO affiliates.

One union—the Newspaper Guild—performed a thorough housecleaning job just before the outbreak of World War II and by that time the Commies had already worn out their welcome in a number of other CIO groups.

Before long the U. S. and Russia were allies and the domestic Commies were being so patriotic that it almost hurt.

During the war years a few CIO councils gave the boot to the Reds, but there was comparatively little activity along this line until after the conflict ended.

IT WASN'T LONG after the surrender of Japan that it became apparent Russia was launching a drive to dominate the world.

This caused the "battle lines" to be drawn sharply within a number of CIO groups. Some councils cleaned house. The lefties in the Auto Workers took a beating. The Maritime and Transport Workers unions and the party liners came to a parting of the ways.

Then, last November, delegates to the Cleveland convention voted to crack down.

The United Electrical Workers and Farm Equipment Workers were expelled and committees were named to conduct hearings on 10 other unions charged with following the party line in preference to CIO policy.

By mid-summer the CIO Executive Board had expelled the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, United Public Workers, Office & Professional Workers, Food & Tobacco Workers and American Communications Association.

The Fur Workers voted to withdraw from CIO but the Executive Board went through the formalities of expelling it anyhow.

The Furniture Workers voted at its convention this summer to follow CIO policy and charges against it were dropped later.

Last week the Board expelled the Longshoremen, Marine Cooks & Stewards, and the Fishermen & Allied Workers.

THE TROUBLE spots in the industrial union council picture were being cleaned up while the CIO was dealing with affiliated unions which were dominated by the Communists.

All of this means that the Commie movement within the CIO has been smashed—but it doesn't mean that the Reds are now without influence among American workers.

They have been given a bad beating. They have been widely discredited. They have been revealed to be merely stooges of international Communism as it is run from Moscow.

But they're still around.

Their position has become more untenable since the North Korean Reds and Russia decided to buck the United States and the United Nations.

However, they're not going to fold their tents and disappear into the darkness. They're going to continue to fight to hold the ground they have. They're going to continue heaping abuse on the CIO.

So it seems proper to say that "Phase 1" of the CIO's drive against the Commies has been completed successfully.

"Phase 2" is likely to be long and rough because it won't be over until the Commie grip on unions expelled from the CIO is completely broken and American workers are again members of unions which do not pay homage to the revolting, twisting Moscow line.

LET'S CHART A COURSE

It's easy to get the impression in Washington that our country doesn't know where it's going and how it intends to get there.

This is understandable. Russia—not the United States—will largely determine whether the fighting will be confined to a "little" war or will become world-wide.

And a lot of people are playing politics with our foreign policy. This has created much confusion.

But there are some hard, cold facts on which to proceed:

1. We are already engaged in a war in Korea for which we were not adequately prepared.

2. We have been engaged for a long time in the world-wide ideological struggle between the forces of democracy and communism.

3. The Korean war has already made a noticeable impact on our country.

4. We haven't won any prizes in the broad ideological war and in the military conflict in Korea.

5. Our government has not provided the type of mobilization or mobilization planning which a large portion of the population thinks is needed.

Members of the CIO Executive Board last week had these things in mind when they issued a comprehensive Policy Statement (see Pages 6 and 7) regarding many phases of the current situation.

The statement says, first, that everything possible must be done to expand production to meet military and civilian needs.

Military needs come first, Board members agreed, but at the same time we must do our utmost to establish a strong, healthy economy.

And there must be equality of sacrifice, they said.

IMPORTANT DOCUMENT

CIO officials regard the Policy Statement as one of the most important documents ever prepared by a labor organization. That's because it spells out a complete program and attempts to chart a sane course not only for labor but for the entire country in a crisis situation.

No attempt will be made here to summarize the specific recommendations contained in the statement. But we suggest that all CIO members study it carefully.

The CIO program obviously will be attacked by those who have been preaching "business as usual," by those who have already started profiteering from the Korean war and by those who think we can defeat communism without putting our hearts and our energies into the effort.

But we think our program is a sound one. It is designed to meet the present situation and provide the machinery necessary to handle a much more serious one.

And it wouldn't put our country into the type of strait jacket some of the proponents of total mobilization have proposed.

But it doesn't quibble when it says that necessary controls should be established.

And it doesn't quibble about the need for each segment of the population carrying its share of the burden.

We say again we think it's a good program that should be studied carefully and upon which action should be taken promptly by our government.

Aide Says AT&T 'Services' Bell Bargaining

OFFICIALS of various Bell System telephone companies paraded before a Senate subcommittee August 28 to 30, stating their opposition to industry-wide bargaining in the phone industry.

Last of the lot was W. C. Bolenius, vice-president of American Telephone & Telegraph Co. Bolenius told the Senators that AT&T does not dictate labor policy to its affiliated Bell companies. He further contended that bargaining should be kept strictly on a local basis, because each of the many phone contracts is different, and besides, he and his staff of six couldn't possibly handle bargaining for the entire country.

Pres. Joseph P. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers had told the committee, at previous sessions, that local bargaining is impossible because officials at the bargaining table don't have the final say, and keep running to the phone to call AT&T in New York for their orders.

BOLENIUS did not deny that the associated companies consult with him on labor matters. It is part of the service offered by the parent company, he said. Officials of the local companies are free to make their own final decisions, he told the Senators.

On one thing, the testimony of the phone companies checked with that of the union: Collective bargaining in the phone industry at the present time is a complex and unwieldy thing. Each contract is different, Bolenius said. Each has special clauses and adheres to wage scales and practices common in the area.

He sees this as a reason for having bargaining handled by men familiar with the situation in their own area. The union sees it as adding to the general confusion. A uniform contract, Beirne had argued, would lend stability to the industry.

BOLENIUS cited an organizing pamphlet published last February by CWA to refute union charges that labor conditions in the industry are poor. The pamphlet listed gains won by the union between 1940 and 1950. It shows, Bolenius declared, that there are "good wages and working conditions" in the industry today.

Any trouble there is in the industry, the company official maintained, has been stirred up by Beirne. According to the union, he said, this year's negotiations were marked by stalling tactics on the part of the company, and the union postponed a strike only because of requests from the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

Bolenius asserted that the actual stalling was done by the union, which didn't want some divisions to face a collective bargaining fight in an isolated position. He charged Beirne with irresponsibility, because the union head requested all CIO members to overwork phone equipment in the event of a strike and a scab-operated service.

When the hearings wound up August 30, the committee could have no doubt that there is trouble in the phone industry's labor relations. The big disagreement would be on whose fault it is—the company's or the union's.

Senator James Murray (D., Mont.) chairman of the Senate subcommittee on labor-management relations, called the hearings to collect evidence on the way labor relations are working under the Taft-Hartley Law. The group hopes to make recommendations for future legislation.

LPA

Class Tells, Survey Shows

A comparative study of the reading habits of union and employer representatives is reported in an article recently published in Personnel, organ of the American Management Association.

The study covers 227 manpower managers in industry and government, and 90 union leaders representing all sections of the country.

Labor publications most widely read by the union group, according to the study, are the CIO News and the American Federationist. Out of the 90 interviewed, 54 read the CIO News, official weekly of the National CIO, 42 read the CIO's Economic Outlook. The most widely read AFL publications in the list are the American Federationist, 59, and Labor's Monthly Survey, 47.

Among the 227 employer representatives, 61 read the CIO News, 48 the Economic Outlook, 26 the American Federationist and 44 Labor's Monthly Survey.

Most widely read publication of both groups was Business Week, reported read by 59 in the union group and by 163 employer representatives.

The article summarizes the findings of a study by the Industrial Relations Center of the Univ. of Minnesota.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher
Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII September 4, 1950 No. 36

It Was A Bit Like Fighting Fire With Fire

THE COMPANY, frankly, didn't intend to have a union among its employes if there was any way to prevent it.

This became clear soon after the CIO organizer arrived on the scene—and it became even clearer as time passed.

Many of the old union-busting tactics were hauled out and management hired a professional union-buster to handle its campaign.

The company's program was old stuff to the organizer but his method of combatting it turned out to be something new.

THE ORGANIZER, after studying the situation carefully, reached the conclusion that:

1. He was going to establish a union at the plant, or,

2. He was going to have a "fool-proof" unfair labor practices case to present to the National Labor Relations Board, or,

3. He was going to do both.

There was real need for a union because about one-fourth of some 400 employes at the plant were paid less than 75c an hour. The others earned from 75c to 90c.

Furthermore, he told himself at first, the job shouldn't be too difficult because the plant was in a highly industrialized section where there were a number of CIO unions.

But the job was difficult.

THE COMPANY went into action not long after the organizer began talking to workers about joining the CIO.

The professional union-buster arrived on the scene, got the lay of the land and launched his program.

He made an attempt to exploit racial prejudice. He used the the usual smear tactics.

Then the company began its "big push." Representatives started visiting the homes of the workers.

"You folks don't need a union," they'd say. "Unions only mean trouble."

One by one, the workers were given a pro-management, anti-union "lecture."

In some cases the company representatives would say, "Well, now unions generally may be OK, but you don't want a CIO union at our plant. All the CIO does is call strikes."

The union organizer soon learned what was going on—and soon he was doing something about it.

HIS FIRST STEP was to obtain a tape recorder and the second step was to put it to work where he thought it would do the most good.

He visited the home of a worker, secreted himself in a back room with his little machine beside him.

Before long a foreman arrived and started giving the worker the anti-union "pitch."

"You folks don't need a union," he said. "Unions only cause trouble."

On and on he went—and all the while his conversation was being recorded.

The organizer did the same thing at another home—and then another. He made nine recordings in all.

YOU CAN'T KEEP an operation of that type secret for any length of time and —after a while—the organizer let the union sympathizers pass the word along.

The result was unexpected.

For the first time since the plant opened 16 years earlier somebody was matching wits with management. The company had been outsmarted and the workers liked it.

And they indicated later by a vote of nearly two to one that they wanted to be represented by a CIO union capable of staging such a stunt.

A. L. S.

UNLOADING OPERATION!

Will The Younger Generation PLEASE Take Note?

The following editorial appeared in a recent issue of the Guildsman, official publication of the Washington Newspaper Guild. While it describes accurately the attitude of some new members of Local 35 ANG, it may be that the term "born lazy" fits other CIO unionists throughout the country.

THERE IS a new generation of Guildsmen.

It is a sturdy, growing youngster. It makes up the biggest part of the Washington Newspaper Guild. It was born to better working conditions. The split-shift "formula" was passe. There was more money and its standard of living higher.

Now this generation has a respect for its parents—the men and women who fought hard (the firings on the labor-management battlefield were frequent) to improve the environment. It can and does talk knowingly about the "old-timer" with his trials and tribulations of no money, no sleep, no security. But this child knows not of what it speaks.

For the same reason men say women vote in a particular way (like daddy did) this new generation readily joined the organization begun by its sires—the WNG.

And do you know what happened then? It sat down and it's still sitting. It lacks enthusiasm and energy. This is one baby that doesn't bounce—it is too cussed lazy.

Certainly, the "old-timers" are far from dead and far from letting the Guild go to pot. Their patience with today's lethargic, passive children has been remarkable. The spankings have been entirely too few.

They patiently do all the work. And ironically, with no assistance from less-tired shoulders, the situation parallels their former round-the-clock newspaper jobs.

DOES THE new generation even know what goes on in the WNG? Does it know how dues are used? More likely it tucks the square white membership card—denoting good standing—in a billfold along with credit cards and forgets it.

Occasionally the new generation turns cry baby. It didn't like a new rule. Of course, it had something else to do on the night the general membership meeting (those big affairs that draw a crowd of 25) was called. Oh, yes, it voted for the measure later.

Well, at least, it was led from its desk to a ballot box and it marked an × on a piece of paper.

Taking a further look at its ignorance: It doesn't know its own unit officers, the clauses in its own contract or the status of negotiations.

TRUE, THIS new generation cannot kill the Guild. It won't take away the present gains. It won't add any either. But it can act as an anchor. Just let it continue to drag its feet and God help the next generation. Unfortunately, "old-timers" don't live forever. And it looks mighty like the young Guildsman of the present will prove a Peter Pan. He wouldn't know how to gee and haw should the reins be dropped for him to pick up.

A Guild member doesn't have to emulate the inspired Mr. Broun. That would be wonderful, but too much to expect. A little action, a little participation (not too much, at first, because, at this point, there's no muscle) would get the ball rolling—toward a stronger, truer organization.

The first test can be a vote in the national referendum. For a change, discard the ring in your nose—study the issue, think—the "old-timers" who support it aren't afraid your conclusions will differ from theirs.

If they've put up with your indifference this long, there must be reason. And the reason is—you mean well—you just were born lazy.

Health Program Is Favored By Negro Doctors' Head

"American medicine has failed the American people in several instances," declared Dr. G. Herbert Marshall, president of the National Medical Association, at that group's convention last week at Hampton, Va. The association's members are Negro physicians.

Dr. Marshall cited the "astounding" number of men rejected for military service during World War II because they were psychopatic. He said he is "unalterably opposed" to socialized medicine. Unlike spokesmen for the AMA however, Dr. Marshall distinguishes between socialized medicine and compulsory health insurance.

The latter, he says, is necessary "if we are to reach the highest possible index of health in this country.

CIO 'Offers Program As A Means Of H

A CALL TO mobilize the nation to meet the recurrent international crisis—as typified by the Korean War—was issued by the CIO Executive Board Aug. 29.

The steps to be taken are embodied in a Policy Statement which tells what should be done "to increase our productive capacity even further so that our military defense will be fully supplied and our civilian population provided with all its essential needs."

The statement calls for an expansion "of total production of the country for military and civilian purposes, curtailing price increasing and profiteering through an excess profits tax, elimination of the loopholes in income taxes, and for price and credit controls.

At the same time, the document urges speedy redress through collective bargaining of the wage inequities which have resulted from the failure of labor to share fairly in the "fantastic profits" of big business, and from price rises following the Korean crisis.

Other sections deal with expansion of capacity, channeling scarce materials, manpower, housing, stockpiling, and organization for mobilization of the economy.

The text of the statement follows:

THE PRESENT national emergency demands the complete and unhesitating cooperation of every individual in America. In this crisis, organized labor is deeply conscious of its responsibilities and its opportunities to serve our common cause.

The full utilization of labor's skills, intelligence and experience will contribute much to the success of the mobilization effort. To millions of people all over the world the lies of Communist propaganda will be more clearly revealed by the fact of a leading role for American trade unions in the world-wide struggle for Democracy.

The strength of our country lies in its great productive power. Labor has constantly championed the need for continual expansion of this production power. For many years, we have fought against the short-sighted policies of many big business groups which have preached the inevitability of depression and have sought to contract rather than expand our industrial capacity.

We have new problems today, entirely different from those our country faced in 1939, when we had a reservoir of unused resources. But we do have greater experience, better skills and programs, new technical advances and improvements. We can produce more than ever before. Our task is to increase our productive capacity even further so that our military defense will be fully supplied and our civilian population provided with all its essential needs. That expansion will leave us more adequately prepared for whatever demands the future course of international affairs may bring. At the same time, it will help to combat more effectively the damaging pressures of inflation at home.

Basic Goals

1. Total Production. We must do everything in our power to expand the total production of the country for military and civilian purposes. This will lay the groundwork for the largest possible military program in case all-out mobilization is required.

2. Military Needs First. Within the framework of the largest possible total production, security needs must come first. The fundamental goal is to satisfy our military requirements and those of our allies as speedily, fully and efficiently as possible. To date, evidence of a sense of urgency is lacking. We must not suffer again from "too little, too late."

3. Equality of Sacrifice. A major defense effort inevitably entails sacrifice. The sacrifice of those who enter the armed forces and risk their lives for their country must be paralleled by the highest degree of sacrifice of those who stay at home. Labor calls upon the Government to assure the same degree of sacrifice from all groups.

4. The Civilian Economy. We must keep our economy strong and healthy. High morale and productivity among workers, farmers and management necessitates maintenance of essential services and production of essential goods. Where civilian production must be curtailed, non-essential activities must be cut first.

The Military Needs

At the moment our military effort appears to call for partial mobilization. It is not all-out mobilization for total war, which would entail military outlays of perhaps $125 billion per year at present prices. The $30 or $40 billion expenditures per year which may be involved in partial mobilization call for different controls and techniques than does total mobilization.

But our military services must set forth their requirements promptly. Otherwise their needs will not be fulfilled in the quickest possible time and with the minimum impact on the whole economy. We must know whether the military requires 2½ million or 3 million or 4 million men in uniform. We must know the types and quantities of materiel and supplies needed. Alternative schedules of requirements in the event of all-out mobilization must also be ready. The military program must clearly define the timing of their requirements quarter by quarter. Ambitious but achievable goals are needed if we are to do the job on the home front. It would be far better to be prepared with too much than with too little.

The entire nation must roll up its sleeves in this

Economic Measures

1 Fighting Inflation. Price increases and profiteering in recent weeks have been entirely unjustified and have already harmed the mobilization effort. Profits have soared at the expense of workers and consumers. Labor insists that the Government go all-out to eliminate the forces of inflation. Every day of delay makes the task harder. The Government must achieve price stability at pre-Korean levels—now.

The tax increases now under Congressional consideration are puny weapons against the present wave of inflation.

2 Excess Profits Tax. Corporate profits after taxes at the present time are accumulating at the excessive rate of almost $25 billion per year. The Government should enact an adequate excess profits tax which would prevent profiteering, help pay our increased defense costs and avoid increases in the national debt. We cannot wait for 1951. A real excess profits tax must be enacted now.

3 Individual Income Taxes. In reestablishing the 1945 individual income tax rates, increases should be made in brackets above the first $2000 of taxable income. Loopholes which enable the upper income groups to escape their fair share of taxation, including the provisions for split returns, should be plugged.

4 Price Controls. Selective price controls on basic commodities are necessary and should be established now at the pre-Korean level. Rent control must not be permitted to lapse and should be reinstituted generally. To administer this price control program a new agency should be established, and it can serve as a nucleus for additional price control steps which may be necessary. The President should have flexible powers to impose such additional price controls as may be required.

Rising food prices have already bitten deeply into the pay envelopes of all Americans. Prompt action must be taken to halt this trend. As part of the program to halt rising food costs, the Administration should be given broader discretion to release for sale substantial quantities of the Government's huge holdings of surplus foods.

5 Credit Controls. Bank credit must not be available to business to accumulate excessive inventories, waste critical materials in non-essential production, or for commodity speculation. Curtailment of consumer credit should cut down demand for goods which use critical materials. Care must be taken to see that under this program low-income groups are not deprived of the opportunity of purchasing an equitable share of essential consumer durable goods. Housing, particularly for low income groups, is still in short supply, and therefore credit restric

The burden in this crisis must be born equally by all of us.

U. S. And UN Ar Hope To Democ

The CIO Executive Board in its the United States and the United Natio by offering "to every continent the tang The statement said in part:

1. The CIO pledges its full support and Nations forces fighting so heroically in Ko and other nations who are in front lines o

The CIO condemns the despicable tactic to the United Nations Security Council, in t peace-loving forces of the world . . .

2. The CIO deplores, as dangerous to d economic aid to the totalitarian dictatorsh

The proposed $62,500,000 loan to Franco of the democratic forces in Europe and Asia totalitarian people of Europe against the d

3. The CIO urges immediate considerati tion of bold new policies to encourage impr countries receiving aid through the Europe

4. We reiterate our strong support of Pr has as its goal the acceleration of progress f and social levels made attainable by mod niques . . .

5. The CIO reffirms its full support of th Unions. The ICFTU, composed of free tra is in a strategic position to give aid and as tions of workers in every country—particu Africa and South America . . .

6. We reiterate our support of the prin strengthening the peace of Europe by out controls over the heavy industries of the C

7. The CIO calls for immediate steps in the Department of State, and for close American foreign policy and the leaders of elping To Halt Totalitarian Aggression'

gency.

ns in the construction field should be plied in the first instance to high cost d luxury housing and other construction, nd to a much lesser degree to low cost sential housing.

Wages. Labor enters the mobilization period at a decided disadvantage. Even fore the Korean crisis labor had not ared fairly in the fantastic profits made big business since 1946. Since the Korean isis, labor has lost further in purchasing wer, due to unwarranted and greedy ice profiteering. Labor seeks to redress these inequities through collective bargaining. There is ample room for wage adjustments without disturbing existing price levels.

Expansion Of Capacity

1 Increasing Production. In many industries, management will oppose any substantial expansion of capacity. This was our experience in World War II. Capacity in bottleneck areas should be expanded immediately so that mobilization will not be hampered by shortages. The Government must lay down a program of expansion which, if not carried out privately, will be carried out by the Government. Time is of the essence in this program.

2 Financial Aspects. Government should go all out in encouraging expansion of essential facilities by private firms. Liberal loan policies should be provided. Direct construction by Government must be undertaken when private firms fail to do the job.

3 Monopoly. In offering incentives or in leasing Government-owned plants for private operation, the Administration must preserve and foster competition and avoid strengthening monopolies.

4 Security Considerations. In expanding facilities, the widest possible geographic dispersion of industry in accordance with security principles must be achieved.

Channeling Scarce Materials

1 Relating Demand to Supply. Priorities and allocations must be used where necessary to ensure that scarce materials and components flow promptly to the producers of critical products who need them. But our experience in World War II taught us that the indiscriminate issue of priorities in a rapidly developing armament program must inevitably result in chaos. Priorities and allocations must be supplemented by curtailing the production of non-essential and less essential items, and by limiting the use of critical materials. Only by bringing total demand for scarce materials into reasonable balance with supply can the smooth flow of critical materials to military and essential civilian production be assured.

2 Hoarding. Accumulation of unnecessary inventories adds to inflation, curtails production, and disrupts the orderly flow of scarce materials. Direct controls should be introduced immediately to prevent excessive building up of inventories.

3 Small Business. Small business must be assured its fair share of scarce materials and participation in the military production program. Concentration of orders among large producers is a serious aid to monopoly.

4 Administration of Controls. Although the agencies which channel scarce materials should include experienced men from the industries concerned who are thoroughly familiar with their production and use, the basic policy and administrative decisions with respect to these materials should be made by unbiased men.

Manpower

1 Strengthening the Labor Force. Our skilled labor force is our single greatest asset in this period. Steps should be taken to strengthen and enlarge our manpower resources. In the period that lies ahead, whether it be full or partial mobilization, not only will this add to our military-economic might, but it will also relieve some of the pressures on the civilian economy.

Our labor force can be expanded by the equivalent of several million persons through longer hours of work in those industries where this is needed, the re-entry into the labor market of the unemployed, retired individuals, the partially handicapped, and housewives with limited family responsibilities.

Where necessary, travel allowances must be provided to enable workers and their families to move to essential defense jobs as they open. Those workers who are caught in an unemployment squeeze because of the impact of the defense program should be eligible for special supplementary unemployment compensation benefits.

The experience of the last war clearly demonstrated the need for federalizing the employment service to make the best possible use of our manpower resources. Getting the right worker into the right job is clearly a task that cuts across state lines and demands coordinated national action.

World War II experience further demonstrates that significant values in terms of individual cooperation, morale and working efficiency can be attained through voluntary manpower measures.

2 Productivity. American labor realizes that production is what counts in meeting security requirements and in providing decent standards of living. Labor is willing to make its contribution to increase productivity through the establishment of labor-management committees and other appropriate means.

3 Discrimination. Discrimination in job placement on the basis of race, color or creed must be eliminated if the maximum production effort is to be achieved and if we are to convince the people of the world whose support we require that we practice what we preach.

4 Union Security. Labor will resist any and every effort by employers to use the war emergency as a means for destroying labor organizations or preventing their growth and expansion. Through democratic and constructive unionism, the morale and the productivity of workers can be brought to ever higher levels.

5 Manpower Shortages. Our unions will undertake to help provide workers of given skills where and when needed, as the Government may require.

Housing

Low cost and public housing should be given priority over other users of construction materials, such as luxury housing or non-essential commercial structures. There must be provision for adequate housing for defense workers wherever new plants are located. Effective rent control legislation must be enacted immediately.

Stockpiling

The stockpiling program has lagged far behind its objectives. The country finds itself seriously short of materials which should have been accumulated in much greater degree since the end of World War II. We must vigorously step up the stockpiling program, even at higher cost, to ensure our security. We should undertake immediately to facilitate the expansion of our own production and production in those other countries which can enlarge our stockpile of critical materials even if this means an investment in facilities and in providing technical assistance to increase capacity. Expansion of procurement from major raw material countries is consistent with our Point IV objectives.

Organization

1 Coordination and Central Direction. The last war proved the absolute necessity of a top coordinating agency to direct the overall mobilization program and to harmonize production, price and other policies and controls. Responsibility for this function should be fixed now, at the highest level and with outstanding leadership.

2 Organization for Production. One new central organization should be made responsible for production and its attendant policies and controls. To divide this responsibility among existing Government agencies, even where coordination is provided for and ultimate responsibility is fixed, is to risk chaos and failure, even in partial mobilization.

3 Organization for Procurement. An immediate decision should be made whether procurement should be in military or civilian hands. If it is decided that procurement should remain in military hands, then experienced personnel should immediately be placed in civilian status in the armed forces. Coordination and integration of procurement within the armed forces under the unification program should be tightened. Procurement must be closely coordinated with the central production organization.

4 Personnel. The Government should draw upon the best available personnel from the ranks of both labor and management in the mobilization effort. We must not, however, repeat our experience of World War II with dollar-a-year men. An executive who continues to draw a large company salary while working for the Government at nominal pay cannot escape divided loyalties. Those "drafted" by the Government should be on the Government payroll exclusively.

* * *

Our form and concept of democracy is being challenged in many parts of the world. We in CIO are confident that the challenge will be well met by the American people. On behalf of millions of workers, we offer this program as a means of helping to halt totalitarian aggression and strengthen the forces of democracy at home and abroad.

Murray Calls Plan Unprecedented

CIO leaders consider the statement printed on this page as one of the most important ever issued by a branch of the labor movement.

"Unprecedented in this country or any other," said Pres. Philip Murray of the program proposed in the statement.

"I know of no other group which has made an honest, sincere effort like we have to chart the course our country should follow in the present emergency."

The National Security Resources Board will be asked at its next meeting to give careful consideration to the CIO mobilization program.

Urged To Bring acy Everywhere

oreign Policy statement called on to strengthen democratic institutions hope of bread, peace and freedom."

eration to our country and to the United and to the soldiers of the United States tle against Communist aggression.

f Jacob Malik, the Soviet Union delegate clumsy effort to disrupt the unity of the ratic unity and ideals, the granting of Franco Spain and Peron Argentina.

eatens to weaken the precarious position d to hinder the mobilization of the anti-achments of Communism . . .

y the Economic Cooperation Administra-d distribution of national income in the Recovery Program . . .

ent Truman's Point Four Program, which feudal conditions to the higher economic cience and up-to-date productive tech-

nternational Confederation of Free Trade nions from every section of the world, tance to the economic and social aspira-y in the under-developed areas of Asia, les of the Schuman Plan as a means of ng a program for sensible international ent . . .

ovide adequate representation for labor nsultation between the men who shape nized labor in the United States.

We're at war, so the military needs of our armed forces must come first.

HST Signs Social Security, Asks Knowland Rider Repeal

PRESIDENT Truman signed the Social Security Bill on Aug. 28, giving Federal old age benefits to another 10 million Americans and increasing the benefits payable to those already covered.

The new, higher benefit payments will go into effect with checks due in October. The Federal Security Administration is advising the recipients by mail that they need take no action to receive them, as the increases will come "automatically."

In signing the bill the President praised it as an "outstanding achievement," which did not go as far as he had wished it would, and urged Congress to match its improvements "by steps to strengthen our unemployment insurance system."

"THERE IS one unfortunate feature in this law," he concluded. "This is the so-called 'Knowland Amendment,' tacked on as a rider in the Senate. It may result in undermining the safeguards enacted by the Congress to protect workers against loss of unemployment insurance benefits if they refuse to accept employment at substandard wages or working conditions.

"This amendment has nothing whatever to do with old age insurance or public assistance, the main subjects of the new law. While the other provisions of the bill were the product of thorough consideration in the committees of both houses, neither committee ever had an opportunity to hold hearings on the Knowland Amendment. I trust the Congress will reconsider this ill-advised provision and will act promptly to remove it from the Social Security laws."

The Knowland amendment was sired by Sen. Knowland (R., Calif.) and was strongly opposed by the CIO.

"Big boss' idea. Says it makes for good industrial relations."

Wood Union Wins 5c In Northwest

THOUSANDS of members of the CIO Woodworkers, employed in lumber camps and sawmills in the Pacific Northwest got a wage increase of 5c an hour effective Sept. 1, Pres. J. E. Fadling announced at the conclusion of negotiations last week.

The compact covers the union's Northern and Southern Districts. The pay boost sets the second pattern this year in the Pacific Northwest, Fadling said. It was agreed to by three employer associations and two large individual employers.

Fadling said the new rate raises the basic minimum wage in the industry to $1.50 an hour "exclusive of the 7½c per hour that is paid by the employers for our health and welfare program, and exclusive of the paid holidays we won this spring." The average logging wage is now $2.10 an hour, he said, and the average sawmill rate about $1.75, for an over-all average of about $1.87.

DURING negotiations, which were held in Seattle, Wash., union spokesmen told the employers they intended to see that the workers share in the rising productivity of the men on the job—not only to keep abreast of increasing living costs, but also to better their standard of living.

They pointed out that whereas 6.73 man-hours were required to produce 1000 feet of logs in 1946, only 5.86 man-hours were needed last year, and the figure was reduced to as low as five man-hours in May and June of this year. In the sawmills, productivity has likewise increased so that 1000 board feet of timber may now be turned out in slightly less than eight man-hours.

The 5c wage boost brings benefits IWA members have secured in 1950 to approximately 15½c an hour, including health and welfare payments and paid holidays.

Pension Plan Covers 2000

THE CIO Rubber Workers have reached an agreement with the Mansfield (O.) Tire and Rubber Co. for a company-financed pension system which provides for pensions ranging upward from $100 monthly, inclusive of Social Security payments. The pact will cover more than 2000 workers, URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said.

To be eligible for a regular pension, a worker must have had 15 years experience with the company.

Another provision is a modified disability clause which will pay a worker who is physically unable to continue work a minimum of $50 monthly provided he has 15 years' service.

The joint contributory insurance program includes a $3000 life insurance policy, a $3000 accidental death clause and sickness and accident benefits of $30 weekly for 26 weeks. Hospitalization is provided at the rate of $8 daily for 70 days, plus $80 for miscellaneous hospital expenses and up to $200 in surgical benefits.

Truman Asks Approval Of Genocide Ban

AN APPEAL for speedy ratification of the United Nations Genocide Convention was sent to the Senate last week by President Truman.

In a letter to Sen. Connally (D. Tex.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, he expressed the hope that the measure would be reported out favorably within the next few days and that the full Senate will then approve it. Only Senate action is necessary.

Such action would permit the United States to bring its position before the UN General Assembly meeting this month at Lake Success, N. Y.

The Genocide Convention would outlaw the extermination of any national, ethnical, racial or religious groups. It is strongly favored by the CIO.

The President told Connally in the letter that he considered favorable action on the convention as "essential to the effective maintenance of our leadership of the free and civilized nations of the world in the present struggle against the forces of aggression and barbarism." He did not name any nation to which either his statement or the convention applies.

He also forwarded to Connally a copy of a letter from Korean Ambassador John Myun Chang to Ambassador Warren Austin, U. S. representative at the UN, calling attention to the "imminent danger" of the Communist invasion to 700,000 Christian Koreans in territory now held by the Reds. Chang predicted that the North Koreans "certainly will try" to exterminate "the entire Korean nation."

Continued Support Pledged By CIO To Handicapped

HARRY READ, executive assistant to CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, told the fifth biennial convention of the American Federation of Physical Handicapped in Washington, D. C. last week that the CIO has "a deep interest" in AFPH activities and pledged continued support of the organization's program.

He said the CIO is seeking ways and means to sharply curtail the 90,000 partially disabling accidents which occur each year on the job.

OTHER CIO personnel speaking to the convention, or participating in panel discussions included: Steelworkers Safety Dir. Frank Burke, and Frank Fernbach representing CIO Pres. Philip Murray on the AFPH executive board. A message was read from Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey, of the CIO Auto Workers, who is also is an executive board member.

AFPH Pres. Paul A. Strachan warned the group to be alert to the danger of Communists and others who may try to "worm their way" into the organization.

He said a constitutional amendment was to be submitted to the convention to prevent anyone not taking the oath of allegiance to the U. S. from becoming a member of the group.

Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.) urged the adoption of a three-point program which would improve the lot of the 6 million physically handicapped in the country.

He said the nation must take full advantage of the contributions the handicapped can make to the "mighty" production battle, prevent further increases in the number of physically handicapped, and restrain and rehabilitate those who already are and who in the future may be handicapped.

The convention went on record as vigorously opposing the Douglas bill, which would transfer the President's Committee on National Employ the Handicapped Week Oct. 1-7 from the Labor Dept. to the Federal Security Agency.

F.D.R. Jr., N. Y. State CIO Top Candidate

Rep. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., is the New York State CIO's top candidate for governor.

Other candidates, in the following order are Oscar R. Ewing, Federal Security Administrator; W. Averill Harriman, special assistant to President Truman on foreign affairs; Robert F. Wagner, Jr., president of the borough of Manhattan.

Dispute Settled

More than 1000 CIO Textile Workers are back at work in four plants of the Utica, N. Y., Knitting Co. after striking less than a week. They returned after an arbitration ruling dispute was settled.

A GROUP of French trade unionists attending the CIO's summer school held recently at Pottstown, Pa., had a chance to compare notes on the labor movements of France and the U. S. with a number of members of various CIO unions who were students at the school. Some of the Frenchmen are shown here listening with earphones to a translation of the remarks of a teacher. CIO Associate Dir. of Education George Guernsey directed the school, one of several held in different parts of the country during the summer.

PAUL REVERE (1950 style) rides through the streets of Cincinnati, O. The Greater Cincinnati CIO Council made arrangements for Paul Revere's 1950 ride. Through the use of this reminder and other tactics, the Cincinnati CIO is pushing registration to a new high, with 436 CIO members registering on one day. The drive continues until enrollment ends.

Pressman Foils GOP Effort To Show CIO And CP Policies Were Identical

By GERVASE N. LOVE

LEE PRESSMAN, former gereral council for the CIO and the Steelworkers, was a member of the Communist Party for about one year, from 1934 to 1935, while he held top legal posts in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, he testified Aug. 28 before the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

He left the party "organizationally," he told the committee, when he resigned his AAA job and entered private law practice in New York. His complete "ideological" break, however, did not come until recent weeks, and followed a re-examination of his position that had extended over many months.

It was crystallized, he said, by the Communist invasion of Korea, and reached its climax on Aug. 10, when he publicly withdrew from the Ameriacn Labor Party—the New York State branch of the Progressive Party—and charged it with condoning and supporting the Communist aggression in Korea.

PRESSMAN SPENT a full day testifying before the committee in a jammed, steaming-hot hearing room made even more uncomfortable by the heat of movie lights.

Committee Counsel Frank Tavenner and Rep. Nixon (R. Calif.) did the bulk of the questioning. Many of their queries were directed toward the Communist infiuence in the CIO while Pressman was general counsel.

He said he was first hired by John L. Lewis, then CIO top man, in June, 1936, as attorney for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, forerunner of United Steelworkers. In 1938, he went on, Lewis made him CIO counsel.

He never told Lewis, CIO Pres. Philip Murray "or anyone else connected with the CIO" that he had been a member of the Communist Party, he said, nor did any CIO official ever ask him about such membership. Asked about his relations with the party during the time he spent in his CIO post, Pressman replied:

"I had contacts and dealings with known leaders of the Communist Party. They discussed with me their views with respect to the policies and activities of the CIO. When I considered them helpful and in accord with CIO principles. I accepted them.

"I want to state as categorically as I can that at no time did I take instructions or dictation from anyone in the Communist Party in regard to the CIO. I took orders only from the officers of the CIO."

LEE PRESSMAN

Pressman, former general counsel for the CIO and the Steelworkers, was questioned closely by Rep. Nixon (R. Cal.) at a hearing before the House Un-American activities Committee. When Nixon asked whether the CIO and the Communist Party did not both advocate neutrality in 1940, Pressman said that was true but added "the leaders of the Republican party were taking substantially the same view."

NIXON, A reactionary Republican enemy of labor who is campaigning against the liberal Rep. Douglas (D.) for the U. S. Senate, attempted to show that CIO and CP policies were the same during Pressman's term of office.

Pressman recounted a resolution passed unanimously at the 1940 CIO convention, at which he was chairman of the Resolutions Committee, condemning communism, naziism and fascism, explaining later that while he personally did not agree with the lumping together of the three ideologies, he voted with both the convention and a majority of the Resolutions Committee. Nixon asked if the CIO, like the CP, did not advocate neutrality and no foreign entanglements in 1940. He said that was true and added:

"Without being in any way coy about the matter, I would like to point out that at the same time the leaders of the Republican Party were taking substantially the same view."

Pressman also reminded Nixon that in 1941, when the Communists were violently opposing lend-lease before the German-Russian break, he prepared a public statement by Pres. Murray supporting lend lease with which he personally agreed.

LATER IN THE day Pressman was asked specifically with what Communist leaders he had conferred regarding CIO. He named Roy Hudson and Eugene Dennis, saying they "stand out" among those with whom he talked. He also was asked if Harry Bridges, president of the Longsshoremen's Union, which was expelled from the CIO as Communist-dominated by the CIO Executive Board at its meeting last week, is a Communist.

"I have absolutely no information on that at all," he answered.

He added that he had never attended a CP meeting in Bridges' home, as previous testimony before the committee had recounted.

Nixon asked him if Len DeCaux, former editor of the CIO NEWS and CIO publicity director, was a member of the CP.

"I haven't the least idea," Pressman replied.

Under protest, Pressman identified Nathan Witt, John Abt and Charles Kramer as members of his Communist group while he was in the party. All were AAA lawyers at the time.

Witt later became secretary of the National Labor Relations Board, and since 1941 has been practicing law in New York. Pressman was one of his law partners from the time he left the CIO early in 1948 until November, 1949.

ABT AFTER leaving the AAA worked for the Works Progress Administration, became chief counsel for the LaFollette Civil Liberties Investigating Committee, a special assistant to the Attorney General, general counsel for the CIO Clothing Workers and with Pressman co-counsel for the Political Action Committee. He left the ACW and CIO-PAC posts in 1948 at the same time Pressman resigned from his CIO offices and for the same reason—inability to support President Truman for re-election in view of the Progressive Party candidacy of Henry Wallace.

Kramer after leaving the AAA became counsel to several Senate committees which studied various phases of labor.

Pressman said he know nothing about CP membership of Alger Hiss, Donald Hiss, Whittaker Chambers, Harry Collins, Victor Perle or George Silverman, all named as party members in earlier testimony.

Taft Forces May Go To Court To Keep 1000s From Polls

TAFT FORCES may go to court to deprive thousands of Ohioans of their voting privilege.

That fact was revealed by Taft's top campaign manager to the New York Times, whose political reporter, Leo Egan, has just written a series on the coming senatorial election.

According to the Times, this action will be aimed primarily at Negroes.

Egan reports that "Taft supporters are incensed by a recent ruling of the State Attorney General (Herbert S. Duffy) that held that illiterate voters are entitled to assistance in marking their ballots."

Duffy had ruled that voters who cannot read English can receive the assistance from two voting officials, of opposite parties, or from relatives, in marking their ballot.

IT IS THIS ruling that may be challenged in the courts, Willis B. Gradison, Taft's top campaign manager, told the New York Times.

The Times story reported, "The outcome of the dispute is important to the Taft forces because of the large number of Negroes, many with little or no schooling, who moved into Ohio in quest of war work during the last 10 years."

"In general these (Negro voters) are regarded as opposing Senator Taft's reelection because of the Republican-Southern Democrat tie-up in the Senate on many issues and because of his opposition to a compulsory Federal Fair Employment Practices Act. Senator Taft favors an 'educational' FEPC rather than the compulsory one advocated by President Truman."

THE NEW YORK TIMES story concluded by pointing out that, "According to Taft managers, there are somewhat less than 200,000 Negroes in Ohio qualified to vote. Labor union officials put the figure higher. They think it may reach 300,000. In a close contest it could be a major factor."

That Taft should fear these votes did not surprise supporters of Joseph T. Ferguson, Democratic candidate for U. S. Senator. They have been working to make Taft's voting record and public utterances well known to minority voters.

Throughout the years, Taft has played politics with the Southern Dixiecrats, Ferguson supporters report, and they are pointing to Taft's statement on the Senate floor in opposition to a bill that would have given every child better schooling, regardless of race or color.

AT THAT time, Taft said, "It occurs to me that once the federal government goes into the question of white and colored schools, we shall never stop. We shall go on until we require every state to permit colored and white children to go to the same schools."

In contrast, Ferguson backers are pointing to their candidate's stand on civil rights. Ferguson said: "I stand firmly behind President Truman's civil rights program—for an enforceable FEPC; for the fullest educational opportunities—rgeardless of race and color; for wiping out discrimination as fast as we can. We must not tolerate second-class citizenship for any American."

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

Ben Gold Quits CP To Take T-H Oath

Ben Gold, president of the Fur & Leather Workers, has resigned from the Communist Party, in which he has been a leader for 30 years, so that he can file a Taft-Hartley Act non-Communist affidavit.

In a statement published in the Daily Worker on Aug. 28, he said his withdrawal did not mean renunciation of Communist Party principles. The union was expelled from the CIO at the Executive Board meeting in May, a few days after withdrawing in order to escape being kicked out.

The union convention instructed international officers to file the affidavits so it can utilize the services of the National Labor Relations Board.

Want To Know What You Get In Your Cheese? Read Label

NEW FEDERAL standards for production of cheese are designed to give greater protection to consumers.

The regulations, announced by Federal Security Administrator Oscar Ewing, require labelling of ingredients, a holding-period of 60 days for cheese not made from pasteurized milk, and covers cheese not regulated previously, including brick, limburger, munster, blue, gorgonzola, and roquefort.

Standards apply to imported as well as domestic cheese, and also processed cheese foods. The Food & Drug Administration urges consumers to read the label when buying cheese.

SAID EWING: "The new labels will inform the purchaser of the exact class of cheese or cheese product in the container. If consumers learn the basic differences in the various types, they can buy intelligently.

"Pasteurized process cheese contains at least 97% cheese—ground, melted, and packaged in convenient form.

"Pasteurized process cheese foods are similar to the process cheese but nonfat dried milk solid or dried whey or other non-cheese ingredients have been added."

LPA

Bill To Control Subversives Passes House, Perils Labor

A LONG campaign by the House Un-American Activities Committee met with success last week when the House passed, by 354-20, the Mundt-Nixon-Wood Bill to control subversive activities.

Opponents of the bill—which included the Truman Administration, CIO, AFL, and numerous church and civic groups—argued strongly that it would do more harm to civil liberties than it would accomplish in halting Communist activities.

But members of the House, obviously agitated by Communist aggression in Korea, were not in a mood to pay much attention to the dangers of the bill. As finally sponsored by Rep. Wood (D. Ga.), head of the Un-American Activities group, it included practically all the features of the old Mundt-Nixon bill, plus other new features.

The measure now goes to the Senate, where a similar bill sponsored by Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) is slated for early consideration.

Rep. Cellar (D. N.Y.), head of the House Judiciary Committee, tried to win passage of an improved substitute measure during the House debate. It was aimed at curbing espionage, sabotage and other overt subversive actions—while preserving traditional Americal civil rights.

The Celler bill had support from the administration, the CIO and other groups, but, on a standing vote, it was defeated 153-64.

REPS. CELLER AND Multer (D. N.Y.) did most of the effective talking against the Mundt-Nixon-Wood measure.

Celler read a telegram from CIO Pres. Murray sharply assailing the Mundt-Nixon-Wood Bill, which he said "is not effective anti-subversive legislation. Just the contrary . . .

"At the same time, it would set up a thought-control machine which would seriously damage the very democracy which we are fighting to preserve against communism," he continued.

Murray added that the bill "contains definite threats to the continued free functioning of bona fide labor organizations." He urged passage of Celler's substitute.

Celler, in a long discussion of the weaknesses of the Mundt-Nixon-Wood Bill, reminded Congress that there's more to Americanism than mere anti-Communism.

POINTING OUT that Hitler and Mussolini were confirmed anti-reds, Celler recalled that President Truman had said:

"The real test of a man's genuine Americanism is not merely that he is anti-Communist, but also that he is devoted to the ideals and traditions which have made this country great—our concepts of democracy, of individual rights, and of equal opportunity for all."

Celler made these points against the bill:

1. "It is inept, non-constructive, and unconstitutional."

2. "This bill is an abject surrender to the methods and techniques of Communism."

3. The "clever and resourceful" members of the Communist Party would go underground, where "you could not put a finger on them."

4. The bill "will punish men for their thoughts."

Multer said the bill was bad—among many other reasons—because it has no provision exempting labor unions from its provisions.

He cited a case of a New York union with Communist leadership to show that the bill will deprive the union's members, "hard working men and women, of their only means of earning a livelihood."

"This bill will label every one of them as subversive unless they resign. If they resign, they lose their jobs," Multer said.

SPEAKERS IN support of the bill—many of them with long records of voting "wrong" on labor and liberal issues—cited the Communist problem as justification.

The 20 Congressmen who voted right by opposing it included 17 Democrats; 2 Republicans; and one American Labor Party member. They were:

Democrats: Aspinall (Col.); Biemiller (Wis.); Blatnik (Minn.); Bosone (Utah); Carroll (Col.); Celler (N.Y.); Chudoff (Pa.); Dollinger (N.Y.); Douglas (Calif.); Eberharter (Pa.); Havenner (Calif.); Huber (O.); King (Calif.); Multer (N.Y.); O'Brien (Mich.); O'Hara (Ill.); and Shelley (Calif.). Republicans: Burdick (N.D.); Javits (N.Y.). ALP: Marcantonio (N.Y.).

The bill provides for appointment of a Subversive Activities Control Board, with wide powers; registration of Communist groups, and a wide variety of prohibitions and punishments. But many of the punishments could be brought down on innocent members of Communist-controlled organizations.

Rumely, Patterson, Kamp Cited By House

EDWARD A. Rumely, executive secretary of the Committee for Constitutional Government, was cited for contempt of Congress by the House on Aug. 30 after one of the most tempestuous afternoons in legislative history.

The citation squeezed through by a tally of 183 to 175. All but four Republican members balloted against it. So did 42 Democrats, most of them from the South, and Rep. Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.).

It was voted at the behest of the House Lobby Investigating Committee, of which Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.) is chairman, because Rumely four times refused to tell the committee who pays his outfit, which last year spent more than $600,000 on lobbying activities, for the books and pamphlets it distributes by the thousands in opposition to organized labor, the New Deal and the Fair Deal. It has been doing business at the same stand since 1936 and never seems to have run out of cash.

The House also voted, 238 to 106, to cite William L. Patterson, national executive secretary of the Civil Rights Congress, for refusing to tell the lobby probers the source of his organization's income. The congress has been listed as "subversive" by the Attorney General's office, and often has been called a Communist front organization. Strangely, the far right CCG and the leftist CRC both have offices at 205 E. 42d St. in New York City.

And the next day, Aug. 31, it cited Joseph P. Kamp, executive head of the Constitutional Educatoinal League, for contempt for the same reason by a 215-115 vote. Kamp at present is serving four months in jail for refusing to tell a 1944 House investigating committee where his league's money came from. This time he refused to give the lobby investigators his books on the ground that the league is not a lobby.

The CCG is registered as a lobbying group and in accordance with the Lobby Act has reported its gross income. However, only gifts of $500 or more have to be reported individually. Consequently CCG has accepted donations of no more than $490, which do not have to be reported. The bulk of its income comes from mass sales of books, etc., some of which it distributes for the purchaser, some of which the purchaser distributes himself. Rumely has refused to name these purchasers on the ground that CCG is in the "publishing" business, a stand branded "phoney."

THE HOUSE debate got under way, after reading of the committee's request for citation, with an observation by Rep. McCormack (Mass.), Democratic floor leader, that citations had been voted only a few days before for 56 alleged Communists or sympathizers who had refused to answer questions of the Un-American Activities Committee.

"The reason they were cited was because of contempt of a committee," he said. "They refused to answer questions. They thought they were bigger than the House and bigger than one of the committees of the House. That is the issue involved here.

"In the case of the Communists it was refusal. If we refuse, with this record, to cite this man and the others for contempt, why, then, the message will go out that only Communists are cited and others who have contempt for a committee where they have friends in the Congress need not fear being cited for contempt."

The Republicans immediately began to scream. Among those who sounded off were Rep. Halleck (Ind.), Rep. Brown (O.) and Rep. Martin, who was GOP Speaker of the House in the previous Congress.

"When I said Rumely had powerful friends down here," retorted McCormack, "I guess I hit the nail on the head."

He charged the Republicans with going to bat for "a spy and a Fascist," referring to Rumely's conviction during World War I on a charge of violating the Trading With the Enemy Act by buying a New York newspaper "to help the German government out." He was later pardoned.

Rep. Cox (D. Ga.) declared the "effort to cite these people is as phony as the alleged renunciation of communism by Lee Pressman made recently before another committee." He blared that the lobby committee has "a staff of pinkos," and that the citation is an "outrage."

The Republicans and those Democrats allied with them sought to clear Rumely and the CCG by proclaiming him and the organization as publishers, and making the issue what they called freedom of the press.

BUCHANAN, Rep. Lanham (D. Ga.), Rep. Albert (D. Okla.) and Rep. Rooney (D. N.Y.) carried the ball for the citation.

Buchanan, as committee chairman, specifically asked the House not to vote for citation of Patterson "on the ground that this man . . . happens to come from the left," but "on the basis of what the record speaks." Nevertheless, some congressmen made much of the Communist label pinned on Patterson.

The day before the Rumely and Patterson citations were acted upon, Rep. Patman (D. Tex.) delivered a long speech in the House in which he branded Rumely "a traitor to his nation," "an illegitimate defender of the Constitution" and "a plain fraud, an ex-convict, a poisoner of the American brain."

"He is a disseminator of the big lie," declared the Texan. "He would destroy America's freedom. He would make the rich richer, the poor poorer. He is the willing and paid agent of the most selfish and short-sighted wealthy individuals in America. He is a spreader of confusion and dissension among our people—but he is no publisher or educator."

At another point Patman said:

"In years past I warned you about this man and his sinister purpose. I told you who Ed Rumely was. He was an American Fascist, plain and unadulterated, when I first revealed his un-American activities in 1944. Ed Rumely is the same plain, unadulterated Fascist today, and his committee for a Fascist government in the United States, the Committee for Constitutional Government, is up to its old tricks of trying to fool all the people all the time on legislative matters of vital importance to the people of this nation."

Patman gave details of Rumely's history and activities, and those of other CCG leaders, in support of his position, and recounted sections of the Lobby Investigating Committee's record to urge support for the contempt citation that came the next day.

South Jersey CIO and AFL Unite Politically

REGISTRATION of unregistered voters is the main and joint aim of the CIO and AFL in the south New Jersey area.

At a recent meeting it was announced that local union membership lists will be checked against registration lists.

Both the South Jersey CIO Council and the AFL Central Labor Union, Camden, endorsed the following for representatives: John Crean, 1st district; Elmer Wene, 2nd district, and Charles Howell, 4th district.

At the meeting were Joseph McComb, president of the Central Labor Union; William Benke, president of the AFL Building Trades; Grant Harden, president of the AFL Teachers; Samuel Basmajian, president of the South Jersey CIO Council; Frank E. Meloni, international representative of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union, CIO; and Benjamin Maiatico, district representative of the South Jersey CIO Council.

UNITY IN PRACTICE is shown in this picture taken as CIO and AFL and independent representatives met at office of the Passaic County (N. J.) Election Commission to discuss registration of the voters with the commissioners. Left to right, Richard P. Donovan, chairman of the county League for Political Education, and Edward G. Wilmes, chairman of the county PAC, who have assured each other's organizations of mutual support; Morris Grossman, AFL Typographical Union; Vice Pres. Joseph Krause of the AFL Textile Workers; Joseph Turi, financial secretary of Aircraft Lodge 703, independent Machinists; Christ Frawley, executive secretary of the Passaic County CIO Council; John M. McCloskey, vice president of Local 300, CIO Auto Workers. Registration is due for a jump as a result of the meeting.

Christie Succeeds Lawson As Vermont Council Head

JAMES F. CHRISTIE was elected president of the Vermont State Industrial Union Council last week at its eighth annual convention in Barre.

He succeeds John C. Lawson, executive secretary-treasurer of the United Stone & Allied Products Workers, who had held the post for several years and who declined to run for re-election because of the pressure of business within his own union. Like his predecessor, Christie is a member of the Stone & Allied Workers, and has been secretary-treasurer of the State Council for several years.

Succeeding him in that post is Robert Racine, a member of the Textile Workers. Frank Dumas, of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, and Ruth Daigneault, of the Clothing Workers, were re-elected vice presidents.

The convention passed more than a score of resolutions, including one demanding a state labor relations law to protect the rights of workers in intrastate industry and another calling upon the State Employment Office to have throughout the year a farm labor employment representative. It also asked that labor and farmers be given representation on the Vermont Development Commission and urged a State Power Authority.

Gov. Harold J. Arthur told the convention he favors state labor relations legislation.

Tilford Dudley, assistant to Jack Kroll, national director of the CIO Political Action Committee, stressed the need for uniting with and supporting the PAC.

Other resolutions reflected National CIO policy and set local policy on a statewide basis.

CIO Commended For Role In Bond Drive

The CIO has been commended by the Treasury Dept. for the role it played in the recent "Independence Drive" for the sale of U. S. Savings Bonds.

Savings Bonds Div. Dir. Vernon Clarke said the Treasury Dept. is "highly gratified" at the success of the drive.

"Much of the credit for this achievement," Clarke said, "belongs to American labor organizations.

"The patriotic and public spirited leaders of labor richly deserve this expression of commendation and gratitude from the Treasury Dept. for a job well done."

On Again, Off Again, And On Again For L. A. Rent Control

RENT CONTROL for Los Angeles was turned off again and on again last week as fast as the beer tap at a union picnic.

When the week started it was on. True, the Los Angeles City Council had passed a decontrol ordinance which Housing Expediter Tighe Woods, under the 1950 Rent Control Act, has no choice but to sign.

However, the unaffiliated Intl. Association of Machinists, acting on behalf of the Los Angeles Tenants Council—a group headed by CIO, AFL and unaffiliated unions—had secured in Federal District Court in Washington a temporary injunction restraining Woods from signing the decontrol order pending a hearing on a petition for a permanent injunction.

The hearing was held Aug. 29. Judge Burnita Matthews refused to grant the permanent injunction and declined to continue the temporary enjoinder while an appeal was taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals. That turned off rent control.

On Aug. 30 the appeal was filed. At the same time the higher court, with National CIO joining in, was asked for and granted another temporary injunction pending a hearing on the appeal. That turned rent control on again.

At the hearing in the District Court, the Tenants Council claimed that the Los Angeles City Council did not act "in accord with the law" when it voted to end controls. Landlord groups were given full and orderly hearings, it contended, while "booing and jeering" were allowed when tenants testified. However, the hearing didn't mean much, they added. Announcements were made in advance that the council would favor control.

Petitions are still being circulated in Los Angeles seeking a referendum on the issue and for a second referendum on recall of two City Council members who led the real estate lobby's fight.

PRO-LANDLORD members of the Cook County (Ill.) Rent Board, which covers Chicago, lost out on a fast move to slip over a rent boost for the operators of apartment buildings with four units or less who have not had such an increase since June 30, 1947.

With several of the tenant and public representatives absent, and without hearings, they passed an informal "recommendation" for a 15% blanket increase in this category—in spite of the fact that a short time before, the full board, with Woods' approval and that of the Chicago City Council, had set up a special procedure to protect tenants and small landlords legitimately entitled to increases. They asked Woods' approval of the new recommendation.

The Housing Expediter appeared before a full meeting of the Rent Board on Aug. 29, explained his objections to the recommendation and rejected it.

He pointed out that the recently effective system has been "producing results" for the landlords, with increases authorized where justified in an average of three days, and that it has "several significant advantages over the type" the board recommended. An important one, he stressed, is the protection the present system gives to tenants who already have had their rents increased illegally, and who under the recommendation could easily have been clipped for another 15% boost.

A rent control survey committee consisting of two labor representatives, two landlords and two representatives of the Board of Supervisors has been set up by the San Francisco supervisors to conduct a study to help them determine if controls are advisable when the federal law expires Dec. 31. D. W. Anderson, chairman of the San Francisco Committee for National CIO, and Russell R. Dorn, president of Local 14, AFL Apartment House Employes, were named labor representatives.

TUC Thanks CSC For CARE

THE BRITISH Trade Union Congress has built up a "bank of names" on which it draws for distribution of CARE packages contributed by the National CIO Community Services Committee.

This became known in a letter written by TUC Gen. Secy. H. Vincent Tewson to Leo Perlis, committee director, thanking the committee for the packages.

Tewson said that at first distribution of the gifts was to "trade unionists selected through the machinery of trades council." When the number of packages increased and the project appeared to be on a continuing basis, Tewson said, it was decided to build up a bank so that packages could be sent immediately to the needy.

These names, Tewson explained, were obtained from affiliates which got them in turn from local unions. Tewson said "they are names, in the main, of members on pension, people who have struck a rough patch through illness or accident, or widows of former members."

He included a number of examples "taken at random from the files."

Long Housing Fight Is Won For Negroes

After a seven-year struggle, the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. has agreed to accept Negroes as tenants in its Stuyvesant Town housing project in New York City. The decision spelled victory for groups which started protest of the ban years before the development even opened its doors.

Last year the Court of Appeals upheld the company's right to choose its tenants and this spring the Supreme Court refused to review the appeal brought by three Negro veterans.

The company revealed the new policy in a curt statement saying it had leased "some" apartments to "qualified Negro families." The number involved is not known.

Organizationally Speaking

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Sixty-eight years ago workers of New York City marched along the streets singing:

"Storm the Fort! Ye Knights of Labor
Battle for your cause
Equal right for every neighbor
Down with tyrant's laws."

This was sung by the Knights of Labor in 1882, and on this Labor Day of 1950, working people are confronted with the same struggle—only in this day and time the struggle is worldwide. Free labor everywhere is supporting the aims and ideals of the United Nations. However, there are groups attempting to drive civilization backwards. The "tools," advocates of the Cominform, are willing to take labor back to the dark days of ruthless dictatorship. But they have been exposed and the working people are getting to know them for what they are and stand for. In the name of those who have fought for the freedom we enjoy today, Labor of 1950 rededicates itself to carry on the forces of freedom everywhere and to resist aggressors on all fronts.

The CIO Executive Board met in Washington, D. C., Aug. 29. A number of policies were adopted that will have a far-reaching effect on the economy of our country. The board expressed support of the UN and its stand on the Korean conflict; the so-called "peace movement" was denounced as a hoax.

The last of the Communist-dominated unions were expelled from the CIO. The President of the Longshoremen's Union, in a recent testimony, revealed that members were being expelled for meeting in support of CIO policy. This is the last of the groups that chose the word and will of the Cominform rather than the word and will of the trade union members of the CIO.

The opportunity is there for all those loyal to the CIO and opposing the communistic ideology control of their union to remain with the CIO and continue the fight for trade union principles.

Pres. Morris Pizer, United Furniture Workers-CIO, whose union recently eliminated the communists from its ranks, reports the following election victories: Representation elections—Finley Co., Boston, Mass., UFWA-CIO 56, no union 16; Auburn Products Co., Auburn, N. Y., UFWA-CIO 32, no union 9; Dillingham Furniture Co., Sheboygan, Wis., UFWA 73, UIU-AFL 7, no union 26; Northern Chair Co., Cadillac, Mich., UFWA-CIO 84, no union 17. Union shop elections—Fort Pitt Mfg. Co., Pittsburgh, Pa., 388 to 8; Atlas Plywood Co., Evansville, Ind., 106 to 0; Williams Furniture Co., Sumter, S. C., 360 to 33; Harris Hub Co., Chicago, Ill., 174 to 6; Heywood-Wakefield Co., Gardner, Mass., 804 to 100.

CIO Reg. Dir. Robert Davidson reports that in a union shop election at the Institutional Industries, Inc., Cincinnati, O., the Playthings, Jewelry, and Novelty Workers-CIO were victorious by the following vote: eligible 68, yes 67, no 1.

USA-CIO Dir. William Donovan of District 28 reports that in a representation election at the I. A. Barnett Co., Barberton, O., the workers voted in favor of the United Steelworkers-CIO: eligible 55, USA-CIO 53, no union 1 challenged. Credit goes to the officers who conducted the election and to Rep. Oliver Lee who supervised it.

USA-CIO Dir. Charles Smith reports that in a representation election at the Western Washer, Los Angeles, Calif., the USA-CIO was victorious by a vote of 3 to 1. In a consent election at the Madsen Range, Inc., Los Angeles, the workers voted 100% for USA-CIO.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, Intl. Woodworkers, reports that in a representation election at the Davidson Logging Co., Vaughn, Wash., the workers voted in favor of the IWA-CIO by the following vote: eligible 42, IWA-CIO 20, no union 3.

CIO Reg. Dir. William Mayo reports that in a representation election among Intl. Harvester Co. office employes at Fort Wayne, Ind., employes voted 750 for UAW-CIO to 103 for no union.

CIO Reg. Dir. Joseph Walsh reports a union shop victory by Local 787, UAW-CIO, 547 to 147, at the Lycoming-Spencer Div. of Avco, Williamsport, Pa.

Al Harnett, Assistant to the Chairman of IUE-CIO, reports the following representation election victories: Sonotone, Elmsford, N. Y., IUE 19, UE 1, no union 1; Federal Tel. & Tel., Nutley, N. J., IUE 1987, no union 24.

CIO Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner reports that in a representation election at the Federal Radio and Telephone, Nutley, the workers voted Office and Professional Employes LIU 1703 CIO 262, no union 5, challenged 63.

CIO Reg. Dir. Roy Atkinson reports that in a representation election at Bethlehem Steel Corp. fabricating plant, Seattle, Wash., the Steelworkers were victorious over the Structural Ironworkers-AFL by a vote of 36 to 31. USA-CIO Reps. Hugh Mathews and Chris Gellepis were in chrage.

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShelter reports that the Steelworkers recorded two more union shop victories, one at the Johnston Pump Co., Los Angeles, where a 100% victory was recorded and the other at the Clary Multiplier Co., Los Angeles, where the score was 242 to 26 in favor of USA-CIO.

Strike Grows At Harvester

The 22,000 members of the CIO Auto Workers on strike at seven Intl. Harvester Co. plants since Aug. 23 were joined last week by 27,000 members of the Farm Equipment Council of the left-wing United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers Union.

As a result of the walkouts by the two unions, the company, one of the nation's leading manufacturers of farm implements, tractors, motor trucks and refrigerators, was paralyzed.

The company withdrew its offer of a 4c hourly wage increase to FE when leaders of the union refused to give a no-strike pledge for the life of the contract. The walkout followed.

Meanwhile UAW negotiators continued talks with company representatives. The CIO union is seeking a 15c wage increase, better grievance procedures, improved vacation clauses and other gains.

Plants affected by the strikes are in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Tennessee and Kentucky. An estimated 60,000 employes have been made idle by the walkouts.

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

On Labor Day:

Murray Asks 'Equality Of Sacrifice' In Defense Plans

LABOR DAY OF 1950 finds the organized worker in America concerned but confident about the state of the world, apprehensive and less confident about rising prices.

He is concerned about the world because the forces of aggression have been loosed a little and no one knows when or in what part of the world they will be contained. But he is confident that they will be contained, and he is prepared to do more than his share to make that containment possible.

But prices are something else again. He has seen them skyrocket since the Communists launched their attack on the Republic of Korea—and he hasn't seen anything done about keeping them in line. He has seen a few employers make concessions. But unless he works for one of those employers, he has seen the money he brings home buy less every week since late in June.

ON LABOR DAY of 1950, the day that is dedicated to him and that he should be spending in well-earned rest and recreation, he is at work in many of the factories and mills turning out materials for the war in Korea. That's perfectly all right by him. It is more important that the United Nations forces trying to stem the red tide of totalitarianism have the things they need to do the job, and he's more than willing to do what has to be done to turn them out.

For the workers of American "want a peaceful world in which men and women may work to improve their living standards, their democratic institutions, their personal good and welfare," as CIO Pres. Philip Murray said in his annual Labor Day statement.

"These are precious goals, and we will strive for their achievement," he added.

"We support our government's efforts to halt the vicious aggression provoked by the Communists in Korea. As individuals and as union members, we will do everything in our power to speed the victory of the democratic forces.

"Let no man think he can take advantage of our national crisis to weaken our unions or to rob our people of hard-won gains.

"As always, we shall fight profiteering and exploitation. We shall strive for legislation to protect America's workers and farmers and small businessmen, and to curb the evils of monopoly in industry. We shall continue our fight against shameless discrimination based on race, creed, national origin or color. We shall give our full support to those projects—like the European Recovery Program and the Point Four Program—which win us friends in other countries and help the entire world enjoy the benefits or technical and scientific advances."

The CIO, through its Political Action Committee, will continue to work for the aims of the Fair Deal, for labor's candidates and for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, he said.

"Loyal to our democratic ideals," he concluded, "in full support of our nation's campaign to smash Communist aggression, the CIO looks to the future with confidence and determination."

MURRAY was the principal speaker at a Labor Day rally in Birmingham, Ala., where many CIO members of the United Steelworkers in nearby steel mills were unable to hear him because they were working to supply the needs of the armed forces. His address was carried nationally by the American Broadcasting Co.

In his speech he warned that the times call for "equality of sacrifices—not for special privilege," and demanded that super-profits be taken out of the defense effort.

"What labor wants is what every decent American citizen wants in these difficult times," he said.

"We want speedy victory over the Communist aggressors.

"We want our nation to build its military strength so that the Kremlin masterminds will stop their imperialistic program of expansion and turmoil.

"We want an effective mobilization of the country's resources.

"We want prices and profits kept at least to the levels prevailing when the Korean war began.

"We want a tax program in which every income group will take on its rightful share of the revenue burden.

"WAGES HAVE fallen behind and labor enters the mobilization period at a decided disadvantage. Even before the Korean crisis, labor had not shared fairly in the fantastic profits made by big business since 1946. Since the Korean crisis, labor has lost further in purchasing power, due to unwarranted and greedy price profiteering. Labor seeks to redress these inequities through collective bargaining. There is ample room for wage adjustments without disturbing price levels.

"We want an effective use of the nation's manpower—without discrimination or bias—to produce the supplies for our military machine and our homefront citizens. And we want the preservation of our fundamental civil liberties, which have stood us so well in peace and war."

MURRAY recalled that since Labor Day of 1949 "the CIO has weeded out of its ranks 11 unions which were found dominated by the Communist Party and devoted to the attainment of" CP aims.

"In conducting this campaign of isolation of reactionary Communist leaders from the trade union movement," he declared, "the CIO has performed a real service to the nation."

But, he warned—

"Every setback to the democratic ideals of our America is applauded by two sinister groups—the reactionaries of the right and the reactionaries of the left . . .

"If American democracy is to help peoples in other lands, it must be constantly strengthened here at home."

J. H. OLDENBROEK, general secretary of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, issued that organization's first Labor Day message from headquarters in Brussels Belgium. He sent fraternal greetings to the workers of the United States and Canada "on behalf of our more than 50 million members in 53 countries, and we are certain that many more would join us in these greetings were they not prevented by dictatorial governments from belonging to unions of their own choice."

The ICFTU wants "real peace," most urgently of all for the people of Korea who are the victims of Communist aggression in a systematic plan to enlarge the totalitarian sphere of influence.

"We stand with American labor in its struggle for full employment and real social security," he said, "in its unceasing vigilance against the shackles of hostile labor legislation, and in its claims to a strong and worthy voice in the higher councils of government. We especially commend American labor for its generous and far-sighted support of Marshall Plan aid to war-stricken Europe and of aid to underdeveloped countries—lands where starvation threatens to drive the people into the arms of the dictators. Only a propserous people can remain a free people."

President Truman, because of the Korean crisis, was unable to accept an invitation to speak at the third annual CIO-AFL Labor Day Parade in Detroit.

Democratic Senators Try To Plug Tax Bill Loopholes

A GROUP OF Democratic Senators was making valiant efforts last week to plug loopholes in the tax bill and to add an excess profits provision to the measure.

President Truman was pressing for action on the measure, which was drawn up to meet his request for an interim $5 billion tax bill to help finance military action in Korea.

The measure as drawn up by the Senate Finance Committee has been bitterly assailed by CIO Pres. Murray and Senate liberals for failure to equalize the tax burden.

Meanwhile, debate over taxes raged in the Senate. A number of strong arguments were advanced by proponents of the O'Mahoney-Connally amendment for the excess profits tax and a series of amendments to plug loopholes offered by Sens. Humphrey (D. Minn.), Douglas (D. Ill.) and Lehman (D. N.Y.).

However, on Sept. 1 the Senate voted, 42-36, to hold off an excess profits tax until next year on the pledge of Sens. George (D. Ga.) and Millikan (R. Colo.) to put such a levy before the next Ways and Means Committee.

UNLESS AMENDED on the floor of Senate or House, the bill may "make it possible for a new crop of war profiteers to dodge their rightful share of federal income taxes," Sen. Humphrey cautioned his colleagues Aug. 29.

"The present bill would deny excise tax relief to consumers, and would impose an additional $3 billions in income taxes on individuals, and $1½ billions on corporations." he said. "All this is understandable as a result of the Korean war and the gloomy international outlook.

"But it is unconscionable that this body should not only refuse to close loopholes in existing tax laws, but actually add new tax loopholes. It is equally disturbing that there should be delay in the passage of an excess profits tax."

THE EFFECTS of a 5c or 10c pay boost can be quickly wiped out through higher taxes and increased living costs, Humphrey warned. If the measure now before the Senate is approved, he calculated, a married man who had income of $3000 in 1944, the wartime income peak, would need to earn $1050 more in 1950 simply to maintain his 1944 living standard. Next year, even if the cost of living doesn't rise further, he'd have to earn $1150 more than in 1944 "to keep pace with higher taxes and inflation."

Humphrey urged that there be a withholding tax on stock dividends, just as there now is on individuals' incomes. "Wage earners have accepted this as necessary, and they have not complained. There is no reason why there should be any more complaints from dividend recipients," he told the Senate.

The ways in which oil industry profiteers could avoid their share of the tax burden came in for special attention. Humphrey attacked both the "obscure" amendment making it possible for oil producers to get special tax concessions for royalties on oil, and to get the special tax depletion allowances which President Truman has called the most "inequitable loophole" in recent tax laws.

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taft-Hartley Repeal	Would repeal most viciously anti-labor bill, reinstitute Wagner Act.	Pigeonholed.	Give money to PAC; register; vote.
FEPC	Would bar job discrimination based on race, creed or color and provide penalties for violations.	Pigeonholed for this session.	Give money to PAC; register; vote.
McCarran - Mundt - Nixon-Wood 'Omnibus' Bills S. 4037 H.R. 9490	Bills endanger civil liberties, union rights, under guise of fighting subversive activities. Opposed by Administration leaders, liberal and labor groups.	House passed Mundt-Nixon-Wood Bill. Senate action due soon.	Ask Senators to defeat. Ask support of S. 4061 to strengthen internal security laws.
Interim Tax Bill H.R. 8920	Sharply criticized by CIO as "special interest" bill. Provides new loopholes for wealthy, aid to corporations, etc.	Senate action due any day. Excess profits tax idea gaining strength. Bill then goes to House-Senate conference committee.	Wire Senators to eliminate loopholes, add excess profits tax provision. Ask Representatives for "equal sacrifice" bill.
Ratification of Genocide Convention	International agreement to outlaw mass killings for race or religious reasons.	Reported favorably by Sen. Foreign Relations sub-comm. (Requires Sen. action only.) Full comm. has not acted.	Ask Senators to give speedy approval.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.
Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

J. W. Gibson Quits Labor Dept. Post

John W. Gibson, assistant Secretary of Labor, has resigned the post he has held since 1946. The resignation, announced by President Truman became effective Aug. 31.

Gibson, former president of the Michigan CIO Council, came to Washington in 1945 to serve as special assistant to the secretary of Labor. He became assistant secretary the following year.

Truman said the public service "is the poorer" because of Gibson's determination to resign.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00 A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII | WASHINGTON, D. C., SEPTEMBER 11, 1950 | 82 | No. 37

(An Editorial)

Who's Trying To Make A Sucker Out of Whom?

ONE OF the bright lads up on Capitol Hill put it this way the other day:

"In times of great national stress the devils suddenly become angels—or at least they pretend to be."

He was referring to the "100% patriots" who helped get us into our present mess but are now pointing at President Truman, Secretary of State Acheson and other Administration leaders and shouting, "You did it!"

Their principal objective is obvious: They want to get re-elected in November—and they want the Anti-Fair Dealers to gain control of Congress.

Some of them are not only playing politics but are playing exceptionally dirty politics with the war situation.

And they're hoping that their campaign of confusion will result in the conservatives and reactionaries gaining control of our law-making machinery.

"With all the talk and double-talk that's going on, how's the average voter going to know who's who and what's what?" a friend of our recently asked.

We're going to try to answer that question without dealing in personalities. We offer the following as a starter:

1. Study the record of those seeking re-election. The CIO News 1950 Voting Record provides a good source of information for union members and their friends.

2. Sit down and make an honest effort to figure out who's trying to make a sucker out of whom.

We're going to elaborate just a little on Point 1.

By studying the record it's not difficult to determine how members of Congress stand on measures designed to benefit the public generally (as opposed to the special interests).

And by doing a bit of digging you can determine who's been giving lip service to the battle against Communism and who's been in there pitching for measures designed to hit the Reds where it hurts.

The Voting Record, unfortunately, doesn't give a complete answer to the question, "Who's trying to make a sucker out of whom?"

And we won't try to provide a complete answer, either.

Look To The Record

But we want to point out that in the present crisis a real effort is being made to take the working people of the nation for a rough economic buggy ride.

So, keep a watchful eye on those who:

1. Speak in favor of control legislation which would freeze wages generally at pre-Korean levels and freeze prices at increased post-Korean levels.

2. Fight against excess profits taxation and battle for other tax measures designed to place an unfair war-mobilization burden on low-income families.

3. Advocate the type of "voluntary" controls which would permit industry to determine the relationship between prices, profits and wages. (Most of the "voluntary" schemes are real phonies designed to clip labor.)

4. Support legislation designed to put the nation in either an economic or political strait-jacket.

Looking for some guideposts?

Those who play ball politically with the groups now profiteering from the Korean war do not deserve your support at the polls.

Neither do those who voted to retain the obnoxious Taft-Hartley Act.

The same goes for those who worked for a premature end to rent control.

And likewise for those who sought to cripple ECA and to block the Truman Point 4 program of aid to underdeveloped areas.

WE HAD hoped that our politicians would start behaving like statesmen after the outbreak of war in Korea (but really we didn't believe they would).

So, now the nation is in politics up to its ears—in an election year that marked the beginning of a new war and a mobilization drive of broad consequences.

An effort is being made by the Republican Party to sell the public the false idea that Truman and the Democratic Party—not the Communists—are responsible for what's happening in the Orient.

Some of the blabber-mouths up on Capitol Hill are attempting to make political hay with the phony thesis that although the Administration is fighting Communists in Korea, governmental agencies at home are loaded with Reds.

Coupled with this, of course, is the old GOP cry that Fair Dealism is nothing other than socialism and that socialism is at least the first cousin of Communism.

The big money boys are really pouring big money into the campaigns of anti-labor candidates. If dough alone will turn the tide, then the pro-labor candidates are merely wasting their time.

But we seem to recall that votes—not dollars—are counted at the polling places.

And experience has shown that money plus manpower—plus a good program—wins elections.

All of which leads up to this:

Every CIO member who hasn't already done so should contribute at least a dollar to the Political Action Committee immediately. Do it today—or tomorrow at the latest. Don't wait until next week.

Your buck will help but it alone won't do the job. It's got to be coupled with the manpower necessary to get people to understand the issues, to get them to register, to get them to vote.

And as a parting shot:

We'll be making suckers out of ourselves if we don't take full advantage of our right to vote.

And that's a fact!

UAW, Ford Tear Up Old Pact To Raise Wages And Pensions

THE CIO Auto Workers and the Ford Motor Co. have signed a new contract which has been termed by UAW Pres. Walter Reuther "the best in the industry."

The five-year pact — a 19.4c package for 110,000 employes—calls for an immediate 8c an hour wage increase for hourly rated workers and $125-a-month pensions.

In reaching the new agreement, Ford tore up its old contract, which had four months to run before it could be reopened for wage discussions. The old pact, signed Oct. 27, 1949, would have expired April 1, 1952.

The Ford contract gives skilled workers 5c more in addition to the 8c general raise and includes a cost-of-living clause patterned after that in the General Motors agreement.

Workers will receive a 4c wage boost each year on June 1 until the contract expires June 1, 1955. The cost to the company is estimated at from $45 to $50 million annually.

The agreement provides that workers who had been pensioned at the previous rate of $100 monthly, including social security, shall now receive $125 monthly.

REUTHER SAID the average hourly earnings of Ford workers are increased under the new pact from $1.69 to $1.77, and that the $125 pension gives them the "highest guaranteed non-contributory pensions in American industory."

The new agreement is retroactive to Sept. 1. In addition to the wage boosts and pension improvements, it also provides for higher accident and disability payments. Paid up life insurance is increased from $4000 to $4400.

Ernest R. Breech, Ford executive vice president, said that a pattern has been set in the industry and "its effect under present circumstances is recognized at Ford."

"The company's action," he said," acknowledges that the inflationary spiral, which has gained momentum since our contract was signed last fall, has resulted in an appreciable reduction in the real wages of our employes."

The Kaiser-Frazer Motor Car Co. and the Bohn Aluminum and Brass Corp., an auto supplies firm, also came to terms with the UAW.

THE BOHN contract, for one year, gives 2100 production workers an 11c increase and skilled employes an additional 15c an hour. Office workers got 14c.

At Kaiser-Frazer the UAW won 8c an hour rise for 16,000 production workers, an additional 5c an hour for skilled personnel and put into effect a 4c hourly production boost that was to have gone into effect next June 1. Included also in the pact were improvements in vacation and night premium pay, and an escalator cost-of-living clause.

(Kaiser-Frazer and the union signed a pension agreement about a month ago.)

Furniture Workers Win Pensions And 15c Pay Rise

LOCAL 76, CIO Furniture Workers and the Upholstered Furniture Manufacturers' Association of New York signed a new contract hailed by the union as the most progressive contract in the furniture trade.

Major gains include the establishment of a pension fund to be financed by a 2% gross payroll contribution by the employers; a 15c an hour general wage increase for approximately 2500 employes and an increase for mechanics of 25c to bring the minimum hourly earnings to two dollars.

The employes are already covered under a joint employer-union Hospitalization and Surgical Plan financed by an employers' 3% gross payroll contribution paid to the UFW Insurance Fund.

Complete coverage for the upholsterers and spring makers workers includes hospitalization, $1000 life and $2000 accident insurance policies, $35 per week sick benefits up to 26 weeks, $250 maximum surgical coverage and complete hospitalization and surgical protection for their dependents.

AN IMMEDIATE 8c-AN-HOUR PAY RISE and a $125 monthly retirement pension are included in the new contract between the Ford Motor Co. and the CIO Auto Workers. Left to right, seated, are: John Bugas, Ford labor relations director (signing the contract), UAW Pres. Walter Reuther and Ken Bannon, director of the UAW Ford Dept. Other members of the UAW and Ford negotiating teams are in the background.

HST Says He'll Veto New Mundt-Nixon Bill

LOCKED in angry debate, the Senate last week was moving toward a final vote on the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon anti-subversives bill, which has been widely criticized as a threat to civil rights.

Pres. Truman told a press conference he would veto the bill if it is passed by Congress. It has already been approved in the House by a large majority.

The bill is a revised version of the old Mundt-Nixon bill, long opposed by the CIO, with a flock of new provisions written into it by Sen. Pat McCarran (D. Nev.).

Meanwhile a group of Senate liberals headed by Sen. Kilgore (D. W. Va.) offered a substitute bill which they said would be more effective in guarding against spying and sabotage—while removing many of the provisions of the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon measure which have been cited as dangerous to liberal and labor organizations.

The President told reporters that if the Kilgore substitute were adopted—a chance judged dim by Capital observers — he would study its provisions before deciding whether to sign or veto it.

But the M-M-N (McCarran-Mundt-Nixon) measure is even worse than it has been in previous years, the President said.

HOW BAD THE bill could be if placed on the law books was told to the Senate in a 19-page speech delivered by liberal Sen. Lehman (D. N. Y.).

Lehman pointed out that he thinks American Communists are "capable of any kind of subversive activity," and the country should check and punish subversive activities.

"I do not, however, propose to allow my zeal in this regard to lead me into the fundamental error of playing into the hands of the Communists by prejudicing the rights of the vast majority of the American people," Lehman said.

The New York Senator predicted that the M-M-N bill would be evaded by Communists, who would go underground and dodge its registration provisions. To try to enforce the law, he added, would place a staggering, unneeded burden on the government and on police agencies.

"True, we might catch a few Communists," Lehman said. "But the real professional spies and saboteurs are far too clever to be caught in this net. They are not members of the Communist Party, and keep away from it . . . They could never be indicted for failing to register."

LEHMAN predicted the M-M-N bill would prove in practice to be a new version of the hated Alien and Sedition Acts of 1798. Those were directed at French agents, he said, but those laws were used instead against newspaper editors and honest political leaders critical of the Administration.

New York, he added, passed an anti-anarchist law in 1901, which has never been used against anarchists. But it has been used against other persons.

He said that labor unions in unorganized areas could be persecuted under the law for keeping their membership secret.

Lehman cited a "fine labor union," the United Auto Workers, which he described as "patriotic and forward looking," and predicted the M-M-N bill could easily be used against it by foes of labor, on these points:

1. Communists might possibly sneak into control of one local of the union.

2. During a strike, the UAW might receive a gift from an organization, which the union would have no way of knowing to be a Communist front.

3. The UAW—in its support of such issues as public housing, peace, anti-discrimination or social security—could be found to be backing a program also supported by Communists.

4. On the same basis, foes of labor could argue that the union was not deviating from Communists policies.

The public knows the UAW to be a "most effective force against Communism," Lehman said, but he added:

"There are some individuals in the U. S. who would be quite willing to assert that this union and all labor unions are radical organizations, and, hence, Communist-fronts.

"Who then will be so bold as to predict what the Subversive Activities Control Board [set up under the bill] will find, under the vague instructions set forth in this unfortunate and untimely legislation?"

A FORETASTE of that situation came up when Sen. Bridges (R. N. H.) lambasted the liberal National Farmers Union as Communist-infiltrated. That was too much even for Sen. Mundt (R. S. D.), a sponsor of the M-M-N bill, or for other farm-belt Senators.

Meanwhile liberal Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) made a speech of bitter criticism at those who have been smearing Fair Deal public officials with the red brush.

"The irresponsible, unfounded and foolish charges made in the 81st Congress, second session, have done more harm to the American government than the Communist Party," Humphrey said. The Senate, he added, has become a "forum for every kind of foolish charge."

He said too many members of Congress are playing "cheap politics" with the red issue, in order to scare the public. "This is the way you breed disregard for the institutions of government," he declared.

Murray Attends Briefing By NSRB

CIO Pres. Philip Murray represented labor Sept. 6 at a meeting with Chairman W. Stuart Symington of the National Security Resources Board.

The group, known as the NSRB Committee on Mobilization Policy, consists of three representatives each from industry, labor, agriculture and the public. AFL Pres. William Green and Pres. Albert J. Hayes of the Intl. Association of Machinists, the two other labor representatives, were unable to attend.

Lt. General Alfred M. Gruenther, Deputy Chief of Staff for Plans of the Army, briefed the committee on the military situation. Leon Keyserling, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, discussed the economic situation. W. Averill Harriman, special Presidential advisor on foreign affairs, outlined the foreign situation, and Labor Sec. Maurice Tobin discussed manpower problems.

GE Strike May Spread If Talks Flop

By WILLIAM WEISS

MORE THAN 13,000 members of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers were poised last week to join 32,000 other IUE members already on strike at General Electric plants throughout the country.

The union's GE conference board, representing 42 units, was standing by in Washington to await the resutls of negotiating sessions attended by U. S. Conciliation Service representatives.

Faced with company refusal to grant union proposals to assume the employes share of hospital and pension benefits, IUE Administrative Chairman James B. Carey blasted GE's attitude in "attempting to deprive its workers of gains won in other contracts in the industry."

CAREY SAID that contrary to "pious" company claims in full page newspaper ads, "GE has failed to meet the industry pattern established at General Motors and Westinghouse."

He cited the fact that two-thirds of the auto industry now is committed to paying the cost-of-living wage rises IUE is asking. Such increases are provided in a contract between IUE and General Motors' electrical division. Carey said that in the light of the company's phenominal profits—highest in its history—GE can well afford to reinstitute this feature.

The cost-of-living adjustment had been in effect at GE for a number of years, he said, but the company eliminated it "by trading it for a wage raise during negotiations with the left-wing United Electrical Workers in 1941."

Carey said IUE is also demanding that the company put back into effect a profit-sharing program which was removed in 1948. He declared the program was taken away from the workers then but retained by company executives.

"If the profit-sharing plan had been in effect during the first half of 1950," he said, "GE workers would have received an average 6½c-an-hour increase."

Altogether the union demands amount to a "package" estimated at 15c an hour. In addition to the cost-of-living and profit-sharing, IUE is seeking an across-the-board raise of 10c an hour, liberalized vacations, two additional paid holidays, including election day and a company-paid life insurance program.

Carey indicated that the union is prepared to accept the findings of an impartial fact-finding board set up by President Truman but only if the company gives advance assurance that it would also accept such a board's recommendations.

He said that company acceptance of fact-finding would probably terminate present strikes.

The company, meanwhile, was continuing contract talks in New York with officials of the United Electrical Workers, which was ousted by the CIO for following the Communist line.

WHEN GE WAS CAUGHT with its plants down, the federal mediators moved in and tried to settle the dispute. Shown here are the three principals in the drama: l. to r., James B. Carey, chairman of IUE-CIO's administrative committee; Cyrus Ching, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service; and Lemuel R. Boulware, vice-president of GE and head of its industrial relations department. Boulware, whose initials are L. R., is known to reporters as "Loud Roar" because his lengthy speeches can be heard through closed doors at mediation sessions. If the newspapers don't call him daily, he calls them.

TWENTY THOUSAND Lynn, Mass., members of IUE-CIO went on strike Sept. 5 after their employer, the giant General Electric Co., refused a settlement offer made after three months of negotiations. The company immediately put on a show of hurt feelings at the "unreasonable" attitude of the union. Shown here are some of the Lynn members voting to strike. GE has been trying to build up the impression that "three or four men in Washington" called the workers out. This picture gives the lie to GE's propaganda machine, which also has been claiming that only "handfuls" of workers attend IUE meetings.

GE Ads Fail To Mention Real Issues

GE's REPRESENTATIVES told a Sept. 7 press conference that they just didn't know what IUE's demands were at this point.

Reporters speculated on what GE spokesmen meant. IUE withdrew its highly tentative settlement offer of Aug. 31, because the company refused to make the concession on which IUE's offer was based.

Since then, GE's representatives had been busy writing reasonable-sounding ads for the papers.

(Tentative settlement offers can be withdrawn at any time.)

Here is a list of items still in dispute at press-time:

1 The union wants GE to reinstitute its profit-sharing plan, dropped in 1948, and set up a cost-of-living escalator clause similar to the UAW and IUE arrangement with General Motors.

The company up to now has refused, claiming its 10c hourly wage increase (5c already in effect) plus its offer to reopen on wages in six months, is enough.

2 The union wants GE to absorb the 2% which the employes now contribute to GE's pension plan.

The IUE settlement offer was conditioned on the company's acceptance of this demand. When it refused to do so, IUE withdrew its offer and the strike started.

3 The IUE wants GE's hospitalization and sickness plan extended to cover the entire family of GE employes.

GE refuses.

4 IUE wants eight paid holidays, with compensatory pay or time off if a holiday falls on an employe's day off.

GE offers 7 paid holidays and no compensatory arrangement.

5 IUE wants three weeks' vacation after 15 years' service.

The company offers it after 20 years' service.

These are the main points at issue.

GE's "reasonable" ads termed the strike "un-necessary," without once mentioning its basic cause—the company's refusal to put its pension plan on a company-paid basis.

The ads boast about the company's 10c wage increase without mentioning the cost-of-living or profit-sharing question.

They extoll the sickness and hospitalization plan without confessing that it applies to employes only, and not to their families.

They speak of "vacations up to three weeks" without mentioning that the worker must have been on the payroll for 20 years before he gets his three weeks.

But the ads were eminently "reasonable" — unless you knew the facts.

CIO Display At Fairs

The Michigan CIO Council's farmer-labor unity campaign will go into high gear this month with the council's display being exhibited at 10 county fairs. The exhibit is divided into three panels depicting the common problems of city workers and farmers, the importance of the unions and the need for racial tolerance. It was arranged by the Michigan CIO in cooperation with the Michigan Labor Committee to Combat Intolerance and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America-CIO.

A Language They Can Understand

The American Story Isn't Going To Tell Itself To The World; We've Got To Tell It And Tell It Right

By ALLAN L. SWIM

AT FIRST THEY were nearly as suspicious of us as they were of the Red agents they had learned to despise and distrust.

Three of us—all American labor editors—pulled up in front of a mine union headquarters in the North of France early last year.

The "welcoming committee" was exceptionally cool—and the miners seemed to be more interested in our automobile than in us. And no wonder!

We had arrived in a big American-made limousine—one of those slick, black jobs that are generally associated with people of wealth.

Our interpreter, a French trade unionist, quickly guessed what was going on in the miner's minds. He then said to them:

"I'll let you in on a little secret. These American labor editors had to come all the way to France to get their first ride in a limousine—and they're getting a big kick out of it!

"The car belongs to the French chauffeur who's driving it."

Furthermore, he explained, we had to hire one big car or two small French cars because their were six persons, including the driver, in the visiting group.

THIS INCIDENT may appear on the surface not to be important or to have any real connection with the role our country is playing in world affairs.

But it was important in a small way.

The men to whom we had come to talk were leaders of the trade union group which was fighting the Communists who had long sought to dominate the important mining region near the Belgian border.

On this trip the three editors were serving as consultants to ECA, the U. S. agency which the Commies had branded all over Europe as "an agency of the imperialistic Wall Street bankers."

The miners were more than willing to discuss their problems with union men—but not with men accustomed to riding around in big limousines.

It was as simple as that.

If we knew about hard work and grime and sweat we might understand their problems. If we were accustomed to the luxury of limousines they didn't want to talk with us.

That's the way they're figured it out.

And it was easy to understand why when we learned that non-Communist union organizers had difficulty getting from town to town because their organization couldn't always provide them with bus fare.

THIS LITTLE story is related here in an effort to shed some light on one of the big problems our country faces in the ideological war.

To put it bluntly, we're trying to win the friendship and loyalties of many persons who cannot understand or appreciate the "official" language we speak and many more who do not have access to accurate information about us.

Few members of our diplomatic corps can "talk shop" with the worker groups being wooed by the Commies.

Our Voice of America broadcasts have carried the American story to millions of persons abroad—but how about the millions who can't afford radios?

And how about the millions who can't afford to buy such inexpensive things as newspapers?

THE TIME HAS certainly come for the U. S. government to abandon its coy attitude about the use of propaganda.

We've been running a poor second to Russia in the "battle of words" which makes up a large portion of the ideological war.

The job confronting us isn't an easy one and nobody has answers for all the problems.

But it seems logical that we should do at least three things immediately:

1. Take recognition of the fact that the Commies are gaining most of their converts among the so-called working classes.

2. Name to State Department posts and to other governmental agencies men and women capable of speaking a language the workers of the world can understand.

3. Toss out the window the old idea that our American story will tell itself around the world and that everybody who is suspicious of us is just naturally crazy.

TOO MUCH McCARTHYISM

Nobody is paying much attention to Sen. Joe McCarthy of Wisconsin these days—which is all to the good.

But McCarthy has started a fad that bids fair to get out of hand. Wild charges of "Communism" have become a political stock in trade—particularly for a good many public servants whose records show they have opposed just about every liberal measure brought up in Congress in recent years.

Latest to try the name-calling business is Senator Schoeppel (R) of Kansas. (He didn't have a single "right" vote on the CIO News Voting Record).

Schoeppel's barrage was pointed at Oscar Chapman, a long-time government servant who is now Secretary of the Interior. Chapman, a loyal Fair Dealer and an outstanding democrat, has gotten into the hair of such powerful special interests as the oil and electric industries.

It's been common knowledge that the lobbies of those two groups have been "out to get" Oscar Chapman for months—It was no surprise that liberal Chapman was picked as the object of conservative Schoeppel's smear campaign—or that Chapman easily and convincingly was able to show he was no Communist.

The conservative Washington Star has pointed out that there's a right way and a wrong way to check-mate Communists.

That right way is to act "after charges have been made and an adequate opportunity given fore defense"—as the CIO did in expelling the Moscow-wing affiliates.

The wrong way is to take action "without an opportunity for defense, merely because some private organization has compiled a blacklist which may or may not have been based on creditable evidence."

McCARRAN BILL SHOULD BE VETOED

Congress itself seems determined to take off in the wrong way after Communists or suspected Communists. The instrument is the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon bill, which may soon be passed in final form.

We are glad that President Truman has announced he will veto the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon bill.

It has been roundly and soundly denounced by the Dept. of Justice, by labor organizations, by church and civic groups. They have recognized that the bill would offer a method to smear anyone that anyone else dislikes.

Two years ago, when an earlier edition of the Mundt-Nixon bill was being debated in the House, Rep. John Blatnik (D. Minn.) warned that it could and would be used against bona fide labor organizations.

Blatnik recalled that in 1944 the House UnAmerican Activities Committee had issued a smear report criticising the CIO Political Action Committee, which was then working for the re-election of Franklin Roosevelt. The Committee charged the CIO-PAC with the very activities which "that Committee declares in its Mundt bill to be illegal," Blatnik pointed out.

That sort of smear job could happen again to organized labor, as it has already been applied to the CIO-PAC and to Secy. Chapman. The McCarran-Mundt-Nixon bill, if enacted into law, would be a handy tool for unscrupulous enemies of labor.

And it will be the card-carrying Communists who will gloat if that bill is used against unions and liberal groups.

UN Helping World Peace Progress

THE STATE DEPT. opposes formation of a new United Nations without the Communist countries in the summer issue of its Foreign Affairs Outlines, sub-titled "Building the Peace."

The pamphlet examines the UN today, and finds it accomplishing many of the things it is undertaking to do to bring about universal peace—one of them being the UN intervention in Korea. On the question of a UN without the Communist countries, it says:

"The UN is a true world organization. It includes most of the nations of the world. It is the only place where the Soviet bloc has regularly sat at the table with the democratic world in open discussion.

"To form a UN without the nations in the Soviet group would cut off this last point of meeting. It would split off about one-third of the world's people and deepen their isolation from democratic influences.

"It would transform the UN into something less than a world organization. Certainly, such action would not solve the basic problem of the cold war."

The pamphlet also summarized the status of UN programs. It said.

"First, there has been a slow growth of collective security through the UN machinery and through other safeguards against aggression within the Charter framework, such as the Rio and North Atlantic Pacts.

"Second, the UN has moved steadily ahead in expanding and codifying world law and in creating significant new law in the area of human rights and freedoms.

"Third, there has been a forward surge of international cooperation toward the advancement of human well-being, with more nations doing more in all fields and doing so on an expanding scale . . .

"The role of the UN as an instrument against war, as a key to real peace, and as a practical aid to international action makes this organization essential to the world society.

"The world desperately needs the center of balance which only the UN idea can give. That is why the United States gives unfaltering support to the UN and to the search for ways to strengthen the authority and effectiveness of that system."

IN ANOTHER just-published pamphlet, "Facts and Figures about the United Nations," the State Dept. gives an outline of the operations of "the nerve center of the world."

"Some 59 governments," it points out in a foreword, "make use of its facilities to work out the practical problems of their relationships and are depending upon it more and more as a means of settling their differences swiftly and peacefully."

"Building the Peace" is Dept. of State publication No. 3929; "Facts and Figures, etc.," is No. 3930. Either can be obtained for 5c from the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C.

Venezuela Suppression Is Blasted

The military junta which seized control of Venezuela in 1948 has jailed and exiled union leaders, supervised their correspondence, searched their homes and offices, and frozen their funds. Those were the findings of an Intl. Labour Organization investigating committee, reported to ILO headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland.

The report was based on an investigation made last summer which was headed by Jef Rens, senior assistant director-general.

The government has dissolved the Venezuelan Confederation of Labor and arrested union officials who gave information to the investigators, or forced them to flee for their safety, the investigators also reported. "Insecurity, fear and distrust" prevail among workers to "an ever-increasing degree," they found.

The repressive measures were directed primarily against unions affiliated with the Democratic Action party, which had control of the government the militarists overthrew. The investigation was undertaken at the behest of worker ILO delegates.

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President — James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer

Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher

Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII — September 11, 1950 — No. 37

Dean Of Labor Editors Saw Great Strides

Allan L. Swim, editor of The CIO News, is on vacation. His weekly column in this space will be resumed upon his return.

In its place The CIO News reprints some excerpts of an article which appeared in the Labor Day issue of Advance, organ of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers. It was written by "Charlie" Ervin, 85 years young and —as associate editor of Advance—the dean of American labor journalists.

By CHARLES W. ERVIN

THIS ANCIENT was 35 when the bells rang out announcing the arrival of the Twentieth Century. Looking backward, when as a seven year old he heard his father say to his mother, "We are in for hard times," seemed but a short while. It was the beginning of the panic of 1872. Naturally the youngster wondered how "time" could be "hard". Time had to do with the clock and school time.

At the end of the Nineteenth Century I had some very vivid memories of what happened after this "hard times" period: remembered the soldiers entraining from Philadelphia for Pittsburgh to put down a strike of railroad workers who had been toiling for a pittance wage.

Remembered as a young man the soldiers again entraining for the Pittsburgh district in 1892 to put down a strike at Homestead, in the Carnegie plant.

Remembered the headlines when the Pinkerton thugs tried to drive the workers out of this plant. Remembered the list of killed and wounded workers in what was known as the "Battle of the Monongahela River."

Remembered the strike in 1894 of the railroad workers, led by Eugene Victor Debs. Remembered the headlines telling of the violence in the Chicago district, and the arrival of the soldiers, and the arrest of the strike leaders charged with obstructing the mails and disobeying a court injunction.

Remembered (and in this generation it has been mostly forgotten) that a commission reported to President Cleveland that this violence had been deliberately provoked by the hired thugs of the railroad managers . . .

THE BIG CONTRAST however is the wage picture in 1950 compared with 1900.

The average wages then for the entire country were 23 cents an hour and average hours worked in a week were 57. The highly skilled workers had more in the pay envelope, but of course they were in the minority.

The last figures available in this mid-century period show the average wages in manufacturing industries to be $1.44 an hour and the hours worked in a week to be a little less than 40. The amount of average wages for the entire country has not yet been issued by the government.

All these figures show a decided increase in the standard of living of those depending upon wages and salaries in the last 50 years.

While the majority of our people have not yet attained a maximum comfort life with full freedom from economic hazards, the goal of happiness for the great majority of our people as set forth in the Declaration of Independence is nearer than ever before.

THE IMPROVEMENTS in the conditions of the majority didn't just happen however. It is all the result of a long struggle.

No benevolent ruling group political or industrial handed it to our people. On the contrary they had to fight every inch of the way to achieve what they have so far won for themselves. And the biggest factor in this winning was the organized labor movement.

WHO'S GOIN' TO GET CAUGHT?

Cabinet Member Learned About Unions At Family Hearth

THE AUSTRIAN Minister of Social Welfare, Karl Maisel, represents two facets of the Viennese character. With his soft, white hair, ruddy complexion and gracious manner, he could step, without make-up, onto a Hollywood set of Old Vienna.

But he also represents the fighting courage of the Viennese workers who were among the first fighters against Fascism, and, by their bravery and determination, became a symbol for free labor all over the world.

When Maisel was born 60 years ago, Vienna was the capital of the Great Austro-Hungarian Empire. The haughty Hapsburgs ruled the Empire from their palace.

WHEN THE dynasty fell after World War I, the Austrian working class was in the forefront of the struggle to stamp out the legacy of aristocratic arrogance and to establish in its place a democratic Austrian Republic. This was no easy task.

Maisel can remember in his lifetime the days when the role of the worker was to stand with his cap in hand and wait for the Lord Employer to give his orders. No worker would think of asking for an audience with a government minister.

Today the minister is a worker and comes to address the workers at their own trade union meetings. Maisel is not only Minister of Social Welfare, but is also president of the Metal Workers Union, and Vice-President of the Austrian Federation of Trade Unions (Oesterreichische Gewerkschaft Bund).

The way to recognition was not an easy one for the Austrian workers or for its representatives. He remembers his mother, "a little woman—always singing— a typical Viennese." She took in washing to help support the family, and at the age of 14 Karl left school and became a mechanic's apprentice.

After his apprenticeship and the traditional period of travel (the journeyman traveled from town to town and from country to country, thus working with different masters and learning all trade methods)—which rounded it off—he returned to his country and found employment with a big metal firm.

Here he became a member of his trade union and continued his education through evening classes and books provided by the union. The foundation for his interest in trade unionism had been given him at home where he avidly read the labor paper to which his father subscribed, and listened to the heated discussions between his father and family friends.

THIS PERIOD of his development was interrupted when he was drafted in the Army, where he remained until the end of World War I. When he was discharged in 1919, the process of change in the map of Europe had started, and one of the results was the Austrian Republic.

At the end of the war, Karl returned to his job as a metal worker. But his organizational ability soon received recognition. He was elected shop steward and later head of the works council. In 1926 the Austrian Social Democratic Party sent him to its workers college where he studied under such men as Otto Bauer and Dr. Karl Renner, now president of the Austrian Republic.

Upon his graduation from the labor college, he was employed by his union as an educational director. Maisel still found time to be active in politics, and, in 1928, he was elected to the Vienna Municipal Council, the candidate of the Austrian Social Democratic Party.

IN 1934, WHEN the Dolfuss reaction declared the free trade unions to be illegal, Maisel was arrested and sent to the concentration camp Woellersdorf. This was only a small example of what was in store for him when the Nazis, in 1938, decided that he was a bad influence on his fellow metal workers and sent him to the infamous concentration camp, Buchenwald.

Upon his release from this camp he returned to his job in the metal plant and managed to help in the illegal work against the Nazis, even though he was under police surveillance and had to report to the police regularly.

The collapse of the Third Reich in 1945 and the establishment of the Second Austrian Republic vindicated his faith and he participated actively in rebuilding free trade unions and a democratic government. This was no small task after ten years of fascist rule and a long and disastrous war. He was elected to Parliament in the first free elections and became Minister of Social Welfare. His was the task of establishing social legislation for the protection of working conditions, the aged, the unemployed. He is especially interested in the housing problems of miners and steel workers, and, with the help of ECA aid, is able to build housing for them.

Communists Rotting, Denmark Poll Shows

If something is rotten in Denmark, it is likely the Communist Party.

Complete returns from that country's latest parliamentary election showed the Communists polled only 94,000 votes out of a total of two million. Now the smallest group in Parliament, the CP's representation was cut from nine to seven seats.

Testimony Before Senate Unit Shows:

Firms Can Hire Ex-Convicts For Mysterious Duties

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

FRANK LIVORSI, one of those strange underworld characters who moves and makes his living in a dark, mysterious substrata of American society, was testifying before the Senate's crime investigating committee.

"I don't break no laws," he said, with a faint show of indignation. Caught unwillingly in the committee's net, Livorsi clung stubbornly to this line throughout his testimony, no matter into what blind alleys it led him or into what ridiculous contradictions it involved him.

He wasn't telling "no lies" he kept assuring the committee, and he kept strictly within the law. Nobody had anything on him. He regarded the fact brought out at the hearing that he had been arrested many times, but convicted only once as convincing proof of this.

The Special Committee to Investigate Organized Crime, before which Livorsi appeared at hearings held Aug. 22 in Washington, was authorized by a Senate Joint Resolution adopted last May. Sen. Estes Kefauver (D. Tenn.) heads the committee. Other members are Lester Hunt (D. Wyo.), Herbert R. O'Conor (D. Md.), Charles W. Tobey (R. N. H.) and Alexander Wiley (R. Wis.)

A PRELIMINARY report, issued recently by the committee after the conclusion of hearings held in Florida in July, states that the investigation will be continued "in as many states and cities as possible to determine the nationwide pattern of interstate criminal activities." Philadelphia and Chicago have been mentioned as the spots for hearings in the near future.

Extent of the hearings depends upon the funds made available. The committee's original appropriation of $150,000 was increased by another $50,000 voted by the Senate Aug. 30, with the possibility of futher appropriations if found feasible.

Livorsi may have revealed himself, in his testimony before the Senate committee, as merely a piker among the big shots of the underworld, but the story that was pulled out of him piecemeal by the committee's counsel, Rudolph Halley, gave brief glimpses of underground activity seemingly "within the law" that are frightening.

His tale is of particular significance to the labor movement, for out of it a vivid picture could be pieced together of how groups in the underworld hired to prey on trade unionists function. It's a secret world that few labor people know anything about, though they may come into contact with it indirectly at times without knowing it. Quite a few of them have been its victims.

FRANK LIVORSI
A hesitant witness

INDIVIDUAL gangsters assigned by a criminal syndicate to do a "job" on union leaders, however, are seldom discovered. There is some suspicion for example, that the attempted murder of Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers in April, 1948, and of his brother, Victor, a year later, were perpetrated by an organized crime syndicate, such as Livorsi's testimony indicated he is attached to.

Certainly any informed labor person hearing Livorsi's story of how he "worked" for two dress shops in New York after his release on parole from a two-year term he served on a narcotic charge, would think of the murder of William Lurye, organizer for the Intl. Ladies Garment Workers' Union (AFL), who was stabbed to death by gangsters in May, 1949.

Not that Livorsi said anything that could be connected with the murder of Lurye. But his testimony did reveal that there is a regular set-up under which firms can hire ex-jailbirds for mysterious and undisclosed duties.

The two dress concerns Livorsi said he worked for were Treasure Frocks and Eleanor Post. He was not asked if they were union or non-union firms, and the transcript of the testitmony mentions little about them, except that apparently some of Livorsi's buddies were connected with them.

There is nothing wrong, of course, in getting legitimate work for paroled prisoners. One of the provisions required by a parole board is that parolees show that they have "a place of employment" before they get released.

The hitch comes when gangsters and racketeers, under cover of a so-called legitimate business, take care of their paroled convict buddies by getting them fake jobs. It has often been found that thugs used by bosses engaged in a fight against a union, have been ex-convicts.

LIVORSI admitted readily in fact, bragged that he had given jobs to paroled prisoners. He said he'd given a job to "Big John" Ormonte, after he was paroled from a sentence on a narcotic charge.

This was at the time that Livorsi had bought a partnership in an outfit called the Tavern Fruit Co., which made jelly, he explained. Later he entered the Eatsum Food Co., a candy firm. Counsel Halley brought out that both outfits were accused of dealing in black market sugar.

Under the probing of Halley, Livorsi revealed that he had bought a "home" in New Jersey for $50,000, he believed, he wasn't sure about the price, but said he'd never had a chance to live in it. "I thought I was going to be a millionaire and then everything went upside down," he said plaintively. Later he sold it for $85,000.

His associate, Bill Giglio, also bought a large estate, formerly owned by Republican ex-Senator Barbour. Halley tried to get Livorsi to admit that the two estates were bought for gambling establishments, but the witness denied that any gambling equipment had been installed, although he admitted that Giglio had told him that he had a proposition from a casino in Panama.

LIVORSI ADMITTED being a good friend of "Little Augie" Casino, and said he might know Frank Costello, another notorious underworld figure, though he wasn't sure just where he'd met him—probably in some night club, he added. Pressed as to what club it was, Livorsi said it must have been the Copacabana. "A man like Frank frequents nothing but the best clubs," he said.

Halley also questioned Livorsi about filing an income tax return showing $290,000 income in 1946. The witness said he drew $1000 a week salary from the Tavern Fruit Juice Co. The Eatsum and Tavern outfits went broke. Then, he said, he followed the horses, and spent considerable time at the Patrician Restaurant in Long Island City for the last seven or eight years.

Asked if he was still in the narcotic business, Livorsi said in an injured tone, "Isn't it embarrassing to ask me a question like that?" He told Halley to ask the Narcotic Division about that if he wanted to. Pressed for an immediate answer, Livorsi finally said, "NO."

AT ABOUT this point in the testimony, Sen. Tobey, irked by Livorsi's matter-of-fact explanation of how he now made his living by playing cards, betting, shooting crap, etc., blew up.

"You contribute to the sound economy of the government by carrying that on, do you not?" he demanded ironically.

"Look," replied Livorsi, "I don't understand that. I don't understand words like that. You have to talk plain to me." He insisted that all his activities were legal. "I don't break no laws," he declared firmly.

"Did you ever produce anything for society's good?" demanded Sen. Tobey.

"I'm a good American," Livorsi said sullenly.

Livorsi is only one of the underworld characters who have appeared and will appear later before the committee, along with some more respectable citizens, but the thumb-nail sketch he drew of himself is probably fairly typical of the rank-and-file of that appalling and heavily populated undercover society, so unfamiliar to the average hardworking citizen.

Another field of underworld activity just as alarming as the "within the law" pursuits indicated by Livorsi, was explored by the committee hearings held earlier in Florida, where many of the denizens of the underworld have their swanky hangouts and racing enterprises.

In a recently issued preliminary report, the committee describes how criminal elements have brought "corruption into government and into many branches of industry," and permitted "the accumulation of economic power in the hands of those who rely on violence, intimidation, bribery and extortion as means of achieving their ends within the community."

The public, the committee warns, "must be made aware of the basic menace involved in gambling on a widely organized basis." It found evidence pointing to the possible assumption that various criminal organizations might be knit into one or more nation-wide syndicates. At any rate, states the committee's report "it does begin to appear that the methods of operation are strikingly similar and either by coincidence or design follow a common pattern."

"In every city the committee has checked," the report states, "there have been many similiarities to the pattern disclosed in Florida. Many profitable criminal activities have been infiltrated or absorbed by them. In some cases violence has been used and in others corrupt political influence."

Indignation Meetings Net CWA Pact After Talks Flop

MILITANT ACTION by CIO Communications Workers Division 69 won for members what months of sweet reason had failed to produce—a contract covering the Washington-Idaho area with the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co.

The pact gave average increases of between 5c and 6c an hour for plant clerical, accounting and traffic workers, compressed many major progression schedules to 6½ years, and resulted in the reclassification of a number of towns with subsequent pay boosts beyond the general increases.

The CWA members went into action after the company refused to move on most major issues. First, operators in Yakima, Wash., walked off the job for a seven-hour "indignation" meeting over the company's failure to boost its wage offer beyond its original 1½c an hour.

Then more than 300 operators at Tacoma, Wash., went out on strike because the company refused to listen to reason on the matter of reclassification of towns. Additional "indignation" meetings followed quickly at Olympia and Shelton, Wash.

ALL THAT happened in two weeks. Then the company, which had about run out of "executives" to man long distance phones, sat down to negotiate. Nineteen uninterrupted hours later they initialed the contract.

Across the continent, meantime, 11,000 traffic workers represented by Division 55 were getting another kind of a deal.

The New Jersey Supreme Court, the state's top judiciary body, handed down an order staying application of the $2.50 wage award granted the workers in a state compulsory arbitration law award. The action reversed an earlier ruling by the Appellate Division of the State Superior Court, which had directed the New Jersey Bell Telephone Co. to pay the award.

The highest court's order is in effect pending a hearing. It compelled the company to post a $1 million bond to assure payment of the award, which would have made the pay boost effective on April 20.

Textile Union Wins Pensions In Canada

COMPANY-FINANCED pensions of $60 monthly, believed by the CIO Textile Workers to be the highest ever written into a Canadian labor agreement, have been won by the union at Courtaulds (Canada), Ltd., of Cornwall, Ont.

The pensions were won along with wage increases and shorter hours by negotiators headed by Sam Baron, TWUA Canadian director, and Pres. Tom Duffy of Local 779. About 1850 members of Local 779, which is affiliated through the CIO with the Canadian Congress of Labour, share in the benefits.

The pension paid for by the company will be in addition to any other pension or income the retired employe may have, Baron and Duffy said.

The plan provides for optional retirement at 62 and normal retirement at 68, both after 15 years of service, but with a proviso that some employes may continue working after reaching 68 upon approval of a joint labor-management committee.

"Trying to be funny, soldier?"

OWIU History Covers 30 Drama-Packed Years

BY RAY DAVIDSON

THE CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union is a relatively small international, spread from Moose Jaw in Saskatchewan to Calcasieau Parish in Louisiana and from Boston in Massachusetts to Santa Maria in California.

The oil industry is sprawled this far and farther, too, and every inch of the way it is a powerful, domineering force. It spends plenty of money to get its own way in commerce, politics, education and labor relations.

For more than 30 years the Oil Workers Intl. Union has been scrapping with the big, powerful and arrogant oil industry.

The Oil Workers have tussled with almost any oil company you can name in almost any oil town you can find on the map. The Oil Workers were there when colorful history was written in Signal Hill, Burkburnett, Spindletop, Ranger, Desdemona, Smackover and all the other boom towns.

THE OIL Workers were there when CIO was born, being a charter member. After CIO began, the Oil Workers put their long-

HARVEY O'CONNOR
Writes Oil Union History

cherished ideas of industrial unionism into fast practice by organizing a majority of the nation's big, sprawling refineries.

There have been several occasions when the oil companies have marked the oil union off as busted—but the union never was busted. It has often been down, but it has never died. It always shows up after every scrap, bigger and saucier than ever.

These remarks about the Oil Workers Intl. Union are to point up the fact that the union has had a rough and tumble, exciting history.

THAT HISTORY has been compiled and reduced to print in the History of Oil Workers Intl. Union (CIO), a book of 450 readable pages written by Harvey O'Connor and published by the union.

This history, while in part it parallels the general history of unionism, is different because OWIU always has been something of a frontier union—at least it has operated largely in frontier country insofar as unionism goes. It started in California and Texas, most of its history was written out West, and the heaviest membership still lies in the West and Southwest.

That makes its history different.

Of course, OWIU has its drawing-room side, too. Its representatives have not been bashful about putting on white shirts and going into the home offices of the major companies in New York and into the offices of the governmental big wheels in Washington.

SPEAKING of Washington — a little secret can be told now. During the depression, membership in the international union dwindled to about 300. But when NRA was establishing labor codes for various industries in 1933, officers of the union borrowed money to journey to Washington and represent the interests of labor in setting up the petroleum code. They had a big voice in writing the petroleum code, although few knew the union had only 300 members. The bluff worked and now the story can be told.

The dominant factor in the oil industry in the United States for more than 75 years has been Standard Oil. It was this John D. Rockefeller company that established a strangling monopoly on the industry before the turn of the century.

In 1911, Standard was busted up by a court decree, but the 11 Standard companies that resulted have continued to this day to exert a domineering, although not completely monopolistic, influence on the industry.

IT WAS John D. Rockefeller, Jr.'s gunmen who slew the women and kids in the Ludlow Massacre in April, 1914. From this massacre came one of the most significant developments in American unionism—and by far the most significant hindrance to oil unionism. With public scorn turned on him and perhaps a twinge of conscience paining him after the Ludlow murders, the younger Rockefeller established unions in his companies.

Nowhere under the sun has company unionism prospered as it has in the Standard Oil companies. Particularly is it effective in the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, which is by far the largest oil company in the world.

Standard management plays the company union game with a finesse that is unbelievable except to the real union men who have tried to organize Standard of Jersey plants.

Standard of Jersey, with assists from the other Standard companies, has tried all through history and still tries to set the patterns of labor relations in the oil industry.

Pitted against Standard all the way has been OWIU.

A PARADOX in the picture is that OWIU has relatively few members among Standard employes—practically none among Standard of Jersey men. Yet these two are locked in an eternal combat to determine the wage and condition policies of the oil industry.

Standard tries to set patterns through its company unions that are just good enough to "keep the boys quiet." OWIU tries to set patterns that give the workers justice. In recent years, OWIU has been winning.

Patterns set by OWIU practically always are applied in the company union plants; thus OWIU bargains for many more men than it collects dues from.

OWIU had its birth back in 1916-1917 in California and Texas. In those state, local unions sprang up as oil workers fought for more money and relief from the 70-hour and 84-hour week. AFL gave them federal charters.

HAMMOND, IND., LOCAL 210 of the CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union uses a Labor Day to good advantage. Thousands of helium-inflated balloons were given children. Each ballon bore the inscription: "Register-Vote." This scene is peaceful, in view of the oil industry's turbulent history.

These Locals staged some rough strikes, came out with a fair batting average, and were given an international charter by AFL in 1918. The name given by the AFL was as Intl. Association of Oil Field, Gas Well and Refinery Workers of America.

In 1918, its first convention was held—in El Paso, Tex. There was no oil around El Paso in those days—but believe it or not, that town is halfway between California and the original oil field of east Texas.

Like many other unions, OWIU boomed during the years immediately following World War I, then slid down under the open shop campaign of the middle and late 1920s. Although it went down to 300 members, it never died.

UP TO 1933, it was mostly an organization of oil field hands—the guys who drill the wells and pump the oil out of them.

After 1933, in the New Deal resurgence of organizing, it made great gains in the refineries and it is in the refineries that the union's greatest strength lies now. It was after 1933 that the union began getting members east of the Mississippi in substantial numbers for the first time.

All the while, oil workers had been screaming for industrial unionism. That caused a lot of grief with AFL.

In 1935, OWIU was one of the group of AFL unions that formed the Committee for Industrial Organization. When these unions seceded and formed the present CIO, OWIU was on the front row voting "aye" to the move.

THE LONG name bestowed by AFL back in '18 was changed to Oil Workers Intl. Union in 1937. That same year the union put a clause in its constitution forbidding membership to Communists and Fascists. That, pardner, was long before the big drive against Communists after World War II.

Since 1933, and particularly since 1940, the union has grown rapidly. Now, it has 100,000 members. It has written contracts that are second to none.

OWIU members have been active for many years in politics although they have been forced to do their work in such politically backward states as Texas. They chased Martin Dies out of congress practically single-handed. They take particular delight in defeating county sheriffs who are unkind to strikers. Many sheriffs in the oil towns now carry coffee to the boys on the picket lines, instead of carrying the boys to the jug, as was the case a few years ago.

APPROXIMATELY a third of OWIU's membership is in Texas, although the remainder are scattered through about 30 states and six Canadian provinces.

These facts are given as background to the colorful history of OWIU. The story of how this union began as an antidote to the brutal treatment of oil workers, of how it has fought through the years and is still fighting the exceptionally clever company unionism of Standard, of how it has struck and won and struck and lost, of how it has battled for its rights before labor boards, of how it has been wounded by internal strife and how it has healed these wounds—all this is told in the fast-flowing style in the History of Oil Workers Intl. Union.

O'CONNOR IS AN old-time unionist who served from 1945 to 1948 as publicity director of OWIU. Since retiring from that job, he has spent many months in collecting the wealth of facts found in this history.

The main story of the international is succinctly told in less than 100 pages. It is followed by individual histories of scores of the locals—a set of records invaluable for the person who wants to make a case study of successful and unsuccessful attempts at unionism.

The book was published by OWIU and is sold direct from the union's headquarters, 1840 California St., Denver, Colo. Price: $3.00.

Democracy Better Than Harmony In Oil Workers' Lexicology

Democracy is a precious heritage to members of the Oil Workers Intl. Union, according to Harvey O'Connor, author of the oil union's history.

O'Connor noted that union members think democracy is better than harmony, in case you can't have both. Their officers must stand for election every year and usually they have competition.

Despite the fact that Oil Workers are often not unanimous on their selection of candidates, they have a way of forgetting old grudges after elections are over. There have been few cases in which defeated candidates have been disaffected.

OWIU has made much of its history in the South. More than a decade before CIO and AFL opened their southern organizing campaigns, OWIU was actively organizing in the south and had its largest membership in Texas. One of its greatest contributions to humanity has been in the organization of Negroes in the south. The lot of the Negro oil worker has improved immeasurably under OWIU contracts and under local peace officers elected by OWIU votes.

The Negroes have made a great contribution to OWIU, too. The people in that race take the title "Brother" seriously. Deeply religious, they take their union obligation vows as pledges to be dissolved only by death.

While the battle rages on to stop segregation in the South, white and black OWIU members have been meeting and marching side by side for many years.

Profiteering Isn't Legitimate Reward—CIO

AMERICAN business has piled up profits "beyond any bounds that could be described as legitimate" in many of the post-war years, the Economic Outlook, CIO research publication, said last week.

"The record should be clear," it stated, "that business has prospered as never before during the past decade. Great profits have been earned and enormous liquid assets accumulated by American corporations.

"Let it be stated clearly that no one can quarrel with any businesses making a legitimate profit. In the enterprise system as it operates in America, legitimate profits are necessary to reward risks, provide incentive for expansion and lower the cost of production.

"The need for legitimate reward should not be confused, however, with profiteering and gouging.

"PROFITS in many of the postwar years . . . were piling up for purposes which went far beyond the normal operation of the enterprise system. They were used to foster monopoly and to pile up huge cash reserves. The enormous accumulation of undistributed profits by 1949 was already menacing the very levels of employment production."

The CIO recognized the "excess character" of the postwar profits, the publication continued, by pleading for an excess profits tax "that would chop down these enormous sums being piled up by corporations."

It also urged a tax on undistributed profits to help stockholders get their hands on the hoarded cash and turn it into new investment which would increase competition and create new jobs, as well a curb price-raising and profiteering.

"With the outbreak of hostilities in Korea and the prospect of great defense spending," the Outlook said, "the need for legislation to curb profiteering as well as to help pay the expenses of our new military efforts is even greater.

"In the postwar years profits had already exceeded any legitimate needs and expectations. Under the impact of the new defense effort they will go even higher. An effective excess profits tax will help curb speculation and profiteering which otherwise will inevitably seize large sections of American business.

"At a time when the nation is drafting men into the armed forces, it is unthinkable that we should permit profiteering to continue."

An excess profits tax should be based on profits above "normal," not those of most postwar years, the Outlook added, and should raise $8 to $10 billion a year. A mere increase in the general corporate income tax will be merely passed on to the consumers, it warned.

THE OUTLOOK posed the question, "How Much Profit Is Enough?" It didn't undertake to answer it, but offered convincing evidence that what's being amassed at present is more than enough for the nation's economic help.

Without complete figures, it estimated that net corporation profits in the second quarter of 1950 "were actually at an annual rate of about $20 billion," or above the record set in 1948 when, for the whole year, net profits were $20.9 billion.

"All this, too, was before the Korean crisis," the Outlook added. "But estimates now put profits after taxes in the last half of 1950 at a new record rate of nearly $23 billion a year."

That would make it about 4½ times the net of $5 billion in 1939, when "the typical American corporation was looking at its income statement with considerable satisfaction." And it would make profits more than twice those of $10.8 billion chalked up in 1944.

In 1946, net gain after taxes totalled $13.9 billion. The next year they zoomed to $18.5 billion, and after reaching the 1948 peak, slipped off to a mere $17 billion in 1949.

SUCH HUGE profits, the Outlook commented, "have not been an entirely unmixed blessing for big business," and actually "have been so large as to embarrass many businessmen."

"A virtual profession has grown up in business circles and, indeed, in academic halls," it continued, "devoted to the preparation of 'emergency' defenses and rationalizations for these profits . . .

"These huge accumulations of retained earnings are a kind of 'inequity capital.'

"They are an inequitable form of capital in that they are drawn out of the hides of workers and consumers who are cast in the role of underwriting vast new facilities without receiving any share in running these new operations, without any share in deciding when they should be started, without any share in deciding where they should be started."

Dividends required about 69% of profits after taxes in 1929, with 31% being retained for whatever use corporation officials might decide to put it to. In 1947 only 35% of the net went into dividends, while 65% was being salted down. Things were not quite so bad last year—46% was passed out as dividends and 54% was cached away, the Outlook reported.

British Union Congress Swamps Commies To Back UN On Korea

COMMUNISTS and their supporters in the organized British labor movement took a 10-1 licking last week at the annual British Trades Union Congress convention in Brighton, England.

After some of the most tumultuous debate in the Congress's history, delegates voted full support to the United Nations in Korea and to the Labor government's rearmament program. With delegates having one vote for each worker they represented, 6,942,000 ballots were cast in support of the resolution and but 595,000 against it.

The vote supported the Congress's general council, which had recommended the policy in its annual report. It came after two days of sniping and sneering at the United States by a noisy left-wing minority.

DURING the debate that preceded it, Sir Vincent Tewson, Congress secretary, won heavy aplause when he declared that 99% of Great Britain's union members feel a debt of gratitude is due the United States for its speedy intervention on behalf of the UN in Korea.

He labelled the North Korean invasion of the Korean Republic as an act of aggression, attacked the Communists as "traitors and saboteurs," and branded their exploitation of the universal fear of war for their own tactical purposes as "criminal."

Arthur Deakin, head of the Transport and General Workers, the country's largest union, and also a member of the General Council, pulled no punches in urging the Congress to stand up against "Red fascism" and the "filthy philosophy of communism."

Sir William Lawther, vice-chairman of the Congress and president of the Mineworkers, told the delegates they had a choice between supporting the Labor government and following "the road that will lead ultimately to your destruction."

The resolution also condemned the Communists' Stockholm "peace petition" as "a disgraceful and hollow sham."

THE MINORITY group passionately supported a resolution calling upon the government to reopen in the UN the question of international control of atomic energy in the hope of outlawing the atom bomb. However, despite fiery oratory in which they accused the United States of aggression in Korea and ballyhooed the Stockholm petition, the resolution was defeated by a vote of 5,601,000 to 1,972,000.

It was introduced by Walter Padley, Labor member of Parliament and a delegate of the Shop and Distributive Workers, who in presenting it endorsed the General Council's policy and attacked communism as "irremediably foul." The blunt-spoken Deakin pointed out that some of the support for the resolution was due to the fact that it was in line with the Stockholm petition.

Earlier, left wingers among the delegates and in the galleries gave Alex Rose, AFL, fraternal delegate, a vigorous heckling when he denounced communism, Soviet Russia and the North Korean invasion.

THE DELEGATES' acceptance of the government's rearmament program meant that they are willing to continue to undergo the economic hardships and the shortages that have marked British life for many years, and to delay the goal of a better life for the majority of Britons, which has been the aim of the Labor Party.

Prime Minister Attlee was roundly cheered when he asked them to "accept the sacrifices in the interest of security." He told them that wages would have to be held down voluntarily, that there would have to be some redistribution of labor, and that the stress on armaments will cut the amount of civilian production available to sustain the nation's standards.

He promised to see that the necessary sacrifices are "fairly borne" and held out only the hope that increased production and productivity might offset adverse effects of higher defense spending.

Urban League Hears Potofsky Pledge Aid On Civil Rights

ECONOMIC equality for racial minorities offers the basis for ending discrimination in the United States, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers told the National Urban League Conference at Grand Rapids, Mich., last week.

The CIO, he declared, will lead the campaign for civil rights legislation and the passage of federal and state fair employment practices law. Full employment, he added, is one of the strongest weapons against discrimination.

He described race hatred as a social disease caused by miseducation, misinformation and lack of economic opportunity.

"In periods of relative prosperity," he said, "the peddlers of race hatred are without many followers. Mass unemployment invariably hits the Negro first, and brings with it all the hateful manifestations of fear, bigotry and race hatred. The frustrated and the insecure always look for a scapegoat."

POTOFSKY NOTED that the ACW in its beginning was composed of exploited racial minorities, and that the CIO has been working toward better working conditions, in both north and south, for all workers regardless of sex, creed or color.

He lauded the American Negro as a "bulwark of democracy against totalitarianism either from the left or the right," and added:

"It is a tribute to these millions of (Negro) Americans that they have never succumbed to demagogues seeking to exploit their deep-seated and geniune grievances.

"They have learned that the solution to the Negro problem is more democracy, not less; and that the unremitting fight for economic and political equality must go on."

"Which one is the customer? Because the other is fired."

Control Bill Now Law; Rent Lids In Danger

PRESIDENT Truman signed the so-called Economic Controls bill last week, minus several features which CIO had urgently favored.

One principal omission, which the White House sought to remedy by asking separate legislation, was failure to strengthen the inadequate rent control law passed as a "compromise" in 1950.

The 1950 version of rent control was worse in two important respects than its predecessor.

1. It ends controls automatically on Dec. 31, 1950, unless local government bodies vote before then to ask that controls be continued until June 30, 1951.

2. It leaves state governors powerless to veto any local decontrol action.

(This second feature is responsible for the difficulties faced by tenants in Akron, O., where the city council voted to lift controls and Gov. Lausche, who favored keeping them, was powerless to intervene.

(The Akron tenants therefore were forced to get 7500 signatures on a petition to put the question to November referendum. They now face a long campaign to win the referendum when it occurs.)

REP. SPENCE (D. Ky.) and Sen. Maybank (D. S. C.), the chairmen of the House and Senate Banking Committees, who for all practical purposes will write whatever new rent control legislation is passed, are significantly silent. It is understood that the White House wants a simple one-year extension of the 1949 law, which would wipe out the two offending features. The most the two chairmen are reported willing to seek is moving the automatic local expiration date forward to March 1, 1951.

This would give the new Congress another chance—with results depending on the outcome of the November elections.

Up to Sept. 5, some 58 cities, towns and villages with a combined population of 6,326,510 have informed the Office of the Housing Expediter that they wished rent control continued past Dec. 31. Another 25 notices have been received by OHE but not processed—making the total 83. Largest cities in this group were Chicago and Boston.

(By a freak of state law, communities in Illinois had to act by Sept. 1. A total of approximately 35 communities had asked for continued controls by the deadline.)

Other states represented in the list are Ohio, Connecticut, Minnesota, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and New Jersey, where a concentrated drive by CIO and other unions has resulted in at least 15 such local actions already, with more to come.

THERE IS NO accurate knowledge, on the other hand, of the number of local-option decontrol votes taken. The best figures OHE can produce on this score are as follows:

On July 1, 1950, the date the new law went into effect, the population according to the 1940 census of areas still under control was 58,713,294. Still under controls or Sept. 1 were communities with a combined population, again according to the 1940 census, of 57,300,000.

This would seem to indicate that communities totalling approximately more than a million population had been decontrolled between July and September. Whether the bulk of these were by local vote, OHE was unable to say.

At any rate, OHE guessed that some 257,000 dwellings had been decontrolled between July and September.

One factor complicating the situation in cities and towns is a requirement by Congress that local-option rent control are effective only when three-fifths of the membership of the local governing body votes in favor.

Nobody seems to know whether this requirement means three-fifths of the entire membership of the body. Several instances have arisen where three-fifths of those present favored continuing rent control, but enough members were absent when the vote was taken to cast the result in doubt.

U. S. Housewives Are Ruining Meat Industry, It Says Here

A NEW SENATE Office Building record for beating around the bush was established last week by spokesmen for the meat industry, both retail and packing.

They were trying to explain why prices go up the way they do to a Senate Agriculture Subcommittee headed by Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.) which is investigating price spreads between consumer and farmer.

Paul Hadlick, committee counsel, told the hearing that price charts submitted by meat store chains "indicate an attempt to set a high base in case controls are put on."

J. C. Zinc, of Philadelphia, boss of meats for the eastern division of the A & P Stores, said it wasn't so. So did J. Arnold Anderson, who fixes meat prices for the Safeway Stores. Both of them maintained that the increase in prices was "reasonable" in view of the higher prices they had to pay for their meat.

Gillette was unconvinced. He just couldn't understand why the price of sirloin steak in a Washington area store of the Safeway chain jumped 22c to $1.11 a pound between late June and July, when prices of carcass beef went up only a few cents a pound. Nor could he understand why round steak in Washington A & P Stores increased 12c in the same period.

ANDERSON and Zinc said consumer resistance was so strong this summer that prices fluctuated unduly. What they meant was that prices got so high housewives wouldn't buy, so that rather than take a total loss on their meats they cut the prices back, then started over again. Besides, they said, it isn't fair to compare the retail price of one cut with changes in carcass prices.

"We have to sell all the cuts," Anderson sagely observed.

He maintained that "gross profits" as a percentage of the retail price is the only fair way to judge. Using this method, he said, Safeway's area profits have ranged from a low of 2.32% to a high of 11.24% since the first of the year.

Gillette was unpleasant enough to point out that a 10% profit on a cut marked 50c is only 5c, but on a $1 sale it is 10c.

THEN THE packing industry had its crack at the record. The packers aren't getting rich, Vice Pres. James C. Cooney, of Wilson & Co., and Vice Pres. J. W. Christian, of the Cudahy Packing Co., testified without cracking a smile.

Cudahy lost money last year but isn't doing badly this year—even though it isn't making as much from 100 lbs. of meat as it has averaged in the last decade, Christian said. He pointed in the direction of the nation's housewives and complained that "it's very difficult" to earn the $1 to $1.25 the company tries to make on every hundredweight sold, what with consumers refusing to buy when prices reach a certain level. Nobody said anything about the housewives' meat money running out.

"We have price control in this country right now," Cooney mourned, "and the housewife sets it. When prices go up too high, she won't pay them and they have to come down."

In a written statement presented at the hearing, Cooney said meat production can be increased 35% in the next three to five years if the government will guarantee producers a floor price but no ceiling.

At Long Last, Wholesale Food Prices Show Drop

For the first time in 11 weeks, the Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index declined last week. It dropped 4 cents, as of Sept. 6, to $6.65. A week ago it was $6.69, highest level since Sept. 28, 1948. The index on June 13 was $5.94, and for 11 weeks it climbed steadily or remained unchanged.

"I still don't like your reference to me as the 'Party of the second part' in our working agreement!"

Los Angeles Tenants Win Legal Round; Court To Hear Appeal On Decontrol

THE LOS ANGELES Tenants' Council now has about a month to gather its forces together for the next round of its court fight to retain rent control in the war-boom area. (L. A. now has a population of 4,116,901 and is growing at the rate of 100,000 a year.)

Sometime in October, there will be a hearing before a three-judge U. S. Circuit Court, on an appeal by the Tenants' Council. A lower court had refused to grant a permanent injunction restraining Tighe Woods, rent control chief, from putting into effect a Los Angeles City Council vote decontrolling rents.

The Circuit Court said it would hear the appeal, and meantime, it issued a temporary injunction keeping controls on.

The Los Angeles City Council voted decontrol July 28. It would have gone into effect August 28, except for the many-pronged fight made by the Tenant's group, which includes practically every union in Los Angeles and seven other citizens' organizations.

The unaffiliated Intl. Association of Machinists, by agreement with the other groups, asked the lower court for the injunction, which the court granted temporarily but then refused to make permanent. The Machinists were required to post $1000 bond against possible "damages" to landlords from triple-damage suits brought by tenants subjected to illegal rent increases.

The Machinists immediately appealed the decision to the Circuit Court. There, the landlords—emboldened by the $1000 bond they had extracted from the union in the first round—asked bond of several hundred thousand dollars.

The landlords lost that round. The judges were unanimous in refusing to order the bond posted. Furthermore, they ordered the landlords to give the Machinists their $1000 back. David Feller, CIO associate general counsel, represented the tenant group before the Circuit Court, and will appear in future hearings.

Meanwhile, the Tenants' Council is circulating a petition for a city-wide referendum to undo the City Council's action, and another one asking recall of two councilmen who supported the landlord's lobby.

Uncurbed Rents Zoom Skyward

Here are some cold facts about what happens after rent controls go off:

The Bureau of Labor Statistics, using the 1935-39 average rentals as "normal," reports these rises in rents in Birmingham, Ala., and Richmond, Va.

RICHMOND: July, 1949, rentals 14.8% above pre-war. April, 1950, rents 15% above pre-war. Decontrol effective June 25. July rentals 26.7% over pre-war.

BIRMINGHAM: May, 1950, rents 43.8% above pre-war. Decontrol effective May 25. June rents 54% over pre-war, and July rents 67% above.

11c-An-Hr. Raise Won At Cudahy

An 11c-an-hour raise was granted Aug. 31 to 10,000 workers in 10 Cudahy Packing Co. plants under a new contract with the Packinghouse Workers.

The contract, retroactive to Aug. 11, runs for two years and contains three wage reopeners at six-month intervals.

Earlier in August two of the other Big Four packers—Armour and Swift—agreed to the 11c increase in negotiations with UPW and the AFL Meat Cutters.

The remaining Big Four packer—Wilson—refuses to sign a contract with UPW. However, Wilson has given its workers about the same increases granted as those under the new union agreement.

"Oops! Black brush."

Rep. Patman To House:

Ed Rumely 'Plain, Unadulterated American Fascist'

MR SPEAKER, I rise to warn the American people and the Congress of the United States about a man, an evil man, and an evil institution he directs. This man constitutes as grave a threat to the well-being and security of the U. S. as any Communist within our borders, yet he is no Communist.

He does use their tactics; for example, the constant repetition of the big lie. He defies the constitutional authority of the House of Representatives just as the Communists have consistently done. He is at least as arrogant. He wraps himself up in the cloak of our constitution, and he assumes a super-duper patriotism. He pretends to be a defender of our freedom. Actually he would destroy it.

Gentlemen, this man and the organization he runs aim to spread confusion and dissension among the American people as would any Communist individual or organization.

In years past I warned you about this man and his sinister purpose. I told you who Ed Rumely was. He was an American Fascist, plain and unadulterated, when I first revealed his un-American activities in 1944.

Ed Rumely is the same plain, unadulterated native Fascist today, and his committee for a Fascist government in the United States, alias the Committee for Constitutional Government, is up to its old tricks of trying to fool all the people all the time on legislative matters of vital importance to the people of this nation.

REP. WRIGHT PATMAN

* * *

RUMELY AND HIS Committee for a Fascist government in the United States have fooled a considerable number of ministers of God and school teachers and small-business men and decent, ordinary citizens who do not know the background of this ex-convict and who do not know the real objective of his fascistic committee.

* * *

I WILL TELL YOU precisely what I mean by Fascist and fascism, and in the course of my remarks you will learn that Ed Rumely and his extreme, reactionary committee fit the description.

Just what is a Fascist? A Fascist is a man who in reality does not believe in the rights of man. A Fascist is a man who, ignoring all human rights, worships property rights and power. Such were the kind of men who put Hitler into power, and before Hitler, Mussolini.

Just what is fascism? The late, renowned Heywood Broun (Ed. note—columnist and founder of the CIO Newspaper Guild) called it a "dictatorship from the extreme right, a government which is run by a small group of large industrialists and financial lords. The mere presence of the Supreme Court, a House of Representatives, a Senate and a President would not be sufficient protection against the utter centralization of power in the hands of a few men who hold no office at all."

Fascism cynically denies the ability of the people to govern themselves through their own chosen representatives. Under fascism, as under communism, the individual is a vassal of the state. Under fascism, the rich get richer, the poor, more downtrodden.

Under fascism, monopolies are handed over to the chosen few in the government hierarchy. Under fascism, labor unions are used to suppress labor. Under fascism, taxation is not based upon ability to pay; the tax load is thrown upon those least able to pay while the rich are encouraged to become wealthier.

Under fascism, any forward-looking legislation such as social security, soil conservation, veterans benefits, public housing, national health insurance—all such legislation is ridiculed and dubbed socialism or communism.

Under fascism, just as under communism, religion is ridiculed, because the individual can look to a higher power than the state. The state cannot tolerate people looking to any power than itself.

* * *

GENTLEMEN, practically every piece of propaganda turned out the past decade or more—running into tens of millions of copies of speeches, articles and statements—from Ed Rumely's phony Constitutional Committee has been saturated with the obnoxious odor of fascistic bias.

This propaganda, if we examine a single item, would not necessarily prove fascistic, but when you add all of the material together, you cannot escape the fact that what Ed Rumely and his committee are trying to perpetrate upon the American people is a violently reactionary government, which adds up to the Fascist state.

* * *

USUALLY THE purchaser of Rumely's "bunkum" does not know where the books, pamphlets and other fascistic material are sent. Sometimes Rumely asks the mass purchaser to signify what schools and universities he would like to saturate with his poison. Very often the sucker complies.

The sale of books and literature operation has another purpose to the so-called Committee for Constitutional Government besides hiding the identity of its financial backers. It has been used as an inducement for individuals and corporations to supply the CCG with funds on the basis of a tax benefit to the purchaser-donor.

THE BIG LIE THAT Ed Rumely spews, hoping that by repeating it the people will come to believe it truth, is that everything that has happened in America since the advent of Franklin D. Roosevelt is socialistic and communistic, and he does not differentiate between New Dealism, the Truman Fair Deal, socialism or communism—this cruel untruth in spite of the fact that one major corporation in America last year made $600 million net after all taxes.

Rumely would have the people believe that white is black and black is white. He is against rheumatism, socialism communism. Well, who is not? . . .

J. HOWARD PEW

Gentlemen, if this renegade, Rumely, had his way and could succeed in abolishing all of our social legislation passed since 1933 under Roosevelt and Truman, we would have complete anarchy in America.

* * *

I AM . . . HOPING that my remarks will somehow get back to those unthinking, irrational millionaire suckers who are counting upon Ed Rumely and his ilk to save their America. I hope these foolish men wise up and dry up their contributions. I hope that they will come to understand that the way to defeat communism, which they fear and we deplore, is to make America a country worth living in for all of our citizens, not alone for a favored few.

* * *

NOW, LET US take a look at the ex-convict's stationery for his Committee for Constitutional Government (sic). Partial list of advisory board:

Edward H. Moore, Tulsa, Okla. — Ed Moore was a one-term Republican Senator who thought that the Congress of the U.S. operated exclusively for millionaires.

Frank E. Gannett, Rochester, N.Y.—This New York publisher ran for the Vice Presidential nomination several times. Even the old-guard wing of the GOP could not stomach this Fascist-minded gentleman.

Louis J. Taber, Columbus, O. — An alleged farm leader whose advice to farmers has long been that of a glassy-eyed banker. Taber was a Hoover farm adviser, and you remember what happened to the farmers under the administration of the great engineer.

J. H. Gipson, Caldwell, Iowa—State Director, Republican State Advistory Committee, in 1945.

O. R. McGuire, Washington, D.C.—Was counsel for the National Association of Property Owners and Taxpayers, an arch-Republican outfit.

Mrs. Henry Doorly, Omaha, Neb.—Her husband owns and operates the Omaha World Herald that is so fiendishly Republican it frequently makes Col. McCormick's Chicago Tribune look like a pro-administration newspaper by comparison.

And so on down the list it goes so far as Rumely's advisory board is concerned.

* * *

. . . patriarch Lammot du Pont, one of the most unreconstructed Tories in America, who has not yet learned that, if you do not throw a bone to a hungry dog, the dog might bite you. Mr. duPont is one of the principal donors to any and all reactionary causes, including the lost cause of the GOP.

* * *

. . . Mr. J. Howard Pew, one of the principal owners and operators of the Grand Old Party, who for nearly two decades has thrown vast sums away in 48 states and nationally for the lost cause of the GOP, also worked hard sending telegrams for Rumely's front organization, America's Future.

* * *

CONSISTENTLY through the years this ex-convict, who has long been a Fascist, says one thing in his propaganda while acting precisely contrary to it. For example, while this subversive character, Rumely, pretends to laud the Congress and is forever expressing fear that its power is being diminished, he is contemptuous, in reality, of not only the members who are wise to him and expose him, but of those who serve him.

Press Gave Little Space To Speech Exposing Ex-Convict's Activities

The CIO NEWS reprints herewith, as a public service, a few excerpts from a speech delivered by Rep. Patman (D. Tex.) in the House on Aug. 29—because the daily press paid little attention to his exposure of the machinations of the Committee for Constitutional Government and its executive secretary, the ex-convict Edward A. Rumely.

The CCG, as Rep. Patman points out, is an "evil institution." Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.), chairman of the House Lobby Investigating Committee, described the CCG as the center of the many reactionary organizations which aim at rendering organized labor too weak to do anything. Rumely and the CCG are important to every American, because some of the nation's biggest, richest corporations have given them thousands of dollars—either as outright gifts or through purchases of their propaganda.

For each of his conclusions on the economic and social philosophy of the CCG and its operating head, Rep. Patman presented impressive and conclusive substantiating evidence which is not reprinted here because of space limitations.

Rep. Patman, who is chairman of the Special House Committee To Conduct a Study of the Problems of Small Business, has had a wary eye on the CCG and Rumely for many years. The day after his speech, the House voted to cite Rumely for contempt of the lobby probe committee.

EDWARD A. RUMELY

Rumely Linked with GOP

Now, if I have been derelict in explaining to the Congress the tie-up between Ed Rumely and some principal owners and operators of the most reactionary elements of the GOP, then I must apologize for what I said earlier in my speech about the strange kinship between the ex-convict and the Republican Party. Can it be said that the Republicans will never turn their backs on Rumely?

Spread Eagle Act Pays

The Committee for a Fascist Government, alias the Committee for Constitutional Government, and its phony front organizations—such as Fighers for Freedom, America's future, and the Constitution and Free Enterprise Foundation (note the patriotic names Rumely gives his enterprises)—print and distribute books, produce radio shows, and feed propaganada generally.

Rumely, incidentally, gets a 4% commission (above $16,000 sales) on every book sold.

N.J. CIO Finds Registration Facts Grim

THE NEW JERSEY CIO Council has just finished taking a careful look at registration figures for the state—after breaking them down into counties, congressional districts and urban wards.

It turned up some pretty grim facts, Pres. Carl Holderman reported:

"In every case the industrial, urban counties and congressional districts had more unregistered voters than rural ones; the major city in each county had more unregistered voters than its suburban neighbors; and the lower-income, working class wards had a higher percentage of non-registants than did the silk stocking, upper-class wards."

He gave a few samples.

ESSEX COUNTY, which contains the state's largest city, Newark, had the highest percentage of non-registered voters, 38.8%. Cape May County, which is entirely rural or resort, had only 7.1% unregistered.

In Newark, 43.5% of the voters were unregistered, while in the rest of Essex county only 34.4% were not on the rolls.

In the Newark wards of the 11th congressional district 46.7% were unregistered, while in the Oranges (Orange, East Orange, West Orange and South Orange), which make up the rest of the district, the unregistered were but 33.4%

In Upper Montclair the silk stocking 1st ward had only 20.3% of its adult residents not registered, while in the 4th ward of Montclair, with a heavy Negro, working class population, 41.6% were not registered.

AT THE same time, Holderman pointed out that voters can enroll at night this year in the seven leading industrial counties —Essex, Hudson, Passaic, Union, Mercer, Burlington and Camden—and that the statewide total should be boosted considerably before the rolls are closed.

"I urge every adult citizen of our state," he said, "regardless of union affiliation or lack of it; regardless of party preference; and regardless of past indifferences or difficulties, to take advantage of extra evening hours for registration and to become eligible to cast a ballot in the supremely important Nov. 7 congressional election."

ICFTU Reaffirms Stand On Korea

The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has reaffirmed its support of United Nations police action in Korea.

In a telegram to UN Secretary-General Trygve Lie, the ICFTU's general secretary, J. H. Oldenbroek, said the new world-wide organization was determined "to unmask and smash totalitarian-inspired attempts designed to disrupt United Nations efforts to defeat aggression in Korea."

Oldenbroek reminded Lie that the ICFTU backed UN action from the beginning and asked that the Security Council be informed of the ICFTU's view. Meanwhile, ICFTU Pres. Paul Finet of Belgium circulated "An Open Letter To All Friends of Peace," pointing out that threats to peace in the modern world come only from dictators.

Textile Workers Are Set To Demand More Pay Before Contracts Expire

THE CIO Textile Workers will seek a wage increase for New England members even though existing contracts do not expire for months to come, TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve announced last week.

The announcement was made at a Labor Day rally of union members from Fall River and New Bedford, Mass.

Rieve pointed out that New England textile workers have not had a wage increase since early in 1948. Since then, he added, both living costs and mill profits have increased.

Union agreements with northern woolen and worsted mills expire in February, 1951, those with cotton mills in the following month. But it would be a "moral outrage," Rieve asserted, for mill owners to force their employes to wait that long for higher wages.

TEXTILE PRICES have been forced upward faster in the last three months—since the start of the Korean crisis—than during the period after the end of OPA, Rieve told the workers. He described the boosts as "profiteering, pure and simple."

Rieve granted that raw cotton and wool cost the mills more than they did, but added that technological changes had brought about savings which far outweigh this factor.

"Even before Korea, wage increases were needed," he said. "Even before Korea, the money was there to pay them. Even if textile prices are rolled back to pre-Korean levels, and even if the cost of living goes down, a wage increase will be needed and the mills will have the money to meet it. . . .

"We have been patient — you have been patient. We can be patient no longer. We are going to get justice for the textile worker, and we're going to start right now."

Rieve promised that wages also will be raised in the South, so that northern manufacturers will be unable to complain that they are at a production cost disadvantage.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

As most everyone knows, it is now "ex" UOPWA and FTA. These initials stand for the discredited United Office and Professional Workers, and the Food, Tobacco, Agricultural and Allied Workers, which have been expelled from the CIO. The two unions are planning to join with Local 65, Distributors' Union, in a merger. The UOPWA is supposed to refer the matter to a referendum vote of its membership.

The reason for all this activity is that the workers are pulling away from those organizations at a rapid pace and they are becoming bankrupt. These "patriots" of the Cominform ideology must have a payroll to lean on so they plan to merge with Local 65.

The facts are that the CIO has made such tremendous gains that there is nothing left of these groups as far as a membership is concerned. All they hope to do is maintain their jobs and continue to mouth the Cominform party line. Reports are that this unholy merger is of such desperate nature that each group will get two officers in the merged group—in fact, this was one of the first things agreed upon. Local 65 members will now have to pay the price. This reflects positive proof of complete disintegration and elimination.

If these men had the welfare of their members at heart they would resign and permit the rank-and-file to build a real organization with the policies of a bona-fide trade union, determined by the workers, instead of a clique following a foreign ideology.

The writer addressed a great Labor Day gathering in Charleston, W. Va., the heart of a big coal mining, chemical and industrial center. The workers of this state have battled long and hard over these many years to establish their unions, they accept the CIO and the AFL because they know what organizing into unions mean.

These workers have succeeded in electing to the U. S. Congress representatives and senators that have the interests of all the people at heart. They know that 25 years ago the opposite was true in West Virginia, and they will labor day and night to build their unions bigger and stronger.

Field Rep. T. D. duCuennois reports that the Transport Workers Union-CIO won two representation elections in Front Royal, Va.—one at the Ford Motor Co. by a vote of TWUA 6, no union 5, the other at the Cooper Motor Co., TWUA 8, no union 1.

Reg. Dir. George Craig reports that in a representation election at the Bonnie Plush Mill, Gloucester, N. J., the workers voted in favor of the Textile Workers-CIO: eligible 25, 17 TWA-CIO, 1 no union; 3 challenged.

Reg. Dir. Ewald Sandner reports that in a representation election at the Spencer Kellogg Co., Edgewater, N. J., all 23 votes cast were marked in favor of the Technical Employes, Local Industrial Union 1713-CIO.

Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that in a representation election at the Kansas City Optical Laboratory, Kansas City, Mo., the workers voted unanimously in favor of the United Optical and Instrument Workers-CIO. The organizational work was conducted by the officers of Local 1258, UOIWA-CIO, assisted by Intl Rep. W. J. Widman.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that in representation elections at the Holyoke Mills, Inc., Hagerstown, Md., the workers voted in favor of the Textile Workers-CIO by TWU-CIO 24, no union 4, challenged 1; and at the Potomac Dyeing and Finish Co., Hagerstown, the vote was TWUA-CIO 16, no union 9, challenged 1.

Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports the following union security elections in Illinois: Wheelco Instruments Co., Chicago, eligible 122, IUE-CIO 90, against 9, challenged 2; Master Industries, Inc., Chicago, eligible 32, Amalgamated Local 453, UAW-CIO, 25, against 5; Mather Stock Car Co., Chicago Ridge, eligible 157, USA-CIO 142, against 7; Mercury Mfg. Co., Chicago, eligible 110, IUE-CIO 81, against 11; Burd Piston Ring Co., Rockford, eligible 257, Local 541, UAW-CIO, 161, against 43, challenged 2.

Reg. Dir. George Craig reports that a representation election at the American Tobacco Co., Philadelphia, Pa., LIU 1711-CIO, Amalgamated Tobacco Food and Allied Workers, won a smashing victory over the discredited FTA by a vote of 424 to 165. This is another triumph of democratic trade unionism.

Acting Reg. Dir. Nicholas Dragon reports that in a representation election at the Fiesta Sportsware factory, Phoenix, Ariz., the workers voted overwhelmingly in favor of the CIO: eligible 98, CIO 69, no union 8, challenged 5. Assisting in organization of the plant were CIO Rep. Ann Tinnon and UAW Rep. William Gillespie.

Thomas Andert, president, United Optical and Instrument Workers-CIO, reports that in a representation election at the Wyandotte Optical Co., Kansas City, Mo., the workers voted unanimously in favor of the UOIW-CIO.

Al Hartnett, Assistant to the Chairman, IUE-CIO, reports that in a representation election at Magnetic Metals, Camden, N. J., the workers voted IUE 17, no union 11, UE withdrew.

Court Orders U. Of Va. To Admit Negro

THE UNIV. OF Virginia has been ordered by a three-judge Federal Court to break a long-standing segregation barrier by admitting qualified Negroes to its graduate school.

The decision concerned Gregory Swanson, a practicing attorney of Martinsville, Va., who had been denied access to the school last July because he is a Negro.

Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., conceded the state had no defense, in the light of recent U. S. Supreme Court holdings.

University officials admitted they had refused Swanson admission because it would have violated the Virginia state constitution and state school segregation laws.

THE COURT also directed that the university pay the cost of the proceedings. The decree said:

"The court is of the opinion that the action of the defendant in denying the plaintiff, or any other Negro similarly situated, admission, because of his or her race or color, to the Dept. of Law of the Univ. of Virginia . . . denies the plaintiff and any other Negro the rights secured by the 14th amendment of the Constitution of the U. S."

Oliver Is Named To ECA Position

Robert Oliver, CIO regional director at Dallas, Tex., and Texas director of the CIO Organizing Committee, has been named executive assistant in the Office of Labor Advisers of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

Oliver, on leave from his CIO posts, is a veteran in the labor movement, having become a member of the Oil Workers in 1934.

In 1938 he moved to the Textile Workers, and from June, 1942, to June, 1943, was their Washington representative. He also served on the Labor Policy Committee of the Office of Price Administration.

ROBERT OLIVER

Until February, 1944, he was director of the TWUA Southern cotton division, and then went into the armed forces, seeing combat service in France, Holland and Germany. When fighting stopped he helped evacuate displaced persons and later was assigned to the manpower division of the Office of Military Government to help formulate policy for rebuilding free German labor unions.

Oliver attended the New Mexico Military Institute and the Univ. of Texas.

Fortune Mag Says Of:

'Free Enterprise' Ads—They're Blah, Blah, Blah

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

DO YOU THINK there's too much hokum, double-talk and under-cover politics in those big-business speeches and advertisements about "free enterprise?"

You probably do—and Fortune, the $1.25-a-copy magazine for business executives, thinks you're entirely right.

The magazine, in one of the hardest-hitting articles it has ever carried, tells American businessmen and corporations that they simply don't know what's stirring in the hearts and minds of families who don't have two maids, a chauffeur and a summer place up in the mountains.

Says Fortune, in its September issue:

"All in all, the Free Enterprise campaign is shaping up as one of the most intensive 'sales' jobs in the history of industry. . . . This year it will probably account for at least $100,000,000 of industry's ad budget. . . . It is absorbing more and more of the energies expended by the top men in U. S. management.

"And it is not worth a damn."

THE FREE Enterprise campaign, Fortune says, warming up to its criticism of big business's message, "is psychologically unsound, it is abstract, it is defensive and it is negative.

"Most important, in a great many aspects, it represents a shocking lack of faith in the American people, and in some cases, down-right contempt."

The big-business magazine charges flatly that corporations have been pouring out the "free enterprise" propaganda.

The magazine charges that the businessman has shelled out all those advertising dollars on Free Enterprise because "he is sincerely worried over what has been happening at the polls.

"What he is after, to put it bluntly, is a Republican victory."

But the big businessman doesn't want to admit that—he convinces himself he's merely publishing "facts," Fortune continues.

"'The facts' frequently are not the facts—but . . . conclusions. As long as they are essentially political, however, the claim of non-partisanship simply makes business look silly."

IN THAT CATEGORY of facts that aren't facts, Fortune cites a corporation-sponsored movie which "proved" that ancient Athens fell because of a "soak-the-rich" tax policy; and that "Rome also went to hell because of socialist planners."

(Sponsors of that movie claimed it "is acceptable to all groups. No part of it talks 'party politics.'")

In the same class of stupidity, Fortune filed a comic book of the National Association of Manufacturers, the book that claimed that the American Revolution of 1776 was somehow caused by the activities of "government planners" in London!

Going back to the newspaper and magazine ads placed by big companies in behalf of "free enterprise," Fortune commented that not since the war—when GIs were told they were fighting for apple pie and refrigerators—"have we been insulted with such noxious interpretations of the American Dream."

ALL THE corporation advertising "with a message" adds up to this, concludes the magazine: "The Message hasn't got across . . . Joe Doakes has been tone deaf."

In fact, it adds, "some of the most highly touted of the 'education' projects have so provoked the unions into counter-measures that the net effect has often been to make Joe Doakes more suspicious than he may have been before."

The magazine noted that forced-listening to anti-Fair Deal speeches on company time and property has aroused workers into speeding up their political action activities. It noted that the CIO News has, "with exultant humor," set up a Captive Audience Dept. to handle complaints from workers forced to listen to anti-union, anti-Fair Deal speeches.

Fortune says its own surveys show business men aren't nearly as worried about the future of true free enterprise as their corporation ads would have you believe.

And Fortune's interviewers found their "greatest surprise" in the businessmen's estimates of the job being done by the NAM, leader of the free enterprise campaign.

"The box score: 27 thought it was doing a good job; 14 thought it was so-so; 16 declined to answer the question.

"The remaining 43—some of them . . . prominent members of the NAM—were almost violently anti-NAM. They spoke, as one can see in the box on the next page, with a vituperation that the CIO could hardly match."

Business Man Calls NAM Policy 'Capitalist Convincing Capitalist'

Here are some off-the-record remarks of big businessmen, as quoted by Fortune Magazine on questions about the National Association of Manufacturers, its policies, and its "free enterprise" advertising.

- "Every time I see the big shots of the NAM in white tie and tails having dinner at the Waldorf and posing for newspaper photographers, I retch."
- "A lot of nickel-tippers who have done more to hurt business with the public than anything else."
- "Unions accomplish more, with no goddam advertising."
- "Capitalist convincing capitalist."
- "If what they say is what businessmen think, then I'm ashamed of businessmen."
- "It takes a terrific guy to say what the American Way is—I think we'd be presumptuous advertising anything but the goods we sell."

Education Urged For Puerto Ricans

The Joint AFL-CIO Committee on Puerto Ricans, organized in New York a few months ago to help integrate newcomers to the mainland into community life, is taking an active part in a campaign to boost the number of islanders attending evening schools opening this fall.

Morris Iushewitz, secretary-treasurer of the New York City CIO Council, and James C. Quinn, secretary-treasurer of the AFL Central Trades and Labor Council, co-chairman of the Joint Committee, sent letters to 500 local unions asking them to join in the drive and to help distribute 200,000 copies of a pamphlet printed in Spanish urging school attendance.

Military Leave Pact

Five telephone unions in Illinois, CIO, AFL and unaffiliated, stood united and finally got the Illinois Bell Telephone Co. to admit there's a war on. In new agreements with the unions, the company will grant military leaves to all regular workers going into service. The Communications Workers was the CIO union involved.

II-6

Ohio CIO Asks Mutual For Radio Time To Reply To Taft

THE OHIO CIO Council has demanded a half-hour of free broadcast time over the entire Mutual Broadcasting System network to answer charges by Sen. Taft.

Taft's charges, which the Ohio CIO labeled as "insulting false and malicious," were made Aug. 31 on the network show called "Reporters' Roundup."

In its formal demand to the Mutual network, the council described the broadcast as "an out and out political discussion in which Mr. Taft had the opportunity to express without challenge his political point of view."

The demand was made by Jack Kroll, council president and National PAC director, and Jacob Clayman, council secretary-treasurer.

THE COUNCIL said the "program was carefully planned so that no embarrassing questions would be asked of the Senator." It charged that "the four newspaper men who appeared on the program are men who have consistently and persistently preached the Taft line in their newspapers."

"There wasn't the slightest hint," the council said, "of serious exploration of Taft's record in the broadcast. If there had been musical accompaniment to this broadcast, it might well have been 'Hearts and Flowers.'"

The council pointed out that it was reliably reported Taft had engineered the removal of two top-notch Washington reporters from the panel of experts. These reporters, the Council charged, were paid, even though they did not appear on the program, which the Ohio CIO took as proof that Taft was afraid to face reporters who would do a thorough and objective job of searching his record.

This was not the burden of the complaint, it was pointed out, although it called this approach "an unhappy one and obviously intended to hoodwink the listening public."

"Our complaint," Kroll and Clayman said, "is against the insulting, false and malicious charges made by Sen. Taft against the CIO."

These charges, the council said, were "calculated to deliberately misrepresent and distort the action of CIO" in the current campaign and it added that "no one on the program challenged Mr. Taft's unfounded charges; they were broadcast throughout the country without a dissenting voice heard on the program."

These charges were "so baseless, ignominious and defamatory," the formal demand to Mutual said, "that the Ohio CIO Council must insist upon equal time, of equal prominence, to make answer to these scurrilous, false and fraudulent allegations of Mr. Taft."

Calling the network's attention to Federal Communications Commission rules, which provide that radio stations must provide equal time and opportunity to answer controversial charges, the CIO officials wrote:

"We formally ask for this opportunity . . . in the name of fair play . . . in the name of the law of the United States."

The council observed that "no politician, even one so highly prized by the newspapers and some radio executives, can make the vulgar and malignant charges indulged in by the senior senator from Ohio without giving those falsely accused the opportunity of rebuttal."

Keep Your Eye On Congress

BILL	WHAT IT DOES	WHERE IT IS	WHAT TO DO
Taft-Hartley Repeal	Would repeal most viciously anti-labor bill, reinstitute Wagner Act.	Pigeonholed.	Give money to PAC; register; vote.
FEPC	Would bar job discrimination based on race, creed or color and provide penalties for violations.	Pigeonholed for this session.	Give money to PAC; register; vote.
McCarran - Mundt - Nixon-Wood 'Omnibus' Bills S. 4037 H.R. 9490	Bills endanger civil liberties, union rights, under guise of fighting subversive activities. Opposed by Administration leaders, liberal and labor groups.	House passed Mundt-Nixon-Wood Bill. Senate action due soon.	Ask Senators to defeat. Ask support of S. 4061 to strengthen internal security laws.
Interim Tax Bill H.R. 8920	Sharply criticized by CIO as "special interest" bill. Provides new loopholes for wealthy, aid to corporations, etc.	Bill in House-Senate conference.	Ask Representatives for "equal sacrifice" bill.
Ratification of Genocide Convention	International agreement to outlaw mass killings for race or religious reasons.	Reported favorably by Sen. Foreign Relations sub-comm. (Requires Sen. action only.) Full comm. has not acted.	Ask Senators to give speedy approval.

(Address all Senators at Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C. Address all Representatives at House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.)

Higher Living Standard Urged In Europe

Europe's free trade unions have the responsibility to make sure that increased productivity pays off in higher living standards for workers.

Evert Kupers, prominent Dutch trade unionist and president of the trade union advisory committee for the ERP, emphasized this role of unions in a recent press conference in Athens. As a representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, Kupers is in Greece helping labor leaders prepare the forthcoming Tenth Panhellenic Labor Congress.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., SEPTEMBER 18, 1950 82 No. 38

IT MUST HAVE BEEN GOOD: CIO Pres. Philip Murray appears to have been making an amusing point when the photographer snapped this picture at the dinner given in Washington by the CIO and the AFL for President Truman. AFL Pres. William Green (right) also is amused. Nearly 50 people attended the dinner, which was held Sept. 8. Discussions were off the record. (For another picture of the event please turn to Page 3.)

A Billion Asians Need Our Help

A billion Asians, who have the lowest standards of living in the world, are in a revolutionary ferment from Iran to Japan—and the Voice of America is little more than a whisper compared to the hard-hitting Communist propaganda. CIO's John Brophy discovered this during a 30,000 mile trip as a representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. Asiatic unions are weak, he found. They have taken on a new lease of life with establishment of the ICFTU—and it's up to the western world, including ICFTU, the CIO and the United States, to help them grow strong, keep them from being hornswoggled into the Soviet camp. This the west can do by giving them direction, helping train union leaders, showing them the phony side of Communist propaganda and how to combat it, and doing our utmost to fit them in among the world's democracies. Read Story on Page 6.

Hysteria Hits Make-Believe World

There is a new Bible on Madison ave., New York City, the home of most of the big advertising agencies which hire talent for radio and television shows. It is "Red Channels," which contains a list of outstanding entertainers who are alleged to have some sort of connection with the Communists. As the result of this new criterion, Jean Muir, actress appearing as "Mrs. Aldrich" in "The Aldrich Family," and Ireene Wicker, "The Singing Lady," have lost their roles in radio and television productions, respectively. The American Broadcasting Co. struck back when charges were levelled at Gypsy Rose Lee. (See Story on Page 7.)

Profits Tax Is Delayed Until 1951

THE HOUSE made two great big gestures about excess profits taxes Sept. 14, but when the smoke had cleared away, the situation was still Strictly Normal — All Fouled Up. There would be no taxation of extraordinary war profits till next year.

House and Senate conferees continued discussion of the $4.5 billion tax increase bill, which will hit practically everyone in the U. S. Oct. 1—except profiteers.

Rep. Eberharter (D. Pa.) conducted a two-week fight to get some expression from the House, and even went to the point of refusing to consent to send the tax bill to House-Senate conference, stating that there should be no tax bill at all if it did not include a levy on profiteers.

HIS GESTURES were useless, because the conferees went ahead and conferred "informally," and the House Rules Committee sent a resolution to the floor sending the bill to conference. This took the question out of the "unanimous consent" class.

When the Rules Committee resolution hit the House floor last Thursday, Eberharter did his best. He moved to instruct the House conferees to insist on an excess profits tax, but this was ruled out of order. He then moved to instruct the House conferees to "consider" including such a tax in the bill. This gesture, doomed to failure, passed 225 to 106.

Eberharter then moved to instruct the two tax-writing committees to produce some excess profits proposals "as early as practicable" during the present session and to make the super-tax effective either July 1 or Oct. 1.

This passed by the overwhelming vote of 331-2, since by this time most members of the House were beginning to be genuinely worried about the effect on their re-election hopes if they taxed everyone but the profiteers.

BUT THE Senate, by a vote of 36 to 34, turned it down, after Sen. George (D. Ga.), chairman of the Finance Committee, told the Senate his group would have legislation ready next January, and it would be retroactive.

What George neglected to say was that no outgoing Congress can bind an incoming one.

As for what will happen to the average taxpayer:

So far, the conferees have agreed to raise individual income taxes enough to yield $2.7 billion a year, starting Oct. 1. Taxpayers earning $2000 or less a year will pay 20% more than they now pay. Taxpayers in the highest brackets will pay 11% more. The withholding tax will go up from its present 15% a week to 18%.

Regular corporation taxes will go up from the present 38% to 45%, retroactively, yielding an estimated $1.5 billion a year—but the best comment on this was provided by Sen. Connally (D. Tex.), arguing for an excess profits tax now.

"The man with a $1000-a-year income is going to pay more than he paid last year, but the taxes of the profiteer who is going to make more money—tremendously more money—than he made last year will in effect be decreased, on the basis of the mass of his earnings," he said.

THE FOUR SIGNS on this building tell the story. The lower two signs announce that the building is the national headquarters of FTA—the Food & Tobacco Workers. The other two signs have been posted by the real estate agent to tell the world that the building is for rent—and the union will vacate. Its membership falling off by the thousands, FTA along with another union expelled by the CIO for following the Communist Party line—the Office and Professional Workers—is reported planning a merger with Local 65, Distributors' Union, New York City. Many of the former FTA members have joined either the CIO Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union, or CIO local industrial unions.

GE Pact Ends IUE Walkout

An agreement ending the dispute of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers with General Electric was reached just before the CIO News went to press. The agreement, which runs for one year, provides for a 10c an hour increase plus a cost-of-living clause to be re-examined March 15. Also agreed to were a $125 minimum pension, retroactive to July 1, and an additional holiday—election day, called PAC day by IUE Chairman James B. Carey who headed the union negotiating committee.

FEDERAL mediators were striving to bring about a settlement of the dispute between the CIO International Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and the General Electric Co. as this edition of the CIO NEWS went to press.

A total of 39,805 IUE members were walking picket lines because of strikes being conducted by the IUE in 32 GE locations.

GE brazenly stuck to its position despite revelation that an ad outlining what it described as its settlement offer was a fake, IUE said.

"The total of the wage offer and the value of the insurance and pension programs is obviously worth 25c to 43½c an hour—plus the extra holiday," the GE ad alleged.

The IUE immediately challenged the company. It offered to accept the median point between 25c and and 43½c—that is, 34½c. GE declined. Then IUE offered to settle for a total of 25c, the low point mentioned. GE again declined.

SO THE IUE inserted quarter-page ads in newspapers in all communities where it has bargaining rights and also in one Washington paper, so government officials could see that the nation's largest electrical manufacturer was faking.

"IUE-CIO will accept the published GE offer," the union's ad read.

It then repeated the section of the GE ad reprinted above and added:

"We now have a public agreement on principle.

"To apply the principles above agreed upon—let GE and IUE accept a government-appointed commission of public spirited citizens.

"IUE and GE then will end the dispute while the decision is made and applied."

Texts of the ad were given reporters and they met with L. R. Boulware, GE negotiation chief. Asked if the GE ad were not misleading, Boulware admitted "we may have been a little careless."

He explained it this way. First, the 25c to 43½c includes the previous cost of the pension and insurance plans, plus the additional costs and the new wage offer. Reporters asked then what the increased cost is on pensions and insurance. Boulware, with a straight face, said there was no way of determining that.

T-H Case History: NLRB Examiner Urges Rehiring Of 33 Fired 22 Months Ago

ABOUT TWO years ago, on Sept. 3, 1948, the CIO Oil Workers struck the Shell Oil Co.'s production facilities at Bakersfield, Cal., and its refinery at Martinez, Cal.

At the same time they walked out of the processing plant of the Shell Chemical Corp., a subsidiary, at Martinez.

The issues were the usual ones—principally wage increases and adjustments of inequities—and were substantially the same at both plants. Some employes scabbed on the strike. Feeling ran high, and there were a few picket line disorders.

Shell got up on its high horse and from Oct. 22 to Nov. 22 flatly refused to negotiate because of alleged "violence." It announced that it would not reinstate certain union members, whom it refused to identify, for certain actions on the picket line which it refused to specify. It wouldn't negotiate about them and it wouldn't arbitrate.

EVENTUALLY, after a total of a little less than three months, the walkout was settled and the employes went back—except for 32 oil company workers and two chemical company workers who were denied their jobs because of their alleged participation in so-called violence, an avenue opened to the employer by the Taft-Hartley Act.

The union filed with the National Labor Relations Board charges that the company had violated the Wagner Act. That was in November, 1948. Not until Oct. 13, 1949, nearly a year later, did the NLRB issue a complaint.

Hearings began on Nov. 29, 1949. Sessions were held in Bakersfield, Martinez and San Francisco, and extended until June 2, 1950. Then both sides were given until June 17 to file briefs. The company asked for — and got — another month.

LAST TUESDAY, Sept. 12, more than two years after the strike started and some 22 months after it ended, Trial Examiner Howard Myers issued his intermediate report and recommendations.

"A careful reading of the testimony given for Shell Oil," he wrote, "clearly establishes that these witnesses testified to events that did not occur at all."

He recommended that 31 of the 32 Shell Oil employes and both of the Shell Chemical workers be reinstated to their jobs with the back pay they might have earned but didn't.

He also found the company guilty of discouraging membership in the Oil Workers by discharges, and of interfering with, restraining and coercing employes in the right to join a union of their own choosing.

Myers' report doesn't mean that the 1948 strikers now go back to their old jobs. The employer has the right of appeal to the full board—and how long that may take is anyone's guess.

U.N. Employes Oppose Bias In Blood Bank

The employes at United Nations are all for a blood bank, but not if race discrimination is involved. The 4000 workers will back a special UN donation center to provide an emergency blood supply for the troops in Korea, but only if queries on race and nationality are left out of the American Red Cross questionnaires.

Two recommendations for a solution, one proposing elimination of the racial question but permitting the Red Cross to keep a specially coded card file on the race of the donor and the other suggesting abandonment of the racial question but retention of the query on nationality, were rejected by the staff committee.

Rubber Union Cancels Goodrich Contract

The CIO Rubber Workers is serving notice on the B. F. Goodrich Co. for cancellation of its contract. Thirteen days of negotiations with the company proved fruitless, and meetings were broken off Sept. 13.

A 25c wage boost is sought by the union for 20,000 Goodrich employes in seven cities. Company officials said they had offered an increase "higher than the recent Ford settlement." Union leaders said they rejected the offer because "the company insisted on tying the plan to an extension of the present contract." The URW is also negotiating with the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

Congress Seems Deaf To Rent Control Plan

STRENGTHENING of the present inadequate rent control law, in spite of President Truman's urgent plea to Congress, appeared highly unlikely, at least before the elections, as the CIO News went to press.

The President asked for immediate enactment of a strengthened statute, and the Office of the Housing Expeditor sent to Capitol Hill a draft of the strong law which it believed necessary, but the appeal went as flat as a wet firecracker in the session-end rush.

If Congress comes back in November, after the elections, there may be some action.

Otherwise, communities that want Federal rent control extended past Dec. 31, 1950, even in its present weak form, must say so, through their governing bodies, before then.

AS OF Sept. 15, OHE reported, 101 incorporated communities with a total population, according to the 1950 census, of 7 million persons, had requested another full year of controls. Some 1.35 million rental units were involved.

Between July 1 and Sept. 15, OHE added, only 54 communities, with a total population of 1.40 million, had asked for "local option" decontrol, and only 260,000 rental units were involved. These, OHE said, were mostly small towns.

But 50 million Americans still living under rent control will lose it Dec. 31 unless they make their voices heard.

Rent control still protects 57 million people in the United States, as compared to a wartime peak of 102 million, and this does not include the population of New York State, which now has its own strong law.

ACCORDING to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the United States average of all rents, controlled and uncontrolled, on July 15, was 24.4% above the 1935-39 average.

There were the following developments, among others, last week on the local front:

- The Allentown, Pa., city council voted a referendum on decontrol, but neglected to say anything about it until six days before the vote was to be completed. In order to keep controls, 5500 votes at least were required.

The CIO council and other Allentown organizations interested in retaining control thus had exactly six days, including a week-end, to bring 5500 separate individuals downtown to the city hall to cast their votes. Today (Sept. 18) was the deadline.

- The Portland, Ore., city council, which earlier voted to put a decontrol resolution on the November ballot, changed its mind and decided to take its own vote. This apparently was at the request of the real estate interests.

The council vote had not been taken at press time, but informed persons were guessing that the council would vote for decontrol and then that tenants would be forced to gather thousands of signatures for a petition in order to get the question to referendum.

- In Los Angeles, the fight against the city council's July 28 decontrol vote went on. The Tenants' Council, composed of CIO, AFL and independent unions and several other organizations, filed three triple-damage suits against Los Angeles landlords who had extorted increases after the city council voted decontrol but while the court injunction against decontrol, also secured by the Council, was still in effect. (The injunction is still in effect and will be at least until a hearing is held, probably early next month.)

- The Tenants' Committee of Baltimore, Md., headed by F. A. Colonell, wired OHE and the state governor, demanding the immediate discharge of Jerome Grant, head of the Baltimore Rent Advisory Committee.

Grant according to the committee, voted to ask OHE decontrol of all apartments renting for $100 a month or more, and OHE complied. Rents thereupon increased "exorbitantly" in 107 cases, to the point where the tenants complained bitterly.

It was then discovered that Grant, who as committee chairman is supposed to be an impartial public servant, himself owned a large group of these dwellings —in fact, that 65 of the 107 cases of "exorbitant" rent increases were in units owned by him.

Surprise! Surprise! Victory Scored By GOP In Maine

YIPPEE! The Republicans won in Maine. You'd have thought the GOP had elected a President, so great was their joy when, to nobody's surprise, Maine voters returned a Republican governor and three Republican Congressmen Sept. 12.

The elephant was prancing as usual on the stern and rock-bound coast where they have their elections two months early.

As Maine goes, so goes the nation, Guy Gabrielson, Republican national chairman trumpeted in the tones of 1880 as he predicted a Republican sweep in November. Across the street the Democrats took a second look at the figures from Maine, where Democrats are viewed with suspicion.

Democratic National Chairman Bill Boyle thought the Maine figures indicated Democratic victory in the offing. Rep. Hale, a double-dyed Republican, suffered the fright of his life as he defeated Lucia Cornier, a Democratic national committeewomen. Hale's 7200-vote margin was the smallest he'd known in five elections. The Democratic vote for governor rose from 76,544 to more than 93,000. Democratic candidates for the two remaining congressional seats scored even heavier proportionate gains.

Boyle pointed out that more people voted in Maine this year than in 1948 and that this was the biggest "off year" turnout since 1938.

"If the Democratic gains reflect the attitude of the voters in other states, we will make gains all over the country in November," he predicted.

MEANWHILE, in primary voting next door in New Hampshire, Sen. Charles Tobey squeaked through to get the Republican nomination despite furious and expensive campaigning by his opponent, Wesley Powell. Tobey is regarded as a GOP liberal, Powell is a protege of New Hampshire's other Senator, reactionary Styles Bridges. Tobey's margin was a scant 1500 and Powell said he would demand a recount. Democrat Emmet Kelly will run against Tobey in November.

In Michigan, John Lesinski, Jr., appeared to have outstripped 21 rivals for the Democratic nomination to the Congressional seat held by his late father. The elder Lesinski was chairman of the House Labor Committee when he died earlier this year. Young Lesinski is anti-Taft-Hartley.

Michigan's Gov. G. Mennen Williams, who has labor's backing, was unopposed in the Democratic primary. If he is re-elected he will be Michigan's first Democratic governor since 1914 to serve two terms. Republican nominee is ex-Gov. Harry F. Kelly.

In Arizona, Sen. Carl Hayden, chairman of the Senate's powerful Rules Committee, won the Democratic nomination again by a four-to-one vote, although he had two opponents. He will face Republican Bruce Rockett in November. Mrs. Anna Frohmiller, former State Auditor, got a chance to become the nation's third woman governor by winning the nomination from incumbent Gov. Dan Garvey.

IN THE STATE of Washington, Sen. Warren S. Magnuson, unopposed in the Democratic primaries, will face Walter Williams, Seattle businessman, in November. Williams won handily in a primary contest with four other candidates.

Former Justice Harry H. Peterson, who resigned from the Minnesota Supreme Court bench to campaign for the Democratic-Farmer-Labor nomination for governor, won out over Charles Halsted, nominee defeated two years ago, largely because of a strong labor vote. His Republican opponent will be Gov. Luther W. Youngdahl, who will seek his fourth term after routing four primary opponents. Reps. August Andresen, in the 1st district, and Joseph P. O' Hara, 2d district, both Republicans and the only congressman who faced opposition, won easily.

Former Gov. Ralph L. Carr of Colorado won the Republican nomination for the post he formerly filled from Ray H. Brannaman, former national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Gov. Walter W. Johnson won the Democratic nod for another term without a fight. Sen. Eugene D. Millikin (R.) who votes wrong practically all the time from the labor viewpoint, was renominated without opposition. Running against him will be Rep. John A. Carroll (D.), Fair Dealer with an outstanding record, who also won the nomination without a fight. (LPA)

Why Should Anyone Be Surprised Dept.

PAC chairmen please take note:

The Republican party has no budget troubles, Joseph Wishart, Nebraska GOP finance chairman, said on Sept. 14, thereby confirming a lot of Democratic and labor suspicions.

The party strongbox is bulging more fulsomely than at this time in 1948, Wishart reported after a meeting of 20 state finance chairmen with GOP National Treasurer Sinclair Weeks in Chicago. The party budget of $1,952,000, or $48,000 less than $2 million, will be raised "with no trouble," he predicted confidently.

Prices Resume Upward Climb

The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index started up again last week after registering —a week earlier—its first drop since the Korean invasion.

It rose from $6.65 to $6.68 in the week ending Sept. 12, regaining all but 1c of the 4c it had declined the week before. Since the week ending June 13, it has gone up 10 weeks, declined one week and remained unchanged two weeks for a cumulative gain of 74c. A year ago it stood at $5.85.

The barometer represents the total wholesale prices of 31 commonly used foods. Increases in it are reflected later in higher retail costs which must be sufficient not only to cover the greater cost at the wholesale level, but to provide for increased profit on the larger investment.

HISTORIC OCCASION: For the first time in the history of the United States, the President was the guest of representatives of 14 million members of labor unions at a private dinner at the Statler Hotel, Washington, Sept. 8. After dinner President Truman joined the CIO and AFL leaders in an off-the-record, round table discussion of current problems and labor's role in the Korean emergency. Seated at the head table (in the background) are, left to right: Director Joseph Keenan of AFL's Labor's League for Political Education, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, Chairman William Boyle of the democratic National Committee, CIO Pres. Philip Murray, President Harry S. Truman, AFL Pres. William Green, Labor Secy. Maurice C. Tobin, AFL Secy.-Treas. George Meany and CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll. The affair was a great success and marked new progress toward labor unity.

War Profiteers Are Chiselers

Those Who Seek Gain From Misery Of Others Should Be Dealt With Both Sternly And Promptly

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IT'S A WELL KNOWN fact that wars bring out the best in men—and the worst, too.

You see it happen sharply on the battlefield.

A little runt who looks as if he's afraid of his shadow will perform a great feat of heroism.

And the big husky guy sometimes reveals himself to be a sniveling coward.

You can see it on the home front, too. The old skinflint sometimes turns out to be a liberal patriot—and the "fine citizen" reveals himself to be a nasty chiseler.

Most people, however, are neither great heroes nor disgusting cowards.

And on the home front a majority of our citizens will do what needs to be done.

THERE'S A NASTY term—"war profiteer"—for those who seek during periods of armed conflict to benefit from the suffering of others.

The war profiteer is a chiseler.

He may be the head of a big corporation, or he may run the little store around the corner. He may be a farmer or a salesman, or a doctor, or a lawyer.

Or he may be a politician.

Regardless of who he is or what he does, his behavior follows a set pattern.

He profits out of the killing and misery that accompanies armed conflict.

Maybe he gets rich. Maybe he puts just a few extra bucks a week in his pocket.

Maybe he doesn't make any money at all. Maybe he just uses his influence to land a soft military job where the bullets won't be whizzing.

And the war chiseler usually pretends to be a great patriot.

TAKE A LOOK at what has happened since the war broke out in Korea late in June.

Although there were no immediate shortages, prices of some commodities were hiked immediately.

Other increases followed. Before long the overall cost of living had taken a noticeable rise.

The hoarding started within hours after the conflict began. Some weak citizens said they weren't really hoarding, that they were merely determined to get their share of what the hoarders would get if they had a chance.

And on Capitol Hill in Washington some members of Congress began playing "war politics." A few of them dipped down into the gutter to get the ammunition they hurled at their enemies.

War profiteering isn't something to look for in the future. It's been with us for a couple of months.

The profiteers are the worst type of chiselers.

AT THE PRESENT time our nation is only partially mobilized, but there are many indications that much greater mobilization will be needed before we can again enjoy peace.

Congress, after considerable see-sawing, gave the President most of the authority needed to impose the controls that may become necessary.

But a group in Congress has been doing its darndest to beat off efforts to impose an excess profits tax that would put a real crimp in profiteering.

The real estate interests are still in there pitching with both hands in an effort to kill off rent controls.

And the speculators, as might have been expected, are not passing up any opportunities to make extra money out of materials needed for war.

IF YOU'RE A red-blooded person who believes in equality of sacrifice, you can easily get burned up by what has been happening.

Yes, you can get burned up even if you're able to understand what prompts men to chisel in time of war.

There, of course, is no sure cure for the "disease" which causes war profiteering.

But, fortunately, in this country of ours we can pass laws and we can invoke rules to take care of those who aren't willing to play the game on the square.

This we must do.

And regardless of how serious the world situation becomes—or how much it improves in the future—we ought to make it mighty uncomfortable for the war chiseler.

It's Dangerous

We've never seen Gypsy Rose Lee do a strip tease so we're in no position to argue about whether she's an actress or not.

Frankly, we don't intend to work ourselves into a lather over the question of whom the big corporations should hire to sing, crack jokes or act dramatic on the radio.

But we're concerned—and very much concerned—over something that's been going on in the radio business.

Actress Jean Muir got the sack from her sponsor, General Foods, because she was accused of being a Communist, a charge which she denied.

And an effort was made to give the boot to Gypsy Rose on a similar accusation. The ABC network, showing a bit of spunk, said "nix" and that she wouldn't be sacked merely on the basis of a charge.

We don't know whether Jean Muir is a Communist, a Demcrat, a Republican or a whoosit. And the same goes for Miss Lee.

And we haven't had time to make a thorough check on Red Channels, the "Counter-Attack" publication on which the cases against Miss Muir and Miss Lee were based.

But we do know that there's an important basic principle involved and that the nation had better give it some serious attention.

Jean Muir, in a sense, was tried and convicted without a hearing. And a serious effort was made to get Miss Lee tossed out of radio on her professional neck.

Maybe General Foods fell for a sucker play. It said it let Miss Muir go after the Red charge was made against her because it didn't want to get involved in a controversy.

As a result, the corporation is now in a controversy up to its corporate neck.

And, with the public in a mood to believe the worst, it's doubtful that Jean Muir can ever completely clear herself.

Our country would be a lot better off if we went back to the idea that a person is innocent until proved guilty. This goes for everybody, politicians and strip-teasers included. * * *

ONLY SEVEN WEEKS AWAY

Things—even big, important things like elections—have a habit of slipping up on you when you've got your mind on something else. And with the public mind on Korea, it's likely the average person can't say on the spur of the moment just how much time there is between now and election day.

Our calendar shows there are only seven weeks until ballot casting day—and that's not a long time, if you look at it one way.

What we mean is this: PAC groups can't waste a couple of weeks—or even a couple of days—and do the job they should.

But a lot of political hay can be made in 49 days if you're in there pitching every minute.

And labor and other liberal groups will have to do a lot of hard, steady pitching if they're going to keep the conservatives and reactionaries from gaining strength in Congress.

Sure, we know there's a war on—and to us this only increases the importance of the election outcome because the actions of our lawmakers will largely determine the course we pursue in international affairs for a long time to come.

Remember, it's ballots—not intentions—that are counted on election day.

Labor Leaders Aid Freedom Crusade

THE CRUSADE for Freedom, which is sponsored by the National Committee for a Free Europe, is collecting millions of signatures to Freedom Scrolls to be permanently enshrined in the base of the tower which will house the new Freedom Bell in Berlin.

The scrolls contain a declaration of faith and belief in the cause of world freedom and peace. They are being signed during a transcontinental tour of the 10-ton Freedom Bell, which was cast in England and arrived in this country last week. The bell will be dedicated and rung, and the scrolls placed in the tower foundation in Berlin on Oct. 24, United Nations Day.

The national council of the Crusade for Freedom includes Pres. Philip Murray, of the CIO; Pres. William Green and Vice Pres. Matthew Woll, of the AFL, and Pres. William P. Kennedy, of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. Victor Reuther, educational director of the CIO Auto Workers, is state director for Michigan. Many CIO members have been asked to serve on local committees.

"I am especially pleased that these leaders in the labor field are not only lending their names, but are giving their influence to help spread the word of the crusade throughout America," said Gen. Lucius D. Clay, crusade national chairman and former military governor of Berlin.

"These men, representatives of the largest group of free workers in the world, know the true value of freedom. I know we can count upon them in this unique effort to step up our campaign of truth."

The National Committee for a Free Europe operates Radio Free Europe, whose radio station in Western Germany daily beams broadcasts by refugee leaders sending messages of hope and encouragement behind the Iron Curtain. Secy-Treas. James B. Carey, of the CIO, is a member of the board of directors of the committee, which is headed by Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Negroes Ask Bigger Role

President Truman has been urged to see to it that all available manpower be utilized, without regard to color, race, or creed, and that the policy of nondiscrimination in defense employment be enforced.

The 500 delegates to the 40th anniversary convention of the National Urban League put this into a resolution, suggesting that a ranking Administration official, directly responsible to the public and the President, be appointed to oversee the enforcement.

The convention was held at Grand Rapids, Mich.

The action backed up the position taken by Executive Director Lester B. Granger in a confidential letter, just made public, to W. Stuart Symington, chairman of the National Security Resources Board. Urging that Negro leadership be appointed in the same manner as that of other citizens, Granger suggested that Negroes be placed on the various defense agencies and planning and policy-making committees.

Stating that the government has not clarified its position regarding the racial issue in the Korean conflict, Granger said "The National Urban League strongly urges that the President make such a statement in the very near future to the American people and our friends abroad. We urge also, that similar statements covering areas of their own responsibilities be made by the chairman of the NSRB and by the Secretary of Defense."

The delegates pledged all the League's resources in the fight against Communist attempts to line up the "non-white world against the white populations of the world."

The Voice of America, for the first time, recorded several sessions of the six-day convention to be broadcast in 26 languages to all parts of the world.

Red Yugoslavia Raps South Korea Invasion

Communist Yugoslavia has joined the nations denouncing the invasion of South Korea as part of the Soviet plan for world domination.

Foreign Minister Edward Kardelj, writing in the Communist Party organ Borba, declared:

"The armed action of the North Korean government is not aimed at the liberation of the Korean people. Once again it has been confirmed that the leadership of a liberation movement whether consciously or not has become an instrument of foreign influences, and this is a misfortune for its people and its leaders."

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher
Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII September 18, 1950 No. 38

Jacob Was A Guy Who Believed In Unions

THE LANDLADY didn't hear Jacob's heavy footsteps on the stairs at the usual time that morning.

No sound came from his room all day—or during the following night. Finally she entered his room and found a motionless body on the bed.

Jacob was dead.

Jacob, 56, a steelworker, had often said he had no relatives in this country—so the landlady called the police.

After removing his body, the police called the company where Jacob had worked since 1919. A company official then notified the Steelworkers union.

A union counsellor then passed the sad news along.

JACOB HAD been active in the steel union ever since it started, but he had never run for office.

He was always in there pitching when pitching was needed.

Just two nights before he died Jacob has answered a member who had criticized the union's sickness benefit plan.

"Don't you worry," Jacob said in his broken English. "If you're sick you'll collect under the plan. I know; I was sick for two months this year. The money was a life-saver."

Al, the union counsellor, remembered how Jacob had stood up for the union—and he recalled Jacob's statement that he had no relatives in this country.

"Say, Mac," Al said to the union vice president, "don't you think we ought to see that our dead brother is taken care of?"

Al and Mac went to the home where Jacob had been rooming. Then Al called the undertaker and was told, "his brother is going to take care of everything."

WHEN AL reported what the undertaker had said, the union vice president declared, "He doesn't have a brother—and we'd better make sure some chiseler doesn't get what little money Jacob left."

Jacob had been covered by a $2000 life insurance policy and he had invested money with the plant credit union.

Al called a lawyer friend and was told to find out when the coroner's inquest would be held. "If no relatives show up, tell them the union will be responsible for the burial. And if some phony 'relative' shows up, call the state attorney's office at once."

Al got on the phone again. The undertaker said no inquest would be held—that the doctor had issued a death certificate.

"What about the brother?" Al asked.

"He hasn't shown up yet, but a cousin phoned from Michigan, saying he would take care of everything."

AL GOT in touch with the lawyer again and was told to contact the public administrator's office immediately.

"Tell them that unless a legitimate relative shows up the union will handle the funeral," the lawyer said.

Within 24 hours a judge had signed a paper authorizing the union to arrange for the burial.

For two days Steelworkers members streamed through the funeral parlor, where Jacob's body lay in an open casket.

Executive board members and rank-and-filers acted as pallbearers. At the grave Al read the union ritual.

As the casket was lowered into the ground a hard-bitten old steelworker wiped tears from his eyes and said:

"We need more guys like Jacob. He was nothing for big words and puttin' on a show.

"He just had a good heart—and his heart was always with us and with the union."

Union members are still wondering about that 'brother' and 'cousin' but there's no doubt in their mind about one thing: Jacob was a real trade unionist. R.S.

BACKFIRED, DIDN'T IT, SENATOR?

Union Flays Steel Industry In Third Shortage

A WARNING THAT the nation's steel production may prove insufficient to meet military and civilian needs is sounded—again—in the current issue of Steel Labor, official publication of the CIO Steelworkers.

The union has urged major expansion of production facilities since the end of World War II.

"For the third time in this century," the article says, "the steel industry's production falls far short of the tremendous demand for steel.

"If America moves into an all-out production program, there will not be enough steel to make the planes, tanks, ships and guns that a long-range military program requires, and still keep essential civilian goods rolling off the production lines. Then you will begin hearing about production 'bottlenecks,' and the number one bottleneck will be caused by an acute shortage of steel.

"Meanwhile, the best the industry has done is announce plans to add less than 6.5 million tons capacity between now and the end of 1952. The industry's announcement did not come until the Korean war was a month old.

"The steel industry's spokesmen insist that there is no need for alarm. The public should feel 'no concern whatsover' over the lack of capacity, Chairman Eugene Grace, of Bethlehem Steel, said weeks after the North Koreans attacked. Stop worrying about any 'drastic reduction' in the production of civilian-use steel, Grace advised.

"Chairman Irving S. Olds of U. S. Steel indicated that government power to institute compulsory allocation of steel to the most essential users first might lead to a 'socialistic state.' Yet, it has been generally agreed that voluntary allocation on the part of the steel industry would be far from adequate.

"Mr. Olds refers to the 'magnificent production record' of the steel industry in World War II as proof that it can handle the job of allocations itself. The fact is that the steel industry struck a hard bargain before it achieved that 'magnificent record.'

"Moreover, the steel industry came out of the conflict with millions of dollars worth of new facilities built at bargain rates with taxpayers' money. In addition, it earned fat profits from 'cost-plus' contracts and enjoyed special tax advantages for every dollar it put into expanding capacity on its own.

"IS THE STEEL industry right? Is there enough steel capacity?

"The United Steelworkers of America does not think so. It has, in fact, been urging increased capacity long before the present world crisis confronted the United States. The union long ago advocated increased capacity to meet the demand for steel both at home and overseas. It urged more capacity to break the bottlenecks in the production of civilian goods and to kill the gray market in steel.

"In September, 1947, representatives of the United Steelworkers appeared before the steel subcommittee of the Senate Small Business Committee and declared that the shortage of steel was a gamble with America's future. The chief problem at that time was one of unemployment—brought about by a shortage of steel for processing and fabricating plants.

"The union repeated its story to other governmental bodies several times since."

Warning Went Unheeded

The impending increase in the shortage of steel due to the world crisis would have been averted if the industry had heeded the United Steelworkers' warning in 1947. The union then told a senate committee:

"Capacity expansion could and should be made by the industry itself. The responsibility should be placed squarely on the industry's shoulders. Such an approach is the only one consistent with a free enterprise economy.

"Apparently, however, the industry is fearful of assuming all the risks involved. We sympathize with the companies' fears, but they must not be permitted to stand in the way of capacity expansion. In other periods, industry has expanded its capacity, but only on its own terms and those such as high profit margins, rapid plant amortization, income tax reductions have contributed to alternating 'booms' and 'busts.'

"We want expansion now, but not at the price of 'shaking down' the country and the labor movement. The cost of expansion is tremendous, but it can be met by the industry from its present working capital, from its current high profit margins and from capital borrowing.

"It is evident, however, that the government must assume at least a part of the risks if it hopes to persuade the industry to make needed expansion."

Brophy Reports On Orient:

Better Pay Needed To Aid Democracy's Development In Asia

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

BACK FROM 30,000 miles of travel across Asia, John Brophy thinks we Americans had better give immediate thought and help to the people of a dozen non-Communist lands between Iran and Japan.

Brophy, director of industrial union councils for the CIO and veteran of years of work for American trade unions, sums up his observations of union organization throughout Asia in these words:

"They're just getting started. In many countries, their problems are far greater than those we ever had to face. But there's tremendous enthusiasm for progress—and we here in America have a responsibility to help them reach democratic goals."

Decent Wages Abroad Is Aim Of Measure

A bill guaranteeing decent wages to workers in foreign countries receiving economic aid from the United States was introduced in the House on Sept. 13 by Rep. White (D. Cal.).

"We cannot stop communism permanently with bombs and bullets and the temporary giving of money and economic aid," said White. "The one sure way we can stop communism is by removing the cause of communism, which is poverty, hunger and starvation wages."

White's bill is aimed at preventing not only the spread of communism abroad, but also the dumping in the United States of goods produced by cheap labor. It would withhold economic aid from countries which fail to force employers "to pay wages equal in purchasing power of food, clothing and shelter to wages paid in this country for similar work."

Brophy visited the countries of Asia as a member of a special mission dispatched by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, to which most non-Communist union organizations throughout the world are affiliated.

The group left Brussels, Belgium—headquarters of the ICFTU—on July 1, and returned there Sept. 1. Brophy came back to Washington shortly after Labor Day.

In these two months Brophy talked with scores of union officials, government leaders and businessmen.

He experienced—for one hour—the 135-degree heat of the airport of Basrah, Iran; saw a circus with 62 (count 'em) elephants at Kandy, Ceylon; and listened to debate in the Parliament of Ceylon, now a self-governing colony of the British Commonwealth (two members of the Ceylonese Senate are Trotzky-type Communists; one is a Stalin-type Communist—and none of them likes the U. S.)

The ICFTU group's report was to be presented to the organization's executive group at a meeting in Brussels Sept. 15-17.

That report will contain a survey of trade union conditions and problems in Asia, suggested methods of helping the workers' organizations, proposals for setting up regional offices of the ICFTU and the establishing of schools to train trade union leaders; and recommendations for combating Communist propaganda and infiltration.

Democratic forces face trouble in Asia unless their friends in Europe and America can give them immediate help, Brophy believes.

"The Voice of America is little more than a whisper in Asia, compared to the hard-hitting propaganda of the Communists," he said on his return home.

"The Voice of America (the government's short-wave radio service to the rest of the world) has been limited by the congressional state of mind. As a result, the Voice isn't doing as good a job as it should.

"Unfortunately, too many Asiatic people look upon the United States as a threat to independence in Asia. Communist propaganda has been working at this theme for years, and it must be counteracted—by deeds as well as by words."

THE CIO official said his travels across the 6000 mile front between Iran and Japan convinced him there's a revolutionary ferment, with varying degrees of intensity, throughout the entire Asiatic continent.

Some other of Brophy's impressions:

1. Asiatic people are nationalists; they want independence for their countries and equality with other nations of the world. That drive for nationalist independence has been the goal of revolutionary efforts for years. The Communists push that revolutionary ferment to gain popularity; now they'd like to misuse it to bring the Asiatic nations into the Soviet camp.

2. Trade unions are still weak in almost every country, though they've grown tremendously in Japan. Establishment of the ICFTU—to which many of the Asiatic unions are affiliated — has given a new "lease on life" and a new sense of direction to many Asiatic union organizations.

3. While many trade union leaders are strong nationalists—and their unions are all wrapped up in the nationalist-revolutionary movement—they are interested in "labor internationalism" through the ICFTU.

And they're strong for the creation of regional ICFTU federations, to help build up the strength of each union group.

THE BILLION people who live on the Asiatic continent have the lowest standard of living in the world, Brophy noted. If they're to be enlisted in the global democratic cause, a start has to be made in improving the standard of living.

"We on the ICFTU mission recognized pretty early in the trip that our union organizations in Europe and America must help the Asiatic workers.

"One way we can do it is to put some pressure on the European and American corporations which are functioning throughout that area. They'll have to be pressured into improving conditions for the thousands of native workers.

"Right now, many of these corporations—in rubber, oil, tin and tea, for instance—don't provide very much of an example for a better way of life for anybody. And many Asiatic workers have to judge America by some of its corporations.

"You can guess what sort of impressions they form."

THE COMMUNISTS take advantage of the situation, he added, and they keep hammering away at the theme of American imperialism. Their articles appear in many non-Communist magazines and papers, and they reach a wide public.

"Unfortunately," Brophy reported, "our propagandists don't seem to understand the problems. The American way of life is presented in a pretty narrow way.

"The Russians, on the other hand, have a better knowledge of local backgrounds and old prejudices. And they play on them."

Most Asiatic union leaders are looking toward a future in which their societies will be combination of public-ownership of basic resources and industry, mixed in with private enterprise.

"Any attempt," he warned, "to promote free enterprise as the only means of economic progress, would lead us straight up a blind alley."

Throughout Asia, he said, there's tremendous interest in various programs for technical aid to help improve living standards.

One of these is President Truman's Point Four program, which recently received an initial $25 million appropriation — criticized by CIO as far too small to do the job.

The British are working on a somewhat similar Commonwealth Plan. And the United Nations has a number of projects under way to strengthen health, trade, agricultural and financial projects in several Asiatic countries.

THE ICFTU delegation included —in addition to Brophy—Gordon Chapman of the AFL; J. W. Dalley of the British Trades Union Congress; Robert Dekeyzer of the Belgium Confederation of Labor; and Deven Sen of the Indian National Trades Union Congress.

It was accompanied by Jay Krane of the ICFTU staff, who formerly worked for the CIO in Europe, and by Richard Deverall, one-time UAW-CIO education director who now represents the AFL in India.

Before going to Asia, the group visited Geneva, Switzerland, during the conference of the UN's Intl. Labor Organization. With many representatives of Asiatic unions on hand for the ILO meetings, the delegation worked out itineraries and arrangements for meetings.

Throughout part of the summer, the ICFTU group divided into two sub-committees, in order to cover all the nations on the list. Brophy, for instance, visited Pakistan, India, Ceylon, Hong Kong, Singapore and Malaya, Indonesia, Siam, the Philippines, Japan and Formosa.

In each city, the group was welcomed by leaders of the local labor organization. Then, they'd plunged into extensive talks—sometimes in English, sometimes through interpreters — on local labor union problems.

THESE TALKS, Brophy said, covered just about every problem under the sun.

"But these people are working and thinking and experimenting. They're tremendously interested in what our unions are doing, and in suggestions as to how they themselves can make their own organizations effective," Brophy said.

"In some countries, of course, the economies are largely agricultural. In others, there's considerable industry—steel, or textile, or rubber—and the unions are growing.

"But everywhere, people were inspired by the ICFTU. And they'd heard much about the CIO —and wanted to know more.

"We have a tremendous opportunity for democratic progress and modern unionism in Asia. I hope we don't muff it."

AT FILIPINO FACTORY: Members of ICFTU delegation to Far East visit a cigar factory in Manila, capital of the Phillipines. Women workers are shown processing the tobacco. Standing at right is John Brophy, CIO member of ICFTU team.

CIO IN SIAM: John Brophy (left) CIO member of ICFTU Far East mission talks over Asian problems with Siam's Premier Songgram (second from left) during group's visit to Bangkok. Other members of delegation and interpreters are shown in the picture, one of several Brophy brought back with him.

CIO Research Aid Post Filled

Nathaniel Goldfinger, research and educational director for the CIO Paperworkers since 1944 and editor of the union's official newspaper for the past five years, has been appointed CIO associate director of research.

The appointment was announced by Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO Director of Education and Research.

Goldfinger replaces Everett M. Kassalow, who recently was named assistant to Chairman W. Stuart Symington of the National Security Resources Board. Goldfinger is a graduate of the City College of New York and did graduate work as a member of the Graduate Faculty of the New School for Social Research in New York.

'Loyalty Czar' Rules Entertainment World

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE entertainment world has a new czar. He's Theodore C. Kirkpatrick, managing editor of Counter-Attack, anti-Communist weekly news letter which has also published "Red Channels."

The latter publication is a purported list of outstanding entertainers who are alleged to have some sort of connection, however slight, with the Reds.

Appearance of "Red Channels" added plentiful fuel to the wave of hysterical anti-Communism—other highlights of which include the fantasies of Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), the boomerang charges Sen. Schoeppel (R. Kan.) tossed at Secy. of Interior Oscar Chapman, and the McCarran Anti-Subversive Control Bill—which is engulfing saner and more effective operations against the Moscow madmen and their stooges in this country.

A NEW YORK Times radio columnist described "Red Channels," which appeared a few weeks ago, as "the Bible up and down Madison Ave." Madison Ave. is the home of most of the big advertising agencies which hire talent, expensive and less expensive, for radio and television shows.

Appearance of "Red Channels" touched off a series of bleats by fanatics and the gullible that cost the jobs of two of the entertainment field's outstanding personalities and threatened that of a third.

JEAN MUIR

First to go was Jean Muir, movie, stage and radio actress, Henry Aldrich's mother in the radio production, "The Aldrich Family." The General Foods Corp., which sponsors the program, paid off on her contract and fired her on the eve of her first appearance because of a handful of complaints that she was listed in "Red Channels." This made her what the firm quaintly called a "controversial personality."

A "controversial personality," it explained, might provoke "antagonism among sizable groups of consumers." The company's supine yielding to the handful of protestants certainly provoked a lot of antagonism among sizable groups of consumers.

"RED CHANNELS" listed Miss Muir's presence at a couple of meetings sponsored by Communist-front organizations and cited references to her in the Daily Worker as a sponsor of meetings and committees. She wasn't even given a chance to register her denial of Communist affiliations or beliefs before she was fired.

'Down In Front!'

Ireene Wicker, the "Singing Lady" whose programs for the last 10 years have provided children with the best in radio and television entertainment, was the next victim. Miss Wicker returned from a trip to Europe, during which she had a private audience with Pope Pius and received from him a special blessing because of her programs for and work with children, to find that her contract had been cancelled by her sponsor, the Kellogg Co., apparently because she, too, was named in "Red Channels."

Miss Wicker's programs have won honors from such organzations as the Women's National Radio Committee, National Federation of Press Women, Parents Magazine, Michigan Child Study League, Radio Guide and Radio Daily. Religious choral groups, including the famous Boys Town Choir, have appeared with her.

But she was listed in "Red Channels," on the basis of an article in the Daily Worker, as a sponsor of a committee to reelect Benjamin Davis, Communist member of the New York City Council, in 1945.

GYPSY ROSE LEE

So in spite of the endorsements of her program and its exceptionally high television rating of 15.5, and in spite of the fact that she never heard of Davis until his name appeared in "Red Channels," her contract was not renewed. And, significantly enough, no new potential sponsor has appeared.

THEN on Sept. 11 Edward Clamage, chairman of the Illinois American Legion's anti-subversive committee, charged in a speech at the state convention that Gypsy Rose Lee, queen of the strip teasers and an author as well, had pro-Communist sympathies. He said the charges were based on "Red Channels."

The American Broadcasting Co. flatly refused to kick her out of her job as mistress of ceremonies on a new audience participation program, "What Makes You Tick?" the premiere of which was scheduled for Sept. 16.

Robert E. Kintner, ABC president, wired Clamage that Miss Lee had signed an affidavit denying any Communist ties and invited him to present any evidence to the contrary if he had it. He hadn't. The answer should come, he said, "from the publishers of 'Red Channels.'"

Miss Lee took a non-communist affidavit, under the Taft-Hartley Act, as an officer of the American Guild of Variety Artists. "Red Channels" had listed her, on the basis of newspaper and book references, as tied in with various Communist Front activities.

In Omaha, Neb., another Legion spokesman tried to block presentation of the play, "Born Yesterday," by the Community Playhouse because the author, Garson Kanin, is mentioned in "Red Channels." The Playhouse refused to yield.

"There is no Communist doctrine in the play—nothing subversive," said Director Kendrick Wilson. "It has a patriotic American theme."

Joseph Vinardi, commander of Omaha Post No. 1, largest in the country, had claimed the staging of the play was "an example of being naive" about "subversive influences," but admitted that he hadn't read it.

KIRKPATRICK'S technique is to gather together clippings from newspapers, especially the Daily Worker, and other publications, use them to indicate that an entertainer is a Communist or CP sympathizer — and then challenge his victim to prove he isn't a Communist or sympathizer by demonstrating that he has done something "concretely" against Communism.

At least, that's what he demanded of Miss Wicker when she protested. In short, he assumes his victims guilty on the basis of unproved evidence and puts the burden of proof of innocence on them. The law works just the opposite way — when a man is charged with a crime, the burden of proof is on the state.

According to an article in Editor & Publisher, the publisher's trade organ, Counter-Attack is owned by American Business Consultants, Inc., of which John G. Keenan is president Kenneth M. Bierly vice president, and Kirkpatrick secretary-treasurer. All were FBI agents during the war.

"How does a name get on the Counter-Attack list?" said the article in Editor & Publisher. "Mr. Kirkpatrick told E&P his sources were newspaper clippings, court records, records of government activities like the Un-American Activities Committee and the Un-American Activities Committee of California, and letterheads and programs of various organizations and publications.

"In the booklet, associations of each listed person were accompanied by citations or of sources of information. A large number of them were newspaper sources. Mr. Kirkpatrick said he had received clippings from private individuals from coast to coast. Many of the citations were from the Daily Worker.

"Are the citations checked for accuracy of content? Mr. Kirkpatrick indicated such checking was unnecessary because 'Red Channels' was intended only as a brief notation of records and publications carrying an individual name in association with organizations.

"How does a name get off the list? Mr. Kirkpatrick declared listed persons must prove to his organization that they are not Communists or fellow-travelers. Public denial, he indicated, would have to be accompanied by active work on behalf of 'pro-American' organizations."

IREENE WICKER

Editor & Publisher added that none of the staff of Counter-Attack has had newspaper experience. CIO Newspaper Guild members familiar with "Red Channels" have no trouble in recognizing this fact.

'Intelligent Solution' To Charges Sought

In New York the eastern regional board of the American Federation of Radio Artists, AFL, demanded a conference of radio networks, advertising agencies and sponsors to draw up "an intelligent solution" to charges of disloyalty against radio and television personalities. It does not become effective until it is voted upon by regional boards in Chicago and Hollywoood.

"If we permit American citizens to be condemned without being given the opportunity to defend themselves," said the resolution, which was touched off by the Muir case, "we are throwing due process of law to the winds and following Stalinist patterns."

Drawn by Russ Priestley

Controls Law Strong On Allocations, But—

Price And Wage Regulations Full Of Confusion

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

THE DEFENSE Production Act of 1950 is law. In the priorities, allocations, inventory control, and materials requisitioning department, the law is strong and forthright.

It sets up clear powers allowing the President to see to it that defense industry gets the supplies it needs, when needed. But in the economic controls section—in anything to do with consumer problems—the law is strictly double-talk, except for a clear section on credit control.

The price "stabilization" section is so full of loopholes you could drive right through it on the inflation wagon without feeling more than a slight jar on the wheels. Its correct title should be the unlimited profit section.

THE WAGE stabilization section is a good deal stronger, but so confusing that it seems to have a double personality, one part cracking down on wage increases and the other turning its back on them.

Here is an analysis of the bill as understood by the CIO News, and a digest of orders issued since the bill became law.

Materials and services for defense industry: The President may set aside (allocate) materials for defense use and may then issue an order stating which defense industry gets first whack (priority) at the allocated material.

Example: he may say, for instance, that 20% of all the copper produced in the U. S. must go to fill military orders, and that the aircraft industry gets first call (priority) on the copper so allocated.

The President may also seize (requisition) the materials to be allocated, forbid manufacturers to hoard such materials (inventory control), and make loans, directly or in the form of guarantees, to insure increased production of necessary materials.

The men actually in charge of all this will be in the existing government departments — Commerce, for strategic raw materials; Interior, for gas, coal, and electric power; Agriculture for food, fertilizer, farm machinery; Interstate Commerce, for rail and motor and inland boat transportation; etc.

The Commerce Dept. was the first to move ahead. It set up a National Production Authority to handle allocations, priorities and inventory control on strategic raw materials such as copper, steel, tin and zinc; appointed William H. Harrison, president of the International Telephone & Telegraph Co., to head the set-up; and called the steel industry in for consultation.

The other agencies will follow suit very soon.

Overall policy will be set by, and quarrels between the agencies will be resolved by, the National Security Resources Board, headed by W. Stuart Symington. The NSRB will also be supervising the wage and price problem, of which more later.

The NSRB is thus the top policy-making and problem-resolving body under the law. It has a strong labor advisory committee and Symington has appointed two labor officials as his personal assistants on labor problems. One is Everett Kassalow, on leave as director of CIO's Full Employment Committee.

Labor supply for defense industry: The law specifically says that manpower controls are out of the picture. However, the Labor Dept. was told by the President to study the manpower situation, make recommendations, and work out with the armed services the important question of which skills should be deferred from the draft.

Price and wage ceilings: The law ties price control and wage control together, tightly. It gives the President three alternatives. First, he must try to work out voluntary wage and price stabilization.

If this doesn't work, he may put on "selective" controls, i.e. he may clamp down on the manufacturers whose prices have risen the most since Korea and let the rest alone.

But whenever he does this he must "stabilize" wages in the same industry, at the same time.

In other words, if shoes go out of sight, he may slap controls on the shoe manufacturers—but he has to "stabilize" the wages of the shoe workers at the same time, regardless of the cost of food or clothing.

His third alternative is to control the whole economy — all prices, and all wages. In fact, he is required to do this when ceilings have been put on a large proportion of retail prices—whatever that means.

There is no provision for either price or wage roll-backs, as such. The level of May 24 to June 24—just before Korea—is to "prevail." But price ceilings may be imposed only when the price has "risen unreasonably" above that level and will "materially affect" the cost of living. The price ceiling must be "generally fair and equitable." So must wage ceilings.

Consumer rationing of scarce items is authorized, but only after the entire economy has been brought under wage-price controls.

For union leaders, the picture is one of confusion. The intent of the act is somehow to "stabilize" wages and prices. And the "stabilization" feature is carefully drawn to cover all types of compensation, not just cash wages.

Presumably pension plans would be "stabilized," too, along with holidays, vacations, night shift premiums.

Actually, it does not look as if union leaders need fear the loss of whatever gains they make between now and when the first controls go into effect in their industries. Nor is President Truman at all anxious to put controls into practice, except for the priorities and allocations system necessitated by the sudden doubling of military expenditures.

So far, the only thing the President has done about price-wage ceilings is (a) to order all businessmen to preserve their price and cost records for the May 24-June 24 period, and (b) set up, but put nobody in charge of, a new Economic Stabilization Agency, composed of a Director of Price Stabilization and a Wage Stabilization Board.

(The Federal Reserve Board restored its old credit rules, and that's the one clear anti-inflation move that has been made. Effect on the consumer is to wipe out the dollar-down, dollar-a-week type of buying on important items.

To buy a car, new or used, you must plunk one-third of the price down in cash and pay the rest in no more than 21 months. To get a gas stove, ironer, refrigerator, deep freeze, air conditioner, radio, TV set, phonograph, sewing machine or vacuum cleaner, you must pay 15% down and the rest in 18 months.

For furniture or carpets, you put down 10% and pay off in 18 months. Home improvement loans require 10% down, balance to be paid in 30 months.)

The profit guarantee: The ground-rules are basically simple, even though mistaken from CIO's point of view: but the law is full of sneaking little exceptions in the price ceiling sections, written in by former enemies of OPA.

Food prices will be "stabilized," if at all, at higher levels than those now prevailing. No price ceiling is to be set on any agricultural commodity which is below either the parity price or the highest price received by the producers in the May 24-June 24 period, whichever is higher.

Since a number of important foods were below parity during the May 24-June 24 period, and still are below parity, because the parity level had recently been raised by Congress, you can read the handwriting on the wall.

Other than food prices will be "stabilized" in a vacuum, and any manufacturer can get around the ceilings very, very easily. Congress even spelled out how to do it. The Director of Price Stabilization is forbidden to set any standards, that's all. If a shirt manufacturer used to put out three lines of differing qualities, selling at $3, $5 and $7, there is nothing in the law to prevent his selling his $3 shirt for $7 under a different label.

The Price Stabilizer can't even tell him he can only make so many $7 shirts and must divide the rest of his production between $3 and $5 garments. The manufacturer can, if he likes, concentrate on making a $3 shirt, labelling it differently, and selling it for $7 regardless of what it's actually worth. Not only does the law guarantee him his pre-Korea profit, it guarantees his profiteering.

Rent control is specifically written out of the law.

The wage confusions: The law was written in an election year and labor has a good many votes. Therefore the worst amendments to the law were defeated—the ones that would have forbidden any wage increases at all, above the May 24-June 24 level. What is left is purest double-talk.

The Wage Stabilizers are told to hold wages to the May-June level except that if they were not "generally representative" between those dates they should be set at the nearest date on which they were "generally representative."

The Board also must "give due consideration to such relevant factors . . . as may be of general applicability" and must set wage rates that are "fair and equitable," "make such adjustments as are necessary to prevent or correct hardships or inequities" and "give due consideration to the national effort to achieve maximum production."

Wage stabilization, in other words, would be genuine stabilization, not a freeze, if that were as far as it went.

On the other hand, the President is directed to "prohibit increases in wages, salaries and other compensation which he deems would require an increase in the price ceiling or impose hardships or inequities on sellers operating under the price ceiling."

The President is also empowered to set up new agencies to settle labor disputes, if he feels like it, but the law is completely unclear as to whether the Wage Stabilization Board would handle the disputes or whether there would be two new agencies, one for hearing arguments about wages, the other for "settling disputes."

In explaining this hodge-podge to the nation, President Truman mildly remarked that it was confusing to the point where it might be necessary to resort to general, over-all controls before they are really necessary.

"This may prove to be a defect in the law which will require correction," he said, which is one of the understatements of the year.

Fortunately for the nation, the wage-price section of the law expires next June, which means that the new Congress will be forced to review it as one of its first tasks.

Digest Of Broad Economic Powers Given To President

Here are the principal clear-cut powers given President Truman in the new economic stabilization law (Defense Production Act of 1950):

1. He may allocate strategic materials and establish priorities to govern distribution of the allocated materials. This has already been started.

2. He may requisition whatever the military needs and pay for it later. This power has not yet been used.

3. He may crack down on hoarding by both manufacturers and consumers. An industrial anti-hoarding order (i.e. an inventory control order) is in preparation.

4. He may "stabilize" wages and prices, piecemeal or altogether, but must control both at once. If price ceilings are established in a single industry, wages in that industry must be controlled too. Machinery is ready for this. Price stabilization power is very weak, wage stabilization powers confusing.

5. He may set up a consumer rationing system—but only after the entire economy has been brought under wage-price controls, not before. No machinery yet.

6. He may regulate consumer and real estate credit. The Federal Reserve Board has already revived its old consumer credit regulation. Real estate credit curbs are in the works.

7. He may make direct loans, or guarantee loans, to industry for plant expansion and other purposes.

"Oh, I'm not going anywhere. I just wanted some change for the parking meter."

'Unconstitutional,' Bell Says Of Utility Anti-Strike Law

THE NEW JERSEY Bell Telephone Co. is still trying to get out from under a state arbitration board award which in April gave 11,000 CIO Communications Workers a $2.50 weekly pay raise.

The company's latest maneuver took place before the N. J. Supreme Court where Thomas G. Williams, attorney for Bell, argued that the state's utility anti-strike law under which the arbitration board was set up by Gov. Alfred Driscoll is unconstitutional. He based his argument on the alleged invasion by the state of the field federal communication regulation.

CWA Counsel Israel Green argued that the company could not attack the constitutionality of the act since it had joined in creating the board and had participated in hearings and other proceedings in accordance with the law.

Benjamin C. Van Tine, state deputy attorney general, defended the act by declaring that the state, in providing the legislation, had done nothing more than move to protect services essential to the New Jersey public. He said that such action is not an invasion of the federal commerce field.

The Appellate Division of the Superior Court sustained the act and approved the board's increase, but the company's appeal to the Supreme Court barred the Superior Court direction that the raise be paid, effective April 20.

Haywood Tells Woodworkers:

200,000 Join CIO During Purge Of CP Unions

By MANLEY J. WILSON

CIO VICE Pres. Allan S. Haywood told the fourteenth annual convention of the Intl. Woodworkers of America that more than 200,000 persons joined the CIO during the past year, simultaneously with the purge of Communist-dominated unions.

In an eloquent plea for continued war against the Reds, Haywood told the 400 delegates to the convention at Minneapolis, Minn.:

"Whenever we find Communists in unions now, we are out to supplant them with real unionists. Two weeks ago the 'last of the Mohicans'—Harry Bridges — was expelled from the CIO."

Haywood's address highlighted the second day of the convention. The CIO leader was given an ovation when he appeared on the convention floor. Later he attended a cabaret party and banquet at which Movie Star Pat O'Brien also was a guest of honor.

HEARTY WELCOME: Allan S. Haywood, CIO Vice President and Director of Organization, is greeted at the Union Station in Minneapolis, Minn., on his arrival there to address the CIO Woodworkers' convention. Left to right, Adolph Germer, IWA Director of Organization; Fullerton Fulton, CIO Regional Director for Minnesota; Haywood; IWA Pres. J. E. Fadling; IWA Secy-Treas. Carl Winn; William Angove, IWA Board member, and John Hawkins, IWA Vice President. Haywood got an ovation when he appeared on the convention floor.

THE CONVENTION voted overwhelmingly to sustain J. E. Fadling, IWA president, whose reelection last November was disputed by the Columbia River District of the union. Alleged violation of union rules for conducting elections was cited.

"During the past 12 months, our membership achieved long-sought and important goals on the economic front," Fadling told delegates. "The membership has received social benefits and security far beyond expectations. We are particularly pleased with the health and welfare program negotiated with the vast lumber industry in the Pacific Northwest and California.

"The health and welfare program of the IWA now covers 40,000 members of the union. On August 31, approximately $48,000 had been paid in death claims and more than 500 members had received claims for lost time due to illness and accidents."

Fadling also pointed out that since price rises have started in the past two months, a 5c hourly wage increase was negotiated by a large block of IWA locals in the State of Washington.

The minimum wage in that area is $1.50 per hour, plus 7½c per hour for the health and welfare insurance program. Three paid holidays — Memorial Day, Fourth of July and Labor Day—have been allowed.

TILFORD DUDLEY, assistant National PAC director, warned the delegates that the national election is only eight weeks away and that labor must intensify its efforts to get voters registered and to the polls.

"The kind of Congress we elect in November," he declared, "will probably determine the future security and peace of the world."

A series of resolutions on questions affecting organized labor and the country were passed by the convention. One condemned Communists, Fascists and Nazis who "have carried on vicious and unprincipled campaigns undermining the trade union movement from within."

A more equitable balance between the prices people must pay and the income of working people was recommended in another resolution. It was urged that the IWA utilize every possible means to increase wages for its members and to join with all labor and the general public to force a roll-back of prices to the June 1 level and fight for re-establishment of rent controls.

IWA WAS urged in another resolution to support a federal safety code in the lumber industry, need for which was explained to the President's Conference on Safety. Congress will be petitioned to hold immediate hearings on pending safety bills.

The writer, who attended the President's conference, charged that Congress had not enacted the Humphrey-Burke Bill for federal safety codes legislation because of the opposition of the Labor Dept., casualty companies and employers in industries having high accident frequency rates.

Authored by the IWA Klamath Basin District Council, a resolution was approved branding an attack by the lumber industry on reciprocal trade agreements as a smoke screen to divert public attention from enormous profits.

Charging that, despite tremendous technical advance in medical science during recent years, American workers and their families do not fully enjoy opportunities for better and more healthful living, the convention called for an integrated national health program, including national health insurance.

Get Out Vote Or Lose, Kroll Warns Colorado CIO

THE POLITICAL history of Colorado "shows conclusively that when large numbers of voters go to the polls on election day, the excess numbers vote the Democratic ticket by a ratio of 2 to 1," PAC Dir. Jack Kroll told delegates to the Colorado CIO Industrial Union Council convention in Denver.

Kroll advised the 100 delegates, representing 41 CIO locals, to insist that candidates for re-election to public office run on their records.

"It's their record," he said. "They made it, let them stand or fall on it."

He cited in detail the unfortunate experiences of labor and liberal forces in other sections of the country when voters fail to turn out for primary elections.

"Don't let that happen in Colorado," he warned. "Liberals and labor, working together, have the strength and the ability to stem the tide of reaction."

Backing up Kroll's contention that citizens are reluctant to vote in primary elections, Pres. Clarence Palmer, of the Utah CIO Council, recounted that in the recent Utah primaries, only 86,000 out of 386,000 registered voters went to the polls.

ANTHONY W. SMITH, assistant director of industrial union councils, informed the convention that the CIO is "willing and anxious" that rank and file members of unions, expelled because their leaders insisted on them following the Communist Party line, return and "continue the fight for genuine trade union objectives," but only on the condition that they repudiate such Communist leadership.

The convention passed resolutions urging repeal of the Colorado labor peace act which outlaws the closed shop; asking for an increase in state unemployment compensation to $35 weekly; calling for a guaranteed teacher's minimum wage of $2400 yearly, and recommending establishment of a state department of labor.

The group urged continued cooperation with AFL, IAM, railroad brotherhoods and other liberal organizations for improved social legislation in the state.

Gov. Walter Johnson, of Colorado, briefly addressed the convention.

In 10 Weeks, Puerto Rican Farmhand Earned Minus $9.69

ONE MAN worked for almost 10 weeks and owed his employer $9.69. Another averaged $2 a week for eight weeks. These and many similar accounts were given to the President's Commission on Migratory Labor at its hearings in Saginaw, Mich., by Puerto Rican field hands flown to Michigan in June to work on the sugar beet crop.

Santos Cintron, who ended up owing the Michigan Sugar Co., testified the same thing had happened to many others he knew. He told how he and seven others arrived here at dawn on June 12 from Puerto Rico and were working in the fields by mid-afternoon. The group lived in a 12 by 18-foot building and slept under the double-deck bunks when it rained, he recalled.

Cintron said the company took $55 from each man's pay for transportation and advanced $5 weekly for food. On Aug. 9 the men were told they weren't needed any longer and were also told they owed the company money. (Under terms guaranteed them before they left home, the workers were to receive at least $46.35 by that date.) Cintron reported he was unable to send his wife and seven children money for three months. He is now earning $75 weekly in a Detroit steel plant.

Other workers produced similar testimony. Rev. Clement Kern, of Detroit's Holy Trinity Church, said he had seen six pay statements, covering a five-week period, which showed net earnings for two of $10.19; for another, $13.24; $16.14 for one and $16.15 for another, and $34.37 for the other. Father Kern said that "about 100" Islanders went to his "beaten down" parish on "Skid Row" to talk over their problems.

"I could not be a priest for five minutes if I didn't stand up and protest against the horrible concept that men with families can get along without money to send to them," he said.

Saginaw has been the scene this summer of much controversy over the migrant problem. A CIO Auto Workers' local initiated a probe and found conditions "brutal" and "shocking." Puerto Rico's Labor Commissioner flew in, looked over the situation, and reported to his government the charges were all true, that the treatment his countrymen were getting was "indecent."

THE INSULAR Legislature allocated money to aid the workers and recently Michigan Field Crops, Inc., negotiated an agreement with the Puerto Rican government on wages and conditions for those remaining here to harvest the crop.

Representatives of the Michigan Field Crops, Inc., comprising 18,913 growers in 44 Michigan counties, warned the President's commission that federal regulation of the use of farm labor would be "ruinous" to their industry.

One contended that there is "no quick, ready answer" to the migrant problem, and charged that "many persons without any direct responsibility in the problem are interested either from a crusading point of view or because they have personal or political axes to grind." (LPA)

Pardon Me, But Aren't Your Tires Pinching Your Rims?

If you buy a new car, it might be a good idea to take a close look at the size of the tires before you proudly drive it out on the highway.

The United Rubber Worker, official publication of the CIO rubber union, warns in its September issue that certain auto manufacturers are equipping new cars with tires which are too small.

As a result, the tires in many cases are averaging only 12,000 miles instead of the 25,000 they should give under ordinary driving conditions.

Why do some manufacturers equip their cars with too small tires?

Because of the added profits, the union publication says. They save at least $1 on each "too small" tire. That's $5 saved on each car. Multiply that by one million cars and the manufacturer winds up with $5 million to which he is not entitled.

So, while admiring the motor and the paint job of your new car, don't forget to take a good look at the tires. It may save you money.

World Council Spot To UPW

A place on the executive council of the International Trade Union Federation of Food and Drink Workers has been granted to the CIO Packinghouse Workers.

Marius Madsen, president of the Intl. Union of Food and Drink Workers (IUFD), hailed the affiliation as a major event in the organization's 25-year history.

School Board 'Shelves' Book Rapping Press

THE CHICAGO School Board has virtually banned a textbook because it speaks frankly about the bias of the commercial press. Head of the board is William B. Traynor, a vice-president of Swift & Co.

The book, "Our Changing Social Order," has been put on the "reserve" list, and the board will ask the publishers to alter the chapter devoted to the press, because it contains "untruths."

Here is what the chapter says in part: "The typical newspaper is far from being impartial. The bias or special interests of its owners are reflected on every page. News unfriendly to their point of view may be omitted altogether or printed in very brief form, perhaps near the foot of an inside page.

"The desire to please advertisers may also interfere with impartial presentations of the news. A modern newspaper obtains the bulk of its income from advertising. Therefore the advertising manager is likely to have more power than the editors. He will not approve editorials that might offend big advertisers. Local news items hostile to the interests of big advertisers may not appear or may appear in garbled form.

"Pressure from advertisers is not the chief reason that newspapers so generally favor business men, rather than consumers, employers rather than working men. Newspaper owners themselves are businessmen and employers. They have labor troubles of their own, and it is natural for them to sympathize with other employers involved in strikes. In all matters of public policy they tend to reflect the point of view of the social and economic class to which they belong." LPA

Taft Pleads For Loan To Franco, Says 'People' Want Spain As Ally

AS SEN. TAFT (R.) left Washington last week for Ohio to carry on his re-election campaign, he called upon Pres. Truman to let Spain have the money Congress voted to loan the Franco regime.

The President, he said, should "follow the obvious desires of the American people" and make available the $62.5 million Congress wrote into the Omnibus Appropriation Act for Dictator Franco's government.

The President had pointed out in signing the bill that the loan was only an authorization and not an order to him, which he contended would be unconstitutional. Spain can get the money, the President added, when it gives proper security under arrangements which "serve the interests of the United States in the conduct of her foreign relations."

The CIO and other liberal organizations have opposed the Franco loan.

The Ohio Republican thinks the time has come to round up all anti-Communist countries in the defense setup, and that if at least part of the loan to Spain is used to strengthen that nation's defenses, there is no reason why it should not be made. In addition, he maintained, the people generally want Spain on our side.

One of the things Taft is going home to is a gold-plated testimonial dinner scheduled for Cleveland on Oct. 9, with every heavy-sugar papa in Ohio—and a few from outside the state—on the list of patrons.

How they will react to his stand on the Spanish loan was uncertain, because they seem to be torn between two fires insofar as their own attitude is concerned. One school of thought envisions Spain as merely a stopping place for all that lovely money en route from the U. S. Treasury to their own coffers.

ANOTHER fears that it will be used to strengthen Spanish government agencies that exercise a form of state corporation, and that private enterprise in that country will get no more than a few crumbs at best.

The Taft testimonial is sponsored by the Laymen's National Committee. This outfit used to be known as the National Committee for Religious Recovery and is an old-line, anti-New Deal, anti-labor organization with strong Nazi and Franco ties.

It accepts no money from churches or church organizations because big business finances it more than adequately.

The committee also has the paternal interest of Merwin K. Hart, head of the National Economic Council, another repository for big business funds earmarked for propaganda purposes.

PATRONS OF the testimonial to the Ohio "statesman" include Tom Girdler, chairman of the board of directors of Republic Steel; Pres. Charles M. White of Republic Steel; Frank Purnell, board chairman of Youngstown Sheet & Tube; Pres. Robert E. Woodruff of the Erie Railroad; Harvey Firestone, Jr., chairman of the board of Firestone Tire & Rubber; Pres. John L. Collyer of Goodrich Tire, and George W. Codrington, head of GE's Cleveland Diesel Engine division.

Publishers and editors are joining in the tribute to their fair-haired boy, too. Patrons include John S. Knight, publisher of the Akron Beacon Journal; Paul Bellamy of the Cleveland Press; Charles F. McCahill of the Cleveland News, and Henry R. Luce, publisher of Time, Life, Fortune, etc.

From outside the State come such stalwarts as Earl Bunting, managing director of the National Association of Manufacturers; Pres. Harry B. Higgins of Pittsburgh Plate Glass; Pres. Samuel Messer of Quaker Oil; Pres. Smith W. Storey of General Portland Cement; Gen. Robert E. Wood, board chairman of Sears Roebuck, and Fred M. Zeder, vice chairman of Chrysler.

Danish, French Unions Flay Aggression

The United Nations' resistance to Communist aggression in Korea continues to win support from workers in all parts of the world.

In Denmark, the Danish Federation of Labor, representing some 650,000 workers, has publicly condemned the North Korean attack and the fake peace campaign of the Communists. The federation's newspaper, Arbejderen, recently exposed Communist aggression and propaganda in a front page article.

"There is no doubt that the Russian people's will to peace is as great as is the will to peace in other countries," it said.

"It is certain that the Russian people do not want war, but in a dictatorship it is the wielders of power who determine whether there is to be peace or war. They are, sadly enough, able to direct a one-way course for public opinion and stir that opinion through untruthful propaganda proclaiming that the democracies have designs on attacks for conquest.

"All peace appeals, therefore, ought to be directed to the masters in the Kremlin, the place where, if they wish it, peace could be reestablished in Korea and in the rest of the world, and the cold war could be changed for a productive, cooperative work among peoples."

In the official journal of the Force Ouvriere, the French free union group, Assistant Secy. Robert Bothereau wrote that it is "very clear that the armed attack came from the North."

He warned that the united reaction of the free world in Korea may well turn Stalin back to "nibbling" to establish new so-called people's democracies through political subversion. He also warned French workers that the CGT, the Communist-dominated union federation in that country, will intensify efforts to disrupt French industry and again urge pacificism and a fake working class united front.

Pegler Said To 'Typify School Of Fascism'

Westbrook Pegler "typifies the school of fascism in this country," the House was told last week by Rep. Jacobs (D. Ind.) Jacobs was replying to a recent column by Pegler, widely syndicated columnist.

Pegler, said Jacobs, is "the patron saint of everything ugly, mean, low and cruel that America stands against."

A subcommittee headed by Jacobs investigated union practices, and Pegler, in one of his columns, wrote that Jacobs could save the country lots of money by just calling on Pegler to tell what he knew. Jacobs did, and Pegler flopped. "The man who seemed so bellicose to millions of readers was as mild as a sucking dove," commented the Louisville Courier Journal on Pegler's testimony.

Pegler, said Jacobs, "attempts to deceive the public without engaging in technical falsehood. And he seems to think the Lord did a mighty bum job of creating everyone on earth except Pegler."

Because of the international situation, Jacobs went on, Pegler is dangerous. "I maintain that every man who discloses the iniquitous and vicious technique that is employed by these angels of hate—of whom Pegler is the archangel—every man that can contribute to jerking down the veil so that he can be seen in his true light, is rendering a service to his country."

NLRB Changes Mind, Gives CIO Chance To Get In Poll

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board has reversed itself and given the CIO Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee a chance to show that it has an "interest" in a representation election involving thousands of Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. agents in six states.

The board's action followed an earlier ruling, handed down a few weeks ago, dismissing the CIO's request for a place on the ballot in a forthcoming election, or at least an opportunity to intervene and demonstrate that it can show sufficient membership to merit a spot on the ballot. The CIO's request for reconsideration was granted.

The election has been pending for more than a year. It was ordered after an earlier election in which the CIO was represented on the ballot by the United Office & Professional Workers, since expelled as Communist-dominated.

The UOPWA was chosen bargaining representative of the agents in New York and New Jersey. In other states the results were inconclusive or "no union" polled the most votes. The NLRB ordered that election set aside and a new one held.

The agents affected by the ruling work in Illinois, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Connecticut and Rhode Island.

"She began condemning my husband's union, but she suddenly got a headache and went home!"

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

What Price Hysteria?

SOMETIMES policemen can be too eager—as one was in Cleveland, O., recently.

Paul McDonald, a staff member of the CIO Insurance & Allied Workers Organizing Committee, was passing out photostated copies of a 1946 New York State Communist party nomination petition at the offices of the Monumental Insurance Co., where an NLRB election is scheduled. The petition listed James H. Durkin, president of the CIO-expelled Office & Professional Workers Union, as one of the signers.

One of Cleveland's finest approached Paul and asked what kind of literature he was passing out.

McDonald handed him a copy which was headed "Communist Party Petition" and the policeman, without reading the contents, promptly arrested him for distributing Communist Party literature.

Fortunately when they arrived at the cooler, the head man of the Cleveland Police Dept. Labor Squad was on hand and after he read the leaflet McDonald was speedily set free.

His rescuer gave him his card and told Paul if he was arrested for the same offense in the future to show the card and ask the arresting officer to call the police station before hauling him in.

POLITICAL ACTION IN THE MIDWEST: Sadie Bean (above) was one of the 100 CIO union members who responded to the call of the Milwaukee CIO Council for volunteers to distribute get-out-the vote leaflets. Following the distribution of 20,000 leaflets, a rise in registration was reported. The council is cooperating with the AFL and independent unions in the Labor Political League.

Medical Society Sued By Harassed Hospital

FOR TWO DECADES, members of the Farmers' Union in southwestern Oklahoma fought a losing fight against organized medicine's battle to destroy the community hospital and clinic they had established to provide group health facilities on the pre-payment plan.

Time after time, over the years, they saw competent physicians leave their jobs with the Community Hospital at Elk City because of fear of reprisal by medical societies.

Time after time, they saw the membership applications of qualified doctors on the hospital staff kicked around by the Beckham County (Okla.) Medical Association, never acted upon.

Time after time, they saw the hospital refused money grants, which it needed badly to maintain and expand facilities, because organized medicine had blacklisted it.

Now the worm has finally turned. The Farmers' Union Hospital Association and a group of its members have filed suit in the Beckham County District Court for $300,000 in triple damages from the Beckham County Medical Association and its members as individuals.

The hospital association charges the medical group and its members with violating the state's common law, which forbids conspiracies in restraint of trade, and the state anti-trust laws.

The hospital association is a non-profit corporation organized under Oklahoma laws. It was founded in 1931 with Dr. Michael A. Shaddid as first medical director.

The suit was filed by the Washington law firm of Arnold, Fortas & Porter, in association with L. G. Brewer, Elk City attorney. The 10-page complaint lists in detail the specific actions of the medical association and its members upon which the general charges are based.

In addition to the $300,000 in triple damages, the group health association is also seeking an injunction restraining the organized medicos from continuing in their actions; an order requiring the medical association to admit to membership qualified members of the hospital medical staff, and another order requiring the defendants to post a $100,000 bond to insure compliance with the court decree.

Hawaiian Director Is Named By CIO

Rudolph Eskovitz, formerly port agent for the Marine Cooks & Stewards in Honolulu, has been appointed to the newly-created post of CIO regional director for the Hawaiian Islands, Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, announced last week.

Tim Flynn, CIO regional director for northern California, will go to Honolulu later this month to assist Eskovitz in setting up the new regional office. The Marine Cooks & Stewards was expelled from the CIO at the recent meeting of the Executive Board because of Communist domination.

Oakland Paper Folds

Oakland, Cal., newsboys have one less paper to hawk. Their cry of "Get your P-E now" is gone from the bay area streets. The Oakland Post-Enquirer has folded, and so have the jobs of 400 employes, 147 of whom are members of the American Newspaper Guild-CIO. P-E's exit, after 64 years of operation, makes Oakland the largest one-newspaper city in the nation.

Steel Union Asks Weirton Certification

THE CIO Steelworkers have opened a frontal attack on one of the few remaining citadels of reaction in the steel industry by filing a petition for certification at the Weirton Steel Co. with the National Labor Relations Board at Pittsburgh, Pa.

The petition was filed five weeks after the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals at Philadelphia, following 13 years of litigation, upheld a finding that the company had violated the Wagner Act. The court also supported a ruling that Weirton Steel dissociate itself from its company-dominated union.

Acting for the USA-CIO was Paul Rusen, director of the union's District 23, at Wheeling, W. Va. The plants of Weirton, a subsidiary of the National Steel Co., are at Weirton W. Va., and across the Ohio River at Steubenville, O.

At the same time Rusen asked Pres. Thomas Millsop of Weirton for an "early meeting" to discuss a contract. Millsop refused. He took refuge in the terms of the court ruling which barred the company from recognizing a union or negotiating a labor contract for 90 days after the decree was entered. There was nothing in the ruling about meeting with a union to discuss a contract before expiration of the 90-day period.

Rusen claimed a majority of the company's employes are members of the USA. William Huff, president of a newly-formed "union," the Independent Steelworkers Union—which the USA-CIO claims is the old company union under a new label—asserted that he is keeping in his files $2 bills from each of 7500 Weirton workers who want to be members. The dummy's attorney, former Gov. C. W. Meadows, of West Virginia, is preparing to incorporate it, he said.

Court Approves TWU Pensions, But Not Bosses'

IT PAYS TO be a member of the CIO Transport Workers Union.

If you don't believe it, ask any one of 25 retired TWU members in Schenectady, N. Y., who will continue to draw pensions even though their former employer, the Schenectady Railway Co., has gone into bankruptcy.

Federal Court Judge Stephen W. Brennan handed down a ruling in answer to a suit by a creditor to enjoin payment of pension benefits to 28 men who had retired prior to appointment of a trustee last June.

The decision was based on the premise that an employe's wage is not limited to his hourly rate alone, but includes seniority rights, vacation privileges, sick leave and pension benefits.

He held that where pensions are provided in a union agreement, part of the current wage cost is the pension payment due union members who have retired under the agreement.

How about the other three guys?

They held supervisory ratings not covered by the TWU contract. Judge Brennan ruled they are not eligible for any further pension payments.

1.6 Million Laugh At Taft Comic Book

Nearly 1,600,000 copies of "The Robert Alphonso Taft Story" have been distributed by the United Labor League of Ohio, proving that Taft is a good subject for a comic book.

As amusing as any comic you're likely to find, the book tells about Taft's record.

Members of the United Labor League are the Ohio CIO Political Action Committee, Ohio State Federation Political Education League, Machinists Non-Partisan Political League, United Mine Workers District 6, and the railroad brotherhoods.

Bulletin Shows How BLS Prepares Tables

The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics has prepared a bulletin showing the steps taken in the preparation of each of its 13 major statistical tables.

The descriptions cover industrial employment; labor turnover; occupational wages, both the sampling procedures and the conduct of surveys; strike statistics; earnings and hours in industry; union wage and hour scales; productivity; industrial injuries; housing volume; new construction expenditures; monthly and weekly wholesale prices, and the consumers' price index.

"The way prices are I can't get by on my usher's pay."

Steel Workers Open Drive For Union Shops

THE CIO Steelworkers are in the midst of a drive for union shop elections in the basic steel and aluminum industries.

Union staff members are rounding up signatures for petitions to be filed with the National Labor Relations Board, which requires the names of at least 30% of the employes of each bargaining unit.

The drive is scheduled to be completed first in the U.S. Steel Corp. and its subsidiaries, then go on into other basic producers. The union hopes to get the first election out of the way about Nov. 1.

The USA-CIO has hundreds of fabricating plants under union shop contracts, members having demonstrated overwhelmingly in elections that they want security for their union.

These elections are continuing, with one set for some 18,000 employes of the American Can Co. in 25 plants for the next few weeks. In addition, some 12,000 employes of the Continental Can Co. are signing petitions in anticipation of a request for an election, to be filed soon. Both companies consented to the election, which will cover all units of each except American Can plants in Texas and Arkansas, where state laws forbid union shop agreements.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer, along with Pres. Murray, other CIO people and AFL representatives, attended a dinner in Washington on Sept. 8 for President Harry S. Truman.

Enroute to Minneapolis, Minn., the writer attended a nice affair in Chicago honoring Steelworkers District Director Joseph Germano. It was a splendid gathering and demonstrated the affection and respect that workers and friends have for Brother Germano. The Mayor of Chicago, Martin J. Kennelly, as well as Sens. Douglas and Lucas, were in attendance.

The writer attended the Intl. Woodworkers convention in Minneapolis this past week. This organization has shown a healthy growth since its convention a year ago.

The most remarkable achievement has been the improvement in the situation in Western Canada, where Harold Pritchett and his Communist groups attempted in every way possible to take Canadian members out of the IWA.

The union was compelled to give battle to protect its members. Today the IWA is stronger than ever and Pritchett and his group were completely routed.

The convention through Pres. Fadling, Sec.-Treas. Winn, Vice Pres. Hartung and the other officers voiced support of the CIO and its policies, and support of the stand of the CIO, the United States, and the United Nations in the present world crisis.

The IWA is desirous of expansion and continuing growth, and is determined to achieve this end. It has had a wonderful history and the membership, the officers, and the CIO are proud of it.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that in a representation election at the Rubber Corp. of California, Garden Grove, Calif., the workers voted in favor of the United Rubber Workers-CIO by 188 to 11 for no union.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, Intl. Woodworkers, reports the following representation election victories: Coast Way Lumber Co., Glenwood, Ore., IWA-CIO 24, no union 0; Dulaney Veneer Co., Cuthbert, Ga., IWA-CIO 22, no union 12, challenged 2.

Thomas Andert, president, United Optical & Instrument Workers-CIO, reports that in a de-certification election at the Clement Co., Northampton, Mass., the workers voted in favor of the UOIWA-CIO by 48 to 11 for no union. UOIWA Reps. Duggan and O'Reilly were in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that the United Steelworkers-CIO won a representation election among shipping department workers of Layne and Bowler, Memphis, Tenn., by a vote of 35 to 2. CIO Rep. J. D. Harris handled this campaign.

Al Hartnett, assistant to the chairman of IUE-CIO, reports a representation election victory at Felt and Tarrant, Chicago, Ill., by the following count: IUE 303, no union 34.

Reg. Dir. Pete Mosele reports that the United Steelworkers-CIO won representation elections at two mines formerly under the jurisdiction of the discredited Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers: Alan Wood Steel Co., Dover Mine, N. J., USA-CIO 283, against 3, and Alan Wood Steel Co., Oxford Mine, N. J., USA-CIO 55, against 6.

Studebaker Grants Hike

THE STUDEBAKER Corp., South Bend, Ind., has fallen in line with other major producers in the industry.

A new five-year contract has been negotiated, winning for 21,000 CIO Auto Workers members an immediate increase of 9c, an annual increase of 4c an hour for each year of the contract, and cost of living adjustments. Wages will be reviewed every three months in line with living costs.

General Motors, Chrysler, Ford and Kaiser-Frazer already have raised wages, affecting about 600,000 employes.

Subversive Controls Bill Ready For Final Action

THE HOTLY-debated McCarran-Mundt-Nixon "anti-subversive" bill was about ready, late last week, for final Congressional action.

Passed first by the House with only 20 votes against, it sailed through the Senate, at the end of a week of debate, by a 70-7 vote. But a number of preliminary tests in the Senate found up to 29 Senators opposing various sections of the bill.

President Truman, a week earlier, had said he would not sign the original Mundt-Nixon measure. Later, White House aides said that the final product of Congress on the subject would get careful study, in view of a number of changes voted into the legislation.

With adjournment scheduled for mid-September, some supporters of the bill—which has been branded as dangerous to civil liberties—were seeking a formula to keep Congress theoretically in session for a week or two.

They acted out of a belief that adjournment would permit the President to use his constitutional "pocket veto." Bills under consideration at the White House when Congress adjourns fail to become law if the President does not sign them in 10 days. However, the President said on Sept. 14 that he will not give it a pocket veto, but will turn it down with a formal veto if he determines it ought to be killed.

Supporters of the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon Bill are hopeful, in view of their strength in both branches of Congress, that a possible Presidential veto could be over-ridden. They want such a test with the President.

THE SEVEN Senators who voted against the bill were all Democrats — Graham (N.C.); Green (R.I.); Leahy (R.I.); Kefauver (Tenn.); Lehman (N.Y.); Taylor (Ida.); and Murray (Mont.).

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in a letter to each of the seven, offered his "congratulations and appreciation" for fighting the "dangerous provisions" of the bill.

"I was deeply impressed with the dangers it carries for liberal and labor organizations, under the guise of allegedly regulating subversive activities," Murray wrote.

Voicing hope that the fight against the bill will be carried on to the very end, the CIO president added:

"In so doing, you will be performing a real service to the great majority of Americans who agree that there should be no room for totalitarianism of the left or of the right in this great country of ours.

"The CIO fully believes in the necessity for closing loopholes in our statutes dealing with espionage, sabotage and treason.

"But there is no justification for destroying time-tested safeguards for our constitutional liberties in the process of building our national defense and security.

"I fear that the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon Bill in its present form would invite hysteria, persecution and silencing of honest opposition to government policies."

THE BILL which passed the House was one that had been recommended for many years by the House Un-American Activities Committee. It has been opposed by the FBI and the Dept. of Justice on grounds that it would merely drive the Communist Party underground.

In the Senate, Sen. Kilgore (D. W.Va.) offered a substitute proposal which would have provided for mass detention of Communists and others in times of emergency. While less sweeping than the McCarran bill, it also was subjected to criticism that its language was broad and fuzzy.

An effort to pass the Kilgore Bill as a substitute was beaten, 50-23. Another motion, by Sen. Lucas (D. Ill.), to wipe out the controversial Communist registration section of the McCarran bill in favor of Kilgore's proposal, was knocked down, 45-29.

Merger of the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon and the Kilgore Bills was defeated at first by a 37-35 vote. But later, the Senate reconsidered the proposal and passed it by a voice vote.

Some improvements in the Kilgore measure were also voted. They provided for habeas corpus and other safeguards for people picked up for detention, and guaranteed that warrants would be needed to arrest suspected spies or saboteurs.

Alaska Statehood Approval Urged

Speedy action on the Alaska Statehood bill was urged on the Senate last week by the CIO in a letter from Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation.

"We are convinced that this bill as reported is a good bill with one exception," he wrote, "that is, the subsection which prevents the establishment of Indian reservations in Alaska.

"We urge that this subsection be eliminated by reference back to the committee or by amendment, and that the bill be passed without further change or delay."

NAM Pouts Out Loud And Denies It's Stupid

IT'S ROUND two in the battle of words between Fortune, the $1.25-a-copy businessman's magazine, and the National Association of Manufacturers.

The hassle started when Fortune's September issue carried a bristlingly hostile analysis of the big-business advertising hoopla for "free enterprise."

Fortune complained that the propaganda was pretty stupid; was not reaching its mark; and that behind a mask of "impartiality," it was designed to help elect Republicans to office.

In the course of its extended remarks, Fortune took a generous swing at the NAM, which it cited as the spearhead of the "free enterprise" propaganda campaign.

Last week, the NAM News replied—with a tone that "sticks and stones will break my bones, but names will never hurt me."

"This department is inclined to wonder," the NAM News said in a lead editorial, "how many unflattering remarks about Fortune could be collected from U. S. businessmen if one were to try diligently enough."

The NAM editorial said it can always find fuzzy thinking at Lake Success or Washington, but thought it surprising that a "first class magazine" like Fortune would arrive at false conclusions on the basis of insufficient evidence.

And the NAM gave itself a generous plug on the back for keeping America from going "Socialistic"—despite what it chose to describe as "nearly two decades of indefatigable effort by powerful, persuasive and skillful forces to take it in that direction."

THESE FIVE COMELY LASSES were contestants for the title of "Miss Crystal City" in a beauty contest at a CIO picnic held at the glass manufacturing center in Missouri. The tall girl in the center, Ruby Dantice, won the title and a first prize of $50. She is a receptionist in the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company's employment office in Crystal City. The girls are, left to right: Billy Young, Barbara Leftridge, Miss Dantice, Joyce Huckie and Doris Fischer. Vice-Pres. Leland Beard of the CIO's Federation of Glass Workers, who took the picture, was a judge, and according to a spectator looked as though "he wanted to be the jury, too, and pronounce all five of the beauties guilty—of being whistle bait."

Labels Reach County Fairs

THE CIO Clothing Workers are carrying their million dollar union label campaign to the country's farmers.

At the same time they are demonstrating effectively the close economic ties between the men who grow the nation's food and the urban consumers who eat most of it.

The ACWA is staging union label exhibits at county fairs in Missouri, Illinois, Kentucky and Michigan, demonstrating to an average of 100,000 persons at each that the farmer gets a better buy in clothing in every price range, when he purchases a suit or overcoat with an ACWA label.

Furthermore, the farmer is told, support of decent wage and working standards for union workers gives them greater purchasing powers—of which the farmers are among the principal beneficiaries.

The union is displaying its exhibits at the fairs in tents—like the rest of the exhibits. It passes out especially prepared literature and awards free a suit of clothes on the basis of a survey of union labels.

Speaker Paul Powell, of the Illinois House of Representatives, assisted in the ACWA booth at the Vienna, Ill., fair. Gov. G. Mennen Williams, of Michigan, was an interested visitor to the display at the Barney County Fair at Hastings, Mich. At the Paducah, Ky., exhibit visitors registered from 21 states.

Extra Cash Held To Be Theater Employes' Aim

A minimum hourly wage of 75c is too much for the theater employes, according to up-state movie theater owners who testified at a hearing at Albany, N. Y., on the proposed rate.

They claimed the type of work and hours were "peculiar" and most of the employes—cashiers, ushers, ticket takers, doormen, and cleaners—were unskilled, part-time, irregularly employed help. The owners maintained the only incentive of their employes was to earn some extra money.

State Industrial Commissioner Edward Corsi, empowered to establish a minimum wage for recreation and amusement industry employes, presided at the hearing. He is scheduled to hold two more, in New York and Rochester, before making his decision, which is expected about Dec. 1. The proposed 75c hourly intrastate minimum was recommended by a specially appointed state board.

81-6

Ex-Rep. Thomas Ends Jail Term

Former Rep. J. Parnell Thomas (R.N.J.), one-time chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee, was released Sept. 10 from the Federal Prison at Danbury, Conn.

He had served 8½ months of a six to 18 months' sentence for padding his congressional payroll and forcing his employes to kick back part of their salaries to him. "Arrangements" were made, it was said, for payment of a $10,000 fine without which his release would have been impossible under the terms of his sentence.

Thomas was freed because of poor health. Dr. George C. Killinger, chairman of the Federal Prison Board, said he is in "very poor physical condition."

He left the prison puffing on a 15c corncob pipe and complaining that his sentence was "no pink tea party."

13½c A Quart 'Spread' Is Reported In Milk

The middleman makes more out of milk than the dairy farmer. The farmer's share is shrinking, and the middleman's share is growing. The housewife pays and pays.

That's what the Pure Milk Association, a co-op marketing and processing group, said at a Chicago hearing of a Senate subcommittee investigating the spread in food prices.

Producers in the Chicago area, said the association, get 8c a quart for milk. The housewife pays 21½c. The processor gets the difference.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., SEPTEMBER 25, 1950 82 No. 39

TAKE MY TIE—you took my shirt, GE Vice Pres. L. R. Boulware (right) tells J. H. Callahan (second from left), of IUE-CIO Local 255, Pittsfield, Mass,. after settlement was negotiated. Watching are IUE Chairman James B. Carey (left) and U. S. Conciliator R. W. Donnahoo. Pact yields 10c wage boost, an "up but not down" cost of living clause tied to BLS index, effective Mar. 1, 1951, and $125-a-month pensions. (See Story on Page 2.)

BEAT-TAFT hats, an adorable confection of stiff paper and starched cheesecloth, were de rigeur at Rubber Workers convention in Cincinnati last week. At right H. L. Pipkin, of Local 43, Los Angeles, Cal., admires one that David B. McCann (center), of Local 2, Akron, O., clutches lovingly, while Henry W. Gilliam (right), of Local 18, Barberton, O., models his in best Conover tradition. (See Story on Page 7.)

High Prices Are Expected To Go Higher

THOSE HIGH prices you've been seeing in the stores lately may be expected to go even higher. Reports from around the country the week of Sept. 20 showed boosts in several fields.

Kaiser-Frazer raised the price of its cars $10 to $120 and it was predicted that other auto manufacturers would follow suit. Nash increased the price of its 1951 models $29 to $98.

General Electric increased the list price on five of its eight major appliances. Boosts of $20 to $40 were made on refrigerators, $20 to $30 on home freezers, $10 to $50 on electric ranges, $10 to $20 on water heaters, and $20 to $30 on automatic dish washers. The way was left open for possible price hikes on television and radio sets.

Wholesale coffee prices went up, which means that the price to the housewife will not be far behind. Vague references were made to the weather in Brazil (no rain) as a possible reason.

BEEF PRICES promised to go even higher than they are now as the packing companies paid more for cattle on the hoof. Packers base their prices to the customer on what they can get, not what they pay.

Prices for raw wool are at a record level, and prices on finished woolen products are climbing rapidly. Several carpet mills have announced boosts on carpet prices.

Southern pine lumber hit a new peak, as manufacturers started to substitute wood for steel in spots where shortages already exist. The price of wood pulp went up $8 to $22.50 a ton, along with prices for waste paper and for finished paper products.

Prices of products on the commodity exchanges jumped around wildly, rising and dipping as news from the Korean war front went one way and then another. Sugar prices showed the least tendency to rise, because of the huge stock that our government recently bought from Cuba. The government has also helped matters by slapping a ceiling on the price of raw sugar to the refiners.

APPOINTMENT OF E. G. Plowman, $62,000 vice president of U. S. Steel, as a dollar-a-year-man in charge of the Defense Department's Traffic Service, along with passage by the Senate of a bill taking rail freight rates out from under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Justice Dept., will probably have the end effect of exorbitant freight rates paid the railroads. This will boost prices on practically all goods, most of which are shipped great distances before they reach the consumer.

Meanwhile, a spot survey by United Press showed that sales of autos, television sets, washing machines, refrigerators and other appliances have not declined because of the new installment credit terms that call for larger down payments and shorter periods to pay. A report from the Gas Appliance Manufacturers Association showed that shipments of gas ranges continue to be as large as ever.

Doubt that the new inventory controls would prevent hoarding by storekeepers, wholesalers and manufacturers was expressed by labor economists. LPA

IUE Wins 1-Way Living Cost Plan, 10c, $125 GE Pension

A PRECEDENT-Shattering one-way cost-of-living clause, a 10c-an-hour wage increase and other gains were contained in the agreement which ended the strike of CIO's Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers against General Electric on Sept. 15.

The cost-of-living adjustment plan is unique in American industry, according to IUE. The plan makes mandatory a wage increase on March 15, 1951, if the Bureau of Labor Statistics cost-of-living index rises 1.14 points over the level of Sept. 15, 1950, with the increase becoming part of the wage structure and remaining in effect even if the index figures decline.

There will be a 1c-an-hour increase in pay for each 1.14 point increase in the BLS price index.

THE FLAT increase of 10c will include the 3% raise which went into effect July 1. GE had held that it would grant only a 3% wage increase, until several IUE locals, including the 20,000 workers at Lynn, Mass., struck in protest.

The same day that IUE reached agreement with GE, the CIO-expelled United Electrical Workers union announced that it had reached a tentative settlement with GE. The only details revealed by UE or GE are that the pact will run for two years and does not contain the cost-of living provision of the IUE contract, but includes six-month wage reopeners.

Substantial improvements were won in the contributory pension plan at GE. The new IUE agreement provides that pension minimum for workers retiring at 65 with 25 years service will be $125 a month, including social security, with no increase in the worker's contribution.

This means that for workers with lower incomes the company will pay up to $30 more per month. Retired workers in the lower income bracket will receive up to $30 per month more from the company than under the previous plan. Reduction in the worker's contribution, retroactive to July 1, was won for the middle-wage bracket.

An additional holiday, Election Day, brings the yearly total of paid holidays to seven. An added 5½c an hour increase will go to skilled workers.

ANOTHER concession by GE allows workers' dependents to be included in the hospitalization, surgical and maternity benefits. Weekly sickness and accident insurance will provide approximately 60% of weekly earnings up to 26 weeks; hospitalization benefits up to $800 for any one disability; surgical benefits of $175 for any one operation, and maternity benefits up to $150.

The amount of life insurance is approximately one and a half times the worker's annual earnings, with the first $1500 paid for by the company. Accidental death or dismemberment brings an additional $2000.

Negotiations with GE started in the early summer. When a deadlock was reached at the end of August, IUE's GE conference board called for a strike on Sept. 5. The Conciliation Service, headed by Cyrus Ching, stepped into the dispute and for two weeks held talks with the company and the union until agreement was finally reached on Sept. 15, after 40,000 GE workers had struck.

IUE Administrative Committee Chairman James B. Carey said: "IUE members will permanently retain the cost-of-living increase which they will obtain on March 15. It cannot be taken away from them by any possible decline in living costs.

"We have persuaded GE to appreciate the militant economic powers which our members wield. We have persuaded GE to understand for all time to come that it is no longer dealing with a weak, Communist-dominated union, which in the past has supinely permitted GE to take gain after gain from its employes.

"In this strike by a large majority of IUE members in GE, our union has emerged stronger, more unified and better equipped to deal with GE and other corporations in the future. Our struggle has been not only against GE—which for months refused to make acceptable concessions—but also against the Communist-controlled UE which has sabotaged the fight from start to finish."

Lobby Probers Given $10,000 To Finish Up

The House Lobby Investigating Committee, which had been threatened with "foreclosure" by the House, was given another $10,000 on Sept. 21 to clean up its work.

Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.), the chairman, had asked for $25,000 but agreed to the reduction. The committee's report, which is expected to show an informal alliance between anti-labor, anti-Fair Deal, anti-New Deal propaganda machines and the most reactionary elements in the Republican Party, is due about Oct. 15.

NEGOTIATORS who wrested from General Electric the gains that ended the IUE-CIO strike are shown above. They are (left to right), seated, Frank Fiorillo, secretary of the union's GE Conference Board; IUE Chairman James B. Carey, and Frederick Kelley, Lynn, Mass., Conference Board president; standing, John H. Callahan, Local 255, Pittsfield, Mass.; William Emery, Local 301, Lynn; Wilton Young, Local 805, Tell City, Ind.; Jack Rupe, Local 203, Bridgeport, Conn.; David Fitzmaurice, Local 707, Cleveland; Dallas Smith, Local 901, Fort Wayne, Ind.; Joseph Abata, Local 618, Erie, Pa.; Harold Martin, Local 320, Syracuse, N. Y., and Ed Houchins, Local 119, Philadelphia.

Primary Vote 25% Higher Than In '46

IF INTEREST in the primary races is any indication, 1950 will break all records for an off-year election, even allowing for the increase in voting-age population since 1946, the last off-year.

In fact, says the CIO Political Action Committee, it looks as if 42½ million people will vote this year, as compared with 34 million in 1946.

Analysis of the number of primary votes cast in the 23 states for which PAC has accurate records shows that the vote ran 25% ahead of the number cast in the 1946 primaries and 11% ahead of the number cast in 1948. Adjusting this for the increase in the number of potential voters, it's still 16% over 1946 and 8% over 1948.

Registration figures are even more startling, although the number of states sampled is smaller.

In nine states, registration is already 33% over 1946, allowing for the increase in voting population. And in 10 states registration is 2% ahead of what it was in 1948—a presidential year.

FURTHERMORE, in the nine states mentioned above, the number of registered persons who took the trouble to cast a primary vote has increased: votes were cast by 48% of those registered in 1946, whereas 53% voted in 1950.

All these figures, worked over by the PAC research staff well into the night, yield the prediction that 42.5 million might actually vote in the elections this year. The previous high-water mark for off-year voting was 36 million, reached in 1938.

For the increase in registration, which PAC hopes and believes is country-wide, PAC and other labor political organizations can take a good deal of the credit.

However, other outfits are doing a "register-vote" job, too. They may not be groups whose political beliefs coincide with those of labor, but they're crusading to get voters to the polls in record numbers.

ALL THE initial outfits — GOP, NAM, AMA (CIO News readers should know what those stand for) are doing it. Of more interest, however, are instances where two relatively small organizations are actually running get-out-the-vote contests.

The American Heritage Foundation, which concentrates on "better citizenship" on a non-partisan basis, is offering a series of awards "to communities, counties and organizations that conduct outstanding community-wide campaigns on the theme, 'Voting is Everybody's Job!'"

The American Press Association, trade organization of the nation's weekly newspapers, is conducting a get-out-the-vote contest "to see who can do the most to stimulate voting." This contest is limited to editors and publishers of weekly and semi-weekly papers and was given a terrific send-off in "The American Press," the association journal, in September.

The journal quoted at length from various important public figures on the importance of voting. One from Sen. Elbert Thomas (D. Utah) simply said:

"When one realizes how long men have fought for the right to vote, one can hardly believe that those who have the right fail to embrace it."

Denham, Fired By HST, Now Big Biz Lawyer

IT HAPPENED with dramatic suddenness, and without advance notice.

● On Sept. 15, General Counsel Robert Denham of the National Labor Relations Board wrote to the President of the United States:

". . . You have now seen fit to request my resignation forthwith. In obedience to your wishes, I feel that I must comply."

● On Saturday, Sept. 16, the President of the United States wrote to Robert Denham:

"The situation which has been created in the relationships between the board (NLRB) and the general counsel is, as you indicate in your letter, one 'that should not be allowed to exist in a governmental agency occupying so important a part in its influence on our industrial economy' . . .

"Accordingly, I accept your resignation, effective at the close of business on Sept. 18 . . ."

● Next day, on Sept. 19, Denham had a desk in the corporation law office of Gall & Lane. John Gall, head of the firm, is a former general counsel of the National Association of Manufacturers, and has represented a number of the nation's most important corporations in Washington.

DENHAM'S removal from office had been asked repeatedly by almost every union in the country —CIO, AFL and unaffiliated.

The CIO convention last year described Denham's administration as "irresponsible and arbitrary" and said he had adopted "an extreme anti-labor position."

The CIO resolution noted that of 56 injunctions sought by Denham up to June 30, 1949, 54 were directed against unions and only two against employers.

It noted that "in case after case" Denham had refused to issue unfair labor practice complaints based on union accusations against employers. Denham had often intervened in local situations to "deliberately obstruct peaceful and stable bargaining relations," the CIO charged.

In recent months, Denham and the members of the five-man Labor Board have been engaged in increasingly bitter quarrels over jurisdiction, policies and program.

NEVER IDLE: Robert N. Denham is here trimming an arbor vitae tree in the yard of his suburban Washington home shortly after he resigned—at President Truman's request—as general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board. He was not out of a job long; the day after his resignation became effective he had a desk in the corporation law office of Gall & Lane in Washington—a firm with big business clients.

The General Counsel's office was given vastly increased status under the Taft-Hartley Act, and the Board's power of supervision over the General Counsel was greatly limited.

UNDER T-H, the General Counsel has almost complete power to initiate cases, to seek injunctions, and to control most of the Board's legal staff and regional offices. But Denham came into sharpening conflict with the Board on a number of major policy matters.

In one recent case before a U. S. Circuit Court, for instance, the NLRB formally asked the judge to disregard a brief filed by Denham, on grounds that it did not represent Board thinking and attitudes. A flurry of memos and counter-memos between Denham and the NLRB followed this unprecedented public argument.

Another problem that revealed sharp differences concerned the T-H non-Communist affidavits.

The Board ruled that affiliated unions could use NLRB facilities even if officers of the CIO and AFL had not filed oaths. But Denham argued that until the two national organizations signed, the affiliates could not use the Board's services. Three cases on this matter are now awaiting appeal to the Supreme Court.

Still another issue was the administrative question of whether the very small firms, employing a mere handful of workers, should be considered in interstate commerce—and thus subject to the NLRB's jurisdiction.

The Board upheld the traditional position that these very small firms should be outside the Act, while Denham argued that they should be handled.

DENHAM—a trial examiner for the Board until he was elevated to the general counsel's office in 1947—said in his letter of resignation that there were pretty obvious differences of opinion between himself and the NLRB.

He recited that he had tried "unsuccessfully" to "obtain" the Board's cooperation. Unable to do so, he said, he had come to believe that a situation had been created "which should not be allowed to exist in a governmental agency occupying so important a part in its influence on our industrial economy."

Pres. Truman, in his reply, conceded that Taft-Hartley "creates an administratively unworkable arrangement, which invites confusion and conflict between the general counsel and the board."

Nevertheless, the President added, he had the job of trying to make the two-headed arrangement work.

"I believe the differences which have arisen between the board and the general counsel are so deep-seated that there is little prospect of restoring between them the harmonious relationship necessary to the effective administration of their mingled responsibility," Truman wrote.

During the past year, Denham has spoken frequently before trade associations and business groups —almost always with a strong anti-labor bias.

He has hailed the Taft-Hartley Act as a bulwark for a free labor movement, has criticized union leadership; and has, on occasion, berated Presidential policies.

No Action Likely On Unfair Practices

A flock of candidates—but no definite successor—has appeared to seek the NLRB General Counsel's job left vacant by the requested resignation of Robert Denham.

Until a successor is named, the Board's activities on unfair practice cases are apt to grind to a halt. The General Counsel has final authority over the issuance of complaints.

In his final official action, Denham advised regional offices of the Board not to issue further complaints against either unions or employers.

Government lawyers are studying the statutes to see if an acting general counsel can take over until a successor is named by the President. Such a formal appointment must be confirmed by the Senate.

Senate Unit To Probe NLRB, Counsel's Post

An investigation of both the National Labor Relations Board and the office of its independent general counsel has been voted by a Senate Labor sub-committee.

Proposed by Sen. Wayne Morse (R. Ore.), the probe would cover "policies, practices and procedures." The same subcommittee has been studying effects of Taft-Hartley on labor-management relations in such fields as telephone, southern textiles and maritime.

Morse suggested that after a study by the committee's professional staff, the Senators would decide whether to conduct formal hearings.

Morse's administrative assistant, Ivar Peterson, a former NLRB employe, has been mentioned as a possible candidate for Robert Denham's job as general counsel.

Steel Union Asks Wage Clause Reopening Early Next Month

THE CIO Steelworkers told some 1400 large and small employers last week that they want a wage increase now.

The employers were notified in a letter signed by Pres. Philip Murray, who also is president of the CIO, that the union's Wage Policy Committee at a meeting in Pittsburgh, Pa., had decided to ask for more money immediately. The letter suggested that they reopen the wage provisions of their contracts on Oct 9 and that negotiations begin at that time.

The wage clauses of Steelworkers' contracts are open under the agreements on Nov. 1, but Murray said the employers will be asked to advance the date.

"Obviously," he wrote, "the national interest requires that we conclude a mutually satisfactory agreement at the earliest possible date."

MURRAY stressed that the union will live up to the contract if the industry refuses the earlier reopening. The agreements provide that if no settlement is negotiated by Dec. 31, the union is free to strike on Jan. 1, 1951.

The specific increases the union will ask have not yet been determined. The Wage Policy Committee will meet again in Pittsburgh on Oct. 4 and 5 to draw up exact proposals, he said, for presentation to employers at meetings on Oct. 9.

The union bypassed wage increases, when the present contract was negotiated, in favor of pensions.

In the letter to the employers, Murray wrote that the decision to press for immediate pay boosts was based on three considerations:

"1. The needs of our people.

"2. The Nation at present is going through a period of national mobilization. No doubt in the next few months there will begin to be felt shortages of manpower, particularly where questions of wages have not been settled.

"3. The question of maintaining morale at a high level during a grave national emergency."

On the same day that the union's announcement was made, a big non-ferrous metal employer under contract to the union, the Aluminum Corp. of America, gave a tacit form of recognition to the factors Murray cited in his letter to the steel companies.

THE COMPANY offered a general 10% increase in basic wage rates to all of its hourly-paid employes, effective the first payroll in October if acceptable to unions representing its workers.

A company spokesman said the raise was offered voluntarily and in advance of contract wage reopening dates because of trends in the cost of living, recent economic developments and what he described as the firm's policy of being "fair and helpful" to the people who work for it. Salaried employes also would receive appropriate pay hikes, he added.

Use Of U. S. Equipment In Strike Again Protested

FOR THE second time this year the CIO Textile Workers last week protested to Army authorities against the use of federal equipment by state National Guardsmen on strike duty.

John W. Edleman, Washington representative of the union, wrote Maj. Gen. Edward F. Witsell, adjutant general, that two companies of the South Carolina National Guard were kept under arms at the Greenville, S. C., armory for about a week, ready to be taken to the strike-bound Woodside Mills in that town.

"This is a policy matter," Edelman wrote, "The Army would brush aside possible legal aspects if there were recognition in the (Defense) Department of the utter absurdity of permitting local sheriffs to parade expensive and needed munitions and material in front of any struck plant at a time when our government is obliged to offer excuses for the delay in getting the necessary equipment to Korea to halt a Communist invasion."

Edelman on June 9 protested to the Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson against the use of Tennessee Guardsmen in the strike at the Enka plant at Morristown, Tenn. Gen. Witsell replied:

"Any attempt by the Secretary of the Army to interfere in a State's use of its National Guard or the property in question by restricting the use of equipment lawfully issued thereto, under the circumstances, might constitute an encroachment on the rights of the state reserved to it by the Federal Constitution."

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

We Need A Good Propaganda Program

America Has A Convincing Story To Tell The Rest Of The World But Isn't Doing Good Telling It

By ALLAN L. SWIM

OUR COUNTRY'S Voice of America program is little more than a whisper in the Orient compared with the hard-hitting propaganda of the Communists.

That's what CIO Councils Dir. John Brophy said on his recent return from the Far East, where he studied conditions as a member of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions delegation.

At about the same time, a State Dept. representative privately told a CIO staff member:

"We're sure missing the boat. We're bragging about our fine automobiles to workers overseas who would think conditions were fine if they could buy decent bicycles!

"In our propaganda we've got to learn to talk in 'bicycle' and 'pork chop' language."

THE STATE DEPT. representative made his point even more clear when he declared:

"Talking to most overseas workers about buying automobiles is a bit like telling American workers, 'Keep your nose clean, believe in democracy, keep free enterprise alive and some day you can own a 120-foot yacht."

What he said makes sense—and what Brophy said is disturbing.

What they both meant is that we as a nation aren't getting our story across.

This has been obvious for a long time to those who have made an effort to check up on our propaganda activities.

There may have been times in the past when this wasn't of great importance—but those times have passed.

TO PUT IT bluntly, what our country needs to do is to apply to its propaganda efforts some of the techniques used by every good union organizer.

And one of the first things a good organizer does is to find out about those things in which workers are interested.

Once he has this knowledge, he tailors his campaign to fit the actual conditions with which he's dealing. He doesn't go on the assumption that the type of campaign which clicked in Connecticut will work successfully in Alabama.

He takes into full account that people in different parts of the country react differently to the same thing and that they judge propaganda in the light of their own experiences.

And the organizer who's afraid to try something new and different usually isn't around for long.

THE PURPOSE of this column is not to heap criticism on the Voice of America—because the Voice is sharply limited in its activities by the act which created it.

The purpose, rather, is to call attention again to the need for our country to step up sharply the "battle of words" which makes up a large portion of ideological warfare.

We're losing this battle in the Orient—and we haven't won it yet in Western Europe.

Yet if we don't win it there's a strong possibility that we'll have to substitute bullets and bombs for words before a decision is reached.

Few people in government seem to be aware of this—or if they're aware of it they're doing very litle about it.

WE'RE NOT going to win the "battle of words" by employing American advertising techniques.

We're not going to make any progress in the battle by sending a radio beam toward people who can't afford radios or by getting favorable "publicity" in newspapers which do not reach the bulk of the people.

What we need is a real propaganda program, tailored to fit conditions in each country in which we're interested.

We have people capable of doing such a job—and many more capable of learning quickly how it should be done.

Little can be done, however, unless Congress is willing to provide the "go" signal and the necessary money.

We've got a good story to tell—a story much better than the Commies are peddling.

Bue we aren't telling it well enough or often enough—and we should.

GOOD RIDDANCE

The labor movement didn't shed any tears when it received the news that Robert N. Denham had been ousted as general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board.

Quite the opposite was true—because good news doesn't cause sorrow.

Denham asked for it, and he deserved what he got.

The CIO, of course, didn't like the Taft-Hartley Act provision under which the office of general counsel was established. But its feeling for Denham resulted from the actions which Denham, as an individual, took on various occasions.

He demonstrated time and again that he was lined up firmly with those who fight labor unions. He showed partiality and bias.

National CIO, many of its affiliates and other labor groups had asked on numerous occasions that Denham be given the gate—and President Truman certainly was justified in asking for his resignation.

Senator Taft, however, didn't think so. He squawked, as might have been expected, that the President was bowing to the CIO and AFL. It was part of a political deal, he said.

The truth of the matter is that any President—Democrat or Republican—would have been justified in giving the boot to a governmental official who had performed as Denham had.

Well, Denham's gone from NLRB—but the Taft-Hartley Act is still around. Denham's going won't improve the act although there could be improvement in its administration by the general counsel's office.

Labor, of course, welcomes the change. But what it really wants is the repeal of T-H.

★ ★ ★

IT SIMPLY ISN'T FAIR

It takes money—and a lot of it—to fight a war like the one we're now engaged in and at the same time prepare for the possibility that there will be armed conflict on a much larger scale.

It takes money, too, to finance the type of programs we've launched in an effort to keep more of the world from swinging to communism and to keep us out of a new world war.

Everybody knows that.

We may complain that taxes are too high and that we're really going to be pinched when they take a jump next month.

Such complaints are normal but deep down inside ourselves we know that our tax burden must be increased in the present emergency.

That's why most of us refrained from blowing our tops when we learned that income taxes were going to be increased about 20% in October.

But a lot of us are blowing our tops—or at least complaining bitterly—about the tax picture. And here's why:

We felt that Congress should make a real effort to equalize the burden of war mobilization.

Congress hasn't done so. It has voted to increase the income tax burden by about one-fifth. But it hasn't enacted an excess profits tax.

Members of Congress are going to have trouble convincing the people that it was OK to slap higher taxes on wage earners but not on war profits.

95% Of Labor Force Now Employed

RISING unemployment was more than a mere cloud on the horizon a few months ago. The situation has changed so sharply that there are manpower shortages now in eight critical occupations, and the labor market is tight in at least 19 cities.

Where unemployment was hovering at the 5-million mark not long ago, it had dropped to 2,500,000 by mid-August. From mid-July to mid-August, U. S. factories broke hiring records by adding 620,000 to their payrolls.

Civilian employment increased by about a million in August, and stood at 62,400,000. Industrial production was 4% above July, a new postwar peak. Total employment was more than 2 million above August, 1949.

About 95% of the nation's labor force is now employed. That means that if defense production is increased an appreciable extent, such workers must be drawn from civilian production, or from those not now in the labor force.

THE MANPOWER supply can be expanded by 5,600,000 to 69,100,000, according to a special study by the Labor Dept. These 5,600,000 would have to come from the 44,500,000 persons over 14 years old who are not now in the labor force. Of these 32,700,000 are housewives. So most of the additions to the labor force would have to be women.

The Labor Dept. study said that with an armed force of 12 million, war industries would have 3,200,000 more workers than they have now, but the industries producing civilian goods would have to cut their work force by 6,600,000, or about 25%.

Since there is virtually full employment now, and since those coming into the labor force would for the most part be less skilled or entirely unskilled, the Labor Dept. has recommended that the expanding number of skilled jobs be filled by upgrading those already at work at semi-skilled jobs. That would mean increased pay, through higher rate classification, even if wages were "stabilized."

DEFENSE plants already have been given priority in hiring. All 1800 Federal-state employment offices have been so instructed.

The industries in which employment is far below wartime peak are aircraft, shipbuilding and ordnance, as shown by the drop of 35% in the metal working industries since 1943.

Spots where there is less than 3% unemployment include Denver, Jacksonville, Atlanta, Rockford, Ill.; Evansville, Fort Wayne, Indianapolis and South Bend, Ind.; Cedar Rapids and Des Moines, Iowa; Flint, Kalamazoo and Pontiac, Mich.; Omaha, Neb.; Charlotte, N. C.; Austin and Dallas, Tex., and Madison and Milwaukee, Wis.

Occupations showing the worst shortages include engineers, tool designers, machinists, tool and die makers, skilled construction workers, skilled aircraft workers, and skilled assemblers. LPA

Lehman, Lynch Endorsed

NEW YORK STATE CIO-PAC last week announced plans for a vigorous campaign on behalf of Senator Herbert H. Lehman and Congressman Walter A. Lynch, candidates on the Democratic ticket for the U. S. Senate and governorship, respectively. PAC support of the balance of the State Democratic slate was announced at the same time.

The endorsements were announced by a special PAC committee which has been studying the platforms and records of all candidates in the November elections following a meeting at the Hotel Statler, New York, Sept. 18.

The choices were based on the determination of the state PAC, as stated in the committee's report, "to advance the programs and principles of the Fair Deal and to put New York State back on the course of progress which was set for it by Governors Smith, Roosevelt and Lehman."

Herbert H. Lehman is being opposed for election to a full term by Republican Lieut.-Gov. Joe R. Hanley.

Walter A. Lynch, who is opposing Thomas E. Dewey's sudden-switch effort at re-election, is completing his fifth term as representative in Congress and is a former New York City magistrate. He was one of the leaders in the House in the battle for the 75c minimum wage and improvements in social security.

"The record and platform of the Republican candidates are in sharp and unfavorable contrast to those of Senator Lehman and Congressman Lynch," the report continued. "The Republican Party of New York State again has evidenced a calloused indifference to the problems which face the state and the nation."

The New York City CIO-PAC, meanwhile, endorsed the candidacy of Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora, Democratic nominee for mayor in the special election made necessary by the resignation of Mayor O'Dwyer.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher
Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII September 25, 1950 No. 39

Oil Organizer Had His Own Party Line

THIS IS A story about an organizer who made good use of a "party line" which was installed by a big corporation.

It's not a political story and the "party line" is in no way connected with the Communists.

It's a yarn about a big, tough organizing job—a yarn which was spun during a "bull session" at the recent CIO Oil Workers convention at Long Beach, Calif.

Those telling the story differed somewhat as to details, but in broad terms this is how they outlined what happened:

THE OIL Workers has always had a problem resulting from the fact that members and potential members work in widely scattered places.

Even so, the union realized it was taking on a big job when it decided to organize workers employed on a major pipeline—one which extends from the Southwest to the East.

The distance from one end of the line to the other meant the campaign would have to be conducted in a number of states.

But that wasn't the worst of it.

All along the line were pumping stations, many of which were located miles from towns and cities.

Contacting the men employed at these stations was viewed at first as a nearly impossible task.

But there was one organizer who operated on the theory that "where there's a will there's a way."

FINALLY THE organizer, seeking a way of contacting potential members without driving for miles, came forth with the "party line" idea.

A private telephone line, he told himself, extended over the entire pipeline system. There were telephones at all the pumping stations.

This system remained constantly "open" so that a message put on any part of the line was carried over the entire system.

The fact that one of the phones was in the company's main office bothered the organizer at first—but not for long.

He weighed the advantages and disadvantages and then decided to give his plan a trial.

ONE DAY, without any advance notice, a strange voice was heard all over the system—and his message was a startling one insofar as company officials were concerned.

He told everybody listening in that a union was going to be established by the pipeline workers if enough of them wanted one.

He made a fast "pitch" in favor of the Oil Workers.

Then some pumper cut in with, "Say, Mac, how much dues are we going to pay and how do we go about signing up?"

The organizer provided the answers.

There were a few more questions and a few more answers. Then the organizer "signed off."

The same thing happened a number of times—and on each occasion the organizer got most of his story across before being interrupted.

IT SOON became obvious that most of the pumpers were interested in a union—and then the campaign began to roll.

Eventually the group was organized.

When the union sat down to talk contract with management, company representatives seemed more interested at first in the "mystery" voice than in negotiations.

One top official was quoted as saying, "Why, hell's fire, you can't expect us to get our minds on our business until we learn who did that telephoning."

He wasn't told. A.L.S.

'PASS THE BUCK . . . TO PAC!'

AMA To Unleash Big Ad Drive On National Health Plan

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

GET READY for one of the heaviest bombardments of pure hokum ever loosed upon the American public. Big ads will stare out at you from your daily paper, from your Sunday supplement, from the magazine you are reading. The same kind of stuff will blare forth on your radio.

All this hullabaloo will purport to bring you "a message of freedom" from the American Medical Association—the reactionary outfit that is spending millions to confuse and mislead the public concerning the proposed National Health Program.

During the month of October alone, the AMA has allocated $1,110,000 for this advertising drive. It boasts that a five-column, 14-inch deep ad headed "Who Runs America?" will run in 10,333 newspapers during the week of Oct. 8.

EVERY BONA fide daily and weekly paper in the U. S. as well as Hawaii and Alaska will carry the ad, says the AMA. These ads will appear in daily papers on Oct. 11, and in Sunday newspaper supplements on Oct. 15, including the American Weekly, This Week, Parade, and 28 independent Sunday magazine sections, with an estimated total circulation of more than 38 million, reports the weekly "Editor and Publisher."

In addition, the AMA has a series of "tie-in" ads which it has offered to 25,000 big firms, to local business firms of all kinds, and to 7000 members of the National Retail Dry Goods Association.

Mentioning the $20 million which it has been estimated will be spent altogether in the campaign against the health program, Sen. James E. Murray (D. Mont.), one of the sponsors of the bill to set up a National Health Program for the benefit of the American people, called it "a tragic waste when you consider what it could buy in the way of better health for more citizens."

The Senator said he hoped "that this lavish expenditure of funds to work against the welfare of millions of Americans will backfire by calling attention to the present lack in the national health picture and making millions of Americans want to learn the facts about the Administration's health program.

"I hope every American who reads or hears this anti-health propaganda will realize what the $20 million it will cost could have bought in the way of medical care."

Here are some of the things it could do, Sen. Murray said:

1 Pay for more than one year's average medical care for more than 160,000 families in the $3000-a-year bracket; or

2 Pay medical school tuition for four years for 9000 students who could care for six million patients after they became doctors, or

3 Pay for the training of 5500 heart specialists to combat the annual death tolls of heart disease of more than 600,000.

Rep. John D. Dingell (D. Mich.), another sponsor of the National Health Program bill, in a blistering attack on the AMA's so-called "educational campaign," said that it "is designed to spread by massive injections of untruths, lies, distortions, and innuendoes, a contagious infection among our people so that they will fall victims to the big-lie technique of the medical lobby's propagandists. (Dingell was referring to the AMA's husband-and-wife high-paid publicists, Clem Whitaker and Leone Baxter, who are directing the anti-National Health Program drive.)

"These doctors of public opinion are seeking to doctor, drug and slug the American people into believing the crude big lie that sickness is health; that insurance is socialism and communism; that the President's plan for National Health Insurance is socialized medicine."

Rep. Dingell charged that the AMA's "spurious" campaign "is a terrible threat to freedom of American thought." He said the medical lobby is "seeking to overwhelm every source of public expression, to shout louder and longer than all the forces of truth, to cry down all facts and saturate our eyes, ears, and our very minds with its all-pervasive cry of reaction."

If the campaign succeeds, Dingell said, "then we shall witness the beginning of a new and evil mechanism on the American scene—the unparalleled use of money to dominate and control all thought. Money—and money in staggering amounts—will be the open sesame to all future contests, for with enough money, selfish interest will feel able to mold public opinion as they will, without fear of truth."

To prevent this, Rep. Dingell called upon the Democratic Party and upon all liberal-thinking Americans, upon the leaders of our free trade unions, and upon our independent-minded physicians to help spread the truth to counterattack the lies of the medical lobby.

"We must not abandon the field to the forces of reaction. We must stand and fight," he said. "For against the medical lobby's millions there is the antidote of truth. And that antidote can and must be spread by all of us who are dedicated to the welfare of our people, their progress and the satisfaction of their needs."

Only CIO Man In Congress Faces Tough Fight

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

TOM BURKE, 46-year-old Democratic Congressman from Ohio's 9th district, faces the political fight of his life, this fall.

He's the only CIO man in Congress, and because he is, he represents not only his 400,000 constituents but, in a sense, about 6 million CIO members.

Because he's still not as widely known as he should be, and because we believe CIO members everywhere should do a little thinking about what "a labor Congressman" is up against, the CIO News is giving Burke a lot of space this issue. He's not only a man with a fight on his hands, he's a phenomenon of these times and a symbol of what happens when "labor" gets into "politics."

* * *

OHIO'S NINTH district contains about 400,000 persons, and consists of Toledo and the surrounding areas. It is highly diversified, including everything from farms to heavy industry, and it might be called a typical cross-section of America.

Tom Burke was elected in November, 1948, by a 12,000-vote majority out of 162,000 cast. He won the Democratic nomination in a four-way race—"one CIO man, one AFL man, and two others." The CIO and AFL had agreed that whichever candidate won, the other organization would support the winner in the elections.

Papers Rechristened

Burke has been attacked so often in the editorial columns of the Toledo Morning Times and the Toledo Blade that he has come to expect it.

In fact's he's coined his own names for the two papers. He calls them the Morning Pipsqueak and the Daily Slasher.

Burke's Republican opponent was Homer Ramey, who was seeking his fourth term on Capitol Hill and who now is a police court judge. There was no third-party candidate. Burke describes Ramey as a shell-back Republican and a good speaker.

The Toledo Morning Times and Blade, both owned by Republican Publisher Paul Block, endorsed Ramey, not because Block liked him but as "the lesser of two evils." The Blade called Ramey a clown and worse, but added, in effect, "Bad as he is, he's still a Republican."

The two Block papers are the only dailies published in Toledo, so the citizens don't get both sides of any question.

TOLEDO'S UNITED labor committee functioned effectively, and Burke also carried a large part of the farm vote, even winning by a one-vote margin in a small town which had never come near to going Democratic before.

Ramey, in the 1946 elections, had won by only 333 votes, running against Toledo's Democratic mayor, Michael Di Salle.

This year, Ramey is running again, and if that were the only trouble, Burke, whose service to his constituents regardless of party affiliation is excellent, would not be too uneasy. Ramey's been at home long enough now, Burke says, for more people to get to know what he's really like.

Ramey, Burke says, will get "the wealthy vote and the nicey-nice vote," because there are some people who don't think it's "quite respectable" to have a working man represent them in Congress.

REP. TOM BURKE (D. O.), the only CIO member in Congress, was elected in 1948 by a 12,000-vote majority and now faces a tough fight for re-election in a three-way race. Here he is, wading through a pile of papers in the closing days of a session in which he has fought tooth and nail for the liberal point of view. He wanted to know if he should put on his coat to have his picture taken, but we persuaded him to leave it off—he's a working man and a working Congressman.

But the real threat lies in the fact that this time, Burke faces a three-way contest. An "independent" has entered the field—a former Democrat named Frazier Reams, wealthy prosecuting attorney of Lucas County, which includes Toledo.

By more than coincidence, Burke feels, Reams is the Blade's lawyer, and the Blade is supporting him. Burke is quite blunt in his accusations: he says the Blade, which means Paul Block, persuaded Reams to run, in spite of its protestations to the contrary, not with any idea that Reams would win, but in order to split Burke's vote. It's been done before.

ON TOP OF this, registration among Toledo union members as of Sept. 18 was only about 40% out of a total potential vote of 90,000 to 100,000. Toledo registration is permanent, so that any union man who voted for Burke in 1948 and is still there is still registered.

Burke feels he is going to need just as many of those potential new votes as he can get. The unions are going to put on a terrific registration drive, starting next week, with booths in every precinct.

It is obvious that Burke was not by any means elected by the "union vote" alone in 1948, but he feels it's his biggest backlog of potential gain.

Burke worked for nine years, from 1928 to 1937, in the Spicer Manufacturing plant, which makes axles, universal joints, transmissions, etc. He was active in helping establish the CIO Auto Workers in his plant, and in 1937 he went on the payroll of the UAW's Amalgamated Local 12, which now has about 40,000 members. He's a genuine working man and an experienced union man.

Before he ran for Congress, Burke was vice-mayor of Toledo and had been on its city council since 1943. Before that, from 1940 to 1942, he was in the state Legislature, so he is widely acquainted and personally very popular in Toledo, but the town does have a history of swinging towards the Republicans in off-years.

That's the situation he faces.

WHEN BURKE got to Congress, he was assigned to the House Committee on Education and Labor, and his first job was to work on the various proposals for repealing the Taft-Hartley law.

The results were no surprise to him; he'd been in politics too long by the time he got to Congress to confuse a Democratic majority with a liberal one. As CIO News readers will remember, the long fight ended in a draw.

The House passed the Wood bill—Taft-Hartley in thin disguise—by a 12-vote majority, and then, the next day, the House sent the Wood bill back to committee, where it died, along with all 81st Congress efforts to repeal Taft-Hartley.

Burke plugged ahead in committee, trying to get some kind of a repealer out—he had campaigned against the law with deep, personal conviction born of experience—but he got nowhere.

HIS IDEA, incidentally, was that since it apparently was necessary to make some provision for compulsory settlement of labor disputes in times of national emergency, the Congress should restore the Wagner Act and then insist on compulsory negotiation in emergency cases—not arbitration, just negotiation. "Sit them down and make them talk," was the way he put it. The proposal came from years of experience as negotiator for UAW Local 12, but it was too simple for the theoreticians and too gentle for labor's genuine enemies.

Looking back over that fight, in which his personal wishes were much involved, Burke sees the positive side, rather than the negative. "I think there's been a good deal of progress in this Congress," he says, staunchly. "After all, Taft-Hartley passed by an 80% majority, while the Wood bill squeaked by on only 12 votes and then was recommitted. That's progress. I tell my labor constituents that you don't take a man off a two-year sick-bed and expect him to run a 100-yard dash. Congress was good and sick from 1946 to 1948."

Burke was made chairman of a sub-committee on labor-management relations, and with his committee conducted an extensive tour of the Eastern half of the U. S., investigating local problems and solutions, gathering more material for a new assault on the subject. The hearings were published, but the sub-committee has not had time to make a formal report and recommendations.

NEXT BIG bill before Burke's committee was the Federal Aid to Education measure. The bill passed the Senate in fine shape and then bogged down in the House committee on a religious question involving the use of school buses to carry children to parochial as well as public schools. The committee was completely deadlocked on this and the bill never got out.

Burke again tried to find a way out of the deadlock, this time proposing that the federal government give funds to the states to assist them in raising the salaries of teachers in public elementary and secondary schools. This didn't get anywhere either, although it mustered a good deal of popular support and received considerable publicity.

He introduced a variety of other bills: equal-pay-for-equal-work, federal aid for the education of crippled and handicapped children, middle-income housing, uniform safety standards.

He sponsored, alone or with others, several resolutions, calling for world government, an international police force, cancellation of reciprocal trade agreements with nations back of the Iron Curtain, increasing benefits under the Railway Retirement Act, and allowing the government to dispose of surplus vessels to Great Lakes shippers on the same terms as they are sold to the ocean-going trade.

He also introduced several private bills—"for the relief of John Doe"—at the request of constituents whom he believed had valid claims against the federal government.

None of his major bills has passed, although several of his private bills went through, but freshmen Congressmen do not expect to prevail in their first term. As a matter of fact, the number of bills Burke has introduced is small, by comparison with what comes forth out of other Congressmen's offices. Each one has been carefully thought out and painstakingly written, which is more than can be said for a great many of the measures that are thrown into the hopper each year.

The Blade and the Times attack him with monotonous regularity as an "errand boy for the labor bosses." He's willing to stand on his record. He points out that the same papers call it "statesmanship" when another Congressman goes to bat for the bankers. It all depends on where you sit.

Burke has served his constituents impartially, he feels, on matters involving their personal welfare. As for his votes on controversial issues (he was "right" 11 times and absent because of illness once, on 12 major issues according to the CIO Voting Guide)—he says he campaigned on those attitudes and was elected, has voted his convictions, and has no apologies.

On the other hand, if you ask Burke if he considers himself strictly a "labor vote" in Congress, he'll say no. He believes he truly represents most of the 400,000 people in his district—not only the union members, who are probably his biggest single bloc of supporters but are far outnumbered by other, smaller groups who like him—but the farmers, grocers, white collar workers, gas station operators, druggists, small manufacturers, housewives—everybody but the "wealthy vote."

'What A Guy!' Says Burke Of GOP Foe

Burke speaks of his Republican opponent, Homer Ramey, with something resembling wonder, though he has no admiration for his brand of political maneuvering.

For instance, he tells about the time Ramey addressed a temperance group about the evils of Demon Rum, left the platform, walked out a side door and slaked his thirst in a nearby tavern, emerging just as the dry's meeting broke up, several hours and potations later. He ran smack into the temperance leaders.

"Homer stood there and told them he was a fallen boy and his own worst enemy," Burke says. "He said he was the classic example of the evils of alcohol! He said he was weak, he said they were right—and they all voted for him. What a guy!"

His attendance at important House sessions has been exemplary, and besides that, since he believes the best politics is service, he has one of the hardest-working offices on the Hill.

Helped by staff of three people, he has handled floods of mail, tracked down and answered innumerable requests for information, made hundreds of speeches, helped hundreds of constituents, entertained what seems like thousands, and flown back and forth from Toledo oftener than he cares to remember.

HIS PRESS secretary, Eleanor Coakley, who is his individual Girl Friday in all this work, is a former Blade reporter, former president of the Toledo Local of the American Newspaper Guild, former secretary of the Toledo Industrial Union Council, of which Burke was once president, and former international vice president of the Newspaper Guild.

The Burkes live in Alexandria, Va., across the river from Washington. They have five children and three grandchildren, and sometimes they're all on deck at once. Mostly, though, only the younger Burkes are in Washington. Burke also has kept his old home, 620 South Street, Toledo.

Friendly as a puppy, essentially a simple good-natured person, and honest sometimes to the borderline of political error, Tom Burke now looks at the Toledo situation with pardonable anxiety.

"I can always earn a living," he says soberly. "And there are certainly easier ways to do it. I still have my seniority at the Spicer plant — negotiated the clause myself. But all these people who wanted a working man in Congress, and who seem pleased with me and proud of me—I hope they'll take the time to say so where it counts.

"I think I should be re-elected, just because I am what I am. Most of the people in this country are workers, on the assembly line, in the stores and gas stations, in the fields and orchards. They've been represented by lawyers, professional men, newspapermen—the downtown boys. In Toledo, they're represented by a working man. I think that's healthy, and I think it should stay that way."

URWA Regains Unity, Re-Elects Buckmaster

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE CIO UNITED Rubber, Cork, Linoleum & Plastic Workers of America—to give them their full name—have come a long way in the last year.

For instance, 121,000 members who in September, 1949, had little to look forward to when their working days are over are now covered by pensions.

Thousands of members have won wage increases in the 12 months. A dozen more locals have won the union shop. Eighteen locals gained paid holidays for the first time, and 19 locals negotiated one or more additional paid holidays.

But when the delegates gathered for the 15th annual convention in Cincinnati's Hotel Gibson last week, it was evident that the union had gained something which in the long run may prove more important than all the contract improvements won in the last year.

IT HAD GAINED a measure of unity behind the leadership of Pres. L. S. Buckmaster that it had lacked for years—unity that was in bright and hopeful contrast to the strife-torn conventions of the two previous years.

This doesn't mean that all of the nearly 550 delegates, representing some 235 locals, were solidly behind Buckmaster. But on virtually every issue the administration forces emerged victorious with the support of a strong majority.

True, the delegates did vote down an administration suggestion that the terms of the officers be two years instead of the present one year. But they re-elected Buckmaster to another term by a thumping 967 to 463 votes for Carl Samuels, of Local 102, Youngstown, O. And as the CIO NEWS went to press the administration was trying to win a raise in dues and an increase in the international's share of them from 70c to $1 per member per month.

The debate, while as vigorous as it has always been at Rubber Workers' conventions, was conducted for the most part with more restraint than in the past, with the issues taking precedence over personalities.

The first full scale debate came early in the convention. It was touched off by the refusal of the credentials committee to recommend the seating of W. R. Childers, vice president of Goodrich Local 5, Akron, O., as a proxy delegate from a small California local.

The committee's refusal was based on its finding that Childrens' proxy delegate papers did not meet the requirements set forth in the international constitution.

For more than an hour speakers on both sides of the issue belabored the delegates, with Buckmaster, in the chair, leaning over backwards to make sure that anti-administrationites had full opportunity to present their views.

Finally a vote was taken, and on a show of hands the credentials committee was upheld by a count of 259 to 211.

The first roll call vote came on the report of the rules committee and followed another couple of hours of free-wheeling discussion.

THE ISSUE was the appeals of seven former organizers who were dismissed about a year ago. To understand it fully, a little back history is necessary.

Shortly after his re-election at the 1948 convention, Buckmaster was ousted as president by the international's general executive board on a charge of acting outside the union constitution. The union's field staff was shaken up and a number of anti-Buckmaster men were given jobs.

One of the first actions of the 1949 convention, sitting as a committee of the whole, was to reinstate Buckmaster as president. Later in the convention he was re-elected, along with a sympathetic executive board.

The anti-Buckmaster staff members were replaced shortly after the convention. Their appeals for reinstatement were denied by the general executive board and were carried to the 1950 convention, which had not acted as this edition of the CIO NEWS went to press.

The fight that led to the first roll call vote was based on the rules committee's recommendation that the appeals be heard by an appeals committee, which would report to the convention.

Anti-Buckmaster forces led by H. R. Lloyd, president of Mohawk Local 6, Akron, who had succeeded to the presidency when Buckmaster was ousted in 1948, sought to bypass the appeals committee and have the convention, again sitting as a committee of the whole, hear the appeals and render individual decisions. They also wanted the matter pushed farther ahead on the agenda.

Debate was long and vigorous but generally temperate, with delegates from the same local, in some cases, taking opposite sides on the question. The anti-administration forces contended that the discharged field representatives, being members of the union, were entitled to the same treatment Buckmaster received at the 1949 convention.

Pro-Buckmaster speakers maintained the situation was different because Buckmaster had been elected to his post and the others were appointed. Several of them flatly accused their opponents of political maneuvering.

The debate went on for a couple of hours, the afternoon of Sept. 18, before a show of hands was called for. The count ended in a 251-212 victory for the administration. But the opposition demanded a roll call vote. It was taken the following morning, and when the tellers completed their task showed the rules committee strongly upheld by a tally of 894 to 489, based on membership.

Buckmaster took note of the greater degree of unity within the union in his opening address, tying it in with negotiations for new contracts at Goodyear and Goodrich, which are now under way.

"We have had the highest type of cooperation between the people in the locals and the people in the international," he said, "and I hope it continues. That doesn't mean we've seen eye to eye on everything. But when we've had differences we've been able to settle them among ourselves, and when the time came to meet with the employers, we presented a united front. That's the way it should be, and I hope we are able to keep on working together.

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, CIO vice president and director of organization, expressed the same hope. "When the convention is over," he said at the conclusion of his speech, "may you all go back home united as never before as workers in a great union of which the CIO is proud."

Buckmaster during his talk also served notice on the Big Four of the industry—Goodyear, Goodrich, U. S. Rubber and Firestone—that as part of its 1950 program the URWA is going after the union shop.

"We're going after greater union security," he declared, "despite the Taft-Hartley Act."

"We're going after the union shop if that's what our members want for union security, and they've shown they want it in the places where we've gone after it and had National Labor Relations Board votes.

"The Big Four gave security to their company unions 30 years ago—and there is no reason they can't give it to us today."

HE ALSO reviewed the 1950 program, drawn up recently, "that looks toward doing something more for our people in the way of remuneration along the line that increased profits in the industry be shared with the men and women who make them possible."

"We know that our productivity has increased," he added, "and we feel that those who share in the producing should share in the profits. Also, we know what has happened to the cost of living, and we don't want the standard of living of our members to drop."

What with most of the rubber industry being concentrated in Ohio, and Ohio being the home state of Sen. Robert A. Taft (R.), co-sponsor of the Taft-Hartley Act and reactionary GOP spokesman who aspires to re-election this year, politics got its share of attention from the delegates.

"We've established our part as a political factor," Buckmaster said in urging Taft's defeat. "There was a time before the CIO when there was a reluctance by union members to become involved in politics. The CIO set a new pattern. We had a lot to learn.

"Today, through the CIO Political Action Committee, we've placed ourselves in a position where we can, if we try hard enough, become a very important factor in the political life of our nation."

One of Taft's main points in his campaign speeches around Ohio has been that the CIO is using "communist tactics" against him. Haywood took him to task and turned the tables on him.

"This is a damnable implication," declared the CIO vice president. "It is unsportsmanlike and unfair. It is Taft who is using the tried and true Communist tactic of the big smear on the CIO."

HAYWOOD WENT into Taft's Senate record in detail, showing how he has voted, over the years, against every bit of legislation aimed at the general welfare while at the same time he has fought for laws that stood to benefit only the wealthy and powerful.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers also paid his respects to the chieftain of the most reactionary element in the Republican party.

"The election and what the American people do in it is part and parcel of what our fighters in Korea are doing," he said.

"The Rubber Workers have a double responsibility in Ohio. Ohio has given the reactionary forces of the United States their spiritual leader—Taft.

"TAFT says the labor movement misrepresents his record. I say he's afraid to run on that record, because it is one of failure to understand the basic forces at work in the world.

"If the United States had followed his leadership, we'd have lost the war against Hitler. If we follow it now, we'll lose the war against communism. If you get a list of the basic foreign issues in Congress, you'll find that the reactionary Republicans on the far right have always voted the same as Rep. Marcantonio (ALP N.Y.), the Communist on the far left. Get a list of the basic domestic issues and you'll find that Taft is always on the wrong side.

"The little fellow in the United States is willing to pay any price for freedom—and freedom comes high. But he's going to say that if he has to pull in his belt, the big fellows are going to have to pull in their belts, too. And Taft is bleeding and dying for the boys in Wall Street, blocking the excess profits tax that would take away some of their war-acquired gains.

"Taft doesn't know anything about fighting Communists. He thinks that the negative approach of guns and bullets is the only answer. We in the labor movement have forgotten more about fighting Communist than Taft ever knew.

"A positive, approach to the problem, by feeding the hungry, ending poverty and improving the standards of living of people who have little or nothing, is the way to fight Communism, because they are the conditions that create the state of mind on which Communism thrives."

S. H. Dalrymple, international president of the union during the first 10 years of its existence and now a National CIO staff member on the Pacific Coast, was a guest of the convention and greeted the delegates in a brief talk. Cyrus W. Ching, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, himself a product of the rubber industry, also spoke. Jack Kroll, chairman of the National CIO-PAC and president of the Ohio State CIO Council, was scheduled to speak at the convention's final session.

CIO Members To Be Asked For Funds For UN-GIs And Anti-CP Korean Unions

The CIO Community Services Committee will soon appeal to CIO members in the factories, shops and offices for a multi-million dollar fund to send gift packages to United Nations troops in Korea and to help the Korean labor movement fight off Communist aggression.

First announcement of the plan was made by Irving Abramson, committee chairman, before the 15th annual convention of the CIO Rubber Workers last week in Cincinnati, O.

Recalling that CIO members contributed between $100 and $150 million to over-all war relief between 1942 and 1945, when the CIO War Relief Committee, of which he was chairman, was in existence, Abramson told the convention that "before the inevitable victory" in Korea, CIO members will be asked to contribute again.

"The committee will see," he said, "whether or not we can raise in the CIO sufficient funds for the GIs of the UN in Korea to give them some comfort packages while they are in the foxholes of Korea fighting this great war against Communism.

"I know that I can speak with great conviction when I say that this kind of campaign will receive the vigorous support of not only the Rubber Workers but of all CIO—that it will get across our message to the fighting forces and to the people of the world that we are not only passing resolutions against communism, but that we are willing to dig down into our pockets and give some real manifestation of support to our people fighting in the mudflats of Korea.

"This will lay at rest the propaganda which the Soviet has been throwing around in an attempt to show that our boys are fighting a Wall Street war for American imperialism, propaganda that can best be answered by the labor movement of the United States.

"Another answer to that kind of propaganda is for us in the CIO to give to the labor movement of Korea the kind of support it needs. So the other part of this campaign will apply to sending across the Pacific the materials—equipment, typewriters, pencils, pads, whatever it is that the South Korean labor movement needs—to build itself as a free Korean labor movement as part of the job of fighting Communist aggression.

"And the North Korean labor movement may be sure we will extend the same kind of help to them as soon as they are liberated from Communist influence."

Trade Union Business Fine, Delegates Told

Business — the democratic business of labor unions run by their own members — is good, delegates to the CIO Rubber Workers' convention were told.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, told the convention that the CIO lost 800,000 members when the Communist-dominated unions were ousted. But since the ousters began, he went on, the CIO has gained backed not only those 800,000 members, but an additional 200,000 members as well.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers said that in August his union received dues payments from "just short of 1.2 million members."

Acorns Plus Work Make Great Oaks

Once upon a time between 35,000 and 40,000 workers were organized in the rubber industry, but when the United Rubber Workers received their charter from the AFL on Sept. 3, 1935, in Akron, O., there were but 3080 dues-paying members, delegates to the 1950 convention in Cincinnati were told by R. C. Murray, convention chairman.

Murray, a veteran of early sitdown strike days in Akron, is now director of the union's District 1, with headquarters at Akron.

International officers, in their report to the convention, showed some 175,000 dues-paying members on the rolls despite a falling off in employment caused by labor-saving devices.

OHE Helps Landlords Get Increase

THINGS LOOKED gloomy on the rent control front as Congress prepared to go home and campaign. The bad news:

1 Congress did nothing, and would do nothing, about strengthening rent control, as requested by the President.

2 The Office of the Housing Expediter put on a campaign aimed at getting "small landlords" to come and get rent increases under a "liberalized policy." The landlords responded, and how.

3 As the weeks went on, only 148 incorporated communities had voted to ask for continuation of federal rent controls beyond Dec. 31. (The law provides that controls expire on that date unless local councils vote before then to request continuance to next June 30.)

This left 3000 communities still to be heard from.

OHE Chief Tighe Woods, apparently trying to play successful politics on behalf of rent control, put out the news that he was asking Congress for a very, very, very tough new law, which would do away with local option decontrol, empower him to recontrol on his own motion, outlaw all state statutes on the subject, and control commercial rents as well as residential ones.

And practically in the same breath he stepped up his appeasement drive—asking the landlords to come in and take advantage of the loopholes in the law.

(Labor's reaction was no better than it was when Robert N. Denham, erstwhile general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, implored employers who didn't like NLRB decisions to appeal them to the courts.)

WOODS MAY have thought that by inviting rent increases under the law he would remove landlord objections to retaining controls, but CIO housing officials think this belief, if he holds it, is naive.

At any rate, in the months of July and August, OHE granted 87,000 petitions for rent increases, covering about 100,000 rental units. The increases granted averaged 19%, or $6 to $7 a month.

OHE not only invited the landlords to do this, but devised a simple one-page form to make it easier, and even advertised on the radio—in Chicago, at least—to make sure the landlords heard about it.

The one-page form simply gives the landlord's name and address, describes the unit involved, asks if the landlord has had a rent increase since 1947, and asks whether he has always abided by the rental ceiling.

A copy goes to the tenant, who can quarrel with the landlord's facts if he chooses.

If the landlord has not had an increase since 1947 and says he has been a good boy otherwise, the local rent advisory committee is empowered to grant him an increase, forthwith.

In Chicago, after this was announced, 18,000 landlords rushed in at once, and 80% of their petitions were granted. In New Orleans, increases averaging 15% went to 20,000 landlords. In Atlanta, it is estimated that there'll be 20,000 increases.

Ousting Of Commies From Cal. CIO Should Be Cause For Bragging

By ALLAN L. SWIM

CALIFORNIANS have done much to encourage the idea that they have a rip-roaring state in which anything can happen and in which almost everything does.

To hear some of them tell it, Los Angeles extends almost from San Francisco to the Mexican border and the rain which sometimes pours in Southern California is merely heavy dew.

This, perhaps, has blinded many persons in other parts of the country to some of the really big things that have been going on in the state which serves as a backdrop for Hollywood.

The Census Bureau, in a recent set of dull figures, told part of the story.

Another part of it was told in court and in the record of a series of actions taken by CIO groups.

The Census Bureau revealed California now has a population of 10.5 million, which makes it the third largest state in the nation. Only New York and Pennsylvania have more people.

This means to the politically minded that California will be entitled to 30 seats in the U. S. House of Representatives instead of the present 23.

To union members — and to others—this has special importance because of what has been taking place in CIO circles in the rapidly growing state.

ONE CALIFORNIA CIO official bluntly put it this way: "We've tossed the Commies out on their ears!"

This official—and other CIO members—told the story this way:

The Communists began moving in on the CIO in California at its very beginning and before long had gained control—or considerable influence—over the new organization.

The Longshoremen & Warehousemen, headed by Harry Bridges, became the dominant CIO union in the state and Bridges became known as the "little dictator" of party line ideology in the region.

The Commies also gained considerable influence in the Auto Workers, the Steelworkers and the Newspaper Guild.

They controlled the state CIO council and dominated the Los Angeles, San Francisco, Alameda County (Oakland) and Contra Costa County industrial union councils, to which a majority of California CIO unions were affiliated.

There was opposition to the Commies from the start but it never really organized until 1946, when a strong attempt to clean up the state council was made but was defeated.

THE REAL, wide-open break between the left and right wings occurred over the third party of Henry Wallace.

National CIO voted opposition to the Wallace group. The California state council wouldn't go along. Morris Zusman of the Clothing Workers resigned as council president and non-Communist members of the Executive Board gave up their posts.

In June, 1948, the California National CIO-PAC was established as an organization separate from the state council and it did an effective job in elections that year.

A short time later union representatives connected with California CIO-PAC filed formal charges against the state council. Hearings were held last December in Washington — and the council's charter was revoked early this year.

The Commie-dominated council went into court in an effort to block the charter revocation. The case was thrown out of court last May.

And in June a new state council dedicated to CIO policies was established. More than 700 delegates representing all CIO unions in the state—except the Longshoremen and the Marine Cooks & Stewards—attended the founding convention.

MEANWHILE, pro-CIO forces in the state were moving to clean up the city and county council situation.

The Los Angeles council was reorganized in April, 1949, without having its charter lifted.

Hearings were held in July, 1950, on charges that the San Diego, Alameda and Contra Costa councils were no longer representative of the CIO. Their charters were lifted last month.

Two other major developments tie in closely with the council story.

One was the trial and conviction of Pres. Harry Bridges of the Longshoremen on charges that he lied about being a Communist when he became a naturalized citizen.

The other was the expulsion from the CIO a few weeks ago of the Longshoremen, Marine Cooks & Stewards and the Fishermen & Allied Workers on charges that they consistently followed the Communist Party line in preference to CIO policy.

Here, in brief, was what happened:

Communist forces, who were riding high in CIO and political circles in California four years ago, have lost a major portion of their influence in the state. They're fighting — and losing ground—in a purely defensive battle.

Special significance is attached to the situation by many West Coasters because of the increased political importance of California resulting from its population growth and also because a large portion of the men and material going to the battle against Korean Communists passes through California ports.

"It's a funny thing," commented a California CIO official recently. "We who are supposed to brag about everything haven't done much bragging about our housecleaning job now that we've really got something to brag about."

Win 6c Hike

Agreement has been reached between the International Shoe Co. and the CIO Shoe Workers Union on a 6c wage increase. Affected are 12,000 workers in 32 plants, mostly in the St. Louis, Mo., trade area, and including four in New Hampshire. The one-year contract is to date from Oct. 1 and is subject to membership ratification.

FIFTY-SIX HUNDRED PERSONS visited the booths of the Topeka and the Kansas CIO Councils at the Topeka State Fair in 5½ hours one day. They received literature and signed names for a drawing for a free ham, which was given away each day. Facing the camera and giving balloons to the children is Secy.-Treas. H. J. Yount of the Kansas Council. In charge of the booth was Dwight Lesser, chairman of the Topeka CIO booth committee. The CIO is also represented at state fairs in many other states.

ICFTU Has Sharp Queries On Peace Plea

"DO YOU know that the men who inspired this hypocritical peace appeal—the leaders of the Cominform who take their orders from the Kremlin—are the same men who are actively supporting the invasion of Korea?"

That is one of the questions addressed by Pres. Paul Finet and Secy. J. H. Oldenbroek of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in an open letter to those who have signed the Stockholm "peace" petition. Other questions asked in the letter are:

"Do you agree that the democratic way of life is worth saving and that it can only be saved, and at the same time war averted, if the democracies are strong enough to defend themselves, and to back up the decisions of the United Nations, which exists to prevent aggression and to ensure collective security?

"Do you not, also, agree that the risk of further aggression will be greatly reduced if it is made clear to the would-be aggressors that they will find no allies or dupes within the democratic countries; and that the refusal of any support to Communist fifth-column agents — under whatever "peaceful" guise they may be masquerading—is a vital condition for the maintenance of peace?

"Is it not evident that peace will only be finally secured when democracy is introduced, or restored, to the peoples who are now condemned to silence in the slave regimes behind the Iron Curtain, and when the ordinary peace-loving Russian, Pole and Czech regains control over his government?

"We cannot—if we wanted—compel you to answer 'Yes' under threat of deportation and forced labour. We can only appeal to your reason and good-will.

"But on the answers you—friends of peace and freedom everywhere—find to these questions, and on your firmness in resisting Communist aggression, will depend the happiness of you and your children for generations to come."

Disabled To Lose U. S. Benefits For Month

Thousands of Michigan's totally disabled citizens will lose at least a month's benefits under the new federal social security law.

The GOP-dominated state legislature, in its rush to vote a recess, failed to amend the state's welfare laws to allow Michigan's disabled workers to take advantage of the new federal benefits available Oct. 1.

Since it will take at least 45 days after enactment of a welfare amendment before machinery for these payments is set up, disabled workers are out at least a month's benefits.

Candidate Compares Opponent To Stalin

Rollin H. Everett, CIO Cincinnati Newspaper Guild member running as the Democratic candidate for Congress from the 2d Ohio district, told the voters last week that his Republican foe has voted on national security issues "just as Stalin or the Communist Daily Worker would have wanted him to vote."

Everett is running against Rep. Elston, who is seeking another term. Elston, he said, still "has the gall to pose as a military expert after having voted, or been recorded, just the same as Rep. Marcantonio (A.L.P. N. Y.) 11 out of 13 times on national security issues."

CIO Aide Back From Panama:

'Native Canal Workers Just Don't Get Enough Pay'

CIO DEMOCRATIC unionism has made remarkable headway in the Panama Canal Zone during the last six months—but there's plenty of room for further progress.

That was the report brought back from the canal area last week by Gilbert Anaya, who has served as representative of national CIO there since last April.

Anaya, on loan from the United Steelworkers, is returning to his staff post in Los Angeles. In Washington for conferences with Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization, Anaya said:

"Local 900 of the Government & Civic Employes Organizing Committee has lots of members, a sound structure, and plenty of spirit and optimism.

"It deserves all our compliments for the job its people have done in six months, since the CIO expelled the United Public Workers as a Commie-dominated organization.

"But don't ever forget—they need all the help we in the CIO can give them."

THOUSANDS of former West Indians are employed by the government in the Canal Zone — but at wage rates that are "just about enough to permit a man to live, somehow."

According to the CIO representative, the great majority of West Indian and native Panamanians employed in the Canal Zone receive between 30c and 35c an hour.

"Nobody can say that living costs are low down there," Anaya commented "I know, from first-hand experiences. And the government knows it, too. There are about 6000 American citizens working at the top skilled jobs in the zone; they're paid the going rate for their trade in the States, plus a 25% living cost bonus.

"But the native workers just don't get enough."

CANAL EXCURSION: Many workers who had helped build the Panama Canal Zone four decades ago had never had a chance to ride through the 47-mile ditch—until CIO organizing committee arranged special trip for Canal Zone "old timers." Scene shows CIO members taking a look at the canal scenery. Excursion was part of a Labor Day celebration.

LOCAL 900 has about 3500 members, Anaya said, in every section of the Canal Zone. The local is made up of six chapters in communities throughout the strip of land—about 45 miles long between Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans, and running about five miles in from each side of the canal itself.

The local has conducted negotiations with Gov. Francis Newcomber of the Canal Zone on matters of wages, pensions and housing, Anaya said, but needed improvements simply haven't been forthcoming.

One "fringe" benefit won by the CIO union was a Labor Day ship excursion through the Canal for local "old-timers," many of whom had helped build it in Teddy Roosevelt's day. Anaya said that large numbers of the "old-timers" had never had a chance to ride through the canal they built.

Hundreds made the trip under CIO auspices on the vessel "Presidente Porras," which the Canal Zone administration offered to the union for the day.

Edward A. Gaskin, president of Local 900 of the GCEOC, told Canal Zone workers—in a Labor Day speech broadcast from Colon, Panama—that the "sordid picture mirrored by the Canal Zone to Latin America shall have to be eradicated."

He pointed out that "psychologically and militarily, Americans living on this strip of land can make or break democracy in this part of the world."

LOCAL 900 is mindful of its commitments "to follow the policies of national CIO," he said.

"Though segregated, oppressed and discriminated against, we have faith in the regenerative powers of democracy. Our task is cut out for us . . .

"Segregation and discrimination must go; the obsolete Carribean wage scale must be eliminated, and the principle enforced of equal pay for equal work; housing conditions must be vastly improved . . . decent pensions must be obtained for all workers; and conditions in our hospitals must be bettered.

"Such an outlook is surely not utopian. It is merely too long overdue.

"Local 900 is pledged to wage a vigilant and intelligent campaign to effect these sorely needed reforms, for America can ill afford to allow selfishness and bigotry to continue to undermine her very foundation."

CANAL ZONE CHARTER: George DeNucci, former CIO regional director in Columbus, Ohio, presents charter for Local 900, Government & Civic Employes Organizing Committee, to Edward Gaskin, local president. Local 900 was set up to provide a home in the CIO for members of the expelled Public Workers.

HOT NIGHT IN PANAMA: The breezes that come from the ocean—both oceans, that is—are tropical but Panama Canal Zone workers are turning out in big numbers for CIO union meetings. Several hundred attended this one; workers are angry about discrimination, low pay rates.

Left-Wing Union Is Accused By UAW Of Trying To Break Harvester Strike

A BACK-TO-WORK movement by the unaffiliated Farm Equipment Workers Union last week brought charges of "strike-breaking . . . treachery . . . collusion" by the CIO Auto Workers.

Both the UAW and the FE—the latter expelled from the CIO last year on grounds of Communist domination—have been on strike at scattered plants of the Intl. Harvester Co. Some 50,000 workers are involved.

John Livingston, UAW vice-president, said that "UAW Harvester workers will continue their strike until Harvester management meets their legitimate demands."

About five days after the end of its strike, the FE announced signing of a wage contract with Harvester. It was expected that a UAW agreement might also be forthcoming.

Particularly under UAW attack was Gerald Fielde, FE organization director, who called a "recess" in that union's walkout and sent members back to work.

Fielde's action in calling off the strike without a wage agreement, Livingston said, "cannot be distinguished from outright strike-breaking. It smacks of collusion with Harvester management."

The UAW saw in the FE's move an effort to under-cut the status of the CIO auto union, which represents close to 25,000 Harvester employes in eight cities.

"This is not the first time that the pro-Communists have played the role of strikebreakers," Livingston said. "But if either Harvester management or the FE leadership is entertaining the hope that this action will weaken the strike of UAW members in Harvester plants, they are due for a sharp disappointment."

The UAW members walked out in July when the union asked for a new pact with substantial wage boosts and guarantees against future wage cuts through finagled changes in piece work rates.

THE STRIKE started shortly after FE—a division of the United Electrical Workers, also expelled by CIO as Communist-led—had accepted an offer which "on paper" promised 3c to 10c an hour increases.

"It soon became evident that the agreement was a phony designed to trap the UAW-CIO into an inferior contract," the UAW said.

With the UAW strike under way, FE rank and file members also joined the walkout. The company, finding all its plants shut down, came forward with new offers.

Negotiations broke off Sept. 12 when the UAW turned down the company proposals, which would have seriously hamstrung the union and given the workers little protection.

Three days later, FE leaders ordered an end to their strike.

Brewery Workers Re-Elect Four Top Officers

By EMIL BEINECKE

PRES. Karl Feller and four other international officers were re-elected at the 31st biennial convention of the CIO Brewery, Flour, Cereal, Soft Drink & Distillery Workers at Boston, Sept. 11-16.

Other officers are: Edward Hughlett, corresponding-recording secretary; Joseph J. Hauser, secretary-treasurer; Charles H. Lindberg, organizer, and Joseph Brady, coordinator of state councils.

Referenda will be held in three districts in November to elect executive board members. Two candidates from each of the three districts were named at the convention. There will be no contests in the seven other districts.

THE CONVENTION changed the practice of a national referendum for contests for board officers. The board members will henceforth be elected by the members of the districts they represent.

Contests will be held as follows: Second district, comprising New York and New Jersey, Fred Sickles (incumbent), New York City, John Hoh, Brooklyn; fifth district, Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Kentucky, Ohio, Virginia and West Virginia, Jack Heil (incumbent), Cleveland, and Otto Gunla, Chicago; ninth district, Ontario and Quebec, John Gavin (incumbent), Toronto, and W. W. Lessard, Waterloo, Ont.

PRES. KARL FELLER of the CIO Brewery Workers (left) had just completed congratulating Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin when this picture was snapped at the union's convention at Boston. Tobin drew applause when he predicted the eventual repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law, attacked Sen. Wherry (R. Neb.)

The convention cleared the way for establishing an education and research department by providing the necessary funds.

PLANS were made for continuing the anti-prohibition program. The convention voiced objection to the ban on the rationing of one can of beer to servicemen on the Korea front—an order that was later rescinded. The delegates:

- Called for a 35-hour week at 40 hours' pay.
- Reaffirmed previous convention demands for industry-wide pension plans.
- Backed the United Nations and the United States action on Korea.
- Commended the CIO for ousting Communist-dominated unions.

Pres. Joseph Curran of the CIO Maritime Union, who appeared at the convention as the personal representative of CIO Pres. Philip Murray, warned the Brewery Workers against minimizing the threat of Communist infiltration.

"Your union has a fine record," he said. "You have kept the Commies out and you will keep them out, but I think you should be ever watchful."

LABOR SECY. Maurice Tobin also warned of danger of Communism to unions, but a large portion of his speech concerned the administration's policy of the containment of communism.

He attacked Sen. Wherry (R. Neb.) for saying that the blood of the boys in Korea is on the head of Secretary of State Acheson. He said that Wherry was opposed to aid to Greece, Turkey and Korea, the Marshall Plan, the North Atlantic Pact and military aid to the Atlantic Pact nations.

"You can take Sen. Wherry on the one side, and Rep. Marcantonio (ALP N. Y.) on the other, and no one will deny that he follows the Commie line. The record is 100%," Tobin said.

Packing Locals Ask Authority For Walkout

LEADERS of CIO Packinghouse Workers' locals at seven plants of Wilson & Co. have asked the international union's executive board to authorize a strike.

The local union leaders asked the board "to approve a strike to be called against Wilson if the company persists in refusing to negotiate a contract which would respect the working rights of union members."

After a day-long meeting, the local leaders declared: "We are fed up with Wilson's stalling tactics and its deliberate refusal to work out an agreement similar to those now in effect with other packing companies."

The meeting was led by A. T. Stephens, UPWA vice-president and director of organization.

With the exception of Wilson, the CIO union has master contracts with all major meat packers and many leading independent companies, covering more than 130,000 workers in the meat industry.

ALTHOUGH the UPWA is certified by the National Labor Relations Board as bargaining agent at seven Wilson plants, the union has been unable to negotiate an agreement with the company.

No contract has been in effect between Wilson and the union since the spring of 1948, when the company canceled its contract during the nation-wide meat strike.

Meanwhile, the NLRB has issued a complaint against Wilson for unfair labor practices and presently is conducting an investigation on these charges.

The seven plants, employing more than 10,000 workers, are at Chicago, Ill.; Albert Lea and Faribault, Minn.; Los Angeles, Cal.; Cedar Rapids, Ia.; Kansas City, Kans., and Omaha, Neb.

PAC IS THE SUBJECT which absorbs the attention of these delegates to the second annual Texas CIO education conference. Don Ellinger, PAC director for Texas and the instructor, is at the extreme right. Texas primaries are over, but there'll be contests Nov. 7.

MORE THAN 100 PERSONS attended the Texas conference, which was conducted by the staff appearing in the lower photo. Left to right, standing, Ed Coffey, Auto Workers regional education director; Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO education and research director; Ellinger, Ted F. Silvey, Natl. CIO staff (seated on table), Gus Cramer, educational director, Division 20, CIO Communications Workers; Texas CIO Council Pres. Walter Gray; Bob Eckert, CWA; Dell Sackett, of the council staff; Council Secy.-Treas. J. J. Hickman; George T. Guernsey, CIO associate director of education; seated, Mabel Kuykendall, Packinghouse Workers staff, Dallas, and Emilie Heinatz, labor attorney, Austin. CWA led the other CIO unions in attendance with 35 delegates, and Packinghouse Workers were second with 22. This was an unprecedented turnout. Conference was non-segregated.

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

Amalgamated Is Requesting 15% Pay Hike

THE CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers, which saw its members faced with a rapid rise in the cost of living since the Korean war started, is asking employers for a 15% wage increase.

The decision was made by the union executive board's Sept. 15, meeting at Atlantic City, N. J.

ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky recalled that the union had not sought a wage increase since November, 1947. The demand, he said, is being made at this time because it is felt that higher wages are "a must" to make ends meet for the members.

"We have always felt a responsibility to guard prices, as well as wages, because the worker is concerned with how much his pay envelope will buy," he said.

"The increase we are asking at this time is not inflationary. It is merely an adjustment of wages to keep pace with living costs, which have gone up so sharply since the Korean war.

"The prices of wool and cotton fabrics have shown an extraordinary rise in recent weeks and this will have a more profound effect on clothing prices than the wage rise we're seeking."

The ACWA executive board voted to send a delegation of union representatives to Italy to "demonstrate the democratic way of life in the global struggle against totalitarianism."

N. J. CIO Warns Of CP-Led Raids

New Jersey CIO Pres. Carl Holderman last week warned AFL and CIO locals throughout the state to be on the alert against "a raiding campaign by a motley crew of Communist-led unions, led by the independent Distributive Workers Union."

Holderman said that three unions expelled by the CIO following their conviction on charges of Communist domination and leadership have merged for "an all-out raiding campaign on plants, shops and stores already organized by the CIO or AFL."

He listed the three unions as the Distributive Workers Union, formerly Local 65 of the CIO Retail Workers in New York; the United Office and Professional Workers, and the Food and Tobacco Workers.

Wood Union Upholds Report Of Officers

A HEATED argument preceded the unanimous adoption of the officers' report by the convention of the CIO Intl. Woodworkers at Minneapolis on Sept. 16. This action came near the end of the convention, which was reported in the Sept. 18 issue of the CIO News.

Debate centered around proposed changes in the report which were made by a convention committee. The changes were termed a "weasel-worded" attempt to inject left-wing philosophy into the convention records. Charles Ballard, Portland, Ore., led the fight against the proposed changes.

IWA Pres. J. E. Fadling asserted the changes proposed by the committee presented a false picture of the relationship of the IWA and the Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, which was expelled from the CIO as being Communist-dominated.

"The report made by your international officers on the Alaskan situation," Fadling declared, "gave a true picture of what has happened and what is happening now in Bridges' attempt to raid our membership in Alaska."

THE OFFICERS' report described an unsuccessful attempt made by Bridges to raid locals of the IWA at Juneau and Ketchikan.

Fadling also said, "The committee's report made a mild reference to this attack on our membership as 'recognition' of the 'great future' for organized labor in the great stands of Alaskan timber. It gives a completely false picture of the situation."

Fadling said woodworkers are in complete sympathy and accord with the rank and file membership of the ILWU, but that attacks made on IWA membership by Harry Bridges (ILWU president) are completely unjustified attempts to invade the jurisdiction of the woodworkers and to harass the IWA because it has spear-headed the support of the National CIO policy on the Pacific Coast.

The convention also sent a telegram to President Truman which stated: "We, as workers in the lumber industry, have successfully fought communism within our organization for more than 10 years in a realistic manner. We believe the present emotional, hysterical approach taken by so many of our political leaders of today will help the cause of communism rather than maintaining our present form of satisfactory, democratic government."

The delegates also voted to establish an Int'l. Woodworkers Safety Council to be made up of one member from each district. The Council is to act as a coordinating committee in accident prevention work and safety education with the District Councils and locals of the IWA.

Ching Dissipates UE 'Dream' Plot

The ousted United Electrical Workers, gasping hard, held a convention in New York last week. James J. Matles, organizational director of the union kicked out of the CIO because of its Communist domination, came up with a lulu.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Cyrus W. Ching, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, "plotted" to call out the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers on strike against the General Electric Co., he said with a straight face.

"There was nothing sinister or unusal about the procedure," Ching said in Cincinnati, O., where he was speaking at the convention of the CIO Rubber Workers. "There was a strike threatened at some of the GE plants and I sent telegrams to both the company and to James B. Carey (IUE chairman) asking their assurance that there would be no work stoppage. They met in Washington and got the thing ironed out. I didn't sit in on the meeting. There wasn't any 'scheme' that I know of."

89 Named In Eyeglass 'Kickback' Suit By U.S.

The Federal government has added the names of 89 dispensing companies or individuals to its anti-trust suit against the American Optical Co. The suit was filed in 1946, and the government's action Sept. 18 was an additional complaint.

The complaint said "successor" companies were set up after American and other optical companies were accused of illegal "kickbacks" to oculists from the proceeds of sales of eyeglasses. The dispensing companies, said the government, continued the "kickback" practice. The government wants the 89 named included in any court decision.

Taft Ad Tries To Link His Foes With Commies

Sen. Robert A. Taft charged in Zanesville that the leaders of the AFL and CIO "are waging a campaign of class hatred to eliminate from Congress those who are unwilling to follow the party line as do the Communists."

But just a week before, in the Zanesville Times Recorder, the Taft forces ran a full-page ad linking those who oppose Taft with Communists, socialists, racketeers, unioneers or just plain boobs. (The ad violated Ohio law because it did not carry the names of its sponsors.)

That ad really appealed to class hatred, and was "a lying attempt to suggest that the opposition to Taft is subversive," declared Henry Miller Busch, professor at Western Reserve Univ., who is supporting Joseph T. Ferguson, Taft's Democratic opponent. Taft recently ran out on a promise to debate the Taft-Hartley act before the Glendale Town Forum in Cincinnati. He dodged when he learned Busch would be his opponent.

Segregation Banned At N. J. Housing Projects

Negroes and whites will no longer be assigned to separate parts of Newark, N. J., housing projects, the Housing Authority announced. Its resolution, adopted unanimously and effective immediately, stated that units will be allocated on "basis of need without regard to race, religious principles, color, national origin, and ancestry of applicant."

Missouri CIO Backs Hennings For Senator

THE CAMPAIGN to replace U. S. Sen. Forrest Donnell (R.) with Thomas C. Hennings, Jr., (D.) occupied a good portion of the time of the convention of the Missouri CIO Council at St. Louis Sept. 16-17.

Hennings addressed the 400 delegates to the convention. They gave him a rising ovation and unanimously endorsed him.

In the primary race CIO leaders had supported Hennings' opponent, State Sen. Emery W. Allen. Made an honorary delegate, Hennings gave a fighting speech.

He warned that CIO members "must get rid of the idea that the election is in the bag." He said that he was worried about St. Louis, Greene and Jasper counties.

He attacked the Taft-Hartley Law and the National Association of Manufacturers for its support of the measure. Hennings received a second ovation when he declared that "we must not only build our military might against the Communists, but we must unite at home."

TILFORD Dudley, assistant National PAC director, stressed the responsibility of union and consumer groups in ringing doorbells and using other means to get out the vote to defeat Donnell. Of the latter Dudley said:

"He persisted, despite our best efforts to educate him, in being anti-union and anti-consumer. He voted for every bill to make the Taft-Hartley Law as viciously anti-labor as possible."

Harold E. Edwards, Kansas City, Ralph Turrentine and James Davis were re-elected president, vice president and secretary-treasurer, respectively, of the Council. William Bastinas, Communications Workers, Kansas City, was elected to the new post of second vice president.

Speakers included Anthony W. Smith, assistant CIO Councils director; Charles A. Ricker, director of the Missouri Division of Employment Security; L. L. Duncan, director of the Missouri Division of Public Inspection, and Arnold Griffith, of the St. Louis office of the U. S. Conciliation and Mediation Service.

ACW Wins Guaranteed Annual Wage Increase

An immediate 7c hourly wage increase and guaranteed annual raises have been won by 5000 of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers employed by the Dry Cleaners Institute of Detroit. The new five-year agreement replaces the present pact, which was due to expire next February.

The workers will receive a 3c boost next March, and additional 3c hikes each succeeding year through 1955. The contract is open to wage negotiations if the cost-of-living index undergoes substantial changes. The new pact also covers part-time workers for the first time, improves working conditions and liberalizes the holiday pay schedule.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer attended the United Rubber Workers convention in Cincinnati this past week. This fine organization has had a remarkable growth since the time it was one of the founders of the CIO.

In the past two years the Rubber Workers have gone through trials and tribulations, but at this past convention, I must say, a great deal of unity was exhibited. Pres. Buckmaster and his associate officers are doing a swell job. The writer had the honor of addressing the delegates and he discussed developments in CIO, the expulsion of the Communists, and why they were expelled. Also discussed was the present economic situation, of rising prices and rising profits.

The writer also talked about Robert Taft, who charged that the CIO is using Communist tactics to bring about his defeat. Taft, the symbol of anti-unionism to the American worker, should talk about the one organization which has done so much to eradicate communism in America and is assisting to eradicate it in other countries.

Taft's statement was typical, and shows the methods he resorts to in order to stop the progress of the American worker and his union. Despite Taft the labor movement will continue to grow and progress.

The United Brewery Workers who recently held their convention have announced that their entire slate of top officers was re-elected without opposition. Congratulations to all.

The writer, as this goes to press, will be attending the convention of the United Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers in Cleveland, Ohio. More about this next week.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in a representation election held at the Sprague Meter Co., Bridgeport, Conn., the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers was again victorious by the following vote: IUE 268, no union 12. The UE withdrew from the ballot.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports a representation election victory for the IUE at the Bendix Freeze Division, Towson, Md., by the following vote: IUE 305; against 19; challenged 24.

Al Hartnett, Assistant to the Chairman of IUE, reports the following representation election victories: Cochrane Corp., Philadelphia, Pa., IUE 65, no union 5, UE withdrew; Master Vibrator, Dayton, O., IUE 27, no union 26; U. S. Corrugated Fibre Box Co., Dayton, O., IUE 19, no union 1; United Motors, Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 17, no union 2; Federal Tool, Minneapolis, Minn., IUE 37, no union 1.

Thomas Andert, president of CIO United Optical & Instrument Workers, reports that the UOIW won the following representation elections in Milwaukee, Wis., by unanimous vote: Mossey Otto Dental Laboratory, Neiland Dental Laboratory, Bunde Upmeyer Laboratory, Erk Laboratory, Webb Wrasse Laboratory and Weiss Laboratory. Intl. Rep. Dorbic was in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. John Easton reports that in a union shop election held at the General Cigar Co., Huntington, W. Va., the workers voted in favor of the United Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers-CIO by the following vote: eligible 445, for 297, against 61, void 3, not voting 84. Union Rep. Lou Koletka and CIO Staff Rep. Joe Rice conducted the campaign and election.

Reg. Dir. W. A. Copeland reports that in a representation election held at the Memphis Sales Mfg. Co., the workers voted in favor of the United Furniture Workers-CIO by the following vote: UFWA 23, no union 21, challenged 3. UFW Rep. Carl Curtis was in charge of the campaign.

John Green, president of the CIO Industrial Union of Marine & Shipbuilding Workers of America, reports that in a union shop election held for Nicholson Terminal and Dock office workers, River Rouge, Mich., the vote was as follows: Eligible 24, IUMSWA-CIO 13, against 9, challenged 2.

Reg. Dir. John Maurillo reports the following two representation elections won by the United Packinghouse Workers-CIO: R. T. French & Co., Rochester, N. Y., UPW 165, no union 71; Sowers & Hicks, mail contract drivers, Syracuse, N. Y., UPW 7, no union 1.

UAW Signs Two Pacts

The CIO Auto Workers and the Bendix Aviation Corp. have reached a supplementary agreement under which the two-year contract signed July 28 was extended for three additional years with provisions for an immediate 5c per hour wage increase, an additional 3c for skilled workers who make up between 10% and 20% of the company's 13,000 employes, and a cost of living clause similar to those in the General Motors and Ford Motor Co. agreements.

UAW Local 12 in Toledo, O., and the Willys-Overland Co. signed a new contract giving 18.86c per hour, including wage boosts, pensions and other benefits, to 7100 members.

"Sure, I always talk to these 'No-Union' advocates with an olive branch in one hand!"

Truman Vetoes McCarran 'Anti-Subversive' Bill

PRESIDENT Truman on Sept. 22 vetoed the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon-Wood "anti-subversive" bill.

The CIO had called for a presidential veto of the bill as dangerous to basic civil and union rights.

The bill was sent to the White House on Sept. 21 after Senate and House had passed a revised, final version of bills earlier adopted in the two branches of Congress.

The CIO letter to President Truman was signed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray. It said:

"On behalf of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, I strongly urge that you veto H. R. 9490, the so-called McCarran-Mundt-Nixon-Wood Bill.

"As you know, the CIO's opposition to this bill does not stem from any tenderness or sympathy for Communists or Communism. The CIO has weeded from its own ranks these traitors to both America and the American labor movement, and it supports any measures necessary to guarantee the security of our democratic system against these totalitarians.

"H. R. 9490 is of doubtful efficacy against Communism. As the Department of Justice has repeatedly protested, it will drive the Communist Party completely underground and make detection of its adherents more difficult.

"In the guise of combating Communism, it opens the way for repression of honest and non-Communist political dissent. It could well be used to hamper legitimate trade-union activity.

"MOREOVER, the bill is a hodgepodge of numerous ill-coordinated measures, on many of which no hearings have been held and which received scant consideration in Congress. Many of its provisions are of dubious constitutionality. Its treatment of aliens is inhumane and violates our conceptions of fair play.

"In urging you to veto the bill, I wish to suggest that you appoint a commission of distinguished public citizens to review the entire problem of reconciling our democratic traditions with the necessity of securing our democracy against its Communist enemies without and within.

"The commission should, of course, carefully consider all of the proposals embodied in H.R. 9490 as well as other more moderate and perhaps more effective measures for reconciling our internal security needs with our democratic liberties and traditions."

As Congress gave its final blessing to the bill, Attorney-General Howard McGrath hinted broadly that the President would veto the measure.

McGRATH SAID that the registration of Communist political and front outfits provided by one part of the bill would "count for little in fighting wily persons trained in, and bent upon, intrigue and deception."

He added that to try to supress the "bankrupt ideas of communism" would tread upon constitutional guarantees of free speech.

He added that the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon Bill might "serve to pin the wings of martyred angels upon the devil's advocates." Instead of a dragnet measure of the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon type, he urged tightening up of espionage and sabotage laws, as President Truman had recommended earlier.

The bill was originally a product of the House Un-American Activities Committee, and it has been widely condemned by labor, liberal and religious groups.

They have argued that the loose definitions and sweeping provisions of the bill could be used to silence all sorts of non-Communist organizations. The Justice Dept., also opposing the bill, has maintained that its principal effect will be to drive the Communist movement "underground"—just the opposite of what the bill purports to do.

Hysteria Has Struck Hard Before In United States

"I SPENT a good part of my time getting people out of jail in the period after World War I," said a veteran labor leader who later became a CIO union official.

9-25

He was referring to the raids ostensibly aimed at the Communists by Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer, in which so-called radicals and labor leaders were caught.

The nation was then in a hysterical mood, as a result of the reaction that had set in following the end of the war. That hysteria was fanned by birth of Soviet Russia in 1917 and the creation of Communist Parties wherever possible.

In many cases that period parallels 1950. The attitude of Russia in the United Nations and the Korean aggression by a Soviet satellite helped to create the hysteria which is sweeping the country now.

Then as now there were business elements and politicians who jumped on the anti-Red bandwagon in the hope that they would be able to do irreparable damage to organized labor.

Labor was hurt by the Palmer raids. The functioning of unions was disrupted and fear was sown in the hearts of thousands of union members.

HYSTERIA is being whipped up again today by:

- The McCarran - Mundt - Nixon "anti-subversive" bill, which has been branded as a threat to civil liberties and which will doubtless be passed by Congress over a threatened Presidential veto.
- The use of booklets such as "Red Channels" to smear radio and television entertainers.
- Wild charges in Congress such as were made by Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.) and Sen. Schoeppel (R. Kans.).

If American history repeats itself, it will not be the first time. The Palmer raids themselves had a precedent in the suppressions caused by the passage of the Alien and Sedition Acts in

THE LATE A. M. PALMER
After World War I, Attorney General Palmer ordered widespread raids ostensibly aimed at Communists but landing many labor leaders in jail.

1798, when feelings ran high against France—following the Revolution—and there was fear of French agents in this country.

The story is told by Charles and Mary Beard in "The Rise of American Civilization":

"The Alien Act, although it was not enforced, gave great offense, especially to the many foreigners in danger under its provisions. The Sedition Act was vigorously applied and aroused a tempest.

"Several editors of Republican (the first Republican party and forerunner of the present Democratic party) papers soon found themselves in jail or broken by heavy fines; bystanders at political meetings who made contemptuous remarks about Adams (President John Quincy Adams) or his policies were hurried off to court. In vain did John Marshall (Chief Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court) urge caution, explaining that the Sedition Law was useless and calculated to arouse rather than allay discontent. In vain did Hamilton (Secretary of the Treasury) warn his colleagues: 'Let us not establish a tyranny. Energy is a different thing from violence.'

"The high and mighty directors in the party of 'talents and wealth' would be satisfied with nothing short of destroying their opponents.

"AS MARSHALL and Hamilton had foreseen, the resentment of the Republicans answered prosecution and finally burst all bounds. They denounced the legislation as despotic and its sponsors as tyrants.

"They invoked the protection of the First Amendment to the Constitution which expressly forbade Congress to make any law respecting the freedom of speech and press. They appealed to the rights of citizens and states.

"Not content with the usual verbalism of politics, Jefferson (later to become President) proposed something akin to defiance. He drafted a set of resolutions declaring that the Alien and Sedition Acts violated the Constitution and were therefore null and void—resolutions which were introduced into the Kentucky legislature, passed, signed by the governor, and proclaimed to the country as representing the creed of the state.

"Simultaneously Jefferson's competent aide, James Madison (who also became President), started a similar revolt in Virginia, inducing the legislature to adopt resolutions condemning the obnoxious legislation and advising the states to cooperate in defense of their rights.

"Though Kentucky and Virginia found that their appeals encountered indifference or even opposition on the part of their neighbors, they were not daunted. The former, hearing from some of the northern states that it was the business of the Supreme Court to decide high questions of law, announced, in reply, the fateful doctrine that a state could review acts of Congress itself and nullify any measure it deemed unconstitutional.

"While the Virginia legislature shrank from the full logic of this strong doctrine, it did appropriate money for arms and supplies. Fortunately for the Republicans, the fourth presidential election was now at hand and they could call upon the voters to repudiate at the polls the authors of the Alien and Sedition Acts. The issue became a factor, at least a rhetorical one, in a nation-wide campaign."

Although reaction has not taken the extreme form advocated by Jefferson and Madison, opponents of the present mounting hysteria became increasingly vocal on several fronts:

1 The New Jersey CIO Council executive board and its Political Action Committee condemned "the use of the irresponsible publication, 'Red Channels,' to smear loyal Americans, such as Ireene Wicker, Gypsy Rose Lee, Jean Muir and to deprive them of their livelihood without due process of law and merely on the pretext that they once belonged to organizations now considered Communist-controlled. (The American Broadcasting Co. refused to fire Miss Lee.)

"We urge those Congressmen, who displayed poor judgment and unreasoning fear by voting for the Mundt-Nixon-Ferguson-McCarran anti-civil liberties bill (also known as the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon Bill), to uphold President Truman's veto of this un-American and unconstitutional legislation," the Council said.

"We commend those local unions, who, despite severe and deliberate provocation by Communist agents in their ranks, have used democratic and legal means to rid themselves of Communist leaders and disrupters during the past few years."

2 The leaders of 17 national organizations, including the American Association of University Professors, the American Civil Liberties Union, American Veterans Committee, the CIO Textile Workers, the Intl. Association of Machinists and a number of religious groups, urged President Truman to veto the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon Bill.

3 One of these organizations—the American Civil Liberties Union—announced that Merle Miller, best-selling novelist, would head a committee to investigate blacklisting in the radio and television industry.

Fitzpatrick in St. Louis Post-Dispatch

What Price Politics?

'Front' No Substitute For Oath—NLRB

A union can't use a "front" to decertify another union when its own officers haven't complied with T-H non-Communist affidavit requirements, the National Labor Relations Board ruled last week.

The decision was handed down in a case involving the United Mine Workers and the Progressive Mine Workers. both unaffiliated, at the Knife River Coal Mining Co., Beulah, N. D. Albin Becker, as an individual, filed a petition to decertify the PMW, which represents the 130 employes. The NLRB threw out his request on the ground that the record showed he was acting for the UMW, officers of which have not signed the non-Communist affidavits.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00 A YEAR

5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., OCTOBER 2, 1950 No. 40

JUST BEFORE Congress went home to campaign in an election now only five weeks away, a dramatic fight by 11 die-hards against overriding President Truman's veto of bill to control subversives kept Senate in session for 22 hours. Sen. Langer (N. D.), only Republican in group trying to impress U. S. with act's threats to non-Communists, collapsed at 5 a. m. on Sept. 23 after five-hour speech. He was removed (right) to hospital. Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) (above) saw Langer in difficulty, asked him to yield and continued fight. Story on Page 7.

More Pay Sought

Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes of the CIO Steelworkers last week said that the 10% increase offered by the Aluminum Co. of America was a step in the right direction as he accepted the proposal on behalf of the union. He added that the offer fell far short of the actual needs of the Alcoa workers. The union has notified the company that it will seek an additional increase when the contract is opened in the near future. (See story on Page 3.)

Earn A Million?

If you are earning between $3000 and $5000, are married and have two children, you are about to pay 20½% more income tax. If your income is a million a year and you have three dependents, then your tax will go up only 11½%. (Stanley Ruttenberg, head of the CIO Education and Research Dept., explains the new tax law on Page 6.)

UE Finances In Bad Shape, Says IUE News

THE UNITED Electrical Workers, expelled from the CIO on charges it was Communist dominated, "is swiftly becoming financially as well as morally bankrupt, it was disclosed during closed sessions of the UE convention," says the current issue of the IUE-CIO News.

"Newspaper reporters and all non-delegates were barred from the convention hall during a supposedly 'secret' discussion of UE's financial structure," the newspaper says.

"The extent to which UE is now tottering was revealed when Secretary Julius Emspak reported that UE received per capita of only $86,000 in July. This figure indicated a dues paying membership of 172,000—just about half the 340,000 figure used by Organizational Director James Matles earlier in the convention.

"Moverover, it was pointed out that the figure of 172,000 was what UE claimed as the membership for July, 1950. Scores of NLRB and disaffiliation elections since then have further cut into UE's waning strength.

"Even more significant was the disclosure that in July UE's expenditures were $51,600 in excess of income. In July UE's general fund had become completely exhausted and its reserve fund reduced to $400,000. (Last year's UE convention was told that UE's total assets amounted to $2,507,000.)

"Two drastic measures were taken in an attempt to halt UE's drift into bankruptcy. All staff salaries were cut by 10%, and the organizing staff was reduced from 168 to 92. (Slightly more than a year ago UE's total staff was more than 300.)"

New organizational work must necessarily be curtailed because of the staff reduction and UE's hope of ever regaining any of the ground lost to IUE-CIO was virtually abandoned. In a final desperate attempt, the convention increased per capita taxes to the national office from 50c to 75c.

"Thus, this per capita increase, long overdue, was put in effect, not to improve union activities, but in a desperate attempt to delay the union's death.

"Among the organizers and staff members who got the axe were a number with Communist Party records dating back 12 and 15 years. In many instances these comrades, it was discovered, are now desperately attempting to attach themselves to the various Communist fronts still in existence.

"The irony, however, is that many of these fronts cannot afford to hire additional staff because the flow of UE money into their treasuries has slowed to a trickle. Several have asked to be taken on the Communist Party's own field staff."

Bread Costs More, Farmers Get Less

Prices on bread have climbed for the consumer, but the farmer is getting less of the profit, the Agriculture Dept. has reported.

Middlemen were taking 71% in 1949, compared with 61% in 1947, the report shows. In 1947, the farmer got 3c and the bread cost 13c. In 1949, the farmer got 2.4c and the bread cost 14.5c. Retailers and bakers were making 10.3c in 1949, compared with 7.9c in 1947.

Anti-Labor Republican New U.S. Ambassador To Britain

WALTER S. GIFFORD, wealthy monopolist, enemy of unions and a Republican, was named U. S. ambassador to Great Britain and its Labor Government by President Truman last week.

Gifford, former chairman of the board of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., succeeds Lewis W. Douglas, who resigned because of ill health. He will take over from his predecessor on Nov. 1 under a recess appointment, and his name will be sent to the Senate for confirmation when Congress comes back on Nov. 27.

Gifford has an outstanding record of devotion to reaction which is not expected to serve him well with the workers' government of Great Britain.

Before becoming chairman of the AT&T board in 1948, he had served it as president for 23 years. During his regime his employes were represented by some of the most supine company-dominated unions in American labor history, their relations with AT&T and its operating subsidiaries being distinguished by low wage rates and spectacularly long progression plans.

WHILE STILL head of the phone monopoly, Gifford in 1931 became chairman of a committee of prominent industrialists named by President Hoover to promote job opportunities as the country was settling down to its worst depression. The committee evolved a slogan, "Give A Job To June," meaning until June, 1932. Gifford put the slogan to work in reverse. His firm during the depression forced 185,000 of its employes to resign by threatening to withhold their severance pay if it was compelled to fire them.

With about 25% of its employes thus off its payrolls, AT&T retained its position as one of the prize blue chips on the New York Stock Exchange and continued throughout the depression to pay its regular dividend of $9 a year.

A Federal Communications Commission report in 1939 described the firm headed by the new diplomat as "probably the most anti-social of any American corporation."

Gifford was still president of AT&T when thousands of its employes, rebelling against their company union status, went on strike in 1947 and tied up or slowed down telephone service in all parts of the country. The gains won were for the most part pretty small, but the lesson of united action was well learned and was a major factor in organization of the CIO Communications Workers.

If Your Pay Is Cut, You May Go On Strike, But It's Illegal To Slow Down Under T-H

IT WAS perfectly all right for the Elk Lumber Co., Medford, Ore., to jerk its operations around so that five men who loaded lumber into railroad cars found their earnings reduced from $2.71 to $1.52 an hour.

But when the five men slowed down to a point where they were giving $1.52 worth of work for their hour's pay, they were fired —and the National Labor Relations Board ruled last week that the firm was within its rights.

The board's decision was based in part on the fact that although the men are members of the AFL Lumber & Sawmill Workers, and the union filed the case, no evidence was produced at the hearing to show that it was representing them when they were discharged, or that it had any part in the slowdown.

A unilateral cut in production by a group of employes while they remain on the job, the board asserted, does not come within that section of the law which guarantees employes the right to engage in concerted activities for the purposes of self-organization or collective bargaining. Had they walked off the job on strike, the board added, they would have had the protection of the law.

IN ANOTHER decision last week, the board by a four to one majority ruled that when the members of an employers' association discharged their workers because their union went on strike against one member-firm, they violated the Taft-Hartley Act.

The case involved 35 Chicago liquor wholesalers and the AFL Distillery Workers, who had bargained on an association basis for several years. The union tried to negotiate a new contract over three months of meetings, but failed.

Then it approached individual members of the association with the same contract, and again met refusal. Thereupon it called a strike against the Old Rose Distributing Co., which employed 35 salesmen.

Immediately all association members, including Old Rose, discharged their employes — about 700. Each employe received an identical letter in which the association said that "since the salesmen of your union have walked out on one of the houses it it is our position that you have decided to strike every wholesaler who has been a party to the industry-wide negotiations."

THE BOARD rejected this contention as an "incongruous construction" of the Taft-Hartley Act which would extend, rather than minimize, industrial strife. The four-man majority contended that the act "does not permit a discharge to reduce, by anticipatory action, the effectiveness of an expected strike." even though the walkout may "place severe economic pressure on the employer."

The salesmen, who were discharged April 8, 1949, were reinstated when a contract was signed about May 1. The board ordered the employers to reimburse them for lost wages and commissions. The ruling was signed by Chairman Paul M. Herzog and Members John M. Houston, Abe Murdock and Paul L. Styles. Board Member James J. Reynolds, Jr., dissented.

AT&T Mum On Pay Raises

OFFICERS OF the CIO Communications Workers were getting the familiar run-around from the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., recently in exploratory talks designed to determine AT&T's position on voluntary wage reopenings within existing contracts.

CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne and Vice Pres. A. T. Jones told AT&T Vice Pres. W. C. Bolenius that a round of pay boosts affecting millions of workers is well in the making and that living standards of telephone workers are deteriorating again due to rapidly rising price levels.

Beirne further pointed out to Bolenius that it would be to the company's advantage to adjust levels upward in order to stem increasing unrest among workers and to attract needed labor.

Bolenius first expressed interest in voluntary contract reopening on wages, Beirne said, but got back in his shell in a hurry when asked what "advice" he would be willing to give to associated companies on the matter.

Bolenius was said to have refused to answer the question and stated he was unwilling to voice his personal views or those of AT&T.

Faced with this refusal of the company's policy officer to talk frankly on the issue, union officers accused him of running out on his obligation to workers.

Beirne said that despite the attitude of Bolenius, CWA is planning action in defense of the living standards of its members. He said that action is being made clear to divisions in a series of directives.

George J. Bott Named NLRB Top Counsel

GEORGE J. BOTT, a "career man" at the Natl. Labor Relations Board, last week was named to serve as the NLRB's independent general counsel.

Announcement of the Bott appointment was released by President Truman less than two weeks after he had requested the resignation of Robert Denham.

Since 1948, Bott had served as an associate general counsel under Denham. He has been in charge of operations of the various NLRB regional offices.

Under the Taft-Hartley Act, the board's general counsel is given far broader powers than the top lawyer in any other government agency. He has wide discretion over filing complaints in unfair labor practices cases, in controlling the actions of the regional offices and the NLRB's legal staffs, and in bringing cases into the courts.

DENHAM — who had achieved notoriety through his outspoken anti-labor speeches and his stretching of the T-H law against unions—had been in a virtual war with the five members of the NLRB for many months.

Bott, 40 years old, was born in New Haven, Conn., and was graduated from Georgetown Univ. in Washington in 1932. After getting a law degree at Yale in 1935, he served as a clerk in the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati for two years.

He has worked in NLRB regional offices in Detroit, Kansas City and Chicago.

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, AND CIRCULATION REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912, AS AMENDED BY THE ACTS OF MARCH 3, 1933, AND JULY 2, 1946 (Title 39, United States Code, Section 233)

Of THE CIO NEWS, published weekly at Washington, D. C., for 1950.

The names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business managers are. Publisher, Congress of Industrial Organizations, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington, D. C.; Editor, Allan L. Swim, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington, D. C.

2. The owner is: (If owned by a corporation, its name and address must be stated and also immediately thereunder the names and addresses of stockholders owning or holding 1 percent or more of total amount of stock. If not owned by a corporation, the names and addresses of the individual owners must be given. If owned by a partnership or other unincorporated firm, its name and address, as well as that of each individual member, must be given.) Congress of Industrial Organizations, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington, D. C., Philip Murray, President; James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer; Vice-Presidents, Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emile Rieve, Frank Rosenblum.

3. The known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 percent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgagees, or other securities are: (If there are none, so state.) None.

4. Paragraphs 2 and 3 include, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting; also the statements in the two paragraphs show the affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner.

5. The average number of copies of each issue of this publication sold or distributed, through the mails or otherwise, to paid subscribers during the 12 months preceding the date shown above was: (This information is required from daily, weekly, semi-weekly, and triweekly newspapers only.) 123,264.

ALLAN L. SWIM
(Signature of editor)

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 20th day of Sept. 1950.

Marguereta N. Carroll
(My commission expires 12/14/'54)

Labor Unites To Fight York Anti-Red Law

A LOT OF hysteria has been generated in the United States since the Communist North Korean army invaded the South Korea republic.

Not only is it reflected at the national level by such legislative monstrosities as the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon-Wood Act, misnamed the Internal Security Act of 1950, which was passed by an adjournment-minded Congress despite President Truman's powerful and damning veto message.

It is reflected at the local level, too, in a wide variety of city ordinances which are alleged to put all manner of restrictions upon Communists—but which are loaded with weasel-words almost guaranteeing they will be used against labor unions and their leaders.

ONE OF THE worst of these acts has been passed in York, Pa. — and the combined labor movement is sparking a drive for its repeal.

The measure ostensibly is aimed at halting the distribution of Communist literature. But it includes loose language that bars the selling or giving away of literature which "encourages or tends to encourage a breach of the public peace or good order of the community," an opening made to order for anti-laborites.

York is notorious as a low wage, open shop community and a refuge for runaway shops from better organized areas. The committee that saw the entire labor movement there endangered by such an ordinance in the hands of men like the city fathers and started the repeal movement were William Holderman, field representative of the CIO Textile Workers; Henry Dropkin, field representative of the CIO Clothing Workers; Leon Silar, business agent of the AFL Teamsters, and Carl Burtner, business agent of the unaffiliated Machinists.

The CIO Industrial Union Council and the AFL Central Labor Union endorsed the committee's stand and voted themselves into the fight.

The ordinance was passed at the behest of Mayor Felix X. Bentzel, who was elected originally with labor support on the basis of his record in the Legislature, according to the York Gazette & Daily.

(This was the only daily newspaper in the U. S. to support Henry A. Wallace's Progressive Party bid for the presidency in 1948, but ordinarily the owner, Charles M. Gitt, is a liberal democrat.)

The paper also said Bentzel broke with labor after three of his cops invaded a negotiating meeting between the AFL Upholsterers Union and spokesmen for a furniture company involved in a strike.

The unions' venture into intensified policital action took on redoubled significance when Bentzel announced that passage of another ordinance, this one requiring the registration of Communists, would be sought.

Again, however, the draft prepared by the City Solicitor says the aim is "to avert by every cautionary and reasonable method, any act of sabotage to be attempted in the city which would seriously disrupt or curtail the normal operation of our industrial plants."

ROBERT T. CREASEY

CWA Aide Gets Labor Dept. Post

ROBERT T. CREASEY, an official of the CIO Communications Workers, has become assistant secretary of labor. He is serving an interim appointment in the post while the Senate, which must confirm such appointments, is recessed.

Creasey is filling the job formerly held by John W. Gibson, one-time Michigan CIO Council President.

Creasey was born in Oklahoma and raised in Texas. In 1929 he went to work as a transmission man for a phone company, at the same time attending Southern Methodist University and Dallas Law School. He is a member of the Texas bar.

As far back as 1936, he was active in the formation of the Long Lines Union. In 1945, when it became the American Union of Telephone Workers, he was elected vice-president.

Active in the formation of the CIO Telephone Workers Organizing Committee, he later was chairman of the group that brought about the merger of TWOC with the Communications Workers of America. The American Union then became Division 10 of CWA (Long Lines Division), and Creasey became division president, the union post he holds today. LPA

TV Tax Starts Nov. 1

If you wanted to buy a television set before the new 10% federal tax goes on, you can still make it. Because of a delay by Congress in passing the tax bill, the TV tax, which was supposed to go on Oct. 1, will not be effective until Nov. 1.

Steelworkers Accept Alcoa Offer; Push Union Shop Drive

THE CIO Steelworkers union last week accepted a 10% wage increase offered by the Aluminum Co. of America for its 20,000 members in nine plants, but warned the company that it will seek further raises.

The boost averages 14½c an hour.

In accepting the offer, USA Vice Pres. James G. Thimmes said that the increase was a step in the right direction, but it fell far short of meeting the actual needs of Alcoa workers.

"The amount and character of the increase just granted does not eliminate the inequities and differentials, which no longer can be justified," he said.

"There is no rhyme nor reason to the present inequities in the company's wage structure. Starting rates at the nine plants of the company now range from $1.04 in Arkansas to $1.31 in Detroit."

THE UNION notified Aloca it was reopening its agreement under the provisions of the contract, with negotiations to start not later than Nov. 1.

Thimmes said that the union, in addition to seeking wage increases, will also ask for additional paid holidays and other financial benefits.

After a 45-day strike in 1949, the Steelworkers won some adjustments of wage inequities from Alcoa in addition to $100-a-month non-contributory pensions.

On another front, the Steelworkers formally opened their campaign for union shop elections in basic steel.

Eleven companies, including Bethlehem and the biggest U. S. Steel subsidiary, Carnegie Illinois, were notified that the National Labor Relations Board had been petitioned to hold elections involving more than 250,000 workers.

The following Bethlehem plants were covered by the petition:

Chicago, Ill.; Sparrows Point, Md.; Bethlehem, Lebanon, Steelton, Williamsport, Leetsdale, Pottstown and Rankin, Pa.; Los Angeles, South San Francisco and Alameda, Cal., and Seattle, Wash.

Seventeen Carnegie Illinois plants employing 85,000 workers were covered by another petition.

In addition, NLRB elections have been asked at Republic Steel covering 47,000 workers; National Tube — 22,000 workers; Jones and Laughlin—25,000 workers; Crucible Steel—13,000 workers; Wheeling Steel—12,000 workers; Tennessee Coal & Iron—17,000 workers; Columbia Steel—5000 workers; and Pittsburgh Steel—9000 workers.

American Steel and Wire Co. petitions cover USA members at Cleveland, O.; Donora and Rankin, Pa.; Duluth, Minn.; Wooster, Mass.; Trenton, N. J.; Greensburg, Ind., and New Haven, Conn.

THE UNION has won about 200 union shop elections in the fabricating section of the industry, which converts basic steel into finished and semi-finished steel products. Until the present, no union shop elections have been held among the producers of raw steel.

The basic steel companies and the union now operate under a maintenance of membership clause. Under that agreement union status is "frozen" except for stated intervals between contracts.

Philip Murray, president of the CIO and the Steelworkers, has set the first of the year as the goal for winning a union shop throughout basic steel.

Similar petitions for other producers will be filed by the union in the near future.

Jones & Laughlin meanwhile became the first of the major steel producers to indicate a willingness to advance the opening date for a discussion of wage increases with the Steelworkers.

In a reply to Murray's request to move the opening date up to Oct. 9 from Nov. 1, Admiral Ben Morrell, J & L president, said the earlier date was acceptable to the company, providing the deadline for a strike (Dec. 31) remain the same.

Under the contract signed last fall, the union could ask for a reopening of wages Nov. 1 and strike the last day of the year.

The giant of the industry, U. S. Steel, told Murray that no decision could be made on earlier reopening of wage increases until the company's industrial relations director, James A. Stephens, returns from a west coast trip.

The amount of the wage increase to be sought by the Steelworkers has not yet been made public. The union's wage-policy committee is scheduled to meet in Atlantic City Oct. 4 to outline the wage proposals and other benefits to be sought.

Let Country Go To H - - -; Just Ask Bell

"Duty to the company takes precedence over duty to the country." That's what a spokesman for the Michigan Bell Phone System told the CIO Communications Workers in negotiations at Detroit when the proposal for time off for voting was discussed.

When union negotiators pointed out that Michigan Bell's approach was at variance with the rest of the Bell system, the company negotiators said "they're out of line."

When the union pointed out that under the state law a fact-finding board must intervene before a utility strike may be called, the company retorted that if the union invoked that procedure, the company would challenge constitutionality of the law and tie up the whole matter in the courts for at least a year.

Big FTA Local 'Agin' Merger

AT LEAST one local of the Food & Tobacco Workers wants no part of the commies. Local 80 Camden, N. J., has overwhelmingly defeated a proposal to merge with the Distributive Workers and the United Office & Professional Workers.

FTA and UOPWA were heaved out of the CIO for following the Communist party line. The Distributive Workers withdrew from the CIO.

Proposal for the merger was made by John Tisa, FTA president. Of the 6000 local members, most of whom work for the Campbell Soup Co., 3000 attended the meeting. Only a dozen backed Tisa's proposal.

The others staged a demonstration, carrying signs saying "There Is No Place For Communism In Our Union"; "DWU Is A Tool For The Communists"; "We Went To War—We Don't Want To Go To Jail"; "Let The Supporters Of Stalin Go To Moscow. LPA

Murray Endorses Boy's Club Plan

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has endorsed with "hearty approval" the program of the Boy's Club of America and has called upon all affiliates to help establish clubs in communities which do not already have them.

"The CIO is heartily in approval of the great work of this organization just as it is vitally interested in participating in and supporting all worthwhile community services," Murray said.

"We are especially interested in this undertaking however, because the benefits of Boy's Clubs are available to all boys, regardless of race, creed or color at a cost any boy can afford."

Call Issued For 12th CIO Convention

THE CALL TO the 12th National CIO convention, to be held the week of Nov. 20 in the Palmer House, Chicago, went out last week to all affiliated national and international unions, organizing committees, local industrial unions and industrial union councils.

Signing it were Pres. Philip Murray and Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey.

"We stand united in support of our government and our national determination to defend vigorously the principles that liberty and self-determination are the rightful heritage of all peoples, regardless of their race, color or creed," the call said.

"Mindful that as workers we constitute the first line of national defense against totalitarian communism and fascism, we are faithfully and successfully defeating the conspiracies of those who seek to subvert the American people to alien loyalties. Our resistance to totalitarian attack has made us stronger than ever.

"At the same time we reiterate our firm conviction that increased security of the American people in their liberties and freedom from exploitation under a truly democratic form of government, is the only certain guarantee against totalitarianism.

"We shall, therefore, continue to insist that the skills of our people and our great store of natural resources be fully utilized to provide full employment for workers at just wages, reasonable profits for investors, lower prices for consumers, and a steadily rising standard of living."

The basis of representation at the convention and the manner of election of delegates are set forth in Article VII of the CIO Constitution.

The first convention session will be held at 10 a.m. on opening day. The CIO Executive Board will begin a series of meetings at 10 a.m. on Nov. 15 in the Crystal Room of the convention hotel.

Ruml Says Companies Need Labor On Boards

Labor should be represented on corporation boards of directors, according to Beardsley Ruml, author of the "pay-as-you-go" income tax plan.

Ruml, former chairman of the board of R. H. Macy & Co., told a taxation forum of the American Bar Association that the board of directors today is "a vestigial and obsolete institution." He said there should be four paid trustee-directors, each as spokesman for one of four interests—employes, vendors, customers, and stockholders.

Can't Protect Liberty By Endangering It

Truman Acted Wisely — And With Courage — When He Vetoed Controversial And Dangerous 'Anti-Subversive' Measure

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IT TOOK considerable courage for President Truman to veto the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon-Wood "anti-subversive" bill after it had been passed by huge majorities in both houses of Congress

His veto message was delivered just six weeks before election day and at a time when our nation is locked in a bitter struggle with the Communists at which the bill was aimed.

He must have known in advance that his enemies will use his action as the basis of charges that he wants to give aid and comfort to the Reds.

And he must have known, too, that some Republican politicians will attempt to capitalize on his veto in their own election and re-election campaigns.

Yet he didn't hesitate. He informed the Congress and the people in no uncertain terms that he thought the measure an extremely bad one.

In doing so he revealed again his strong belief in civil liberties and he demonstrated he hasn't become a victim of the anti-Commie hysteria which is making many persons do strange things these days.

THE POSITION of the CIO, which has had considerable successful experience in fighting Communists, parallels that of the President on the "anti-subversive" measure.

Our opposition is based on the belief that the law will do more harm than good, that it won't protect the nation against sabotage and espionage and that it will drive the Commies underground.

The CIO feels strongly that the measure cuts sharply into civil liberties because it seeks to punish people because of what they think and not because of what they do.

There is no room in a democracy for "thought control." There is no room for punishment based solely on political beliefs.

And as a nation we must be extremely careful that in our fight against communism we do not destroy those things which make democracy desirable.

Judging by some of the antics on Capitol Hill and by some of the speeches made elsewhere, many persons seem to have the idea that our big battle is against Communists in the United States.

They seem to feel, too, that if we bat the Commies over the head on the home front they'll suffer considerably on the international front.

Nothing could be further from the truth.

Compared with Communist strength elsewhere, the U. S. Reds make up a weak and ineffective—though noisy and annoying—group. If they were all jailed tomorrow the event would make only a small dent in international communism.

This doesn't mean that our domestic Commies should be permitted to give aid unhampered to forces outside our country which are fighting us. Quite the contrary is true.

But the main part of our battle against the Moscow totalitarians must be fought outside our own borders.

And it is extremely important that we do not weaken democracy while we're fighting to preserve and expand it.

WE SHOULD never permit ourselves to forget that democracy rests on civil liberties and that without the latter we cannot have the former.

And we, as a people, should make a real effort to learn what makes communism tick. If we did, we'd realize that we must change some of our tactics—and change them quickly.

WE'D realize, first of all, that a really strong democracy is the best offense—as well as defense—against communism. And we'd admit that lip service to democratic ideals isn't nearly enough.

We'd know before long that it doesn't make sense to fight Reds with one hand and hand them ammunition with the other.

And we'd understand that such things as loans to Franco and Peron, racial segregation, restrictions on voting—and such things as the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon-Wood measure, too—make people in other lands skeptical about following our leadership.

Many people in many lands are dissatisfied with life as they're forced to live it. They are willing to try something new—but they want something better.

Our best chance of having them turn to our way is to convince them by both words and actions—that our way is best.

And we can't do this by endangering the very foundation stone of democracy—a stone we call liberty.

THE EIGHTY-FIRST

Back on January 3, 1949, this paper carried a front-page editorial entitled "A New Congress Convenes."

We remarked:

"The people knew what they were voting for on Nov. 2. They expect result—not excuses—from the new Congress. They expect the men and women for whom they voted to carry out campaign promises to the best of their ability.

"Liberal Democrats now have an excellent opportunity to make our economic and political systems function more efficiently—and for the benefit of more people—than in the past."

What the American people received from the 81st Congress was considerably less than was expected by a fair share of the voters who cast their ballots for Harry Truman and his Fair Deal ticket.

By and large, looking back at the record of the 81st, the trouble wasn't with the liberals. The trouble was there just weren't enough liberals in either the Senate or the House.

In the overwhelming number of cases, the men and women endorsed by CIO unions back home lived up to their campaign platforms and promises. The Fair Deal program wasn't sabotaged by its friends; it was blocked by its enemies among the southern Dixiecrats and the northern Republicans.

That conservative coalition defeated the Taft-Hartley repeal; it filibustered the civil rights program to a legislative death; it licked the middle-income housing program, and wrote serious weaknesses into the rent control law.

But the coalition couldn't beat the improved minimum wage, or the slum clearance bill, or badly needed improvements in social security. Nor was it able to cripple the foresighted foreign policy of the Administration, on issues like the Marshal Plan, Point Four, aid to Korea, or the Military Assistance Program.

The Korean incident, of course, changed the country's thinking; home front issues yielded precedence to problems of national security and economic mobilization. But the conservative coalition made it clear after June 25 that it wants a defense program based on "spare the rich" rather than on "equality of sacrifice."

SAME ISSUES STILL ARISE

In other works, that old, old issue of liberalism vs. conservatism is always with us—in time of peace and in time of war. The problems change, the bills take new form, but the conservatives in Congress stand fast by their philosophy that the common people don't count—that the common people should foot the bill—that the special interests should have a vested interest in the profits and privileges.

The issue of the people against the special interests, which dominated the 1948 election, is going to dominate the 1950 election as well.

But the way your Congressman and Senators acted in 1949 and 1950 is the clearest tip-off to the way they'll act in the crucial two years ahead. Study the records; see how they voted on home-front issues of the people against the interests, and judge for yourself how they're apt to vote in the future.

And when you go to the polls, remember that the future of Fair Deal policies on domestic issues and foreign policy is in the hands of each American citizen.

The Ford Foundation: A Study In Irony

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

THE MULTI-MILLION dollar Ford Foundation, originally set up in 1936 by "Flivver King" Henry Ford, will devote itself henceforth to "two great and related needs," the achievement of "lasting peace" and of "democratic strength, stability and vitality," Henry Ford II, chairman of the trustees and grandson of the founder, announced last week.

The assets of the Ford Foundation are estimated at close to $250 million, exceeding those of the Rockefeller Foundation by more than $90 million. The report states that the assets consist mainly of stocks, bonds, cash and real property contributed by Henry Ford and his son, Edsel Ford, during their lifetimes and by their wills; by Mrs. Clara J. Ford and by the Ford Motor Co.

Not mentioned, of course, is the contribution of the many hundreds of thousands of Ford workers throughout the years, out of whose toil and sweat the fund was built.

Reading the many laudable goals, outlined in the foundation's report, on which millions will be spent—for example, "the achievement of a greater degree of equality of economic opportunity for individuals"—it is sad to recall how much human misery could have been saved if some of these millions had been spent earlier to improve wages and working conditions for Ford workers.

AS IT was, Ford was the last major company in the auto industry to grant its workers the right to belong to a union. It took the bitter strike of 1941, marked by some of the worst violence ever perpetrated by company-hired thugs, to force Henry Ford I to recognize a union and sign a contract with the CIO Auto Workers, thus giving the workers "a greater degree of equality of economic opportunity."

Five main areas in which Ford Foundation money will be spent are outlined in the report: Promotion of world peace; activities designed to win greater adherence to basic principles of freedom and democracy; advancement of the economic well-being of people everywhere; improvement of education and promotion of greater equality of opportunity, and scientific improvements in the interests of individuals and society.

There is much in the report with which the CIO would agree heartily.

A section dealing with the need for the development of educational opportunities, for instance, observes that "the advantages of education are also walled off behind economic barriers . . . The poorer families, and those composed of members of our minority groups, are the ones most urgently requiring educational opportunity to improve their economic and cultural status.

"Yet they are the very ones against whom these educational barriers loom highest, and in consequence their cultural and economic inequalities tend automatically to be inherited."

The CIO would also agree with this:

"For education to depend so largely on individual economic status presents grave dangers to democracy. We thereby deny to millions of young people an equal chance to make the most of their native abilities; we also deprive society of a vast number of potential leaders and of citizens educated to assume their adult responsibilities—personal, civic and social."

And this: "Concerned with individual dignity and well-being, the Trustees are disturbed by the extent to which our society fails to achieve one basic democratic objective—the full development and use by each person of his inherent potentiality."

THE REPORT is full of many such worthy sentiments, but nowhere in it is there any mention of the most direct, effective and realistic method yet found to reach many of the injustices discussed—the organization of worker into strong, democratic unions devoted to the cause of obtaining a steady rise in their standard of living by obtaining increased wages and continual improvement of working conditions.

The subject of unions is never mentioned in the whole of the report, with the exception of a brief sentence in the introduction: "The viewpoint of labor was solicited."

Chemical Union Wins

A five-year contract covering 3400 employes of the Carborundum Co. at Niagara Falls, N. Y., has been signed by CIO Chemical Workers. A 5c pay boost is retroactive to July 19.

There are guaranteed annual pay boosts of 3c (adding up to a total 17c wage package for the life of the contract.) A cost-of-living escalator in the contract can move upwards, but cannot fall below the 1950 base,

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher
Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII October 2, 1950 No. 40

'Here's $5; Return What You Do Not Use'

BROTHER X can chuckle about it now, but there wasn't anything funny about it when it occurred 15 years ago.

He belonged to one of the "large" local unions established by a new organization in one of the nation's big industrial centers.

The local had only 13 members—and 15 were required to keep their charter. So, once a month the 13 held a meeting and contributed enough to pay dues for two non-existent members.

This didn't pose a real problem for the group—but a major problem arose when the new organization decided to hold its founding convention.

Here's how it arose and how it was solved:

THE LOCAL DECIDED that it should send a delegate to the convention and then it elected Brother X.

At this point a member rose to his feet and said, "We've elected Brother X as a delegate but I don't know how he's going to get down to South Bend for the meeting.

"He hasn't worked for some time because he's been blacklisted for union activities. He'll have to have some place to stay and some food to eat while he's gone—and he's broke.

"So I move that we turn over to Brother X the entire contents of our treasury."

The treasurer jumped to her feet and declared, "We can't afford to spend any of our money foolishly—so I offer an amendment that Brother X be instructed to return to the treasury any unexpended portion of the fund we give him."

The amendment was approved and then the motion was given an OK.

Then the treasurer dug into her purse, removed a $5 bill and handed it to Brother X!

WITH THE $5 BILL tucked away in his pocket, Brother X and four other delegates from the big industrial center headed for their national convention.

They went to a hotel and Brother X told the clerk, "We want the widest double bed you've got in the house."

The clerk said all double beds in the hotel were the same size.

Brother X said his group had no real interest in the size of the room they were given but they wanted the largest possible bed.

The clerk repeated that the beds were all the same size.

The five persons registered — and all headed for the same room.

It took a bit of figuring on their part but they finally worked out a sleeping arrangement.

Three of the men slept on the mattress on the bed and the other two slept—or tried to sleep—on the box springs, which were placed on the floor.

BROTHER X AND other delegates tackled the job of setting up a national union—a union which later affiliated with the CIO after the latter was established.

Brother X, so the story goes, slept uncomfortably and didn't eat too well—but he felt the trip and the experience well worthwhile.

He plunged head over heels into union work when he got back home and before long his name was being mentioned frequently in local union circles.

Then, as time passed, Brother X expanded his field of activities, established a wide reputation as a speaker and battler for his fellow workmen.

He told this story about himself recently at the Rubber Workers convention at Cincinnati—but he wasn't introduced to delegates as Brother X.

He was introduced as Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers. A.L.S.

—But Where's The Rest Of The Platform?

Bosses Better Learn Workers Are 'Human Beings'

THE PHILOSOPHY of management personnel practices is carefully and dispassionately taken apart in the current issue of the Harvard Business Review by Sol Barkin, research director of the CIO Textile Workers, who thereupon tells why it doesn't tick.

Basically, Barkin says, management has a personnel program as a means of boosting efficiency and profits, and is geared toward individual bargaining. Traditionally, it has visualized the worker as an economic unit. But he happens to be a human being, Barkin adds, and he "cannot be molded into a model of the 'economic man'," nor can he "perhaps be persuaded to acknowledge the propriety of management's efforts to make him one."

Barkin's scalpel job apparently threw the editors of the Harvard Business Review off their stride. At any rate, they attached a foreword to his article piously proclaiming that "whether or not we agree with Mr. Barkin's interpretation, we feel that all businessmen may gain in having a clearer understanding of the thinking of this well-known union leader."

BECAUSE OF THE increasing influence of labor unions, management needs an entire new philosophy of personnel administration, Barkin claims.

"The rise of unions," he writes, "has actually changed the psychological characteristics of the organized worker.

"He is no longer the helpless and unoriented person depicted by the Harvard researchers. He is likely to have faith in the future, to expect a constant improvement in his lot. Not only does the union put his desires within reach, but it raises his sights toward still greater goals.

"Inevitably, these changes not only affect the worker as an economic organism but as a person as well. His release from many tensions, his assurance of status, his new confidence—all tend to make him better adjusted to the world about him.

"This is understandable if the day-to-day workings of a trade union are considered. The union's primary objective is to dispel the dissatisfaction of workers. Grievance machinery offers a formal and secure method of presenting complaints which, if necessary, will be formulated for greater effectiveness by more articulate union members.

"A well-run grievance system uncovers undesirable conditions in the plant and assures genuine solutions. The very opportunity to air a complaint may relieve tension in some cases.

"Thus the union achieves the goals sought by management's former counselling and interviewing service, and often, in fact, strengthens the effectiveness of this substitution by establishing its own counselling services to improve workers' use of community facilities and the union's own mechanism."

THE SUCCESS OF unions, plus the changes they have made in workers, has led "to a constant broadening of the scope of collective bargaining," Barkin claims, thus steadily shrinking the opportunities for unilateral decisions by management.

The rise of unions has multiplied personnel managers' efforts to set up competing groups intended to wean away the workers' loyalty, "but unions cannot be circumvented." When the respective obligations of both parties to a contract are set down in black and white, management-sponsored groups just cannot develop "plant loyalty," Barkin claims.

So employers are being either forced or induced to use the union to reach the workers, he adds.

"The union functions, wholly independently of the employer, in the community, the state, and the nation," says Barkin. "It evolves policies at each level, and at each level it meets the employer as either an ally or an enemy.

"Thus, if an employer is leading a National Association of Manufacturers drive for anti-labor legislation, the union in his plant is likely to regard him less sympathetically than if he were publicly endorsing a higher federal minimum wage—and he will not be able to change matters much by playing shortstop on the company baseball team.

"Most fundamentally, unions have challenged management's concept that a worker can find a satisfactory way of life by accepting the employer's logics, identifying himself with the company, and in general permitting himself to be absorbed into the business ethic.

"Union leaders simply do not believe this is either desirable or possible. The profitability and efficiency of the enterprise cannot be the workers' primary concern; what is 'good for the boss' is not necessarily the best for them.

"By overlooking this fundamental point, management is making a wasteful and perhaps dangerous mistake. A personnel policy built on the same error cannot long endure in an economy in which trade unionism is constantly growing in scope, strength and maturity."

WHAT IS REALLY needed, says Barkin, is a "more realistic philosophy," with a new basic premise—"that the enterprise must seek to achieve the goals of both management and the trade union."

"As long as we have a private-enterprise economy," he adds, "those ends must be satisfied through the same mechanism. And if our economic system is to survive in an era of strong trade unions, neither union nor management can operate exclusively of the other."

Rich Get Richer, Poor Poorer Under Tax Law

By STANLEY RUTTENBERG
CIO Director of Education and Research

CONGRESS has enacted a tax law which raises your income tax 20%—if you earn less than $5000 a year. Over the $5000-mark the more you earn, the less is the percentage increase in your tax.

Beginning this week—Oct. 1, to be exact—the increased tax will be withheld from your pay. The withholding tax rate has been boosted from 15% up to 18%—an increase of 20%.

If you have been paying $5 in taxes, you will be paying $6; if $10 was deducted, your next deduction will be $12, and if you have been accustomed to an involuntary pay cut of $20, get used to having it upped to $24, etc.

A married man with two children earning between $3000 and $5000 a year will find his tax increased by 20½%. Another man with the same number of dependents earning $25,000 annually will pay an additional 14½% in taxes, and a man with a similar-sized family earning $1 million a year will have to pay only 11½% more taxes.

ALTHOUGH passed under the pretext of equality of sacrifice, the tax bill places a greater degree of sacrifice upon the working people. There is no question but that we should all pay our fair share of the cost of defense and military appropriations. Certainly we should pay for as much of the cost of the war as possible. Everyone should share sacrifices alike.

The new law increases the tax upon corporations from 38% to 45% for the year 1951, an increase of about 18%.

Corporations will have their rate increased to only 42% for the year 1950. In 1951, corporations will pay, according to present estimates, an increase of $1½ billion dollars in taxes to the federal government.

THERE WAS a very small group of senators and congressmen who were for immediate enactment of an excess profits tax. Both the Senate and the House, however, declined to enact such a tax at the time that they were increasing the tax upon low-income individuals by 20½%.

The only concession the small group was able to secure was that an excess profits tax would be enacted either later this year or early next year. It would be retroactive to either Oct. 1 or July 1, 1950.

It seems exceedingly unfair that taxes on incomes of workers should be increased while the tax on excess profits of corporations is postponed.

The CIO will continue to press for enactment of an adequate and substantial excess profits tax when Congress reconvenes.

BIG BUSINESS' tax concession boys were not content with having an excess profits tax postponed or even with having the tax upon individuals increased to a greater extent upon those with incomes of less than $5000 than upon those with incomes greater than that amount.

One loophole after another was increased in size so that high-income individuals were able to have their taxes reduced. Some of our liberal friends were successful in having one or two of these loopholes removed from the final tax bill.

One wide loophole is known as "employe stock options." This sounds like a complicated concept, but it really is a very simple one:

MANY corporations give their top executives the right to buy stocks in the corporation at a price below the open market quotation.

In the past, this difference between the market price of the stock at $100 and an option to buy at $50 was taxed at the normal individual income tax rates.

However, the new bill permits this profit to be taxed at the so-called "capital gains" tax rate of 25%.

For example, if a corporation wants to give one of its $30,000 a year executives a $20,000 cash bonus, such a cash bonus would be subject to the normal individual income tax rates. That tax would amount to $12,000. If the corporation wants to take advantage of the stock options under this new tax bill and give to the executive the equivalent of the $20,000 cash bonus in a stock option, the executive would save $7000 in taxes.

Wage earners will not benefit at all from this option clause.

In order to benefit one's income before exemptions must be in excess of $15,000.

ANOTHER loophole cuts payment of estate taxes. The heirs of an individual who at death left an estate 50% of whose value was invested in a corporation or a company are permitted to sell stocks in the corporation without paying income taxes provided the money is used to pay the estate tax.

This was originally, of course, designed to benefit individuals whose entire investments were tied up in their own corporations. In one of the earlier versions of the bill, at least 70% of the estate must have been invested in the corporation.

THE TAX act also gives concessions to life insurance companies. Under a peculiar provision of the previous tax law, life insurance companies have not paid any tax upon their incomes from investments since 1947.

Officials of life insurance companies testified before Congress that they have set aside reserves to pay taxes upon income since 1947 in anticipation of Congress' requiring them to do so.

The House made a tax upon life insurance companies retroactive only to 1949. This latter is the version which finally was accepted by both houses of Congress. This means that between $55 and $60 million in taxes upon life insurance companies will not be forthcoming to the federal treasury.

This tax bill provides for a five-year amortization of emergency facilities. This is a provision which permits corporations to build new plants and install new equipment, and pay for such construction and installation out of profits before they pay taxes to the federal government.

It is normal practice for corporations to pay off the cost of new plants and equipment over a 20-year period. However, this bill permits them to do it over a five-year period, thus in effect permitting them to use the exorbitant profits earned during the war period to build new plant and equipment.

A similar type of provision existed during World War II. As a matter of fact, back in 1941, American corporations were on a sit-down strike, sitting down refusing to build new plant and equipment until the Congress permitted them to write off these new facilities in a five-year period.

A SPECIAL committee investigating the National Defense Program during the 80th Congress, headed by Senator Brewster (R. Me.), said of the five-year amortization provision:

"Legal profiteering resulted from certificates of necessity. (This is the same as five-year amortization.) Many companies came out of the war with new, valuable, fully amortized facilities which they could either use or, as some have done, sell. In this way, a facility actually paid for out of a contractor's war taxes was additional war profit to him to the extent of its postwar value.

". . . Many administrators of the Renegotiation Act think that the largest unjustifiable war profits were made as a result of the certificate-of-necessity program."

Congress left some other big tax loopholes on our statute books. It was proposed that a withholding tax be applied to dividends distributed by corporations. This proposal was made because approximately $1 billion in dividend distribution are not reported on individual income tax forms. As a result, approximately $175 million is lost in revenue to the government.

The House included this provision in its version of the bill, but the Senate took it out. The bill as finally passed did not place a withholding tax upon dividends.

Another big loophole provides that married couples may split income between themselves, a provision which gives larger tax relief to individuals with incomes of over $10,000. A person earning $10,000 saves over 15% of his total tax bill if he divides his income with his wife. An individual earning $50,000 saves over 25% of his tax. An individual earning $4000 saves nothing.

The current tax bill is an effort to reestablish tax rates that existed in 1945. Persons with incomes of less than $5000 will pay approximately the same tax as they did in 1945, but those with income above $5000 will pay less as a result of the split income provision. This means that not only do the high-income individuals benefit from a smaller increase in taxes under this law but they further benefit by the fact that the split income provision adopted in 1948 over CIO's protest still remains as law.

It must be remembered that every dollar in taxes not collected or every loophole that permits tax evasion requires that taxes be raised on some other segment of our economy.

THIS DIAGRAM shows the inequities of the tax law. In all three categories the taxpayer has three dependents.

Law Dean Says Tax Favors Oil Firms

The tax bill concocted by Congress is full of "gross, almost crude inequities." The bill favors "oil interests and everything that smells of oil."

That's the opinion of Erwin N. Griswold, dean of the Harvard Law School. He hit at the tax lawyers in a speech before the tax section of the American Bar Association convention at Washington, asking why the members were silent at the time the legislation was being debated.

"Where was the voice of the tax section on that matter?" he asked. "The tax section ought to be quick to act in the public interest. John Q. Taxpayer needs our help, too."

Heavier Taxes Are Predicted By 2 Cabinet Members, Others

FORECASTS of much heavier taxes came from many quarters this week, despite the good news from Korea.

In New York, Secy. of the Treasury John Snyder, attending the bankers' convention, said the average American "has no notion" of the heavy tax burden the defense program will entail. He pointed out that $30 billions already has been appropriated for defense in this fiscal year, and the total will be boosted "materially." He said there is general agreement that defense spending must be paid for out of current revenue.

A. L. M. Wiggins, a past president of the American Bankers' Association, told the bankers it is possible to operate on a pay-as-you-go basis and the additional tax burden will not be too great provided there is an "equitable distribution of the load." He did not specify.

Dr. Marcus Nadler, professor of finance at New York Univ., told the bankers "it is unrealistic to assume that we are headed for socialism" and that military preparedness can be attained without too great a dislocation of the civilian economy "and without serious inflation" if the defense program is financed pay-as-you-go as far as possible.

At Lake Placid, N. Y., Roy Blough, a member of President Truman's Council of Economic Advisers, hinted that special excise taxes may be in the wind. He said that may be one way to halt inflation and put the defense program on a pay-as-you-go basis.

Blough suggested total new taxes high enough to meet the full cost of rearmament. Borrowing, he said, through sale of government bonds and other methods, only puts off payment until later. He also called for excess profits taxes.

In Chicago, Commerce Secy. Charles Sawyer said "we can look forward to heavy and continued tax burdens—all of us." Serious shortages, heavy taxes and problems of inflation, he said, will face the country for years to come.

He warned businessmen against the "folly" of boosting prices, and urged labor not to make demands for pay hikes.

Receivership Suit Filed Against MCS

Charging that officials of the Marine Cooks and Stewards have violated their oaths of office and have juggled the finances, an ex-union member has asked the California Superior Court to put MCS's assets, about $500,000, in receivership.

William J. McCourt, 75-year-old charter member, filed the suit, charging that MCS Pres. Hugh Bryson and Secy-Treas. Eddie Tangen had broken their pledges and had "dissipated or improperly handled" about $100,000 of union funds since last October. He also asserted the union was functioning under an illegal constitution. The MCS was recently ousted from the CIO for being Communist-dominated.

Congress Spurns Veto Of 'Anti-Subversive' Bill To Hurry Home

THE McCarran-Mundt-Nixon-Wood "anti-subversive" bill, which a lot of people regard as the biggest gift the communists have received in many years, is now a law of the United States.

It was passed over President Truman's veto by members of Congress with their eyes on adjournment. They paid practically no attention to one of the strongest veto messages ever transmitted by a President of the United States, a 5500-word note soberly analyzing the measure and pointing out in detail the evils inherent in it, the ease with which Communists can evade it and how innocent political dissenters can become enmeshed in it, and its tragic failure to answer a crying need for the protection of democratic institutions against totalitarian fifth columnists, spies and saboteurs.

The House passed the bill by a 286 to 48 vote, scarcely waiting for the reading clerk to finish his droning way through the veto message—which, incidentally, was widely praised in newspaper editorials as a thought-provoking document which should have received mature consideration on Capitol Hill.

THE END came after a 22-hour attempt by 11 Senators to dramatize the issues by marathon speeches that kept the Senate in session the entire night of Sept. 22. At 5 a.m. on Sept. 23, Sen. Langer (N. D.), the only Republican in the little bloc, collapsed after five hours of speaking.

The protest — which sponsors admitted had little chance of success—was carried on only because Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.), its leader, saw Langer swaying on his feet and asked him if he wished to yield. Langer whispered an affirmative as he slumped to the floor. He was later taken to Bethesda (Md.) Naval Hospital, where his condition was diagnosed as exhaustion.

At 2 p.m. Humphrey closed the debate for those who had fought through a night and a day to uphold the President's veto.

Proponents of the bill led by Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.), one of the co-sponsors, then talked in its favor for nearly two hours, seeking to answer the President's objections.

The vote was 57 to 10. Voting to sustain the President were only the half-score left after Langer's collapse — Sens. Humphrey, Chavez (N. M.), Douglas (Ill.), Graham (N. C.), Green (R. I.), Leahy (R. I.), Kefauver (Tenn.), Kilgore (W. Va.), Lehman (N. Y.) and Murray (Mont.). All are Democrats.

Then the Senate recessed, as the House had done a couple of hours earlier, so everybody could go home and mend political fences.

CIO Pres. Philip Murray had asked President Truman to veto the bill because of its "doubtful efficacy" against Communism, its possibility of misuse for "repression of honest and non-Communist political dissent" which "could well be used to hamper legitimate trade union activity," and its "dubious constitutionality."

In his veto message President Truman listed seven "principal objections" to the measure. These were:

1 "It would aid potential enemies by requiring the publication of a complete list of vital defense plants, laboratories and other installations.

2 "It would require the Department of Justice and its Federal Bureau of Investigation to waste immense amounts of time and energy attempting to carry out its unworkable provisions.

3 "It would deprive us of the great assistance of many aliens in intelligence matters.

4 "It would antagonize friendly governments.

5 "It would put the government of the United States in the thought control business.

6 "It would make it easier for subversive aliens to become naturalized as United States citizens.

7 "It would give government officials vast powers to harass all of our citizens in the exercise of their right of free speech."

The President also gave Congress specific details about his objections.

"One provision alone of this bill is enough to demonstrate how far it misses the real target," he wrote.

"Section 5 would require the secretary of defense to 'proclaim' and 'have published in The Federal Register' a public catalogue of defense plants, laboratories and all other facilities vital to our national defense—no matter how secret.

"I cannot imagine any document a hostile foreign government would desire more. Spies and saboteurs would willingly spend years of effort seeking to find out the information that this bill would require the government to hand them on a silver platter.

"There are many provisions of this bill which require me to return it without my approval, but this one would be enough by itself. It is inconceivable to me that a majority of the Congress could expect the commander-in-chief of the armed forces of the United States to approve such a flagrant violation of proper security safeguards."

This particular section was injected into the bill to provide a handy list of places where Communists and their sympathizers are not allowed to work.

ONE FEATURE of the act requires all Communists and members of "front" organizations to register within the next 30 days. The Communist Party has announced that its members will defy the law and refuse to register. This stand probably will keep the act in the courts for years, even though failure to comply is punishable under the act by up to five years in prison and a maximum fine of $10,000.

The Dept. of Justice will have to enlarge its staff considerably to handle registrations and probably will not even be able to hire enough people to handle the job within the 30-day limit.

President Truman commented bluntly on these parts, too.

"Sections 1 through 17 are designed for two purposes," he wrote.

"First, they are intended to force Communist organizations to register and to divulge certain information about themselves—information on their officers, their finances, and in some cases their membership.

"These provisions in practice would be ineffective, and would result in obtaining no information about Communists that the FBI and our other security agencies do not already have. But in trying to enforce these sections, we would have to spend a great deal of time, effort and money—all to no good purpose.

"Second, these provisions are intended to impose various penalties on Communists and others covered by the terms of the bill. So far as Communists are concerned, all these penalties which can be practicably enforced are already in effect under existing laws and procedures.

"But the language of the bill is so broad and vague that it might well result in penalizing the legitimate activities of people who are not Communists at all, but loyal citizens.

"Thus the net result of these sections of the bill would be: No serious damage to the Communists, much damage to the rest of us. Only the Communists would gain from such an outcome."

The registration program, he said, is "about as practical" as a law requiring thieves to register with the sheriff.

THE PRESIDENT said he wrote the veto message after conference with governmental security and intelligence agencies. The Justice, Defense and State Depts. and the Central Intelligence Agency, he said, "have all advised me that the bill would seriously damage the security and intelligence operations for which they are responsible."

"In actual operation," he wrote, "the bill would have results exactly the opposite of those intended."

In addition to requiring the registration of Communists, Communist organizations and Communist-front groups and calling for a listing of defense facilities, the bill:

1. Authorizes in time of war, insurrection or invasion the internment of those deemed to be potential spies or saboteurs.
2. Prohibits Communists from holding federal jobs or working for defense plants or laboratories, and on transportation facilities.
3. Provides stiffer punishment for spies and saboteurs and extends from three to 10 years the time in which prosecution can be initiated on espionage charges.
4. Deprives the government of power to grant asylum to foreign diplomats who repudiate Communism and restricts the admission of all diplomats.
5. Excludes from the United States anyone who supports a one-party form of government.
6. Bars citizenship to aliens listed as members of organizations of which registration is required, but makes them eligible promptly upon withdrawal.

They Voted To Uphold President

Sen. Lehman (D. N.Y.)

Sen. Murray (D. Mont.)

Sen. Graham (D. N.C.)

Sen. Green (D. R.I.)

Sen. Kilgore (D. W. Va.)

Sen. Kefauver (D. Tenn.)

Sen. Leahy (D. R.I.)

Sen. Chavez (D. N.M.)

Sen. Douglas (D. Ill.)

Brophy Gets ICFTU Post In N. Y. City

JOHN BROPHY, CIO Councils director, has been appointed to the New York office of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, through which the ICFTU maintains its representation at the United Nations.

Brophy has received a leave of absence from the CIO in order to accept the assignment from the ICFTU.

In 1949, Brophy was a member of the CIO delegation to the preliminary conference at Geneva, Switzerland, at which plans for creation of the ICFTU were first discussed by representatives of trade union groups in some 40 nations.

JOHN BROPHY
Gets ICFTU Post

DURING THE past summer Brophy was CIO representative on an ICFTU delegation to Asia that spent two months discussing organizational and economic problems with leaders of free trade unions in every non-Communist nation on that continent.

The ICFTU has been granted a "Category A" consultative status by the United Nations Economic and Social Council.

"Category A" consultants are entitled to participate in meetings of the Economic and Social Council, to suggest items for the council's agenda, and to attend meetings of the council's nine commissions.

On previous occasions, the ICFTU has indicated that it intends "to come forward with positive proposals relating to economic and social conditions in various parts of the world."

THE ICFTU also contemplates using its New York office for liaison work with trade unions throughout North America.

Brophy was born in England in 1883 and came to this country as a boy. He joined the United Mine Workers of America in 1899, and held a number of positions in that organization. He has been connected with the CIO since its creation in the autumn of 1935.

During World War II, he was a member of the War Labor Board and of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices. His home is in Washington, D. C.

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

Furniture Workers' Campaign Has Gusto Of Early CIO Days

THE 20,000 or more underpaid, unorganized and overworked furniture workers in the Hickory-Newton-Lenoir area of North Carolina are hearing about the CIO in a big way these days—and they're going to hear more about it until the 35 or 40 plants in the section are organized.

The district is the scene of a major drive by the CIO Organizing Committee. The campaign has all the gusto and color of the big CIO drives of the middle 1930s. It has met with relatively little police interference, and management attempts at intimidation of organizers have ended thus far in rather dismal failure, thanks to the workers' militancy.

CIO sound trucks are in almost constant use, the employers never knowing at what plant gate a noon-day rally will be held. The workers who hear the speeches of Franz Daniel, state director of the Organizing Committee, Area Director Neil Hickey and other staff representatives, listen with interest, because the CIO has a definite program for them.

The program includes an immediate wage increase of not less than 25c an hour and a minimum hiring rate of not less than $1 an hour. And the speakers tell them that they are being paid 75c to $1 an hour less than their counterparts working in northern and western centers of the industry.

THE COMMUNITIES are being let in on the campaign, too. Recently about 40 furniture workers went through the business and residential areas of Hickory and Lenoir, distributing 12,000 leaflets telling of the union's aims.

The literature told of the CIO's program, the 25c increase and $1 starting rate minimums, explained that furniture workers in other parts of the country are paid far higher, pointed out that the cost of living has jumped and is going higher, and disclosed that the industry's profits are higher than they have ever been in history, with plants booked at capacity well into 1951 at ever increasing prices.

Petitions for National Labor Relations Board representation elections have been filed for the Southern Desk Manufacturing Co., with about 450 employes, and the Hylan Furniture Co., with about 200 workers.

The Hylan plant, at Hickory, was the scene of one unsuccessful management attempt to scare the organizers and their sound truck away from a noon-day rally. Supervisors tried to force them to leave, but the organizers' decision to stay was enforced by the workers.

At the Broyhill plant in Newton supervisors threatened to call police if organizers didn't stop distributing leaflets at the gate. But the CIO men, aware of their legal rights, calmly told the straw bosses to go ahead and "call the law" if they wished. The leaflets were distributed without interruption.

AT ANOTHER plant a boss—aptly named Lewis Boss—led five strongarm men out of the gate to chase away CIO organizers who were distributing literature. Boss took a punch at CIO Rep. Hamilton Martin, who ably defended himself against the unwarranted attack. Plant workers saw to it that nobody interfered while Martin completed his self-defense. After things calmed down the leaflets were distributed without further interference—and were eagerly accepted.

A mass rally of all workers in the area is scheduled for Hickory on Oct. 8. National Director John V. Riffe, of the CIO Organizing Committee, will be the principal speaker.

Brophy Grateful For Aid While Council's Dire

JOHN BROPHY, taking leave from his CIO post as director of industrial union councils in order to serve on the staff of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at the United Nations, issued this statement:

"It is 10 years since Philip Murray assigned me the task of heading a department to coordinate and direct the work of our CIO councils on the basis of the CIO program and policies.

"Since that time this work has gone forward and despite a few lapses here and there the council structure has become a great organizational, political and educational force in the cities and states of the nation.

"Our councils have done much to aid in our overall legislative program. They have served our national unions in times of stress. Their work stands justified by the test of service in behalf of our people and true trade unionism.

"DURING THE decade I served as national director of the council department, I had the cooperative assistance of both local and state councils and other departments of CIO. The success achieved has been due not only to the teamwork, but also in large measure to the valuable and untiring efforts of my assistant, Anthony W. Smith, who has worked with me during this entire period.

"I am taking this means of expressing my deep appreciation to all those who in the past have shown me good will and cooperation in my work. I have tried to respond in kind.

"With the approval of the CIO and with a leave of absence granted by Pres. Murray, I have accepted an appointment as a United Nations Consultant for the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions. As a representative of the ICFTU, I shall continue to serve labor in a field that is requiring more and more attention from trade unions—that of international affairs.

"I hope to have from friends their continued support in this new endeavor."

THOUSANDS OF PIECES of CIO and PAC literature were distributed at the booth (shown above) of the Kentucky CIO Council and PAC at the State Fair at Louisville. This was the third year the booth has been maintained at the fair.

4 UTSE Locals 100% For PAC

Four locals of the CIO United Transport Service Employees have notified international headquarters in Chicago that every member has "thrown his buck into the kitty" for the CIO Political Action Committee, Secy.-Treas. Eugene E. Frazier reported last week.

The outstanding records were established by Local 605, Harrisburg, Pa.; Local 810, Miami, Fla.; Local 509, Toledo, O., and Local 907, Sacramento, Cal.

ICFTU Plans Union School, 'Info' Center

THE INTL. Confederation of Free Trade Unions will go ahead with its plan to open an information center in Singapore and establish two residential trade union schools for the training of Asiatic labor leaders, the ICFTU emergency committee announced recently at Brussels, Belgium.

The emergency committee said the two colleges will be set up as soon as possible and the Singapore Bureau will have branches elsewhere. In addition, the ICFTU will call an Asiatic trade union conference at Karachi next May, the committee revealed.

The emergency committee also decided in favor of immediate participation in the work of the U. S. Economic Commission for Asia to promote large-scale assistance for Asiatic peoples.

In addition to the Karachi conference for Asiatic labor, the committee said there will be a European conference in Brussels in November and an inter-American conference in Mexico City in January.

Decisions regarding Asia were made after a five-man ICFTU mission to the Far East returned recently. John Brophy of the CIO and Gordon Chapman of the AFL were members of the mission.

Discrimination Loses Fight To Perseverance

Remember the old copybook tip that "If at first you don't suceed, try, try again?"

Well, it still works.

The lastest confirmation of the rumor that its advice is sound was chalked up by the Fair Practices Committee of CIO Auto Workers Local 76, at the Fisher Body plant in East Oakland, Cal.

For eight months the committee tried to show management that it was cutting its own throat by not hiring Negroes. At meeting after meeting, Morris Rogers, committee chairman, and Robert Hannah, former president of the local, pounded away at management's Jim Crow philosophy.

Finally, the "iron curtain" around the plant fell, and company spokesmen agreed to hire Negroes who have the "right qualifications."

But the committee didn't let it go at that. It got management to put down its idea of the "right qualifications" in black and white.

Then it went out and rounded up about 15 Negroes who had them.

P. S.—They got the jobs.

Civil Liberties Union Ready To Test Parts Of 'Anti-Subversive' Measure

The American Civil Liberties Union stands in "readiness to aid in court tests of those provisions of the (McCarran-Mundt-Nixon-Wood) act which we regard as unconstitutional," the board of directors announced last week.

"As uncompromising opponents of Communist tyranny and all other forms of totalitarianism," the board said, "we deplore most of the provisions of the act. They endanger the constitutional rights of all American citizens, and weaken instead of strengthen our national security against subversive acts. They embarrass our democracy in its worldwide struggle for the minds of men by making us appear hypocritical rather than sincere in our professed devotion to civil liberties.

"We call on all Americans to re-examine carefully the wisdom of the various provisions of the act. We also call on all Americans not to let the passage of this act cause a general cancellation of free speech and other civil liberties—either by fear of exercising one's own rights, or by suppression of the rights of others."

Senate Unit Told How:

Cities Service Hired Spies To Thwart Sea Union

COMPANY efforts to cover up a labor spy racket along the east coast waterfront were blasted wide open Sept. 26 by the Senate subcommittee on labor-management relations.

Witnesses subpoenaed by the group confirmed union charges that they were shadowing union men and "fingering" union sympathizers on ships. They told how they were hired to sail oil tankers of the Cities Service Co., hang around saloons, hiring halls, and union headquarters, and report on the men working aboard the ships.

Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), chairman of the Senate group, said that pressure was put on him to call off the tanker hearings on grounds that a contract has been signed with the Seafarers Intl. Union-AFL. The SIU contract was signed by Cities Service less than two days before the hearing was scheduled to open. The union has been trying to get a contract for more than three years.

LAST YEAR, THE company paid $150,000 damages to seamen they had fired for union activities, rather than go through with a National Labor Relations Board hearing that would expose their activities.

Bruno J. Augenti, Ceasar L. Scotti, and John Dugan told the subcommittee of their activities shadowing union leaders. Albert F. Strasburger, attorney for the firm's company union, told how he worked for both the union and the company. David Furman, president of the company union, told how Cities Service officials agreed to finance the group as a front to fight SIU.

William Potter Lage, company attorney, failed to appear at the hearings, after the subcommittee was unsuccessful in an effort to serve him with a subpoena. Senator Murray said the group may ask that Lage be cited for contempt of Congress.

SIU SECY.-TREAS. Paul Hall told about the union's experiences with Cities Service.

Under the Taft-Hartley Act, the main tactic of the company was "stall, stall, stall," the union official said. Asked by Senator Murray whether he thought the law intended to make such tactics possible, Hall answered, "Whoever wrote that thing must have had some idea of gumming up the works."

The company's stalling tactics within the law, however, "were as tame as a May Pole dance," Hall said, compared with what went on outside the law. "The desperate measures employed on the waterfront, on the ships and in the back rooms of lawyers' offices to circumvent and destroy the union drive are an almost unbelievable story in themselves," he declared.

Hall told about a network of spies that shadowed union leaders and tapped their phone wires. The spies sailed Cities Service ships and put the finger on anyone they found expressing a pro-union sentiment.

In more than 150 cases, the NLRB found the company guilty of firing men for union activity, he reported, adding that the NLRB cases don't tell the whole story: "In the years during the SIU drive, the approximately 500 unlicensed jobs in the Cities Service fleet were held by 5000 men." The company lawyers, Hall said, "even had the spies checking on each other."

SEVERAL OF the men hired as spies were men who had worked the waterfront for the Coast Guard and Naval Intelligence during the war.

"One of the most alarming features of the spy ring setup," Hall said, "is the propaganda value to the Communists resulting from the fact that ex-Coast Guard officers in charge of seamen screening in World War II used their associations and connections with the Coast Guard to lower the boom on loyal American seamen seeking genuine trade union representation."

There's nothing on the waterfront the Commies like better, he warned. "Marine transportation is a field in which they're interested."

Hall told how the SIU's case on the Cities Service fleet dragged through the NLRB for years, with the company time and again making petty complaints in order to hold up union certification.

"The Taft-Hartley law," he told Murray, "allows people like them (the union attorney) to hang their hats on a lot of little bitty points giving them six to 12 months extra." He told of an instance where a long delay was made possible by the law's provision barring supervisory employes from the union.

ANOTHER example, Hall said, was the requirement that the union file a financial report, when the employer doesn't have to. "What about all the money they spend to beat our brains out?" he asked. "Why don't they have to file about that?"

When the company's stalling tactics began to run out, it then formed a company union, Hall charged. Leader of the union was a John Collins, he said, who also headed up similar company unions for Esso, Socony, Texas and other tanker fleets. The union leader also charged collusion between the big tanker companies on hiring practices. He urged that responsible federal agencies investigate the situation.

At one point, when the SIU organizing campaign was hot, Hall said, "The company became so hysterical about the possibility of men with union sympathies flooding its New York hiring offices that it ceased hiring men through its offices and procured all of its seamen from the notorious Paddy Keane, a 'crimp' who operated out of Bayonne gin mills."

A "crimp" is a person who shanghais sailors.

HALL SAID before that time, Esso did some hiring for Cities Service, using "company finger men" to keep pro-union men out.

The union hiring hall, at present outlawed by the Taft-Hartley Act, could help this situation, Hall claimed.

"If the hiring hall clause were incorporated into any contract we sign with the company another segment of the industry would become stabilized and the unsavory practice of paying for jobs through crimps and shipping masters would be ended," Hall said.

"Too, we feel that the union, through the hiring hall, can act as a responsible organization, both in the matter of discipline among seamen and national security."

Still another Taft-Hartley complication described by Hall was the use of the "one-man company union" to break up SIU on the ships. "Evidently the company believes,'" he said, "that under protection of the Taft-Hartley law, it can draw on its previous experience in dealing with the SIU and in rigging and operating the company union, and begin another protracted onslaught against SIU members in the fleet.

"It will be the same old merry-go-around with the company ignoring the legal machinery, just as they have since our first certification three years ago.

"All of this maneuvering will be protected by the present wording of the Taft-Hartley law. The vicious campaign to hamstring the union and frustrate the wishes of the men on the ships will be given the green light and the company will be protected by the Taft-Hartley law." LPA

PAST AND PRESENT presidents of CIO United Rubber Workers chat at 12th annual convention in Cincinnati with Allan S. Haywood (center), CIO vice president and director of organization. At left is S. H. Dalrymple, who was president of the union for its first 10 years, and at right is his successor, L. S. Buckmaster. In his speech to the convention Haywood praised Dalrymple, now on the CIO staff, as "one of the statesmen of the CIO."

Board Backing Buckmaster Elected By Rubber Union

THE CONVENTION of the CIO Rubber Workers in Cincinnati, O., ended with the re-election of Vice Pres. Joseph W. Childs and Secy-Treas. Desmond Walker, and selection of a general executive board which supports the policies of Pres. L. S. Buckmaster. Buckmaster had been re-elected earlier.

Three new board members chosen were Fred F. Winrich, Local 19, Eau Claire, Wis.; Alvin M. Phillis, Local 307, Topeka, Kan., and Gerald J. Fitzpatrick, Local 184, Gloucester, N. J.

The convention rejected the board's proposal for a dues increase, of which an additional 25c would have gone to the international. Leaders of the fight for rejection supported another proposal to increase the salaries of the international officers, but Buckmaster, Childs and Walker all spoke against it and it was defeated.

In a final session, the convention upheld the discharges of six field representatives who were replaced when Buckmaster took over at the 1949 convention after having been removed from his post as president some months before by an executive board which was opposed to him. Long Beach, Calif., was chosen for the 1951 convention.

As an aftermath of the meeting, Sen. Taft (R.), campaigning for re-election, launched a bitter attack on Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, who in a convention speech had urged Ohio members of the union to vote against the reactionary GOP leader.

Taft's denunciation of Haywood as an "outsider" who went into Ohio to tell the people how to vote quickly recalled a "testimonial dinner" for Taft scheduled for Cleveland on Oct. 9, but which was cancelled because of public reaction to the long list of millionaire and big business patrons. Not only were Ohioans on the list, but wealthy and important persons from non-Ohio communities all the way from New York to Chicago and from Detroit to Washington.

Fifty-Six Newsmen Request Free Press For Servicemen

SEVEN Washington newspapermen who during World War II were on the staff of Stars & Stripes, the Army newspaper, asked the Defense Dept. last week to make sure that GIs get at least as free a press in the service as they do at home.

Their appeal has been endorsed by 49 other former Stars & Stripes staff members now with publications outside the Capitol.

It called attention to "serious mistakes" of the last war that included censorship by minor officers and over-tight military restrictions. The groups made four specific suggestions:

1. All overseas Army papers, the magazine Yank and all necessary communications should be operated by a press section in the office of the Secretary of Defense.

2. In charge of the operation should be a general, "possibly editor of one of the nation's leading newspapers."

3. This general, rather than theater commanding officers, should have final authority over service papers in order to keep under control subordinate officers "who believed their rank entitled them to dictate what should or should not go into the newspaper."

4. Policy should be determined by an unsalaried advisory committee of civilians who would also help handle some of the major problems. The signers suggested a five-man committee composed of two nominees of the CIO Newspaper Guild, two of the American Society of Newspaper Editors and the fifth, possibly an educator, by the Secretary of Defense.

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

Prejudice In Textbooks

'Before You're Six Or Seven Or Eight'

WHY DO some people hate and fear human beings whose skin happens to be a different shade? Why do some distrust or dislike those who have a different religion, or who were born in a foreign country?

A recent extensive study made by a group of educators indicates that the trouble may lie partly in our school textbooks, particularly in the lower grades. Perhaps, as a lyric in the famous musical "South Pacific" puts it:

"You've got to be taught before it's too late,
Before you are six or seven or eight,
To hate all the people your relatives hate,
You're got to be carefully taught!"

The lyric by Oscar Hammerstein, II, is quoted in a new pamphlet that summarizes in popular language the findings of an extensive study of textbook material made by a committee of the American Council on Education and published in a book entitled "Intergroup Relations in Teaching Materials."

The pamphlet, called "Prejudice in Textbooks," was written by Maxwell Stewart. It is No. 160 in a series of brief studies on subjects of general public interest issued by the Public Affairs Committee, Inc., non-profit, educational organization at 22 East 38th St., New York 16, N. Y., and sells for 20c.

THE TEXTBOOK study found that while "textbooks and courses of study were, with very few exceptions, free of intentional bias toward any group in the American population," there were many instances of "inaccurate writing, revealing a hidden bias." One text for instance, links "Jews and atheists," another, "Jews and Communists."

Others, seemingly sympathetic, write of Negroes as though they were all marked with childlike and superstitious characteristics, instead of having as many differences as other people. "The textbooks which single out these characteristics tend to mislead the students," says the pamphlet.

Important gaps and omissions, however, rather than these small indications of unconscious prejudices on the part of authors, constituted the most serious failure, the educators found. Here are some of them:

● Although democracy is built on the principle of respect for the worth and dignity of the individual citizen, little attention was paid to this in the textbooks, most of which ignored the subject completely.

"In many books the very meaning of personality is distorted," the pamphlet says. "It is treated as something you can put on or take off as you can a suit or a dress. Rarely is it made clear that personality is the kind of person you actually are."

● The treatment of civil liberties is abstract in character, almost never personalized, or explained by case studies, so that school children can really understand their application.

● The right to vote is also sketchily treated, with few textbooks explaining it as a protection for the individual. "The failure of millions of citizens to vote in our national, state, and local elections suggests that many people have never learned to use the vote as a protection of their welfare as individuals," according to the pamphlet.

● Most texts fail to give a clear conception of the patterns of group organization. Politicians think in terms of the "church vote," the "farm vote," the "Italian vote," the "labor vote," showing they recognize the importance of groups in American society. Textbooks tend to type a group, implying that all members of the group are alike.

"We would look in vain, for example, through our commonly used texts for background information about the Jewish group that might be used in dispelling the popular misconceptions and prejudices about them," states the pamphlet.

● The treatment of immigrants is usually patronizing; they are generally classified as "old" or "new," and such terms as "hordes" or "swarms" are used in describing the "new" immigration. Many texts give the untrue impression that the "old" immigrants were always enthusiastically welcomed.

● A biased conception of "Americanization," based on the "melting pot" idea popular in the 19th century, is common in textbooks. This was based on the belief that all Americans were pretty much alike and that foreigners were "different" and had to be subjected to "Americanization" to mold them into good Americans.

● The treatment of religious and nationality groups is often prejudiced, inadequate or historically unsound, with little or no attempt made to explain basic agreements or the common concern with ethical and humanitarian developments.

One of the most serious omissions, the pamphlet says, is the neglect of modern Judaism. Less than 12% of the texts even mentioned the Jews as a modern religious group, and no text makes a major point of "the remarkably close relationship of the Jewish religious ideal to American democracy."

Although most textbooks admit the existence of racial and religious prejudice, the pamphlet concludes, in pointing to the need for a positive program, "very few of them tell how projudices originate. And few indicate how they can be eliminated or reduced."

Firestone Wage Talks Scheduled

Negotiators of the CIO Rubber Workers and the Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. will begin talks on a revision of the general wage level on Oct. 4 in Cleveland, Ohio, it was announced by URWA Pres. L. S. Buckmaster.

Represented in the company-wide sessions will be policy committee members from eight URWA local unions representing about 20,000 Firestone workers.

Negotiations will be held under the wage re-opening provision of the collective bargaining agreement now in effect between the union and company. The agreement expires March 20, 1951.

One day prior to the beginning of discussions, the Firestone section of the International Policy Committee will meet in Cleveland.

CCL Convention Frames Strong Economic Program

A STRONG POLICY of economic action designed to bring a better life to the people of Canada was laid down last week at the 10th anniversary convention of the Canadian Congress of Labour in Winnipeg, Man.

The CCL is the Canadian counterpart of the CIO, and locals of CIO unions in Canada are affiliated with it, although some independent unions also are members.

In both the policy declaration of the CCL executive board and supporting statements from the convention floor, there was recognition that such a policy represents the only effective answer to communism.

At the same time it was made clear that the CCL's position is one of positive action, rather than defense.

Direct action on Communist efforts to control Canadian unions was taken when the convention rejected by a 660 to 40 vote an appeal by the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, which had been suspended because it is Communist-dominated. The convention ordered the union's expulsion, as the CIO convention did in Cleveland last year. The CCL expelled the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers at the 1949 convention, the CIO executive board following suit a few months later.

"You are out and you going to stay out," CCL Secy.-Treas. Pat Conroy told the UE representatives.

DELEGATES attacked the Canadian government for its failure to protect living standards through control of prices, which have increased sharply in the last few months. The convention unanimously demanded a price roll-back to June 1, 1950, levels, and urged unions to demand immediate wage increases to restore the losses suffered by the families of Canadian wage earners.

The delegates also were unanimous in demanding action on a housing program which would provide living quarters for low income families, and for a social security program including adequate pensions and a broad medical and hospital plan.

The executive board took the position that both communism and capitalism have failed to meet the needs of the people. Its broad statement of economic philosophy was enthusiastically endorsed by the convention.

"Secure the material welfare of the people," the statement urged, "and by doing so provide them with a moral purpose to fight and live.

"Having once possessed such moral purpose, the people will arm themselves militarily and in every other way to bring into being not merely a world that has conquered the brutal menace of communism, but a world that is the rightful heritage of every man, woman and child.

"The Canadian Congress of Labour believes that the barbaric and persistent challenge of communism to our civilization can be met only by a coordination of the efforts of the democratic institutions and the freedom-loving individuals of every land, willing to make whatever sacrifices may be necessary not merely for survival, but to progress toward a social order which will provide economic security and social justice without losing the basic rights of freedom."

THE IMPORTANCE of political action was stressed by Pres. A. R. Mosher in his opening address. The CCL since 1943 has supported the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, Canada's Socialist Party, as "the political arm of labor."

"I believe that political action by the labor movement is one of the most important questions facing the workers of Canada today," he said. "It may mean not only the securing of legislation which will help to remove the basic causes of some of the social and economic evils of our time, but also the very preservation of democracy itself."

Other speakers included Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers, and Vice Pres. A. R. Kinstley of the CIO Oil Workers.

Biz Paper Fears Symington Captive Of CIO

A BACKHANDED indication that W. Stuart Symington may be doing a top-notch job in his new post as defense co-ordinator came from the business newspaper, the New York Journal of Commerce, September 22.

The Journal felt so deeply about Symington's recent behavior that it put an editorial right on the front page pleading with him to stop trafficking with such low organizations as labor unions.

"After the Black Sox baseball scandal," wrote publisher B. J. Ridder, "kids used to trail 'Shoeless' Joe Jackson pleading with him: 'Say it ain't so, Joe.' That is almost the way we feel today about W. Stuart Symington."

Reviewing the capable job that Symington did, first as Surplus Administrator, then as Secretary of the Air Force, Ridder said he was pleased when Truman promoted the man "from the relative obscurity of the chairmanship of the National Security Resources Board."

Since Symington has been in the defense job, however, the big business representative hasn't been so pleased. "Now we are afraid," he moans, "that Mr. Symington is swallowing the CIO party line hook, line and sinker. The way he coddles union leaders outdoes anything even Mr. Leon H. Keyserling has ever done. And any day now, we expect Mr. Symington to outdo Mr. Brannan in cooking up a special pie for the country's farmers."

Truman's defense appointments, Ridder charges, are being influenced by the coming elections. The Journal, on the other hand, is thinking only of "the nation's interest," he says.

Capital observers have difficulty picturing the dignified Mr. Ridder trailing tall, brisk-striding Symington and pleading, "Say it ain't so, Stu." Even in "the nation's interest." LPA

"I want to make sure I never forget."

Insurance Of Strikers To Be Paid By UAW

The CIO Auto Workers will pay the group insurance premiums for the families of UAW members on strike at the Deere & Co. farm equipment plants in Illinois and Iowa.

UAW Vice Pres. John Livingston said the union decided to keep up the premimum payments and then make deferred collections from the workers after the strike is settled.

More than 10,000 Deere employes at seven plants have been on strike for almost a month in support of union proposals for a 15c hourly pay raise.

NMU, Engineers Seek Pay Hike For 44,500

THE CIO Maritime Union and the Marine Engineers asked wage increases for thousands of their members in notices served last week on Atlantic and West Coast steamship operators.

The notices, calling for "adequate" pay boosts to meet the increases in the cost of living, went to Frank J. Taylor, president of the American Merchant Marine Institute and chairman of the shippers' labor committee.

Two-year contracts between the unions and the employers expire June 15, 1951. Both contain provisions for one wage review, which neither union has invoked until now. The NMU reopened its agreement early this summer for negotiations on a pension and welfare fund and on working conditions, but wages were not discussed.

"In view of the present economic situation existing in the country," NMU Pres. Joseph Curran wrote to Taylor, "a sharp rise in the cost of living over the past few months and the fact that the vast majority of industries throughout the country have recognized the sharp rise and compensated their workers in part by granting wage increases, the NMU takes this opportunity to advise you that we believe it imperative, in order to continue stable relations, that negotiations take place."

The NMU proposal covers about 40,000 members of the union, that of the MEBA about 4500 members.

The MEBA is now negotiating with 15 tanker operating firms for pay raises for about 1000 engineering officers. The union's letter to Taylor covered men on dry cargo ships.

Marine Cooks Again Ignore Leaders' Orders

OFFICERS OF the Communist-dominated Marine Cooks & Stewards have failed for the second time to tie up the American President Lines ship Pres. Cleveland in San Francisco.

As on the first occasion, rank-and-filers ignored commands from Intl. Pres. Hugh Bryson not to sign on and threats of an MCS patrolman that those who did ship out would be expelled, and the ship sailed on schedule for Los Angeles and the Orient with supplies for the armed forces.

The first attempt to keep the ship in port was in protest against the anti-Communist waterfront screening program. The second was against the screening committee's action in barring from a job on the ship's first trip John Wiley, a steward.

Chairman James Randall, of the Committee to Combat Communism Within the MCS, and Les Boatwright, a member of its steering committee, denounced the attempted intimidation by the union's officers.

"MCS officials," they said, "are endangering the jobs of all steward's department members not only on the Cleveland but on all other commercial shipping, by their latest attack on the security screening program.

"Their action opens the way for the Military Sea Transport Service to take over additional ships, thus affecting the jobs and contract benefits of members of all seafaring unions."

Randall, Boatwright, Art Hilliker and Carl Faler have been suspended as members of the union for their fight against Communism and for the National CIO within the union. The MCS was expelled from the CIO last month on a charge that it followed the Communist Party line rather than CIO policy.

Randall, who has been an MCS member since 1937, has filed suit in San Francisco Superior Court to void the suspension order, regain his job on the President Cleveland with back pay, obtain restoration of his membership to good standing, and obtain $35,000 damages from the APL, Bryson, Secy-Treas. Eddie Tangen, Port Agent Nathan Jacobsen and other union officials. He is asking nothing from the union.

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

"I hate to see the boys face the fortunes of war while the boss stays here and reaps one!"

400 Textile Workers Win 7½c Increase

CIO Textile Workers at St. Louis accepted an average 7½c hourly wage raise, ending a 16-day strike at the Bemis Brother Bag Co. The boosts range from 7 to 15c an hour. The 400 workers walked out after negotiations, provided for in a wage-reopening clause, broke down.

California Packingshed Polls To Open Oct. 18

PACKINGSHED workers in the Salinas-Watsonville area of California will have a chance to name a real CIO union to represent them in collective bargaining when the National Labor Relations Board holds a representation election on Oct. 18, 19, 20 and 23.

The dates were set as the aftermath of a hearing in San Francisco on Sept. 18 on a petition for the election filed by CIO Local Industrial Union 78. About 3500 packingshed workers—who are known as "fruit tramps"—are eligible to vote. Some 2000 have signed CIO cards.

The Salinas-Watsonville area is regarded as the key to organization in all of the huge fruit and vegetable packing industry in California and Arizona.

The San Francisco meeting was attended by the Food & Tobacco Workers, expelled from the CIO several months ago on charges that it was Communist-dominated, and the Grower-Shipper Association.

The FTA and the employers gave grudging consent to the election after flopping in efforts to mess it up.

THE FTA TRIED to have the CIO give up the idea of using the number "78" in the ballot designation, as the FTA local has the same number. The CIO agreed on condition that the designations be simply "CIO" and "FTA," but the latter thereupon insisted that both groups use the "78" in the designation.

The FTA also proposed a three-year "non-aggression" pact under which the union winning the election would be free from interference for three years. The CIO refused to have any part of a deal that would have permitted FTA, if it wins by some sort of miracle, to keep the workers in subjection for three years.

The employers sought to make a deal concerning several workers fired at FTA insistence for alleged failure to pay their dues. The CIO has filed charges of unfair labor practices with the NLRB, asking that the victims be reinstated with back pay. The employers offered to reinstate them if the CIO dropped its charges—but the CIO demanded full compliance.

CIO spokesmen at the San Francisco meeting were headed by Richard T. Leonard, CIO national representative heading the drive in the fruit and vegetable sheds.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer had the pleasure of attending the United Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers Convention in Cleveland, O. They had one of the largest conventions they have ever held because they are a dynamic, growing organization. The delegates voted to increase their dues to $1.50, and they also voiced complete support of the CIO and its policies all down the line. Pres. Martin Wagner, Vice-Pres. Joseph Joy, and Secy.-Treas. Cecil Martin have done much to consolidate the forces of UGCCW-CIO in the South and throughout the country.

The writer then proceded to Dayton, O., where he addressed the delegates to the eighth annual conference of District 25, United Steelworkers of America. The Steelworkers have a solid organization among the local unions in District 25, they are continuing to expand, and at present they are engaged in an organizational drive among the workers of the National Cash Register Co., as well as other machine and tool shops in the area.

It is interesting to note that the workers of the Campbell Soup Co., plant in Camden, N. J., overwhelmingly repudiated the plan of Donald Henderson and the FTA to merge with the Distributor's Union and the UOPWA. Watch for happenings there.

Our good friend, Bob Creasey, of the Communications Workers of America, has accepted the honor of becoming Assistant U. S. Secretary of Labor. He is replacing John Gibson. Brother Creasey worked hard for unity within the CWA, he worked courageously, and he displayed a willingness to submerge and sacrifice his own interest in the interest of the CWA. Congratulations, Bob, your many friends and associates wish you the best.

Pres. Si Helfgott, of IAWOC-CIO Local 1706, reports a representation election victory at the United Mutual Life Insurance Co., New York, The vote: IAWOC 25, UOPWA 10, no union 3.

Reg. Dir. Walter Harris reports a representation victory in a run-off election held among the Monumental Insurance Co. agents in Ohio. The vote was: IAWOC 86, AFL 68, void 2. The election was held in Cleveland.

These two elections, small in actual numbers, however, reflect the trend, a trend that will be increasing as the days go by. Congratulations to the insurance men and staff who made this possible.

Reg. Dir. George Craig reports that in a union shop election at the Heinback Baking Co., Bethelehem, Pa., the workers voted in favor of LIU No. 425 by the following vote: eligible 86, for 83, against 3.

Reg Dir. Lee Tucker reports that in a representation election at the Owosso Furniture and Mfg. Co., Benton, Ark., the United Furniture Workers were victorious by UFWA 251 to no union 65, with 4 challenged.

Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports the following elections held in Illinois: representation elections—Uni Sportswear Co., Inc., Chicago, eligible 28, Chicago Joint Board, Amalgamated Clothing Workers-CIO 18, against 5; Taylor Forge & Pipe Works, Cicero, eligible 50, Steelworkers 30, Forge & Machine Workers Industrial Union 20. Union Security elections— Revere Copper & Brass, Inc., Chicago, eligible 803, UAW 687, against 42, challenged 2; Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co., Springfield Works, Springfield, eligible 2419, UAW 1645, against 199, challenged 2; Benjamin Harris & Co., Chicago Heights, eligible 99, USA 90, against 2; Crane Co., Chicago, Ill., eligible 5322, USA 3706, against 1264, challenged 103.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that in a representation election at the Proctor Electric Co., Baltimore, Md., the workers voted in favor of IUE-CIO by a vote of IUE 199, against 34.

Al Hartnett, assistant to the Chairman of IUE-CIO, reports representation election victories at the LNR Mfg. Co., Arlington, N. J., IUE 22, no union 19, and the Buffalo Meter Co., Buffalo, N. Y., IUE 102, no union 3.

Reg. Dir. Joseph Walsh reports a victory for UAW-CIO in the new Autolite Co., plant at Hazelton, Pa., by a vote of 68 for UAW to 28 for an independent union in a run-off. UAW Rep. Lawrence McNally had charge of the campaign, assisted by CIO Field Rep. Fred Fudge.

CIO Reg. Dir. Roy Atkinson reports that in a representation election at the General Electric Service and Repair Shop, Seattle, Wash., the tally was: eligible 42, IUE 29, UE 2, void 3, no union 7.

Reg. Dir. Chester Dusten reports that in a representation election among the workers of the Libby, McNeil & Libby cannery, Portland, Ore., they voted in favor of the International Woodworkers, with whom they were affiliated, by a vote of IWA 605, Teamsters-AFL 205.

Intl. Rep. Nicholas Zonarich, USA-CIO, reports the following representation election victories: Hollinger Consolidated Gold Mines Ltd., Timmins, Ont., Canada, eligible 1532, USA-CIO 860, Mine-Mill 269, no union 194; Inland Lime & Stone Co., Manistique, Mich., eligible 331, USA-CIO 302, no union 5, void 1.

Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that in a union shop election at the Guggenheim Packing Co., Wichita, Kan., the Packinghouse Workers-CIO won by the following vote: eligible 74, for 70, against 2. Rep. Frank Brown was in charge of the campaign.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, International Woodworkers, reports the following representation election victories: Moss Planing Mill, Washington, N. C., eligible 55, IWA-CIO 32, no union 22, challenged 1; Carolina Lumber Industries, Washington, N. C., eligible 65, IWA-CIO 50, no union 8, challenged 6; Flintcote Co., Meridian, Miss., eligible 414, IWA-CIO 283, AFL 105, no union 1, challenged 2.

2 New Councils Will Be Formed

A convention to set up a new Contra Costa County CIO Council will be held Oct. 17, at Martinez, Cal., the Contra Costa County Committee for National CIO announced last week.

The new council will replace a predecessor which lost its charter through revocation by action of CIO Pres. Philip Murray in August after the Committee for National CIO had charged that it was Communist-dominated.

Organizers of the successor include locals of the Steelworkers, Auto Workers, Oil Workers, Rubber Workers, Telephone Workers and Utility Workers representing more than 11,000 members.

A convention to organize a new San Diego County Council has been called for Oct. 24-25 in San Diego by Irwin L. DeShelter, CIO regional director in Southern California.

CIO Plans Drive Among Fishermen

The CIO will soon launch an organizational campaign among gill-net fishermen in the Portland, Ore., area, affiliated with the Columbia Fishermen's Protective Union, an arm of Harry Bridges' Longshoremen's Union (recently ousted from the CIO).

John M. Brost, Oregon CIO Council president, expressed confidence that 200 Astoria cannery workers, moving away from the fishermen's union since it merged with the longshoremen, will choose the CIO.

During a recent NLRB hearing to determine the need for a representation election, 1400 of them signed cards favoring the CIO, Brost said.

Record Mid-Term Vote Forecast By CIO-PAC

PROSPECTS FOR the heaviest mid-term vote in history are seen by CIO Political Action Committee research experts, on the basis of registration figures in several key states.

In Ohio—where the entire country is watching the battle between State Auditor Joseph Ferguson and Sen. "Wrong Robert" Taft—registration is believed to have soared to all-time highs.

When the voting lists were closed Sept. 27, registrations in Cleveland had jumped to 693,000—some 43,000 over the 1948 figure. Columbus, Toledo and Springfield all showed similar big increases.

Big increases in registration figures in other states are also being reported. A substantial factor in the growing list of voting eligibles is the work of unions, under CIO-PAC leadership, in getting union members registered.

SOME CIO-PAC officials believe the total 1950 vote may be as high as 45 million or almost as much as the 1948 presidential vote and far above the 1942 and 1946 figures.

In Ohio a total vote of as high as 3.6 million is foreseen. This would be almost a 20% jump over the senatorial vote there in 1944—a presidential year. In 1944, just under three million votes were cast—and Taft squeezed through by a mere 18,000 votes.

With the registration job completed in most states, unions throughout the country are rolling up their sleeves for what promises to be a series of slam-bang debates.

In California, liberal Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D.) and Rep. Richard Nixon (R.) are battling for the Senate seat left vacant by the retirement of Sen. Downey (D.). Miss Douglas, strongly endorsed by almost every union in the state, is campaigning on the basis of her support of Fair Deal policies on both domestic and foreign affairs issues.

Nixon, a long-time member of the House Un-American Activities Committee, had only one "right" vote on the 12 issues listed in the 1950 CIO News Voting Record.

IN NEW YORK, Sen. Herbert Lehman (D.) is planning a vigorous campaign for re-election to the Senate seat which he won in a special contest last year over Republican John Foster Dulles. Lehman's opponent is Lt. Gov. Joe Hanley, who had been scheduled to get the GOP's nomination for governor.

When Tom Dewey made the latest in a series of changes of mind—and finally decided to seek another term at Albany—Hanley won the senatorial nomination as a consolation prize.

In Illinois, the race is between Sen. Scott Lucas (D.), Democratic majority leader in the Senate, and former Rep. Everett Dirksen (R.), darling of Col. Bertie McCormick's isolationist Chicago Tribune.

A member of Congress for several terms until 1948, Dirksen's votes were consistently anti-labor and anti-Fair Deal.

In two other mid-western states—Wisconsin and Missouri—vigorous foes of the administration are facing heavy weather in their campaigns for re-election. Sen. Forrest Donnell (R. Mo.) — a strong supporter of Taft-Hartley — and Sen. Alexander Wiley (R. Wis.), also highly conservative, are being challenged by strong Fair Deal opponents.

ANOTHER CONTEST of national interest will take place in Utah, where scholarly Sen. Elbert Thomas (D.), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, will be opposed by a leading figure in the National Association of Manufacturers. He is Wallace F. Bennett, who resigned in mid-September as chairman of the NAM board.

Sen. Thomas was a sponsor of the Taft-Hartley repeal bill which was stymied in Congress last year by the Republican-southern Democrat coalition.

Conclusion of the primary election contests in most states showed that most Senators and Congressmen who sought re-election won renomination by their parties.

Defeated for renomination were Senators Pepper (D. Fla.), Graham (D. N. C.), Taylor (D. Ida.), Elmer Thomas (D. Okla.), and Gurney (R. S. D.).

Pepper has announced he will practice law "back home"; Taylor—a former actor—is going into show business again; and Gurney is slated for a post in the Dept. of Defense. Graham, a former president of University of North Carolina, has not yet announced his plans.

10-2

U. S. Still Looks Good Even In Tito's Paradise

The Good Rumor man visited a remote section of Dictator Tito's Yugoslavia recently.

Word was passed around that the residents could leave the Communist paradise and emigrate, even to a capitalistic state. The first thing the U. S. Embassy at Belgrade knew it had received 1500 applications for visas — in some cases whole villages of 30 to 70 families applying. Then the police got word of what was going on. Quickly, the Embassy received just as many frantic letters withdrawing the applications.

Steel Industry With Long History Of Shortages Fights Real Controls

By IRVING FAGAN and CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
Labor Press Association

THE BUSINESS boys are mad because President Truman hasn't given final authority on industrial mobilization to Commerce Secy. Sawyer. They love Sawyer. He's all for "voluntary controls."

And so are they. Yet they were wrong in World War II, wrong after World War II, and they're wrong now. Chief example is steel production, key to our economic health. There is a steel shortage right now—and the inflationary effects are felt everywhere. Everything costs more—and you'll foot the bill in the long run.

The same industry "experts" who got us into the same fix in the last war, and in the years between, are again responsible. And they want "voluntary controls" for industry.

In 1941, just as now, the steel monopoly insisted there was no shortage. In fact they planted their own boy, Gano Dunn, in government to draft plans for steel production. He predicted there would be a surplus steel capacity for 1941 of 10.1 million tons and a surplus capacity of 2.1 million tons for 1942. Instead, there was a terrific shortage which boosted prices and held up the war effort.

This is what the Truman Committee said happened: "Three major factors delayed steel expansion and are responsible for our current steel shortage. . . . The desire of the big steel companies to prevent any expansion that might react unfavorably against their control of the steel industry after the war.

"They feared both the possibility of having excess capacities of steel-making facilities after the war and the competition of smaller companies which might gain strength during the war program. The representatives and employes of the big steel companies dominated the Iron and Steel branch of the War Production Board."

"They first failed to direct or even allow expansion. Finally they concentrated all of the belated expansion in the hands of the eight largest companies."

The steel monopoly, with that record, got the Army-Navy "E."

WITH the war ended, what happened? Steel production was cut. Result? Inflation, black market, layoffs because of steel shortages, increased pressure on small businesses.

In 1949 the Senate Small Business Committee looked into the matter. The Democratic minority reported that in 1947 $5½ billions were lost to the nation in income; many smaller firms were forced out of business. The Republican majority thus described the steel monopoly:

"Their similarity of interests and their close personal relationships (for example, the directors of the United States Steel Corporation include the heads of dominating banking, nickel, gypsum, utility and industrial companies) make it possible to adopt and carry out policies of limitation of capacity and output to adjust supply to their ideas of demand without formal or organized action."

These big boys actually wanted a depression. Here is what John Clark, a former Standard Oil executive and banker, told a Congressional committee Feb. 9, 1949, testifying as a member of the President's Economic Council:

"We have had presented to us repeatedly in our conferences with representatives of business that very proposal, that the best thing that could happen would be to have a larger degree of unemployment in order that there might be at the factory gates each morning a list of job hunters . . . because that would make labor more eager and more productive."

The scandalous steel shortage in 1947 brought a Congressional probe, and the big shots for steel testified. They included Benjamin Fairless, president of U. S. Steel; Wilfrid Sykes, president of Inland Steel; Tom Girdler, head of Republic Steel. They all gave their expert predictions on the nation's future steel needs.

FAIRLESS predicted production and demand would be in a balance in two years or less. (He was wrong. There was a shortage in 1948 and 1949.)

Girdler said it would take two years to produce the additional tonnage and by that time "the present excessive demand for steel will have been met." (He was wrong. The demand continued, the shortage continued.)

Sykes predicted the nation in 1950 would need a peak production of 77 million tons of steel, or an average production of 55 million tons.

(In 1948, with a production of 88 million tons, there was a shortage. In 1949, with production of 92 million tons, there was a shortage. In 1950, with production at 100 million tons, there is shortage. Yet Sykes predicted, in 1947, that the nation would not need production capacity of 96 million tons until 1975.)

Taft Labelled 'Voice From Ohio Aiding Our Enemies'

AS THE Ohio senatorial campaign approaches home stretch, Sen. Robert Alphonso Taft (R.), who is seeking re-election, is being forced more and more to stand on his record.

He does not like to be placed in that position. That was proved by his angry attacks (a) on the PAC Speakers' Handbook which documented his record, and (b) on W. Averell Harriman, adviser to President Truman, who implied at the AFL convention at Houston, Tex., that had the U. S. followed Taft's foreign policy Russia's aims would have been better served.

Realizing Taft's vulnerability, his Democratic opponent, Joseph T. Ferguson, is hammering away at that record.

IN THE keynote speech of the Ohio Democratic convention at Columbus on Sept. 22, Ferguson took up Taft's foreign policy record. He never mentioned Taft by name, referring to him instead as "the voice from Ohio."

"Here at home, in the United States Senate, the voice of confusion and obstruction from Ohio, is still being heard round the world," Ferguson said. "That is the voice that is giving aid and comfort to our enemies."

Ferguson criticized "the voice from Ohio" for demanding the resignation of the Secretary of State on the very day the "forces of aggression invaded Korea."

"We can imagine the comfort this man from Ohio gave to our enemies on that black day of June 25. And again the world was shocked when this same voice from Ohio denounced George Marshall, our greatest living American, who was called from retirement to serve his country as chief of Defense of the United States," Ferguson said.

Support for Ferguson came from outside the Democratic party and the ranks of organized labor with the announcement of the formation of "Farmers for Ferguson Committee."

Ralph Brown, Hoytville, committee chairman, said that none of the members of the 17-man committee "are swivel-chair farmers or so-called gentlemen farmers. We earn our living by farming, we don't play at it."

BROWN attacked Taft's farm record. He said:

"During his 12 years in the Senate, the senior senator from our state has danced to the tune the big monopolies have jingled on their cash registers. He has consistently obstructed legislation the farmers wanted and needed and I refer to his actions on Rural Electrification, Commodity Credit, farm-mortgage relief, funds for storage and rural telephones, to name only a few.

"He has opposed every piece of legislation designed to raise the farmer from a position of poverty to one of comparative equality in our economy.

"On the record, Mr. Taft has shown himself unworthy of being the senator from our state. He has been repeatedly wrong on domestic issues and repeatedly wrong on foreign-policy issues. In these troubled times, the farmers, housewives and workers of Ohio cannot afford to have a senator devoted only to serving the interests of monopolies.

"On the other hand, the people of Ohio have a chance to vote for Joseph T. Ferguson, who has proven himself a forthright and devoted public servant. In the years Joe Ferguson has served the people of Ohio he has always worked in the interests of the common folks. He has proven himself the friend of farmers, housewives, small businessmen and workers. He has proven himself the fighting foe of selfish interests who ignore the needs of the people in their desire for private profit."

TAFT'S ATTEMPT to woo labor also came in for attack. Members of Local 320, CIO Rubber Workers, who listened to Taft at the plant of Wooster Rubber Co. at Akron without having a voice in the matter, later passed a resolution accusing the senator of using the captive audience clause of the Taft-Hartley "to further his personal political ambitions."

Under Taft-Hartley, workers can be compelled to listen to management's anti-labor speeches.

The resolution asked the company to "extend the same courtesy to Joseph Ferguson" as was shown Taft.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., OCTOBER 9, 1950 No. 41

TAKES OATH AS ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF LABOR: Robert T. Creasey, president of Division 10 of the CIO Communications Workers, (second from left), is sworn in as Assistant Secretary of Labor by Supreme Court Justice Tom Clark. Witnesses are Labor Secy. Maurice J. Tobin and Mrs. Creasey. He succeeds John W. Gibson, one-time president of the Michigan CIO Council. In addition to being a labor leader, Creasey is a lawyer. He was one of the active CWA leaders in the campaign that took the unaffiliated telephone workers into the CIO.

SOME 350 PERSONS representing 20 organizations attended the Conference on Human Relations conducted in Denver by the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination. At the microphone in the photo above is Michael Livoda, CIO regional director for Colorado and Wyoming, who is opening the conference. On stage, left to right: James R. Youngs, secretary, Denver Central Trades Council, AFL; Claude Ryan, Denver Newspaer Guild, CIO; Thomas Shane, Boyd Wilson and Mike Brown, all three from the fair practices department, CIO Steelworkers; Vice Pres. A. R. Kinstley, CIO Oil Workers; Pres. O. A. Knight, CIO Oil Workers; Mayor Quig Newton of Denver; George L-P Weaver, director of CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination; and Livoda (speaking). Meeting was so successful that others are being planned for several additional cities. See story on Page 2.

CIO Shows Denver How To Get Rid Of Hatreds

By RAY DAVIDSON

CIO's COMMITTEE to Abolish Discrimination carried out an experiment in Denver Sept. 29-Oct. 1—and chalked it up as a success.

This experiment was the sponsoring of a community-wide conference on anti-discrimination and better human relations in which representatives of all organizations interested in the problem were invited to participate.

Community organizations responded readily to the invitation a total of 20 such groups joining with the members of seven CIO unions in participation in the conference.

The 350 representatives of the seven unions and 20 other organizations spent most of their time in four workshop panels, in which they let their hair down and talked cold facts about the racial discrimination problem.

ON THE BASIS of the success of the conference and the experience gained, the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination now plans to conduct similar sessions in other cities. Site of the next conference has not been established, but cities under consideration include Los Angeles, Cincinnati, Kansas City, St. Louis, Pueblo, Houston and New Orleans.

Vice Pres. A. R. Kinstley of the CIO Oil Workers, a member of the CIO committee, was in charge of the session and chaired general meetings. Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers was principal speaker for a kickoff mass meeting which opened the conference. He outlined in detail the damage done to the nation by discrimination against minorities, then suggested that all organizations combatting discrimination must pool their resources in fighting the evil.

It was in panel discussions, however, that the participants really came to grips with the issues.

The constant, vexing problems of dealing with discrimination on the local union and shop level were discussed exhaustively in a workshop headed by Harry Ross of the CIO Auto Workers Fair Practices Dept.

E. E. Phelps, OWIU director of research and education, conducted another on educational methods of combatting discrimination. The spirited discussion resulted in the offering of numerous problems and suggestions by many members of the audience.

With representatives of many Denver anti-hate organizations participating, George L-P Weaver, director of the CIO committee, conducted a panel discussion on the handling of racial problems in the community.

Local problems came to the front when William H. Oliver, co-director of the UAW Fair Practices Department, conducted a panel discussion on the need for an FEPC law in Colorado.

RESULT OF the conference was that participants went home with new, concrete ideas about how to fight discrimination, CIO cemented a firmer relationship with the outside organizations that joined in, and experience was gained for similar conferences in the future.

Names of the outside organizations participating make an interesting list. They were:

National Council of Jewish Women, Urban League of Denver, Denver Housing Authority, Denver Mayor's Committee on Human Relations, Colorado Conference on Social Welfare, Social Science Foundation of Denver University, Co-op, Inc., of Englewood, Colo., NAACP, Denver Council of Churches, National Farmers Union, United Labor Committee on Human Rights, Latin-American Council, Federal Council of Churches, American Federation of Labor, Denver Unity Council, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, Catholic Sodality Union, Colorado State Employment Service, Denver Public Schools and City of Denver Planning Commission.

Bowling Fair Play Unit Cites Murray, Reuther

MEDALS FOR their outstanding roles in the fight to end racial discrimination in organized bowling will be presented to CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers by the National Committee for Fair Play in Bowling at a dinner in Washington on Oct. 12.

Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Benjamin R. Epstein, national director of the Anti-Defamation League, also will be honored.

Announcement of the dinner and the awards was made by William H. Oliver, secretary of the committee and co-director of the UAW-CIO Fair Practices and Anti-Discrimination Department.

The drive to wipe out the color and nationality line in bowling was started by the Auto Workers at the 1944 convention of the American Bowling Congress. Three years later the Fair Play committee was organized by some 25 national organizations.

The fight was brought to a victory last April when Judge John A. Sbarbaro, in Superior Court at Chicago, in an action sparked by the National CIO, told the American Bowling Congress he would revoke its charter unless it dumped its restriction limiting membership to white males. The action was instituted by CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg on behalf of Murray. The CIO case was presented in court by A. W. Brussell, of Chicago, as an associate of Goldberg.

The ABC convention, held less than a month after the court decision, voted to remove the offending restriction.

Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) has been national chairman of the Fair Play committee since its organization. Betty Hicks, former women's national amateur golf champion, is national vice chairman.

Union Wins $6 Weekly At Ford Instrument

An immediate general wage increase of $6 a week has been negotiated by the CIO Engineering, Technical & Clerical Federation, Local Industrial Union 1726, in a new three-year contract with the Ford Instrument division of the Sperry Corp., Long Island City, N.Y.

The agreement also provides for complete hospitalization, health and accident insurance and group life insurance paid by the company; a cost-of-living clause tied to the Bureau of Labor Statistics' price index; three weeks paid vacations after 15 years, and pay boosts of 4c an hour at the start of the second and third years of the agreement.

"How 'bout one more for th' road?"

Univ. Of Maryland Is Ordered By Court To Admit Negro Student

ANTI-discrimination forces in Maryland won another victory last week when Judge John T. Tucker in Baltimore City Court ordered the Univ. of Maryland to admit Parren J. Mitchell, a Baltimore Negro student, to graduate classes in sociology on the main campus at College Park.

Mitchell, 27, is a graduate of Morgan State College in Baltimore. When he applied for admission to graduate classes on the College Park campus, where no Negro student has ever been accepted, university authorities tried to set up a special course in sociology for him in its Baltimore schools.

Judge Tucker based his ruling on the fact that as a lone student in Baltimore, Mitchell would not have the equal opportunity which is his right under the constitution, as he would be deprived of participation in seminars, the opportunity to exchange views with other students and the chance to share in other campus activities.

THE DECISION was based on the ruling of the U. S. Supreme Court in the McLaurin case, involving the admission of a Negro graduate student to the Univ. of Oklahoma. The Univ. of Maryland board of regents will decide on an appeal at a meeting late this month. However, State Atty. Gen. Hall Hammond said he will not recommend such a course.

On the same day that Judge Tucker handed down his decision, F. Vernon Roberts, third-year Negro student at Coppins Teachers College, filed suit in U. S. District Court at Baltimore to compel the State Board of Education and State Supt. of Education Thomas G. Pullen to admit him as an advanced student to Towson State Teachers College. Roberts contended the Towson school offers training not available at Negro institutions, and that his application was rejected "solely because of race and color."

Pending before the Maryland Supreme Court is the case of Esther McCready, a Negro girl seeking admission to the Univ. of Maryland School of Nursing in Baltimore. The lower courts have ordered her admission, but the state is contending that she may obtain "equal opportunity" by attending nursing school in Tennessee under the Southern Regional Education agreement.

Clergyman Acts To Prevent Violence In Discrimination Dispute; Is Fired

DR. JOHN G. GILL, pastor of First Unitarian Church at Alton, Ill., since 1944, has lost his pulpit because he acted to prevent violence in a school segregation dispute. The congregation so voted, 46 to 25.

Last January 175 Negroes tried to enroll in the Alton elementary and junior high schools. When the school board denied their requests for transfers, the Negroes returned to their own classrooms. Dr. Gill had organized a group of ministers to be on hand at the schools to prevent violence.

Although no charges were made against Dr. Gill, he said later he was convinced that his attempt to prevent friction between races was "apparently resented by someone in high position."

Dr. Gill said he had acted in the face of an emergency involving children. "It was as simple as if I were standing on a river bank and saw a child in the water. I wouldn't stop to consider the child's color or the depth of the water before jumping in to do what I could."

Dr. Gill's previous pulpit was at Hingham, Mass., while he was studying for his Ph.D. degree at Harvard.

(At Nashville, Tenn., State Attorney General Roy H. Beeler, with reluctance, ruled that the state university must admit Negroes to take professional courses. He agreed that Negroes could not get equivalent training at state-supported Negro schools.

(At Atlanta, Ga., Gov. Herman Talmadge said "there are not enough police or troops in the United States" to enforce any Supreme Court decision that would even dent segregation in Georgia. He said that to end segregation in schools would mean "confusion, disorder, riots, and bloodshed."

(In Washington Miss Lillie Belle Perez of New York filed a complaint with the Interstate Commerce Commission because she was forced out of her reserved seat on a New York-Tampa train and into a "jimcrow" car. She has already filed a $100,000 suit in New York against two railroads.)

Court Denies Damages For 'Covenant' Breach

A FEDERAL judge ruled last week that damages cannot be collected from a home owner who sells his property in violation of a "racial restriction covenant."

Judge Alexander Holtzoff of the District of Columbia Court made the ruling under two recent Supreme Court decisions stating that although "racial restriction" covenants may be "valid," the courts will not enforce them because of public policy.

He threw out a $42,000 suit brought by six property owners in the nation's capital against Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Curtis of Woodmore, Md., who sold their home in Washington, D. C., in an "all white" neighborhood, to a Negro couple.

A lawyer who was a former president of the Federation of Citizens Associations represented the six property owners. He charged the sale breached a restrictive covenant signed by the Curtises in 1946 and reduced the sale value of the homes in the area.

Mr. and Mrs. Curtis, through their attorney, Harry W. Goldberg, said they tried without success to sell their home to white persons prior to its purchase by the Negro couple.

Judge Holtzoff declared that "such covenants are contrary to the 14th and 15th amendments of the Constitution" and also that "it is contrary to public policy to aid in the enforcement of such covenants by judicial proceedings."

Steelworkers To Ask More Pay, Better Pacts

THE MILLION - MEMBER United Steelworkers last week set out to win a "general wage increase" for its "entire membership," and a long series of suggested contract improvements.

The USA-CIO goals were outlined and approved by a meeting of several hundred members of the union's wage policy committee at Atlantic City, N. J. The committee authorized the steel union's officers to get "the best agreements obtainable" in coming discussions with the industry.

Under the two-year contract with steel companies signed last November, wage discussions are scheduled to open up on Nov. 1, this year. After Dec. 31, the union has the right to strike in support of its demands.

The union, however, has suggested to leading steel companies that conversations take place before that, in view of rising living costs and the changed economic picture since the Korean fighting.

Inland, Republic and Jones & Laughlin—three of the leading "independents"— have agreed to such talks starting Oct. 9—though their answer to the union contained carefully drawn language which made no other commitments than to talk.

The 1950 Wage Policy Statement drawn up by the union at Atlantic City includes "both wage and general contract matters which may be negotiated where appropriate under the terms of existing or new agreements."

THE UNION listed five other wage goals, in addition to the demand for a general pay hike:

1 Elimination of geographical differentials — through which workers in the South and some other areas receive less money than is paid to workers in the North and Middle-West.

2 Changes in the rates paid to workers in iron ore and nonferrous mining and manufacturing —to remove inequalities and bring them in line with the pay rate in basic steel.

3 Improvement in shift premiums.

4 Severance pay for all employes whose jobs are ended "for any reason other than a quit or discharge for cause."

5 Time-and-a-half for all work done on Saturday, and double time for Sunday work; holidays with pay; and 2½ times straight pay for work done on holidays.

The union, now filing petitions for Taft-Hartley elections to authorize demands for union security, revealed it will ask for the union shop and continuation of check-off provisions.

It also called for improvement —where present agreements permit—of pension and social insurance programs.

"Continued efforts shall be made to bring about the establishment of a guaranteed minimum weekly wage for each week worked during the life of the agreement," the statement directed.

Textile Wins 12c Increases

THE CIO Textile Workers have negotiated a 12c an hour increase for 18,000 members employed in 21 of the 24 plants of the American Woolen Co., largest firm in the industry.

Emil Rieve, president of the union, in announcing the agreement last week said it involved no extension of the present contract, which expires Feb. 1, 1951. The voluntary increase, he added, will undoubtedly set a pattern for more than 70,000 additional woolen and worsted workers under TWUA contract.

Some 15,000 New York-New Jersey metropolitan area dyeing, finishing and printing workers have ratified a new one-year agreement between TWUA, and approximately 300 firms which gives them a 12c-an-hour across-the-board increase.

Herbert W. Payne, TWUA dyeing director, said the agreement raises the men's minimum rate to $1.42 an hour with women's pay at a floor of $1.22. Average pay for the industry now is $1.48 for men and $1.35 for women.

The contract, which expires Sept. 30, 1951, also raises life insurance to $1000 per worker from $500; sick benefits to $26 a week for 26 weeks, from a previous maximum of $22; employer contributions to a pension fund to $2 a month per worker instead of $1; and adds maternity leaves to previous benefits. All welfare costs are borne by management.

"Aha! Another company trick—well, we still won't drop our pension demand!"

10c Hike, 6-Month Re-opener Won By IUE At Westinghouse

THE FIRST permanent agreement between the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and the Westinghouse Electric Corp. provides a general 10c-an-hour pay increase with a six-month wage re-opening clause, non-contributory pensions, strengthened seniority regulations and other benefits. The contract was signed Oct. 1.

The one-year contract covers more than 50,000 workers represented by IUE at Westinghouse plants in East Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Sharon, Pa.; Springfield, Mass.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Newark, Jersey City, Bloomfield and Belleville, N. J.; Fairmont, W. Va., and Cleveland, Mansfield, Newark and Lima, O.

The 10c increase for all workers is retroactive to Sept. 18. Westinghouse also agreed to pay into a fund, beginning Oct. 1, 1c an hour per worker for adjustment of inequities among day, incentive, salaried and skilled workers. This fund will be administered by three IUE representatives and three Westinghouse aides. The money will be allocated to divisions on a basis of need.

The pension and insurance plans are to be in effect for five years. Either may be reopened for negotiations after one year by mutual consent.

The pension plan, with a $100 minimum for workers retiring after 25 years of service, is completely company-paid for those earning less than $4,800 a year. Workers retiring after Jan. 1 with 15 years' service will be eligible for pensions after Oct. 1, 1950.

The social insurance program includes:

Life insurance from $3,500 up, depending on the worker's earnings.

SICKNESS and accident insurance up to $32 a week for 26 weeks.

Hospital insurance for both workers and their dependents of $10 a week for 70 days plus additional amounts for other hospital expenses.

Surgical benefits for workers and dependents up to $175, and maternity benefits and total disability coverage.

Also included in the agreement are improved grievance procedure and a better seniority system.

The contract, covering the period from Oct. 1, 1950 to Sept. 30, 1951, climaxed four and a half months of negotiations. IUE and Westinghouse representatives held 40 meetings. Agreement was reached only two weeks before the expiration of a 90-day pact signed July 14 on non-economic matters.

NEGROTIATIONS began May 18 shortly after IUE-CIO won bargaining rights for the majority of Westinghouse workers from UE, which was expelled from CIO last year on charges of Communist domination.

When IUE and the company were deadlocked on economic issues, an interim agreement covering grievance procedure, checkoff, holidays, vacations and other items was reached. Negotiations continued on wages and pensions.

Early in September, Westinghouse's best offer was an 8c-an-hour wage increase and an inferior pension plan. Negotiations continued at the union's insistence until the company made an offer acceptable to the Westinghouse-IUE negotiating committee.

IUE negotiations were headed by James B. Carey, chairman of the IUE administrative committee, IUE General Counsel Benjamin C. Sigal, Michael Fitzpatrick, chairman of the IUE Westinghouse conference board, and representatives of Westinghouse locals throughout the country.

Tenants Fighting To Keep Rent Control In Two Cities

EMBATTLED tenants in Los Angeles and in Pontiac, Mich., were fighting tooth and nail last week to keep federal rent controls, while in Washington, members of the House and Senate Banking Committees wrangled back and forth over what kind of strengthening legislation to propose to the Nov. 27 "lame-duck" session of the 81st Congress.

The Los Angeles situation was both tense and dramatic.

As the CIO News was going to press, the fate of rent control in Los Angeles temporarily rested on the shoulders of one justice of the U. S. Supreme Court. He and he alone would (in effect) decide whether rent controls stayed on another 30 days in the West Coast boom town.

The complicated situation started back in June, when the Los Angeles city council decided rent control was no longer necessary. It ordered controls lifted effective July 28. The hastily formed Tenants' Council contested the decision as technically illegal under California law and sought an injunction to prevent the council's vote from taking effect.

An injunction was issued by a lower court and then dissolved, but meanwhile another injunction was issued by the District Court of Appeals pending hearing on an appeal from the lower court decision. The Court of Appeals Sept. 29 threw the case out and ordered the injunction dissolved, effective Oct. 6.

Hurriedly conferring, the lawyers for the Tenants' Council then decided to approach the U. S. Supreme Court for a review of the Appeals Court Decision. On the very day on which the injunction was to expire, they approached the Supreme Court with a request for a "stay" of the lower court order. (One judge may issue a stay, informally. The stay has the effect of giving the parties 30 days in which to make a formal presentation to the Court.)

The grounds on which the injunctions have been issued and ordered dissolved are highly technical and complicated, as are the grounds on which the Tenants' Council lawyers decided to approach the Supreme Court—but the problems facing Los Angeles tenants were simple, indeed.

Already, the landlords are breaking bounds: The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports a 1.1% rise in average Los Angeles rentals in one month between July 15 and Aug. 15, which is an unusually large monthly increase, particularly in a town where controls are technically in effect.

In Pontiac, Mich., tenants awoke suddenly to their danger last week. The city council had ordered the question of continuing rent controls put on the ballot for the Nov. 7 elections. After heavy pressure by the real estate interests, the city council then voted to lift rent controls, effective Nov. 1.

This would have meant that the referendum, if held, would be meaningless. The tenants groups put their heads together and decided they would petition quickly for another referendum, this one directly seeking to undo the council's action. If they get the requisite number of signatures, the city council order will be suspended until the outcome of the referendum becomes known.

MEANWHILE, the Office of the Housing Expediter reported that 160 communities had requested the continuation of federal controls beyond Dec. 31. Under the present law, communities wanting controls kept in effect until June 30, 1951, must formally vote to that effect before the end of this year. Otherwise controls automatically expire.

All but two of the community actions were by vote of the governing body. The other two, in Aberdeen, S. D., and East Peoria, Ill., were by local referendum. Rent control was favored by three-to-one margins in both instances.

U. S. Rubber Wage Talks Will Begin October 10

Wage negotiations with officials of the United States Rubber Co. will begin in Chicago Oct. 10. L. S. Buckmaster, president of the CIO United Rubber Workers, said the talks concern revision of the general wage level for the more than 33,000 workers in the 19 U. S. Rubber plants under contract with the URWA.

U. S. is the last of rubber's Big Four to meet with officials of the 175,000-member union. Negotiations with Goodyear and Goodrich started three weeks ago, and with Firestone Oct. 4 in Cleveland.

Involved are locals in Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Detroit, Chicago, Indianapolis; Eau Claire, Wis.; Mishawaka, Washington, and Ft. Wayne, Ind.; Providence, Woonsocket, and Bristol, R. I.; Passaic and North Bergen, N. J.; Chicopee Falls, Mass.; Naugatuck, Conn.; Milan, Tenn.

The union also is in wage negotiations with the General Tire & Rubber Co., for 3000 workers in Akron and Waco, Texas, and with Seiberling.

Idealism Alone Is Not Enough

U. S. Must Fully Recognize Truth Of Old Saying That 'You Can't Live On Love'—Even If It's Love Of Liberty

By ALLAN L. SWIM

ABOUT 30 YEARS ago a skinny little runt who lived around the corner from me beat the "stuffings" out of the neighborhood bully.

"How'd you do it?" one of us asked, and he replied:

"I don't know how I did it but I know why. He was always bossing me around—and I just got tired of it."

The little runt became the neighborhood hero—especially among those of us whose noses had been bloodied by the bully.

None of us was capable at the time of figuring out why we suddenly became so fond of the little fellow and eventually made him the leader of our "gang."

But some of us know now. He was fighting for freedom and against dictatorship.

A NUMBER of years later I worked with a man who had much difficulty supporting a large family.

One day, just after he had borrowed a couple of bucks from me, he had a visit from a representative of a correspondence school.

The school representative, naturally, was doing his best to make a sale. He told my fellow worker that if he took the course, "you can bet your last dollar that in a year or two you'll be earning a lot more than you are now. And when you do that you can buy a nice car and a lot of other things you want."

My friend "exploded." He declared, "Why, hell fire, man! What I want is something that will enable me to buy my kids some food tomorrow—not a car in three years."

The salesman calmly folded his brochure, snapped a rubber band around it and said to my friend, "What you need is a raise today and a correspondence course tomorrow. There's no use of my talking to you about the latter until your boss gives you the former."

THOSE TWO little incidents should throw some light on the problems that face us in the ideological struggle in which we're engaged.

Some people will fight like wildcats for freedom—for the privilege of not being pushed around.

Others are primarily interested—or at least interested first—in those things which put food in their stomachs, clothes on their backs and shelter over their heads.

And there are those who believe that freedom and economic progress must travel hand-in-hand.

We, as a nation, must recognize these three things if we're going to get past first base in the deadly serious game we're playing with the Communists.

We've got to recognize that fancy speeches about the "American way" don't fill empty bellies. Communism has been making its greatest headway among those with the lowest standards of living.

SOME OF OUR people get greatly concerned because men and women the world over are not flocking to democracy, are not becoming excited about our way of life.

They just can't understand it—yet it's understandable.

If we as Americans are unwilling to make a crusade for democracy at home it seems reasonable that people abroad might do likewise.

We still permit some of our states to impose restrictions on voting. Many of our people do not vote in elections.

In parts of the nation segregation has created second-class citizenship. Congress has refused to strengthen and expand our civil rights.

And we still tolerate poverty in the midst of plenty.

So it seems logical to say that we could make more progress abroad if we'd improve our situation at home.

PEOPLE IN SOME parts of the world are interested in the methods by which we produce so many cars and refrigerators—and others are concerned mainly with how to obtain an extra bowl of rice.

Some of these would put up a real fight for freedom if given an opportunity, but some are more interested in food and shelter than in political and economic ideologies.

And there are some who will follow the group which promises the most.

These things should make it obvious that there's a rough road ahead for us as we lead the fight to establish peace and democracy throughout the world.

If we succeed it will be because we spend a lot of money, do a lot of work and toss into the ashcan the idea that we can win by providing others with what we think is good for them instead of helping them obtain what they want and need.

And one of the first things we must do is realize that the people in a large part of the world want many things which our business leaders and conservative politicians usually condemn as "socialistic."

IT'S DIFFERENT—SO FAR

We'd expected editorial writers who adhere to the Big Business line to work themselves into a verbal lather over the unions' 1950 wage drive.

When they didn't, we wanted to know why.

"How come?" we asked the CIO economists—and they came up with some information which sheds considerable light on the matter.

First, let's take a look at a couple of figures they supplied.

Corporate profits for 1947-'49 were 229% higher than in 1940—but wages and salaries were up only 164%.

The difference between the two—in case you don't want to take the trouble to figure it—is 65.

When things get out of line like that somebody's bound to get pinched—and we're offering no prizes to those who figure out where the pinch was felt most.

But that's just part of the story. Look at what has happened this year:

During the first quarter of 1950 corporate profits were running at an annual rate of $29.2 billion (before taxes). In the second quarter they rose to an annual rate of $35 billion.

And may we pause at this point to say—again—that we're not opposed to reasonable profits. Our complaint is against unreasonably high profits and profiteering.

LABOR DID NOT DO IT

What has happened in the price field since the start of the Korean war has cut sharply into the pocketbooks of the nation's wage earners and has thrown a heavy monkey wrench into military financing and planning. And even those who are prone to blame labor for everything haven't been able to find an excuse for blasting away at the unions on this.

There has been an increase in the wholesale price of some commodities every week since June 25. Some of these increases have been fantastic!

At the rate they're now running, it's likely that corporate profits for the year will be $40 to $40.5 billion. And the unwarranted price increases will have played a major role in putting them that high.

Now, let's look at what has happened to the earnings of those employed by industry.

They increased only 3.2% between January and August. Yes, only 3.2%.

This doesn't provide the Big Business editorial writers with the kind of ammunition they need to hammer away at the unions.

But it has provided liberal writers and commentators with the reason for asking some very embarrassing questions—embarrassing to profiteers, that is.

So—

Well, some of the unions obtained wage increases recently. In some cases industries hiked pay without any hard nudging from the unions. And other unions have served notice they're going out for higher pay between now and the end of the year.

There's one thing that should be kept in mind and it is this:

Industry can afford to grant sizeable increases without increasing profits, and unless the increases are sizeable many of the nation's workers will be worse off financially—even after receiving raises—than they were at the beginning of the year.

AMA Unlimbers Big Guns This Week

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THIS IS the week that the American Medical Association begins its long-heralded, multi-million dollar effort to delude the American people into believing that national health insurance, as proposed by President Truman, is "socialized medicine" and thus un-American.

It is spending $1.1 million of its own money, obtained by taxing its membership $25 per head. And it has succeeded in promoting an estimated $19 million additional in tie-in advertising in support of its effort to make black white for which such assorted groups as druggists, railroads, department store operators, landlords and the like will be privileged to pay.

The advertising campaign is probably the greatest in the history of huckstering, and certainly the most concentrated.

DURING THE week it is inserting a 70-inch ad, five columns wide and 14 inches deep, in every bona fide daily and weekly newspaper in Continental United States and the territories of Alaska and Hawaii — approximately 11,000 publications. The ads in the dailies are due to run Oct. 11; those in the weeklies, on whatever day this week they normally appear. Next Sunday, Oct. 15, will find the ad in the supplements of every Sunday newspaper in the U.S., Alaska and Hawaii, with a total circulation of more than 38 million.

Weekly magazines get the ad on whatever day this week that they are published. Thirty national magazines with mass circulation get it in the November issues, which are distributed in October.

That sounds like a pretty sweeping advertising program, especially since there are only about 150 million people in the United States. But it's really just getting under way.

During this week and next week the AMA is sponsoring spot broadcasts on more than 1000 radio stations in the United States, Alaska and Hawaii.

According to Editor & Publisher, the newspaper trade magazine, the AMA is spending $560,000 in newspapers, $250,000 in magazines and $300,000 for radio.

The CIO and other labor and liberal groups are strongly in favor of national health insurance. They are just as strongly opposed to "socialized medicine" as the AMA, which has been fighting the President's plan with a single-minded fury that has scant concern with the facts.

National health insurance operates just like fire insurance or life insurance. You buy your protection before you need it in order to lessen the economic effect when disaster hits. And no matter what the doctors may say in their ads, it doesn't mean that you can't pick your own physician.

An editorial in the New York Post on Sept. 20 described the AMA ad campaign as "a vast propaganda campaign designed to prove we are all healthier than ever."

"It is a smug and disingenuous essay," the Post said in referring to the ad, "running 980 lines and dedicated to the fake proposition that federal health insurance is incompatible with American freedom. A careful study of the document indicates that it uses every cliche known to the modern science of double-talk."

REP. DINGELL (D. Mich.), a veteran of the long fight to get better medical service for the great mass of the people, told the House about the AMA venture into the advertising field in a speech on Sept. 14. The AMA, incidentally, is registered as a lobbying organization and in 1949 reported spending more money to influence federal legislation than any other group in the country.

"The real purpose of this campaign," Dingell said, "is to mislead the people and to corrupt the public mind against its own best interest.

"It is far more than an attack on the President's health program. It is a concerted all-out method of beating Democrats and those who support the President's health program, at the polls this November.

"I am suggesting that the people put on a telephone campaign or expose in their communities. If each person calls 10 people and each of these people calls 10 others, and the chain continues, every one will be on the alert to this new, insidious, political tactic designed to cripple the Democratic Party and the Fair Deal program."

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher
Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII October 9, 1950 No. 41

Organizer Turned Down Many Times

IT WAS BACK IN 1937, when industrial workers in many parts of the nation were organizing and becoming members of the new labor organization—the CIO.

A small group of furniture workers in a small city in one of the Eastern states got together, talked the matter over and decided they needed a union.

There were two furniture factories in the town and their 500 employes, the group figured, could set up a pretty good local organization.

Members of this group became "volunteer" organizers and tackled the job of selling unionism to their fellow workers. In a short time they signed up a small number of membership application cards without too much trouble and became convinced their drive would be successful if they could get the right kind of help.

At their request, the CIO regional director soon appeared on the scene.

THE CIO DIRECTOR looked the situation over, talked with the local organizers and some of the workers and decided he should hold a mass meeting.

His next job was to find a meeting place. He contacted a fraternal organization which had a good meeting hall—and was turned down flat. The organization wasn't going to "stick its neck out" by letting the "radical" new union meet in its hall.

The director called on officers of another fraternal group—and was given the same treatment.

He kept right on trying. One group after another turned him down—and most of them weren't very polite about it.

As a last resort, the CIO director attempted to schedule the meeting at a hotel—and again he was turned down.

BY THIS TIME the director was burned up and he was determined that he'd get the furniture workers together somehow.

"We're going to hold a meeting even if it's out in the middle of a field," he told the volunteer organizers.

And that's what they decided to do.

During the next few days a "whispering campaign" was conducted at the two plants. One worker would quietly tell another about the scheduled meeting, ask him to attend and pass the word along.

This was done as quietly as possible because the CIO director figured somebody might try to break up a well-advertised meeting.

And he didn't want that to happen.

FINALLY THE DAY of the meeting arrived—and the regional director went a bit early to the meeting spot in a field outside the town.

Workers began drifting in from various directions—singly, in pairs, in groups of threes and four.

Eventually they stopped arriving, and the director called the meeting to order.

Patiently and in as understandable terms as possible he told the furniture workers about the rapidly growing new organization known as the CIO.

He reviewed the progress it had made, told about its plans for the future.

He explained the steps that would have to be taken in setting up a local union. He answered a lot of questions.

Following this meeting, the organization drive began to roll and eventually a local union was established.

"Maybe there's nothing unusual about this story," the former regional director, who's now with a CIO affiliate, said the other day, "but maybe there is.

"The place I stood when I spoke to those furniture workers was just a few feet from where Abraham Lincoln stood when he delivered the Gettysburg address."

A. L. S.

THE MAD BUTCHER!

Probers May Ask Minimum Wage For Farm Labor

THE HEAD of the U. S. Employment Service is against extending the same guarantees to American domestic migrant farm labor that are, under international agreement, granted to imported foreign workers.

That's what USES Chief Don Larin told the President's Commission on Migrant Farm Labor at hearings in Washington Oct. 3. The commission questioned Larin after on-the-spot investigations throughout the country.

The USES head said, however, that certain things should be done for domestic migrants, such as guaranteering transportation, licensing contractors and providing adequate shelter during stop-overs.

He said residential requirements should be removed so that migrants could benefit from welfare and unemployment insurance plans. Larin said all of this is the responsibility of the federal government since migrants are an interstate problem.

CHAIRMAN M. T. Van Hecke and William L. Leiserson of the commission presided at the hearings. They were aided by Executive Secy. Varden Fuller. They constantly drew upon their experiences of the past months in the fields across the nation. They asked Larin and his aides about things they had heard in testimony in Arizona, California, Texas, Colorado, New Jersey, Michigan and elsewhere.

They wanted to know why local labor wasn't used instead of migrants from other states. Larin said recruiting is at a minimum and that "a large proportion of the migrants are migrants because they want to be." He said he was quoting a survey that bore this out, and he added that "migration, per se, is not a bad thing."

The commissioners wanted to know if USES had gone along with the trend, as evidenced in New Jersey and California's San Joaquin Valley, of drawing exclusively upon workers in the state whenever possible. Larin said, in most cases there are not enough people on the spot to handle the crop. "We do not produce unnecessary migration," he added.

The commissioners asked if there could be a better system of disseminating information about wages and conditions to the workers before they migrate, at their own expense, to a certain area.

LARIN SAID they were very properly informed. Commissioner Leiserson said it "struck me strange" that the Farm Labor Committee, an advisory group to the Employment Service, should consist only of growers, with the exception of H. L. Mitchell, president of the National Farm Labor Union (AFL), who had a "back seat" status. Larin said it was not meant to be a representative committee.

The commissioners indicated what they would put into their report to the President, which will be submitted by Dec. 15. They apparently favor a minimum wage for farm workers, who are not covered by the Wage-Hour Act, and some kind of regulation of migration. They may support giving migrants the same protections and benefits granted other workers.

In a discussion of "wet-backs" (illegal Mexican immigrants), Van Hecke wanted to know if they weren't the cause of the 40c hourly wage at El Paso, Tex. Larin disagreed.

The commission is scheduled to hold hearings in Oregon and Florida before drawing up its report.

LPA

Handicapped Worker Keeps Earning Power

Cecil D. Melson, although handicapped, has had a job for years. But Melson, who lives in Des Moines, wasn't making the money he could have. His union stepped in, got the U.S. Office of Vocational Rehabilitation interested, and now Melson has been fixed up.

Melson's case is another example of a union's interest in its handicapped members, and the interest of the Labor Dept. in helping the physically handicapped work at their highest capacity. Part of the campaign to focus interest in helping the handicapped was National Employ the Physically Handicapped Week (last week). Serving on President Truman's committee to promote the campaign were top leaders of the CIO-AFL and unaffiliated unions.

Melson is a welder. He lost his left leg in an auto accident in childhood. With the aid of an artificial leg, he has been working for years. An investigation by his union, Local 2071, United Steelworkers, showed he was losing time and income because his badly-worn artificial limb had to be repaired so often. He has a wife and five children, and could never save enough to buy a new appliance.

The local took the matter to the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation. The case was checked, and a new artificial limb purchased. Now he can work regularly.

In other cases, workers who were losing their earning power because of failing vision or hearing have been provided with glasses or hearing aids, without cost when necessary.

LPA

Share Sacrifices, Paperworkers' Parley Demands

THE CIO is one of the "greatest forces for democracy in this beloved land of ours," Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, told 40 delegates, alternates and guests attending the second constitutional convention of the United Paperworkers of America in Chicago last week.

Haywood, who was re-elected by acclamation as honorary chairman of the convention, stated that the CIO was now numerically stronger than it had been before the expulsion of the Communist-dominated unions.

In reply to Sen. Robert A. Taft's (O.) denunciation of CIO "communism," Haywood said:

"We are doing more to defeat communism than all the statesmanship in the world. We are working to eliminate the economic and social abuses that give rise to communism. We are ousting the Communists from their positions in the labor movement."

IN A STRONG attack on Taft and the reactionary policies for which he stands, Haywood declared:

"Bob Taft never worked for a living a day in his life. He was born with a silver spoon. He grew up with the comforts given him by his daddy. Whether Taft is defeated or elected, the fight against Taftism must go on until the government returns to the people."

Re-elected by acclamation were Harry D. Sayre, president; Frank Grasso, secretary-treasurer; Anthony Adamo, Charles Bridgewater, Robert J. Davidson, Burt J. Mason, Harry Scott and Nicholas Vrataric, members of the general executive board.

The convention increased the per capita tax to $1 per member per month. The dues were hiked to $2 to $3 a month, each local having the right to set them within those limits.

Officers' salaries were raised to $5750 a year for the president and secretary-treasurer. Members of the general executive board, who also serve as area directors, received an increase to $4600.

THE CONVENTION adopted a statement on the national emergency which declared:

"The home-front sacrifices made necessary by the mobilization program should be shared equitably by all groups in our population and the working people should not be asked to take the major burden on themselves."

The convention called for an excess profits tax and the elimination of profiteering through federal controls. A resolution on foreign policy said:

"It is imperative, if the United States is to maintain its position of leadership in international affairs, that the common people of the world have full confidence in our policies. Diplomatic and armed resistance to Communist aggression is not sufficient.

"Our government must be a symbol of freedom and hope to the peoples of the world, in contrast to the slavery of the Communist police state. The foreign policy of our government must aim at the economic and social improvement of the living conditions of the world's working people.

"It must be made clear that our nation stands opposed, not merely to Communist slavery, but to all dictatorships and to the greed of vested interests, military cliques and exploiting landlords."

IN HIS keynote address, Sayre told the delegates that the Paperworkers now have 187 locals representing the employes of 249 plants.

The union, founded as an organizing committee in 1944, has 224 collective bargaining agreements, he said.

Sayre pointed with pride to contract and wage gains made by the union. Paperworkers' contracts, he declared, compare with the best in the land.

Since the union's formation, he stated, it has been the leading force for the improvement of wages and working conditions in the paper industry. More than 75% of the membership is now covered by health and welfare plans, he reported, and about 50% has pension plans.

A majority of members have received substantial wage increases in 1950, Sayre told the delegates. He indicated that the union intended to extend those gains in the coming months in plants where they have not yet been obtained.

Sen. Lucas (D. Ill.), who spoke on the opening day, declared that the vote in the November elections will be one of the largest in history. He spoke strongly for an excess profits tax, asserting:

"So long as American boys are dying on the battlefields, there should be no profiteering.

"It behooves the labor movement of Illinois and of the nation to protect the social gains we have made by defeating the reactionaries in the coming elections."

The Senate majority leader chided Taft for having talked of a "rubber stamp" Congress.

"No individual, no group of individuals and certainly no newspaper in Illinois can tell me what to do when I go to the U.S. Senate," he declared.

R. J. Thomas, CIO assistant director of organization, told the convention that CIO now has 200,000 more members than it had before the Communist-dominated unions were expelled.

THOMAS, who toured Soviet plants in 1945, denounced current Russian propaganda which attacks working conditions in the U. S.

"There are no safety conditions in Russian factories," he said.

"I didn't see a man or woman who looked as though they were anywhere near 65 years of age. They kill them there before they get that old with hard work and lack of decent living."

The convention also called for effective rent control, improved health and safety precautions in the paper industry, and support of PAC.

Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin reviewed the gains made by working people under Democratic administrations.

"My mommy told me never to get in a car with a strange man."

French Workers Taught To Fight Communism

In a back room at the Paris headquarters of France's non-Communist trade union federation, Force Ouvriere, groups of 30 to 40 students put in a ten-day study period.

The students are miners, mechanics, machinists, and laborers. They're from all over France and some from North Africa. They were sent to those back-room sessions to learn methods of fighting communism. FO locals and the Paris branch pay the bills.

The program is a unique one for France, and so far some 300 trade unionists have attended. ECA says the program is "operating on the theory that workers armed with knowledge are better able to protect their interests." It describes the "students" as "middle-aged workers, many with sketchy academic training but virtually all with years of first hand experience in the plant . . ."

Four Million Pupils In 'Sub-Standard' Buildings

MORE THAN 4 million American school kids are getting their education in "sub-standard" classrooms and school buildings.

What's more—it will cost the nation some $15 billion during the next 10 years to bring school facilities up to decent levels—and to expand the whole system for the bigger school population of the coming decade.

Seriousness of the school situation was outlined in the current issue of the Economic Outlook, published by the CIO's Department of Education and Research.

THE OUTLOOK estimated that about 26,600,000 of the nation's younger generation are attending elementary or high schools this year. Government experts predict that by 1960, more than 34 million will be enrolled.

"The school emergency is one which requires immediate action," says the Outlook.

"Already millions of Americans are disappointed because of the failure of the House Labor & Education Committee to report favorably a general federal aid to education bill and a school construction bill.

"They are watching with more than passing interest to see whether Congress takes action which adequately meets the educational needs of American youngsters.

"They realize that action on this problem is as important for the defense of democracy as any action that can be taken by Congress."

The CIO has endorsed a proposal for $3 billion in federal grants for school construction during the next five years.

The CIO has recommended that the largest possible share of such federal funds be allocated to "those states least able to support the necessary school building program, and that within the states, the greater share of the funds be granted to those school districts that need help most."

Farm area schools need particular help, the Outlook commented. It noted that the value of rural school buildings per pupil is less than half the rate for city schools.

In addition, study of separate Negro and white school facilities in the southern states indicated that "white students attended schools valued at $271 per child, while Negro students attended schools valued at $67 per child . . .

"THE CIO proposes that, in any bill providing federal aid for school construction, in states where separate schools are maintained by law, the state must submit a program which provides for a progressive equalization of school plant facilities between the races before receiving federal grants.

"CIO members are concerned that the youngsters of the United States be given the finest opportunities possible to prepare themselves for living in a democratic society.

"They know that the greatest single force in the development of the public school system of the United States was the early organized labor movement of this country.

"True to the goals of the early American labor movement, CIO members will go to the polls in the various elections in the future more and more concerned as to whether their individual Congressmen supported a program of federal aid for education both in school construction and in general federal aid."

CP Attempt To Have Shoe Union Hit CIO Flops

THE DWINDLING remnants of the left wing in the CIO made a dramatic attempt to foist a common or garden variety of Communist anti-CIO policy on the seventh biennial convention of the United Shoe Workers in Cleveland, O., last week.

They failed miserably.

After hours of debate during which they belabored CIO Pres. Philip Murray in a succession of speeches for his leadership in throwing the Communist-dominated unions out of the CIO, and bitterly condemned the CIO itself for what they called "raiding" of the ousted organizations, they ended up on the short end of a 620 to 229 vote. The entire Chicago delegation, representing 123 votes, refrained from casting their ballots.

The left wingers failed utterly in their attempt to convince the more than 300 delegates, representing some 70,000 members, that they were "losing their freedom" by following CIO policy. Nor were they able to convince the majority that the union should keep silent on the important question of foreign affairs rather than support President Truman and the United Nations in Korea.

THEIR PROPOSAL was offered from the floor as a substitute for part of a nine-point statement of policy submitted by Pres. William E. Thornton and other international officers. After it was voted down, the Thornton-sponsored statement was adopted without a dissenting vote.

"Our union supports President Truman and the United Nations," said its first point, "and wishes to see it strenghtened in its efforts to secure international understanding and agreements built upon world law.

"We believe that our American democracy is the most perfect form of government, and we wish to make it more effective in serving the people by extending its use.

"Affiliation with the CIO provides us with the sound leadership of Pres. Philip Murray and the policies of that great organization. We believe in strong trade unionism, and we must use all of the resources at our disposal. With the aid and assistance provided by the CIO we must continue our organizational drive until every shoe worker in the United States is a member of our organization."

IN OTHER POINTS of the statement the union demanded unspecified wage increases to offset increases in the cost of living; social benefits including pensions, holidays, life and accident insurance and sick and death benefits to be paid by the employer, and a minimum wage of $1 an hour for the industry with a continuing fight to keep the Fair Labor Standards Act's 75c minimum in effect with no provisions for less pay for learners.

The delegates also supported the statement's demand for the same take-home pay when new machinery is introduced into a plant, pledged themselves to try to stop migration of the industry to low-wage areas, and demanded a shorter work week.

In addition, they voted full support to the CIO Political Action Committee.

The convention in another resolution condemned "Communism in whatever form we find it," and went on record "to give full support to President Truman and the United Nations in their determined effort to fight morally and physically any further encroachment of Communism wherever it arises."

Other resolutions passed supported CIO policy calling for labor unity, aid to Israel, repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and intensification of the drive to organize the unorganized.

Speakers included Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, who recounted the ouster of the Communist-dominated unions from the CIO and urged support for the UN defense of South Korea; Stanley Ruttenberg, director of the CIO Dept. of Research and Education; Tilford Dudley, assistant director of CIO-PAC; CIO Regional Directors Sam Sponseller, of Cleveland, and Walter Harris, of Columbus, O.; Rep. Stephen M. Young (D.), who is seeking re-election, and Patrick O'Malley, president of the Cleveland CIO Council.

Haywood Given Membership, Shoes

The Shoe Workers at their biennial convention in Cleveland last week made CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood a life member of their organization.

In addition they started him on his way to winning the CIO's best-dressed man title by presenting him with two pairs of shoes, the gift of International Shoe Co. employes whose union organization he helped set up in the early days of the CIO.

Now if the CIO Clothing Workers only come through with a union label suit—

Chemical Union Will Step Up Organizing

By MILTON MURRAY

DELEGATES TO the fifth constitutional convention of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers Union faced up to the increased cost of living and overwhelmingly voted their union an increased per capita tax.

By vote of the 409 delegates who assembled in Cleveland Sept. 21-23, per capita was increased from 75c per month to $1.

The added income will not only offset the increased cost of operation UGC&CWA—along with other unions—has suffered, but will permit an expanded organizing campaign, increased education and research services and more effective operation of the union.

PART OF the organizing campaign will be a major move westward to carry CIO organization of chemical workers to the West Coast and to some of the intermediate spots where the ultra hush-hush chemical industry has been spotting its plants in strategic locations — usually isolated from union-organized centers.

Recognizing the feudalistic attitude and the tremendous power of the chemical industry, delegates also voted to submit to the membership, with their recommendation, a referendum on adding 25c per month to dues payments to be earmarked for a strike defense fund.

The three national officers of the Chemical Workers and eight incumbent members of the international executive board were elected without opposition. Three board vacancies were also filled without opposition.

Officers elected were: Pres. Martin Wagner; Vice Pres. Joe Joy; Secy.-Treas. Cecil Martin; incumbent board members, Stephen G. McMullen, Jack Curran, Leslie Phillips, Roberts P. Buchanan, Chester J. Adamczyk, Chester Walczak, Elwood D. Swisher and A. F. Bruyea; new board members, David Abrams, Joseph Appelbaum and Al Fremin.

During the three busy days of their session the delegates also:

1 Rejected proposal of a merger with the CIO Intl. Oil Workers Union.

2 Revised their constitution to improve administration and operation of the union and to perfect democratic procedure.

3 Called upon industry to ease the squeeze of rising living costs by granting voluntary wage increases — and urged locals to press for volunteers.

4 Exhorted locals and individual members to give greater support to political action.

5 Adopted a series of resolutions supporting CIO policy; commending President Truman's Korean stand; endorsing union label campaigns and urging a new and enforced battle for civil rights.

Joseph Ferguson, the fiery campaigner who is now picked by the best informed Ohio newspapermen and a majority of political dopesters as almost certain to beat Sen. Robert A. Taft, addressed the convention.

Ferguson made a brief and barbed speech. He said that Taft has not merely been against labor. Taft's record, Ferguson spelled out, shows he has voted consistently against the interests of the ordinary, everyday American citizen whose only lack—aside from housing, educational facilities, medical care and security—is a million dollars.

THE CHEMICAL Workers organizing drive—one of the main topics of the convention—is aimed not only at westward expansion, but at pinning down membership in plants now under contract and in organizing the unorganized branch plants of corporations where UGC&CWA is now represented. Outstanding among these are Dupont, National Gypsum, Carbide & Carbon, Minnesota Mining and Celotex.

The chemical industry is regarded as one of the most difficult to be faced by organized labor. The officers report to the convention declared:

"Probably no other American industry is dominated by a more monopolistic, paternalistic, ruthlessly calculating oligarchy than is the chemical industry. Its high diversification, its widely scattered operations and its colossal financial reserves, together with its willingness to spend fabulous sums to defeat unionization, make it the greatest remaining bastion of the open shop and the company union."

Robert C. Edwards, UGC&CWA director of organization, outlined an organizing program calling for careful planning, timing and execution of specific drives.

"We cannot afford a haphazard attack which dissipates and spreads our strength," Edwards said. "We must mobilize our full power in any campaign we undertake."

The organizing drive tied in with the proposal to establish a strike defense fund to be financed by regular monthly contributions by all members.

The defense fund referendum will be conducted in January under direction of the international executive board.

Haywood Is Voted Honorary Member

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, received the latest of a long list of honorary union memberships when he appeared as guest speaker at the UGC&CWA convention.

Lauded as a "friend of all labor and a particular friend of our union," Haywood was unanimously voted a life membership. With the membership went a solid gold engraved membership card.

MORE THAN $400 was collected for PAC by this rifle-totin' committee at the United Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers convention at Cleveland. Contributors received chances on the rifle and other prizes, including those shown in the photo. Members of the committee are: George F. Swift Jr., Albert Kural, S. T. Matthews, Al Yengel, Charles C. Hayes, John Marshall, Chairman Elwood Swisher, Del Durant, John Phillips, Duncan Manning and Kenneth Huntsman. The convention also approved a far flung organization drive.

House Committee Erases Red Label

ENEMIES of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers have long made hay with the outdated charge of the House Un-American Activities Committee that the union was one of those infiltrated with Communist influence.

This label was officially, formally and completely erased by the Un-American Activities Committee in a press release issued during the UGC&CWA convention in Cleveland.

(The erasure, incidentally received practically 100% indifference among the daily newspapers that carried the original listing.)

Over the signature of Chairman John Wood, the committee stated:

"The name of the United Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers of America shall be dropped from future editions of the committee pamphlet, '100 Things you Should Know About Communism.'

"No additional copies of the present issue of any committee publication containing reference to this union shall be issued without notation that the statement about the union is no longer true.

"Any statement by any person to the effect that this committee now finds the United Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers, under its present officers and by-laws, to be under Communist influence or leadership is unauthorized and untrue."

P. O. Traces Letter Protesting Probe Of Rumely To His Office

WHEN REP. BUCHANAN (D. Pa.), chairman of the House Lobby Investigating Committee, received a letter from Dr. J. R. Kirchner of Burley, Ida., in an envelope which had gone through a postage meter and had been mailed in New York, he began to wonder.

Especially since the letter belabored him for daring to demand that Dr. Edward A. Rumely, operator of the anti-labor, anti-Fair Deal Committee for Constitutional Government, disclose the names of the contributors who keep the CCG war chest bulging. And since Kirchner added that all other congressmen were getting copies of the letter, too.

Buchanan looked at the envelope closely. It was a plain envelope, with no return address. It looked as if it had been addressed by stencil rather than typewriter. And congressmen received it just before they voted on citing Rumely for contempt of Congress because of his refusal to give the lobby investigators the information they wanted.

SO HE ASKED Postmaster General Jesse Donaldson to find out for him who used the postage meter, which carries an identifiable number. Donaldson found out. It was the Committee for Constitutional Government.

"I vigorously defend the CCG's right to try to influence Congress by mass mailing of reproductions of letters of their supporters, or by any other legal means," he said.

"I feel, however, that people who try to influence Congress should come out in the open and identify themselves, and not try to hide behind such subterfuges."

Buchanan, incidentally, is facing a tough fight for re-election in the 33rd Pennsylvania district, which centers around the steel city of McKeesport. The tories he has outraged by his determination to dig into the identity of the heavy sugar supporters of such outfits as the CCG, Merwin K. Hart's National Economic Council, Joseph P. Kamp's Constitutional League, etc., are out to get him.

THE PENNSYLVANIA Manufacturers Association, dominated from what seems like time immemorial by the octogenarian reactionary Republican, former U. S. Sen. Joseph P. Grundy, is trying to smear him with small business men by mailing out stories that he voted against their interests.

The organized physicans are reported getting ready to crack down on him lest he get around some day to doing a thorough job of probing the American Medical Association, which in 1949 spent more money than any other outfit to wheedle congressmen into voting as it wished.

Wood Union Wins Boost

Approximately 5000 CIO Woodworkers in western Washington State gained an average 7½c-an-hour pay boost in a contract with the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co. The pact, which includes a wage-reopening clause, provides raises ranging from 2½ to 15c. Another 5000 workers stand to benefit soon by the increase, said J. E. Fadling, union president.

IWA Vice Pres. Al Hartung said temporary wage raises have been negotiated in other Northwest regions. He stated that although there is a shortage of loggers and mill workers, no operations have been forced down but "some men are doing two men's jobs."

$9 Billion Business

In the 1948-49 marketing season farmer cooperatives did a $9,300,000,000 business, an increase of 8% over 1947-48. Membership increased 500,000 to 6,384,000, or more than half of the nation's farmers.

24 Accused Of Paying Kickback To Left-Wing Paper

THE 24 MEMBERS of the CIO New York Newspaper Guild employed by the left-wing weekly National Guardian have been cited for trial before the local on charges of kicking back part of their pay to keep the publication afloat.

A trial board will be elected at a general membership meeting of the local on Oct. 18. Hearings, it is expected, will start soon after.

The charges were brought by a sub-committee of the local executive board following an investigation. The committee found that each Guardian employe "voluntarily agreed to lend the Guardian a part of his salary" for one or two weeks beginning the first week in January, and that the local was not notified of the "illegal" agreement "until the 'loans' had assumed the form of a continuing and permanent abridgement" of a contract signed Nov. 1, 1949.

The committee's report, which covered only the time between Jan. 1 and Feb. 8, when local officers learned of the state of affairs, said that Guardian staff members "loaned" management all of their salaries except $40 a week plus $10 for each dependent.

The Guardian unit members specifically are charged with entering into an agreement with management, which they cannot do under the American Newspaper Guild constitution; acting to circumvent bargaining between the Guild and management; negotiating for inferior conditions of employment, and failing to report the contract violation.

John P. McManus, former president of the New York Guild local and a former international vice president of the union, is general manager of the National Guardian.

The charges recalled accusations hurled several years ago at Guild members employed by the Communist Daily Worker. Staff members were accused of kicking back part of their pay and with failing to press for contract improvements, but were never brought to trial.

George J. Bott

A veteran employe of the National Labor Relations Board, George J. Bott has been promoted from associate general counsel to general counsel. He succeeds Robert N. Denham, anti-union general counsel whose departure—at President Truman's request — was viewed with no regret by organized labor.

Union's Right To Name Its Agents Upheld

THE PRIVATELY owned and operated version of the National Labor Relations Act foisted by the Shell Oil Co. and the Shell Chemical Corp. on Local 367 of the CIO Oil Workers is declared illegal in an intermediate report by Alba B. Martin, NLRB examiner.

The firms, with plants at Houston, Tex., had refused to discuss grievances under their union contracts with anybody except their employes, and sought to bar not only union officials who happened not to be on the proper committee, but declined to proceed when an oil plant employe attended a chemical plant grievance session, or vice versa.

"RESPONDENTS (the companies) contend that the union in fact was present in the form of the workmen's committee," Martin found.

"If the class or group who spoke for the union was in any way limited or determined by the respondents through contract or otherwise, the union was not present through representatives of its own selection but through representatives imposed by respondents.

"Here respondents insisted upon the union's being represented only by respondents' employes, the respondents therefore, rather than the union, making the selection as to what class or group should speak for the bargaining representative.

"The refusal to discuss grievances under any other condition was an infringement upon the union's unqualified right to be present in the form of any persons it selected."

The trial examiner's recommended order, which becomes final within 20 days unless appealed, directs the Shell firms to stop violating the Wagner Act; to permit union representatives to attend grievance sessions with the refinery manager or the superintendent of the chemical plant; to cancel that part of the contract permitting adjustment of grievances without the presence of a union representative, and to pledge not to write any similar provision into any future pact.

Will Ignore Tiny Disputes, NLRB Says

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board set down in black and white last week the standards which will govern the exercise of its jurisdiction under the Taft-Hartley Act.

The standards were set forth in eight simultaneous, unanimous decisions which, the board said, "reflect in large measure the results reached in the board's past decisions disposing of similar jurisdictional issues."

"The time has come," the statement continued, "when experience warrants the establishment and announcement of certain standards which will better clarify and define where the difficult line can best be drawn.

"The board has long been of the opinion that it would better effectuate the purposes of the act, and promote the prompt handling of major cases, not to exercise its jurisdiction to the fullest extent prossible under the authority delegated to it by Congress, but to limit that exercise to enterprises whose operations have, or at which labor disputes would have, a pronounced impact upon the flow of interstate commerce. This policy should, in our opinion, be maintained."

THE SETTING of standards means that the board will continue not to exercise the power it has over disputes so local in character that they do not have enough influence on interstate commerce "to justify an already overburdened federal board in expending time, energy and money."

Robert N. Denham, former NLRB general counsel who resigned recently at President Truman's behest, made every effort to have the board exercise its jurisdiction over minor local disputes, but was constantly refused.

The board, when federal jurisdiction exists, take cases involving:

1 Instrumentalities and channels of interstate and foreign commerce.

2 Public utility and transit systems.

3 Establishments which operate as integral parts of a multi-state enterprise (e.g., chain stores).

4 Enterprises which produce or handle goods destined for out-of-state shipment, or performing services outside a state, when the goods or services are valued at $25,000 or more a year.

5 Enterprises which furnish services or materials necessary to the operation of enterprises falling under Nos. 1, 2 and 3, provided such goods or services are valued at $50,000 or more a year.

6 Any enterprise which has (a) a direct inflow of material valued at $500,000 or more a year; (b) an indirect inflow of material valued at $1 million or more a year, or (c) a combination inflow and outflow of goods which add up to at least a total of the amounts required in Nos. 4. 5 and 6 (a) and (b).

7 Establishments substantially affecting national defense.

Spingarn Named

Stephen A. Spingarn, a special assistant to President Truman, has been nominated by the President as a member of the Federal Trade Commission. Spingarn, who has been at the White House since last year and in Government service since 1934, will fill out the term of the late Edwin Lamar Davis whose seat would have expired in 1956.

Bott To Tell Why Charges Are Rejected

GEORGE J. BOTT, new general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, is making some changes.

Under the Taft-Hartley Act, the general counsel can reject an unfair labor practice charge, putting the question beyond any kind of appeal. One of the points made against Robert N. Denham, Bott's predecessor, was that he ordinarily kept mum when he refused to accept a charge so that the NLRB itself didn't always know what kind of things he was throwing out.

Bott announced Oct. 3 he would make public what he does with every unfair practice charge. However, he said he wouldn't ordinarily disclose the names of the persons involved in the charges lest they suffer harassment from baseless charges. But he declared that he would publicly describe every appeal decision he made in general terms and state his arguments.

Closing Plant No Poll Bar

Can an employer avoid an NLRB election by shutting his plant and saying he has gone out of business? The National Labor Relations Board says "No."

The West Endicott Bag Co., Endicott, N.Y., began operations Jan. 1, 1950, and stopped production when its employes went on strike June 14.

Local 22, AFL Grain Millers, petitioned for a representation election, and at the hearing one of the partners testified the plant will not be reopened. However, the union maintained its picket lines, in the belief the closing is only temporary.

The NLRB has ordered an election "in view of the possibility that the employer's operations may be resumed at a later date." The board split, with Members Houston, Reynolds and Styles voting for an election and Chairman Herzog and Member Murdock dissenting.

The latter two said "the uncontradicted testimony of the employer discloses that the plant is closed and that operations will not be resumed. Under these circumstances we would dismiss this petition at this time." LPA

A. S. Haywood Also To Direct Councils Dept.

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, CIO vice president and director of organization, has added the supervision and coordination of the activities of almost 300 CIO city, county and state industrial union councils to his duties.

He was appointed last week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to take over the work previously done

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD
Has Additional Job

for a decade by John Brophy, CIO director of industrial union councils. Brophy recently went on leave to join the New York staff of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, which works with the United Nations as well as with unions in the western hemisphere.

Haywood will continue to carry on as CIO vice president and organization director. In a letter to the councils notifying them of his appointment, Murray wrote:

"I am sure that you will give Vice Pres. Haywood the same fine degree of cooperation that you have extended to Brother Brophy in the past."

New Zealand Tories Fail To Reduce Taxes

A year ago, when the Labor government was in power in New Zerland, the Tories howled that taxes could and must be cut. Sidney George Holland, then leader of the opposition, so declared in the House of Representatives.

The people believed the promises of tax cuts, ousted the Labor regime, gave the Tories power. Holland is now Prime Minister. The 1950 budget, first non-Labor budget since 1936, has been introduced. Over-all taxation is boosted from 71 pounds per head, to 77—an all-time high.

Food subsidies and price controls were removed, and as a result, food alone has risen more than 13% in the last few months. Said the Labor opposition: "The present government consistently and consciously lied to the people during the election campaign. They promised to reduce the cost of living but all they have done is to keep the Tory policy of giving to him that hath."

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

Nine Senators Hope Congress Will Repeal 'Subversive' Bill

NINE OF THE 11 Senators who staged the dramatic but futile 22-hour fight to block passage of the McCarran-Mundt - Nixon - Wood Act to control subversives joined last week in urging repeal or drastic modification of the measure when Congress reconvenes.

At the same time they warned advocates of repeal or modification not to join with Communists in fighting it, and called upon all Americans to obey it so long as it is law.

Signing the statement were Sens. Douglas (Ill.), Lehman (N.Y.), Kilgore (W. Va.), Kefauver (Tenn.), Humphrey (Minn.), Murray (Mont.), Graham (N.C.), Green (R.I.) and Chavez (N.M.). All are Democrats. With them in the diehard fight to uphold the President's veto were Sen. Leahy (D. R.I.) and Sen. Langer (R. N.D.). Langer collapsed on the floor of the Senate after five hours of speaking against the measure.

THE NINE Senators said they opposed the bill "because it would not give adequate security but would seriously endanger freedom."

"We now hope," they said, "that when Congress reconvenes in the calmer post-election atmosphere, it may repeal or drastically modify this unwise law and enact a positive, effective security program, and we shall continue to work for this objective.

"Nevertheless, now that it has become law, we are confident that in the best democratic tradition all Americans will loyally obey this measure. For it was passed by Congress under democratic procedures and represented the judgment of the overwhelming majority of the members of both house. We believe the decision was a mistake but, as believers in democracy, we should bow to the will of the majority.

"Secondly, we urge with all the emphasis at our command that under no conditions should loyal and liberal - minded Americans who oppose the act help the communists or join in organizations with them in their hypocritical attacks against the Mundt-Ferguson-McCarran Act.

"Communist party members are a devious and deceitful group, whose primary loyalty is to a foreign power. While they claim full freedom of speech for themselves when they are in a minority, they refuse to accord it to others when they take power.

"The Communists aim at violent revolution and not peaceful political action or geniune civil liberaties. They are under the control of the Russian dictatorship and a large percentage of their members would be ready to spy and to commit acts of sabotage against us when a test of loyalties came.

"Yet experience has taught us that they invariably seek to use an issue like the Mundt-Ferguson-McCarran Act for their party purposes. Thus, an act which purports to strike at them will undoubtedly be the occasion for new Communist party manipulations and appeals. 'United front' organizations will be set up with the avowed aim of securing the Act's repeal. 'Defense funds' will be gathered to protect the 'martyrs.'

"Citizens generally will be urged to join in these efforts. But the control and benefit as usual will be kept for the party and its ultimate, anti-democratic objectives. And in the long run such maneuvering will boomerang and hurt the whole campaign for the act's repeal.

"WE SHOULD not permit such a dastardly group to represent themselves as the defenders of that freedom which they would destroy. And unsuspecting, decent persons should not be drawn into their trap. Liberal-minded people should not join such communist-sponsored organizations which are urging repeal of the McCarran bill, attend communist-sponsored meetings or sign communist - sponsored petitions. They should carefully scrutinize organizations which claim to be working for these ends and avoid the slightest association with so-called 'united fronts' with communists.

"To isolate and expose the Communists in this and other efforts, the blunderbuss registration provisions of the act are not nearly as effective as the common sense, the experience and the guidance of those who have been through these battles before.

"Finally, we urge all loyal, liberal-minded Americans to develop their own methods and use existing non-communist and anti-communist organizations to urge the repeal of the Mundt-Ferguson-McCarran Act and the substitution for it of a measure that will give adequate security with the least impairment of liberty."

Organizing Drive Just Kept Going

It's something more than 300 miles from Houston to San Antonio, Tex., but the distance wasn't too great for Local 804 of the CIO Transport Service Employees Union to go into action when members decided that Intl.-Great Northern Railway redcaps should be organized.

Led by Local Pres. Luther Stullivan, the Houston station employes worked with such vigor that they organized not only San Antonio, but also I-GN redcaps at Palestine, Tex. The National Mediation Board has just certified the union as bargaining agent for the redcaps in both cities.

Civic Employees Union Asks 36c In Detroit

The Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee-CIO has presented demands to the mayor for a 36c package for city workers in Detroit. Joseph R. Adamson, GCEOC regional director, said it includes a 33c hourly pay raise, 8c of which would cover the cost-of-living hike.

The committee has also asked that the city pay the full cost of life, medical, and health insurance plans, estimated by the union at about 3.1c an hour.

"You mix these?"

CSC Plans Program For GI's

THE CIO National Community Services Committee has authorized a comprehensive program for servicemen and veterans patterned after the activities of the CIO War Relief Committee during World War II. CSC succeeded the War Relief Committee.

The War Relief Committee cooperated with the USO and the Armed Services in the entertainment of servicemen and in some places operated canteens, usually with the assistance of the AFL. Two monthly publications were issued, one for servicemen and another—toward the close of the war— for veterans.

A CIO Veterans Bureau has already been opened at 306 West Third St., Los Angeles, Cal., by the Community Service Committee of the CIO Council in that city.

CIO members in the armed forces passing through Los Angles or stationed nearby can get in touch with the bureau by 'phoning Michigan 9361.

John Goss, CIO Veterans Representative in Los Angeles, who is charge of the bureau, recently related that he entertained three CIO GIs from the midwest for a three-day weekend at a total cost of $8.26 for each man.

The entertainment included meals, lodging, a visit to a night club, dancing at a Santa Monica ballrom and a boat ride.

With other civic and social agencies, the Veterans Bureau has formed a Los Angeles Armed Services Organization—with the aim of furnishing entertainment and other services for GI absolutely free.

N. J. Bell Co. Wins Fight Against Award

THE NEW JERSEY Bell Telephone Co., which has been screaming in legal anguish since a compulsory arbitration board gave 11,000 members of the CIO Communications Workers a $2.50 weekly raise last April, last week won its fight against the award.

The State Supreme Court, to which the utility carried an appeal, set aside the award and sent the case back to the arbitration board on the ground that it had failed to show if it decided upon the $2.50 by reason of "fact or speculation."

However, the court ruled that the board exceeded its powers when it gave CWA Division 55 a modified union shop. It also dismissed the company's contention that the state's compulsory arbitration law is unconstitutional.

The law applies only to public utilities. It requires the governor to seize a utility threatened by a strike or lockout, and to compel the disputants to submit their differences to a board composed of three public members and one each representing the union and the employer.

Division 55 members had fought a losing fight through a succession of courts to obtain payment of the wage increase until the case was settled.

The dispute goes back to the expiration of a previous contract on May 10, 1949. After months of negotiating had proved fruitless, the union voted to strike late in February. Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll seized the company on Mar. 1 and invoked the compulsory arbitration law.

The board's order for the increase was filed with Driscoll on April 20 and its findings of fact five weeks later.

Public Always Loses To Bell In Michigan

THE MICHIGAN Bell Telephone Co. and the Michigan courts have a system—heads, the company wins; tails, the public loses.

It works out like this: When the Michigan Public Service Commission grants Bell a rate increase, the courts have decided that it goes into effect at once despite any legal action which might lead to it being overturned. But if the PSC rules that the company must refund overcharges, the courts have decided that the monopoly can collect while it carries appeals through the whole judicial process.

This was pointed up recently when Atty.-Gen. Stephen J. Roth, on behalf of the PSC, asked Circuit Court Judge Louis Coash for "the same relief the company got in 1945" by an order impounding money already collected under a rate increase until the courts can decide if the boost was legal. Coash refused, bowing to a company argument that such a course would upset its accounting system.

The 1945 reference was to a PSC order directing the company to refund profits which were above a normal return for a public utility. The court refused to act until the case is decided—and it's still in the courts five years later.

U. S. Agency Bans Bread Experts OK

THE STAFF of life ain't what it used to be—and the U. S. Food and Drug Administration apparently wants it kept that way.

At any rate it has banned from interstate commerce, effective Oct. 9, a new type of bread that is enthusiastically endorsed by 500,000 users who proclaim its taste infinitely better than the common commercial bakery variety.

An overwhelming majority of the country's food experts also find the proscribed bread far more nourishing than any other kind they can buy in the stores.

The new bread was developed by Dr. Olive M. McCay, of the Cornell Univ. School of Nutrition, and the Ithaca (N. Y.) Consumer Cooperative. Dr. McCay was chief nutritionist for the Navy during World War II. It contains 6% soy flour, 8% skim milk solids and 2% wheat germ, and is based on unbleached—not artificially whitened and prettified—wheat flour. It is sold as Coop Triple Rich bread.

THE FOOD and Drug Administration has promulgated a decree barring from interstate commerce bread made with more than 3% soy flour or 1½% wheat germ.

Bread of 3% or less soy flour can be labelled "wheat bread," and that with 10% or more soy flour can be called "bread." But a product in between, like Triple Rich, has been jockeyed into a sort of legal no man's land by the Food and Drug Administration and cannot be sold across a state line beginning Oct. 9. Many states pick up federal standards automatically.

The Food and Drug Administration was apparently not influenced by these facts:

Triple Rich bread is being sold by consumer cooperatives as widely separated as those in New Haven, Conn., and Palo Alto, Cal.

The bread is eaten and enjoyed by the 125,000 inmates of New York State mental institutions.

Triple Rich has been adopted because of its superior taste and nutrition for the school public lunch programs of New York, Baltimore, Md., and other cities.

Nor was the federal agency influenced by the fact that commercial bakers are able to sell at a premium price all the Triple Rich they make. Nor the additional fact that the largest independent eastern producer of premium-price breads, whose products are sold in what is probably the world's greatest market area, has been planning to build a new bakery to produce Triple Rich.

THE FOOD and Drug Administration acted after holding nearly a year of hearings and listening to 160 witnesses. Dr. McCay and Dr. Marion C. Pfund, of Cornell, representing the Amererican Home Economic Association and, indirectly, the country's millions of breadeaters, were given less than an hour each.

Both urged that all bakers be required to label their bread to show all ingredients, the calory content and the percentages of protein and water. But the Food and Drug Administration, which had heard hours of testimony by baking, flour and chemical interests, blandly decided that only "small groups" are interested in what goes into a loaf of bread.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED DELEGATES attended the seventh convention of the Confederacion General de Trabajadores (CGT) at Santurce, Puerto Rico. CGT is affiliated with the CIO as an industrial union council. The CGT executive board is shown in the photo above. Left to right, Pres. Vega Berrios of the Sugar Workers, CGT Gen. Secy. Armando Rivero, CGT Vice Pres. Dolores Gonzales (seated to the rear of Rivero), CGT Pres. Tomas Mendez, Mejia, CGT Secy.-Treas. Ramon Alvarez Conde, Secy.-Treas. Domitila Acosta of the Candy Workers; standing, Pres. Eduardo Melendez of the Acqueduct and Sewer Workers, CGT Vice Pres. Isidro Varga and CGT Vice Pres. Jose Ramon Aponte.

In the photo below Joseph A. Beirne, president of the CIO Communications Workers and member of the CIO executive board, is speaking to the Puerto Rican affiliate as a personal representative of CIO Pres. Philip Murray. In the foreground and dressed in white is Ernesto Ramos Antonini, CGT counsel, who served as interpreter for Beirne.

Temperate Criticism Called Slandering In Soviet Union

WHEN ODVAR LARSEN, president of the Norwegian Railroad Workers Union, went to Russia a few months ago as a member of a visiting trade union delegation, his Communist hosts told the group:

"Tell about all your impressions to the folks back home."

Larsen did. Now the Reds are burning up.

He told in an article for a newspaper that the delegation was showered with hospitality, that their hotel was fine and that Russian museums were interesting, including the one that showed a lot of relics from the days of the czars.

He also wrote that he didn't like the idea of using women for heavy manual labor, the low wages and living standards of workers, the lack of modern technical aids for them and the factory speedups. Nor was he at all impressed by the fact that union representatives wore uniforms.

His article, showing the bad as well as the good, has been denounced as "mendacious and slandering" in a Soviet newspaper. The Red writer didn't go on to show, however, where Larsen either told lies or slandered.

HST Is Asked To Seize Firm

Charging that the Columbus (Ohio) Transit Co. refused to arbitrate, local bus operators, members of the CIO Transport Workers, have asked President Truman to take over the line until a settlement is reached.

The men had postponed a threatened strike at the request of Federal Mediation Director Cyrus Ching. In their wire to Truman they said "even before the union had a chance to meet, the company arbitrarily refused Mr. Ching's request for additional conferences and said further negotiations were impossible."

Throwing Out Baby With Bath Water Dept.

In a review of Owen Latimore's "Ordeal by Slander," Duncan Aikman wrote in the Saturday Review of Literature:

"Even now some of the smear still sticks. At least once this summer a Lattimore speaking engagement was canceled by a vote of a suspicious summer-hotel audience.

"More recently the Saturday Evening Post saw fit to imply editorially that the Senate's inquisition into the Lattimore views was wholesome and desirable in view of our Governmen's proper concern with the question of 'how we lost China' —which is good deal like saying that a neat way to inquire into a distinguished physician's opinions of psychotherapy is to bring him to trial on charges of sadistic murder."

ARA Requests Atlantic, Gulf Pay Increases

THE CIO American Radio Association last week became the third CIO maritime union to seek an immediate wage increase from Atlantic and Gulf Coast ship operators as a result of the rising cost of living.

The ice was broken earlier in the week when agreement was reached with the Pacific Maritime Association providing wage and overtime rate increases of 5.4%.

ARA Pres. William R. Steinberg said the increase won from the 33 member companies making up the association would give 400 radio officers on more than 350 ships a basic monthly raise of $17.76, and increase their overtime rate from $1.75 to $1.85.

In a letter to the 96 East Coast and Gulf companies, Steinberg said the ARA "has been viewing with alarm the inflationary trend which has made its effect on the economic structure.

"We have been doing everything we can to convince our Government to take proper measures to eliminate the sources of inflation," he wrote.

"These measures have unfortunately not been taken and it appears that profiteering which has taken place in recent weeks has had an unhealthy effect on the purchasing power of our membership.

"We urge your immediate cooperation in this serious situation and request that negotiations be started on the union's request for a wage increase such as has been granted by other sections of industry faced with the same problems."

Negroes Nail Bridges' Lies About ARA

The CIO American Radio Association has refuted the charges of Intl. Longshoremen's Union Pres. Harry Bridges that ARA practices bigotry toward Negroes.

In testimony before a three-man committee appointed to hear charges of Communist domination in the ILWU last May, Bridges had accused the CIO of being "people that truly practice discrimination . . . particularly the radio operator's union (ARA)."

"You don't find any Negro radio operators," Bridges charged. "That's a lily white union from the word go." The Longshoremen's Union was subsequently expelled by the CIO.

In the last issue of ARA's monthly publication, "Log," appear three affidavits signed by Negro operators testifying that they are members of the union and have not been discriminated against because of their color.

One of the signers, John Douglass Gipson, said he had been an ARA member since 1944. He said:

"I have been free of any shadow of discrimination originating in the union. In the two cases where I encountered discrimination originating with the bigoted elements in the steamship company, I was backed to the hilt by my union and its officials.

"My own experience proves that Harry Bridges or anyone else who makes or spreads statements that ARA is a 'lily white' outfit is an outright and malicious liar."

Va. Locals To Raise Funds To Fight Taft

THE VIRGINIA CIO Council convention has recommended that half of all money collected by affiliates in PAC drives be sent to the National PAC earmarked for use against Sen. Robert A. Taft.

Money from many conservative sources has been reported pouring into the coffers of Taft's backers in the Buckeye State.

About 250 delegates to the Virginia council convention — which was held at Roanoke Sept. 28 to 30—decided to attempt to even the balance, recommending the special contribution to the campaign to replace Taft with Joseph Ferguson, his Democratic opponent.

THE CONVENTION also urged more extensive use by locals' Political Action Committees of the methods used to elect Temple L. Kessinger to the Virginia House of Delegates. Temple is president of Local 675 of the Papersworkers, Covington.

The methods included making a file of every union member, checking the names in the file against poll tax records and putting on an aggressive campaign to have union members pay their poll tax.

(Council Pres. Charles C. Webber announced that Kessinger's name would be added to the scroll of members who have done the most for the council. Webber in making the announcement presented Kessinger with a $100 check. Kessinger was honored because of his leadership of a campaign which led to the defeat of a move in the House of Delegates which would have made it virtually impossible to picket.)

The council endorsed continued joint action through the Virginia State Joint Political and Legislative Committee, which includes the AFL, the Intl. Association of Machinists and five railroad unions.

THE DELEGATES also called for improvement of the state safety and workmen's compensation laws; repeal of the public utilities anti-strike law, the "right-to-work" and the mine-seizure laws and the poll tax, enactment of a state minimum wage law and defeat of the proposed sales tax.

The convention adopted a strong report calling for state and federal legislation to end discrimination and segregation and for the continued organization of workers regardless of race, creed or color.

THE CONSTITUTION was changed to boost the number of vice presidents from 11 to 17 so that every international union in the the council may have a member on the board.

Webber was re-elected president. In the only contest, John Crew, Danville, Textile Workers, defeated Robert W. Turner, Richmond, Paperworkers, for secretary. Vice presidents elected are:

Boyd E. Payton, Lynchburg; C. E. Leadman, Front Royal, and James W. Drewery, Roanoke, all Textile Workers; J. C. Oliver, Big Island, Paperworkers; Alfred V. Atkinson, Richmond, Communications Workers; Opal Grant, Bradford, Rubber Workers; George Hardy, Charlottesville, Government Workers; Stuart Childress, Richmond, Clothing Workers; Luther Porter, Portsmouth, Woodworkers; James H. Boyette, Suffolk, Auto Workers; Lawrence Marine, Roanoke, Steelworkers; J. W. Scott, Pork Lock, Oil Workers; John A. Wilmer, Lynchburg, Shoe Workers; John P. Spry, Jr., Norfolk, Brewery Workers, J. A. Stephens, Pulaski, Electrical Workers; Roland Carvalho, Norfolk, Maritime Union, and Wesley Vanover, Pulaski, Chemical Workers.

Labor Party OK's Raises

THE EXECUTIVE committee of the British Labor Party bowed to organized labor Oct. 3 and relaxed its "wage freeze" policy. A resolution adopted by the committee also promised more vigorous action to reduce profits.

Last month, the Trades Union Congress demanded an end to the freeze against the advice of TUC leaders. More than half the TUC's 8,000,000 members are already seeking wage boosts. Organized labor, which is the Labor Party's chief support, had been cooperating with the government by restraining wage demands in order to forestall inflation.

The executive committee's action came shortly after Prime Minister Clement Atlee told the Labor Party conference at Margate, England, that a "policy of democratic socialism is the only dynamic alternative to totalitarian communism."

CAPITALISM is "static," said Atlee, and lacks the euthusiam needed to meet communism head on.

The day before, there was some criticism of the manner in which Britain's nationalized industries are being run. Too many of the former owners and others "not favorably disposed to the new order" are in key positions, according to the critics.

However, their protests carried little weight.

Members OK Streamlining Phone Union

SOME 300,000 members of the CIO Communications Workers have approved streamlining of the entire structure and method of operation of the union in a referendum election just complete, officers said last week.

The changes were voted at the last convention, subject to approval of the members, and are implemented by extensive revision of the international constitution. The referendum showed a three to one vote for approval.

Under them there will be only two levels of policy-making, the local and the international. The 38 divisions are to be dissolved. Contracts held in their names will be renegotiated by the international as they expire. The 11 districts are to be administrative units of the international. The district directors, who will be elected, will compose the international executive board with the president, secretary-treasurer and three vice presidents.

The international will begin immediately to charter an estimated 1400 locals which are guaranteed their present jurisdiction.

Coast Guard Screening Of Seamen Attacked

The Coast Guard is supposed to be screening the crews of U. S. merchant ships to keep Communists from going aboard. But both CIO and AFL seamen's unions have protested that the Coast Guard is letting Reds on the ships while loyal Americans have been held off.

At the Propeller Club's convention at Baltimore, Md., Hoyt Haddock, executive secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, charged that the Coast Guard was making errors which were hard to correct because the "security panels" called for in the screening program have not yet been appointed. A Coast Guard officer is said to have admitted the mistakes.

Anti-Red Ordinance Is Ruled Illegal

THE ANTI-Communist ordinance of Jacksonville, Fla., is unconstitutional, State Circuit Judge Claude Ogilvie has ruled. He said it violates not only the state constitution's declaration of rights, but the 14th amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

Judge Ogilvie said, "The court recognizes the patriotic feeling which inspired the enactment of the ordinance. However, we must decide cases not according to our wishes or feelings but according to the law and the constitution."

In Washington, D. C., the graduating class of the FBI Academy was told the nation should guard against anti-Communist hysteria, because it is as dangerous as Communism itself. The warning came from Rear Adm. Sidney W. Souers, former Naval Intelligence officer, who said the Communists would like nothing better than "a wholesale outbreak of vigilante activities so that they might capitalize on the ensuing confusion."

He said the nation is meeting the challenge now "in a sober and sensible way," criticized the new anti-subversive law, and warned states and communities not to pass such "unnecessary" measures because they would be "ineffective and dangerous," and a "direct infringement of the Bill of Rights."

In California Gov. Earl Warren signed the loyalty oath bill and took the oath himself.

Also in California legislation for a 16-man non-partisan citizens' commission to combat communism and at the same time protect civil liberties has been asked by the California CIO Council.

The proposal came in the form of a resolution drawn up for presentation to the special session of the state legislature in Sacramento.

The commission would be composed of representatives of labor, business, government, and other groups which have had experience in combating communism, said Council Secy.-Treas. John A. Despol.

The CIO-backed proposal would provide a "watch-dog" commission on communism and civil liberties to advise the legislature, and make recommendations for legislation to strengthen internal security and civil rights.

"Many proposals now being offered to combat communism," Despol said, "are either ineffective or excessive, as they are piecemeal attempts to meet an over-all problem. Many are ill-considered and grow out of hysteria.

"A non-partisan commission would eliminate hysteria by formulating a carefully worked out, realistic program for freedom."

Despol said proposals for loyalty oaths for public employes "tend to create a false sense of security in the public mind."

"Such oaths," he said, "will probably result in getting at no more than a baker's dozen of Communists on perjury charges."

The commission would consider legislation designed to:

1. Establish a law enforcement agency comparable to the Federal Civil Rights section of the Federal Department of Justice.
2. Establish a permanent Commission on Civil Rights.
3. Establish a joint standing committee in the legislature on civil rights.
4. Increase professionalization of state and local police forces.
5. Strengthen the right to citizenship and its privileges.
6. Register Communists and communist organizations.
7. Register agents of all alien totalitarian organizations.

LPA

Democrats In Michigan Pick Pro-Labor Slate

A pro-labor slate of state candidates was nominated at the Democratic state convention at Grand Rapids, Mich. After walking off with Wayne County (which had half the convention votes) the liberals had little trouble giving Governor Williams running mates of his own choosing.

The convention also adopted resolutions favoring fair employment practices, a corporation profits tax, a vote for 18-year-olds, and pledged support for the "classic principles of academic freedom."

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer attended the 13th annual convention of the Wisconsin State Industrial Union Council in Eau Claire, Wis. In addressing the delegates the writer remarked that the council had made a tremendous advance from what it used to be when the "commies" were in control. The delegates in attendance voiced support of the CIO and its policies. It was a pleasure to be at this convention.

The writer proceeded to Chicago, where he attended the United Paperworkers of America convention at the Morrison Hotel. Upon addressing the convention I discussed the present economic situation facing the CIO and our country, particularly the excessive profits and the present wage level. There was considerable discussion and debate among the delegates, but unity had the final decision. Pres. Harry D. Sayre, Secy-Treas. Frank Grasso and all members of the executive board were re-elected. An address by Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin received an ovation.

Sen. Scott Lucas also addressed the delegates.

The writer also attended the convention of the United Shoe Workers in Cleveland, O., and the addressed the New York State Industrial Union Council. More about these two conventions next week.

CIO Pres. Murray has designated the writer as director of Industrial Union Councils in addition to present duties.

CIO Rep. Peter Flynn reports that in a run-off election at the Singer Sewing Machine Co., Elizabeth, N. J., the IUE-CIO won a smashing victory over the discredited UE by the following vote: IUE-CIO 4413, UE 2475.

Reg. Dir. William Taylor reports that in a union shop election at the Modine Mfg. Co., Paducah, Ky., the workers gave LIU 1745, United Radiator Workers, 317 votes to 3 against.

Reg. Dir. John Maurillo reports that in a union shop election at 10 plants of the Fulton County Tanners Association, Gloversville, N. Y., the workers voted overwhelmingly in favor of Local 1712, United Tannery Workers-CIO, by a vote of 497 to 96.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that in a representation election at the California Flaxseed Products Co., Los Angeles, Calif., the workers voted in favor of the United Brewery Workers-CIO by 14 to 6. CIO Field Rep. Rizer was in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. William Mayo reports that in a representation election at the U. S. Gypsum Co., South Bend, Ind., the workers chose the United Paperworkers of America by the following vote: UPA-CIO 66, no union 5. Rep. George McGrew was in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Loren Houser reports that in a representation election at the Huntingburg Brick Co., Huntingburg, Ind., the Paperworkers were victorious by the vote of UPA-CIO 14, no union 11.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, International Woodworkers, reports that in a representation election at Fiberboard Products, Inc., Cazadero, Calif., the workers voted IWA-CIO 15, AFL 5, no union 4.

"Have you a good skin ointment? My husband said he's been itching to get his hands on some scab!"

Control Of 82d Congress At Stake In Election

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

FROM COAST to coast, the fall election campaigns are nearing the home stretch. The air is full of slogans ("Nix on Nixon! Elect Douglas!" in California—"Beat Wrong-Way Taft!" in Ohio—"Bowles Delivers!" in Connecticut.)

Back-stage, speaking tours, radio speeches, luncheons, dinners, jamborees, picnics, baby-sitters, fleets of cars and buses, blizzards of printed material—all are being arranged. And every group, but particularly the die-hard GOP, is raising and spending money in fantastic quantities.

The prophets are spewing forth their visions of what is going to happen. The high-paid boys who were so wrong in 1948 are at it again, unabashed. They kiss off this candidate, elect that one, after consulting the ends of their thumbs or possibly talking to a few, usually GOP, political leaders.

But none of them can get around the two big unanswered questions: how many will vote, and for whom?

There are a few straws in the wind. It looks as if registration for this "off-year" election will be significantly higher than it was in 1948—a presidential year. Certainly it will break all records for an "off-year" registration. The bulk of registration is over by now, but the official figures won't be in for some time.

(On the other hand, 1948 registration wasn't nearly as high as it should have been. In terms of the number of people who could have registered, it was low. It wasn't even "normal." Ten million people have been added to the potential voters' list since 1940, simply by becoming 21 years of age. But only one million more voted in 1948 than in 1944.)

VOTING IN the primaries was heavy, here and there—and light in other places. Overall, allowing for the increase in the number of potential voters, there was an 8% increase over 1948 primary registration, and 53% of those who registered voted, as compared with 48% who voted in the 1946 primaries.

At stake is control of the 82nd Congress, which will set the course of this nation for the next two years—undoubtedly two of the most crucial years the United States has ever faced, domestically and internationally. All the House and 36 Senate seats are involved. Also involved are 35 state governorships and control of 46 state legislatures, critically important this year because the legislatures will handle reapportionment of congressional districts following completion of the 1950 census.

Every race is important, of course. But interest centers in the "doubtful" states and districts, where the margin by which a Republican or Democrat was elected in 1948 (or in the Senate election in that state) was significantly small.

As CIO-PAC sees it, there are

Connecticut's Gov. Bowles

150 crucial House districts—84 in which liberals (mostly Democrats) are in danger, 54 in which there's a chance of unseating a reactionary incumbent, and 12 in which the incumbent isn't running, so the field is theoretically wide open. To gain control of the House, the Republicans need a net gain of only 46 seats.

OF THE 36 Senate elections, eight in the South have already been decided in the primaries. In these, two outstanding liberals—Claude Pepper of Florida and Frank Graham of North Carolina — were defeated. In Idaho, the controversial political career of Glen Taylor is over. Of the 28 remaining seats, 18 are marginal.

To gain a Republican majority in the Senate, the GOP needs a net gain of seven seats. The defeats of Democrats Pepper and Graham really amounted to gains for the Republicans, since the two liberals have been replaced by conservative Southern Democrats who may be expected to vote with the GOP a significant part of the time.

The doubtful races center mainly in 15 states. Now that the primaries are over and the air has cleared, here is the situation in those states:

California: Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D.), probably the most outspoken Fair Dealer in the House, is campaigning against Rep. Richard M. Nixon (R.), darling of the House Un-American Activities Committee, for the Senate seat vacated by Sheridan Downey. James Roosevelt (D.), son of the late FDR, is running against Gov. Earl Warren (R.), Dewey's 1948 running mate. Twenty-three House seats also are involved, as well as one-half the State Senate and all of its lower House.

Clean-up of the California CIO with consequent renewal of activity by many unions, coupled with a terrific population increase since the last election and vigorous campaigning by all sides, make these probably the most important and exciting contests being waged anywhere except in Ohio.

Colorado: Sen. Eugene Millikin (R.), ranking minority member of the Senate Finance Committee and one of the most influential GOPsters in the Senate, is getting a hard fight from Rep. John A. Carroll (D.), who wants to take his place. Former State Sen. Dan Thornton (R.) is running against Gov. Walter Johnson (D.). Four House seats are at stake, two Democratic, and two Republican. The two Democratic seats were usually Republican until 1948.

Connecticut: This is the only state where two Senate seats and the Governorship are all vacant at once. Sen. Brien McMahon (D.), chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and an outstanding liberal, opposes former GOP Rep. Joseph Talbot. Sen. William Benton (D.), former Undersecretary of State appointed to fill an unexpired term, faces Prescott Bush (R.) and Vivien Kellems (R.). Gov. Chester Bowles, former head of OPA, is getting a terrific fight from Rep. John Davis Lodge (R.). Three House Democrats, including Rep. Chase Going Woodhouse, are in danger of defeat.

Connecticut traditionally has gone Republican in off-years. The United Labor Committee this year for the first time checked the name of every union member in the state against the registration lists and put on one of the most intensive campaigns ever seen in order to overcome off-year psychology.

Idaho: Here two Senate seats are open. Former Sen. D. Worth Clark (D.), who beat Taylor in the primaries, faces Herman Welker (R.) in the race for Taylor's seat. Clark is anti-labor and reactionary. Sen. Henry C. Dworshak (R.) is running to succeed himself against Claude J. Burtenshaw (D.), who was associated with Clark in the primaries. The liberal vote in Idaho, which originally elected Taylor, currently doesn't know where to go. One Democratic House seat is in danger.

Illinois: Here the big race is Sen. Scott Lucas (D.), Senate majority leader and fighting Fair Dealer most of the time, against former Rep. Everett Dirksen (R.), sweetheart of the isolationist, ultra-conservative Chicago Tribune. The state went Democratic in 1948, but 14 of its 26 House seats are held by Republicans. The Cook County (Chicago) and downstate farm votes are important. Six of Chicago's Democratic House districts are in danger since they went Democratic by extremely small margins in 1948.

Indiana: Sen. Homer Capehart (R.), ultra-ultra conservative, faces keen competition from ex-Attorney General Alec Campbell (D.) in the Senate race here. The seven Democrats in Indiana's 11-man House delegation all are in danger, particularly four in districts which went Democratic by very small margins in 1948.

Iowa: Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R.), whose hobby is riding the Atomic Energy Commission, faces real competition from Albert Loveland (D.), former U. S. Undersecretary of Agriculture. The issue here and in the Governorship and House campaigns will be the Brannan Plan, which Loveland supports vigorously. Gov. William S. Beardsley (R.) is opposed by Lester Gillette (D.). The eight-man House delegation is solidly Republican, but the state elected a Democratic Senator in 1948.

Missouri: Sen. Forrest Donnell (R.) is getting a run for his Senate seat from Tom Hennings, Jr. (D.). Twelve of the 13 House seats are Democratic, but eight of them switched from Republican in 1948 when Truman carried the state.

New York: Sen. Herbert Lehman (D.) faces Lieut.-Gov. Joe Hanley (R.) for the Senate seat, while Gov. Dewey is opposed by Rep. Walter Lynch (D.). Of the 45 House seats, 23 are at present Democratic, one American Labor Party, and one Liberal. The three-way mayoralty race in New York City will turn out a larger-than-usual off-year vote but several outstanding liberals are in danger.

Ohio: Here, of course, is where Sen. Robert A. Taft (R.) is battling Joseph Ferguson, the Democratic Senate candidate. Ohio registration is about 150,000 above 1948 at the moment, not a big enough jump to reassure the labor-liberal forces as to the outcome. The House delegation consists of 12 Democrats and 11 Republicans. Several Democrats, including Tom Burke in the 9th, the only CIO man in Congress, are in danger.

Oklahoma: Rep. A. S. "Mike" Monroney defeated Sen. Elmer Thomas in the Democratic Senate primaries and now faces heavy opposition from Rev. W. H. Alexander (R.), "the red-headed parson."

Oregon: This is another of the more exciting states. Liberal Sen. Wayne Morse (R.) has labor support and is expected to win. Gov. Douglas McKay (R.) is opposed by Austin Flegel (D.). The four-man House delegation, currently all conservative Republican, may be changed. For the first time, registration in this historically Republican state shows more Democrats than GOP members.

Pennsylvania: This state goes Republican every off-year, traditionally, and another fillip has been given the GOP by the primary defeat of the infamous Grundy machine. For this reason, Sen. Francis Myers (D.), Senate majority whip, is facing the reelection fight of his career, running against Gov. Duff (R.). Duff's candidate for Governor is Superior Court Judge John S. Fine (R.), who is opposed by Richardson Dilworth (D.), crusading Philadelphia city treasurer. Fifteen of Pennsylvania's 33 House seats are currently Democratic, but 10 of them were Republican in 1946.

Utah: Here, Sen. Elbert Thomas (D.), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, faces Wallace Bennett (R.), former chairman of the board of the National Association of Manufacturers. The House delegation consists of two seats, both currently Democratic and both in danger. It is no secret that Thomas is expected to lose unless there is a large vote.

In each of the 15 States thumbnailed above, the difference between victory and defeat for liberal candidates lies in the size of the vote. A large vote may elect the liberals. A small one is sure to elect the reactionaries.

Nixon Audience Acted Out 'Nix'

Rep. Richard M. Nixon, one of California's outstanding Republican tories, who is jousting with Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas, liberal Democrat, for the Senate seat left vacant by the retirement of Sen. Sheridan Downey (D.), outsmarted himself last week.

Complete with sound track and entourage, he pulled up beside the General Motors plant at East Oakland, Cal., prepared to favor members of CIO Auto Workers Local 76 with a dissertation on his virtues.

The blare began over the loud speaker. One by one the windows on the first floor of the plant were closed—from the inside. Then the whistle blew for the end of the shift. Hundreds of workers stalked out of the plant and went the other way, to their cars. A handful walked past the sound truck with bored indifference—and kept right on going.

But Nixon finally got an audience. It consisted of 25 to 30 workers led by Robert Hannah, PAC chairman. Each of them carried a big card plugging the candidacy of Rep. Douglas.

It Took Sen. Taft Only Seconds To Know He Was Unwelcome

IT WAS A red-faced and angry Sen. Taft who strode out of the Columbus, O., Dispatch building recently. Another of his captive audiences had openly displayed its dislike of the Taft record.

Taft had obviously expected a captive audience in the Columbus Dispatch would be meek and docile since the Dispatch is controlled by the Wolfe family, wealthy and powerful supporters of the Taft machine.

As soon as Taft entered the building, the foreman of the composing room went up to the chapel chairman of the Typographical Union, who corresponds to the chief steward in CIO plants.

"Sen. Taft is going to visit the men up here," he told the union official, "and the management wants to make sure none of the men boo him."

The union officer snorted, "Look, I am not the messenger boy for management, and I don't care how the men greet Taft. Why don't you go tell them yourself?"

BEFORE THE flustered foreman could think of an answer, Taft arrived at the entrance to the composing room, accompanied by top-management officials.

The first thing that met his eye was a copy of "The Robert Alphonso Taft Story," the picture book the United Labor League of Ohio is distributing widely.

Taft's face turned red with anger as he saw the book and he stalked over to the foreman's desk and shook hands hurriedly; rushed over to greet another foreman and then walked out of the composing room at such a rapid pace that management officials were forced to run to keep up with him.

He made no attempt to make a speech or to shake hands with the workers. The only people he met were foremen and supervisors.

In the mailing department Taft attempted to shake hands with the local union president who shoved his hand in his pocket, glared at Taft and said, "You soil everything you touch—I wouldn't shake hands with you."

Tool And Die Workers Win 10-15c Pay Raise

Approximately 8000 Detroit area tool and die workers have won wage boosts under a new three-year contract between Locals 155 and 157, CIO Auto Workers, and the Automotive Tool and Die Manufacturers Association and independent job shops in Detroit.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00 A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., OCTOBER 16, 1950 82 No. 42

(An Editorial)

Greedy War Profiteers Give Aid To Reds

The average war profiteer would call you a liar if you accused him of helping Communists.

He'd tell you he's all-out for capitalism, at least 100% in favor of "free enterprise" and strongly opposed to "all those isms, including Fair Dealism."

He'd probably point out he belongs to the anti-Communist National Association of Manufacturers or the Chamber of Commerce and, certainly, couldn't be a friend of the Reds.

Chances are he'd make a little speech about patriotism, ending up with something like this:

"We've got to fight communism every place we find it—especially in our own bureaucratic government."

But if it's fair to say that the Communists are helped by those things which h[illegible] the United States, then it's fair to sa[illegible] ar profiteers are helping the R[illegible]

How? Well, here's [illegible]:

- They've given us a big push along the road to dangerous inflation.
- They've placed an additional tax burden on all the people by sharply increasing the price of materials required for strengthening our armed forces.
- They've provided the Red propaganda agents with another example of the "capitalistic greed" about which they rave and rant.
- They've made necessary the governmental controls which the people of a democracy will tolerate only in times of national emergency.
- They've slashed the purchasing power of the nation's wage earners and have thus lowered their standard of living.
- They've left labor unions with no alternative to asking for—yes, and even striking for—sizable wage increases.

It isn't a pretty picture, is it?

Early in July—right after start of the Korean war—prices started climbing. It was a few cents here and a few cents there and a few cents elsewhere.

Soon the increase amounted to a few dollars a week for the average family.

And prices are still climbing.

There were no shortages of the things which the average family bought. There was no real reason for boosting prices. Yet they were boosted.

That's part of the picture, but it isn't all.

We plunged ourselves into armed conflict in an effort to offset Communist aggression and to prevent a third World War. And we decided to expand our armed forces.

Our military planners estimated our needs and what it would cost. Congress then enacted a new tax measure to help finance our preparedness.

And who got hit hardest?

The new tax bill placed a heavier burden on those with low incomes than on those with wealth.

No excess profits tax was levied—and it took a real fight to get Congress to agree to impose such a tax when it reconvenes.

And those armament cost estimates don't mean a thing anymore—except that there has been a lot of profiteering.

The cost of most strategic war materials has increased sharply. In some cases it has skyrocketed.

We can now purchase only part of a plane for the amount a whole plane would have cost a few months ago.

Here's how the situation stacks up:

- Prices are up and still climbing.
- Profits are now running at an all-time high.
- Taxes are up and probably will have to be increased again.
- Consumer purchasing power is down.
- A general round of wage increases will be necessary if workers are to avoid a bad economic beating.
- Corporations are in a position to grant such increases without boosting prices higher.

Frankly, we don't blame you if you're an "average Joe" and are pretty burned up about the situation.

We're burned up, too. In fact, we're nearly at the sizzling point.

We think war profiteering is outrageous!

We're expressing our indignation. Why don't you do the same thing?

You can express it every place you're forced to pay inflated prices. You can express it at meetings of your union, your social group, your fraternal organization.

You can express it in letters to newspapers, in messages to members of Congress, in communications to government officials.

And you can express it at the polls on November 7.

You can bet your last dollar—if you have one left—that the profiteers are, generally, supporting the candidates you'll want to vote against.

Forged CIO Letter Used Against Health Plan—For Exclusive Story See Page 3

Possibility Of New Rent Controls By Jan. 1 Fades

RENT CONTROL politics get screwier all the time. Now leading Democrats are saying the "lame duck Congress," which meets Nov. 27, can't possibly pass a decent rent control law—won't have time. But guess who's saying it can and should be done—Sen. Taft (R. O.).

Chairman Maybank (D. S.C.), of the Senate Banking Committee, started the merry-go-round by announcing it would be "impossible" for his committee to get anything together before Dec. 31, when rent controls will expire in every community whose governing body has not, before then, voted for an extension to June 30, 1951.

Tighe Woods, head of the Office of the Housing Expediter, "Mr. Rent Control" to 56.5 million people, followed suit. He said Maybank "made sense," added that he thought it was highly doubtful if a satisfactory law could be enacted even if Congress went through the motions. Woods used the opportunity to urge citizens in the 3000 communities which have not yet acted to get on the ball and make their city councils vote for rent control extension under the present law.

Then came Chairman Spence (D. Ky.), of the House Banking Committee, who told reporters he, too, agreed with Maybank. This was a change of tune for Spence, who until the middle of last week was saying new and better controls were absolutely necessary and he intended to press for action.

THIS LEFT Taft out on a limb, calling for controls like a lamb in the wilderness. Not many people would be fooled by Taft's sudden devotion to what the administration already had decided was a lost cause. He voted against even the present weak bill on June 12. The administration did not want to risk passing the kind of bill Taft would favor, preferring to let it go over until January, 1951, and then attempt to pass a measure with some teeth in it.

Meanwhile the list of communities to vote for continuing controls past Dec. 31 grew to 200—with a total population of nearly 2 million.

Controls were still technically in effect in Los Angeles, too, although an injunction keeping the city council from lifting controls had expired Oct. 6. This time Woods himself was holding it up—as he is entitled to do.

The City Council decontrol order, which originally was to have become effective July 28 but which has been fought in th courts ever since by the Tenants' Council, cannot become effective until Woods signs it. Woods was out of town and unavailable all last week, and besides that an OHE spokesman frankly said that Woods was hesitating before signing an order affecting the third largest city in the United States.

The Tenants' Council, meanwhile, brought its fourth court suit, attempting once more to get a permanent injunction restraining the decontrol order from going into effect. This time the suit was brought in the District of Columbia Municipal Court. So far, two temporary injunctions have been granted and expired.

NOWHERE were the weaknesses in the present law better illustrated than in and around Camp Atterbury, Ind. The commanding officer, Col. James Murphy, some time ago wrote an anguished letter to Woods, stating that 23,000 additional men had arrived, a large proportion of them bringing their families, and that the families were victims of unmerciful rent gouging.

Murphy cited, for example, one group of 41 families forced to pay an average of $103.09 a month for accommodations that had rented for $55 at the most before the community had voted local option decontrol.

The C. O. asked Woods to put rent controls on in an area within a 50-mile radius of the camp and to roll back rents to previous levels.

Woods canvassed the situation and found:

Five towns, including those closest to the camp, had voted local option decontrol. Under the present law there isn't a thing Woods can do about putting controls back on. Not even a vote of the city council can get federal controls renewed. The only thing the five towns can do, if they are so disposed, is to pass their own local rent control ordinance.

Seven counties which OHE decontrolled on advice of the Area Rent Advisory Board. These can be controlled again, if the board recommends such a step. Woods can't do it on his own. And if the boards recommend recontrol, it will be gone again Dec. 31 unless the local governing bodies vote continuation.

Eleven counties which never have had rent controls. For these, Woods has written to the Governor of Indiana asking him to make nominations for Area Boards. The Governor has 30 days in which to do this. The boards must then be appointed, meet, survey the situation, and decide if controls are needed. Only after all this, and of course if the recommendation of the new board is favorable, can Woods institute controls. And these will end Dec. 31, too, unless the local governing bodies also act.

FURTHERMORE, many of the little communities involved are unincorporated and cannot get controls extended beyond Dec. 31 even if they want to. Under the law, only incorporated communities have that privilege.

In no case can rents be rolled back.

So there is little enough OHE can do for the servicemen's families near Camp Atterbury.

As for the situation around military camps in Texas and Virginia, that's completely hopeless, because those two states voted state-wide decontrol, and now cannot get back under the federal tent even if they want to.

It is because of cases like these, and many others, that OHE has asked Congress for the power to control and recontrol at will.

Union Opens Negotiations With U. S. Steel This Week

THE CIO Steelworkers today (Oct. 16) will tackle the steel industry's giant, U. S. Steel, in an effort to set the pattern for a wage raise for its million members.

Philip Murray, president of the CIO and the steel union, acting on the USA wage policy committee's recommendations, has indicated that a "very healthy and substantial" wage increase will be sought from more than 1400 companies in the basic steel, fabricating and aluminum industries.

Preliminary talks were held last week with a number of steel producers, including the nation's third largest, Republic, but principal union interest centered on the outcome of the talks with U. S. Steel.

At the end of the week, only 41 companies had given an answer to Murray's request for wage discussions. Of this number, 35 said they were willing to begin talks at once, and one asked that discussions be delayed until Nov. 1.

UNDER TERMS of the two-year contract signed in November, 1949, wage discussions were scheduled to open Nov. 1. After Dec. 31, the union has the right to strike in support of its proposals.

Bethlehem Steel, which led the industry in signing a pension agreement with the Steelworkers last year after a month-long strike, has already expressed a willingness to meet with union negotiators.

Jones & Laughlin, fourth largest producer in the country, agreed to meet with the union but but at the same time called for an upward revision of steel prices "to bring them into line with the general economy."

Admiral Ben Moreell, J & L's president, told a regional meeting of the American Iron and Steel Institute "Steel companies must have adequate income to replace our tools as they wear out or become obsolete and also to pay cash dividends in amounts sufficient to attract investors to our industry.

"Only in this way can we expand to meet the growing needs of our economy. In short, we must have adequate prices for our products."

THE UNION'S wage policy committee statement listed five other goals in addition to the proposal for a general wage hike, including severance pay for all workers whose jobs are ended "for any reason other than a quit or discharge cause," and elimination of geographical differentials.

Also requested were improvemen in shift premiums, time-and-a-half for all work done on Saturday, double time for Sunday work, and two-and-one-half times straight time for all work done on holidays.

The list included removal of inequalities in rates paid to workers in iron ore and non-ferrous mining manufacturing.

Meanwhile, the union filed four more petitions in the basic steel industry for union shop elections. Plants named in the petitions were the Ecorse, Mich., and Terre Haute, Ind., operations of the Great Lakes Steel Corp.; Hanna Furnace, Buffalo, N. Y., and Continental Steel Co., Kokomo, Ind.

CAREY WINS SPEAKING AWARD: CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey (left) receives a scroll naming him Speaker of the Year 1949 in the Field of Labor. The scroll is being presented by George P. Lamb, Washington, D. C., in behalf of Tau Kappa Alpha, national honor fraternity. Lamb is a member of the fraternity's board of directors.

Carey Wins Fraternity Award As Speaker In Labor Field

JAMES B. CAREY, secretary-treasurer of CIO and chairman of the Administrative Committee of the International Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, last week was presented with a scroll naming him Speaker of the Year, 1949, in the Field of Labor. He was chosen from a number of nominees from all branches of the labor movement.

The scroll was awarded to Carey by Tau Kappa Alpha, national honor fraternity. Others honored were President Truman in national affairs; Eric Johnston in business; Robert W. Hutchins in educational-scientific-cultural activities and Ralph W. Sockman in religion.

George P. Lamb, a member of the national board of award of TKA, made the presentation, saying this was the first in a series of annual awards. He pointed out that the fraternity was founded at Wabash College in 1909 to promote effective and responsible speech in colleges and universities. Its membership has included Justice Louis D. Brandeis and Wendell Willkie.

This year's candidates for awards came from lists submitted by the press and the membership. Lamb said that any one in union activity is eligible for the award and asked that locals and internationals send in names for consideration to Dr. P. E. Lull, president, Purdue University, West Lafayette, Ind.

The citation for Carey said that the "basis for the award is that the persons receiving it shall be outstanding in three particulars: first for effective public address; second, for intelligent public address, and third, for responsible public address." It continues:

"Because in a year marked by normal industrial disagreements, that are to be expected in a free society, you have been markedly conspicuous for effective, intelligent and responsible public address, we have selected you from among the labor leaders of America to receive this award as Speaker of the Year 1949."

Lamb is a member of the Washington law firm of Kittelle and Lamb.

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

Forged CIO Letter Used In Drive On Health Plan

By GERVASE N. LOVE

OPPONENTS of President Truman's national health insurance program have resorted to forgery, defamation of the CIO and misrepresentation of its position in a frantic attempt to prevent the American people from getting the kind of medical service they are entitled to at a cost they can afford to pay

On Oct. 9, two days before the American Medical Association's $1.1 million advertising campaign against the President's proposal reached its climax with large, dull ads in every daily newspaper in the United States, Alaska and Hawaii, the members of a Parent-Teacher Association in Buffalo met to hear both sides of the story.

CIO Reg. Dir. Hugh Thompson was one of the speakers in favor of the health insurance plan. Dr. A. H. Aaron, professor of clinical medicine at the Univ. of Buffalo Medical School, was the big gun of its enemies, and rose to deliver what was intended to be a crushing blow.

IT WAS A photostat of a letter he said he had received from a reliable source. It was written on what appeared to be a national CIO letter-head and bore the date Feb. 16, 1950. It read:

"To all affiliated local unions
"Congress of Industrial Organizations
"Dear Sir and Brother:

"The general executive board has adopted a resolution calling upon all its international unions, state, district and city industrial union councils thruout the nation to concentrate its efforts on socialized medicine legislation.

"It is therefore of the utmost importance that regional directors, sub-regional directors, field and international representatives urge that all local unions participate in an all-out drive for passage of socialized medicine legislation and repeal of the infamous Taft-Hartley Law.

"It is also important that the members of our CIO unions who happen to be affiliated with fraternal organizations should be urged to endeavor to have, and I repeat again, to have the fraternal organization adopt a resolution and copy sent to their congressmen and senators.

"Trusting that you will give this your immediate attention, I am
"Fraternally Yours,
"John Brophy.
"Director of Industrial Union Councils."

Thompson jumped to his feet.

"That letter is a phony!" he thundered. "It is an obvious forgery!"

THE NEXT DAY he proved it. He took from his files several genuine letters sent him by Brophy—who recently went on leave from the councils job to serve on the staff of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in New York—and called upon Aaron in his office.

Thompson and Aaron went over them together. The letterhead was undoubtedly genuine—possibly stolen from the national CIO office. The signature was obviously not that of Brophy. Thompson pointed out that Brophy's sole concern was with industrial union councils, and that he never would have addressed a letter to "all affiliated local unions." He also pointed out that the CIO has an executive board—not a "general executive board."

The typed signature on the forgery was followed by a period—on the legitimate letters it was followed by a comma. On the forgery, "Director of Industrial Union" was on one line, the word "Councils" on a third, and was followed by a period. On the legitimate letters the whole title was on one line and was unpunctuated.

At CIO headquarters in Washington a search of the files revealed that Brophy sent out no letters on Feb. 16, 1950. On the following day he sent letters to all councils covering the mailing of resolutions passed by the executive board at its meeting a few days before, but made no reference to health insurance.

The stenographer's initials on the phony were "M.B." No stenographer employed in the national CIO office had those initials, either now or on Feb .16.

Aaron capitulated.

"In view of what appear to be discrepancies in the signature," he said in a public statement, "I have turned over (to Thompson) copies of this letter, as I am as interested in clarifying this matter as anyone is so that the truth can prevail.

"The letter on what is admitted to be CIO stationery bears what purports to be the signature of John Brophy, and was received by me from a source I believed to be reliable . . .

"The CIO repudiates the authenticity of the letter. If it is, as they say, a phony, I have no wish to use it in my argument against nationalized medical care."

Thompson also issued a statement.

"IN THEIR propaganda war against prepaid medical care for the American people," he said, "the American Medical Association has used many shady devices and slogans, such as 'socialized medicine,' 'compulsory health insurance,' etc., and this forged letter is just another indication that they are attempting to deprive the American people of proper medical care at a proper cost.

"The medical profession seems to be more interested in keeping up their high fees than in giving American people the medical care they are entitled to at a cost they can afford to pay. There is nothing socialized about national health insurance as proposed by President Truman, and there is nothing compulsory about it except that all people would pay 1½% of their wages up to $4800 a year, and this would entitle them and their families to all medical, dental and hospital care, including eyeglasses and hearing aids.

"The national health insurance bill guarantees doctors absolute freedom to accept or reject the patient, and the patient is guaranteed absolute freedom to choose the doctor or hospital he wishes."

The CIO is as strongly opposed to socialized medicine as the AMA. But the President's health insurance program is not socialized medicine.

Rumely Group Tries Peddling Literature To AMA Members

The Committee for Constitutional Government, which has been working closely with the American Medical Association and other groups to block national health insurance, was in the fight again last week as the AMA advertising campaign hit its high.

Dr. Edward A. Rumely, a physician and the committee's executive secretary, has been cited by Congress for contempt for refusing to answer questions asked by the House lobby investigating committee.

Apparently using AMA mailing stencils, it sent to physicians in all parts of the country a bulky envelope carrying the name of Dr. William C. Black, of San Diego, Cal., and the return address of a New York mailing service, stuffed to its limit with six pieces of literature and a self-addressed envelope.

The first piece was a lithographed letter, on Black's letterhead, which used both sides of the paper to give the doctors "the benefit of my observations on a recent trip to western Europe . . . to see for myself how Europe's Socialism compares with our American Way of Life."

He didn't like it. American physicians must learn, he added, that "an island of medical freedom cannot long exist in a sea of state socialism." A good way to learn it, he went on, is to read the CCG's volume, "Compulsory Medical Care and the Welfare State," by Melchior Palyi, and "what John Flynn says in 'The Road Ahead' (another CCG volume) is also true." A reading of the CCG's "Why the Taft-Hartley Law?" will explain the pressures behind "socialized medicine," he said.

The rest of the literature was straight CCG plugs for sales of its literature and appeals for money to broadcast it throughout the country as part of the fight against the welfare state or something like that.

Senator, 3 Congressmen Accused Of Health Plan Sabotage

SEN. SMITH (R. N. J.) and three New Jersey Republican Congressmen were charged last week by Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council with "sponsoring phony bills designed only to sidetrack the National Health Insurance Program."

The three are Reps. Wolverton, Hand and Case.

Holderman's attack was made during the week the American Medical Association opened its $1.1 million propaganda campaign to defeat Congressional advocates of the national health insurance program.

Holderman said that Smith and the three Congressmen "are aware enough of the demand for a comprehensive medical care program to take some action. But none of them will admit the bills they have introduced are inadequate, unfair to the workers, and administratively unworkable.

"For political reasons, none of them will go all the way in support of a comprehensive program."

Smith is co-sponsor of the Taft medical "charity" bill, which provides federal tax grants to the states for medical care payments for the indigent.

"A person would have to apply for aid, have his finances investigated, and be certified as needy. It inevitably requires a needs test and a bureaucracy of investigators," Holderman said.

LEGISLATIVE Director Harry Kranz of the New Jersey CIO Council in a speech Oct. 6 before the Men's Club of Park Avenue Church, East Orange, N. J., called on the New Jersey Medical Society to "disavow" the AMA's propaganda campaign "in view of the New Jersey Society's disagreement with the AMA's contention that our present medical care system is adequate and no government aid is needed."

This is one of several steps that Kranz challenged NJMS to take "to prove its good faith in its apparent concern with inadequate medical care available to the American people."

Kranz called on NJMS to take four other steps.

He urged the society to state that its own health program "provides for lavish expenditures of public tax funds to pay the medical bills of a large part of the population — the indigent, the 'medically indigent,' the chronically ill, and many others—through medically-dominated organizations, without public accountability."

KRANZ ALSO said that the NJMS's plan was rejected by the AMA hierarchy. He said that AMA should point out that the National Health Insurance Program—unlike the society's plan—would "prepay complete medical care for all through a 1½% payroll insurance contribution by workers and their employers."

NJMS was asked by Kranz to assure all its members that "they will not lose their hospital practicing privileges or other medical rights by freely discussing means to correct the lack of purchasing power for medical care."

He also asked the society to permit consumer representatives to serve on the completely NJMS-controlled board of trustees of the New Jersey Medical-Surgical Plan. Kranz said NJMS also should explain why it is helping collect the compulsory AMA assessment for the propaganda campaign from every physician.

"I warned you not to say a good word for Taft-Hartley in this house."

THE CIO NEWS 1950 VOTING RECORD

A special 12-page Voting Record of the 81st Congress—from January 1949 to June 1950—has been printed as a separate supplement, for distribution among union members throughout the country.

PRICES:

5c a copy; 100 for $4; 500 for $17

1,000 for $24

Rates for larger quantities upon request

★ ★ ★

Send your orders for the 1950 Voting Record together with check or money order, to:

THE CIO NEWS
718 JACKSON PLACE, N. W.
WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

Send.....copies of The 1950 CIO NEWS VOTING RECORD to:

Name .....

Union ..... Local No.....

Street Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State.....

Accompanying is check or money order for $.....

Please bill by union [ ].

It's Not Like It Used To Be

Newcomers To Industry Usually Accept As Matter Of Course Benefits For Which Unions Fought Long And Hard

By ALLAN L. SWIM

A NUMBER of years ago a group of New Englanders who got fed up with working 72 hours a week formed a union.

Their first demand on management was that the work week be reduced to 60 hours.

One of the Boston newspapers was so shocked by this "radical" proposal that it carried a strong editorial blasting the union.

A 60-hour work week, the newspaper declared, would be bad for the workers. The leisure time such a plan would provide couldn't be used wisely and profitably, the paper said, so the workers would squander it away at taverns imbibing spiritous beverages!

This, the editorial said, would be bad not only for the workers but for the community at large—and so the union and its startling ideas should be smashed forthwith.

THE ORGANIZED labor movement has come a long way since those days—even though there's a long way still to go.

And the story related here is a good one to tell those who say, "Unions haven't really done anything worthwhile for their members."

Let's examine that statement a bit—and let's start off with the matter of hours.

Trade unions were almost solely responsible for establishment of the 40-hour work week and there were many bitter strikes over this point before it was accepted as standard.

Company officials often accused the unions of attempting to "interfere with management's prerogatives" when they fought for a shortened work period.

THE IMPROVEMENTS in working conditions that have been brought about by union activities have been many and great.

Before unions began "interfering" in management affairs, workers in many fields died young because of unsafe and unsanitary conditions.

Owners and managers usually accepted such conditions as "occupational hazards" and did little or nothing to remedy them. The unions, on the other hand, demanded and eventually obtained improvements.

There is no way, of course accurately to measure the benefits to workers which came from such changes—and it would be unfair to say that unions alone were responsible. But the unions provided the "push" which made owners and managers conscious of the needs—and benefits—of safe, pleasant working conditions.

NOW LET'S TAKE a look at that thing which usually is referred to as job security.

In pre-union days the term meant little or nothing to most industrial workers. A man could be fired, without notice, merely because a foreman didn't like the way he parted his hair.

And the worker who had been fired unjustly often had nobody to whom he could appeal his case. The average worker who was fired stayed fired regardless of the reason for his discharge.

Then the unions came along with a set of standards and rules for employment and discharge of workmen. They established seniority systems and grievance procedure.

The unions, frankly, interfered with management's "right" to hire and fire indiscriminately—and in doing so established a measure of job security undreamed of before labor organized.

The unions have done much to improve the position of their members and of all workers as a group.

They brought paid vacations to a majority of industrial workers.

They were responsible for severance pay and had a big hand in establishing pensions for hourly-paid workers.

They helped work out fair job evaluation systems and played a major role in establishing reasonable work loads.

Many of those who are just now going to work under union conditions usually are not aware of these things. They don't know "how it used to be before we had a union."

THEY SHOULD be taught such things—and here's one place where the "old timers" can be of real service.

In the learning they should be informed that organized labor had to fight—and often fight on the picket line—for those things which the new employe is prone to accept as a matter of course.

And the newcomer to the union movement should be told—time and again—that many of the bad practices of the past would return if organized labor became weak.

FUNNIER AND FUNNIER

Senator Robert A. Taft, who has been built up by a large segment of the anti-Fair Deal press as an honest, forthright statesman, is providing Ohio voters with a generous supply of laughs these days.

The Oct. 9 issue of "Political Action of the Week" tells about Taft's latest complaint:

"Senator Taft last week really let fly at the 'outsiders' he claims are 'invading' Ohio to speak for his opponent, Democrat Joe Ferguson, a 100% supporter of the Fair Deal.

"Taft said it was shameful, scandalous and socialistic, unfair, unsporting and unAmerican for anybody from another state to tell Ohio citizens how to vote.

"Beaming from the platform while Senator Taft shouted we don't want no outsiders, see!—was Senator Wherry of Nebraska, who made a strong speech urging Taft's re-election.

"The act is going to get funnier this week when Fulton Lewis, a radio gossip columnist—who lives in Maryland—and Harold Stassen—who used to live in Minnesota before he moved to Pennsylvania—take the stump in Ohio to urge Taft's re-election.

"The show will have to go on without the chief comic for a couple of days. It seems Senator Taft will be in Illinois, urging people there to vote for a friend of his who's running for the Senate."

The folks over in Ohio, we figure, are doing a pretty good job telling the story of Robert Alfonso Taft and his bad record—but you just can't really blame others if they're anxious to get into the act.

The Taft-Hartley law was a kick at labor's shins all over the nation—not just in Ohio.

WE GOT INTO THE ACT, TOO

It's impossible for those of us on the CIO News to consider ourselves as complete "outsiders" in the Taft case. Several of us were called before a federal grand jury just before CIO Pres. Philip Murray was indicted on a charge of violating T-H.

Murray, you may recall, was charged with using the CIO News illegally when he directed that its front page carry an endorsement of a Maryland congressional candidate.

The fact that the U. S. Supreme Court held that Murray and the CIO News had done nothing wrong doesn't alter our feelings about the No. 1 GOP politician from Ohio.

But we see we're getting serious—and we intended this editorial to be funny—or at least point out how funny Taft is becoming in his desperation.

Just picture the scene:

There's old Robert Alfonso giving a lot of you know what to those horrible "outsiders" who dared to cross the borders of "his" fair state to express their opinion of a man who has become a national figure.

And on the platform with him is "the gentleman from Nebraska"—Wherry by name—whose record is much like Taft's.

At first we were puzzled about how Wherry got into Ohio without being an "outsider," too, but then we figured it out.

He was wearing his cloak of congressional immunity that day!

Mag Has Excess Profits Tax Pain-Killer

By IRVING FAGAN & CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

WORRIED about the excess profits tax that's coming? Well, there are ways to get out from under, you know, and the smart money boys are doing it—right now.

Take it from Business Week, which, in its Sept. 30 issue, page 50, discusses "Preparing For EPT." Says the article:

"There are a few things you may be able to do right now to cut the amount of excess-profits taxes you will have to pay under the bill that's almost certain to be passed next year:

"(1) You can decide to throw year-end business expenses into 1951 costs instead of 1950—on the chance that 1950 profits will be included in the base period Congress votes. Cutting 1950 costs raises profits—and taxes—for that year, but may produce many times as much in savings over the life of the excess-profits tax. It would also cut your taxable profits for 1951.

"(2) You can yield meekly to some of the challenges which the local revenue agent now auditing your 1948 or 1949 return may make. It might be cheaper to let him disallow some of the business expenses you claimed. True, that would raise your income and your tax. But, again, it might establish a higher profit base and mean multiple savings in the long run."

WHAT DID you say? Your income is all from wages, and you have no year-end expenses to throw into 1951 instead of 1950? How unfortunate!

And you have no business expenses to finagle with, because your taxes are withheld, and you had no choice about paying your 1948 tax early in 1949, and the 1949 tax early in 1950? How sad!

Of course, another way you can save money is to insist that your dividends from stocks be paid to you this year. As Business Week reports, "bigger dividends are being paid by some corporations to give their stockholders a chance to include the cash in 1950 income—which will be taxed at lower rates than next year's."

What, you don't own stocks? So sorry!

Of course, what with inflation, your money now buys less. But don't say there's nothing you can do about it. Business Week, for Oct. 7, 1950, devotes an entire page to "Where Smart Money Is Going." The "smart money" boys are buying ranch or farm land, buying mining properties in Mexico, buying tax-free municipal obligations, going into oil and timber, into investment trusts, into Canadian securities.

Said one Pittsburgh banker, according to the Business Week article: "It's a hell of a thing for me to say, but one place I'm not putting my money is government bonds. I think it's the worst hedge against inflation." (When the government starts its "Buy Savings Bonds" campaign, what's the bet that this very same banker will be right up in front boosting the campaign, urging the other fellow to buy government bonds?)

What? You have no spare change to be smart with? Too bad.

Maybe you ought to do a little serious thinking about how you vote in November. Maybe you don't realize just what the boys in Congress did to you in the tax law. Maybe you believe what you read about "equality of sacrifice."

Here's how the "equality" came out: If your income is between $3000 and $5000, your tax has been boosted 20½%; if your income is $25,000, your tax was boosted only 14½%; if your income is $1,000,000, your tax went up only 11½%. The tax law is full of "gross, almost crude inequities"—and this description comes, not from the "labor bosses," but from Erwin N. Griswold, dean of the Harvard Law School.

He lit into the lawyers at the recent convention of the American Bar Association (the lawyers' closed-shop union). In addressing the tax section of the convention, Griswold asked "Where was the voice of the tax section on that matter? The tax section ought to be quick to act in the public interest. John Q. Taxpayer needs our help, too."

John Q. Taxpayer was not a delegate to the convention of the American Bar Association. Or, if he was there, he was a still, small voice.

But Johnny Q. is a delegate to the greatest convention in the world—a free American election, Nov. 7.

So, speak for yourself, John. Speak up, at the polls.

Union Membership In Canada Over Million

Total trade union membership in Canada in 1949 was 1,005,639, according to the Department of Labor Statistics. The 1945 figure was 711,000.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President — James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher
Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII — October 16, 1950 — No. 42

It Was A Big Show For A Small Group

THIS IS the story of the 13 men who established the Storm Protection Union, the latest affiliate of the CIO.

It has a couple of unusual twists because the CIO has no organizing staff to assist industrial workers in the District of Columbia, which has almost no industry.

The first chapter was written when 10 men who work in the district got together and decided they wanted a union.

The latest chapter was completed recently when the new union obtained a good contract.

But the most interesting part of the story is what happened in between.

ONE DAY 10 men strolled into National CIO headquarters. They didn't know whom they wanted to see but they knew what they wanted.

They wanted a union.

Somebody sent them to the Organizational Department, where they told their story to Assistant Organizational Dir. R. J. Thomas, former head of the CIO Auto Workers.

Where did they work? he asked.

They said they were employed by Weathermaster Corp., which makes storm windows.

He wanted to know the potential membership at the plant.

He was told it was 10 and that there wouldn't be any organizing problem because all 10 were present.

Thomas said he'd see if something could be done about the situation.

WHEN ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, CIO vice president and director of organization, returned to his office later Thomas told him what had happened.

Haywood said it was the CIO's job to help workers form unions and that he would give all the aid he could to the 10 men.

Then Harold Ash, secretary-treasurer of the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee, was called into Haywood's office and told the story.

He agreed that something should be done.

And something was.

The Storm Protection Union was established and Weatherguard Corp. was asked to recognize the group and negotiate a contract with it.

The company agreed to do so.

THE UNION was asked to select a negotiating committee to work with Haywood, Thomas and Ash in obtaining a contract.

The union of 10 named five negotiators! This made eight persons working for improved conditions for 10—but that was OK with everybody concerned.

Union and management representatives sat down one evening and began working out contract provisions.

They held only one more short meeting —and then the contract was signed.

It contained the usual clauses that are found in good contracts and provided wage increases of 25c to 35c an hour.

THOSE WHO sat in on negotiations said they were really something to behold.

It was pointed out that Haywood, one of CIO's top officials, had negotiated contracts with some of the nation's industrial giants.

Thomas, the "boss" of Weathermaster was told, had dealt with such firms as Ford and General Motors.

And Ash has negotiated with such firms as the big Bell Telephone Co.

After receiving this information, the "boss" declared:

"I'm flattered." A.L.S.

Pass—Pass The Buck To PAC!

Historian Finds Hysteria Over Communism 'Dangerous'

FACTS ARE "the best antidote to hysteria," Dr. Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr., associate professor of history at Harvard, declares in a study of communism in the United States, "What About Communism?", just published by the Public Affairs Committee.

In a detailed and scholarly study of the Red menace, he deplores that too often our response to the spectre "has been that of children running panic-stricken from a haunted house—a response compounded of terror, hysteria and fear." Such a response he described as "dangerous" because frightened people cannot make intelligent decisions.

"The first answer to the spectre of communism, then, is to divest it of its spectral qualities," he said. "For communism is not an invisible ghostly power. It is a movement created by men, operated by men, and subject to the same frailties and limitations as all other man-made movements."

Schlesinger, whose book, "The Age of Jackson," won him a Pulitzer prize in history, then describes its nature. He tells about the background of communism, its development from the theoretical and philosophical forerunners to its basic statement by Marx and Engels, the historic split between the reformers and the revolutionists, and the emergence in Russia of "Bolshevik Marxism into an all-pervasive religion."

After a brief discussion of communism's role in the United States he continues:

"Since the war, the Communists, as a result of their sponsorship of the Progressive Party, their opposition to the Marshall Plan, and their unquestioning endorsement of Soviet foreign policy, have backed themselves into an exposed and vulnerable position.

"With the rise to power of Philip Murray and Walter Reuther, the anti-Communist forces in the CIO gained vigorous leadership. With the formation of Americans for Democratic Action, liberals who believed in a 'non-Communist left' acquired an organization of their own.

"As a result, open Communist influence dwindled into negligibility. The American Communist Party itself, never an important factor in American politics, was feebler than ever. The Communist youth movement folded, and its members were ordered to work with the Young Progressives.

"Nor were the Communists any more successful in their attempts to seize power in non-Communist organizations. The Communist faction was badly beaten in the American Veterans Committee. The Communist power in the CIO was whittled steadily away. The National Maritime Union and the Transport Workers, both of whom had followed the party line for years, broke away. Following its annual convention in Cleveland in 1949, the CIO set in motion procedures which culminated in the expulsion of most of the alleged Communist-controlled unions.

"Thus open Communist activity, whether under the party banner or through 'front' organizations or the attempt to capture non-Communist organizations, seemed by 1950 to be declining.

"But not all Communist activity was in the open. And it is the central and habitual dishonesty—the belief that the end justifies the means—which have in great part created the Communist problem."

"What About Communism?" is No. 164 in the series of pamphlets published by the Public Affairs Committee, Inc., 22 E. 38th st., New York 16, N. Y. Price, 20c.

FBI Probes Slaying Of Negro Mechanic

The FBI is looking into the slaying at Summerville, S. C., of Moss Winn, a Negro, by Police Lieut. James Adams. Wynn, a prosperous mechanic, was scheduled to testify before a federal grand jury about an attack on him by another policeman seven months ago.

Adams claims he was "forced to shoot" because Winn resisted arrest. Adams picked 2 a. m. for the hour to serve a warrant on Winn at his home on a bad check charge. Eugene Montgomery, investigating the case for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said there was no argument or altercation before the shooting. Mrs. Winn said the four shots were fired as soon as the door opened.

Adams was arrested on a technical charge of manslaughter and released on $2000 bail. Five days after the shooting, authorities still had not set a date for the inquest although Adams was scheduled for recall by the Marine Corps. Coroner A. W. Hinson said the inquest would be "sometime soon."

The fact that Winn was killed just before his slated appearance at the investigation of the other shooting brought the FBI into the case. In the first assault, an officer, who later resigned and left the state, shot Winn twice in the legs. He said he did it after he and Winn argued over some money due another person. Winn sued the city for $5000. LPA

State Dept. Booklet Explains

Foreign Policy Aim: Community Of Free Nations

IF THE CRITICS of the Truman Administration who spend so much breath lamenting that they couldn't find out what the United States' foreign policy is, REALLY mean it, they can now find out at a cost of 30c.

If they weren't just sounding off in the hope of strengthening themselves politically by confusing people, they can send the 30c to the Superintendent of Documents at the Government Printing Office in Washington along with a request for Dept. of State publication No. 3972.

In return they will receive a 100-page booklet entitled "Our Foreign Policy." Prepared by the Dept. of State, it sets down in black and white what our policy is, how it is determined, and the principal things we are doing to make it effective.

It is an impressive booklet because it takes a complex, technical subject and presents it with a simplicity that belies its complications. It packs a wealth of important detail into comparatively few pages. It is not, of course, a thorough-going study of our foreign policy in all its ramifications—nor was it intended to be. It is, in effect, a rather broad outline, written in clear, easy-to-understand language that often is blunt.

OUR BASIC foreign policy, it sets forth, is "to build situations which will extend the area of possible agreement, to create strength instead of the weakness which exists in many quarters," for—

"This policy holds out the best hope of reaching eventual agreement with the Soviet Union."

To make that policy live requires solution of two major problems, the booklet explains. One is short-term, the other long-term.

"The short-term problem, in plain and brutal terms, is to survive as a free nation in a pioneer world society," it asserts.

And the other horn of the dilemma—

"To transform the pioneer international society of today into an orderly community of free nations: that is our long-range purpose."

The booklet compares our situation today to that of an early settler in our West.

"In those days, before law and order was established, before families enjoyed the community safeguards that we now take for granted," it says, "every settler had to carry arms to protect himself and his family against marauders.

"Today, each nation has to arm itself, and the lone nation is often at the mercy of the unscrupulous outlaw.

"In self-defense, the orderly and far-sighted men among the early settlers joined forces for common protection. A rough system of law and order developed in which each settler could get on with his job of clearing the land and plowing it, but always with one ear cocked for danger.

"So today, the peaceful nations have organized for a degree of security, without giving up their basic individual sovereignty. In the present phase of pioneer international society, nations have to live with the danger that an outlaw may precipitate war by accident or design."

On the long-range problem, the booklet adds:

"THE COMMUNITY idea is thousands of years old in the mind of man, but it is just being born in the minds of nations. To bring an international community into being may be the work of generations. But we have made a beginning. Sheer necessity might hurry up the process.

"A community has to have both a political and an economic basis. Even more important, it has to have a moral basis. Certain fundamental standards of decency and behavior have to be understood and accepted by the majority of its members before you can have a successful community.

"The majority must not only uphold those standards but insist on their being upheld. What has been called 'a consensus of moral opinion' is the foundation of law and order and the beginning of real community life.

"Five years ago, we helped to create a great testing ground for the community idea: the United Nations."

IN THE LIGHT of experience, "with all its discouraging and sobering aspects," the booklet continues, "the United States continues to put its long-range hopes for a peaceful and secure world order in the United Nations."

"We center our hopes in the United Nations," it adds, "not only because its social and economic bodies are doing valuable pioneer work in international cooperation . . . The United States supports the United Nations for all these reasons and also for practical security reasons.

"We realize that our security consists in a combination of many things. It consists in having superior military and economic power on the side of law and order. It depends on strong and free allies. And it depends also on the good will, the respect, the confidence and the moral support of decent people everywhere."

The booklet recalls that "our peaceful, prosperous society is a revolutionary society," classless, with its "main interest . . . in making things better, in progress by peaceful means, by the exercise of free choice."

"The great America trade unions," it says, "command public respect and exert considerable influence on our national and international life. When they represent the United States abroad, as they often do, they are among the best spokesmen for our liberal revolution."

We want other people to understand our personal freedoms and political democracy, but we don't want to force them on the people of any nation. If another people wants them badly enough, our experience and example will help them attain them. But, the booklet makes clear, the United States has no intention of sending its armed might into any country and imposing our principles of government and living on its people. What we want them to have is the truth.

The booklet discusses in detail some 35 factors in our foreign policy and its instrumentation. They range all the way from atomic energy control to world trade, from the Berlin airlift and China to the Truman Doctrine and the Vandenberg resolution.

It shows throughout the key role of the United Nations in American foreign policy. And it shows, too, that our final, ultimate goal is one of peace and security—not only for our own country, but for the rest of the world as well.

PAC Pamphlet Asks, Answers Questions On Korean Battle

A 12-page pamphlet which poses and answers "Questions About the Battle in Korea" has just been published by the CIO Political Action Committee.

It shows that the outbreak of war in Korea and the loss of China to the Communists were not the results of U.S. foreign policy failures, but rather aggression in the first instance and the failure of the people to realize their hopes for food and peace under the "corrupt and undemocratic" Chiang regime in the second case.

American foreign policy fits in with American policy at home, it asserts. It points out that the same people "who fight every move to raise the living standards of American workers are indifferent to the starvation of the people of other countries," and that "the people who obstructed President Roosevelt when he tried to meet the threat to peace in the 30s, now object and find fault with President Truman as he tries to save the peace of the world in the 50s."

Professor Says:

The Taft-Hartley Act: Great Bad Outweighs Little Good

THE TAFT-Hartley Law has now been in operation more than three years.

Both the CIO and the AFL want it repealed, and they want restoration of the Wagner Act with improvements.

Employer groups and some other observers have attacked the position of organized labor as biased.

Dr. Emily Clark Brown, professor of economics at Vassar College, has made an independent study of three years' operation of the act which has been published by the Public Affairs Institute of Washington.

She has carefully weighed what she considers the virtues of Taft-Hartley and its vices. Dr. Brown found that the latter far outweigh the former.

She lists the several points where "the law has done something to accomplish what many of its supporters believe was needed for honest and responsible unionism and collective bargaining."

THE accomplishments of Taft Hartley which she lists include occasional protection of the rights of individual employes or employers or the public, and decreased organizing by boycotts or picketing.

Other Taft-Hartley "virtues" she catalogues are restraint in some cases against expulsion of members from unions with union-shop or closed-shop contracts; prevention of an occasional union from refusing to bargain; greater attention by international unions to preventing wildcat strikes and to the financial practices of local unions.

But then she concludes:

"The abuses under attack have of course been far less widespread than is often assumed, and in fact few unions condone them. In so far as there is a sound case for federal control of these abuses, the controls could have been established in a fair and reasonable law, which would arouse little or any objections from the majority of unions, and this without the wholesale regulation and intervention in union-management relations upon which Taft-Hartley embarked.

"Granting these useful accomplishments under the Taft-Hartley Act, it is essential to see them in the perspective of the other effects which have wider significance. For this purpose it is necessary to consider the effects in several different types of situations.

"One all-pervading effect of the law is the great increase in the government's participation and influence in labor relations. With this has gone an increase in the role of lawyers, in litigation, and in the role of the courts.

"TO THOSE who believe in free enterprise and the freedom of employers and the representatives of employes to work out for themselves the best solutions for their problems (with due regard to the public interest), this in itself is bad—so bad as to condemn Taft-Hartley as a whole, in spite of some values."

Dr. Brown characterizes the well-publicized division of authority between NLRB and its general counsel as an "unedifying and confusing spectacle of a government agency divided against itself. It is wasteful of time and energy, confusing to the staff and the public, and disastrous to the efficient administration of the act.

"This dispute gives convincing evidence of the lack of clarity in the statute and the difficulties in operating under it," she says.

SHE ALSO finds: "The filing requirements, and especially the non-Communist affidavit requirement, after all the pros and cons are weighed, seem to have no place in a labor relations statute. They promote conflict and confusion, as well as being expensive and difficult to administer. Any problems could be dealt with by other means, where there is a case for federal action, or be left to the democratic processes of the unions themselves.

"Except in the extreme case where security might be threatened, workers should be free to choose the union they want, and to elect their officers as they choose, and the employer should be under obligation to bargain with that union."

Federal Mediation Chief Cyrus W. Ching was quoted as testifying that since the Mediation and Conciliation Service has independent status, separate from the Labor Dept., employers accept its services more readily.

Dewey Anderson, director of the Public Affairs Institute, says in an introduction that he and the Institute's labor advisers take exception to Dr. Brown's statement that labor leaders made a mistake in opposing changes in the Wagner Act. She maintains they should have offered constructive suggestions for improvements.

ANDERSON said that faced with big business' campaign against the Wagner Act, the political temper of the 80th Congress and other factors, labor leaders decided to sit tight and oppose changes until a calmer day when people in their right senses could appraise what change was needed in national labor policies.

Anderson and his advisers also take exception to "Dr. Brown's much-qualified acceptance of the provision in Taft-Hartley that both employers and unions be required to bargain collectively."

They also differ with her considerably in "our belief that a union is much more than a means of obtaining and keeping a job, and this leads us to the conclusion that a union should have the right to determine its membership, to discipline its members, and to develop that membership into a strong body of citizens intent on exercising the fullest rights and responsibilities of American citizens."

THEY MAKE the point that there is nothing in the record of the Mediation and Conciliation Service "to support a charge of bias or failure of the service to act fairly in the public service while part of the Dept. of Labor."

"We believe that it can do a good job either there or as an independent agency, depending on the quality of its leadership and the adequacy of its budget," they say.

"As part of the Dept. of Labor, it has a more intimate relationship and contact with those sources of material and access to experts, such as the Bureau of Labor Statistics or the field offices of the department which collect first-hand information and are currently aware of conditions, aids of no small importance."

Retail Food Prices Up, Wholesale Ones Fall

The cost of living, which went only up for months after the outbreak of war in Korea, was moving in both directions last week.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported that food prices rose 1.4% in the last two weeks of September, a conclusion based on special surveys made Sept. 15 and Oct. 2, and that they stood 2.7% higher than at the outbreak of hostilities. On the other hand, the Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index declined for the fourth consecutive week, dropping 2c to $6.48, compared to $5.94 on June 13. The decline in four weeks was 20c.

Clothing Union Wins 10-12½c For 230,000

THE CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers signed a blanket agreement with the U.S. Clothing Manufacturers' Association last week which gives 150,000 ACW members employed in the men's clothing industry a wage raise of 12½c an hour.

Twenty-four hours later the union and employers of 80,000 shirt and cotton garment workers reached an agreement on an across-the-board pay boost of 10c an hour, with an additional 1½c for specified underpaid groups of employes.

The clothing agreement becomes effective Nov. 20, that in the shirt and cotton garment end of the industry on Nov 13. The pacts are expected to set patterns for the rest of the union's 350,000 members.

ACW Pres. Jacob Potofsky said the wage increase was based on higher living costs since the Korean war and was designed to preserve previously established living standards of clothing workers and their families.

In a joint statement, Potofsky and Raymond H. Reiss, president of the association, said the industry is convinced that both civilian and military demands for clothing will be met.

"In war and in peace, the clothing industry, both employers and workers, have faithfully and efficiently performed their obligations," they said.

"The parties congratulate each other for this attitude which presages industrial peace and cooperation for many years to come."

The new increase brings the average hourly wage of ACW members in men's clothing to $1.62½c. Week workers will receive a flat boost of $5 a week.

ACW officials will meet later with representatives of management employing 80,000 workers in the manufacture of shirts, pajamas and other garments to continue negotiations for a similar wage increase in the cotton manufacturing branch of the industry.

Heading the union negotiators for the shirt and cotton garment contract were Potofsky and Vice Presidents Gladys Dickason and David Monas. In addition to the wage increase, the employers agreed to pay an additional 1% of their weekly payrolls into the industry's pension fund beginning July 1, 1951.

The pact was reached with the same amiability that characterized negotiations in the clothing industry. Potofsky and Sylvan Geismar, who headed the employers' negotiators, in a joint statement said that "the enlightened labor-management relations which have marked the cotton garment industry for more than a decade again served to demonstrate that men of good will can widen the area of agreement by discussion and do not have to resort to force."

"We are convinced," they said, "that the amicable solution of the wage problem will insure efficient production both for civilian and military needs. The industry, both workers and employers, are geared to do the best job in their history."

State Boards Accused As FEPC Violators

Five Oregon examination boards are violating the state's Fair Employment Practices Act, according to David Robinson, chairman of the FEPA advisory committee. The five are the board of medical examiners, bar, dental board, optometry examiners and the association of public accountants.

Their application forms, Robinson pointed out, still ask such questions as place of birth, race or color, whether surname has ever been changed, parents' names, and require photographs. Robinson said that only the bar group and the accountants have even acknowledged receipt of protests.

Fair Deal Foe Named Head Of Stabilization Agency

A LONG-TIME opponent of most of the New Deal and the Fair Deal has been appointed administrator of the Economic Stabilization Agency.

He is Dr. Alan Valentine, former president of the Univ. of Rochester (N.Y.), whose only previous experience in a government job was two years as head of the Economic Cooperation Administration mission in Holland. In this post, despite his record, he maintained mutually amicable relations with ECA labor advisors in Europe.

A few days later Cyrus W. Ching, chief of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, was named chairman of the new Wage Stabilization Board.

Valentine's job, under the Defense Production Act, is to "plan and develop both short and long-range price and wage stabilization policies and create the necessary organization for their administration." The task of Ching's board, on which labor will be represented, is to advise Valentine on policies for keeping down wages if wage and price controls — which cannot be separated under the law—become necessary.

VALENTINE HAS a particularly unenviable job, in the eyes of Washington. Other better known men are said to have rejected it as a hot potato. In a statement made at the time he reluctantly signed the bill, President Truman warned Congress that parts of it were so confusing as to make administration virtually impossible, and asked for speedy amendments to clarify the act. Congress went home without even considering them. The CIO had asked the President to veto the bill.

Valentine, who secured his doctor of philosophy degree as a Rhodes scholar at Oxford, served prior to his Rochester appointment on the faculty of Swarthmore (Pa.) College, where he had studied as an undergraduate.

In Rochester he came under the influence of Frank E. Gannett, Republican publisher of conservative newspapers, founder of the notorious Committee for Constitutional Government, and one of the city's most powerful citizens. His thinking, as revealed in speeches made after he became head of the university, appears to reflect that of the CCG and its organizer.

IN 1938 HE TOLD the undergraduates in his charge that government welfare programs were destroying the pioneer spirit and threatening the American way of life, a favorite theme of the CCG. In 1941—just a year after he had headed a group that called itself "Democrats for Willkie," and had predicted that 75% of all Democrats would vote against President Roosevelt—he testified before a congressional committee against the pending bill to give aid to Great Britain.

In 1943 he condemned Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill of Britain for their stand on the Four Freedoms, and said the cost to this country of maintaining them would be so great "that most of our economic elbowroom and nearly all of our private enterprise system would vanish." He thought the Atlantic Charter should have included freedom of enterprise.

The Republican bloc in Congress headed by Sen. Taft (O.) thought pretty much the same way.

CHING STARTED life as a transit conductor in Boston and became an executive in the rubber industry before entering government service.

In his tenure as head of the mediation and conciliation office he has made many friends in the labor movement. Officers and active members of CIO unions, in general, regard him as a fair-minded man who will give them the fair treatment they are entitled to—and will give the same treatment to industry.

The Wage Stabilization Board will have the difficult job of recommending a "fair" wage level if President Truman imposes the price and wage controls an increasingly greater part of the country is calling for. The board will consist of two additional public members and three more each representing labor and industry. The nine men are expected to have some long and perhaps stormy sessions before they reach any agreement. Whatever they come up with, observers in Washington expect it will be at least reminiscent of the Little Steel formula of World War II.

Three Sea Unions Agree Tentatively With Ship Owners

THREE CIO Maritime unions last week reached tentative agreement with 95 Atlantic and Gulf Coast steamship operators which gave more than 50,000 members a 6.38% increase in base wage pay.

National Maritime Union, American Radio Association and Marine Engineers negotiators reached similar and almost simultaneous accord with the member companies following union proposals for wage reviews under terms of reopening clauses in present contracts.

In the NMU contract, war risk insurance was increased up to 100% and war bonus benefits will be sizeably expanded.

Base pay of able-bodied seamen was raised from $233.51 a month, which includes a clothing allowance, to $248.41. Men in higher ratings will receive proportionate increases.

Overtime pay rate for men earning less than $262.47 monthly will be $1.22 an hour and for those making more than this amount the figure will be $1.45.

When longshore work is performed by union members they will be paid at the rate of $1.76 an hour.

The ARA contract raises a radio officer's base pay on a cargo ship to $332.13 a month and provides a new overtime pay rate of $1.85 an hour.

Present rates are $323.51 a month, including clothing allowance, or $1.74 an hour. Men aboard passenger vessels are paid higher wages.

War risk bonus provisions of the now expired Maritime War Emergency Board were extended for 90 days from Oct. 1.

The third union, Marine Engineers, will have overtime rate for members increased from $1.74 to $1.85 an hour. Extra monthly compensation of non-watch standing engineers will be raised from $45.30 to $48.19. In addition, the pay of night relief engineers will be raised from $2.03 to $2.16 an hour.

Basic monthly wages will range from $396.56 for a junior third assistant on a cargo ship to $714.84 for a chief engineer. Former rates for these jobs paid $365.28 and $664.47, respectively.

Members will be covered by a 90-day extension of the now defunct Maritime War Emergency Board's system of war risk bonuses. The Engineers' agreement went into effect Oct. 15.

OFFICERS, SHOP STEWARDS and committeemen of Steelworkers Local 1014, Gary, Ind., crowd into the local's headquarters to collect a new batch of union shop authorization cards. They have already collected thousands of signed cards from employes at the Carnegie-Illinois plant in Gary. Similar activities are going on all through the steel industry.

Puerto Rican Minimums Raised By W-HA In Three Industries

Hundreds of members of the Puerto Rican General Confederation of Labor, an affiliate of the CIO, will receive wage increases beginning Nov. 6 when higher minimums go into effect under the Wage-Hour Act.

They are employed in the cement industry, where the minimum, now 40c an hour, will become 65c, William R. McComb, Wage-Hour administrator, reported last week to Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin.

The boost was one of three recommended to McComb by a special industry committee reexamining minimums in some Puerto Rican industries, and accepted by him under a provision in the Wage-Hour Law which permits the establishment of rates in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands at less than the statutory 75c. The others were from 33c to 43c in the artificial flower industry, and from 27¼ to 40c in the hairnet industry.

Salt Water Found Good As Plasma For Burns

A GOOD, long snort of salt water, laced with baking soda, is as good as blood plasma for emergency treatment of shock from serious injuries or burns, Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing announced Oct. 13.

The announcement, which is expected to cause considerable furore in medical circles, was based on a recommendation by the Public Health Service's Surgery Study Section, an advisory body to the National Institute of Health and to the Surgeon General of PHS, Ewing said. The section is headed by Dr. Frederick A. Coller, professor of surgery at the Univ. of Michigan, and includes some of the country's foremost surgeons.

The treatment could go far in saving lives in major industrial accidents or fires or in case of an atomic bomb attack, as salt, baking soda and water are more liable to be at hand for emergencies than blood plasma.

THE RECIPE calls for a level teaspoon of table salt and a half-teaspoon of baking soda to each quart of water. Several quarts of the solution are required each day—the only limit being the patient's capacity.

Great thirst usually follows serious burns and most patients will voluntarily consume enough of it. No other drinking fluid is allowed in the first few days following injury. Sodium citrate may be substituted for the baking soda.

Shock following severe burns or injury is a severe physical and mental depression which, if prolonged, may cause death. Blood plasma is usually administered for the first day or two, followed by whole blood.

"The findings," said Surgeon General Leonard A. Scheele of PHS, "are of particular importance in a period of war emergency, since it is estimated that in the event of atomic bombing about 60% of the surviving bombed population might suffer from burns. This figure, however, does not account for injuries other than burns in which shock also might be present.

"SALT WATER offers an easy, practical method for the treatment of shock which follows burns or other injuries. It is particularly important in any period of large scale disaster. Unless the patient is disorientated, is in acute collapse or is among the very small percentage who become nauseated by drinking large quantites of the salt solution, the formula will be effective when administered by mouth."

He emphasized the fact that the treatment will not lessen the need for whole blood, but offers an effective form of treatment which can be administered by anyone.

"Whole blood and plasma are still essential," he said.

"We believe that the salt water method of treatment should also be included, however, in Red Cross training programs so that the necessary information may be fully available to all first aid personnel, including firemen, policemen, air raid wardens and housewives."

The Surgery Study Section's recommendation was based on experimental work by some of its members and others, and on clinical experience at hospitals in Michigan and Texas.

Workers' Housing Hard Hit By New Credit Restrictions

IN ITS FIRST drastic "anti-inflation" action directly affecting consumers, the government last week issued an order that will make it extremely difficult if not impossible for middle and low income families to obtain new housing.

The order, shocking in its implications, is in the form of a credit regulation issued jointly by the Federal Reserve Board, the Housing and Home Finance Agency, the Veterans' Administration and the Department of Agriculture. It tightens up greatly on credit requirements for the purchase of new homes.

No move was made to control building materials prices nor was the order accompanied by any announced program for channeling scarce and increasingly costly materials into lower-priced housing.

Instead, potential home-buyers were told they must put a whole lot more money down and take a shorter time to pay the balance, starting Oct. 12.

THE DOWN payment non-veterans must make on an $8000 home, about the cheapest available in most places, was set at $1550, and the balance must be paid off in 20 years instead of the 25 or 30 previously prevailing. To buy a $10,000 home, the purchaser must produce $2300 in cash. The down payments range on upwards; for homes costing $24,250 or more, which would interest few CIO members, the buyer must pay half in cash.

Veterans get off slightly easier, but not enough so to make much difference: $750 down on an $8000 house, $1300 down on a $10,000 one.

The officials who produced this program explained that they intended to see to it that 400,000 fewer "housing starts" were made in the next year than the building industry had originally planned. Undoubtedly the volume of building will be cut down by this order, but new building will be undertaken strictly for those who have the cash, without regard to housing need.

And since building materials prices remain uncontrolled, nothing in the new regulation guarantees that the lucky few who do have that much cash will get their money's worth. Theoretically, the fact that fewer homes will be built should mean a loosening up in the tight supply situation—but all manufacturers, including building suppliers, historically prefer to cut production rather than reduce prices.

Labor advisers, including Director Leo Goodman, of the CIO Housing Committee, fought tooth and nail against issuance of the regulation. In a series of table-thumping sessions with the powers-that-be they demanded that the government approach the inflation question in housing by (a) channeling supplies into the lower-priced housing field, and (b) controlling the price of the supplies. Significantly, the AFL Building Trades representatives stood shoulder to shoulder with CIO in this position.

All to no avail, however.

WALTER Reuther, CIO Auto Workers president and chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, aptly termed the regulation "reverse rationing."

"The present program merely establishes a reverse rationing system under which those with ample funds can secure the housing they desire, while those who need housing the most are deprived of it now and for some time into the future," he said.

"Even more important than credit control is the problem of profiteering in building materials. The lumber price index has increased 60 points to all-time high, 337.9. Intelligent builders all over the country are calling for price brakes now."

Would Columbus Have Been Threat To Nation Under Security Law?

THE HOW Silly Can We Get Dept. opened its season with a hey, nonny-nonny last week, thanks to the inspired political nonsense of Messrs. McCarran and Mundt, of the U. S. Senate, and Messrs. Wood and Nixon, of the House.

It was touched off by the usually sedate Immigration and Naturalization Service, which grew unexpectedly sportive after reading the new Internal Security Act. It armed its inspectors with writs of detention, addressed to the head man at Ellis Island or its local equivalents, and stationed them around the rim of the U. S. with orders to repel all boarders who couldn't prove they had never been dunked in what Congress must have thought were the lethal waters of totalitarianism.

The McCarran-Mundt-Wood-Nixon Law—formally dubbed the Internal Security Act—bars the admission to the U. S. of any alien "who holds or has held membership or has been affiliated with any totalitarian or Communist organization."

WITH A NET that wide, main defenses were set up at New York. The catch was terrific.

Just missed, for instance, was Arturo Toscanini, world famous orchestra conductor and a citizen of Italy with a permit to live permanently in this country. He supported Mussolini in 1919 when Musso ran the first time for the Italian Chamber of Deputies, as the candidate of protesting war veterans (Il Duce was licked).

That should have kept him out, under the law, even though Mussolini's fascist philosophy hadn't quite developed at that time, and despite the fact that Toscanini later was one of Italy's most outspoken anti-Fascists. The inspectors had quite a tussle with that one, but they finally let him in with the hope that nobody would notice.

Less fortunate was another threat to U. S. security named Friedrich Gulda, a 20-year-old Austrian pianist, who was scheduled to give a concert in New York last week.

Gulda apparently became, under the law, a bosom pal of Hitler at the age of 10, when he was dumped into the Nazi youth movement along with other potential subversives of his tender years after the Germans took over Austria. Gulda went to Ellis Island overnight. He shared a room with an Arab. Since he couldn't speak Arabic and the Arab couldn't German, they got along splendidly.

After devoting considerable thought to Gulda's problem and weighing carefully the fact that Papa Gulda, a teacher, didn't think much of the Nazis and wouldn't let little Freidrich join his fellow tykes at youth meetings, Uncle Sam let him in—long enough to give one concert. Unless they change their minds again he won't be able to appear for bookings in Boston and Chicago.

ANOTHER temporary resident of Ellis Island was Fedora Barbieri, 25, an Italian mezzo-soprano scheduled to appear at the Metropolitan Opera Co.'s opening performance in Nov. 6. Signora Barbieri broke down and confessed to the inspectors that like practically everybody else of her age who grew up in Italy, the school she attended as a child was run by the Fascists. She, too, was sprung the next day.

(The Metropolitan is real worried about whether Cesare Siepi, Italian basso, can get into the country later in the season. It fears the inspectors may regard him as a double-dyed threat. Not only is he an Italian, but he lives on the Via Moscova in Milan.)

And so it went. A whole passel of German brides of American GIs, 10 of them with children, went into detention for greater or lesser periods. So did 14 Italian musicians here on a good will tour, of all things, apparently with the blessing of the State Dept. But the 99 members of the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra of London, many of whom were born or reared under Fascism or Nazism, got in without an argument.

THE ENTIRE crews of Italian ships had to stay aboard their vessels while the service went through the involved task of separating the sheep, if any, from the goats; their sin was that they had been members of the Fascist-dominated Italian Seamen's Union. Carlos Rodriguez, co-editor of the Havana newspaper Hoy, recently suspended by the Cuban government as a Communist organ, was turned back when he sought to attend the Inter American Press Conference in New York.

The climax was reached Oct. 12, anniversary of the day on which a foreigner named Christopher Columbus (undoubtedly a threat because he was an Italian working for Spain) discovered the hemisphere in which the U. S. is located. On that anniversary the State Dept. suspended the visas issued to all foreigners overseas except those for displaced persons. The displaced persons, it expained, have already been screened for their capacities to threaten the security and welfare of this country. Others en route here will have to wait until they, too, are screened.

Chickens Home To Roost Dept.

The rain falls on the just and the unjust alike, or so the old saying goes.

Last week, the managers of two of Washington's flossiest hotels, the Shoreham and the Mayflower, took advantage of a new loophole in the rent control law and told their "permanent guests" that from now on they could pay the much higher transient rates or get out.

Among the "permanent guests" caught by this dilemma were, according to the Congressional Directory, five senators who voted against any rent control at all, and five members of the House.

Their names: Sens. Brewster (R.Me), Bricker (R.O.), George (D.Ga.), Byrd (D.Va.) and Williams (R. Del.); and Reps. Chatham (D.N.C.), Jenkins (R.O.), Jones (D.N.C.), Simpson (R.Ill.) and Stefan (R.Neb).

Also caught by the rent squeeze were six Senators and 10 Representatives who voted for the bill.

Soviet Version Of DiMaggio Is Lovely Little Pushkina

When most of the daily papers in this country were headlining stories on the 1950 World Series and telling of the feats of DiMaggio, Berra, Konstanty and Reynolds, Daily Worker Correspondent Joseph Clark had more important things to do.

He was busy covering the USSR Volley Ball Championships in Moscow.

"Autumn leaves were falling from the trees around huge Dynamo Stadium where the best women and men volley ball players were matched in tournament finals," wrote Clark.

"Volley ball is a popular game all over the Soviet Union and the brand of ball played in the huge Dynamo Stadium was better than I've seen anywhere in the United States.

"About 6000 spectators crowded one end of the huge Dynamo Stadium to watch the games. Team play was the essence of these volley ball games as it is in all sports here.

"Hardly a play in all the games had fewer than the alloted three taps on their own side of the field. Each team set up the shots and then zoomed the ball across the net with such speed it seemed miraculous how often the ball was tapped back again."

And whom do you think was the hero of the gruelling contest? Clark tells us:

"A lovely little girl, Pushkina, was the favorite of the crowd and there was loud applause for her whenever she returned a difficult shot."

Walter Reuther:

New Round Of Auto Price Increases Would Be 'Crime Against U.S. People'

PRES. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers has charged that a new round of automobile price increases "would be a crime against the American people."

"Such increases would only add to profits already at record peak levels and contribute further to the already dangerously mounting inflationary spiral," Reuther said. He added that the recent wage increases to UAW members have not noticeably cut into these profits.

Reuther said that price cuts would be more in order than price increases and illustrated his point by reference to General Motors. He presented figures to show that GM could reduce prices across the board on all its products by 18.6% and still have a 10% return on investment.

"It has been the custom of the industry to increase prices after making wage adjustments and to blame the price increases on increased labor costs.

"That blame has never been justified at any time in the post-war period and it is less justified at the present time than ever before."

Reuther said that a recent UAW Research Dept. Study showed:

1 Based on government figures for the first quarter of this year, the auto industry as a whole, including the parts suppliers, could have raised payroll costs a hypothetical 15% and still have enjoyed a profit of 20% investment after taxes.

2 Six major automobile companies (General Motors, Chrysler, Ford, Hudson, Studebaker, Nash-Kelvinator) were making an average of at least 46% profit on investment — after taxes — before their recent increases in payroll costs. After the cost of recent wage increases and other economic gains won by the workers have been met, these major companies will still make an average of at least 40% return on their investment after taxes.

3 Seventeen major steel companies show an average of more than 18% profit on investment after taxes. Their second quarter 1950 profits established new records. The steel industry can make substantial wage adjustments without increasing the price of steel and thus avoid raising the costs of the automobile producers —the largest consumers of steel.

4 Thirteen major automotive parts suppliers were making an average of 35.8% profit on investment — after taxes — before meeting the cost of recent payroll increases. A hypothetical average payroll increase of 15%, on the extreme assumption that payroll equals 40% of sales (20% is probably nearer the truth), would still leave them an average of 21.9% profit on investment after taxes. Parts suppliers cannot justify increasing the prices of their products and passing on the cost of the gains won by their workers to the automobile producer and consumer.

"Ma says 'No.' Would you care to override her veto?"

Truman Overlooked This Flaw In Law

President Truman did a thorough job of documenting the flaws in the Internal Security Act of 1950. But apparently he didn't detect them all.

One unforseen difficulty came up last week in the course of a public meeting which was part of the New York State CIO's voter registration drive.

A CIO speaker was urging his audience to register. "If you don't register you won't be able to vote," he reminded the crowd.

Spoke up one well-meaning citizen: "That don't go for me, brother— I'm no Communist!"

Talmadge Plan To Bar Negroes May Fail

Despite Gov. Herman Talmadge, Georgia's Negroes may be represented at the Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth.

Talmadge named 36 whites as delegates, although a third of Georgia's population is Negro. Despite repeated efforts for a year to get balanced representation, Georgia has refused to name any Negroes, Talmadge writing that Georgia would not participate "unless the citizens of Georgia are permitted to choose their own delegates."

Oscar Ewing, as chairman of the national committee for the conference, has now sent invitations to the 36 Georgia white delegates, and to 18 additional delegates "whose names will be chosen on the basis of recommendations made by appropriate local groups in Georgia." Since that would make 54, and since Georgia is entitled to 36 votes on a population formula, each delegate will have a two-thirds vote.

Factories' 'Take' Hits New High

AMERICAN manufacturing corporations socked away a lush $3.2 billion in profits in the second quarter of 1950, the Federal Trade Commission reported last week.

Their net income was 34% more than in the first three months of the year and 59% above the second quarter of 1949—making it their most gravy-spattered quarter since the FTC and the Securities and Exchange Commission began issuing quarterly financial reports in 1947.

Practically everything else about the quarter was record-breaking, too, the FTC said. Net sales reached a new high of $43.5 billion, or about 13% above the first quarter. Costs and expenses increased only 11%. The result is that profits per dollar of sales—a bookkeeping phony dredged up by industry accountants because it was nice and low —soared until it is now a source of embarrassment: it jumped from 6.2c in the first quarter to 7.4c.

THE RETURN on investment zoomed to an annual rate of 15.6% from 12% in the first quarter.

And dividends were estimated at $1.1 billion, a slight increase from the previous three-month period.

Nineteen of the 22 manufacturing industries listed in the report showed greater profits in the second quarter than in the first—up 30% or more over the previous period for 14 of the groups.

CIO Finds Social Security Better—But Not Good Enough

FLAWS in the newly enacted Social Security law, says the current CIO Economic Outlook, make obvious the necessity for further effective political action by all union members and for further collective bargaining pressure for better pension and health programs.

The publication is prepared by the CIO Research and Education Dept.

The Outlook does not minimize improvements made in the Social Security law. Millions of Americans who have been barely surviving on miserable pittances will at last receive higher benefits, it states. Greatest gains were in old-age and survivors' insurance, under which benefits were greatly increased, and coverage extended to 10 million more people. But, continues the Outlook:

"No new social insurance programs for permanent or temporary disability or for medical care were enacted. The public assistance program was extended somewhat, but federal grants remain far too low. Instead of strengthening unemployment insurance, Congress permitted the Knowland amendment to be stampeded through by the Republicans without hearings. This amendment undermines the safeguards enacted in 1935 to prevent the use of unemployment insurance as a weapon to pressure jobless workers into breaking strikes and undermining wage standards."

The Outlook frankly says that union pressure for pensions in contracts was responsible for passage of the improved version. It adds:

Guernsey-Montgomery for the Economic Outlook, CIO.

"Our unions are continuing to obtain better protection in the social security provisions of collective bargaining agreements. Such continued activity is essential in view of the severe limitations of the federal program. We have every reason to believe that these new collective bargaining gains, like the earlier ones, will pave the way for better benefit provisions for all Americans."

The publication details the provisions of the new law and asks union members seeking further information to apply to their nearest Social Security field office. It points out that Congress, in typical fashion, did not vote the Social Security Administration enough funds to publicize the changes, so that many millions of newly covered persons may be unaware they are now eligible.

The American Medical Association, the Outlook bluntly says, killed the disability insurance section of the administration proposals.

"THE AMA'S million dollar lobbying drive was enlisted by insurance companies to cause this cruel rejection of aid to those Americans most in need," the Outlook says.

"Telegrams from doctors to senators branded this constructive program as 'socialized medicine.' The doctors thus again permitted themselves to be scared by the trick phrases of advertising men into blocking essential constructive legislation."

As a result, a permanently and totally disabled man in the prime of life, fully insured under the law, must wait until he is 65 before starting to draw his benefits. If he has no other source of help, he must depend on inadequate home relief payments until then, probably having to sign away all his personal property in order to receive even this aid.

The original Social Security Act, the Outlook explains, provided that states, in order to qualify for federal grants and tax credits with which to pay unemployment benefits, must put their state laws into conformity with federal standards. The federal law specifically states that compensation may not be denied anyone for refusing to scab or take substandard wages, or for refusing to accept dictation as to whether or not he may join a union.

The Knowland amendment makes no change in this, but says that the federal government may not with-hold funds until the quarrel between the state and federal standards has been taken through the highest state court—which could take years.

"This action was taken in an outrageous manner," the Outlook says, "without any hearings and with little discussion. The amendment was never considered by the House Ways and Means Committee; it was refused by the Senate Finance Committee; and it was finally added on the Senate floor after five minutes' debate."

Glass Industry Giants Grant 10c Increase

THE CIO Glass Workers last week signed identical contracts with the nation's two largest glass manufacturing companies which granted base pay increases of 10c hourly to more than 18,500 workers.

The agreement signed by Pittsburgh Plate Glass and Libbey-Owens-Illinois Glass covers 10 plants in seven states and brings the minimum hourly wage for both companies to $1.34.

Skilled mechanics will receive 8c an hour in addition to the base pay increase and mechanical helpers and all production non-bonus employes will get 4c an hour additional.

Pittsburgh Plate operates plants at Creighton and Ford City, Pa.; Crystal City, Mo.; Clarksburg, W. Va.; Mt. Vernon, Ohio and Henryetta, Okla.

Libbey plants are at Toledo, O.; Ottawa, Ill.; Charleston, W. Va.; and Shreveport, La.

Funds Cut For 31 Federal Agencies

To provide more funds for defense, the Budget Bureau on Oct. 10 announced cuts of $580,271,335 for the fiscal 1951 spending authority of 31 federal agencies.

The cuts included: $75 million for hospital construction; $66 million for rural electrification loans; $50 million for the Army Engineers; $50 million for European recovery program; $50 million for government and relief costs in occupied areas; $56 million for reclamation and power marketing agencies.

Congress had ordered the Budget Bureau to cut at least $550 million from the original $36 billion omnibus appropriation bill. The total budget figure went up to $54 billion when supplemental appropriations for defense were voted.

Four States Chisel On Old-Age Payments

Larger social security payments for the old folks went up Oct. 1. State payments to the old folks promptly went down—in Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Michigan, and Washington State. In these states old age assistance, paid by the states, was reduced the exact amount that social security payments were increased. The social security payments are made by the federal government.

Murray Pays Tribute To Rep. Norton

PRES. Philip Murray, both personally and on behalf of the CIO, last week felicitated Rep. Mary Norton (D. N.J.), who is retiring after many years of distinguished service in Congress.

"Your career has been characterized by an outstanding devotion to the public interest," Murray wrote.

"You have served your constituents ably and well have attained a notable record of constructive contributions in the interests of all of the people.

"We in the labor movement are mindful of your many contributions to the cause of the men and women who work for a living. You have sponsored noteworthy legislation designed to protect and advance the interests of American workers.

"Outstanding among the bills which owe their enactment largely to your efforts is the Wage and Hour Law, which has done so much to protect the standards of the exploited and under-privileged wage-earner.

"We of labor will always remember your able stewardship as Chairman of the House Labor Committee, during which you assiduously worked to protect and advance the gains made by labor during the past 16 years.

"We also wish to record our appreciation for your activities in behalf of a fair employment practices bill designed to eliminate discrimination from the employment practices of American industry. We are confident that, ultimately, this salutary measure will be enacted.

"We have always followed with interest and satisfaction your contributions to the cause of international labor progress at the various international conferences devoted to labor in which you participated.

"We have also had occasion many times in the past to acclaim your humanitarian interest in child welfare programs and in the cause of the veterans. In both of these activities you have always enjoyed our support and have earned our gratitude.

"The Congress of Industrial Organizations salutes you on the occasion of your retirement."

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

—St. Louis Post-Dispatch

How To Make It Look Respectable?

Left Wingers Are Slapped Again By Shoe Workers

THE CIO SHOE Workers concluded their seventh biennial convention held in Cleveland, O., after handing the left wingers another in a series of defeats by voting to divide the union's largest district.

On a hand vote, right wingers behind the leadership of Pres. William E. Thornton voted 129 to 60 to split the state of Ohio from the Chicago area and set up two separate districts. Previously, left wingers in the Chicago area had controlled the whole district. The resolution, which requires a change in the constitution, must go to a referendum vote for ratification.

Another referendum vote will be required for ratification of a proposed increase in the per capita tax from 85c to $1 a month, which was approved by the convention without a dissenting vote.

The 300 delegates also voted to postpone the next convention, which ordinarily would be held in the autumn of 1952, to the spring of 1953. Autumn conventions, the union has learned by experience, interfere with major negotiations.

U. S. Agency Stays Ban On Coop Bread

THE U. S. FOOD and Drug Administration has retreated from its arbitrary debarring of Coop Triple Rich Bread from interstate commerce.

At almost the last minute it withheld its order, which was to have been effective on Oct. 9, in order to give the opposition to its ruling another month in which to make protests.

Triple Rich is the bread which contains 6% of soy flour and 2% of wheat germ, among other ingredients, and which has been pioneered by cooperatives—and a growing number of commercial bakers with an eye to sales at premium prices.

Endorsed by those who eat it as far tastier than ordinary commercial bread, and by food experts as far more nutritious, it was outlawed when the Food and Drug Administration tentatively ruled that bread with up to 3% of soy flour could be labelled "white bread," and that with 10% or more could be sold as "bread," but left no area in which a product with 3 to 10% could be placed.

Coops, nutrition experts and other spokesmen for the public protested so loudly that a few newspapers and radio commentators took up their fight. The Food and Drug Administration at last retreated and promised the new bread's friends an opportunity to register objections to its standards for "white bread" and "bread."

FTC Cracks Down, Mostly On Drug Ads

THE FEDERAL Trade Commission last week cracked down on a number of companies for using false and misleading advertising in describing products ranging from aspirin tablets to steel pipe and tubing.

The Sterling Drug Co. of New York City was told to stop inferring that the price of Bayer Aspirin has been recently reduced in 175 drug stores. "The price of 12 Bayer Aspirin tablets has been 15c since 1934," FTC said.

Sterling was also forbidden to state that Phillip's Milk of Magnesia Cleansing Cream or Phillip's Milk of Magnesia Skin Cream will keep skin free of enlarged pores or prevent the formation of enlarged pore openings; that they will control the oiliness of the skin, or the oily or dull shine of the skin, or keep the skin free of dry, scaly roughness.

Barcelona Sales Co. and Sun Ray Drug Co. both of Philadelphia, were ordered to cease claiming that Kent Castile Soap, manufactured by the former company and sold by the latter, contains significant quantities of olive oil.

The Old Mission Tablet Co., Pasadena, Cal., was prohibited from advertising that the company's product, O-M tablets, will effectively relieve gas caused by constipation or improve the digestive tract. The Valley Steel Products Co., St. Louis, Mo., was told to stop representing, contrary to fact, that it has available for sale and delivery steel pipe and tubing of specified sizes and then shipping different sizes.

"He's just checking whether you have an Amalgamated union label in your suit."

Greek Workers Assured Lies About Greece Flop In U. S.

The Greek Confederation of Labor held its 10th Panhellenic Congress recently in Athens, with 1965 worker-delegates representing 348,000 workers attending.

Arthur Strachan, director of the Labor and Manpower Division of the ECA Mission in Greece, and a former international representative of the CIO Auto Workers, gave one of the principal speeches.

Warning the delegates that labor must play a vital role in development of their war-ravaged country, he told them that 15 million American workers were looking to the convention "to counteract the slander and lies which the Communists have spread regarding the Greek labor movement."

"When I was in the United States in May, 1949," he said, "I was shocked by the attitude of the American people toward Greece. Many believed the Communist propaganda that Greece was a fascist state and not a democracy.

"But when I was home this summer, I found the attitude had changed considerably for the better."

Strachan gave two reasons for the change in U. S. public opinion —the Greek election last spring, when a government was voted into power in a free, democratic manner, and the Korean war, which pointed up the fact that Greece was saved from the fate of Korea by the Truman Doctrine.

Reuther Calls Wiley Taft's Junior Partner

THE 300 delegates to the Wisconsin State CIO Convention adopted a legislative program designed to meet state, national and international problems.

On the state level, major aims for the CIO were clearly defined in a series of resolutions calling for reapportionment in the state, revamping of public assistance legislation and increased political action.

The latter, as passed unanimously by the delegates, pledged full support for three PAC-endorsed major political candidates in the coming November elections.

Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, told the convention that Sen. Wiley (R.Wis.) "is the junior partner" of Mr. Republican, Sen. Robert Taft of Ohio.

"We must insist," Reuther said, "that politicians like Wiley run on their records and not hide behind hysteria, smoke screens and confusion."

He charged that Wiley was a "rubber stamp" of Taft and that every time Taft makes a mistake, Wiley ups and "rubber stamps" it.

REUTHER declared the American people are fighting Communism on all fronts.

"The Communists have forged poverty and hunger into a weapon. And because we have not coped with the hunger and misery of the people, they have turned to communism instead," Reuther said.

Reuther said that organized labor has done more than the McCarthys, Wileys and Tafts put together to fight communism throughout the world.

"We are against people like Taft, not only because they are anti-labor, but because they're anti-social-progress."

Wisconsin CIO Pres. Herman Steffes, who was reelected, told the delegates the CIO has received public recognition and representation in state government it had never dreamed of before 1947.

"During legislation sessions and before the legislative council, the voice of the Wisconsin CIO has been heard," he declared. He urged all CIO locals in the state to give all-out effort to constructive building of the state IUC.

T-H After 2 Years Gets Man Rehired

Lewis G. Burnside, truck driver, left his motor running for a short time while he stopped at a roadside stand for a soft drink, and he hadn't checked his gas supply that morning. So the Tampa (Fla.) Sand & Material Co. fired him without notice for "negligence." That was Sept. 9, 1948. His union, the CIO Stone Workers, went to the National Labor Relations Board.

The hearing before a trial examiner disclosed that no driver had ever been fired for a similar offense:

That Burnside had run out of gas twice before without being criticized.

That he was regarded by his superiors as a competent driver who took care of the equipment.

That back in June, 1948, the superintendent had threatened to fire Burnside if he could "get anything on him."

That after Burnside was fired, the superintendent admitted he had "been after Burnside a long time and finally got him."

Actually, Burnside's sin was that he was active in the union. Since Jan. 26, 1948, the bosses had been questioning employes about the union, had warned them against joining, had threatened them, and finally fired Burnside.

It was not until July, 1950, that the trial examiner made his report, finding for the union. The company appealed. And it was not until Oct. 13, 1950, that the board upheld the examiner, and ordered the company to rehire Burnside, and make good his lost pay.

In other words, the case took two years to settle, under that Taft-Hartley act. LPA

Settlement Averts Threatened Strike

The Chicago, Ill., Joint Board of the CIO Textile Workers called off a threatened strike against the Union Asbestos & Rubber Co., of Cicero, Ill., last week when the company agreed to a settlement.

Under terms of the new agreement, which runs until Oct. 1, 1951, the workers receive an immediate 8c-an-hour wage increase for production workers and $14-a-month boost for office workers.

In addition, the company has contracted to contribute $3.50 a month per employe for group, hospital, surgical and sick benefit insurance.

The contract provides for automatic quarterly wage increases if the cost of living in Chicago increases. The first adjustment will occur Dec. 1, 1950, according to Joint Board Manager Earl T. McGrew.

"Which comics do you want? The cartoons, or the editorial page?"

CWA Studies Bell Offer

CIO Communications Workers' top officers last week were studying an offer by the New Jersey Bell Telephone Co. which averted strike action by Division 55 members Oct. 6.

Division officials set the strike deadline after the New Jersey Supreme Court had reversed a decision of the lower courts and had sent an arbitration award of $2.50 weekly back to the state Arbitration Board.

The court decision declared that board had no power to grant a union shop and this decision was partially responsible for the strike threat.

The company offer provides for weekly increases ranging from $2 to $4. Also offered is maintenance of membership effective Oct. 2 along with other benefits. The company, however, wants an 18-month contract without a wage reopener, in addition to a no-strike clause.

N. Y. State CIO Told Demo Win There Vital

By BERNARD RASKIN

ONE THOUSAND delegates to the eleventh annual New York State CIO Convention in New York City on Oct. 5-7 were spurred on by CIO Pres. Philip Murray's warning that "a bad Congress can destroy the labor movement" and hammered out plans for putting the Empire State representatives in Washington firmly on the side of progress.

Coinciding with the crucial innings of the 1950 election contest, the convention clearly reflected the New York organization's determination to end the Dewey regime there. Murray and Labor Secy. Maurice J. Tobin led a battery of labor and government notables who expressed to the delegates the nation-wide concern over the outcome of the elections in New York state.

Murray, who the day before had concluded wage policy meetings with the executive board of the CIO Steelworkers—which he also heads—said: "Labor has as much interest in this political situation as it has in its collective bargaining situations."

The standard-bearers on the PAC-endorsed state Democratic ticket, Rep. Walter A. Lynch and Sen. Herbert H. Lehman, candidates for governor and re-election, respectively, delivered pledges of continued support of the Fair Deal program, including immediate repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law.

Justice Ferdinand Pecora, running on the Democratic ticket with PAC support for mayor of New York City, promised to establish a "labor cabinet" composed of representatives of all branches of organized labor with which he would meet regularly to take up "all matters of interest and concern to labor."

STATE CIO Pres. Louis Hollander struck back at Republican attacks on CIO-PAC in the state in his opening report to the convention. He charged that a "fog of misrepresentation" concerning the objectives and methods of the CIO in politics had been created by "self-seekers masquerading as statesmen." As an example, he cited statements by New York's Gov. Thomas E. Dewey calling the head of the state CIO the "boss" of the State Democratic Party.

Hollander countered with the charge that the Republican Party had demonstrated "irresponsibility and contempt for the public interest." Dewey's nomination for reelection, he said, was "dictated by the head of the Chase National Bank."

Others who blasted the record of the Republican administration in the state were Emil Rieve, Jacob S. Potofsky and Michael J. Quill, presidents of the Textile Workers, Clothing Workers and Transport Workers, respectively.

Turning from the political picture to review another kind of "crisis," President Murray told the convention, "I do not think that the working people of the United States are getting a square deal or an even break."

He said that while he was no believer in socialism, he was "devoted to the system of economic thinking that says there should be a better distribution of the proceeds of industry."

CONTRASTING "subsistence levels" for the average family on the one hand and "glowing, fabulous profits extracted from the public pocketbook by too many of our industries" on the other, Murray called upon industry to demonstrate "a little mature collective bargaining." He expressed the hope that the pending wage proposals of the United Steelworkers would be obtained peacefully.

A program of national and state legislation designed "to carry forward the battle against communist aggression in the world and against greed and reaction at home" was formulated by the convention.

Repeal of the McCarran-Mundt-Wood-Nixon Internal Security Act was demanded on the basis of its "ill-considered, misdirected and un-American provisions" and the call was made for enactment of effective security legislation in accordance with President Truman's recommendations.

Pres. Hollander and Sec.-Treas. Harold J. Garno were re-elected for one-year terms.

Correction

The Oct. 2 issue of the CIO News carried a story to the effect that the CIO Auto Workers were paying the premiums on the group insurance policies of UAW members on strike at the Deere & Co. farm equipment plants in Illinois and Iowa.

The story said the union decided to keep up the payments "and then make deferred collections from the workers after the strike is settled."

The UAW, however, is paying the premiums out of its treasury —as a gift to the strikers. It was the company, not the union, which proposed the deferred collection set-up—and the workers turned it down.

The story also said the strikers were asking a 15c an hour pay raise. UAW officials say no specific figure has been mentioned.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

A revolt has occurred among the workers of the Campbell Soup Co. plants as well as in other plants in and around the Camden, N. J., area.

These workers are vigorously opposed to being thrown into a merger with the Distributive Union, Local 65, and UOPWA in New York. The FTA high command has failed miserably in its attempt to scratch the other fellow's back in order to remain on a payroll. Some 1400 workers this past week voted, resulting in only one dissenting vote, to disaffiliate from the FTA and apply for a charter from the CIO.

The writer this past week attended the United Shoe Workers convention in Cleveland. The delegates showed where they stood on the expulsion of the Communist-dominated unions from the CIO, the position the CIO took in support of the government in the present crisis, and other matters of CIO policy by overwhelmingly supporting the policies of Pres. William Thornton, Secy.-Treas. James Mitchell and the majority of their executive board.

The writer proceeded to New York where he attended the New York State CIO Council Convention. Pres. Philip Murray also was in attendance and made a glowing speech, one of the best speeches he ever made, and he was roundly applauded.

Brother Tony Smith is to continue as the writer's assistant in the Industrial Union Council Dept. The Department has rendered great service in the past and will continue to render the same good service.

The writer is presently en route to California where he will participate in the election campaign among the lettuce workers in the Salinas area. More about this next week from California.

Pres. Morris Pizer, United Furniture Workers of America, reports the following UFWA-CIO representation election victories: Lincoln Industries, Damascus, Va., UFWA 370, no union 247, void 5 (The campaign was conducted by the CIO Organizing Committee, assisted by UFWA Southern Reg. Dir. Walter Carson); Mason-Parker Co., Winchendon, Mass., UFWA 98, no union 37, challenged 4 (Bus. Rep. Thomas Binnall and Rep. Lubert Taylor of Local 154 conducted the campaign). Recognition of the UFWA-CIO was achieved at the Nodelman Dinette Co., New Haven, Conn. CIO Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone and CIO Rep. Frank Avallone were instrumental in bringing this shop into the UFWA .

Sub-Reg. Dir. James Sweeney reports that in a representation election at the American Tile & Rubber Co., Trenton, N. J., the workers voted in favor of the United Rubber Workers-CIO by a vote of 117 to 92 for no union. In a representation election at the Nearpara Rubber Co., Trenton, the workers voted 100% in favor of the Rubber Workers.

Intl. Rep. N. A. Zonarich, United Steelworkers of America-CIO, reports that in a representation election at the Phelps-Dodge Refinery, Laurel Hill, N. Y., the workers voted in favor of the USA-CIO by the following vote: USA-CIO 748, Mine-Mill 117, challenged 34, void 29, neither 2.

Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda reports that in a representation election at the Denver Post, circulation department, Denver, Colo., the workers voted as follows: 56 American Newspaper Guild-CIO, 17 no union, 2 challenged. This campaign was carried on by ANG-CIO Local 74.

Reg. Dir. Robert McVay reports that in a representation election at the W. C. Norris Co., Tulsa, Okla., the workers voted in favor of the United Steelworkers by a vote of 156 USA-CIO, 136 no union, 0 IAM.

CIO-PAC Registration Drives Showing Results

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

VICE PRESIDENT Alben Barkley ("The Veep," as his family calls him) is touring 16 key states this fall, hoping to swing votes toward the Democratic standard.

And, as Washington Evening Star Columnist Doris Fleeson reports, "a sports-loving nation that dotes on its oldest professionals has taken the famous old pro of politics to its heart and is turning out in droves to watch him do his stuff.

"His romance apparently was the one touch of nature that makes the whole world feel akin to the Vice President, and, cagey showman that he is, he begins and closes his act with references to it," she adds.

The Veep is concentrating on three main points in his series of speeches. First: he is explaining the necessity for a large, unbalanced Federal budget and the consequent tax increase. Second: he is giving the whys and wherefores of our initial reverses in Korea, and in so doing is also defending the State Dept. and Secy. of State Dean Acheson from the broadsides still being tossed around by Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.). Third: he is reassuring frightened people that the U. S. is making headway against world communism and that there are no Communists in government.

And he tells them that a repudiation of the administration would "encourage our enemies and discourage our friends."

HIS TRIP started Oct. 5 and will keep him on the road till election eve, which he will spend in Paducah in his native state of Kentucky. He'll hit several cities and towns in Wisconsin, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, California, Washington, Idaho, Utah, Colorado, Indiana, New York, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kentucky and Illinois. It's not a "whistle-stop" tour; he's traveling in a chartered DC-6.

FLYING IN A DC-6, Vice Pres. Alben W. Barkley is visiting 16 key states to speak for the Democratic candidates. Here Barkley is looking at a map of the United States in preparation for his trip. He invariably concludes his speeches by saying that a repudiation of the administration would "encourage our enemies and discourage our friends. As long as I can keep my youth and vigor I'm in this fight." So far, the Veep has kept his youth and vigor.

Meanwhile Political Action Committees and United Labor Committees everywhere are redoubling their efforts to get out the vote, and to get the issues before the people. As registration figures slowly come in, it becomes more apparent that hard work is paying off in increased determination to vote.

Registration figures for the six largest cities in Ohio, for instance, show net increases, after dropping from the lists all those who were registered but did not vote in 1948, ranging from 39,179 in Cleveland to 7682 in Akron. In Toledo, where labor registration stood only at 40% two weeks ago, the net increase was 16,913, bringing the total to 180,000—and a major share is the result of a bang-up joint drive conducted by the Toledo CIO and AFL.

State officials in Ohio, on the basis of these figures (only half of Ohio's counties require registration) are now guessing that the actual vote will be well ahead of that cast in 1948 and may exceed it by more than 500,000.

IN NEW JERSEY, a concentrated drive by the CIO helped materially in the registration of more than 100,000 additional citizens in the seven major industrial counties of the state. In the six counties for which figures were currently available, there were 55,316 new registrations and 44,280 transfers (i.e. changes of address, necessary to qualify,) for a total of 99,596. Of these, it is estimated that about 27,000 of the new registrations and 17,000 of the transfers were from CIO members. Three of the counties will have the highest registration totals in their history, and the others will have totals surpassed only in 1948, State CIO Pres. Carl Holderman says.

Unofficial and complete figures for California indicate a total registration of 5.25 million—a little more than 200,000 over the previous high, which was in 1948. The average increase county-by-county is 7%, with 58.1% registered Democratic and 37.1% Republican. In Los Angeles County, registration is 2,198,800—up 76,000 from 1948 and 132,000 from the June primaries.

In Pittsburgh, total registration is up 45,500. The Democrats gained more than that, while the Republicans lost. In Indianapolis, registration is 15,000 above 1948. And so it goes.

In view of these figures, and reports from PAC workers everywhere, there was scarcely any alarm at PAC national headquarters when the Newsweek poll of 50 political experts, all of whom were wrong in 1948, came up with a prediction that the Democrats would drop four Senate seats and 30 House seats.

If this average comes true, the Republican gains will not be enough to win control of either House.

Only six of the pundits predicted the Republicans would control either House. None of them thought the Democrats could enlarge their present margin.

MEANWHILE, the AFL Labor's League for Political Education put out its own list of 13 candidates for the U. S. Senate whom, with a completely dead pan, LLPE called "bad security risks—those who talked anti-Communist and voted pro-Communist on foreign measures."

There followed a list of key votes on international legislation, and the records of the "bad 13."

"The key votes prove reactionaries are the worst security risks," LLPE said, pointing to the fact that the same 13 voted wrong on Taft-Hartley and on liberal-supported domestic measures.

In Pennsylvania, CIO-PAC and the State Federation of Labor officially and publicly declared they were working together at the state level. PAC issued a release asking all local councils to work closely with AFL central labor bodies in the last weeks before the election.

PENNSYLVANIA PAC also published a breakdown showing that in the 1939 session of the state's General Assembly, the collective vote by parties on 14 important issues was: Democrats right 1115 times, wrong 24 times: Republicans right 100 times, wrong 1425 times. In the Senate, on 12 issues, the collective vote was Democrats right 167 times, wrong 10 times: Republicans, right 47 times, wrong 372 times.

Cutest trick of the week to reach CIO News attention, however, was one pulled by the CIO Auto Workers in Indiana. They found out that Sen. Capehart (R.), who ducked voting on the Commodity Credit bill in June, had received a total of $45,004.40 in CCC crop loans over the two-year period ending March 23, 1949. The bill, which made more crop loan money available to all farmers including Capehart, nearly didn't pass: the vote was 35-35, and the Vice President broke the tie.

UAW neglected to underline the fact that Capehart got his loans mostly on corn.

Heads ICFTU Center

Dhyan Mungat, general secretary of the Maritime Union of India since 1942, will be in charge of the information and advisory center to be opened in Singapore shortly by the Int'l Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Since last December, Mungat has been acting president of the All India Seafarers Federation.

ANNA SULLIVAN

Democratic candidate for the first Massachusetts Congressional District seat in the House of Representatives is Anna Sullivan, joint board manager of the CIO Textile Workers for Holyoke. She is seeking to dislodge Republican John W. Heselton.

Extreme Right, Extreme Left Vote Alike

Rep. Clarence J. Brown (R. O.) got his comeuppance from Pres. Walter Reuther, of the CIO Auto Workers, Oct. 10 when he accused Reuther of "smearing" him by "inferring that he is a Communist or fellow traveler."

"Not at all," replied Reuther, smoothly, "I simply stated that reaction from the extreme right and reaction from the extreme left are ganging up on democracy. And I submit that the record supports my charges against Brown."

Reuther then gave a devastating list of issues on which Brown had voted the same way as Rep. Vito Marcantonio (A.L.P. N.Y.) did. The list:

"On Sept. 9, 1940, during the Nazi-Soviet Non-Aggression Pact, Communist liner Marcantonio voted against establishment of a Selective Service System.

"So did Brown.

"On Feb. 6, 1941, Communist liner Marcantonio voted against lend-lease.

"So did Brown.

"On April 15, 1946, Marcantonio voted against the bill to extend Selective Service.

"So did Brown.

"On June 25, 1946, Marcantonio voted against the conference report on the bill to extend Selective Service.

"So did Brown.

"On May 9, 1947, Marcantonio voted against the Greek-Turkish Loan.

"So did Brown.

"On Sept. 28, 1949, Marcantonio voted against an adequate ECA fund.

"So did Brown.

"On Jan. 19, 1950, Marcantonio voted against the $60 million aid program to Korea.

"So did Brown.

"On March 31, 1950, Marcantonio voted against authorization of Point 4 aid to undeveloped countries.

"So did Clarence Brown."

ARCHIE CASANTA

Nov. 7 is the day that CIO members in the Richmond, Ind., area hope that—with plenty of work—they will elect Archie Casanta state senator. He is a field representative for the CIO Steelworkers assigned to the Richmond plant of the Aluminum Co. of America. Casanta won the Democratic nomination.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., OCTOBER 23, 1950 82 No. 43

IN THE RIGHT "ALLEY": The National Committee for Fair Play in Bowling gave awards to two CIO leaders and two others for the part they played in the successful fight against the "white only" rule of the American Bowling Congress. Left to right, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey; Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers; Madison S. Jones of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Benjamin Epstein, director of the Anti-Defamation League of the B'nai B'rith. Carey accepted the award for CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Jones accepted for Walter White, NAACP executive secretary. Jones is White's Administrative assistant. The awards—bronze plaques—were presented at a dinner in Washington (Story on Page 7.)

Why Taft-Hartley Is Bad

"Experience during the last three years furnishes ample evidence of the anti-labor character of the Taft-Hartley Act," said Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, in a memorandum to international unions, regional directors and industrial union councils.

Goldberg gave nine reasons why Taft-Hartley harms labor. His indictment answers charges that the act has not injured unions, and that unions want to keep it alive as a political issue rather than have it repealed. (See Page 3.)

Read The Forged CIO Letter

The CIO News last week told the story of the attempt to use a forged CIO letter against the health insurance bill. CIO has asked federal authorities to trace the letter to its source.

The false letter bore the alleged signature of John Brophy—on leave from his post as CIO Councils director to serve with the New York office of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. For Brophy's comments and a photostat of the phony letter, see Page 2.

Congress of Industrial Organizations

CIO

718 Jackson Place, N. W. • Washington 6, D. C.

EXECUTIVE 5581

February 16, 1950

To All Affiliated Local Unions
Congress of Industrial Organization,

Dear Sir and Brothers,

The General Executive Board has adopted a resolution calling upon all its International Unions,State,District.and City Industrial Union Councils.Thrughout the Nation, To concentrate its efforts on Socialized Medicine Legislation,

It is therefore of the utmost importance that Regional and sub-regional directors,Field and International representatives, urge that all Local unions participate in an allout drive for passage of socialized medicine,legislation.repeal of the infamous Taft-Hartley Law.

It is also important that the members of our CIO union who happen to be affiliated with fraternal organization should be urged to endeavor to have to have the fraternal organization adopt a resolution and copy sent to their Congressmen and Senators,

Trusting that you will give this matter your immediate attention I am

Fraternally yours
John Brophy.
Director of Industrial Union Councils.

JB/MB

PHOTOSTAT of forged letter that sought to show CIO favors "socialized medicine" and puts national health insurance in that category—which, of course, it doesn't—is shown above. Purportedly signed by John Brophy, former CIO director of industrial union councils (whose genuine signature is shown at right), it came to light in Buffalo, N. Y.

Fraternally yours,
John Brophy
John Brophy, Director
Industrial Union Councils

U.S. Probe Asked Into Forged CIO Letter Used Against Federal Health Program

THE CIO last week turned over to Federal authorities, with a request for a thorough investigation, a photostat of a phony letter with a forged signature purportedly placing the CIO behind so-called "socialized medicine" legislation.

The photostat, which is reproduced above, popped up at a Parent-Teacher Association meeting in Buffalo, N. Y., at which President Truman's national health insurance program was being debated.

It was presented by Dr. A. H. Aaron, professor of clinical medicine at the Univ. of Buffalo Medical School. Its authenticity was promptly challenged by CIO Reg. Dir. Hugh Thompson, who was on the program as a speaker in support of the President's program.

After the meeting Thompson demonstrated to Aaron's satisfaction that the letter, on what appears to be legitimate CIO stationery, was a fraud, and that the alleged signature of John Brophy, CIO director of industrial union councils at the time, was a forgery.

Aaron publicly disclaimed the photostat, which he said had come from a source he considered "reliable," and turned it over to Thompson.

Brophy is now on leave from his CIO post to serve with the New York office of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, with duties largely at the United Nations. In New York he flatly disavowed the letter.

"It is so completely out of procedural line," he said, "in addition to being so flatly against CIO policy, that it's just plain stupid and silly.

"It shows considerable desperation on somebody's part."

BROPHY pointed out—as Thompson had to Aaron—that the letter is addressed to "all affiliated local unions." He was only authorized, he emphasized, to address letters to the industrial union councils whose work he supervised before going to ICFTU.

The CIO is strongly in favor of the President's health insurance program. The American Medical Association is vehemently opposed to it and has frequently called it "socialized medicine," which, of course, it is not. The CIO sees no more virtue in "socialized medicine" than the AMA does, and has made its position clear time after time.

The AMA recently completed a $1.1 million propaganda campaign against the plan, which included advertisements in every daily and weekly newspaper in the U. S., in many magazines and on all radio stations. The ads described the plan as "socialized medicine."

Rubber Union Wins 12c Raise In Goodyear Negotiations

THE CIO Rubber Workers and the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., after a long series of meetings, signed a new contract last week giving total wage increases of 12c an hour to 25,000 workers.

The pact provides for a general wage increase of 10½c an hour and an additional 1½c to correct inter-plant inequities. It also called for a plan to distribute the money in such a way that employes in the lower wage levels will receive greater increases than those in the top bracket.

The increase, the fifth since the end of World War II, will boost the average wage at the company's main plant in Akron, O., to a point near the $2 an hour mark, according to union officials.

In addition to the Akron workers, the agreement covers URW members employed in Goodyear plants in St. Mary's, O.; Muncie, Ind.; Los Angeles, Cal.; Topeka, Kan.; Lincoln, Neb.; Jackson, Mich.; Gadsden, Ala.; New Bedford, Mass., and Windsor, Vt.

The union also is negotiating with other major rubber companies. Settlements are expected soon, with the Goodyear contract out of the way.

ORDER NOW!

Convention Issue Of The CIO NEWS

The twelfth constitutional convention of the CIO will be held in Chicago November 20 to 24. What it does will be important to every CIO member. Officers of international and local unions should make certain that their members are familiar with its decisions.

You can do this NOW by ordering additional copies of the special convention issue of the CIO NEWS. This special addition will give complete coverage of the convention in articles and pictures. Texts of the more important speeches and resolutions will be carried in full, other stories will be informative and interesting.

BUT YOU SHOULD ORDER NOW. ALL ORDERS SHOULD BE IN BY NOVEMBER 20. BY ORDERING IMMEDIATELY, YOU CAN BE SURE THAT YOUR MEMBERS WILL GET THE FULL, AUTHENTIC STORY.

SPECIAL RATES

• BUNDLE ORDERS: Rates for bundle orders are 2c per copy for any quantity up to 1000; 1¾c per copy for quantities between 1000 and 2000; and 1½c per copy for quantities of more than 2000. Special rates for large orders.

In sending lists of addresses for bundle orders, please indicate the quantity to be sent to each address. To facilitate bookkeeping, please send checks with smaller quantity orders.

• INDIVIDUALLY MAILED ORDERS: Rates for individually mailed copies are 2¼c per copy for quantities up to 1000; 2c per copy for quantities between 1000 and 2000; and 1¾c per copy for quantities of more than 2000. Special rates for very large orders upon application.

If individual mailing is desired, this may be arranged by sending us mailing strips not more than 2½ inches wide.

NOTE: These prices are special rates for the enlarged convention edition of the CIO NEWS. Unions which already subscribe to the CIO NEWS on charge, and those who wish to take this opportunity to begin subscribing regularly to the CIO NEWS, may begin their bundle order or group subscription order with this issue and be charged no more than the regular reduced bundle order and subscription rates.

The CIO NEWS
718 Jackson Place, N.W.
Washington, 6, D. C.

We desire to place an order for the special "1950" convention issue of The CIO NEWS.

Please ship.....in bundle lots to the enclosed addresses. Check for same is enclosed herewith.

Please have the 1950 convention issue individually mailed to membership lists for which we will furnish mailing strips. The total number of names to which we desire the paper sent is.....

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... Zone ..... State .....

Organization .....

3 Years' Experience Shows T-H Anti-Labor—Goldberg

A DETAILED nine-point indictment of the Taft-Hartley Act, based on the injuries it has wrought upon unions, has been sent to all CIO international unions, regional directors and industrial union councils by Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel.

The indictment answers charges of T-H supporters that the act has not harmed unions, and that union leaders want to keep it alive as a political issue rather than to have it repealed. It also answers the charges that labor cannot document its case against the law.

"It is a coincidence that here, as in other important fields of foreign and domestic policy," Goldberg commented, "the line of the reactionaries is the same as that of the Communist Party, which likewise makes the same charge.

"Nothing could be further from the truth than these slanders coming from the extreme right and the extreme left."

IN HIS memorandum, Goldberg makes the following points:

1. The law has lead to a revival of government by injunction.

2. Strikes have increased.

3. The law has served to "obstruct and hamper the organization of unorganized workers," as reflected in a drop in NLRB representation elections.

4. Wagner Act protection of workers against employer discrimination and firings has been weakened.

5. The act's union security provisions, drafted on the premise that "employes were the unwilling captives of unions," have been completely disproved by 38,000 needless and expensive union security elections, of which unions have won more than 97%.

6. Practically "every Communist and fellow traveler in the labor movement has signed a non-Communist affidavit," but because of poor drafting of the act's language, nothing can be done about it.

7. Employers taking refuge in their "equal rights" section of the law are often turning their employes into captive audiences for their propaganda.

8. National emergency provisions of the act, as labor predicted, have proved unworkable.

9. Establishment of the independent NLRB general counsel and the splitting of NLRB functions have led "inevitably" to a breakdown in the agency's operations.

"The very provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act on their face bespeak hostility to labor," Goldberg wrote. "We might justly say that the mere existence of this law is a threat to the labor movement. After all, the Soviet Union's possession of the atomic weapon in itself justifies our fears of its aggressive use, notwithstanding that so far it has not been employed against us.

"But the case against T-H does not rest on fears alone, however, justified they may be. Experience during the last three years furnishes ample evidence of its anti-labor character."

GOLDBERG pointed out that Sen. Taft (R. O.), co-author of the act, has been forced to admit that it contains 28 defects. The time for a change, the CIO lawyer added, is overdue.

"The CIO and the AFL and every other legitimate trade union are dedicated wholeheartedly to the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act," he wrote.

"The campaign to repeal T-H and to replace it with a fair and equitable labor relations law is in the hands of the voters. The campaign now, as always, is your campaign. On election day, Nov. 7, we have the opportunity to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act. We must not fail."

Anti-Red UFWA Local Wins Raises For 700

CIO Furniture Workers Local 1010, chartered in Los Angeles, Cal., to take the place of the discredited Local 576, assertedly dominated by Communist leaders, has chalked up its first victory.

It negotiated a blanket contract giving 700 members in 10 shops a 10c wage increase retroactive to Sept. 1, with a provision for a job analysis to review wage inequities and raise rates for lower-paid jobs, but also protecting piece workers.

Two-Year Fight Wins Oil Workers Old Jobs

IT TOOK almost two years under Taft-Hartley but the CIO Oil Workers have won in their fight for reinstatement of workers by the Standard Oil Co. of California, and the Tide Water Associated Oil Co.

The National Labor Relations Board rulings ordered reinstatement, with back pay, of six at Tide Water and 43 at the Richmond plant of Standard Oil, which fired 56 men.

Standard claimed, when it fired the men, that they were discharged for violence against company employes. OWIU countered with the claim that the men had engaged in no violence and that the company had fired them solely because of their legitimate union activities.

This case involved men fired from the company's refinery at Richmond, Cal. A separate case is pending, involving men discharged at the company's El Segundo, Cal., refinery. A trial examiner has recommended that three of five men discharged there be reinstated.

THE CASES against Standard are two of several filed against California oil companies as a result of a wholesale wave of discharges during and following the statewide oil strike of 1948. The Richmond case, however, is the first on which the NLRB has acted. The union has won resounding victories in reports of trial examiners thus far issued.

In a third case, that of the Ohio Oil Co., which also refused to reinstate certain strikers, the Oil Workers also won when NLRB reversed the findings of a trial examiner who threw the union's case out on a technical point. He ruled that the required 60 days' strike notice had not been given; that only 59 days had elapsed.

The NLRB said the examiner should have counted in the day that notice was received by the company.

THE RULING was important because a union striking in violation of the 60-day notice forfeits its status as majority representative, and the strikers lose their status as employes.

The dispute illustrated another flaw in the Taft-Hartley act. For in the Standard Oil case, another trial examiner did not have the notification before him.

However, when the examiner's ruling in the Ohio Oil case was issued April 7, 1950, Standard Oil was quick to grab at it, and filed a motion to reopen the record to show that the full 60-day notice had not been given. Standard, with a straight face, said that due to "inadvertence and a reasonable mistake" it had not discovered this evidence earlier.

The board threw the motion out as "untimely filed."

Nov. 7 Is The Day To VOTE In U.S.A.

What The CIO Finds Wrong With Taft-Hartley

The case of the CIO—and of all organized labor—against the Taft-Hartley Act, as presented by General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg, follows:

1

When the Taft-Hartley Act was debated in the 80th Congress, labor charged that the enactment of the law would lead to the revival of government by injunction.

In the three years since the law was passed injunctions were secured in the courts by the NLRB General Counsel in a total of 37 cases. Only one of these was against an employer; the rest were against unions. To these 36 injunctions against unions must be added the six injunctions issued against unions under the so-called national emergency provisions of the law.

All of these injunctions were government injunctions obtained as required by the law's provisions by government agents. These cold statistics sustain labor's fears that Taft-Hartley would lead to the restoration of government injunctions. These statistics sustain labor's charge that while Taft-Hartley pays lip service to the Norris-LaGuardia Act, in effect that anti-injuction law has lost most of its potency.

2

The proponents of Taft-Hartley claimed that the enactment of the law would prevent strikes. The exact contrary has been the case.

In 1949, two years after Taft-Hartley, the number of workdays lost by strikes in plants and factories exceeded 50 million, the next to the highest on record. These figures speak for themselves. The evidence in the record is clear that the claim of the friends of Taft-Hartley that it would reduce or eliminate strikes has been disproved.

3

Labor predicted that Taft-Hartley would obstruct and hamper the organization of the unorganized workers who comprise two-thirds of the American working force. The record shows our prediction was correct.

Statistics published by the National Labor Relations Board reveal the harsh effects of Taft-Hartley on union organization. In the first two years of Taft-Hartley, 8700 NLRB representation elections were held compared to 12,500 in the last two years of the Wagner Act. Elections lost by labor unions reached a high point of 29.5% in 1948-49. Votes cast against unions were 26.9% of the total in 1948-1949, the largest percentagewise against unions since 1935.

Prof. Emily Clark Brown, an outstanding expert in labor relations, wrote in her recent pamphlet entitled "National Labor Policy" that: "Unions believe that the 'Taft-Hartley climate' had much to do with the result, and this does seem probable."

4

Unions feared that Taft-Hartley would chisel away Wagner Act protection against employer discrimination because of union activity. Here also the statistics of the NLRB show that only 981 workers fired for union activity were reinstated to their jobs in 1947-48, and 1419 in 1948-49; in contrast with 3000 and 4000 reinstatements in the two Wagner Act years preceding Taft-Hartley.

The back pay awarded by the NLRB to these victims of employer diecrimination in 1948-49 was only $597,000, about half of that awarded in 1946-47 under the Wagner Act.

This reduction in reinstatements and back pay awarded was not the result of fewer charges filed against employers. These remained about the same. The difference in results is due to Taft-Hartley.

5

The Taft-Hartley supporters assumed in the law that employes were the unwilling captives of unions under union security agreements. The record completely disproves this false and malicious notion.

The NLRB has conducted over 38,000 union shop elections under Taft-Hartley. In these polls the union shop was approved in more than 97% of these elections. These unnecessary elections were conducted at great expense to the government and also to the unions, which of necessity have had to divert themselves from organizational activities in order to protect the security their members desire.

6

The Taft-Hartley law contains a provision requiring non-Communist affidavits from union officers. It was claimed that this would help eliminate Communist leaders from the labor movement. In the three years since Taft-Hartley, virtually every Communist and fellow traveler in the labor movement has signed a non-Communist affidavit. It is extremely dubious, in view of the poorly drafted language in the act, that the government can do anything about this.

This absurdity is to be contrasted with the effective action taken by the CIO which, during the last year, has purged from its ranks every trace of Communist influence, by expelling 11 organizations whose leaders were under Communist domination. This voluntary action by the CIO is far more effective than the ill-considered and one-sided affidavit requirements of the Taft-Hartley Act.

7

The Taft-Hartleyites claimed that in enacting the law they were merely seeking to give equal rights to employers. Yet, under the guise of free speech, they have imposed upon workers a requirement that they can be freed to listen to an employer's anti-union speech in the plant on working time. On the other hand, unions can be denied an equal opportunity to state the union's case on company time and property. This unfair and one-sided doctrine of compulsory listening is abhorrent to American traditions of freedom and fairness.

8

Three years ago labor pointed out that the so-called national emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act were unworkable. It is now apparent, after six national emergency injunctions have been issued, that this section of the act has impeded the settlement of "emergency" strikes. The Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service made the following observation in its 1948 report on this subject:

> "One of the conclusions which the Service is undoubtedly justified in drawing from its experience of the last year is that provision for an 80 day period of continued operations, under injunctive order of a court, tends to delay rather than facilitate settlement of a dispute. Parties unable to resolve the issues facing them before a deadline date, when subject to an injunction order, tend to lose a sense of urgency, and to relax their efforts to reach a settlement."

9

Labor pointed out in the 1947 Taft-Hartley debate that setting up the General Counsel of NLRB as an independent office with overly broad powers would inevitably lead to a breakdown in the labor board's operations. This prophecy has been exactly fulfilled.

The board and ex-General Counsel Robert N. Denham, after an initial honeymoon, rapidly came to a parting of the ways. Finally, and in order to resolve the complete deadlock which had developed between the two, President Truman, of necessity, called for and obtained Denham's resignation.

You Can't Win Just With Good Intentions

It's OK To Go Around Making Fiery Speeches About Things That Are Wrong—But Votes Still Win Elections

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THIS STORY about a guy named Joe is pure fiction—but there are a lot of fellows like Joe around the country.

In the first place, Joe is a smart cookie, at least on the surface. He finished high school with flying colors and spent a couple of years at a good college before he started job hunting.

He went to work in a big factory and he holds a top-notch non-supervisory job.

Joe talks, with considerable knowledge, about economics, politics, war, music, books and aviation.

But Joe's known to his fellow unionists as a bellyacher—as a guy who complains too much.

He's seldom satisfied with anything—and if you listen to him long enough you get the idea the world is a heck of a place in which to live.

JOE'S A REASONABLY good speaker, but many of his fellow workers refuse to take him too seriously because he blows his top often without really attempting to remedy any of the conditions which he considers to be wrong.

He pays his union dues regularly because he's on the check-off—and he likes to pay them that way. He tells people outside his plant that unions are good things.

But he gripes frequently about the way his union is operated.

"Now, if I were running the union," he says occasionally, "things would be different. Now take the present situation. I'd . . ."

However, he almost never attends a union meeting and when he does he just sits and listens or jumps up unexpectedly so he can heatedly argue about some relatively unimportant point.

He's never served on a union committee—although asked to serve—and he's never run for office.

JOE KNOWS RIGHT from wrong—or at least his buddies think he does—and he lines up solidly with the liberal union viewpoint on important national issues.

Joe really got hot under the collar when a move was started in Congress to bring an end to OPA and price control.

"The dirty, lousy bums up there in Washington just want to ram it down the throats of the working people," Joe declared. "Every guy who voted to kill price control ought to be heaved into the Potomac!"

And it was even worse when the Taft-Hartley Act was enacted. Joe's friends didn't know whether he'd ever get over that one.

"Dictators! That's what they are," Joe shouted. "Those guys up in Congress want to put labor in chains. They're a bunch of big business-loving reactionaries and every one of them who voted for T-H should be run out of Washington."

Joe worked himself into a real lather during the unsuccessful attempt to repeal T-H and he usually gets red in the face when you mention Taft-Hartley.

ONE OF JOE'S buddies called him aside a few months ago and told him he should become active in political action work.

"You're 100% right," Joe replied. "How do I start?"

"Well," his buddy said. "We're going to have a big PAC rally next Tuesday night at the union hall. You be there and you'll find out what needs to be done."

Joe enthusiastically promised he'd be on hand—but he didn't show up for the meeting. There was a good movie he wanted to see that Tuesday night.

Joe promised four fellow unionists on four different occasions that he'd make a contribution to PAC before he finally coughed up one buck.

He said he'd give more later—but he never did.

YES, JOE'S ON THE right side of things and he has a good understanding of what's going on in the world.

Right now he's pretty burned up over the way his congressman and one of his senators have been acting since war began in Korea.

"We've got to retire those birds—and a lot more like them—to private life," Joe declared the other day.

"What we need is a lot more political action work. If we could just get everybody to study the voting records of those in Congress a lot of those guys wouldn't go back to Washington after November."

At that point Joe delivered himself of a political oration—a fiery one.

Those who heard him weren't too impressed because they remembered what happened back in 1948.

Joe went fishing on election day and didn't get back to town until after the polls had closed.

And besides, he hadn't taken the trouble to register!

THE SILLY SEASON

This seems to be the silly season over on the other, reactionary side of the fence. Some examples:

ITEM: The American Medical Association ran a series of advertisements in the Washington papers (as it did everywhere else) to praise our present medical set-up, and to scoff at the value or need of a national health insurance program.

Yet those same Washington papers, on the very same days, carried dramatic appeals from the Community Chest—appeals which made clear that thousands of people in our nation's capital simply can't afford adequate medical care.

ITEM: Publisher David Lawrence of the magazine U. S. News & World Report wrote a signed editorial bewailing what he described as fabulous amounts of money—from labor unions across the country—which are allegedly pouring into Ohio to corrupt that state and to defeat Senator Taft.

Yet the same issue of Lawrence's magazine carried a news story about the flow of donations from businessmen everywhere to aid Taft—and the story proclaimed that the Taft group has been able to buy billboards, newspaper ads and radio time in profusion.

ITEM: Gov. Tom Dewey of New York—embarrassed and enraged by disclosures hat GOP candidate Joe Hanley had received promises of money before he'd run for the Senate—said the Republican Party was just a group of little wage earners and salaried people.

Yet just a couple of weeks ago, Tom was complaining that the CIO—an organization of wage earners—had "dictated" the selection of the Democratic slate.

ITEM: The National City Bank of New York, one of the country's biggest financial institutions, announced that union wage demands are the principal, if not the sole, cause of the present inflation.

Yet everybody, including the bank's own economists, knew that prices went zooming upward after the Korean aggression—and wage increases came a long while afterwards.

May we most respectfully suggest the Medical Association, Publisher Lawrence, Gov. Dewey and the Natl. City Bank interrupt their programs with a brief pause—to honor the memory of harassed, bedraggled TRUTH.

REMEMBER TAFT-HARTLEY

Elections are 15 days away. Among other things, we'll be voting, in effect, on repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Three years of Taft-Hartley have demonstrated that the anti-labor act is bad for unions and bad for decent management-labor relations. Nov. 7 is the day we should vote to repeal it.

The CIO general counsel has just issued a memorandum which shows nine different ways that T-H has hurt labor and hurt the nation. As Arthur Goldberg pointed out in his memo, the case for repeal has been "amply documented."

Charges that labor doesn't want the law repealed, that it likes T-H as a political issue, that the law hasn't really done unions any harm—are just so much hogwash.

The facts show that T-H is an evil act, and it should be washed off the books. Your vote, for liberal candidates for Congress, will help do it.

'Lobby For Us,' Firm Tells Employes

SOMETIMES unions, like reporters, get inside tips. The CIO Auto Workers education dept. recently got a good one, which exposed the way a company put heat on its upper bracket employes to lobby for its pet legislative schemes.

The union has no idea who sent in the tip. No name or note from the sender was enclosed in the plain envelope, postmarked Toledo.

Inside were two confidential memoranda giving away some secrets of the Owens-Illinois Glass Co. intended only for the eyes of administrative and supervisory personnel.

A careful check with a Toledo broker and a lawyer, both of whom know the company well, convinced the union officials that the memos were authentic.

One of the secret memos, dated April 12, 1949, and sent to the heads of the company's seven plants, suggested that administrative personnel, and sales, branch and plant managers in other divisions and subsidiaries, write letters urging retention of the Taft-Hartley Act, to congressmen or senators on plain or personal stationery.

The memo recommended that the letters be short, written in long hand or personally typed, and composed by the writers. To help them, the memo listed the company's reasons for wanting Taft-Hartley retained.

THE OTHER memo, dated July 27, 1949, was sent to the heads of all the company's branches and divisions. It called for letters to be written to Congress by "all Owens-Illinois people, including and above the rank of supervisor and all office personnel . . ."

In this case, the letters were to protest government spending and to oppose the National Health Program—and again arguments were listed. These were "biased, irrelevant, or, in at least one case, demonstrably untrue in context," states the UAW's official education monthly, Ammunition.

Along with the memos were forms which employes were asked to fill out, telling to whom they had sent letters. These forms were to be collected from the employes by the division manager and returned to D. D. Degnan in the company's public relations dept.

"You have heard of government by pressure groups and government by lobby," comments Ammunition, the UAW education dept. publication, "but here is government by economic blackmail.

"Does a corporation organized for the purpose of manufacturing glass products have the right to use stockholders' money to pressure its employes into lobbying for corporation official legislation?

"If a powerful corporation does have the right to blackmail its employes into lobbying for the kind of Rich Man's government the corporations want, what will happen to the freedom and liberty of the rank and file American?

"Plainer than ever is the need for a complete investigation of the illegal, semi-legal, and quasi-legal political activities of corporations. More urgent than ever is a law forbidding political blackmail and activity by the corporations.

"But most important is the necessity for everyone to register and vote. If you don't, blackmail wins by default."

Election Eve Raise Legal

THE BOSS HANDED out a pay increase, and put in an improved insurance plan after the union petitioned for an Labor Board election.

The union then lost the election, and complained to the NLRB. A trial examiner ordered the election set aside. On appeal, the full board reversed the examiner.

The board declared that granting of wage boosts or other benefits during pendency of a representation proceeding is not in itself grounds for setting aside an election. It depends on the circumstances.

In this case the board decided that the timing was only coincidence, that the employer was following past policy of adjusting wages and benefits to conform to those in the industry.

The board did not take into account the fact that the employer had issued a number of bulletins and letters to the workers opposing unionization.

The case involved the United Screw & Bolt Corp., Chicago, and a local of the CIO Auto Workers.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher
Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII October 23, 1950 No. 43

As An Organizer He Was Good Carpenter

THERE'S AN old saying in the labor movement that a good organizer must be a jack of all trades and that a man without at least one special talent is sunk.

Some organizers have a specal gift of gab—an ability to put their point across by saying the right thing at the right time.

Others have helped form unions by doing such unexciting things as baby sitting.

The record of the CIO's membership campaign in the South shows that one organizer was able to make progress because he shot a hole-in-one on a golf course.

Another established valuable contacts by grabbing a hoe and going to work in a worker's garden.

But this is the story of a man who was handy with a hammer and saw.

NATURE DIDN'T endow Hamp with a "silver" tongue. He wasn't a golfer and he had only limited knowledge of crop cultivation.

But Hamp had a good understanding of human nature.

This understanding, he realized, would have to be worked overtime if he was to make progress in a tough situation to which he had been assigned.

Several attempts had been made to organize the mill before Hamp was told to make another try at setting up a union.

Previous campaigns had followed a pattern which Hamp didn't intend to duplicate.

In the past there had been no active local leaders who stuck their necks out and kept the organizing ball rolling.

Just before election time the company had turned on the heat and the union had lost out at the polls.

YES, IT WAS going to be different this time, Hamp told himself after reviewing what had happened before.

He was going to get people from the mill to lead the drive so there would be real strength when the company opened its anti-union push.

But how?

Hamp studied the situation some more—then he hit on an idea.

The mill village, in which about 90% of the workers lived, was in very poor condition.

During past union drives, Hamp learned, the word had gone out that the village would be "fixed up nice" if the workers voted against the CIO.

But it never was.

So Hamp began spending a lot of time in the village.

He'd visit the home of a worker, get into conversation with him, then eventually say something like this:

"Say, those boards on the porch are rotten clear through. Aren't you afraid one of your kids or your wife will break a leg by falling through there one of these days?"

THE REPLY was usually in the affirmative—and so Hamp would say, "Well, you know, I'm pretty handy with a hammer and saw. If you want me to help you I can fix it up in almost no time. And I know where we can get some boards real cheap."

And thus Hamp spent a lot of time doing carpentry work and making friends. And these friends got interested in the union.

Hamp hammered and sawed and talked about porches, railings, steps and unions as the date for the election approached.

The company "turned on the heat" as it had in the past, but the local union leaders stood firm.

When the ballots were counted the NLRB announced the union had won.

Commenting on the victory, one of Hamp's fellow organizers declared, "It's the first time I ever heard of a guy winning a textile election with a set of carpenters' tools!"

A.L.S.

OH, YEAH!

French CP Gives Up Trying Marshall Plan Sabotage

COMMUNIST influence in western Europe, given a shove downward by aggression in Korea, is still tumbling, with serious political and economic repercussions in France and Italy, according to the press dispatches.

In France, the Communists apparently have given up their futile but persistent efforts to sabotage Marshall Plan shipments and French rearmament.

They are now ballyhooing wage increases as a weapon of peace, while at the same time they are moving in the direction of a limited united front with the Socialists.

In Italy, anti-Communists long on the defensive against Red propaganda and power are now on the offensive, with the Communists frantically trying to find the answers, news service reports indicate.

NO FORMAL announcement has been made of the Communist change in policy in France. But a high government official has charged the order came from Russia about a month ago, accompanied by what it called a "blistering criticism" of French Communists.

This criticism, reportedly was based on the almost complete failure of the native Reds to carry out their proclaimed intention of stopping shipments of U.S. arms into the country and of blocking domestic arms manufacture. It also rapped them for alienating Frenchmen sympathetic with other party aims.

At any rate, there has been no direct sabotage of arms shipments or arms production in recent weeks.

Instead there has been an effort to improve relations with the Force Ouvriere and the Christian unions, the anti-Communist labor groups. The hope apparently is for a common effort to implement the Red plan, which calls for political union with other groups, if necessary, to demand higher wages, and denunciation of rearmament as a waste of money and a trick of the U.S. to help destroy Russia.

"The battle for bread is at the same time a battle for peace," Maurice Thorez, French Communist leader, is quoted as saying.

A "real contribution to the battle for peace," he added would be made if the CP could agree with other political groups only on wage increase demands.

Political observers say that the main factor in the shift of sentiment against the Communists is the way the war in Korea has been going, and that a secondary factor is the unpopularity of sabotage among the French.

IN ITALY, the government went into action at about the time the North Koreans crossed the 38th parallel, according to the Associated Press.

The peril of a fifth column to the country was pointed out by cabinet ministers with many a side glance in the direction of the Communists. Plans were drafted to strengthen the army and navy, and legislation was prepared to appropriate $250 million to build up the army, navy and police over a three-year period. Minister of the Interior Mario Scelba, who is cordially hated by the Communists, alerted his departmental police and demanded organization of a home guard of trusted veterans.

The government also really went to work in the propaganda field.

The Christian Democrats and other anti-Communist parties kept pace with the Reds in the wall poster war, where the Communists have been having things pretty much their own way.

"Every time the Reds put up a poster," the AP said, "a reply was pasted beside it. Usually the reply was bigger and louder.

"There was no more dallying in answering Communist charges and boasts in newspapers or from the speaker's platform. Each declaration by Palmiro Togliatti, leader of Italy's 2.5 million Communists, brought documented replies."

THE COMMUNIST attack on the United States and President Truman has, of course, been stepped up since the Korean war started and U.S. troops, under the United Nations flag, moved in to stop the invasion. Their warfare against the Vatican is likewise unabated.

Since the government took over some of the propaganda warfare against the Reds, U.S. Ambassador James C. Dunn and ECA officials and publicity technicians, have complemented its drive. At the same time they have exerted great care not to get themselves involved in Italian politics, the AP said.

It's Getting Chilly For Reds In Iceland

Communist influence among the workers of Iceland is waning, just as it is in the rest of the western world.

Members of unions on the island are now electing delegates to the 22nd convention of the Federation of Icelandic Labor Unions—and the democratic elements have been scoring one victory after another.

The peak of anti-Communist success was reached when the democratic coalition in the Reykjavik Seamen's Union, second largest in the country, routed the reds by a 595-431 vote and gained 16 convention seats.

Oil Workers' Top Officers Re-elected

THE THREE incumbent international officers of CIO Oil Workers Intl. Union have been reelected in a referendum vote of the membership.

Announcement of the election results was made by the firm of McCammon, Morris, Pickens and Mayhew, certified public accountants, of Forth Worth, Tex., which conducted the election.

O. A. Knight, president, was elected to his eleventh term without opposition. A. R. Kinstley, vice-president, defeated challenger B. J. Schafer of Chicago by 494 votes in a close contest.

T. M. McCormick, secretary-treasurer, defeated challenger Dave Herring of Hammond, Ind., by a three-to-one margin.

The following were elected to the union's executive council, one member coming from each of eight geographical districts: Lloyd Cooper, Rodeo, Cal.; W. A. Urban (incumbent), Sinclair, Wyo.; T. F. Scarborough (incumbent), Borger, Tex.; L. L. Crane (incumbent), Port Neches, Tex.; W. A. Mitchell (incumbent), Tulsa, Okla.; George Carlson (incumbent), Hammond, Ind.; Hiram I. Cole, Chester, Pa.; A. McLeod, North Vancouver, B. C.

All officers will serve one-year terms.

PLEASANT BEGINNING: Philip Murray, CIO and Steelworkers president, (left) and Vice Pres. John A. Stephens of U. S. Steel exchange greetings as they meet to discuss the steel union's proposal for higher wages and other contract improvements. The meeting was held at Pittsburgh, Oct. 16. Talks will be resumed Oct. 27.

Stone Union Wins 5-15c Increases

WAGE increases ranging from 5c to 15c an hour, along with paid holidays and vacations, pension plans, insurance and other cost items, have been won in all parts of the country recently by local branches of the CIO Stone Workers.

Some of the gains were chalked up in renewal negotiations, others during the lifetime of contracts which were reopened because of the sharply increased cost of living.

At Pembine, Wis., the Stone Workers were forced to strike for four weeks before winning a contract providing for 5c an hour immediately, 3c on Dec. 1, another 5c next July 1 and still another 5c on July 1, 1952. The branch also won the union shop and the checkoff.

After a five-day strike at Pelham, Ala., the Stone Workers won a 9c per hour across-the-board increase.

Harbison-Walker brick workers in Pennsylvania negotiated a 10c an hour boost. Marble workers in Vermont accepted 5c with no strings attached after rejecting the same offer conditional upon extension of the contract. The 15c raise was won by an Ohio branch.

Pay Talks Opened With U. S. Steel

THE CIO Steelworkers last week held exploratory talks with two of the nation's leading steel producers, U. S. Steel and Bethlehem, over union proposals for a cost of living wage increase for a million USA members.

Union proposals were not revealed, but both companies agreed to later meetings—U. S. Steel on Oct. 27 and Bethlehem on Nov. 1.

Following the conference in Pittsburgh, between USA-CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Vice Pres. John A. Stephens of U. S. Steel, Murray said the meeting was limited to a "general discussion concerning the economic justification for a wage increase."

He said no specific demands were presented but that the union proposals were in the form of a general request for a "healthy and substantial" wage boost.

"The company did not make any counter-offer," Murray said. Most of the discussion revolved around the rising cost of living and Steelworkers' present standards of living, he added.

IN NEW YORK, District Director Joseph P. Molony, of Buffalo, led a union delegation in a meeting with Bethlehem officials, proposing a "general wage increase and other benefits."

Molony said little time was spent presenting economic arguments in favor of a wage boost.

"We don't see any point in talking about cost-of-living or anything else," he said. "We just want to talk a substantial wage increase."

The day before, Molony met in New York with negotiators of Colorado Fuel and Iron Corp., which has plants in Pueblo, Col., and Buffalo, N. Y. This was the second meeting to discuss a wage increase.

Meanwhile, the first union shop election in the basic steel industry was scheduled by the National Labor Relations Board for last Friday, at the Wheeling, W. Va., and Steubenville, O., plants of the Wheeling Steel Corp. About 12,000 production and maintenance workers were eligible to vote.

THE UNION petitioned last week for union shop elections at three more basic steel company plants.

They were: Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co., and Youngstown Metal Products Co., Youngtown, O., S. Chicago, Ill., and E. Chicago, Ind., 21,000 workers; Allegheny Ludlum Corp., Brackenridge and West Leechburg, Pa., 9100 workers; and Kaiser Steel Corp., Fontana, Calif., 4000 workers.

A PLEASANT INTERLUDE occurs for Paul G. Hoffman, retiring ECA administrator, (right) as Miss Steela Hallonberg, stenographer of the Swedish Confederation of Trade Unions, pours him a cup of coffee. Hoffman is making a final tour of the Marshall Plan countries. At left is Victor Sjaholm, ECA labor officer in Sweden.

Scholarships Offered Labor

MANY scholarships for study abroad in 1951-52 are available to the American labor movement.

The Fulbright Act offers two senior scholarships for research and four junior scholarships for study in the United Kingdom and six scholarships for social work. The Transatlantic Foundation offers three or more scholarships for study at Ruskin Labor College at Oxford.

The American - Scandinavian Foundation extends two or three trade union fellowships for study in Denmark and Sweden, and foundation fellowships for study in Iceland, Norway, Denmark and Sweden.

The American Labor Education Service, which has been responsible for the greater student exchange abroad for unionists, has recently appointed a Committee on the International Exchange of Worker-Students. Dr. Harold Taylor, president of Sarah Lawrence College, is chairman.

The committee includes several representatives of the CIO and AFL. (LPA)

'Public Be Damned' Department

The state of mind that produced a Vanderbilt who said "The public be damned," and meant it, is back again in the person of Earle V. Grover. He is president of the Apex Steel Corp. of Los Angeles and chairman of the southern California committee sponsoring an anti-public housing referendum at the November election.

Grover complained recently that a contemplated public housing project in a suburb of Los Angeles would "interfere with plans for a yacht harbor."

Nov. 7 Is The Day To VOTE In U.S.A.

Unions Issue Daily Paper

MEMBERS OF the Pittsburgh Newspaper Guild, idled by the strike of AFL mailers on the city's three daily newspapers, are putting out their own daily eight-page paper, with the assistance of printing trade unions.

The three strike bound papers are the Press, Sun-Telegraph and Post-Gazette. The papers laid off 3450 members of the eight non-striking unions, with no notice and no pay.

The paper is called the Pittsburgh Daily Reporter.

Guild members said the Reporter will concentrate on local news but will run general stories on the Korean war and other international and domestic items of interest.

Mayor David L. Lawrence intervened in the strike last week, asserting that the dispute was harming trade and curtailing city revenues.

The mayor talked with representatives of the newspaper unions and with publishers in an attempt to effect a conciliation.

Factory Modernized, Everybody Profits

A cotton doubling mill in Lancashire, England, has shown what can be accomplished when modern factory operating principles are put into effect, according to the British Information Service.

As a result of scientific fixing of workloads, respacing of machines and the introduction of mechanical devices, workers' earnings have gone up by 18 to 40% since 1948 while productivity increased from 11 to 46% and production costs on different phases of production dropped 5 to 22%.

Pressure Mounting For New Rent Curb Law

PRESSURE ON Congress to pass a stronger rent control law in its forthcoming "lame duck session" which starts Nov. 27 is mounting with every passing week.

Congressional leaders have been taking the position that it will be impossible to pass a new law before January 1, but here are some examples of what is happening that may change a few minds:

Davenport, Ia.: The City Council voted decontrol in this town, which borders on Scott County, Ill. The area is booming with defense contracts and 16,000 were on strike a short time ago.

A letter to the Office of the Housing Expediter from the chairman of the local Committee for the Continuance of Rent Controls says "these people are not in a mood to accept with a smile a notice that their shelter cost is up from 25% to 50% and perhaps more." There's nothing OHE can do.

Grosse Pointe, Mich.: Rents were decontrolled by local option Oct. 6, and tenants received notices within 24 hours of rent increases of 40% and 50%.

Camp McCoy, Wis.: Expecting a sizeable increase in personnel, the commanding officer asked Gov. Rennebohm (R.) to call a special session of the Legislature for the purpose of passing a rent control law. Rennebohm refused, saying it was up to Congress.

Battle Creek, Mich.: The city council decontrolled the city effective Oct. 20 in spite of the fact that the Percy Jones Army Hospital is adding 2000 beds and that nearby Fort Custer is being reactivated with the expected addition of several thousand men.

Meanwhile 63 additional cities last week asked for continuation of federal controls beyond Dec. 31, bringing the total to 248 with a combined population of approximately 10 million. Thousands more communities must take similar affirmative action unless they want controls to expire Dec. 31.

The embattled tenants of Los Angeles, who have been staving off through court action the effective date of its City Council decontrol order, secured their third temporary injunction and prepared to argue their case again this week.

Yule Bonus Gyp Fought By UAW

The CIO Auto Workers last week filed an unfair labor practice charge against Deere & Co. when the firm refused to pay Christmas bonuses to 15,000 workers who have been on strike at seven plants since Sept. 1.

UAW Vice Pres. John W. Livinston said "the company has conditioned payment to any employe of its annual bonus, due Oct. 28, upon abandonment by the employe of the current strike, thereby discriminating against employes for engaging in their lawful right to strike."

Three of the struck plants are at East Moline, Ill., the others at Des Moines, Dubuque, Ottumwa and Waterloo, Ia. The company manufactures farm machinery.

HAROLD J. STILES
ATTORNEY AT LAW
NEWARK, NEW YORK

October 9, 1950

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Burns
212 Fillmore St.
Newark, N. Y.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Burns:

I had another call from Mr. Phillips and as you told me, the fact that you have television seems to have upset him. He asked me to inform you that if the television is removed, your rent will continue to be $27 per month, but that if you insist on keeping the television, your rent will be raised to $50 per month effective November 1, 1950.

As I told you before, he has a perfect right at the present time, to raise your rent to any amount for any reason he sees fit. Of course, there is always a possibility that Rent controls will come back on in this area at any moment.

Please do not come to me and complain about this raise as there is really nothing at all that I can do about it.

Respectfully,

Harold J. Stiles
Harold J. Stiles

HJS:v

THIS LETTER reveals an unique system for increasing rents where rent control has ended. The letter was received by Robert Burns, Newark, N. Y., a member of CIO Local Industrial Union 1744, Silver and Cosmetic Workers, from Harold J. Stiles, attorney and Republican police judge, who was acting on behalf of a landlord. Burns is fighting the rent increase. CIO members in the area have told Stiles that a picket line will be placed around the house to halt eviction. Maybe Howdy-Doody and Milton Berle can be persuaded to join the pickets!

Security Law Backers Complain Their Law Is Being Enforced

IF ALL the world's a stage, as Shakespeare wrote, the United States continued to play the No. 2 clown role last week with the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon-Wood Act as its main prop.

(No. 1 international clown is, of course, another country—which shall be nameless here but whose main prop is a curtain made of the principal raw material entering into the manufacture of steel.)

Natives of countries ruled at one time or another by Nazi, Fascist or Communist governments continued to be welcomed—at Ellis Island. The Dept. of Justice finally caught up with the Spanish Falangists and notified the State Dept., it was barring them, too. But Argentine Peronists continued to pile in at will, though the crews of Italian ships couldn't even land.

THE PEOPLE who led the fight for the law in Congress complained bitterly because it was being enforced. Sen. McCarran (D. Nev.) said indignantly that Dictator Franco's Falangists are not members of a "totalitarian" party. And he asserted flatly that they would not attempt to overthrow or upset the internal security of the United States. Only Communists want to overthrow our government, he blandly insisted.

Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.), one of the more vigorous supporters of the law when it was being greased through the Senate, with a perfectly straight face accused the Truman administration of "perverting" the law by trying to enforce it.

The law bars entry to this country of anyone who has ever been associated with a totalitarian movement, whether successful or not.

It also provides for the registration of Communist organizations and front groups in this country. The CP bodies have to register their officers, members and financial records, the fronts their officers and financial records.

The 30-day period allowed in the law for registration expires Oct. 23. On Oct. 19 the Dept. of Justice announced that it was ready to begin taking down names, addresses, and other required data.

AS THIS edition of the CIO News went to press, it appeared unlikely that the department would be snowed under by Communists and officers of Red-front organizations clamoring to register. In making public the fact that it was ready for business, with forms printed, a seven-page list of regulations compiled, etc., the department reported that not a single eager Communist had applied for registration up to that date.

In fact, the department hinted rather broadly that it didn't expect anyone to register until forced to do so.

Department spokesmen indicated that the Communist Party will be the first goal, and that front groups will not be tackled until later.

But before any action can be taken to enforce the registration requirement, President Truman must appoint a five-member Subversive Activities Control Board. Department officials guessed it would take six months to get the board up to the point of acting on a petition that the CP be compelled to register.

And if the board rules that the party must register, it is expected to launch a fight in the courts that could go on for years. If the courts uphold the law, any organization which does not register is subject to a fine up to $10,000. Any individual who fails to fall in line is liable to have to pay a similar fine and also serve up to five years in prison.

In New York the Immigration and Naturalization Bureau's inspectors stepped up their screening of aliens they regarded dubiously, and cut down on the length of the stay at Ellis Island required until it could be determined the visitors weren't coming here to overthrow the government.

But a lot of the innocent were still being caught. More war brides, including a couple who have lived in this country and were returning from visits to relatives abroad, were held up.

Friedrich Gulda, 20-year-old Austrian pianist who was reluctantly admitted after spending a night at Ellis Island because he had been a member of a Hitler youth group when 10 years old, gave one concert. Then he decided to go back home rather than tackle the red tape that would be necessary to extend his stay so he could make further appearances.

FEDORA Barbieri, Italian mezzo-soprano who came here to sing for the Metropolitan Opera Co., spent nearly a week on Ellis Island before the authorities decided that attendance at a Fascist-run grammar school wasn't enough to make her dangerous to the peace and safety of the U. S.

Luigi Romano, 29, of San Francisco, who came to this country in 1940 and has his first citizenship papers, was temporarily barred upon his return from escorting his mother to her home in Italy. He had been a seaman in Italy when Mussolini controlled all unions.

The Italian Embassy at Washington protested sharply to the Dept. of State against the way the act is being enforced. The note, sent before the decision on the Spanish Falangists, charged that the act "is practically applied only to Italians, who never have had an important part in the late Fascist regime."

CIO Renews Pledge To Fight Discrimination As Murray, Reuther Get Fair Play Awards

CIO PRES. Philip Murray and Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers were presented with bronze plaques by the National Committee for Fair Play in Bowling at a dinner at Washington recently.

The plaques were given in recognition of the part Murray and Reuther played in eliminating discrimination in bowling. CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey accepted the award for Murray, who was unable to be present.

Walter White, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Benjamin Epstein, director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, received similar awards for their part in helping to end the "white only" policy of the American Bowling Congress.

Edward J. Sparling, president of Roosevelt College in Chicago, who was master of ceremonies, paid tribute to the efforts of the CIO to end the racial ban.

BOTH CAREY and Reuther said that racial and religious bias and discrimination at home hurt the United States abroad and impair our national security.

Carey said the CIO "is dedicated to the proposition that in order to build a strong and healthy labor movement, we must provide membership for all workers, regardless of race, creed, color, sex or national origin.

"We have sought to implement this fundamental principle by the creation of specific machinery within the national CIO and most of our affiliates, designed to eliminate discriminatory patterns prevalent in American industry and in the communities in which we live." Carey is chairman of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination.

"The participation of the CIO in the work of the National Committee for Fair Play in Bowling is a concrete example of how we have sought to implement this heritage of ours." Carey said.

"In rallying the American people to the suport of a continuing program to improve our civil rights, we simultaneously strengthen our moral leadership in the family of nations."

REUTHER declared that the fact that discrimination is rampant in this country is used against the U. S. by its enemies.

"America cannot gain leadership by relying on its economic leadership alone," he said. "Other peoples must believe we have the ability to help them.

"Until we are able to show them that we can defeat discrimination in our own back yard, they will not be convinced. Our job is to build that kind of a world where the dignity of man is realized."

The CIO Auto Workers began the drive to wipe out the color and nationality line in bowling at the 1944 ABC convention. Three years later the Fair Play committee was organized by some 25 national organizations.

CIO General Counsel Arthur Goldberg, acting on behalf of Murray, started legal action against the ABC in Illinois. This resulted in victory last April when Judge John A. Sbabaro of the Superior Court at Chicago told ABC that its charter would be revoked unless it lifted its restriction limiting membership to white males.

THE ABC convention, held less than a month after the decision, voted to remove the offending restriction.

Meanwhile, the NAACP and the Anti-Defamation League brought action in the New York and Wisconsin courts to have the ABC charters revoked there. The ABC convention action eliminated the necessity of rulings in these states.

Dewey Accused Of 'Buying' Nomination

THE NEW York State political situation was rocked last week by an old-fashioned scandal involving outright sale of the chance at public office in return for a clean-up of a candidate's personal debts.

The principal characters involved in the deal were Gov. Thomas E. Dewey, the man who never wants to run for public office except when nominations are open, and his lieutenant-governor, Joe R. Hanley, who has wanted for years to be governor of New York.

Hanley thought this year he'd get his chance, but early in September he suddenly and "voluntarily" decided to run instead for the U. S. Senate against Herbert Lehman (D.), the incumbent, thus clearing the way for Dewey to change his mind and run for re-election.

The "voluntary" nature of Hanley's change of heart was made public in photostat copies of a Sept. 5 letter from Hanley to his old friend, Rep. W. Kingsland Macy (R.), a Dewey-hater, who had been backing Hanley for governor. The letter said in part:

"Today I had a conference with the Governor in which certain unalterable and unquestionably definite propositions were made to me. If I will consent to take the nomination to the United States Senate, I am definitely assured of being able to clean up my financial obligations within ninety days, so that I would be clear for the first time in 20 years.

"Also I have an iron-clad, unbreakable arrangement whereby I will be given a job with the State . . . at sufficient compensation to make my net income more than I now have.

"Therefore tomorrow morning I am going to announce that, if the delegates will nominate me for the office of United States Senator, I will accept.

"IF YOU feel bitter, I can understand why, but I can assure you that within a short time you will receive from me every cent that I owe you, and at least you will not lose that part of the investment.

"You and Mr. Gannett (Frank Gannett, publisher and leading figure in the Committee for Constitutional Government) have been wonderful and the only bright spot in the whole terrible picture is that I shall be able, within a short time, to pay you both in full. I am humiliated, disappointed and heartsick, but in fairness to myself, to you and to my family I can do nothing else."

Hanley made the letter public himself, because he knew the Democrats had gotten hold of a copy, presumably through Macy. Then he and Dewey both tried to explain it away. Neither succeeded.

Dewey's approach was most interesting: boiling down several thousand words, what he said in effect was: "We didn't do it, and anyway, the Democrats do it too."

The story exploded onto the front pages of all New York papers and stayed there.

Rep. Matthew Lynch (D.), running against Dewey for Governor, called for Dewey's resignation and said if Hanley were elected, the Senate would refuse to seat him.

LOUIS HOLLANDER, president of the New York State CIO Council, commented:

"The story . . . is revolting to all decent citizens . . . Dewey has followed the first rule of the Kremlin, which is 'liquidate the opposition.'

"Dewey tries to scare his opponents off and if that doesn't work he tries to buy them off . . . Common decency demands that Dewey and Hanley withdraw as candidates."

Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the CIO Clothing Workers, said Dewey should resign and Hanley should withdraw. The deal, he said, was "political corruption at its worst, involving untold thousands of dollars . . . Impeachment and disbarment proceedings should be instituted at once for their political conspiracy."

Hugh Thompson, CIO director in Buffalo, said letters were being sent to all members of the Legislature demanding a special session for the impeachment of Dewey and calling on Hanley to withdraw from the race.

Not the least shocking feature of the revelation was the tie-in between Hanley, who at 74 has been posing as a life-long liberal, and Gannett, arch-reactionary founder of the notorious Committee for Constitutional Government, whose executive secretary, Edward A. Rumely, has just been cited for contempt of Congress for refusing to tell the House Lobby Committee where the CCG gets its cabbage.

Gannett, who holds no love for Dewey, told reporters he had lent Hanley $19,000 to further his campaign for the governorship—and added pompously that the subsequent deal "reveals corruption in public affairs."

Lehman, whose already excellent chances of re-election to the Senate were apparently improved by this outburst, declined all comment, and stuck to his high-level campaign.

A MAN MAY smile and smile and be a villain, the Democrats are now saying of these two cheerful gentlemen — New York's Republican Gov. Dewey (left) and his lieutenant governor, Joe R. Hanley, who are now trying to explain away a political deal.

Nov. 7 Is The Day To VOTE In U.S.A.

Victor Reuther Goes To London

Victor G. Reuther, director of the CIO Auto Workers Education Dept., was in London last week attending the third full meeting of the Anglo-American Council on Productivity, Oct. 16-21. He is co-chairman of the council, a post to which he was appointed in 1949.

Following the council meeting, he will consult with representatives of the British government and the British labor movement in a series of conferences.

On Oct. 24, Reuther, who is chairman of the Michigan Crusade for Freedom, will be in Berlin at the invitation of General Lucius D. Clay to participate in the ceremonial dedication of the Freedom Bell on United Nations Day. From Berlin he will go to France for conferences arranged by the ECA.

QUITE COZY: Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.), who is seeking re-election, and local leaders of the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers, appeared quite happy at a Fort Wayne meeting in May, 1949. The reason: Capehart attacked the Marshall Plan and European Recovery Program, his position coinciding with the Communist line. The CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers says that the five men in the photo with Capehart are either followers of the Communist or the discredited United Electrical Workers line (or is there a difference?). Alex Campbell (D.) is Capehart's opponent.

Registration Figures Hint Heavy Voting

THE OUTLOOK for a large vote in the coming elections, carrying with it the chance of electing a liberal Congress, continues to be bright, as registration figures come in.

Taking an average of six states for which state-wide registration figures are available, the picture is as follows:

Registration is up 17.2% over 1946 and 3.6% over 1948.

The six states, all critically important in the national picture, are California, Massachusetts, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Washington and Rhode Island.

Actually, California, Ohio, and Pennsylvania account for the increase over 1948, since registration in the other three fell below 1948 levels. But all six show tremendous jumps over 1946, the last "off-year" election.

In 1946, only 38.5% of the potential voters actually cast their ballots. In 1948, just about 50% did so. In 1950, no forecasts are possible. Not all potential voters are registered, but the number of registered voters who actually go to the polls is what decides the outcome.

(The figures above leave out registration in New York state. The totals for about two-thirds of the state show a drop of about 600,000 below the 1948 level, but an increase of approximately 150,000 above 1946.

(New York City registration, normally counted on to counterbalance the conservative upstate turn-out, took a slump of about 500,000. The unheard-from one-third of the state is all in normally Republican territory.)

Taking a deep breath, the CIO Political Action Committee remarks that if the same proportion of registered voters go to the polls in these six states as did in 1948, and if the figures in these six states are fairly accurate pictures of what is going on nationwide, then the actual 1950 vote will be in the neighborhood of 47.9 million.

On the other hand, if only the same proportion of registered voters turn out as did on 1946, the vote will be 40.3 million.

Ben Marsh, 'Peoples' Lobbyist, To Retire

Benjamin C. Marsh, executive secretary of the People's Lobby, Inc., and first man to register under the Lobby Act, will retire at the end of this month after 32 years of trying to "educate" members of Congress.

Marsh, who is 74, for years has worked six and seven days a week trying to get across to representatives and senators the viewpoint of the common people.

A recently filed expense account showed how little money he had to work with compared to lobbyists for the wealthy interests. His total office expenses were $12,000 for the previous year, including his own $1800 salary.

He urged members of the People's Lobby to continue their work through their unions, their churches and organizations such as Americans for Democratic Action.

Management Labor Units Asked By Carey

CIO SECY.-TREAS. James B. Carey last week called for the creation of labor-management committees, such as functioned during World War II, to make full use of workers' "experience . . . advice . . . and real cooperation."

Speaking to the National Conference of Business Paper Editors in New York City, Carey listed four "basic aims and objectives" of organized labor for the emergency period:

"First, to supply the production needed.

"Second, to keep our economy strong—not only now but in preparation for a period of world peace.

"Third, to keep the morale of our people high.

"Fourth, to win over the workers and masses of other countries, by demonstrating that they can place confidence in the purposes and leadership of this nation."

CAREY predicted that unions will "cooperate with any company or industry that is patriotically trying to meet the nation's needs, and wants to work together with us. But we will not permit any company to take advantage of this situation to make excess profits on our labor, or at the expense of the government or the nation."

He warned against what he termed "the negative . . . dangerous approach . . . that we are simply engaged in a crusade against Communism, or against people we think are Communists.

"There are others who think that the American people's hatred of communism gives them an opportunity through repressive legislation and otherwise, to make an attack upon labor and upon liberal thought, and to turn this nation back on to a reactionary path.

"Such groups and their policies will have our complete and bitter opposition."

Carey said that "in the opinion of labor, we are engaged in something more positive — a crusade for freedom, for peace, for plenty, for opportunity and a better life for all the people in the world. And that includes the people of Russia and those countries under its domination . . .

"The basic problem is not only military, but it is the question of which system will get the support of the hundreds of millions of downtrodden, exploited, hungry, repressed, anxiety-ridden people all over the world.

"If by our own deeds, here and abroad, we can convince these people that we can help them to provide their economic needs, and in addition, give them liberty and freedom, the Communist movement will be crippled . . . It will lose the support of the masses who still are fooled, and the Soviet Union will either sink back into weak isolation or it will get leaders prepared to work honestly with the rest of the world."

Noting an increase of $11 billion in the debts of American consumers and an increase of $14 billion in corporation profits, since 1946, he added:

"It is with such facts in mind that we take the basic position that wage increases are possible and necessary by American industry, not only without increasing prices but even making possible some price decreases.'"

Carey, who is also administrative chairman of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, charged that employers had sought to take unfair advantage of the CIO's efforts to purge Communist leadership from various unions.

He said many employers, finding that Communist-led unions had signed contracts that did not meet the needs of the workers, "then turned to us and demanded we accept the same unsatisfactory terms.

"IN SOME CASES, we had to strike against these large corporations. So, while we were being applauded by some sections of the public for fighting against communism with one hand, we had to fight against the sly, greedy employers with the other."

Carey named the Phelps-Dodge Company as a specific case of this type of practice, and recited the company's recent dealings with the IUE and with the Communist-dominated United Electrical Workers, which was expelled from the CIO last year.

IUE members have been on strike 3½ months at the Copper Products Co. subsidiary of Phelps-Dodge in Bayway, N. J.

He said that in the past three years, Phelps-Dodge made average annual net profits of $40 million. "Yet," Carey said, "the company not only refuses even to discuss a pension plan for its 12,000 production workers . . . but it brazenly spends $400,000 a year on pensions for its executives and higher salaried employes.

"Could Joe Stalin, if he had the power, do more than the Phelps-Dodge officials have done to undermine the morale of patriotic workers in this industry and to play the game of communism?"

Shortages, Gray Market: Price Of Industry's Limited Capacity

AMERICAN industry, long noted for a faint-hearted attitude toward expanding its production capacity, has jockeyed the country into the shortages the labor movement and some economists predicted.

Steel, aluminum, rubber, copper, oil, chemicals—the list is long and growing longer. The gray market is settling down for conversion into a black market. Consumers, already stuck with higher prices, can expect major shortages by Christmas, according to William Henry Harrison, chief of the National Production Authority.

The country's steelmasters are turning out more of their product than ever before in history, but it still isn't enough. The nation is paying off for their refusal to increase production facilities—a course the CIO, AFL, Steelworkers, Auto Workers and other union bodies have been calling for with increasing frequency since the end of World War II.

EVERY calculation the industry has made regarding the nation's ability to consume has been proven too small. Now the country has to pay the penalty in higher prices, shortages and at least temporary unemployment.

The Studebaker Corp. had to close its passenger car division at South Bend, Ind., on Oct. 18 because of a shortage of sheet metal stampings, throwing 16,000 employes out of work. Steel shortages forced the Kelvinator Co. to cut refrigerator and electric range production on Oct. 11.

Warehouse stocks of steel have shrunk 40% in the last 12 months. U. S. Steel, the major producer, has announced an allocation program under which civilian customers will be getting a proportion of their needs based on consumption between Jan. 1 and the invasion of Korea.

The NPA program for allocations is being drawn up principally by men from U. S. Steel and other large producers. The small fabricators, who had no voice during World War II and suffered major hardships, again are shut out.

Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.), chairman of the House Committee on Monopoly, is trying to get them representation.

The national CIO and the CIO Steelworkers and Shipbuilders unions screamed themselves hoarse trying to persuade the railroads to take advantage of the lull before the outbreak of hostilities by repairing broken-down cars and building badly-needed new ones.

The industry did nothing. The Pressed Steel Car Co. plant at McKee's Rocks, near Pittsburgh, Pa., closed, principally because of lack of business. The community was left in a bad economic state, as the plant was its principal industry and only large employer.

NOW, WITH steel short, the Defense Transport Administration is begging the NPA for enough of the metal to make at least 10,000 freight cars a month. The program visualizes a boost in production of about 6,000 cars a month at present to nearly 12,000 next spring.

An estimated 325,000 tons of steel a month would be needed in the early stages of the program, more later. Major changes might be required in steel mills, if approval is given the plan, to increase production of steel plate at the expense of steel sheets.

A shortage of steel inevitably means other shortages. The oil industry is facing one, despite its claims of plenty, and it can't expand because of lack of steel. Already word has gone out that production of civilian gasoline will have to be cut to meet the need for aviation fuel.

This winter there probably will be enough natural gas, a byproduct of oil production, for domestic use, but a shortage for industrial and commercial uses is predicted. Some enterprises are converting to coal.

Aluminum monopolists moaned almost convincingly when production facilities were boosted, over their anguished protests, during World War II. The over-production they confidently predicted never materialized; the shortage—which they said they couldn't even imagine—did.

Now the shortage is worse than ever. Military requirements will take at least 20% of production—and a lot of goods won't be produced for civilian consumption.

Aluminum wasn't stockpiled in the interval between World War II and the cold war, though it was planned to lay in a stock. Rep. Celler's committee will start an investigation of the failure to stockpile beginning Nov. 1.

Copper and brass, which also were supposed to have been stockpiled, are also short. Civilian copper products probably will disappear from the markets in a few months. Zinc stocks at smelters were at a 25-year low at the end of September.

TIRE-BUYERS won't find a particularly pressing shortage in the months to come, but the tires will have a greater proportion of synthetic rubber. The NPA, dissatisfied with earlier conservation efforts which had been handled by the industry, on Oct. 17, issued a sharp order further curtailing the uses of natural rubber in November and December to 90,000 tons a month. More than 105,000 tons of new rubber was used in September, an all-time high of 116,000 tons in August.

Chemicals will quickly be in short supply, it is predicted, because of a world shortage of crude sulphur, which with coal and salt constitute the basic materials of the industry. Domestic consumers of sulphur have been dipping into their stockpiles at a rapid date.

Sulphur is essential to the making of sulphuric acid for steel production, and to coke ovens for the manufacture of ammonium sulphate. It is a major source of nitrogen in fertilizers, and is widely used to make other products—including explosives—and in vulcanizing rubber.

WIDELY USED plastics, as well as cosmetics, cellophane and certain candies, will be extremely short because of lack of glycerine if we get into a total war.

Newsprint — a monopolistic shortage that has been loudly decried during and since the end of World War II by the CIO Newspaper Guild is getting even scarcer. Small weeklies, including labor publications, may be expected to suffer if the big publishers achieve their aim—a system like they had during the last war under which they divided up what was available among themselves.

The price of newsprint went up $10 to $110 a ton last week. This was too much even for the publishers. Cranston Williams, general manager of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, said the boost "is not justified by any factors today," and denounced it as "precipitate, excessive, unwarranted and ill-timed."

Publishers usually reserve such strong language for the wage requests of their unionized employes.

'Cureall' Device Maker Found Guilty Of Making False Claims

THE FOOD and Drug Administration of the Federal Security Agency put in a busy month in September by obtaining a total of 27 convictions for violation of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetics Act.

Most spectacular court case was an eight-day federal jury trial in Peoria, Ill., which ended in conviction of a "cureall" device manufacturer, Charles Willis Kent.

Kent was accused of claiming an instrument called Electreat would help arthritis, earache, sleeplessness, nervous disorders, rheumatism, heart attacks and paralysis.

The device looked like a flashlight and had a roller on one end plus several attachments which delivered an electric shock to the user. One of the attachments, a wire hairbrush, was supposed to remove dandruff.

The Peoria jury, after hearing medical experts testify that claims made for the device were false, found Kent guilty. His sentence was deferred pending motion for a new trial.

During the month FDA seized 118 shipments of foods and drugs. Eighty-nine of the food shipments were contaminated by insects or rodents or were spoiled. The spoiled food aggregated 770,000 pounds.

CIO Aide Says Co-ops Protect People's Welfare

TED F. SILVEY, national CIO staff member, told the 17th congress of the Cooperative League of the USA that co-ops offer a price control system which "eliminates the rigidities of law and still serves to protect the people's welfare."

Silvey praised "consumer cooperative enterprise" as a way of benefiting both producers and consumers. He pointed out that free enterprise spokesmen scream against government controls but practice price-fixing.

"There has been more price control since OPA was killed than during the period it operated," Silvey said. "Since then and now we have had price control for the benefit of producers and sellers and to the detriment of consumers.

"I think it would be both accurate and fair to say that private enterprise exists primarily to make a profit for owners with a by-product result of providing goods and services for people.

"On the other hand, consumers' cooperative enterprise exists primarily to provide goods and services for people — at the lowest price for the highest quality—with a by-product result of providing profits or earnings for the investors."

"The biggest problem facing us today is how to use the productive capacity of the U. S. to maintain a free world in which will flourish this economic revolution which we started long before the conspiracy of communism appeared," according to Murray Lincoln, League president.

"An essential part of the blueprint for a free world should be the use of agricultural and consumer cooperatives so as to give the peoples of the world an opportunity to work out their economic problems independently of governmental controls."

John Sims, general manager of the Farm Bureau Credit Association, Columbus, O., said farmers are getting a smaller share of the food dollar even though prices are going up.

"In 1947," he pointed out, "a one-pound loaf of bread cost about 13c, and for the wheat in it the farmers got 3c. Today a one-pound loaf averages about 14½c, and for the wheat in it the farmer gets 2.4c."

It Would Be Nice

A Silver Spring, Md., resident recently wrote a Washington newspaper:

"Wouldn't it be nice if people could find new homes as easily as kittens can?"

THEY WANT NO PART of the Distributive Workers Union. Members of Local 80, Camden, N. J., the largest local of the Food and Tobacco Workers, have voted overwhelmingly to stay in the CIO, and not to follow FTA into the Distributive Workers Union. There was only one dissenting vote. FTA was expelled from the CIO for following the Communist Party line instead of CIO policy. This picture was taken at a meeting of the 8000—member local when the proposed merger was voted down overwhelmingly.

Rieve: Stabilization Law Is Utterly Useless For Keeping Down Prices

THE SO-CALLED stabilization law is a "fraud," utterly useless in checking inflation, Emil Rieve, president of the CIO Textile Workers, declared during his appearance on a television program Oct. 17.

"The average citizen — even well-informed citizens — believe Congress has passed a standby law to freeze prices and wages if necessary," he said.

"The law has been described as giving President Truman very broad powers, including some he did not ask for. In one sense this is true—but it is not true in the sense that the public understands it.

"The law assures higher food prices by imposing inflexible restrictions on any efforts to achieve control. It specifically forbids rent control. Therefore it leaves untouched the two biggest items in the average family's budget.

"That isn't all. The law also forbids the government from controlling the quality of goods produced. This means that if price controls should be imposed on shirts, for example, the manufacturers could abandon their low-priced lines and turn all production into higher-priced items.

"What may be worse, the law also forbids the government to see to it that the quality of a price-fixed item remains the same. It would be perfectly legal to sell price-fixed shirts without tails.

"Finally, the law specifically forbids any regulation of speculation on commodity exchanges, the biggest single factor in driving up prices during the last few months."

IN ACTUAL practice, Rieve claimed, the President cannot use the law to hold down prices because it "does not provide a workable, honest form of price control."

Even if present prices are frozen, he argued, wages should be allowed to increase substantially through free collective bargaining. Industrial profits are great enough, he added, to permit both price rollbacks and wage raises without cutting earnings below a "comfortable level."

Rieve is administrative chairman of the CIO Full Employment Committee. His television appearance was on the "On Trial" program on ABC network.

A few hours before Rieve spoke, Alan Valentine—he has dropped the "Dr." from his name—was sworn in in Washington as Economic Stabilization Administrator.

His job is to "establish price ceilings and stabilize wages and salaries where necessary," but he said he has no idea how soon the controls will be necessary.

He hoped, he said in an interview, that they won't be necessary at all, and if the need for his job were to disappear, it would be "very nice indeed."

VALENTINE formerly was president of the Univ. of Rochester (N. Y.), and served two years as head of the Economic Cooperation Administration mission to the Netherlands.

Rather than price and wage controls, he said, he favors "more basic" measures and methods of keeping the country's economy on an even keel. In the "more basic" category he included increased production, allocations, credit controls and heavier taxation.

He maintained that the stability of the economy is "endangered by inflation" and that the crisis is "much more grave than many Americans think."

Asked what he was going to look at first, he answered:

"I'd like to get a first-class staff to tell me what to look at first."

Valentine said he had ended his connections with all enterprises operated for profit. He had been a director of the Freeport Sulphur Co., Security Trust Co. of Rochester, Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh Railway and the Bausch & Lomb Optical Co.

Freeport Sulphur voted a sharp rise in the price of its products. The decision was made at a recent board of directors meeting—with Valentine in attendance.

AMA Please Note

Magazine Finds Good Voluntary Health Plan Is Not Answer To People's Needs

A LOT OF American citizens were alternately rubbing their eyes and cupping their ears recently when the American Medical Association's broadside against national health insurance hit the nation's newspapers and airwaves.

Eleven thousand daily and weekly papers and 30 magazines along with 1200 radio stations informed the populace on an almost around-the-clock schedule that the "voluntary way is the American way" to health protection. The ad campaign cost the AMA over $1½ million.

Not so many years ago, the same AMA was telling the people of the country that the voluntary way was the "way to Socialism"—a term it now applies to national health insurance.

Now, however, the "voluntary way" has become the "American answer to every question of medical care, service and cost," according to the AMA.

LET'S TAKE a look at one of the best voluntary plans in operation today and see if it measures up to the above description.

The Health Insurance Plan of New York City, according to an article by Leonard Engel in The Nation magazine, furnishes an extraordinary range of services for its 250,000 members.

The story says HIP is really a comprehensive undertaking and "shows how little basis there is for many of AMA's fears concerning comprehensive prepaid medical care."

"At the same time," the article declares, "it demonstrates conclusively that adequate medical care will never be within the reach of all Americans without national health insurance, supplemented by substantial initial grants from the federal treasury."

It is pointed out that neither Blue Cross, the prepaid hospitalization plan indorsed by AMA, nor commercial insurance against hospital expense is "remotely" the answer. Both plans apply only to hospitalized illness — a comparatively small item in the usual family budget—and the coverage is far from complete.

Nor do the AMA-sponsored Blue Shield Medical and Surgical plans fill the bill. They merely pay, in whole or in part, for a specified list of operations.

As a matter of fact, not even the voluntary plans which AMA has opposed almost as vigorously as national health insurance—except where organized doctors could run them—provide the answer.

THE HEALTH Insurance Plan of New York City is a nonprofit organization. On its board of directors are the Mayor, two bank presidents, representatives of CIO and AFL and the public, and eight physicians, among them two deans of medical schools.

The plan operates through 30 medical groups distributed over the city. The premiums cover any number of home and office visits as well as treatment in a hospital.

The cost of hospitalization itself is covered by a separate Blue Cross or commercial hospital insurance contract which all HIP members must carry.

Under general medical care, all types of illness and disability are covered, including pre-existing conditions. No physical examination is required for admission and there is no waiting period or age limit.

HIP thus comes close to providing, in one neatly budgeted package, everything member families may need in the way of medical care. Unfortunately the premiums of $102 a year for the basic family are higher than many can afford and it is doubtful that HIP or any similar organization will ever be able to take in the self-employed or employed groups of less than five.

The Nation's story concludes that "nothing short of compulsory nationwide health insurance, supplemented by initial federal grants for the construction of facilities, will solve the problem the AMA so lightly contends is already disposed of."

CIO Answers AMA In Ads

The CIO National Health Committee on Oct. 20 launched a nation-wide counterattack upon the American Medical Association for its opposition to the national health insurance program advocated by the Truman administration.

The committee through a series of newspaper ads in prominent papers denied AMA claims that national health insurance would reduce the quality of medical treatment, regiment doctors and patients, socialize medicine or destroy professional freedom, private initiative or free enterprise.

Declaring that voluntary health insurance, now belatedly advocated by AMA, costs too much and does not go far enough, the committee urged passage of the national health insurance act because it offers the most comprehensive medical coverage.

Nov. 7 Is The Day To VOTE In U.S.A.

Michigan Phone Workers Plan To Strike Nov. 6

THE CIO Communications Workers Division 15 is set to strike the Michigan Bell Telephone Co. Nov. 6 unless satisfactory agreements are reached before that deadline.

Division 15 has three contracts with the company covering 16,000 plant, traffic and accounting workers in three major departments. Negotiations for a new contract have been going on since May 23 with little or no results, according to Division officials.

The State Labor Mediation Board has been notified by the union of its intention to strike as required by law.

The dispute centers mainly on the company's refusal to grant more than a "mere pittance of a wage increase" and Bell's insistence that differentials of as high as 50c an hour be continued between workers doing similar jobs in different towns.

Division Pres. Walter Schaar declared that Michigan Bell "has the highest difference in pay for identical work of any Bell system in the country.

"Bell's wage offer of from $2 to $5 weekly fails to keep up with the increasing cost-of-living and falls way behind the pay hike pattern already established in Michigan industry," Schaar declared.

"The refusal of the company to offer decent pay increases, refusal of arbitration and of union security, leave us no alternative but to strike on Nov. 6 unless the company starts treating its employes like human beings instead of machines." Schaar said.

Gets Post With ECA

The Economic Cooperation Administration has announced the appointment of Ward B. Melody as labor information specialist. He will be liaison officer between ECA's labor information offices here and in Paris.

Brewery Union Wins Pensions In N.Y.C. Area

SEVEN thousand CIO Brewery Workers in the Metropolitan New York area are now covered by a contributory pension plan recently approved by the membership of seven locals of the union.

The program was provided by contract last year and is the result of more than a year of study and research by a board of trustees. It is expected to fashion a retirement plan tailored to fit the needs and conditions of an industry which saw a long period of inactivity during prohibition.

Under the plan, an employe now in his thirties may retire with an income close to, and in some cases exceeding, $200 monthly — including social security benefits—at age 65.

Optional retirement is possible at 55 and any time thereafter. No provision for compulsory retirement is included.

The board of trustees which will administer the plan is composed of seven representatives of brewery management and seven members representing the seven locals.

Concerns whose employes are participating in the plan are: Anheuser-Busch, Inc.; Arthur Guinness & Son Co.; Liebman Breweries, Inc.; Piel Bros.; Rubsam & Horrmann Co.; Jacob Ruppert; F.&M. Schaefer Co.; Joseph Schlitz Co.; John F. Trommer, Inc.; West End Brewing Co.; Air Way Transfer Corp.; E. J. Burke Ltd.; Dublin Distributors, Inc.; Edelbrew Brewing Co.; Empire Distributing Co.; Farmers Feed Co.; Greater N. Y. Brewery, Inc.; New England Beers, Inc.; J. J. Schaefer Trucking Service and Janet Trucking Co.

East Germans Looking West

GERMANS FROM the Russian-controlled eastern zone who have been visiting the Berlin Industrial Fair in the U. S. zone have been interested enough in the goods and machinery on display — but they've shown a lot more interest in three American trade unionists.

One of the three is always seated at a desk in the George C. Marshall House at the Fair, ready to answer the questions about the United States that visitors put to them.

Every day they are deluged with queries from eastern zone Germans who want to learn about the labor movement and working conditions in the United States—and every day they listen to long complaints from the same visitors about their own incredibly low wages, their poor rations, the forced labor they must undergo, and the ever-present fear of the Communist regime.

The visiting U. S. unionists are John J. Heil, member of the executive board of the CIO Brewery Workers; Karl Mueller, vice president of the AFL Meat Cutters, and Rudolf J. Faupl, grand lodge representative of the unaffiliated Machinists. They are in Germany under the specialists exchange program.

Their visitors tell them that the only way they heard of the fact that the Fair was going on was by broadcasts from the American radio station in Berlin and the Voice of America. The Communist newspapers in their own section of Germany had not mentioned it.

UN, Five Years Old, Is Pushing Plan To Bypass Soviet Union Veto

IT HARDLY seems possible that it was only five years ago Oct. 24 that the United Nations was established at an historic meeting in San Francisco.

The world had just fought its way to peace at the time. The countries loved one another, with Soviet Russia receiving and apparently giving. They envisioned a world of enduring peace, and in the UN they saw the machinery to end conflict among nations. The future looked bright to most of us.

The fledgling organization was viewed by others from two extremes. Some of them dreamed dreams of the lion promptly lying down with the lamb in a rose-tinted world of eternal brotherhood. Others, the cynics, saw the UN as a jerry-built structure certain to tumble to pieces at the first puff of aggression.

SINCE THEN, the UN has neither brought peace overnight nor fallen apart when confronted by aggression. It has made progress, slowly but certainly and despite a world filled with tension and fear. And as President Truman said in his speech last week, in the very hall where the UN was founded, "today as a result of the Korean struggle the United Nations is stronger than it has ever been."

The greatest barriers to making the UN even more effective than it has been are Soviet Russia's flippant use of her veto power in the Security Council, the obstructionist tactics of her representatives in virtually every other phase of UN operations, and her failure to join with 53 other nations, large and small, in providing men and supplies to help repel the Communist invasion of South Korea.

AS ITS FIFTH birthday approached, the UN was moving toward doing something about bypassing the Soviet veto and putting itself in a position to act when aggression threatens in the future.

It is a plan, first voiced by Secy. of State Dean Acheson and adopted by seven nations for presentation to the General Assembly, for stronger united action for peace. It won a 50 to 5 approval in the 60-member Political Security Committee on Oct. 19. The General Assembly, where a two-thirds vote is assured, is expected to pass it this week.

It has four basic sections: convening of the General Assembly on 24 hours' notice in emergencies; establishment of a peace observation commission to investigate acts of aggression; earmarking by each nation of contingents of armed forces for service with the UN on call, and creation of a collective measures committee to survey implementation.

"The seven-power resolution for strengthening the UN General Assembly for taking emergency action against aggression and threats to peace is the outstanding issue before the UN," said John Brophy, former CIO director of industrial union councils now serving with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at the UN.

"The invasion of South Korea by the Communists and the obstructionism of the Soviet Union in the UN made necessary a plan for overcoming the Russian veto.

"The Acheson plan, adopted by the seven powers, provides the answer. Two weeks of discussion have clarified the issue, even though it has not shaken the Communist purpose of obstructing the peace efforts of the non-Communist world. A favorable vote for the seven-power resolution is expected. Such a vote to strengthen the power of the UN General Assembly will be a vote for peace and democracy."

Tied in indirectly with this plan, said Brophy, is the U. S. resolution for comprehensive relief and reconstruction aid for Korea. The U. S. proposed a UN Korean Reconstruction Agency to be headed by a UN Agent General which would have full charge of relief and rehabilitation measures.

It includes a provision for cooperation by non-government organizations like the CIO Community Services Committee of which Brophy is a member and which has announced a major program of aid to Korea.

Brophy and other ICFTU representatives have distributed to UN delegates copies of a resolution adopted by the ICFTU Emergency Committee at a recent session in Brussels urging worldwide price control through the UN as a weapon against inflation.

136 Firms Face Wage-Hour Charges

The Labor Dept. is pointing a long finger at 136 firms in New York and New Jersey for Wage and Hour Act violations during September. Of the 136 complaints, 75 were for failure to pay the minimum wage of 75 cents an hour.

Oregon CIO Backs Civil Rights Bill

DELEGATES to the Oregon State CIO convention were advised that all labor in the state should get behind the proposed Portland civil rights ordinance and press the Legislature to enact a civil rights law for the entire state.

The civil rights resolution was one in a long list endorsed by the delegates. Among other measures getting convention support were:

Tighter regulation of the log-trucking industry to promote highway safety; encouragement to President Truman in his efforts to obtain universal military training; endorsement of a state soldier's bonus, and appointment of a labor adviser to Korea.

CIO Reg. Dir. C. C. Dusten said the CIO is making progress in a number of fields. He pointed out that there is a limit to what can be accomplished, however, without supplementary political action. In this connection he said he thought there could have been more money collected for PAC activities by CIO locals in the state.

State CIO Pres. John Brost told the delegates that the Communists will never give up trying to wreck the labor movement, and said rank and file members must be protected against their intrigues.

He declared he still had vast respect for rank and file members of the CIO-expelled Longshoremen's Union.

Convention guests included a number of candidates for major state offices who have received CIO endorsement.

AT&T Blamed In Bell Stall

THE CIO Communications Workers have charged that stalling by various Bell System operating companies on voluntary contract reopenings based on the rising cost of living "proves the presence of a master hand in Bell labor policy."

The contention of the union was advanced during recent hearings before the Senate Subcommitte on Labor-Management Relations. CWA officials consider the various forms of "no" the union is now getting from Bell management proof of that contention.

In various areas of the country, union representatives have been told by local managements from whom they had sought voluntary reopenings that there is no reason for an increase at the present time.

This position has been taken, the union said, despite the increased cost of living, the continued granting of wage increases in other industries, and the below-par raises given by some Bell companies to independent unions.

Meanwhile the Union made known its views on wage stabilization as it might affect CWA members. In a letter to Cyrus S. Ching, newly appointed chairman of the Wage Stabilization Board within the Economic Stabilization Agency, CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne recommended adoption of a six-point program for the protection of telephone workers in the event full wage controls are imposed in the future.

Beirne pointed out that the Bell System, during an emergency period, might seek to impose its own wage controls.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer went to Chicago and then to Omaha to address the Nebraska State CIO Convention on Oct. 15. It was a fine convention and the delegates are determined to build their unions and to support CIO policy all the way. Their biggest problem is to bring greater cooperation between the farming population and the labor movement. The Clothing Workers of America gave away a number of prizes of goods they manufacture to the delegates.

From Omaha the writer went to San Francisco to address a pre-election mass meeting of packingshed workers at Salinas who are desirous of maintaining their membership in CIO. The election runs from Oct. 18 to Oct. 23. The writer addressed the pre-election CIO rally as did Regional Directors Tim Flynn and Irwin DeShetler.

The writer will be going on to Los Angeles to hold a conference with CIO leaders there this week.

Reg. Dir. Walter Harris reports that in a representation election at the Ottawa Basket Co., Oak Harbor, O., the workers voted in favor of the United Paperworkers of America by a vote of 15 UPA-CIO to 8 against. In a union shop election at the Harbauer Co., Toledo, O., the workers voted for the Paperworkers by a vote of 28 to 1. UPA Rep. Berkley Watterson was in charge of both elections.

State Dir. Ernest Pugh reports that in a representation election at the Carolina Minerals Co., Bedford, Va., the United Steelworkers-CIO were victorious by a vote of 35 USA-CIO, 7 against, 3 challenged.

L. S. Buckmaster, president of the United Rubber Workers-CIO, reports that in a representation election at the United States Rubber Co., Providence, R. I., the workers voted overwhelmingly to retain the URW-CIO as their collective bargaining agent. The vote was 1280 to 377 in favor of the URWA over a challenging AFL union.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, IWA-CIO, reports that in a representation election held at the Libby, McNeil and Libby plant, Portland, Ore., the workers voted as follows: eligible 1380, IAW-CIO 605, AFL 205, no union 6, challenged 3, void 4.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports that in a union security election at the Blue Plate Foods plant, New Orleans, La., the workers voted in favor of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union by a vote of 142 to 2 against. CIO Rep. Ed Stone handled this campaign for the RWDSU-CIO.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers-CIO won a representation election at Haspel, Inc., (men's clothing), New Orleans, La., by a vote of ACWA-CIO 472, no union 5.

CIO Reg. Dir. Pete Mosele reports that the United Steelworkers won an election at the Lovel-Dressel Co., Arlington, N. J., by a vote of USA 38, against 20.

Half A Loaf Was Better Than None In 81st Congress

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

NOW THAT the 81st Congress has gone home to campaign, wagging its curious, compromise-ridden record behind it, an overall summary of its accomplishments shows that.

- Almost every major piece of legislation that went through was the result of compromise.
- Each compromise was the result of coalition between various groups, or, to put it another way, each bill passed meant that some group jumped "party lines" or gave up a pet project.
- At the start of the first session, early in 1949, the liberal-Democrat-liberal-Republican coalition reached its peak strength, which was still short of a majority on out-and-out Fair Deal issues.
- This coalition was able in the first session, however, with the help of a group of wavering Democrats, to win on other than straight-out Fair Deal issues.
- But as time wore on, and particularly after the Korean outburst, the Dixiecrat-GOP coalition, which always was in the majority on strictly Fair Deal issues, picked up strength among the waverers and round up in complete control of Congress on all issues.
- Therefore, it was only with the consent of two conservative minority groups, working together, that any liberal legislation was passed. The two groups, of course, were the Southern Democrats and the die-hard Republicans.

THE BURST of victory in which the Democrats obtained control of both Houses in 1948 tended for many months to obscure the somber mathematical facts.

It was not until the great test on repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law that people's eyes became opened to the fact that what they had thought was a liberal majority was only on paper—that there were still enough conservative Southern and Southwestern Democrats in Congress to cut the liberal vote way below majority strength.

The Democrats, including most of the liberal group, had majorities of 12 in the Senate and 92 in the House.

Yet the average margins by which Fair Deal proposals were defeated in both sessions were: 15 in the Senate and 35 in the House. The bulk of these defeats came on key amendments to legislation which was subsequently passed in compromise form.

(These figures are from "The Record of the 81st Congress," prepared by the UAW-CIO Legislative Department.)

The straight liberal vote reached its peak strength in the Taft-Hartley struggle, and never again came near that high-water mark.

The heart of the Senate fight on T-H came on the Lucas amendment to outlaw the use of injunctions. This was defeated by two votes.

In the House, the vital decisions came on passage of the vicious Wood Bill by 14 votes and its recommittal by three votes.

Scarcely anybody realized at the time that those votes, so bitterly disappointing to labor, represented the peak strength the liberals were to show in the 81st Congress. And yet, as Rep. Burke (D. O.) points out, there was great progress just the same: Taft-Hartley originally passed by a 80% majority, over the President's veto.

TAKING A list of Fair Deal issues presented to and considered by the first and second sessions, the UAW finds that in the first session the Fair Deal won nine issues in the Senate by an average 20-vote margin, lost six issues by an average 17-vote margin. In the second Senate session, the votes were closer but the Fair Deal won only six, by an average seven-vote margin, and lost 11 by an average 13-vote margin.

In the House, the first session saw nine Fair Deal victories won by an average 94-vote margin and four lost by an average 45½-vote margin. In the second session, there were only five Fair Deal victories, by an average 58-vote margin, while eight issues were lost by an average of 25½ votes.

And in all these instances, the margins of victory or defeat were supplied by the wavering middle group, which fluctuated in size and purpose.

UAW sums it up by saying:

"In the 1948 elections we defeated Dewey and escaped depression and disaster. A Republican victory, which would have made Dewey the White House accomplice of Taft-Hartley-Martin-Halleck reaction, would have meant a run-out on the Marshall Plan; European recovery would have been weakened; Communist aggression probably would be now at the English Channel and in control of the Mediterranean.

"We might now be in World War III with fewer allies than we will have if war is launched by Communist aggression now or in the near future. We won a holding operation against domestic reaction and the forces bent on blocking the Fair Deal.

"WE DID not win a clear-cut Fair Deal victory . . . The Fair Deal reached its greatest strength in the test vote on repeal of Taft-Hartley. Failure . . . resulted in a drift away from action on the many other items of the Fair Deal program.

"This trend was accelerated as the defense emergency took hold.

—From Washington Post

"You Mean Some Can And Don't Do It?"

"Hysteria reached a new peak in the vote of 354-20 by which the House passed the Un-American Activities Committee's so-called National Security Bill which would drive underground and make martyrs of the Communists, hit and hurt liberals including labor unions, and weaken the Bill of Rights. The Senate passed a similar bill by a vote of 70-7."

The UAW softens the picture somewhat by guessing that if the Fair Deal increases its strength somewhat in each House in the forthcoming elections, the trend will "swing enough votes of politically sensitive members in both houses to insure passage of many items in the Fair Deal program."

Here the reference is to the group of waverers who make up the balance of power between the liberal and conservative coalitions, and who as the months wore on voted increasingly with the conservatives.

Most of the waverers are running again. The bulk of them come from the Deep South and are to all intents already reelected: so the battles royal in general will be in districts now held by staunch liberals or reactionaries. And this year the voters certainly have a choice. In state after state, the contest is going along almost classic lines—the opposing candidates representing clear stands for or against the Fair Deal.

WHAT THE 81st Congress succeeded in accomplishing, on the positive side, is encouraging—although it must be borne in mind that every triumph represents a compromise on original proposals. The record can be broken down into three groups—"good" compromises, "bad" compromises and outright defeats. The boundaries between "good" and "bad" compromises are none too clear, but here is a partial list. The "good" compromises were won after liberals succeeded in staving off serious weakening amendments

"Good" compromises: The Social Security Bill, which in spite of its infamous Knowland amendment and other major flaws still brought new hope to millions.

The minimum wage bill, which brought legally payable hourly wages from 40c to 75c an hour, benefiting many in spite of new loopholes and exemptions.

The low-cost housing program.

The Commodity Credit bill.

The expansion of rural telephone service.

Senate passage of the middle-road aid-to-education bill.

House approval of a demand for excess profits taxation now.

The sustained vetoes of the Kerr Natural Gas Bill and the Basing Point Bill, two pieces of bald-faced special interest legislation against the consumer.

In the international field:

The improved Displaced Persons' Bill.

Approval of the Point 4 program for underdeveloped countries.

Approval of the Military Assistance Program for Western Europe.

Extension of the Economic Cooperation Administration with an adequate appropriation.

Extension and improvement of the President's powers to negotiate reciprocal trade treaties.

Support for the UN action in Korea.

"Bad" compromises: The middle-income housing bill, passed minus its cooperative loan feature which was the heart of the proposal.

The inadequate rent control law.

The hoge-podge price control authorization which gives business every possible break while seeking to tie labor to rigid wage controls.

The cowardly and cynical treatment of Fair Employment Practices legislation.

The Senate's backward step in dealing with the filibuster problem without which civil rights legislation will never get past the Southern bloc.

The spare-the-rich tax bill.

The failure to repeal or amend Taft-Hartley or to approve early enough and big enough aid to Southern Korea.

Outright defeats: The Brannan Plan; national health insurance; reorganization of the National Labor Relations Board; extension of the valley authority system; the shocking loan to Franco Spain, voted in the Korean emergency period after two previous defeats; and the incredibly bad Internal Security Act.

Not Letting Right Hand Know What Left Does

The following excerpts are from the Oct. 20 issue of the U. S. News & World report, published by David Lawrence:

Editorial

If Senator Taft is defeated—and indications today are that it is a toss-up—the result will not be accomplished by the free votes of the people of Ohio. It will be due to economic coercion by national labor unions which are spending illegally hundreds of thousands of dollars collected from union members outside of Ohio.

Columbus, O., News Story

1 On the Senator's side, Taft men by the thousands from all parts of the country have sent money into the State for his campaign. Most of this has come in the form of small contributions, some of it from the drives of the chain-letter type that continued to flourish despite a frown from Mr. Taft. The result has been that the Senator has no lack of funds.

2 When labor men and the Democrats set out on their campaign, they found that virtually every billboard in the State had been reserved for Taft. Some agencies that deliver literature door to door had contracts long ago for their services in the week before election.

3 Republicans are fighting back straight across the line. They are worried by the fury of the campaign against Senator Taft. This has set them to working harder, and in a better organized unit, than they have in many years.

Walsh-Healey Act Is Applied To Puerto Rico

The administrative exemption under which the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act, governing U.S. contracts for more than $10,000, is not now applicable to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands has been withdrawn effective Nov. 1, Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin announced last week.

The act requires compliance with child labor, safety, health, overtime and wage standards. The wage proviso does not include a statutory minimum, but compels employers with covered contracts to pay their employes no less than the minimum the Secretary finds prevails in the industry.

The exemption is being removed, Tobin said, because he finds "no compelling reason for continuing" it. The minimum wage rates have yet to be determmined.

A Buck For PAC Will Bring Liberals Back

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., OCTOBER 30, 1950 82 No. 44

KING FOR A DAY

—Frontispiece Of PAC Pamphlet

It's Not An 'Off-Year' For You—See Pages 6-7

Ruttenberg Says:

Speculation To Send Living Costs To New High

"SPECULATIVE manipulation of basic commodities — not union-won wage increases—is the major cause of the Korean war inflation," Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO director of education and research, said last week.

Ruttenberg added that "skyrocketing prices on the commodity exchanges . . . can be expected" to make living costs "zoom to new record heights."

He set forth the CIO's views in a letter he wrote to the National City Bank of New York to refute charges made in the October issue of the bank's monthly economic letter.

THE BANK charged that "inflationary pressures have been augmented by a flood of wage increases which have already engulfed much of the country's industry and plainly will engulf more."

"The impression is given," Ruttenberg wrote the bank, "that wage increases are the major cause for price rises.

"There is no basis for this view of the current economic situation, in my opinion. There was no significant pattern of major wage increases in the period immediately preceding June 24.

"The flood of price rises that engulfed the nation in the weeks that followed the Communist invasion of South Korea was not due to wage boosts. I think that you would have to look to other quarters to find the sources for the inflationary pressures of recent months.

"There was a rush of speculative manipulation in the commodity exchanges as soon as the Korean war started. Prices of 28 basic commodities, which had risen an average of 1.4% per month between January 3 and June 23, advanced 10% in one month following the invasion of South Korea.

"The all-commodity index of wholesale prices during the first six months of 1950 went up by less than eight-tenths of 1% a month, but since June 26, it has jumped 7.5%. In 16 weeks from the date of the Communist aggression in South Korea to mid-October, the price of crude rubber rose 154%; print cloth, 62%; wool, 55%; lard, 45%; cotton, 22%.

"Certainly, wage and salary earners cannot be blamed for the speculation on the commodity markets. On the other hand, working people are paying and will pay for such speculation, in the form of increased consumer prices.

"You state that 'the contentions of the unions relating to living costs disregard simple facts.' Your own statement admits, however, that retail prices in mid-August, the latest date for available information, were higher than at any other time, except for a brief period in 1948.

"THE FULL IMPACT of skyrocketing prices on the commodity exchange has not yet been felt. In the coming months, those price boosts will be translated into increases at the corner grocery. By then, seasonal factors that kept down food prices will be gone, and living costs can be expected to zoom to new record heights.

"Wage increases now requested by unions, in your opinion, 'exceed any basis of parity with living costs that has existed in the past.' The record shows otherwise. From 1944, the wartime peak, to the first half of 1950, the buying power of average weekly earnings in manufacturing industries fell more than 7%.

"Price increases and the decline in the work-week since the war have cut into the buying power of wage earners. You now state that the mobilization effort 'must in some degree reduce living standards below what they might be.' The question arises whether you would want to see wage and salary earners bear the major burden of the mobilization program.

"While buying power of wage earners' weekly income declined since the war, productivity per man-hour increased. Obviously, management has failed to share with wage earners the benefits of improved efficiency. Business also failed to share the savings from increased productivity with the consuming public.

"AS A RESULT of these business policies, corporate profits have reached all-time records in the postwar period. From the 1944 wartime high-point of $10.8 billion after taxes, corporate profits zoomed upward to $20.9 billion after taxes in 1948.

"At present, business is enjoying an unprecedented boom. By last spring, it was assured a peak year. Events that have folowed the Korean war point to a new all-time record. Corporate profits after taxes, this year, are expected to reach $23 billion.

"Pay increases for the nation's wage and salary earners can be obtained out of these booming profits and increasing productivity. Corporate enterprise can well afford to increase wages without passing them on in the form of price rises.

"Should wage increases create an excess of effective demand as compared with the supply of civilian goods in this mobilization period, I am confident that American workers will vigorously respond to a stepped-up government bond drive.

"This occurred during the last war, when the strain on the economy was very great, and there is no reason to doubt that patriotic American wage and salary earners would do less in this mobilization to defend our national security."

Conservative Herald-Tribune Agrees With CIO That Profits Are Gigantic

THE UNITED STATES is going through "no ordinary boom, but the biggest, fanciest 'prosperity peak' of all times," the conservative New York Herald-Tribune said Oct. 22 in a survey based on the arrival of what is called "lagging statistics."

The article estimated that earnings of corporations—after taxes—in the third quarter of 1950 were running at an annual rate of $23.3 billion. This misses complete agreement with the CIO Economic Outlook by only a little. The CIO Research and Education Dept. in the June-July edition of its publication gave its estimate as $23.4 billion.

"Employment is at its highest level," the Herald-Tribune article says. "Corporate profits this year will set a new record. So will dividend payments. Industry will establish a new mark for peacetime production. Construction will smash all records.

"Third-quarter earnings of corporations will be at an annual rate of $40 billions before taxes compared with $35.3 billions at this time last year. After taxes, the annual rate is $23.2 billion, compared with $17.2 billion in 1949.

"Industrial production is highest since the war-time peak in June, 1945, and by year's end will have outdistanced even that year's mark.

"Mid-September employment was tabbed at 61 million persons, up 4 million from February. Biggest news: non-farm employment has jumped to 45.5 million persons, highest on record and up 2 million from a year ago.

"Dividend payments this year have been running a full 8% ahead of last year, and earnings statements indicate that by year's end, total payments to shareholders will be highest on record.

"Wage and salary earners, too, are getting higher checks and fatter pay envelopes than ever before. Such payments were at an annual rate of $144.3 billion in August, up from $140 billion in June. Landlords' and proprietors' income was up from $42.3 to $45.9 billion and farmers' from $16.4 to $18.2 billion.

"Total monthly business sales were charted in August at $46.7 billion — compared to the $12.5 billion in 1940, a normally prosperous year."

Auto Union Calls Credit Curbs 'Blunder' Leading To Unemployment

THE CIO Auto Workers last week said that the Federal Reserve Board regulations restricting consumer credit for the purchase of autos, homes and household equipment would be a "grievous blunder which would create mass unemployment."

UAW Pres. Walter Reuther and the other three top officers of the union urged in a letter to Chairman Symington of the National Security Resources Board that the "discriminatory, ill-considered and dangerous regulations" be dropped at once.

In addition to Reuther, others signing the letter were Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey, and Vice Presidents Richard Gosser and John W. Livingston.

THE NEW controls require that installment debt on new cars be paid off in 15 months instead of the 21-month period allowed before, with one third down payment necessary.

In the new housing field, regulations now require down payments ranging from 10% of the value on homes costing from $2500 to $5000, to $83000 on a $20,000 residence. Balances must be paid in 20 years.

Household appliances, radios, stoves, washers, etc., require a 15% down payment and payment of the balance in 18 months.

Furniture purchases must be accompanied by a 10% initial payment and the balance must be paid in 18 months.

"The Federal Reserve Board, living in a world of banker mentality and unaware of basic production problems, has through regulations W and X made a stab in the dark and the knife is in the backs of America's low-income families," the UAW officers said.

"Regulations W and X are an attempt to solve the material shortage problem by cutting demand down to meet supply instead of expanding supply to meet demand. This is the solution of the industrialists who believe in economic scarcity and who have blocked expansion of our basic materials industries.

"We can better achieve our purposes of holding the price line and conserving materials through selective price controls and allocation of materials in short supply.

"These regulations are an attempt to prevent inflation by rationing reduced supplies in favor of high income families at the expense of low income families.

"WHEN THE production of war materials require a reduction of civilian production to release materials and manpower, we in the UAW-CIO are prepared to cooperate in the fullest," the union officers said.

"Regulation W (auto and household appliances) and X (homes) will create mass unemployment before there is enough defense work to absorb the unemployed and take materials out of civilian production before they are needed in defense production.

"This is the cart before the horse approach to the problem," they said.

REUTHER AND the other UAW officers suggested that enforcement of the two regulations be suspended until their probable effect can be more accurately ascertained and better alternative measures devised.

The letter said:

"We urge that you convene as speedily as possible a joint conference composed of labor and management representatives from all the industries affected by the regulations:

"To work out sound and equitable measures to use with maximum effectiveness in the services of essential needs the materials and manpower available for civilian production;

"To restrain inflation; to make the most effective use of existing plants and labor forces in meeting defense needs;

"And to prevent the hardships and disruption which will inevitably flow from poor planning resulting from failure to consult with those with most intimate knowledge of the industries affected."

Copies of the UAW letter were sent to Thomas B. McCabe, Federal Reserve Board chairman; William H. Harrison, chief of the National Production Administration; Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin and the presidents of several major auto companies.

"He must expect a boy. Every time I pass he says, 'Boy, oh, boy.'"

BLS Index Revision Will Be Speeded Up

BRINGING THE cost-of-living index up to date, scheduled for next summer, has been speeded up. The revised yardstick of consumer prices will be ready by the end of the year, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Ewan Clague, BLS commissioner, said the revised index will reflect the costs of many new consumer goods, including frozen and baby foods, home permanent wave lotions, television sets and toasters, hospitalization costs and recent rent increases.

Revision was made "absolutely necessary," said Clague, by the Korean war and the new economic controls law.

The revised index will give economic stabilization experts and wage negotiators for unions and management a fairer picture of consumer price trends. An increasing number of union contracts have escalator clauses tied to the index. Latest estimate is that a million workers are now covered by such contracts.

Government officials, in drafting economic programs, are required by law to give "careful consideration" to present prices as compared with those of June 25, when the Communists invaded South Korea.

The revision is long overdue. Labor complained during World War II and thereafter that the index was outmoded, and did not truly reflect the cost of living. (Up until now, 1942 population figures have been used, for example. Changes in buying habits, in eating habits, got little consideration. Some items that figure in the family budget were not considered at all.)

Clague, in announcing the speedup on BLS revision, also reported that the consumer price index rose one-half of 1% in the month ended Sept. 15, despite a decline in food prices. The index stood at 173.8, and Clague predicted a continued rise throughout the coming winter. LPA

Murray Urges Swift Action On U. S. Mobilization Goals

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE FEDERAL government should quickly set "definite goals, both military and civilian" for the mobilization program, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said last week.

Speaking at the annual New York Herald Tribune Forum, Murray said that "within the limits of necessary security, the American people are entitled to know all the pertinent facts" about our defense needs.

"This means a frank statement as to how many planes, how many tanks, how much of a military force we will need," he said.

"This also means an equally frank statement as to how much steel, copper, aluminum, electric power and other resources must be produced to meet necessary military and civilian needs."

Murray was one of four speakers from the Committee on Mobilization Policy of the National Security Resources Board who appeared at the Forum with NSRB Chairman Stuart Symington. The others were Pres. Claude Putnam of the Natl. Association of Manufacturers; Anna Rosenberg, a manpower consultant; and Albert Goss, head of the Grange.

Goss, who preceded Murray on the program, was stricken with a heart attack during the CIO president's speech and died a few minutes later.

A DAY EARLIER, the Forum had heard Pres. Walter Reuther of the United Automobile Workers call for a special United Nations fund to "launch a total war against poverty and hunger."

Another speaker was Fred Lesieur, former head of Local 3536, CIO Steelworkers, at Hudson, Mass. As part of a four-man discussion on labor-management cooperation, he told how a joint union-company plan had replaced an unpopular, unfair profit-sharing plan. Under the plan, the workers share directly in rising productivity.

PRES. MURRAY'S speech to the 1600 people who attended the Forum heavily stressed the need of "equality of sacrifice" in every phase of the defense program.

"Our mobilization program will lose the moral support of the people if it is perverted into a scheme to depress the living standards of the lower income groups—while the rich become richer," Murray said.

To spur the defense program, he called for control of inflation, excess profits taxes, effective use of manpower "without discrimination," preservation of civil liberties and the maintenance of an "adequate wage level."

Organized labor wants "no monopoly of position or ideas in the mobilization program," Murray reminded his audience. But he added that the CIO does not believe that "any one group—businessmen or farmers or professional people—should control our emergency planning."

Putnam, while pledging support of business, dwelt heavily on the need for "incentives" to business—a statement interpreted as opposition to suggestions for an excess profits tax.

SPEAKING FOR the NAM—which he described as a "loyal opposition" — Putnam expressed fear that the emergency period, with its broadened government powers, might be used "to achieve social ends which could not be obtained in normal times."

Symington — who is charged with top-level planning of resources for the defense program —hailed the "teamwork" of industry, labor, farmers and the general public. He said that a "primary objective" of the NSRB is to "prevent inflation."

Reuther, in his address, renewed a plan he has made several times in recent months for peace and prosperity throughout the world.

He suggested that the American people contribute "for an indefinite period" an amount each year equal to "at least one-half the annual increases in the value of our national production."

National output can be increased by $30 billion in the next two years, Reuther predicted—if the U. S. can "break the bottlenecks of monopolies and scarcity, and mobilize our full productive power."

FUNDS FROM a United Nations project for peaceful construction could be used to "help people . . . develop their material and economic resources."

The UAW president tied in his plan with a blueprint for universal disarmament. Aid from the UN fund, he suggested, should go only to those nations which agree to disarm.

If disarmament cannot be achieved, Reuther proposed that peace-loving countries should develop a mutual defense program and agree to use their armed forces only by direction of a majority vote of the UN General Assembly.

UN's 5th Year Renews Peace Hope

THE UNITED NATIONS celebrated its fifth birthday on Oct. 24 in an atmosphere of renewed hope for a future of peace, freedom and cooperation among nations.

At Lake Success, President Truman strengthened that hope with a major speech, an outstanding state document, in which he called upon the UN to strengthen its drive for disarmament and international control of atomic energy so "all of us could then pool even greater resources to support the United Nations in its war against want."

In Berlin the Freedom Bell, gift of the western world to the democratic section of the city, was dedicated and pealed out a message of new hope to Communist-dominated eastern Europe that not even the guards at the edge of the Iron Curtain could bar.

"COMMEMORATION of the fifth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations gives an opportunity to underscore the great purpose of that organization," commented John Brophy, Intl. Confederation of Trade Unions attache on duty with the UN.

"This is to maintain international peace and security, and establish social justice.

"President Truman's address to the UN Assembly emphasized collective security and international cooperation as the two-road track to peace, freedom and a better world. Korea had shown that the UN could defeat aggression when the issue was clear and the peace-loving nations were aroused.

"In the Truman address was a call for real world disarmament and effective control of arms, and a suggested procedure for making a fresh approach to the solution of this problem. This, as the President pointed out, 'would release immense resources for the good of mankind.' Greatly enlarged technical assistance and economic development programs would then be available for the less advanced nations. Thus there would be a pooling of resources to support the UN in its war against want.

"ORGANIZED labor has been on record for this overall program from the beginning. Labor spokesmen during the week at various gatherings stressed again the importance of a constructive economic and social program if world peace is to be assured.

"It is evident that the UN has refreshed its purposes as a result of its challenge to the Korean aggression. Peace, justice and democracy are truly revolutionary ideals."

FREEDOM BELL swings into place in Berlin on Oct. 24, fifth anniversary of United Nations, and peals forth its notes of hope to millions of Europeans behind the Iron Curtain. Bell is gift of western world to Berlin for its fight against engulfment by Communism. Campaign was sponsored in U. S. by Crusade For Freedom, of which CIO Pres. Philip Murray is honorary co-chairman. No border guards can shut out this messenger.

Labor Law Parley Follows National CIO Convention

A CONFERENCE on Labor Law, sponsored by the CIO Legal Dept., will be held in the Palmer House, Chicago, immediately upon the close of the National CIO convention.

The sessions will open at 2 P.M. on Nov. 24 with a talk on "Labor Lawyers and the Modern Mind" by Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel and general chairman of the conference. It will close with a panel session on civil liberties and national security, beginning at 10 A.M. Nov. 26, under the chairmanship of Isidore Katz, general counsel for the CIO Textile Workers.

The National CIO convention will open Nov. 20 and conclude Nov. 24.

The labor law conference will be conducted in a series of panel sessions, with members of the National CIO legal staff, attorneys for the CIO Organizing Committee and counsel for many unions participating in discussions.

PICKETING LAW will be the subject of the opening conference, with Irving J. Levy, general counsel for the Auto Workers, in the chair. Problems arising from changes in union affiliation will be aired at 8 P.M. on Nov. 24 with Charles B. Koons, general counsel for the Communications Workers, as chairman.

Three years under the Taft-Hartley Act will be analyzed at 10 A.M. on Nov. 25 under the chairmanship of William J. Isaacson, general counsel for the Clothing Workers. G. L. Patterson, general counsel for the Rubber Workers, will preside over a session that afternoon devoted to pensions. A dinner, with speakers to be announced later, will be held that night.

Executive Board Meet Postponed

The pre-convention meeting of the CIO Executive Board has been postponed from Wednesday, Nov. 15, to Thursday, Nov. 16.

The meeting will be held at the Palmer House in Chicago. The convention will open on Monday, Nov. 20.

A meeting of the CIO vice-presidents is scheduled for Wednesday, Nov. 15.

Fortunately, We Have A Choice

Our Nov. 7 Election Will Not Be Like The Phony One Conducted Recently By Reds In Eastern Germany

By ALLAN L. SWIM

AN OUTSTANDING example of Communist "democracy" was provided recently when the Reds won a smashing election victory in Eastern Germany.

It's true that the East Germans had no choice of candidates and that there was only one ticket—but that didn't keep the Red propaganda machine from shouting to the world that the Commies had won overwhelmingly.

At about the same time the phony election was being staged, the world was provided with a shining example of the high regard for human life and decency which motivates the Communists.

This example—a truly shocking one—was provided in Korea, where retreating Reds mercilessly murdered unarmed civilians and prisoners of war.

The Commie propagandists haven't come up with a good explanation for the atrocities yet—but they probably will make a try.

THE NAZI regime at its worst demonstrated no more ruthlessness, no more disregard for human rights, than has been shown by the Communists.

Americans should realize this. They should realize that the "cold" war suddenly became hot in the Far East and that the election in East Germany was a fraud.

And they should realize, too, that American Communists do not deviate from the party line reeled out at Moscow. The domestic Reds are part of the international campaign to give Russia domination of the world.

They're not just a bunch of silly idealists who want to help the common man.

They're not merely a group which has a political philosophy different from that of the Democratic and Republican parties.

Not at all. They're agents of a ruthless dictatorship.

NOT MANY years ago many Americans regarded the Commies as a group determined to bring about a better distribution of the world's wealth and to add stature and dignity to the common man.

The Reds did everything they could to foster this belief—and some Americans still cling to it.

But the record shows that cruel men in Russia first subjugated their own country, made the people tools of the state, then set out to take over the world.

And a large section of the world has come under Russian domination.

But the situation is beginning to change.

The United Nations, regarded by many until June of this year as being little more than a debating society, has become a potent force for peace and freedom.

And the United States is awakening to the job confronting it and other democracies.

UNFORTUNATELY, our nation and some of its lawmakers are not fully awake to the really gigantic task we have on our hands.

For example, the amount of money set aside for the nation's "campaign of truth"—its worldwide propaganda campaign—would just about pay for one battleship.

And the amount appropriated for the Point 4 program is just about enough to pay for keeping the streets of New York City clean for one year.

Our segregation of Negroes in parts of the country makes it extremely difficult if not impossible to win friends among the colored peoples of the world—and yet President Truman's civil rights program has been pigeonholed by Congress.

Congress handed the Reds an effective propaganda weapon when it approved a loan to Dictator Franco of Spain—and the same thing was done when the way was paved for a loan to Dictator Peron of Argentina.

We, as a nation, have taken no firm stand against the subjugation of colonial peoples by some of our allies.

And we're not winning friends as a result of the ridiculous McCarran-Mundt-Nixon-Wood "anti-subversive" bill.

WE, AS A PEOPLE, will have an opportunity on Nov. 7 to change some of the things that need to be changed—or at least we'll have a chance to elect men and women who'll work for such changes.

When we go to the polls we won't be watched carefully by armed police to see that we cast our ballots for a single group of candidates.

We'll have the right to vote as we please—and the right to stay away from the polls if we desire.

Those who exercise the latter right, however, will be performing no worthwhile service for themselves or their country.

They'll be failing to make their contribution to the campaign to make democracy work better.

And it must work better at home if it is to gain great popularity abroad.

DREAMS DO COME TRUE

It's always pleasant to see one's dreams come true.

Five years ago, when World War II was entering its final phases, the United Nations—as a permanent, effective peacetime organization—was still a dream. Yesterday's dream is today's reality.

Unlike the old League of Nations, which was battered to pieces on the rocks of appeasement and lethargy, the United Nations has proved itself a tough-minded organization. The overwhelming victory of the UN forces in Korea has shown that the UN indeed represents the hope of world opinion for lasting peace.

As Pres. Murray and other union leaders said in a statement on the United Nations' anniversary last week:

"When the bells ring out everywhere on UN Day, they will be sounding our fervent prayer that the UN can continue to grow in strength and authority, so that never again will any nation dare to resort to armed aggression."

If the display of military strength and aroused public opinion which supported the UN cause in Korea will have a lasting effect on the Kremlin imperialists, the sacrifice of lives will not have been in vain. On both sides of the Iron Curtain, there is a tremendous, often silent, hope for peace.

The Communist leaders who claim to speak for the working population of the world might do well to give heed to that hope and desire.

And while the Soviets are about it, they might also give a bit of support to the humanitarian programs of the UN. These don't make headlines, but they do produce some solid results.

The health organization, the food and agricultural organization, the various economic agencies of the UN are at work on programs to help people—but the Soviet Union and its satellites are giving these constructive projects a shoulder as cold as a Siberian winter night.

Vishinsky might well save some of the breath he uses on his Lake Success diatribes to try to argue the Politburo into giving these UN projects the support they truly deserve.

GOOD WORDS FROM ECA

The national CIO—and this paper—have taken some critical swipes in recent weeks at top executives of the Economic Cooperation Administration, the government agency that administers the Marshall Plan.

We've complained—on the basis of first-hand knowledge—that Marshall Plan help isn't getting down in sufficient quantity to the people who need it most: the workers and farmers of many of the European nations. The CIO Executive Board, at its last meeting, said bluntly that something's got to be done about it.

Having criticized, we're also ready to give a pat on the back when it's merited. We think that the new ECA Administrator, William C. Foster, deserves credit for calling for higher wages and shorter hours for European workers.

As Foster pointed out, "a mass market and mass production are available only to the extent there is mass purchasing power."

It's to be hoped that ECA will follow up the Foster words with some sustained action to help the European peoples pull up their living standards from the too low level that now prevails.

Steel Seizure Seen British Arms Aid

By David C. Williams
For Labor Press Association

HIGHER OUTPUT, greater efficiency, removal of profits from rearmament—these are the three big advantages British Laborites see in public ownership of the nation's steel industry.

The government will take over all the outstanding stocks and bonds of 92 iron and steel companies Feb. 15, 1951. The owners will get government bonds paying 3% interest, in place of the average 5 to 6% they've been receiving. (Major U. S. steel companies are earning 12 to 14% and up.)

But the government insists this is a square deal, because of the greater security the bondholders will enjoy.

Laborites insist public ownership is necessary to keep the steel industry expanding to meet the needs of rearmament, the civilian economy and the vast plans for development of the backward areas of the world which Labor has put forward. They point out that, before the war, steel firms bitterly resisted expansion and modernization.

LATELY, UNDER the threat of nationalization, the steel makers have been doing better. But, Laborites say, the nation's welfare should not depend on the decisions of a handful of wealthy men.

Higher efficiency, too, is a Labor objective. The companies are being taken over as they stand, and in the beginning they'll retain their old identities. But, as time goes on, more and more of them will be combined to obtain more efficient operation. Obsolete plants will be junked, and modern ones built.

The small average size of British steel companies is such that the entire 92 turn out only only half as much as U. S. Steel, and only a little more than Bethlehem.

Laborites also say that British workers will join much more enthusiastically in the rearmament drive if they know is isn't putting money into the pockets of private stockholders. The steel industry is the foundation of all rearmament. To run it as a public service will do much to underline the fact that rearmament has been decided upon for the protection of British democray, not for the advantage of Big Business.

HOW ABOUT the steelworkers themselves? Relations between them and their employers are not nearly so bad as they were in the coal mines before nationization. In fact, there hasn't been an important strike for a generation. But their union has stood for public ownership since 1932, and Labor candidates in the February election scored landside majorities in the steel towns.

What concerns steel workers is the risk of shutdowns in bad times. In 1948 their union, as a contribution to Britain's recovery effort, changed its rules so as to make continuous seven-days-a-week operation of the smelting shops possible. Steel unionists don't want to wake up one day to find they've worked themselves out of their jobs. In short, they see greater security in public ownership.

Churchill and his Tories have threatened to put the industry back into private hands if they win the next election. But they aren't getting much support from the public for their stand. The average Britisher doesn't sense any great threat to his way of life in public ownership for steel.

Goodwin To Head Manpower Office

Robert C. Goodwin has been named to head the new Office of Defense Manpower. He has authority to develop policies on civilian labor.

Goodwin, who was executive director of the War Manpower Commission, has been serving as director of the Bureau of Employment Security in the Labor Dept.

Secy. of Labor Maurice Tobin, who made the appointment, also announced that he has added to the list of "critical occupations" which got special attention in National Guard and Reserve deferments, blacksmith, hammersmith, and electronic technician.

A bureau survey of unemployment insurance benefits showed that unemployment at the end of September was at the lowest level since September, 1948. The Senate Preparedness Committee, planning to hold hearings on universal military training Nov. 10 to 15, has announced it may hold separate hearings on industrial manpower. Manpower shortages are spreading to more and more industries. Two most recently hit are construction and retail stores.

LPA

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher
Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII October 30, 1950 No. 44

They Failed Once, Then Got Their Union

COMPANY officials made no bones about it. They didn't want a union at their plant and they were going to do everything they could to keep the CIO out.

That's what the organizer learned a short time after he arrived in town to help local textile workers set up an organization of their own.

He was told to leave town and was warned that if he "wanted to get out all in one piece" he'd better get moving quick.

He stayed around.

Then supervisory employes opened a smear campaign against the union and its leaders.

IT WAS OLD stuff to the organizer but he didn't like it any better than he had when he'd run into the same thing earlier.

The top officers of his union were strongly anti-communistic but that didn't keep company officials from hanging a "Commie" tag on them at every opportunity.

One line used was that "those union leaders are just a bunch of radical outsiders who sent their henchmen down here to stir up trouble."

Company attorneys took advantage of technicalities and stalled a NLRB election for about a year.

And on the evening before balloting was to start the "boss" called his employes together and gave them "the business."

He told them their welfare had always been uppermost in his mind, that he had known their fathers well and had helped many textile families out of difficulties by lending them money.

"You don't need a union!" he declared.

And on the following day a majority of the workers voted against the union.

LEADERS of the campaign in the mill were fired a short time after the last NLRB ballot was counted.

Suddenly and without advance notice, work-loads were increased—and seniority was ignored.

Workers began telling each other, "I thought that organizer didn't know what he was talking about—but what is happening is exactly what he said would happen."

And in a short time the workers sent a delegation to call on the organizer. He was asked to return to their town and make another attempt to establish a union.

He returned.

What followed made the company's first anti-union drive look like an afternoon tea party.

Policemen were assigned to follow union leaders wherever they went. Some of them were arrested on trumped-up charges, thrown into jail and denied bond.

"Preachers" appeared at the mill gates and told the workers that the CIO was "the mark of the beast."

IT DIDN'T take the organizer long to detect the fear which was being generated by the company's tactics.

But he detected something else, too.

The workers were listening to company propaganda but weren't swallowing it like they had before.

Finally another election was held—and the ballot counting was completed late at night.

Then the organizer started walking along the main street of the mill village. There were no lights on at any of the houses—but as he strolled along voices came out of the darkness and all asked the same question:

"Do we have a union?"

"Yes, yes, we have a union," the organizer replied.

And from out of the darkness came men and women who shook hands with the organizer and told him how glad they were he'd helped them a second time.

A.L.S.

The Shadow On The Ballot Box!

Merwin K. Hart Finds He Can't Collect On Carlson Expose

By IRVING FAGAN & CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

REMEMBER Merwin K. Hart? Franco's friend? The man who told the House Committee on Lobbying that present Supreme Court members should be tossed out as too socialistic?

Harvard-educated Hart has just been tossed for a loss in an Appellate Court decision in Rochester, N. Y. He was suing E. P. Dutton & Co. for $2 million. Dutton in 1943 published John Roy Carlson's book, "Under Cover." The book, the story of Carlson's four years in the Nazi underworld of America, has a lot of things to say about Hart—none of them good.

Hart did not sue for libel. He did not charge the publishers with libel. He sued for the profits he said the publishers made on the book, under an obscure law which, his slick lawyers contended, "forbids a person from profiting by reason of wrongful acts upon another." The court threw the case out and denied Hart the further right to appeal.

Hart heads the National Economic Council. When he was testifying last June before the House Lobby Committee, two members were very tender of his feelings and careful to see that questions did not become too embarassing. The sympathetic two were Charles Halleck, of Indiana, and Clarence Brown, of Ohio, both Republican stalwarts.

CHAIRMAN OF the committee is Rep. Frank Buchanan (D. Pa.). A lot of big money has been poured into his district in an effort to oust him. Big business is not happy with people who put into the record the names of its leaders who finance reaction through their support of such as Hart, Edward A. Rumely, of the Committee for Constitutional Government, and Leonard Read, of the Foundation for Economic Education.

The Carlson book, published in 1943, made quite a stir. It was a documented account of hate groups, the racist groups, the fanatics, the lunatics—and the highly respectable business leaders from whom they got their money.

The Book-of-the-Month News said "Single-handedly John Roy Carlson has done more to expose un-American activities than the Dies committee."

The N. Y. Times said "This book is of sensational importance to every man and woman who hopes for victory. Of the hundreds of persons he exposes, most are still free and carrying on their dirty work. Those who neglected to take them seriously enough in Europe are dead, in concentration camps, in hiding or in exile."

THAT'S WHAT the Times wrote in 1943. Still true in 1950 is that line "most are still free and carrying on their dirty work."

What did Carlson say of Hart, the man Halleck and Brown tried to shield?

"The record shows," he wrote, "that for the past 15 years Hart has been engaged as a professional propagandist for one cause or another. With an annual salary fixed at $10,000 he has sought to influence legislation, both local and national, in the interests of clerical fascism (Falangism) and ultra-reactionary businessmen, using the bogey of Communism as an operating base. Supreme Court Justice Robert H. Jackson has denounced Hart as a 'pro-Fascist'."

What else? Well, Hart admired the Spanish Dictator DeRivera, and later transferred his affection to Franco. He visited Spain, liked what he saw there, and on his return wrote a book praising Franco and his regime—and founded the American Union for Nationalist Spain.

WHAT ELSE? Carlson quotes Hart as declaring in a speech that "if you find any organization containing the word democracy, it is probably directly or indirectly affiliated with the Communist party;" and on another occasion Hart told the Union League Club of New York that "it is time to brush aside this word democracy, with its connotations."

What else? Well, Carlson records that Hart fought the 40-hour week, the child labor law, lend-lease aid to Britain; that he had ties with such as Gerald L. K. Smith, the hate-mongering rabble-rouser, and Mrs. Elizabeth Dilling, who listed everybody but President Roosevelt's dog Fala in her Red Network.

Carlson listed as among Hart's friends and backers James H. Rand, Jr., of Remington-Rand; Lammot duPont; Alfred P. Sloan, then president of General Motors; J. H. Alstyne, president of Otis Elevator; H. W. Prentiss, Jr., of Armstrong Cork; Gen. Moseley; Rep. Dies of Texas, then head of the House un-American Activities Committee; Rep. Hoffman of Michigan; and Fritz Kuhn, of Bund fame.

Carlson noted the links between the hate groups, and showed their kinship.

"Hart's unsavory record," wrote Carlson, "also shows that he advocated the disfranchisement of poor and homeless Americans, demanding during the depression years that only those be permitted to vote who were not on relief."

Nov. 7 'Off-Year' Election In Name Only; Never Did U. S. Face Bigger Issues

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

THE CHIPS are down, now, on the 1950 elections.

Summed up in these two pages you will find all the news we have room for, about who's running and what's at stake in the state contests.

What's at stake nationally is control of the 82nd Congress. Each of the state contests has a bearing on this centrally important fact.

This is no "off-year" election, although that's what they usually call it when the President and Vice-President aren't running. The United States has never faced more momentous decisions, never been in such a situation of international power and danger. Never before has every act of the U. S. government, domestically, been put in such a spotlight of world attention.

The greatest democracy on earth is being watched by millions to see if we can feed, clothe and educate our citizens better—in fact—than the dictator of the Kremlin can benefit others—on paper. In a sense, the campaigners here are pitching for the votes of the free world.

The citizens of other nations hear propaganda, rigidly controlled and slanted, from one side—making glorious promises. On the other, on our side, they can only judge by actions—by accomplished facts.

IN OUR government, the President cannot function without Congress, nor Congress without the President. The President proposes, but Congress decides what actually is to be done.

The entire fabric of our Congress, with the exception of less than two-thirds of the Senate, comes before the nation for review on Nov. 7. All 435 House seats are open, and 36 Senate seats. Thirty-four governors also are up, and part or all of the legislatures of 46 states.

The "coalition" 81st Congress, which has a record full of compromises but is a great deal better from the liberal point of view than the 80th, is about to pass from the scene. The voters are getting ready to decide what kind of a Congress the 82nd will be.

Everywhere that figures are availbale, registration is up. It's way above 1946, the last "off-year," when less than a third of the adult population voted. In many places it's way above 1948. All this bodes ill for reaction.

Leaving aside the House districts where the results are easily forecast, there are 150 crucial districts from the liberal point of view—84 in which liberal incumbents, swept into office in 1948, must be re-elected, 54 in which there is a chance to defeat reactionary incumbents and 12 in which the present incumbents are not running.

Of the 36 Senate races, 16 are in the doubtful class—the results could go either way. Seven of these are now held by liberals, all of whom face terrific opposition. The rest are held by reactionaries who are getting a hard fight. Neither group controls the Senate now—but control hinges on two or three votes in many instances.

A LOW vote always plays into the hands of the reactionaries. With more worldly goods to protect, more leisure in which to act, the wealthy conservatives get out their vote, year after the year. The great fluctuations come in the size of the vote cast by the nation's industrial working men and women, housewives, white collar workers, and others who bear the brunt of what Congress does without thinking their votes important enough to go to the effort—or expense—of taking time off to vote.

This is the year in which every wage or salary earner and every self-employed storekeeper or professional should vote. On Nov. 7 these millions, each casting their individual vote, will decide the outcome.

Kroll: Voters Face Five Responsibilities

"All of us face Nov. 7 with five grave responsibilities," PAC Dir. Jack Kroll said last week.

"We have, first of all, the responsibility to ourselves to select and vote for the candidates who will best serve the interests of the majority of the people of the country.

"We have, secondly, the responsibility to our country to provide it with leaders who will chart a clear and careful course in these troubled times, who will listen neither to the counsels of fear nor the counsels of abandon and who will not be swayed by questions of partisan advantage.

"We have, thirdly, a responsibility to those Americans who went before us, who pioneered our land in the tradition of freedom and progress.

"We have, fourth, a responsibility to the other men and women throughout the world who are reaching toward the democratic ideal, who are looking to us to show them the way.

"We have, finally, a responsibility to our children, to pass on to them a cleaner and better world in which all men live at peace and in prosperity.

"These are the responsibilities we must discharge at the polls on Nov. 7. As Americans and as trade unionists I know we will discharge them with honor."

SEN. SCOTT LUCAS
Majority Leader Seeks Re-election

JOSEPH FERGUSON
Sen. Taft Fears Him

Liberals In 12 Western States Have Chance To Increase Seats

THE 12 WESTERN states, particularly on the coast, have more political yeast per capita than any other group, except the midwest—and it's bubbling.

In the Midwestern group, hugely important as it is in the national picture, the problem is mainly one of holding ground for the liberals—but in the western states, there is a chance on Nov. 7 of net gain of seats in both House and Senate,

The 12 states now have 57 Representatives in the House—33 Democrats and 24 Republicans. Ten senatorships are open, and five state governorships.

Far and away the most significant contests are taking place in California, Colorado, Oregon and Utah,

IN THE BOOM state of California, which has gained so much in population that it now ranks second in the U. S. and will probably have 31 House members in 1953 instead of the 23 it now has, liberalism is out to get reaction in big way.

Fair Dealer Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D.) is running against arch-conservative Rep. Richard M. Nixon (R.) for the Senate, and James Roosevelt (D.), son of FDR, is running against Gov. Earl Warren.

Registration is up 200,000 above the 1948 record, and there are hot contests for every House seat, particularly for the two vacated by Douglas and Nixon, two others which switched from Democratic to Republican in 1948 because of the Progressive fiasco, and three the GOP lost to the Democrats.

The present House delegation consists of 11 Democrats and 12 Republicans. The campaigns are hot, heavy and dirty,

In Colorado, united liberals are working to elect Rep. Carroll (D.) to the Senate in place of Sen. Millikin (R.), one of the three most influential GOPsters in the upper House. Gov. Johnson (D.) is opposed by Dan Thornton (R.), and Colorado's three Democratic House seats are all in danger. The one Republican House seat is also being contested.

UP IN TRADITIONALLY Republican Oregon, Sen. Morse (R.) is running with labor support, which has caused a young war in Democratic ranks—but below the Senate level, all is harmony. Registration has broken all previous records, and for the first time Democratic registration exceeds Republican. Oregon's four House seats, all Republican at present, stand a good chance of going Democratic, particularly two of them; the Democrats are organized in all counties for the first time. Gov. Douglas McKay (R.) is getting a tough fight from Austin Flegel (D.).

The dirtiest, toughest campaign of all, however, is taking place in Utah, where scholarly Sen. Elbert Thomas (D.), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee and a staunch Fair Dealer, is being ruthlessly smeared and innuendoed by supporters of his foe, Wallace Bennett, ex-president of the National Association of Manufacturers.

Although Bennett disavows it, his supporters are stooping to gutter level to smear Thomas with the Red brush, and some highly questionable material, prepared outside the state, is being used. Utah's two Democratic House seats are being seriously contested as well. One of these campaigns, however, is being conducted on a high level, by two determined ladies—Rep. Reva Beck Bosone (D.), who is opposed by Mrs. Ivy Baker Priest (R.).

IN IDAHO, WHERE Sen. Glen Taylor (D.) lost out in the primaries to isolationist D. Worth Clark (D.), there are two Senate seats open—Taylor's and that now occupied by Henry C. Dworshak (R.), who was appointed by the Republican governor to fill a Democratic vacancy. Clark is opposed by Herman Welker (R.) and Dworshak by Claude Burtenshaw (D.). The wind is blowing in all directions, but the Democratic cause was helped when the Republican state purchasing agent confessed to shortages of up to $3 million in disposal of federal surplus property and drew a 10-year jail term. There are two House seats involved, one Democratic and one Republican.

In Oklahoma, Rep. Mike Monroney (D.) is getting a real fight from red-headed Rev. W. H. Alexander (R.) for the Senate, and there are hard contests for two of Oklahoma's eight House seats, currently all Democratic. Two seats switched from the GOP in 1948.

And in Washington, Sen. Warren Magnuson (D.) faces a liberal Republican, Walter Williams; and two Democratic and one Republican House seats out of the six are fiercely contested.

It's All Over Issues Not Se

THE SOLIDLY Democratic South, ranging in political atmosphere from a handful of liberals at one end to a sizeable bloc of out-and-out Dixiecrats on the other, is to all intents and purposes out of the Nov. 7 political race.

In all but two of the 14 states in this grouping, the issues were settled in the primaries. In two more, there is a slight, but very slight, chance of upsets in some House seats.

As the picture stands now, the 14 states have given the House 115 Democrats and six Republicans, including the great majority of that group of Democrats who vote more consistently with the Republicans than they do with their Northern fellows.

In the Senate, out of 28 Senators, seven at the most can be counted on to vote on the liberal side on most issues—none of them, of course, on civil rights.

The number of liberal Southern senators will drop to five on Jan. 1, when the fighting liberal Claude Pepper gives place to conservative ex-Rep. George Smathers, and when the scholarly Frank Graham gives over to conservative Willis Smith. These were two of the worst blows

SEN. FRANCIS J. MYERS
Faces GOP In Keystone State

GOV. CHESTER BOWLES
In Tough Connecticut Fight

Issues Sharp In Midwest Senate Races

OF THE nine Midwestern Senatorships now open, eight are held by reactionary Republicans. It is in this group, taken as a whole, that the issues are the most sharply drawn and that liberals have the greatest chances of net Senate gain.

The House contests, involving 55 Democratic and 76 Republican seats, include a great number where liberals took over in 1948 and now are fighting a holding action, and another large group where conservatives are on the defensive.

The Ohio Senate contest, of course, ranks first in national interest of the 12 states in this group. The race between Sen. Robert A. Taft (R.) and State Auditor Joseph Ferguson (D.) is probably the U. S. top.

In the House delegation, 12 seats are now held by Democrats and 11 by Republicans; of chief interest to labor here is the 9th district, where Rep. Tom Burke (D), only CIO member in the House, is in a fight.

McCARTHYISM is a major issue in Wisconsin, where the Republican organization is using the low-level smear technique against fighting young State Atty.-Gen. Thomas Fairchild (D.), who is running strong against Sen. Alexander Wiley (R.).

Fairchild was the first Democrat to win State office in Wisconsin in 14 years, and ran up a record primary vote this year. He is conducting a high-level campaign, going heavily on Wiley's isolationist and anti-labor stand and his absenteeism record (he ranked 89th out of 96 Senators for attendance). Of the 10 House seats, eight are Republican; the other two switched from Republican in 1948. Walter Kohler, Jr., (R.) faces strong opposition from Carl Thompson (D.) for the governorship.

In Illinois, Sen. Scott Lucas (D.), Senate majority leader, is up against ex-Rep. Everett Dirksen, who has worn out three automobiles and made over 1000 speeches trying to win. Much depends on the vote in Cook County (Chicago). Of the 26 Illinois House seats, 12 currently are Democratic and 14 Republican; five of 12 Democratic seats, four in Cook County, switched in 1948.

Down in Indiana, Sen. Homer Capehart (R.) is getting a real tussle from Alexander Campbell, former Assistant U. S. Attorney General. Capehart is accepting all kinds of help from the discredited Committee for Constitutional Government. Of the 11 House districts, four are Republican; four Democratic districts switched from Republican in 1948 by very narrow margins.

REP. JOHN A. CARROLL
His Aim Colorado Senate Seat

In Missouri, the liberals' target is Sen. Forrest Donnell (R.), who is opposed by ex-Rep. Thomas C. Hennings, Jr. Donnell got through by an extremely narrow margin in 1944. Only one of the 13 House seats is held by a Republican at present, but eight of the Democratic seats switched from Republican in 1948.

A strictly "Brannan Plan" contest is going on in Iowa, the state which went Republican as usual in 1948 but elected a Democratic Senator. Now, Albert Loveland (D.), former Under Secretary of Agriculture, is opposing Sen. Bourke Hickenlooper (R.).

Gov. William S. Beardsley (R.) is opposed by farmer Lester Gillette (D.). All eight House seats are Republican.

SOUTH DAKOTA was the scene of an intense Republican Senate primary fight. The victor, Rep. Francis Case, is opposed by John Engel (D.). State Rep. Joseph Robie (D.) opposes Sigurd Anderson (R.) for Governor. Both House seats are Republican.

Michigan's young Gov. Mennen Williams (D.) is getting a tough run from ex-Gov. Harry Kelly. Of the 17 House seats, 12 are Republican.

Gov. Frank Carlson (R.) of Kansas is running against former Assistant Postmaster General Paul Aiken (D.) for the Senate seat vacated by the late Clyde Reed (R.); all six House seats are Republican.

In Minnesota, Gov. Luther Youngdahl (R.) faces former State Supreme Court Justice Harry H. Feterson (D.). Three of the four Democratic seats in the nine-man House delegation switched from Republican in 1948.

North Dakota's Sen. Milton Young (R.) is opposed by Harry O'Brien (D.). Two Republican House seats are at stake. Nebraska's four-man House delegation is up: one seat is Democratic, after a 1948 upset.

SEN. ELBERT THOMAS
Rough Time In Utah

REP. HELEN GAHAGAN DOUGLAS
California Senatorial Candidate

Five Liberal Democratic Senators In Northeast Are Hard Pressed

IN THE 10 Northeastern states, liberals are for the most part forced to spend their energies holding previous gains. Of the seven Senate seats involved, five are held by liberal Democrats, all hard-pressed.

In New York, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey (R.) is running to succeed himself against Rep. Walter Lynch, while Lt.-Gov. Joe R. Hanley (R.) is running against Sen. Herbert Lehman (D.). The Senate Elections Committee is investigating charges that Dewey "bought off" Hanley, who wanted to run for governor himself.

New York's 45-man House delegation is composed of 20 Republicans, 23 Democrats, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. (D.-Lib.) and Vito Marcantonio (ALP). Nine of the 23 Democratic districts switched from Republican in 1948, and the fighting is hot and heavy. Marcantonio is under severe attack from a three-party candidate, James G. Donovan. Donovan is the candidate of the Democratic, Republican and Liberal parties.

Registration is down from 1948, which was a peak year, but appears to be above all off-year records.

IN PENNSYLVANIA Gov. James H. Duff (R.) is running for the Senate against incumbent Francis J. Myers (D.), Senate majority whip and a staunch Fair Dealer. Richardson Dilworth (D.) is running for governor against Judge John S. Fine (R.). Duff licked the old infamous Grundy machine in the primaries, causing a split in GOP ranks which is believed will benefit Myers. In an off-year, Democrats "traditionally" lose in Pennsylvania, which is a "normally" Republican state.

The 33-man House delegation now is composed of 18 Republicans and 15 Democrats; 11 of the Democratic districts switched from Republican in 1948 but one switched back in 1949. Registration is up state-wide to an all-time peak.

IN THE NEW ENGLAND states, the most important contests are in Connecticut, which has not gone Democratic in an off-year since 1934. Here, Gov. Chester Bowles (D.) is opposed by Rep. John Davis Lodge (R.), Sen. William Benton (D.) by Wall Street commuter Prescott Bush (R.), and Sen. Brien McMahon ("Mr. Atom") by ex-Rep. Joseph Talbot (R.).

This is the only state where a governorship and two senatorships are open. Of the five House districts, three, currently Democratic, switched from Republican in 1948, and the GOP is sparing no effort to get them back.

In New Jersey, 14 House seats are open, eight of them Republican and six Democratic, including three which switched from Republican in 1948. Partial registration figures indicate a sizeable increase over 1948—and here, as in Connecticut, the size of the vote will determine the outcome.

IN MASSACHUSETTS, Gov. Paul A. Dever (D.) faces former Lieut. Gov. Arthur W. Coolidge (R.). There is no Senate race. Of the 14 House seats, eight are Republican and six Democratic. Registration is high.

Rhode Island's fighting Fair Deal governor, John O. Pastore (D.), is running for the Senate against Austin T. Levy (R.), and Denney Roberts (D.), mayor of Providence, against Eugene La Chappelle (R.) for Governor. Two House seats, both Democratic, are open.

Maine's elections were completed Sept. 11. The Republican candidates all won, but the Democratic vote broke all records.

In South Except In Two States; tled In Maryland, West Virginia struck the liberal cause in the Southern primaries, and also the only upsets of major importance that are liable to occur.

If there was a discernible trend in the Southern primaries aside from these two outright defeats for the liberal cause, it was in the direction of getting the South back in the Democratic fold and away from the Dixiecrats. But this was the Democratic fold as the South understands it, bearing little relation to the liberal flavor attached to northern and western Democrats.

In Alabama, Arkansas, and South Carolina the Dixiecrats were licked decisively, after hot primary campaigns. In South Carolina, the upset was accompanied by the nomination, to all intents and purposes election, of James F. Byrnes, former Secretary of State, as Governor, and the defeat of South Carolina's only liberal House member—Rep. Hugo Sims.

In Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia, the situation is the same as before.

The two states where the issues were not clearly settled in the primaries are Maryland and West Virginia. In Maryland, Sen. Millard Tydings (D.) is getting a tussle from John Butler (R.), who is fighting Tydings on the Communist issue, claiming that Tydings' scorn for Sen. Joseph McCarthy (R. Wis.) and McCarthy's attack on the State Dept. shows a "soft" attitude towards the Reds.

Tydings got a huge primary vote, however Maryland's Gov. Preston Lane, who won renomination by the county unit system but without a popular majority, faces a hard battle from Theodore McKeldin (R.), a former mayor of Baltimore. Maryland now has four Democrats and two Republicans in the House.

IN WEST VIRGINIA, where there are only House seats involved this trip, former Democratic Sen. Rush Holt has switched to the GOP side and is running against Rep. Cleveland Bailey, and there are hot contests in three other districts, all currently Democratic.

There are two other fights of interest. One is in Kentucky, where Gov. Clements (D.) is running for the Senate against Charles L. Dawson, who has charged Clements with spending some five times more than he is allowed to on his campaign. The other is in Tennessee, where former GOP National Committee Chairman Reece is seeking one of the two Republican seats in Tennessee's 10-man House delegation.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL
Seeks Sen. Capehart's Seat

THOMAS E. FAIRCHILD
Battles Sen. Wiley in Wisconsin

House Unit Makes First Report:

Some Lobbyists Are Democracy's Enemies

By GERVASE N. LOVE

IF ALL THE FACTS on lobbying could ever be brought to light, it would prove to be a billion dollar industry, the House Lobby Investigating Committee says in a preliminary report on its months-long probe.

Emphasizing repeatedly that lobbying in itself is a proper and legal method of exercising the constitutional right of petition, but that it is "a right some men are more able to make meaningful than others," the committee adds:

"At the same time Congress and the public have a right to know who they are, what they are doing, how much they are spending and where the money is coming from—in a word, full disclosure of the relevant facts."

The key to the problem of getting all such facts before Congress and the public it continues, lies in "a civilized morality . . . the sole key to the survival of democracy," a quotation taken from the testimony of Prof. Stephen K. Bailey, of Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn.

The interim report was signed by only the Democratic members. These are Rep. Buchanan (Pa.), chairman; Rep. Albert (Okla.); Rep. Doyle (Cal.) and Rep. Lanham (Ga.). The right to file a minority interim report was reserved by Rep. Brown (O.), one of the three Republican members.

THE MAJORITY announced that in a subsequent report it will offer a series of detailed recommendations and amendments to the Lobby Regulation Act by which it "can be brought to a higher level of efficiency.

"The act as it stands is a workable and valid piece of legislation. Our recommendations will be designed to eliminate some of the misconstructions that have hampered the operation of the act. The act does not seek to regulate but to inform. It works on the premise that Congress and the public have the right to full information on those who actively attempt to influence the decisions of government."

The conditions under which the process became flourishing were the waning control and discipline of the political parties, and the increasing complexity of government—plus the sensitiveness of government to private demands.

"One successful piece of pleading," the committee claims, "bred another and the entire system developed gradually but with irresistible momentum.

"While these practical causes are paramount, there are several theoretical considerations which underlie the high level of lobbying activity. We lack and have always lacked any established theory as to the proper relationship and balance between private power and the power of government.

"Lacking such an established theory, we have rested our thinking about lobbying on two premises: first, that lobbying is not a problem of who is to exercise political control, but it, rather, a matter of expressly granted individual rights; and, second, that lobbying is no problem in a free society because one interest can be depended upon to 'cancel out' another."

In discussing the first premise, the committee finds that lobbying is a right which is not exercised for itself alone, but because people and groups hope to gain thereby. The result is that some lobbyists publicly profess "the utmost attachment to constitutional rights," but privately concede that they are a means to an end.

"It is a bitter paradox," the committee continues, "that the right of petition, one of the highest rights which democracy can bestow on a free people, is sometimes put to its most effective use by persons who are far from devoted to the principles of democracy.

"'I do not believe in democracy. I think it stinks,' wrote Herbert U. Nelson, of the National Association of Real Estate Boards. Yet Mr. Nelson's organization was and is spending thousands of dollars for lobbying, something which can only be done in a democracy such as ours."

The premise that one interest will cancel out another, first expressed in President James Madison's Federalist Papers, is just a prophecy that has never matured, the committee finds.

THE MAJORITY examines, in the report, five approaches to solution of the problems raised by the threat of special interests to representative government. It accepts three of them and discards the other two. Accepted are:

1. Streamlining government, "for pressures thrive on government when it becomes too complex for ordinary citizens to understand."

2. Stronger political parties and party discipline, which are "basic" because "if the parties don't accept responsibility the pressure groups will move in by default."

3. More information on lobbyists and lobbying.

Discarded are:

1. Government support of interests which haven't the money to compete with better financed pressure groups. The majority feels this approach might solve the problem of the "present imbalance . . . but it would ultimately result in more rather than less pressure on policy making." In addition, it felt, it would be hard to pick the groups to be helped.

2. A formal place in policy making for organized groups. Approval of this technique was withheld because it is already being done to some extent through advisory councils to administrative bodies and the appearances of interested groups before congressional committees, and "would this not be yielding to pressures rather than coping with them?"

THE REPORT is thoughtful and thought-provoking. It condemns little but it raises a score of vitally important questions that must be answered by Congress and the people "if special interest groups are not to ride roughshod over a public interest which may often be inarticulate." The CIO has been raising some of the same questions for several years.

The committee traces lobbying to "our long and splendid tradition of free association . . . compounded with the high degree of group consciousness and organization typical of any modern industrial society." These "raw materials," the committee goes on, were worked by "tools," the constitutional guarantees of political freedom and especially the right of petition.

"While this process seems neat and automatic," the committee comments, "it simply does not operate as it is supposed to. Even if it did, it would represent a degrading conception of democratic politics in which the highest function of government would be to yield to the strongest pressure. Absolute responsiveness to group interests is one thing, but truly responsible representative government is quite another."

THE COMMITTEE looks at the picture of lobbying painted before it by dozens of witnesses, some willing to tell all about themselves, others reluctant. It finds many changes from what comparable investigations have turned up in other years.

It notes an enormous increase of pressure group activities during and since World War II, an increase in pressures, more diversified pressures and better financing of lobbies. It notes, too, that the new emphasis on lobbying complements pressure on members of Congress by pressure on the people at home, which thus is transferred indirectly to the legislators.

It finds that contributions, especially of industry, to "'educational' leagues and foundations of every imaginable political color mushroomed."

It finds that from July 1, 1946, to the end of 1949 more than $75 million was spent for lobbying, according to reports filled under the Lobby Act—"a large and impressive sum but it does not begin to reflect all that is actually collected and spent in efforts to influence legislation."

It finds that a comparatively small group of wealthy men and the firms they dominate provide most of the financial ammunition for such outfits as the Committee for Constitutional Government, National Economic Foundation and the Foundation for Economic Education, which lobby either directly or indirectly, or both, for the interests of the rich. The groups claimed they were not contributors but rather "purchasers" of literature for free distribution to school, libraries, etc.

THE COMMITTEE likewise finds that some members of Congress "have not used their best judgment in allowing the employment of their frank" for the mail of lobby organizations. The report does not mention by name Rep. Gwinn (R. N. Y.), who gave the CCG virtually unlimited access to his mailing frank. But of him it says:

"The frank is not to be used as a veiled subsidy to any group, whatever its views may be. Close to 2½ million pieces of franked material of one member of Congress were obtained by this one organization alone in a single year for distribution postage-free at the taxpayers' expense. This same organization publicly advocates government economy."

Edward A. Rumley, CCG executive secretary, refused to disclose the names of big "purchasers" of literature. Rep. Brown and Rep. Halleck (R. Ind.) objected strenuously when Buchanan proposed to ask to cite Rumely. But he was cited, on a charge of contempt, and now faces grand jury action. It was this action, plus the references to the CCG in the report, that prompted the Republican committee members to refuse to sign it, according to Washington gossip.

THE REPORT followed by two days publication of another report showing that 152 corporations had spent $32,124,800 on "activities relating to attempts to influence legislation" in the 3½ years ending June 1, 1950.

This report was based on replies to questionnaires sent 173 corporations known or believed to have undertaken to influence Congress. It was described as "startling," in a joint statement by Sens. Thomas (Utah), Murray (Mont.) and Green (R. I.), all Democrats, who asked for a full investigation.

The Buchanan committee report showed that the firms which answered the questionnaire reported spending only $776,446 in their Lobby Act reports. Among those which answered were General Motors, General Electric, Gulf Oil, Jones & Laughlin, New York Central, Schenley and Pacific Gas & Electric.

Among those which refused to answer were U. S. Steel, which along with 11 other firms said it hadn't attempted to influence legislation; Montgomery Ward, Nash-Kelvinator, Armstrong Cork, Inland Steel, Dow Chemical, Pullman, Pittsburgh Plate Glass, Goodrich, U. S. Gypsum and several Standard Oil affiliates.

Public Be Damned Dept. Opens Again

Bethelehem Steel made $90,804,000 profits after taxes in the first nine months of 1950—a new record and a jump of about 10% over 1949.

Taking note of the profit situation, the company raised its dividend from 75c a share to $2 a share. After that action, Eugene Grace, chairman of Bethelehem's board of directors, talked to reporters. His comments:

1. "I know of no justification of economic character for any increase in wages."

2. "If the steel industry has to go along on wage increases . . . it will have to meet increased costs by raising prices."

R. I. GOP Split Over Resignation Of Its Money Raiser, Kamp's Pal

EVERY ONCE in a while the rank and file members of a political party rise up and comb out of their hair a big bug who's been nestled there and thinks he owns it.

Such a combee is Robert B. Dresser, Providence, R. I., lawyer, friend and admirer of pro-Nazi jailbird Joseph E. Kamp.

Dresser is also trustee of the reactionary Committee for Constitutional Government, trustee of the equally tory National Association of Manufacturers (bellwether of the campaign to keep the government poor by limiting its power to tax big incomes) and, until recently, the best money-raiser Rhode Island Republicans ever had.

As vice chairman of the Rhode Island Republican State Finance Committee, Dresser until a short time ago was passing the hat with his usual success for the election of Austin Levy to the U. S. Senate. Levy is jousting with Gov. Pastore, the Democrat, for the seat left vacant by the retirement of Sen. Leahy (D.).

DRESSER isn't vice chairman any longer. He resigned when Levy publicly disowned him because of revelations turned up in the probe of the House Lobby Investigating Committee and aired in the House in speeches by Reps. Patman (D. Tex.) and Biemiller (D. Wis.) and his own inept replies.

The speeches were delivered in August. The Democrats put them together in a book, "The Patman Story," and distributed it throughout the state. It showed a lot of Republicans that their leaders haven't caught up with them on some of the social and economic issues that plague the country and the world.

One of the things that appeared to irk them most was Patman's flat statement in his speech that Dresser had written Guy Gabrielson, Republican National Committee chairman and another 24-karat tory, quoting Kamp approvingly.

Kamp, a notorious pro-Nazi for as long as he dared be, a virulent enemy of labor and the Roosevelt-Truman philosophy of government, has just been "sprung" after serving a four-month stretch in the District of Columbia jail following his conviction on a charge of contempt of Congress growing out of the 1944 lobby investigation. He has been cited again in the current probe.

Dresser also had been highly regarded in Republican national circles for his prowess in inducing the well-heeled to kick in for nationwide election campaigns. Patman cited him as typical of the type the GOP should get rid of because of his admiration for such as Kamp and his close tie-in with "the Committee for a fascist government in the United States, alias the Committee for Constitutional Government."

Dresser's reply, as printed in Providence newspapers, was to the effect that he was proud to be an admirer of Kamp.

THE STORM that followed has virtually wrecked the Republican party in Rhode Island. One faction, mindful of Dresser's success in keeping party war-chests filled, is mourning him bitterly. Other resignations have followed. The bulk of the party, however, appears to have stuck to Levy and to have approved his stand.

What has happened in Rhode Island cannot help but give rise to speculation—frankly wishful—about the fate on Nov. 7 of a lot of other characters in both houses of Congress who, like Dresser, have been helpful to the CCG, such as Rep. Gwinn (R. N.Y.). Gwinn let his frank be put on a couple of million envelopes for the distribution of CCG propaganda inserted into the Congressional Record, and kept up a running correspondence with Edward A. Rumely, CCG executive secretary, on all sorts of subjects mutually interesting to a couple of forerunners of fascism. Rumely has been cited for contempt of Congress for failing to tell who supplied funds to CCG.

Sen. Capehart Lambasted In Indiana

INDIANA'S two Republican Senators, Homer E. Capehart and William Jenner, were termed "the two worst Congressmen" and "a disgrace to Indiana and the nation" at the recent Indiana CIO Council convention in Indianapolis.

These statements were made by Council Pres. Neal W. Edwards, who called for the defeat of Capehart. Jenner's term expires in 1952.

The 700 delegates heard Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers charge that after the CIO threw out the Communist dominated United Electrical Workers last November, Capehart "took them to his breast and made love to them at their convention at Fort Wayne."

Referring to the GOP charge that the CIO was coddling Communists, Reuther declared, "We have forgotten more about fighting Communism than reactionaries like Capehart and Jenner will ever learn."

ALEX CAMPBELL, Capehart's Democratic opponent, addressed the convention and charged that Capehart is soliciting campaign funds from the radio and television industry outside the state.

Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers warned the delegates not to be "lulled to sleep by the siren song of the National Association of Manufacturers who are trying to make labor think that the Taft-Hartley Act is not so bad after all."

George L-P Weaver, director of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, praised the progress made in the last three years against discrimination. He warned that the working people of the nation cannot afford discrimination in any form "if we are to utilize our available manpower to meet needed production goals."

GEORGE BALDANZI, executive vice president of the CIO Textile Workers, told the convention "the only way we can defeat communism is to give the starving peoples of the world a better program than the Communists can offer. We must maintain a strong labor movement to achieve such a program."

Tilford Dudley, assistant National PAC director, answered critics of the administration who accuse Pres. Truman of being responsible for the Korean war. Dudley declared that "had only one Indiana Senator voted for the Korean Aid Bill it would have passed. Then Russia would not have gotten the go-ahead signal in Korea."

Edwards and Claude Becktell were reelected to serve as president and secretary-treasurer, respectively, for one year terms. Nellie Riddle was reelected vice president.

New members of the executive board and the unions they represent are: Peter Derysa, Steelworkers; John McMillin and Robert Gordon, Auto Workers; Mildred Smith, Clothing Workers; Mary Salisbury, Communications Workers, and Ralph Walter, Brewery Workers.

Executive board members reelected to another term are: Samuel Shapiro, Rubber Workers; Roy Utley, Packinghouse Workers; Wallace Clayton, IUE; William Brown, United Transport Service Employees; Ralph Myers, Utility Workers and Otis Miller, Glass Workers.

'I Was Wrong, You Were Right,' MacMahon Writes Quill

IF THERE are any CIO members who doubt that the policy of the Communists in the American trade union movement is one of disruption and ruin they should read the letter CIO Transport Workers Pres. Michael J. Quill received from a former secretary-treasurer of the union, Douglas L. MacMahon.

MacMahon was one of the first six members of the Transport Workers Union and became secretary-treasurer in 1942. Somewhere down the line he got mixed up with the Commies and was expelled at the union's 1948 convention in Chicago along with Austin Hogan, John Santo and James Fitzsimon, other members of the left wing. He now operates a candy store in Brooklyn.

EXCERPTS from MacMahon's letter to Quill follow:

"I am writing to tell you that I was wrong and you were right. I quit the Communist Party well over a year ago, having come to realize their policy was one of disrupting the labor movement.

DOUGLAS MacMAHON
"You Were Right, Mike"

"If they could not rule then they would ruin. It is indeed fortunate that the CIO has the able leadership of men like Phil Murray or the damage might have been a great deal more than it was.

"The plan was to discredit any and all gains made and to try and make the workers feel that they were sold out. If the union was wrecked and the men took it on the chin, that would be just too bad. Disrupt was the slogan. Wreck was the goal.

"SEVERAL months after the Chicago convention it was clear to me that such a program offended every trade union principle. I therefore quit the Communist Party. Since then as I watched from the side-lines, the continued gains of the union have done my heart good.

"When you take a good look at the Communist policy as I have finally done, you see that in every instance it dovetails with that of the worst reactionaries in the country.

"As one who started with you to build TWU in the face of the full opposition of the reactionary transit companies, I can therefore appreciate the full impact of the gains achieved. I know TWU will keep up the good work and continue the militant fight."

CIO Routs Commie Fur Union In Poll

THE COMMUNIST - dominated Fur & Leather Workers have taken another beating from the CIO in the Gloversville, N. Y., area.

First they tried to keep the CIO Fur & Leather Workers Local Industrial Union off the ballot in an industry-area National Labor Relations Board election to pick a collective bargaining representative. They failed in that.

Then, since they couldn't get on the ballot themselves because of the Taft-Hartley Act's non-Communist oath requirement, they campaigned for a "no union" vote when the election was finally held. A. A. Hine, a member of the party line front, published ads in the local newspaper urging the workers to vote "no," with a teaser, "and we will form a real union—one that will represent the workers."

The CIO Fur & Leather Workers won by an overwhelming 497 to 96. It also defeated the old union in four shops where individual elections were held—and according to CIO Reg. Dir. John J. Maurillo, "I don't think we will have any more difficulties in that area with them." The Fur and Leather Workers were expelled from the CIO because of their Red leadership.

The CIO union now is setting up a council with locals of the Clothing Workers in preparation for an organizing drive among several thousand glove workers now members of independent and usually company-dominated unions.

CIO Centers Campaign On Open Shop Building In Heart Of Williamsport, Pa.

THE CIO IS storming the open shop citadel in the heart of Williamsport, Pa.

Williamsport, which not so long ago was the heart of Pennsylvania's timber country, was once known as the "stronghold of the open shop." Ten years ago the CIO began moving into steel, leather, auto, electrical and other manufacturing concerns in the Williamsport area.

Election after election was won by the CIO. The Lycoming County CIO Council with its 5000 members began to play an important part in community and political affairs. Organizing was delayed temporarily by the left-right fight in the CIO.

But in the heart of the city the open shop citadel remained, endangering the gains won by the CIO unions elsewhere in the Williamsport area. Abandoned by the U. S. Rubber Co., 20 years ago, the huge brick building houses textile, clothing, shoe, furniture and miscellaneous factories.

Last summer the council decided to move in on the open shop citadel and formed a special committee. Helped by international unions and the CIO regional office in Wilkes-Barre, the CIO members decided to sign up workers at the big building on regulation CIO membership cards, deferring assignment to appropriate unions until later.

TWICE a week members of the CIO unions greet the rubber building employes going to work, and hand them leaflets and membership cards. Other committees are visiting the workers' homes.

Additional organizers have been assigned recently to the job.

The drive was given impetus by a rally at which speakers included Sen. Myers (D.), who is seeking re-election, and Judge Michael Musmanno of Pittsburgh, Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor of Pennsylvania.

INTRODUCED by Council Chairman Harvey Lemon, Steelworker, to the committee and the new organizers, Judge Musmanno said:

"This brings me back to the thirties when I helped organize the steelworkers in the old Steel Workers Organizing Committee. There were few if any unions in Lycoming County in those days and now it's different. Keep up your good fight."

Incentive Plan Needs Union OK

A company with a union contract can't install an incentive plan system without the consent of the union even if it guarantees the old hourly rate "regardless of performance."

That ruling was made by the NLRB recently when it upheld a complaint by Local 1271 of the International Association of Machinists against John W. Bolton & Sons, Lawrence, Mass.

James W. Melvin, 1271 president, said the union acted because the IAM constitution states "we will not condone any method of piece work, job evaluation, or incentive" and because the plan was put in over the union's protests.

The NLRB ordered the company to scrap the incentive plan and revert to contract pay schedules.

"I'd just like to get my hands on that Joe Stalin—our cook left us again today for the bomber plant."

Steinway Is 'Out Of Tune'

THE MUSIC may have been going 'round and 'round last week in Long Island City, N. Y., but none of it was coming out of the plant of Steinway & Sons, piano manufacturers.

CIO Furniture Workers closed the company's plant when negotiations broke down. The union asked a 10c-an-hour wage increase, two additional paid holidays and a company-financed pension plan.

All other piano manufacturers in the New York area with the exception of Steinway have included these requests in contracts.

Business Rep. James Cerefeci of UFW Metropolitan Council District 3 said the workers will not return to work until the company meets the same conditions which have already been established in other parts of the industry. The company earlier offered a 5% increase and one additional paid holiday.

His Life Saved, Now He Helps Save Others

There's a reason for the reserve of 150 pints at the union blood bank at Duluth's Coolerator plant. The reason is Edward H. Mason, chairman of the CIO United Steel workers sick committee and head of the blood bank.

Several years ago, Mason underwent a series of amputation operations on his leg. His life was saved when fellow workers and friends responded with generous donations of blood. Now he's directing the fight to save others.

He took charge of the blood bank when the reserve averaged only 28 pints; his goal is 200 pints ready for emergencies.

It Happened In Texas

Probe Threat Gets 3 Contracts After 6 Years

THE MERE threat of a Senate investigation has accomplished for members of the CIO Textile Workers in three Texas cotton mills what the National Labor Relations Board, the U. S. Conciliation Service and even the U. S. Supreme Court couldn't do in more than six years.

As a result of the threatened probe by a Senate sub-committee on Labor and Management Relations, owners of the three mills, Itasca Manufacturing Co., Itasca; Hillsboro Cotton Mills, Hillsboro, and Mexia Cotton Mills, Mexia, have finally signed TWUA contracts.

John Edelman, Washington representative of the TWUA, in a letter to Chairman Murray (D. Mont.) of the Senate sub-committee, pointed out that "simply because a Senate subcommittee has undertaken to investigate these three situations involving fantastically protracted cases of stalling and evasion of obligations . . . the companies are prepared, at long last to comply with the law."

The letter deplored the fact that the whole weight of the federal judiciary and the concern of Congress had to be invoked "before a few hundred cotton mill workers could achieve elementary economic and social rights.

"This is what it takes in 1950 to get a great many textile employers to sit down sincerely to do business with their employes as the law and ordinary common sense require."

EDELMAN CITED in detail the history of the Mexia case in his letter to Sen. Murray.

He said that it was back on Nov. 8, 1944, that the NLRB held a collective bargaining election at that mill. The workers voted for TWUA by a better than three to one majority. At that time the company was paying less than 50c an hour to its employes.

Ten days later, TWUA was certified by the board as exclusive bargaining agency for the workers and Nov. 25, 1944, a TWUA representative made the initial attempt to open negotiations for a contract covering terms and conditions of employment. Little did he imagine at the time that these negotiations would not be concluded until more than six years later.

From Nov. 25, 1944, to June 20, 1945, union negotiators held futile meetings with the company at various intervals. During the course of one of these meetings, John Scott, who acted as counsel for all three companies, told Paul Schuler, TWUA regional director, "You are not being given the run-around; you are learning about our Texas labor relations."

ON JUNE 20, 1945, a tri-partite panel of the Eighth Regional War Labor Board unanimously recommended a 50c an hour minimum for all the company's production and maintenance workers plus a 5c an hour increase across the board, retroactive to April 19, 1945. It was the understanding that the wage question would be reopened in August, 1945.

After 10 months of bargaining, the company up to this time had not agreed to a single provision of the proposed contract and the WLB's directive was promptly defied.

The almost endless series of meetings dragged on until July 31, 1946. On that date, Schuler wrote the company requesting a date to negotiate on a general wage increase proposal issued to all Southern mills by TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve. The company refused to negotiate.

AN NLRB hearing on unfair labor practices charges against the Mexia Co. was held early in October, 1947. On Dec. 18 the NLRB handed down its intermediate order instructing the company to bargain in good faith with the union and to cease and desist from interfering with negotiations with the union.

On Jan. 30, 1948, the next meeting with the company was held. Nothing was agreed upon at this session but Feb. 21 was set as the date for the next meeting. Again nothing was accomplished.

Later in 1948 another series of meetings were held but no progress whatsoever was made. The one proposal put forth by the company was that a large sum of money be posted by TWUA as a guarantee against strikes.

The U. S. Conciliation Service was repeatedly called into the sessions but finally dropped the case on the ground that it was evident that the concern had no intention of bargaining in good faith.

The meetings continued for two more years without results, up until the time the Senate subcommittee announced it would hold hearings in the three cases. All three companies then signed contracts without further delay.

In May of this year, the U. S. Supreme Court reversed a previous decision of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals with the direction to the lower court to enforce in full all previous NLRB orders.

Despite the fact that the nation's highest tribunal by its decision ordered the Mexia company to bargain in good faith, no contract was signed until the Senate group prepared to hold the hearings.

"Normally we would prefer not to publicize contracts of this type," Edelman wrote. "But the fact that it took an average of about 78 months in each case to obtain the employers signature to these documents, gives them a considerable if dubious singularity."

THEIR EFFORTS PAID OFF: Allan S. Haywood (third from the right), CIO vice president and director of organization and councils, meets with business agents of CIO Local Industrial Union 78. The lettuce shed workers of the Salinas-Watsonville, Cal., area showed in a National Labor Relations Board election that they wanted CIO to represent them rather than the Communist-dominated Food and Tobacco Workers. The vote was 1842 to 1345.

California Lettuce Shed Workers Pick CIO; FTA Suffers 2nd Big Defeat

IT'S STILL "the original Fruit Tramps' Union, the CIO," for the 3600 lettuce shed workers in the Salinas-Watsonvile area of California.

In five days of balloting conducted by the National Labor Relations Board and ending Oct. 23, the packing shed workers voted for the CIO by a decisive count of 1842 to 1345.

Outcome of the election not only gave the CIO bargaining rights in 50 sheds, but opened the way for a stepped-up organizing drive—with success virtually assured—in other packing shed centers throughout California and Arizona.

THE CIO'S major victory in the Salinas-Watsonville area was another major defeat for the Communist-dominated Food, Tobacco and Agricultural Workers, which was expelled from the CIO because of its red-tinged leadership and which recently became part of the party line Distributive, Packing and Office Workers.

The largest FTA local, in Camden, N. J., refused to join the merger and has voted to affiliate with the CIO. Sizeable groups of members in Ohio and Pennsylvania also are returning to the CIO—and now FTA has lost the bulk of its largest Pacific Coast local.

Of the 3600 eligible workers, some 3200 voted. NLRB officials said the 141 challenges, most of them by FTA against all the workers in one shed, will not change the outcome of the election.

THE CIO VICTORY was hailed by Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization and councils, who helped see the pre-election campaign through a whirlwind finish, and CIO National Rep. Richard T. Leonard, who was in charge of the drive.

Haywood described the DPO as the "Dying, Puny Outfit." He noted that the CIO won despite use of some of the heaviest of the left-wing big guns, including Arthur Osman, DPO president, and Donald Henderson, former FTA president who resigned to make way for a successor qualified to sign a Taft-Hartley Act non-Communist affidavit.

"The workers could see a new birth of freedom in the opportunity offered them by the CIO," said Haywood. "They seized upon it enthusiastically, they inspired me.

"This election determines, to a great extent, elections covering another 9000 or 10,000 packing-shed workers. The CIO will work with them, and so will our affiliated unions. They are not alone in their struggle, and they will have the effective, democratically-controlled union they want and need.

"If CIO people in the sheds—and everywhere else—want to retain their CIO membership, we will go with them into the highways and byways, and help them in their fight. They needn't fear the Dying, Puny Outfit. We'll keep it too busy in New York to worry about what's going on in California."

Leonard pleaded with all packingshed workers, whether supporters of CIO or FTA, to close ranks and work together for an improved contract.

In the Salinas-Watsonville area, CIO Local 78 is prepared to take over the old FTA agreement pending contract negotiations. Proposals, including a 30c an hour wage increase, are now being drafted by a rank and file committee.

Co-op Radio Two Years Old

Station WCFM, Wash., D. C. (the Cooperative Broadcasting Association), celebrated its second year on the air with a dinner on Oct. 20. Many of WCFM's stockholders and friends, members of the board, and participants on the programs were there to celebrate.

LONG LINE of lettuce shed workers waits at Salinas, Cal., plant to vote in representation election between CIO-LIU 78 and FTA. NLRB officials at table check eligibility list for name of worker in foreground. CIO won bargaining rights in 50 sheds.

Non-Members Get Union Benefits

A non-union worker in a union shop must get all the benefits of the union contract.

The National Labor Relations Board ruling against the Gaynor News Co. at Mt. Vernon, N. J., said the company encouraged membership in the Newspaper and Mail Delivers' union by paying less to non-union employes and refusing them vacations.

The company insisted it was merely following "the time-honored practice of not spending money it was not required to spend." Time-honored or no, the NLRB said, everyone must be treated alike because the Taft-Hartley act "prohibits discrimination to encourage or discourage membership in a union."

Rubber Union Wins 12½c Raise For 800

The CIO United Rubber Workers have gained a 12½c an hour wage increase for more than 800 Dayton Rubber Co. workers in Waynesville, N. C. URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster said accord was reached between the union and company following two months of wage negotiations.

The 12½c package provides a 10½c across-the-board wage boost and 2c an hour to be used for correcting intra-plant wage inequalities.

Editor Says Leftists 'Done' In Panama

THE UNITED Public Workers, kicked out of the CIO because of its Communist domination, has been completely discredited in the Panama Canal Zone, Sidney Young, editor and publisher of the Panama Tribune, reported last week.

Young paid a surprise visit to national headquarters of the CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee in Washington on his way home from the 1950 Inter-American Press Conference in New York. Accompanying him were Mrs. Young and their son, David.

The distinguished newspaperman, a native Panamanian, has been an enthusiastic supporter of the CIO-GCEOC organizing drive among the Canal Zone's local rate workers, who are denied U. S. citizenship and work at an average rate of 35c an hour—far under the wages of U. S. citizens in the Zone under contract.

HE HAS LONG preached the need for a strong, democratic union for the workers, and has given consistent aid to the CIO and CIO policy. He was one of the first to welcome the UPW and one of the first to realize that it was trying to build a Communist ideological machine instead of a genuine trade union.

"Actually," he told GCEOC staff members, "the UPW didn't want a strong union there because they couldn't handle it. They never tried to organize, but workers joined up by the thousands anyway, because they so desperately wanted a union.

"Now many are confused and bitter. The only thing they are sure of is that they need someone to speak for them in Washington, where their future is decided. Most of them realize that an independent union, with only a handful of members, can't help them. The UPW has been completely discredited, and neither government officials nor Congress will deal with it."

He described the new CIO-GCEOC Local 900 as "strong and vigorous," and was optimistic over its future in the Zone.

"When the next session of Congress convenes," he added confidently, "my people will have a strong voice that will be heard on Capitol Hill."

24½c 'Package' For Lab Workers

The CIO Textile Workers have signed a new contract with the Ethicon Suture Laboratories, a division of the Johnson & Johnson Surgical Dressing Corp. of Chicago.

It provides for an immediate general increase of 13c an hour plus an improved vacation and insurance plan amounting to an additional 2.2c an hour.

Each employe will also receive $50 in cash to compensate for the rise in the cost of living since the start of the Korean war. Spread over a year, this is equivalent to 2.2c an hour.

The company will contribute another 7c an hour toward a pension plan, making a total package adjustment of about 24½c an hour.

APPROXIMATELY 1.5 MILLION PERSONS are estimated to have viewed the booth of the Atlanta, Ga., CIO Council, at the Southeastern Fair in Atlanta. Left to right, Lillian McElwaney, Hazel Bankston, Sally Rigsby; James D. Read, chairman of the council's fair committee; Council Pres. Charles C. Mathias, Council Secy.-Treas. Evelyn Mitchell; Isabelle Jones and Gladys Dollar. All the women except Evelyn Mitchell are member of Local 365, Clothing Workers. CIO Councils in several states have set up similar booths at state fairs.

High Court To Rule On Wis. Anti-Strike Law

THE U. S. Supreme Court has decided to hear a challenge by a CIO union of the legality of the Wisconsin state public utility anti-strike law which makes it a crime to interrupt an essential service by work stoppage or slowdown.

The appeal was brought by a Milwaukee local of the CIO Gas, Coke & Chemical Workers and grew out of a strike at the Milwaukee Gas Light Co. last October.

The law provides that upon petition by either party, a dispute must be settled by arbitration. The award is final, subject only to judicial review.

In the Milwaukee case, the board gave the parties a list of five arbitrators. The company and the union were each directed to strike one name from the list. The three remaining persons were to arbitrate the dispute.

The next day the workers struck. The board obtained an injunction in the state Circuit Court and criminal penalties were threatened. The union challenged and lost in the state courts.

The Chemical Workers then started new action in the Federal courts. The union contends that enforcement of the state statute constitutes a violation of both the 13th and 14th amendments to the Constitution and is also in conflict with the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer met in San Francisco with CIO regional directors from the entire West Coast area, as well as representatives of our unions. He found out that the Cominform leadership of the discredited Marine, Cooks and Stewards Union have suspended those members who continue to support the policies of their country, the United Nations and the CIO.

We intend to take action, and render legal and other support to these people who have been suspended. We intend to find out whether people who are opposed to the policies of their country and the United Nations can force off their jobs people who support their country and the United Nations. We shall check further into this matter and hold to account those responsible.

While in San Francisco, the writer along with Reg. Dir. Tim Flynn and other directors, went to Salinas where the NLRB election among the packing shed workers was recently concluded. These workers were at one time part of the National CIO until they were turned over to the FTA. They revolted against the Communist leadership of the FTA, and expressed a desire to remain a part of the CIO. It was found that a certain official of the discredited ILWU interfered in this election. Also Arthur Osman, head of the so-called new labor organization, "Distributive, Processing and Office Workers," and Professor Don Henderson of FTA were in Salinas addressing meetings. The efforts of these men were to no avail.

Our own meeting was presided over by CIO Natl. Rep. Richard Leonard, and was addressed by Reg. Dirs. Flynn and Irwin DeShetler, and myself. We assured these workers that the CIO was behind them all the way and would join with them in driving all undesirable influences out of their union.

The election was conducted over four days and resulted in a resounding victory for the CIO and a smashing defeat for the FTA. The results were as follows: CIO 1842; FTA 1345; neither 18.

Congratulations to Brothers Leonard, DeShetler and Flynn to the CIO unions that assisted, and to the shed workers themselves.

Russell Taylor, research director, United Shoe Workers-CIO, reports the following representation election victories for the USWA-CIO: Saxe Glassman Shoe Co., Saco, Me., eligible 360, USWA-CIO 188, against 145; Mitchell Shoe Co., Biddeford, Me., eligible 211, USWA-CIO 136, against 33.

Field Rep. Howard Rizer reports that in a representation election at the Sherrorsis Mfg. Co., San Diego, Calif., the workers voted in favor of the Textile Workers Union, CIO, by TWUA 77, no union 65.

The Newspaper Guild of New York reports winning another victory when employes of the World-Telegram and Sun, New York City, voted 313 to 60 in a union security election. This was the eighth triumph in a recent series of union security elections won by the Guild.

Reg. Dir. George Craig reports that in a union shop election at Cuneo Eastern Press, Inc., the Printing & Paper Trades Auxiliary Workers, LIU 520, CIO, the vote was 476 for the union shop, 1 against. Congratulations to the local officers for the splendid job they have done.

Reg. Dir. William Taylor reports that in a representation election at the Louisville Water Co., Louisville, Ky., CIO Local Industrial Union 1683 was victorious; CIO 160, UPW 80, 7 no union.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, International Woodworkers, reports that in a representation election at L. R. Foreman & Sons, Elizabeth City, N. C., the IWA-CIO was victorious by the following vote: eligible 154, IWA-CIO 116, no union 28, challenged 3.

Sol Stetin, regional director, Textile Workers Union-CIO, reports the following TWUA certification election victories in Pennsylvania: Warshaw Mills, Montoursville, TWUA 152, against 148; Century Beverly Co., Pottstown, TWUA 171, against 26; Vaughn Knitting Co., Pottstown, TWUA 124, against 62.

William Donovan, director of District 28, United Steelworkers, reports that one of the "tough" plants in Cleveland was brought into the camp of the USA-CIO as a result of a representation election at the Weldon Tool Co. by a vote of 137 USA-CIO, 65 no union.

John Riffe, national director, CIO Organizing Committee, reports the following representation election victories: Holliston Mills of Tennessee, Kingsport, Tenn., eligible 141, TWUA-CIO 83, AFL Printing Pressmen's Union 3, neither 44; Phillips & Buttorff Mfg. Co., Nashville, Tenn., USA-CIO 199, against 135; A. O. Smith Pipe Co., Houston, Tex., USA-CIO 203, Boilermakers-AFL 76; Smith Co., Machine Shop Unit, USA-CIO 10; NAM 7; Trinity Packing Co., Ft. Worth, Tex., UPWA-CIO 32, AFL 1, no union 5; City Packing Co., Ft. Worth, UPWA 82, AFL 3, no union 8; Inter-Continental Mfg. Co., Inc., Dallas, Tex., eligible 48, UAW-CIO 25, no union 21; St. Joe Paper Co., Houston, eligible 74, UPA-CIO 65, no union 2, challenged 2; Turner Specialty Co., Houston, OWIU-CIO 13, against 10; Sinclair Oil Co., Houston, OWIU-CIO 30, against 0.

Adamant AP Faces Guild Strike Vote

THE CIO Newspaper Guild started taking a nationwide strike vote among employes of the Associated Press on Oct. 27.

Authority to call a walkout of some 1,500 Guild members from coast to coast was asked by a rank and file committee after 10 months of negotiations had failed to produce any AP offer worthy of the name.

The contract has been extended to Nov. 4—three days before the Nov. 7 election. If a strike has to be called, the largest wire news service in the world may find itself unable to service clients with the results of one of the most important elections in the nation's history. What copy it might be able to send will be regarded as "hot."

THE MAIN issues are wages and contract exemptions. The AP has refused to make any offer of a general wage increase, but insists on the right to give some increases on a merit basis, with management having the sole voice in determining what constitutes "merit." It also wants to write out of the contract many reporters and editors who have long been covered by it. In addition it is seeking to weaken the sick leave clause and refuses to agree to submit disputes under the contract to arbitration.

Major centers of AP operations are New York, Washington, Chicago, Kansas City, San Francisco and Atlanta, and in some communities the wire service is represented by a single employe. Major Guild locals have already pledged financial aid if the walkout is necessary.

Paper Strike Is Deadlocked

PITTSBURGH members of the CIO Guild, along with nine other unions in the Steel city, were still off the job last week as the strike of 177 AFL Mailers on the three daily papers entered its fourth week.

Negotiators termed the wage deadlock between the Mailers and publishers of the Post-Gazette, Press and Sun-Telegraph "more stalemated than ever."

Officials of the non-striking newspaper union have cooperated in putting out a paper, the Daily Reporter, but a meager newsprint supply threatens to keep it down to six pages.

The Mailers are demanding that their six-day work week and four-year-old verbal agreement be continued and that members get a $1-per-day pay boost. The publishers want a signed contract on the basis of a five-day work week and have offered 10c an hour increase.

Mayor David L. Lawrence and Allegheny County Commissioner John J. Kane have attended negotiation meetings in the hope of speeding a settlement.

Yancey Named To Post With Housing Group

John L. Yancey, assistant chairman of the CIO Government & Civic Employes Organizing Committee, has been named to serve as a commissioner of the Chicago Housing Authority. Yancey is on leave as vice president of the CIO United Transport Service Employes.

Woods Won't Throw L.A. Tenants To Rent Wolves

THE RENT LID is back on in Los Angeles. Tighe Woods, director of the Office of the Housing Expediter, on Oct. 23 wrote to the Los Angeles City Council and said he wasn't going to sign their decontrol resolution, which was passed June 28 and has been fought in and out of court ever since.

Woods' rescue of Los Angeles tenants came after just about every other avenue of escape had been closed. The day before, a judge for the third time had thrown the tenants' plea out of court. His action dissolved the third temporary injunction the Tenants' Council had succeeded in obtaining, and the landlords, with victory within their reach, were slavering.

But, as the poet Robert Browning said, "Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp, or what's a heaven for?"

WOOD'S ACTION made the landlords madder than a million hornets, but it stuck. It was the first such action he had ever taken.

If members of the Los Angeles City Council want to decontrol the West Coast boom town, they must go through the formalities prescribed by the Rent Control Act, Woods told them. This he pointed out, includes the holding of a bona fide public hearing after appropriate public notice, and the consideration of valid evidence as to whether or not a housing shortage still exists.

THEIR JUNE 28 action, Woods said, was nothing of the sort. They held a hearing, all right, but "the testimony presented by those favoring decontrol is noteworthy for its almost complete lack of relevance to the subject of the existence or non-existence of a housing shortage in Los Angeles."

He ought to know—he listened to a three-hour recording of the alleged hearing.

Woods then called a meeting in Washington for Oct. 30 to discuss "present and future rent control policies." The CIO will be represented.

Meanwhile President Truman told his press conference on Oct. 26 that he was seriously considering calling Congress back into session on Nov. 15, instead of the originally planned Nov. 27, so that it might consider stronger rent control, among other things.

Under the present law, controls will expire in every community whose governing body has not voted before Dec. 31 to ask continuation till June 30, 1951. As of last week, 250 communities had done so, but nearly 3000 remained unheard from. Local pressure was building up in many places, but OHE was worried because of the well-known tendency of governing bodies to delay preventive action until too late.

After Dec. 31, there will be nothing any community can do to get back under federal controls, except pass a local ordinance or call for state action.

Congressional leaders for the past fortnight have been saying that it would be impossible to pass a decent rent control law in the lame duck session, but the President's plan, if put to action, makes favorable consideration more likely.

'Meeting Of Minds' Give Landlords 15% Increase

In Dayton, O., a large group of landlords were given a 15% blanket rent increase at the "recommendation" of the Area Rent Advisory Board, although the board never voted such a move.

The story came out when John E. Breidenbach, president of the Dayton Central Labor Union, AFL, wrote to Housing Expediter Tighe Woods and disgustedly offered his resignation as a member of the Dayton Board.

He said he had just read in the paper where the Dayton Board had met and taken this vote, and according to the story, he had asked that his vote not be recorded. The newspaper story was the first time he knew there was to be a meeting, he said, and if he'd been there he certainly would have recorded his vote against the motion. Furthermore, he said, the man who was recorded as seconding the motion hadn't been at the meeting either.

Further investigation revealed that there had been no meeting at all. The board chairman, Oscar B. Renolin, who also is vice president of the Dayton Power & Light Co., had drawn up a resolution for the increase and sent it around to the board members' offices. Breidenbach had returned his unsigned: the other four membrs had indicated they favored the motion. Renolin then published the "minutes" of the "meeting." Asked for comment on this curious procedure, Renolin said solemnly: "There was no physical meeting, but there was a meeting of the minds."

Vance Muse Dead; Foe Of Unions

"JUMPING JUMBO" is dead. Vance Muse, the six-foot, four-inch anti-union, Bible-shouting exploiter for wealthier enemies of organized labor, died recently in Houston, Tex. He was 60. He won his nickname from the workers he fought.

He bossed a union-busting outfit, the Christian American Association, Inc., which sold anti-unionism in sections of the South with the declaration that it's against the Bible to join a union.

Muse started out in the 1920s as an employe of the late John Henry Kirby, wealthy Texan. His job was to shout for lower taxes, hamstring democracy, fight liberal movements and oppose unions in the interest of the wealthy buccaneers of those days.

He later went after big money and got it. The 1936 Senate Lobby Investigating Committee frankly branded his roster of financial backers as a "sucker list" and disclosed that it yielded him $41,000. Contributions included $10,000 from the duPonts, $5000 from the late John J. Raskob and $1000 from Pres. Alfred P. Sloan, formerly of General Motors.

New ECA Heads Urges Better Pay In Europe

INCREASES IN wages, as well as in production, are needed in many European nations if the Marshall Plan is to be a success, the head of the Economic Cooperation Administration said last week.

Speaking to a group of 85 industrialists and railroad officials from 12 Marshall Plan countries, William C. Foster, ECA administrator, declared:

"When America says to Europe, 'divide up the fruits of your increased productivity by paying higher wages for shorter hours,' it is the voice of experience speaking."

In the U. S., Foster added, "we have found that a mass market and mass production are available only to the extent there is mass purchasing power.

"Retention of the fruits of mass production in the hands of only a few means that only a few can buy—and what, we may well ask, is the use of overproduced goods cluttering our storerooms?

"This is the lesson we have learned from an experience not without its bitter moments."

Foster, who moved up into the top ECA job when Administrator Paul Hoffman retired recently, told the foreign visitors of improvements in our own productivity and pay scales. In 1900, he said, a railroad worker averaged $10.50 for a 57-hour week—while now he gets $61.20 for 39.4 hours.

"It is that time and that money that lets him live as you have seen him live," Foster told the overseas group.

Foster's talk about the need for higher European wage scales was one of the strongest to come from a top ECA official in some time.

A number of CIO and AFL union leaders who have visited Europe recently have returned with bitter comments about the low living standards of European workers.

The U. S. unionists have called for new ECA policies which would, during the second half of the Marshall Plan, place strong emphasis on meeting that problem.

Post Office Workers Get CIO Union Charter

The CIO Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee has granted a charter to the American Post Office Employes, Inc., Branch 9, in New York City.

The newly formed group is now the CIO American Post Office Employes, Local 9. Secy.-Treas. Earl Frazzini of Local 9 said he hopes that other New York City Post Office employes, not affiliated with Local 9, will join.

No Commies Sign With Justice Dept.; HST Names Subversive Control Board

THE DEPT. of Justice was open all last week for the registration of Communists, Communist organizations and Communist fronts as required by the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon-Wood Act.

As the week drew to a close, it still had to greet its first customer.

But operating under another section of the law, it started a round-up of 86 active alien Communists described as leaders in the party's propaganda and education work, with a view to their ultimate deportation.

Some of those seized already were facing deportation, but had been at liberty until their countries of origin would accept them. Others had escaped because of loopholes in the old law which were plugged by the new subversive controls legislation.

MEANTIME, President Truman appointed the five-man bipartisan Subversive Activities Control Board established by the act.

Seth W. Richardson, a Republican, was named chairman. He has been serving as head of the Federal Loyalty Review Board, top appeals agency under the program under which the federal government determines the loyalty of its employes. He is resigning that post to accept the new one.

Appointed with him were Campbell Brown, Brooklyn lawyer, and assistant to Atty.-Gen. J. Howard McGrath, a Democrat, and former Rep. Charles M. LaFollette, of Indiana, a Republican, to two-year terms; and David J. Coddaire, Boston lawyer, a Republican, and Dr. Kathryn McHale, of Logansport, Ind., psychologist and teacher, a Democrat, to one-year terms.

LAFOLLETTE, although a Republican while in Congress, served until a few months ago as executive director of Americans for Democratic Action. ADA attacked the controls bill while it was pending before Congress, but that was after Lafollette had resigned. Dr. McHale is a sister of Frank McHale, Democratic national committeeman for Indiana.

The Dept. of Justice, unable to drum up its registration trade on a voluntary basis, is preparing to go before the new control board for a ruling that the Communist Party is subversive under the law and hence must register.

This will involve work equivalent to the preparation of a major court case with mountainous research, as the hearings will be in the nature of a trial. The CP has the right of counsel and can cross-examine the department's witnesses, and if the board finds it is required to register under the law, it can still carry appeals through the courts. There is a good chance that it may be years before the question is finally resolved—on a legal basis, that is.

Should the CP be ultimately required to register, the Dept. of Justice then expects to tackle subsidiary organizations and fronts. The party, meantime, is standing firm on its previously announced position—that it is not foreign-controlled or a conspiracy, and that "we don't fit the bill."

—In St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Over The Just And The Unjust

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00 A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 6, 1950 82 No. 45

PROFITS UP

(See Pages 3 and 4)

Just as if they were jet-propelled, profits whizzed upward in the third quarter of 1950 at a rate beyond the wildest dreams of avarice. After taxes were paid, 486 corporations reported net incomes of more than $1.711 billion in the three-month period ending Sept. 30 — a juicy 51% more than the $1.129 billion netted in the corresponding quarter last year. This, bear in mind, was after the corporation tax rate had been increased from 38 to 42%. But that's only part of the story. The income of all corporations, it is estimated, piled up during the lush third quarter at the rate of $23.2 billion a year. They're all getting it, too, though big corporations are dipping their ladles deepest into the lovely, thick gravy. It's a funny thing about most corporations . . . they still can't see any justification for an excess profits tax, and when a union asks for a wage increase they wail "inflation!" like a chorus of agonized banshees.

PRICES UP

(See Page 3)

So you think prices are high! Brothers and Sisters, you ain't seen nothin' yet! By the middle of next year it will probably cost more to feed your family than ever before in history—even more than in record-breaking 1948, according to the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture's Outlook for the National Food Situation. Not because food will be scarce, the department says, but because so many people will have enough money, thanks to full employment, that they'll be able to set better tables than ever before. And if the rearmament program is stepped up, food costs will jump even higher! The latest Bureau of Labor Statistics index shows the over-all cost of living just under the 1948 peak. When boosts in wholesale levels get down to the ultimate consumer, what he'll pay for the necessities of life will go even higher. No reasonable excuse, not even the war in Korea and rearmament, exists for the present price level, CIO economists assert.

WAGES LAG

(See Page 2)

In millions of households throughout the land, families are not only wondering how they "will make ends meet," but are finding it well-nigh impossible. CIO economists say that the buying power of weekly earnings in manufacturing industries has dropped, and corporate profits have risen while workers' productivity has gone up. In short, if you work for a living you are taking a beating economically. CIO economists say that you are in for a worse beating, because wages will continue to lag behind prices unless prices are stabilized soon — which appears unlikely. Many unions have obtained wage raises in recent months and others are now seeking pay increases. But the lag—which is causing virtually everybody who works for a living to ask "where's the money coming from?"— will continue until something is done.

Kroll Deplores Tories' 'Slander, Rumor And Filth'

THE REACTIONARIES have followed the same campaign tactics all over the country—slander, rumor and filth—and this bodes no good for the future of America regardless of the election outcome, Jack Kroll, CIO-PAC director, told the American Veterans Committee Washington Chapter on Nov. 2.

The pattern was set in Florida, Kroll said, in the campaign which resulted in the primary defeat of liberal Sen. Pepper (D.). It was followed in North Carolina, where Sen. Graham (D.) lost out in the primaries. It is now being used in California, Pennsylvania, New York, Utah, Colorado, Ohio, and half dozen other states, and "it all comes out of the same tar-barrel."

"IN ALL my years I have never seen such low-level campaigning in this country," Kroll declared. "The money-bags have been opened, in a direct and cynical effort to capture control of the nation in an off-year. The campaign against the labor movement is deliberately aimed at arousing class hatred. Rumor, slander, and outright lies are used—religious and race prejudices are whipped up—it passes anything I have ever seen.

"This sort of tactic does no candidate any good," he said.

He read one example of the direct appeal to religious prejudice. It was a letter sent to all Lutheran churches in Ohio by a Dayton pastor. The letter said that Joseph Ferguson, Democratic candidate against Sen. Robert A. Taft (R.) was a Catholic, and so was Rep. Walter Brehm (R.). Then the letter stated that it was "well known" that the Catholics were trying to take over the United States, and suggested delicately that whoever received the letter read it out loud to his congregation the next Sunday.

"SOME PEOPLE may say that Taft is above that sort of thing, and that it must be going on without his knowledge," Kroll stated. "Let me tell you then, that Taft was shown this letter, and refused to repudiate it."

"We have great faith in the understanding and intelligence of the American people," he added, "so we don't believe this type of campaign will get anywhere. We think it'll boomerang."

Kroll added that he did not believe the GOP was "going anywhere in this country," because it had been captured by the extreme reactionaries and no longer represented the average Republican voter.

"It's not any longer the party of Lincoln, Teddy Roosevelt, and Wendell Willkie," he said.

"If this election results in the removal from the scene of the Tafts, Wherrys, Capeharts, Wileys and Hickenloopers, we will have done the Republican party a favor. The GOP will then have to reorganize itself and give the people a choice between two good candidates.

"As a matter of fact, I think Taft and his ilk should pull out and form a reactionary party, and see how far they would get."

HE ADDED THAT CIO-PAC local and state organizations support liberal Republicans wherever they can be found "but there are too few of them," he said. Answering repeated newspaper charges that CIO is taking over the Democratic party, he commented that CIO-PAC is doing no such thing—it seeks to maintain the two-party system.

"Labor's experiences at attempting to take over political parties in the past have not led us to try it again," he added.

He then made a tentative prediction as to the outcome of the Nov. 7 elections—which will be over by the time most CIO News readers see this.

"We think there will be close to 45 million votes cast in this election," he said. "If this is true, we at CIO-PAC believe the party in power will pick up four or five Senate seats and 15 or 20 in the House. This prediction is based on personal observation and on the registration figures."

JACK KROLL, CIO-PAC DIRECTOR, told the American Veterans Committee Washington chapter last week what he thought would happen Nov. 7, and got a warm reception. Here he is with a group of AVC leaders before his speech. Left to right: George Rettinger, CIO-PAC comptroller; Irving Parnger, chairman AVC political committee; Ann Ewing, chapter vice-president; Kroll; Lewis Pakiser, AVC executive director, and Richard Solomon, chapter chairman. Kroll predicted Democrats will pick up 4 or 5 Senate seats if 45 million vote.

Wages Lag Behind Profits, Prices

THE NATION'S wage earners have been having a harder and harder time making ends meet financially.

Prices have been going up.

So have profits.

But wages and salaries haven't kept pace.

That's the picture drawn by the CIO economists, who warn that the full impact of increasing prices hasn't been felt yet.

The economists cite some simple figures to show what's been happening:

1 The buying power of weekly earnings in manufacturing industries dropped 7% between 1944 and the end of last June.

2 Corporate profits—after payment of taxes—rose 82% during the same period.

3 Productivity per man hour in industry increases from 2½ to 3% each year since 1944.

These figures, the economists say, show clearly that industry has been doing OK by itself at the expense of its workers and consumers.

They cite a couple more figures to show what the trend is:

1 Industry's wage bill during the year ending last June 31 increased 2½%.

2 Corporate profits—before payment of taxes—rose 10% during the same period.

The effect of this trend on different groups has varied widely.

Unorganized workers, as a general rule, have fallen farther behind than have those represented by unions.

Persons with fixed incomes have taken the worst beating.

SOME CIO unions have contracts which tie pay to the cost of living and the productivity of their workers. Such contracts provide a "cushion" against increases in the cost of living.

A number of unions—CIO, AFL and independent—obtained wage increases earlier in the year and a number are now in the midst of negotiations.

CIO economists point out, however, that wage increases already obtained and now being sought will not bring a proper general balance between wages, profits and prices, especially if there isn't a sudden halt to the upward trend of prices.

And they say there's no indication that prices will be stabilized soon.

The present situation, CIO officials say, is "completely unwarranted." They point out that rapid price rises which followed the outbreak of war in Korea did not stem from a sudden shortage of consumer goods but from "speculation and an opportunity to profiteer."

Labor Aides Urge Hiring Of Blind

Officials of the CIO and AFL told the National Rehabilitation Association's convention in New York they were in favor of a drive for greater employment of blind workers.

Leo Perlis, national director of the CIO Community Services Committee, said he will submit a resolution to the forthcoming national convention asking unions to urge employers to hire them. Lewis T. Hines, assistant to AFL Pres. William Green, gave his support to employment of the blind.

"Boy, I feel terrible today, but you can bet that before the day is out, I won't be the only one."

Rubber Union Wins 12c, Union Shop at Firestone

THE CIO Rubber Workers have signed a new contract with the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. which gives 23,000 URWA members in eight plants throughout the country a 12c-an-hour average wage increase and a union shop.

The Firestone contract was signed shortly after the rubber union had arrived at an agreement with the Seiberling Rubber Co.

The Firestone settlement, announced in a joint statement by URWA Pres. L. S. Buckmaster and Firestone Industrial Relations Dir. W. R. Murphy, follows the wage pattern set in the union's recently signed agreement with Goodyear Tire and Rubber.

The union shop provision is modeled after the clause incorporated in the B. F. Goodrich agreement signed two weeks ago. Firestone thus becomes the second major rubber producer to fall in line with the union's proposal for a union shop throughout the industry. Firestone is the third major rubber company to grant a 12c hourly wage increase, Goodyear Tire and Rubber being the first.

The Goodrich settlement contained the first union shop agreement in the labor-management history of the "Big Four" rubber producers.

The wage agreement calls for general wage increases of from 11½c to 13½c an hour, depending on the location of the factory. Plants and amount of increases received are:

Akron, O. 11½c; Los Angeles, Calif. 11½c; Memphis, Tenn. 12½c; Des Moines, Ia. 12½c; New Castle, Ind. 12½c; Fall River, Mass. 13½c; Noblesville, Ind. and Pottstown, Pa. 11½c.

From the amount allocated to each plant, a portion of the raise is reserved to remedy wage inequalities within each plant.

The Firestone agreement brings to more than 64,000 the number of URWA members receiving pay increases in the union's 1950 drive.

The Seiberling contract covers more than 1700 workers in two plants in Barberton, O., and Carey, O. and grants wage increases of more than 12c an hour.

Under its terms, production workers represented by Local 18 in Barberton and Local 278, Carey, will receive wage boosts ranging upward from 10½c hourly. The workers in the Barberton plant also will receive 1½c hourly to correct intra-plant wage inqualities.

Employes in Carey were given an average 3½c an hour to correct area wage differentials.

Steel Union Awaits Reply

The CIO Steelworkers last week were still trying to get an answer from U. S. Steel to the union's wage proposals.

In New York, Irving S. Olds, chairman of the board of the steel corporation said the company has "taken no position" as yet on the question of wage increases for its 170,000 employes.

Conferences have also been held with other basic steel companies, including Bethlehem Steel, in New York; Republic Steel, in Cleveland; Jones and Laughlin, in Pittsburgh; Inland Steel, in Chicago; Youngstown Sheet & Tube, in Youngstown, and Crucible Steel, in Pittsburgh.

Astronomical!

HERE are some of the amazing net profit figures—all after taxes have been deducted:

	THIRD QUARTER		NINE MONTHS
	1949	1950	1949	1950
U. S. Steel	$ 39,171,144	$ 59,742,302	$133,223,409	$178,821,540
Bethlehem Steel	23,019,799	33,563,841	82,898,402	90,804,414
Republic Steel	9,870,703	18,682,542	35,347,875	56,384,618
Inland Steel	7,555,103	12,082,903	23,842,637	32,085,262
Wheeling	2,139,664	5,832,322	8,278,233	13,668,467
Sharon	120,519	2,706,647	3,543,311	7,299,884
Allegheny Ludlum	(183,341)*	2,873,998
Midland	2,044,893	2,122,100	3,432,295	4,607,322
Shell Oil	17,058,241	23,221,333	54,599,772	62,700,268
Socony-Vacuum			66,000,000	83,000,000
Gulf			72,295,000	83,200,000
Phillips Oil	10,731,537	13,845,664	32,684,666	35,885,522
Plymouth	1,742,288	2,482,779	4,205,167	6,096,387
Westinghouse	20,554,447	21,872,493	48,964,408	49,079,200
Sylvania	356,530	2,869,627	1,911,597	5,129,080
Minneapolis-Honeywell		1,418,827	4,967,430	9,885,954
Jack & Heintz	(238,634)*	346,409	(1,651,634)*	1,000,721
Olympic Radio	35,078	416,785	198,037	895,920
Stewart-Warner	499,720	1,279,715	1,296,284	3,030,694
Union Carbide	33,397,854	38,600,881	66,429,392	99,410,000
Victor	885,686	949,478	1,982,552	3,078,617
American Cyanamid			9,813,210	25,996,717
Texas Gulf Sulphur	5,672,092	6,387,378
Consolidated	382,873	882,894	1,858,900	2,341,236
Interchemical	571,614	1,466,116	1,307,069	3,394,323
National Gypsum			4,081,146	7,351,631
Atlas Powder	387,412	883,248	1,179,330	2,034,820
Rohm & Haas	1,204,000	1,838,000	3,344,000	5,497,000
Sharp & Dohme	1,450,137	1,484,247
Revere Copper			2,970,818	8,579,293
Climax Molybdenum			809,728	2,986,504
Bridgeport Brass	68,388	1,171,596	(1,562,616)*	2,882,177
Wrigley Co.	2,618,334	3,491,313	9,480,989	10,198,062
Glenmore Distillers			1,352,885	2,574,326
Corn Products			10,407,383	12,168,796
Air Reduction	1,559,839	2,630,850	4,901,597	6,477,133
Pa. Salt Co.	803,688	1,071,057	2,108,258	3,146,601
Gair (Paper)	882,198	1,586,394	2,980,922	4,004,847
United Airlines	2,886,328	4,234,296	2,710,574	4,174,926
Bigelow-Sanford	61,499	1,936,278	1,390,674	3,782,850
Sutherland Paper	437,488	759,643	1,293,335	2,040,339
Long-Bell Lumber	1,254,055	3,284,385	5,401,780	7,753,110
Trailmobile	211,030	1,063,861	(236,420)*	2,645,327
GM	198,735,386	217,377,767	502,414,029	702,655,156
Standard Oil (Calif.)	29,617,733	40,659,595	105,406,097	107,067,058
Standard Brands	2,348,737	3,695,773	6,100,505	8,494,680
American Radiator	3,949,000	7,099,000	10,050,000	17,703,000
CIT Financial Corp.	6,820,307	8,408,635	18,577,157	25,554,700
Pullman	1,055,619	2,712,201	4,973,886	6,734,147
Smith Carpet			671,919	4,066,429
National Distillers			15,831,817	16,124,978
Lowenstein (textiles)	832,219	2,868,587	2,907,630	6,571,242
Colgate	3,612,042	5,261,131	8,910,506	10,880,017
Budd Co.			11,325,395	16,923,753
Belle & Howell	74,207	501,643	91,497	1,092,955

(*Deficit)

Food Prices To Jump High In 1951

THE PEOPLE of the United States will eat more next year and pay more for it, according to Dept. of Agriculture experts last week.

In its Outlook for the National Food Situation, the department says that consumption per person is likely to be higher than in any of the last three years. Supplies will be good, but not likely to keep up with the high demand. As a result, prices will rise before the middle of the year, possibly breaking the 1948 record.

Meat will be plentiful because there was a near-record crop of feed supplies this year. There will be more dairy products.

People are expected to eat more of the total, unless the world political situation takes a sudden turn for the worse, requiring a much larger army than is planned.

Food for the armed forces will not amount to more than 3 or 4% for several reasons: More people are working now and many people are working longer hours and making more money. Shortages of durable goods, as well as credit controls, will cut buying of those products leaving more money for food.

Prices will rise most late next winter and spring, the outlook predicts. Meats, foods, fats and oils (possibly excepting butter) and rice are expected to go high enough to be eligible for price controls under the Defense Production Act. (LPA)

Packing Union Denies CP Organizer On Staff

The Packinghouse Workers have denied that Carl Sklar, arrested in Chicago as a Communist organizer, was ever on the union payroll.

The denial was in reply to an Associated Press story of a round-up of suspected subversives which said Sklar was an organizer for the union.

"Care to hear some late profits reports, J. B.?"

3d Quarter Profits 51% Over 1949's

CORPORATIONS in general and large ones in particular piled up record-smashing profits during the third quarter of 1950.

Net profits of 486 corporations in all fields of business totaled $1,711,279,763, compared to $1,129,795,589 last year during the corresponding quarter, a gain of 51%, according to a wire service survey.

The Korean war, which has been blamed for almost everything from high prices to the loss by the Phillies of the World Series, was not the main factor in the bulging profit picture.

In the second quarter this year, before the war, profits were still 43% above the corresponding 1949 period. The third quarter gain of 51% was in spite of an increase in the corporation income tax from 38 to 42%.

HEADING THE parade of profit-gainers came 18 nonferrous metal companies to show a gain of 286% over last year's third quarter profits, the Associated Press found.

Close behind came 24 textile companies, 238% ahead of last year's profits, and 12 coal companies showing gains of 117%.

Republic Steel fell slightly under the 100% mark in increased consolidated net income for the quarter, reporting $18,682,542 this year as against $9,870,703 in 1949.

Oil companies, 24 of them, lead in amount with total third quarter incomes totaling $361,628,282, a gain of 63% over the same period last year when profits were $221,413,249.

Ten automobile and truck companies—paced by the record profits of General Motors—made $234,114,927, against $210,073,133 in the 1949 third quarter. The 11% gain here is comparatively small, largely because 1949 earnings were also record breaking.

Total earnings for 30 steel companies amounted to $172,631,168 compared to $100,513,645 in the July-September period of 1949—a gain of 72%.

Other big gainers in the percentage column were air transport and aircraft, chemicals, pulp and paper products, radio, television and electrical products, machinery and tools, farm implements and auto parts.

MEANWHILE A lot of those hardy, pioneering, risk-taking stockholders of U. S. Steel were expected to be putting out the welcome sign for yacht salesmen.

This action will likely follow the corporation's announcement that dividend payments for the third quarter this year had reached an all-time high.

The company declared a special dividend of 75c, in addition to the regular quarterly dividend of the same amount on 26,109,756 shares of common stock.

Total payments to the stockholders will amount to $39,164,634 and represent the largest quarterly cash disbursement ever made on the stock.

BOTH DIVIDENDS will be distributed on Dec. 9 (just in time for Christmas) to shareholders of record on Nov. 10. The windfall will bring the year's dividend payment on the stock to $3.45 a share.

The corporation also reported net income of $178,821,540, equal to $6.12 a common share for the first nine months of the current year. These earnings, which were the highest for a nine month period since way back in 1917, compare with $133,223,409, or $4.38 a share in the corresponding period of 1949.

Net profits for the third quarter period amounted to $59,742,302 or $2.04 a share compared to $39,171,144 or $1.26 a share in the third quarter of 1949.

U. S. Steel directors also voted the regular quarterly dividend of $1.75 a share on the preferred stock, payable on Nov. 20 to stockholders of record on Nov. 6.

ADDRESSING reporters regarding the situation, Irving S. Olds, chairman of the nation's largest steel producer, quickly got on a less enthusiastic level concerning wage increases.

"If the steel industry is forced to grant any substantial increases in wages to its employes," he declared, "an increase in steel prices is inevitable."

He said pay increases granted to workers in other basic industries might make it necessary for steel producers to give higher wages to their employes, even though such increases were "basically unsound."

He voiced concern over the ultimate effects of successive rises in prices and wages and made it clear that he did not believe adoption of cost-of-living escalator clauses performed any useful function in combatting inflation.

He added, however, that the industry had to be guided by practical as well as theoretical considerations.

Olds admitted that failure to follow the lead set by other large employers in raising wages might lead to strikes or a mass withdrawal of steel workers from the industry.

ASKED WHETHER U. S. Steel would agree to put a wage increase into effect before Jan. 1, 1951, when the contract with the CIO Steelworkers expires, Olds said he did not see why the contract should be altered before the end of the year unless "some suitable quid pro quo" was offered by the union.

However, he indicated that a final determination on this point would be left to company negotiators.

Another steelmaker, Eugene Grace, chairman of the board of Bethlehem Steel Corp., agreed with Olds on the subject of wage boosts.

"I know of no justification of economic character for any increase in wages," he declared in Pittsburgh after announcing a $2 dividend, largest since 1937. He insisted the cost of living now is actually lower than it was when steel workers got their last wage raise in mid-1948.

"I suppose the steel industry cannot ignore what's taking place in practically all other industries," Grace continued. "If there is another cycle of inflation because of increases in wages and prices, no one can say this time that the steel industry led the show."

Grace was more charitable toward the corporation's stockholders. "We thought it appropriate and right to give stockholders some more revenue at this time," he said. He added the firm wanted to help the stockholders before there is a possible tax rise.

Bethlehem Steel's profits for the third quarter of this year were $33,563,841, compared with $23,019,799 in the corresponding period of last year. The profits for the first nine months of 1950 were a record $90,804,414, compared with $82,898,402 in the similar period in 1949.

Business Is Really Good!

Corporate Profits Now Running at Annual Rate Of $40 Billion, Which Increases Need For Excess Profits Tax

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THIS, FRANKLY, is going to be an effort to get readers a bit steamed up over some statistics.

The figures which are used in this column may be dull—as figures often are—but they're extremely important.

They show why your dollars have been shrinking in purchasing power—why it's becoming increasingly difficult for many persons to make ends meet financially.

And they show a need for decisive action on the part of Congress after it returns from its election recess.

TO GET the picture complete it's necessary to go back a number of years, so let's start with the 1936-1939 period.

Annual corporate profits for those years averaged $5.4 billion before payment of taxes and $4 billion after taxes were paid.

During the war years—1942 through 1945—profits averaged $22.4 billion before taxes and $10 billion after taxes.

They kept on increasing through 1946 and 1947 and reached a peak in 1948 of $33.9 billion before taxes and $20.9 billion after taxes were paid.

There was a "recession" last year and profits dropped to $27.6 billion and $17 billion.

But things began humming again this year. Profits during the first quarter were at a rate of $29.2 billion before taxes and $17.8 billion after taxes.

There was a big jump during the second quarter—to an estimated rate of $37.4 billion and $22.2 billion.

And at the present time they're running at an estimated rate of $40 billion before taxes and $23.2 billion after taxes.

FORTY BILLION bucks is a lot of dough—and make no mistake about it. The average person simply can't get an accurate mental picture of so much money.

But the average person already has an accurate mental picture of what accompanied this big increase in profits.

The picture developed over a period of months—as the price of milk went up, butter became more costly, clothing became more expensive.

Well, the cost of living is still going up—after a slight recess—and there's nothing to indicate an early end to the trend.

And, unfortunately, the average consumer is paying twice for the greed which sent prices and profits up.

The first payment is made in the normal consumer channels. The second is being made through the tax collector.

The price of some strategic war material has literally skyrocketed!

LET IT BE stated here, as has been done before, that the CIO is not conducting a campaign against profits.

Its campaign is against profiteering and the inflation which Big Business is causing.

It has always stood for business making a fair profit. It has always been against excessive profit-taking.

It believes, strongly, that what has been happening lately in the prices-profits fields is extremely bad for the country and that corporate interests should be sharply criticized for cashing in on a national emergency.

And it believes that trade unions now have no alternative to a drive for higher wages.

BIG BUSINESS, once it takes the bit in its teeth, runs the same old course that it has followed for years.

It would be much better for business and the country as a whole in the long run if prices were reduced and the necessity for another round of wage hikes was removed.

But immediate price reductions are not in the cards. There's a growing tendency to charge all the traffic will bear.

This is bad—very bad—but consumer groups can't do much about it directly.

They can do something indirectly, however, and they shouldn't hesitate about doing it.

They can—and should—put real pressure on Congress to enact an excess profits tax just as soon as possible after it goes back into session.

REAL RENT CURBS NEEDED

It's going to be tough—mighty tough—for a large portion of the nation's tenants unless Congress passes an effective rent control law during the upcoming "lame duck" session.

The situation would have been bad enough had there been no war in Korea and no preparedness program. But with things as they are, rent control now comes under the heading of emergency legislation.

The present control law is full of jokers. Two of them are extremely important.

1. A community which has failed to vote approval of rent control by Dec. 31 automatically goes back to a "free market."

2. A community can vote to end control but cannot vote later to reimpose controls if it wants to.

This means that unless Congress acts, a large part of the country will be in for a stiff round of rent hikes the first of the year.

Recently imposed credit restrictions and limitations on the use of building materials will make it impossible for the nation to improve its housing situation in the near future.

Certain sections will be extremely hard hit when our rearmament program hits full stride.

And the really sad thing is that the people who would be hardest hit by rent increases would be those least able to afford them.

Congress should face up squarely to this fact. It should tell the real estate lobby to go soak its head—and it should enact a rent control law with teeth in it. ★ ★ ★

'LIBERATION' IS A PHONY

The big secret is now out! Those horrible "imperialists" who are intent on ruining the world have seized control of mysterious Tibet and are posing a threat to the peace of the Orient. This, naturally, is the most shocking news.

"Imperialism," of course, must be stamped out wherever it raises its ugly head—so the Chinese Reds have announced they intend to "liberate" the downtrodden of Tibet.

The Commie type of "liberation" cannot be accomplished without sending in an army—so it's likely that there will be a bit of shooting and killing before the Red mission is complete.

What a phony!

Tibet is about as menacing as a week-old kitten. Its people seem to have one overwhelming desire—to be left alone so they can live as they please.

The "imperialism" charge obviously must be aimed by the Reds at India, whose leaders have fought long and hard against outside domination and for democratic freedom.

The Tibetan affair really puts some of India's leaders on the spot because they've been trying to sell the world the idea that the Chinese Reds aren't like the Russian Reds. They're agrarian reformers, not power-mad grabbers of territory, so some of the Indians have said.

The fact that Red control of Tibet would put the Commies right on India's door-step must not be very comforting to the Indian people.

And the fact that the Reds have once again demonstrated their contempt for a nation's rights isn't comforting to those who are seeking to prevent Communist aggression.

Governors Differ Over Voters' Inertia

REP. Javits (Rep.-Lib. N.Y.), who is pushing for a congressional investigation of the reluctance of Americans to vote, recently asked the 48 Governors what they thought might be done to get more people to the polls, and what their states were doing about it.

He got a wide variety of answers, some of them suggesting exactly opposite solutions to the difficulty.

Gov. Dewey (R.) of New York, for instance, said it would seem "unfortunate" to him "if people who do not have enough interest to vote should be induced, or coerced into doing so." On the other hand, Gov. Folsom (D.) of Alabama, thinks one way to get more people to the polls "would be to penalize those who fail to vote."

Gov. Langlie (R.) of Washington believes permanent registration would be a big help. But Gov. Carvel (D.) of Delaware thinks it gives the party in control of the election machinery an opportunity to pad the registration rolls, and instead suggests registration every four years to get rid of the "phantoms" and "floaters."

However, both Gov. Youngdahl (R.) of Minnesota and Gov. Lee (R.) of Utah think education of the voter is the way out.

Gov. Mickelson (R.) of South Dakota thinks later closing hours would get more people to the polls. Legal Secy. Lance of Missouri proposed absentee ballots for voters who are ill on election day. Gov. McKay (R.) of Oregon suggested deputized registration, along with decentralized registration facilities and "reasonable" eligibility requirements.

IN WASHINGTON, the state has staged an extremely active drive to get out the vote. It advertised through billboards, window posters, radio spot announcements, movie trailers and newspapers, and printed attractive pamphlets. But in West Virginia, Atty.-Gen. Marland, who replied on behalf of Gov. Patterson (D.), stated it would be "impractical" for the state to run such a campaign.

Many Southern governors claim low voting figures were deceptive because of the one-party system in vogue. Gov. Adams (R.) of New Hampshire, surprisingly enough, says the same thing. The Southerners indicate they feel the primary vote, not the count in the final election, is a better criterion of voter participation.

Many governors expressed considerable concern over the failure of their citizens to exercise their right of franchise. Gov. Pittman (D.) of Nevada described the low percentage of votes cast as "appalling," but his state has one of the best records in the country.

GET-OUT-the-vote campaigns, a large number of governors reported, are carried on by organized labor, chambers of commerce, the League of Women Voters, civic and political bodies and the press. In Illinois the American Vote Council have been formed by civic leaders to get out the vote.

In Wisconsin the Taxpayers Alliance publishes printed material in cooperation with the Univ. of Wisconsin and issues frequent press statements on the importance of voting. In Texas a statewide Citizens' Committee has been formed.

Javits reported that the governors expressed "considerable support" of his proposal for a congressional investigation. He said Rep. Sabath (D. Ill.), chairman of the House Rules Committee, has promised an early hearing for his resolution authorizing such a probe.

Pacts In Textile Net $57.5 Million

More than 235,000 members of the CIO Textile Workers have obtained recent wage gains amounting to $57½ million a year. Indications are the figure will rise to $80 million when all reports are in.

Negotiations in the Northern cotton-rayon industry have added $20 million a year to the earnings of 72,000 workers. In the South the wages of 40,000 workers will be upped about $7½ million, with $9 million in prospect for 50,000 more.

Other annual gains: 56,000 woolen and worsted workers, $13 million; 30,000 synthetic yarn workers, $7 million; 17,000 dyeing, finishing and printing workers, $4 million, and 21,000 rug and carpet workers, $4½ million.

'Spanish Prisoner' Con Game All Franco's

There are between 50,000 and 60,000 political prisoners in Spain, most of whom work on the construction of monuments to "fallen heroes of the insurrection against the lawful, democratic government," according to the Int. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

It further charged that the Franco government has another 200,000 Spaniards on "conditional liberty." They must report regularly to the police and may be thrown back into prison by any official who feels their freedom is "dangerous to the government," ICFTU stated.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher
Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII November 6, 1950 No. 45

Policemen Arrested The 'Wrong' Man

AMERICAN fighting men were taking a bad pushing around in the Pacific and the national cry was for more and more production.

The president and executive board of a local CIO union had pledged there would be no strikes for the duration—and they intended to keep their pledge.

The company took advantage of the situation and began pushing union members around.

One day a worker declared, "I've had all of this I can take," shut off his machine and started toward the exit.

Others followed him—and within a few hours the entire plant, which produced badly needed war material, was shut down.

The next day the president of the union was on his way to jail.

Here's what happened:

THE COMPANY had a long record of bad labor relations, starting with the time CIO organizers were badly beaten when they first attempted to establish a union.

After the union finally won recognition there was long company stalling before a contract was signed—and most of the union members felt the contract provisions were inferior.

There had been a strike or two at the plant before the war began, so walking out wasn't something new to the employes.

Despite this background, union officials were determined to do everything they could to provide maximum production.

They pleaded with company officials not to take advantage of the situation and to cooperate with them in an effort to obtain a good working relationship.

But the company began "cracking down." Its foremen got tough. It delayed settlement of grievances. It imposed a real speed-up.

And so one day there was an unauthorized strike.

UNION OFFICIALS held a strategy session as soon as the walkout occurred. They wanted to get the plant back in operation and at the same time remove the cause of the strike.

"Our people must be sore as hell or they wouldn't have walked out like they did," the president of the union said. "Because there's a war on we've got to get them back, so let's go see management and try to work something out."

At the session which followed, management representatives promised to mend their ways, settle existing grievances quickly and try to bring about generally improved working conditions.

"But you've got to get the plant reopened before we can straighten things out," a company official said.

"We'll try to get them back on the job tomorrow," the union president said.

THE NEXT MORNING two young policemen, who worked for an anti-CIO city administration, drove past the plant and saw a man making a speech to a large group.

"One of those damn, unpatriotic troublemakers," one cop said to the other. They halted their squad car, jumped out, grabbed the speech-maker—the union president—and hustled him off toward jail.

While they were en route, the secretary of the union called the CIO Council president, the president called the commissioner of police and the commissioner called the chief.

Shortly thereafter, the chief stood in a corridor at the police station and publicly apologized to the union president.

But nothing was done about the two cops who arrested a man for trying to get other men back to work in an important war plant.

"Anybody could make such a mistake," the police commissioner said.

A.L.S.

CURTAINS!

'Deadheading' Mail Cars Costs U. S. $30 Million A Year

By IRVING FAGAN & CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

LET THE RAIL unions make a few demands and the railroads shout "Featherbedding"! But if it's featherbedding they want to shout about, let them examine their own record since 1916.

Fact is, the railroads have been featherbedding for 34 years, at Uncle Sam's expense, to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars.

The featherbedding is a little deal known as the "round trip." It's legalized in a clause which you'll find tucked away in the 1916 Railway Mail Pay Act. Under this provision, your old Uncle pays the railroads to haul a car full of mail—from Chicago to Seattle, say—and then pays them to haul the same car back. Joker is that the car comes back empty, although the roads are woefully short of cars.

NEAT LITTLE gimmick, isn't it? And oh, how that money rolls in—into railroad coffers, that is. The Post Office Dept. figures that the round trip arrangement costs the government around $30 million a year. It's a lot of jack.

The racket is so lucrative that the railroads prefer to send a car back empty rather than use it for "commercial" traffic. They get more money that way. Testimony at hearings disclosed that railroads actually have issued instructions not to load other traffic in particular cars "in order to fully protect our return-mail pay," and to withhold other traffic if necessary to accomplish that end.

In the Senate Aug. 30 Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.) said, "There is also evidence that empty refrigerator cars were transported East from the West Coast as a basis for obtaining deadhead-mail revenue at a time when similar cars were needed in the West to bring the fruit crop east."

Humphrey was speaking in support of his amendment to S. 1596, a bill making changes in the Railway Mail Pay Act of 1916. His amendment would eliminate the "round trip pay" provision of the Act. That provision was originally in S. 1596, but was eliminated by the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

The railroads brought in 15 lawyers, representing a half-million dollars' worth of talent. The Post Office Dept. was represented by only two lawyers. The railroads managed to win a delay to permit "further study."

THE STUDY has been made. The Postmaster General, the General Accounting Office, and the General Services Administration all recommend elimination of the "round trip" provision.

The Postmaster, in the first such study in 20 years, points out that tremendous abuses are possible under the present arrangement, that it is impossible to administer, and that close to 20% of the claims filed by the railroads are incorrect.

THE ORIGINAL excuse, in 1916, for the round-trip provision, was that mail cars could not be used by the railroads for any other purpose. But the character of the mail has changed tremendously. Today almost 75% of the mail is parcel post which is transported in baggage cars, express cars, horse cars, milk cars, refrigerator cars, converted freight cars, and coaches. In short, in cars that can be used for other purposes.

Lindsay C. Warren, U. S. Comptroller General, calls the practice "economically unsound, administratively impractical, and plainly inequitable to the government." He describes the cost figures as "alarming."

Warren's study shows other interesting angles. His study said: "Cars carrying full pay loads out do not return promptly, but are often directed to other use for the carrier's convenience, and substitute cars are returned, making it possible for the railroads to realize a greater income. Many substitute cars are returned in freight trains and the trip is paid for at passenger rates."

The Secretary of Commerce, in a special report to the President Dec. 1, 1949, recommended revision of rail mail rates "to place the Post Office Dept. on a business-like basis accorded other shippers by rail."

The Postmaster General filed a "comprehensive plan" for revision with the Interstate Commerce Commission July 2, 1948. But the ICC didn't issue any regulations to carry out the revisions, and on March 30, 1959, ordered hearings instead.

'Surface Bargaining' By Boss Ruled Out

An employer cannot merely go through the motions of bargaining while deep in his heart he has no intention of ever coming to an agreement with a union.

That in effect is the ruling of the NLRB against the Gay Paree Undergarment Co., Los Angeles, Calif., on charges brought by the AFL Ladies' Garment Workers.

The board upheld the contention of Trial Examiner C. W. Whittemore who reported that while the company met with the union and discussed proposals, it was all "surface bargaining."

Utility Union Wins 15c Hike In Two Cities

THIRTY THOUSAND members of the CIO Utility Workers, employed by the Consolidated Edison System in New York City and Westchester County, N. Y., will receive wage increases averaging 15c an hour as the result of a recently negotiated contract.

Patrick McGrath, chairman of the union's New York Joint Council, said the increases will cost the company approximately $8,250,000 in 1951.

The union also signed a two year agreement with the Detroit Edison Co. last week for wage increases and other benefits totaling approximately 15c an hour for 5000 UWUA workers.

The Consolidated Edison increases are split into two sections. On Jan. 1, 1951, pay will be raised 10c an hour and on July 1, 1951, rates will go up another 5c hourly.

FOR SOME employes, the settlement means a raise in excess of the 15c an hour figure. Top-rated workers, now earning $2.64 an hour, will be raised to $2.90.

Four locals of the union are affected by the settlement. They are 1-2, 3, 4 and 7. They bargain for workers in the following Consolidated Edison System units: Westchester Light Co., Consolidated Edison Telegraph & Electrical Subway Co., Yonkers Electric Light & Power Co., and Consolidated Edison companies in all New York City boroughs except Richmond.

THE DETROIT EDISON 15c package provides for a wage increase of 3% with a minimum of 5c an hour, effective Sept. 4, 1950.

An improvement in the company paid pension plan amounting to 3.5c an hour was included in the package. Some shift premiums were increased up to 4c an hour.

An improved group hospitalization and surgical insurance plan calls for full hospitalization coverage and an average increase of 25% in surgical benefits.

Chicago Left Locals Unite

CHICAGO AREA locals of eight unions expelled from the CIO because of their Communist domination have banded together to form what they call the "Labor Unity Council."

The party-line United Electrical Workers provides the bulk of the council's asserted membership of 70,000—which actually is probably closer to 40,000.

The UE includes the old Farm Equipment Workers. Other unions represented in the left wing mourning circle are Fur & Leather Workers; Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers; Longshoremen; Food and Tobacco Workers; Office & Professional Workers, and Public Workers. The moribund FTA and UOPWA recently merged with the Distributive Workers Union, a New York local, in the wan hope of continuing to exist.

Grant W. Oakes, former president of the Farm Equipment Workers and now secretary-treasurer of the UE Chicago district council, is chairman of the new council, with Ray Dennis of Mine, Mill, as temporary secretary.

Fulton Lewis, Jr., Gets 'Brickbat' Award For Ignoring PAC Facts

THE CIO News hereby presents its "brickbat of the week" award to Fulton Lewis Jr., radio commentator who recently became a newspaper columnist.

This uncoveted award is given in recognition of the inaccuracies contained in the Oct. 16 Lewis column which began:

"The master plan for the combined organized labor campaign against Senator Robert A. Taft's re-election in Ohio was hatched behind Federal prison bars in New York City by Communist Gus Hall.

"Gus Hall is chairman of the Communist Party in the state of Ohio. He was in the New York Federal Prison in September, 1949, for having sassed Judge Medina during the trial of the 11 Communist Party leaders for plotting to take over the United States Government by force and violence."

The editor in charge of awarding brickbats to biased and inaccurate writers and commentators commented as follows on this portion of the Lewis column:

"Fulton really laid an egg when he said Gus Hall hatched that plot. Imagine the gall of the guy! Giving credit for such a fine project to a gink like Gus Hall. Jack Kroll of PAC and Joe Keenan of FULTON LEWIS, JR.

AFL's LLPE won't like giving up the credit to a party hack."

What really cinched the award for Lewis was the following:

"The original PAC back in 1944 had a board of governors of 141 members. Investigation disclosed that 80% of these were affiliated with one or more of 245 Communist front organizations.

"Most of them are still on the PAC board. It's a super-valuable 'in' for the Commies, because in the all-important field of political action they still have a powerful front of respectability behind which to operate—the good name of labor.'"

Commented the "brickbat" editor:

"We seriously considered Mr. Lewis for our fiction award as a result of those two paragraphs.

"Back in 1944 the CIO-PAC board had no more than a dozen members—not the 141 Lewis mentions.

"Since they weren't there in the first place they couldn't still be around.

"The PAC board now has 14 members and all of them—yes, all of them—were active in the campaign which resulted in the CIO expelling 11 unions on charges of being Communist dominated.

"Lewis should keep up with the news. Really it would be an asset to him in his work—or would it? Back in 1948 the Commies and the CIO majority came to blows over the candidacy of Henry A. Wallace. The CP boys went for Henry. The CIO majority went the other direction—and from that day to this the Commies have loved PAC like they love Wall Street."

As a parting shot, the "brickbats" editor declared:

"The brickbat award we're giving Fulton Lewis rates much lower than our booby prize."

U. S. Mission Hits Philippine Government On Corruption And Failure To Aid People

PHILIPPINE leaders were sharply accused—in a report by a U. S. mission made public last week—of failure to pay attention to the needs of the common people.

The mission was headed by Daniel W. Bell, formerly Under Secretary of the Treasury and now president of a Washington bank. It spent two months in the country. Its report was made public in Washington after an hysterical outburst by a Philippine government publicist expressing resentment of charges it did not contain.

"Inefficiency and even corruption in the government service are widespread," the report said.

"Leaders in agriculture and in business have not been sufficiently aware of their responsibility to improve the position of the lower income group.

"The public lacks confidence in the capacity of the government to protect the interests of all the people. The situation is being exploited by the Communist-led Hukbalahap movement to incite lawlessness and disorder."

The mission reached the conclusion that the government of President Quirino is in such a critical state that only an all-embracing program of reform and self-help, plus technical and economic aid from the United States, can save the republic from total callapse.

It recommended that this country make available to the Philippines $250 million in loans and grants over a five-year period, on condition that U. S. technical missions be accepted to help carry out reforms in the government, the nation's economy and the techniques of management.

A formal offer of the combined loan and grants has been made by this country.

On the condition of the great mass of Philippine citizens, the official summary of the report says:

"The basic economic problem in the Philippines is inefficient production and very low incomes. While a substantial recovery was made in production after the liberation, the standard of living of most people is still below the prewar level.

"In the past 10 years, however, the population has increased by 25%. Although home production has been supplemented by large imports, the standard of living of most people is lower than before the war.

"In Manila, real wages of industrial workers are about the same or slightly higher than in 1941; but in the provinces, real wages in agriculture are lower than before the war. For many agricultural workers, wages are wholly inadequate, in some instances less than one peso (50c) a day . . .

"WHILE production in general has been restored to almost the pre-war level, little of fundamental importance was done to increase productive efficiency and to diversify the economy.

"In agriculture, the area under cultivation was brought to the prewar level, and the livestock population partly restored. But almost nothing was done to open new lands for the increased population, to improve the methods of cultivation, or to better the position of farm workers and tenants.

"In industry, production was restored very much in the prewar pattern. While some new enterprises have been started, particularly in the last year, there has been little real progress in opening new work opportunities and in strengthening the economy.

"The failure to expand production and to increase productive efficiency is particularly disappointing because investment was exceptionally high and foreign receipts were exceptionally large during most of the post-liberation period. Too much of the investment went into commerce and real estate instead of the development of agriculture and industry; investment undertaken by government corporations has unfortunately been ineffective . . .

"The inequalities in income in the Philippines, always large, have become even greater during the last few years. While the standard of living of the mass of the people has not reached the pre-war level, the profits of business men and the incomes of large landowners have risen very considerably. Wages and farm income remain lower than the economy can afford because of the unequal bargaining power of workers and tenants on the one hand, and employers and landowners on the other.

"Under such conditions any policy that keeps prices high has the effect of transferring real income from the poor to the rich. This is what has happened in the Philippines, where prices on the average are three and a half times as high as pre-war."

GEORGE L-P WEAVER

CIO Protests UN Proposal To Aid Franco

The CIO International Affairs Committee has lodged a protest against proposed changes easing the United Nations agreement on diplomatic representation to the Spanish government.

It was sent in a telegram to Ambassador Warren Austin, head of the U. S. delegation to the UN, by Jacob Potofsky, chairman of the committee and president of the Clothing Workers. It read:

"On behalf of six million CIO members, I strongly and emphatically urge that the U. S. delegation to the United Nations refrain from supporting any action to change the 1946 UN resolution concerning relations with Franco Spain.

"CIO members and other anti-dictatorship groups regard Franco regime as constant threat to democratic ideals and forces throughout the world, and the CIO convention has repeatedly and unanimously expressed its opposition to help or gestures which would serve directly or indirectly to strengthen Franco's dictatorial hold over the Spanish people.

"SCUTTLING of the UN agreement on diplomatic representation at Madrid would be considered not as a technical matter, but as an unnecessary and uncalled for appeasement of the Franco regime, which was imposed on the Spanish people with the help of outside forces.

"Such a move by the UN would cause serious damage to the democratic prestige and ideals of the UN and of the U. S. government under most inopportune circumstances. In view of fact that disadvantages to democracy far outweigh any conceivable value of helping Franco's totalitarian dictatorship, the CIO strongly urges you to rally opposition and cast your vote against changes in the existing agreement on diplomatic representation at Madrid."

The UN 1946 resolution condemned the Franco regime as fascist, recommended that all UN members withdraw their ambassadors and ministers plenipotentiary from Madrid. It also barred Spain from membership so long as the Franco regime endured. The resolution now before the UN General Assembly would rescind the 1946 resolution.

Weaver Gets NSRB Post

GEORGE L-P WEAVER, director of the CIO National Committee to Abolish Discrimination, has been appointed a special assistant to Chairman W. Stuart Symington, of the National Security Resources Board.

His work will be concerned with the fullest utilization of manpower.

Weaver is a member of the CIO Transport Service Workers, which he joined in 1939 while a redcap at the Northwestern Station in Chicago.

He was appointed to the international staff in 1942 and in addition to his work as head of the anti-bias committee, also served with the CIO War Relief Committee during its existence. He attended Columbia University and Howard University Law School.

LABOR UNITY: Members of the CIO Newspaper Guild and of the AFL Typographical Union continue to work together—as they do on day-by-day job throughout the U. S.—to put out the Daily Reporter in Pittsburgh where a strike of the AFL Mailers has closed down the city's three newspapers. Left to right, Members Maxwell, Watkins and Shaffer of the Typographical Union; Editor Harold Dietrich and Makeup Editor Charles Cross, both of the Guild. The new daily has had a running fight to get enough paper on which to print.

CHOW TIME: The CIO Steelworkers supply daily luncheon for the business and editorial staffs of the Daily Reporter. The steel union is helping in many other ways, including lending a photographic darkroom. As the CIO News went to press, there was no sign of a settlement on the horizon. Mailers' walkout started Oct. 1 after publishers refused adequate wages.

Thanks To Unions, Pittsburgh Has Daily Paper

TEN UNIONS, representing 3000 locked-out employes of three Pittsburgh (Pa.) newspapers, have joined hands in a project that is making labor and journalistic history.

Despite efforts to harass and even halt their joint undertaking, the unions have been publishing a daily eight-page newspaper since Oct. 15. Known as the Pittsburgh Daily Reporter, it has an average daily circulation of 100,000 but its readers number many times that amount since it is at the moment Pittsburgh's only newspaper.

It is a temporary publication, offered to the public as a substitute for the Post-Gazette, Sun-Telegraph (Hearst), and Press (Scripps-Howard) which closed down Oct. 1 after the AFL Mailers walked out in support of wage demands. The three regular papers have a combined daily circulation of about 750,000.

COOPERATING in the non-profit enterprise are the Pittsburgh Newspaper Guild; Local 7, International Typographical Union; Local 16, Photo-Engravers; Local 5, Paper Handlers; Newspaper Drivers, Teamster Local 211; Pittsburgh Newspaper Alliance; Local 29, Building Service Employes; Local 56, Stereotypers; Mailers Union; Local 9, Newspaper Printing Pressmen.

Each of the unions bought stock and each is represented on a board of directors of a combined organization incorporated under state laws as the Newspaper Unions Publishing Company.

The board's elected officers are John Feigel, head of Typographical Local 7, as chairman; Leo Finegold, Guild executive board member, as secretary-treasurer.

Finegold also serves as business manager. Edward L. Belvill, Stereotypers president, is production manager; Harold Dietrich is editorial director; Ed Gregan, advertising head, and John Minihan, circulation manager. The latter three are Guildsmen.

The Guild is bargaining agent for nearly all editorial, commercial and other white-collar employes of the Sun-Telegraph and Post-Gazette. There is no Guild at the Press, which has so far managed to keep it out. The other nine unions are AFL affiliates representing mechanical and distribution workers from all three papers.

NO ONE working for the Daily Reporter receives a salary. Members of all unions volunteered to give their time and services working at their regular jobs until the emergency is ended. They are doing so by rotating crews from day to day.

The manner in which members of the various unions have closely cooperated, collectively and individually, will long stand as an outstanding example of what can be done through labor unity.

In makeshift offices in the Commonwealth Building Annex. Guildsmen handle the business and editorial end. They write news and copy, keep financial records and do other office work. To save them the expense of buying lunches, a sandwich counter was set up and the CIO Steelworkers are footing the bill. The USW also made available its photographic darkroom to the Reporter and has helped in many other ways.

Office copy goes to printers who are setting type in three different shops blocks away from the office. Meanwhile, the photo-engravers do their work in a shop they themselves acquired.

ENTHUSIASM greeted the first edition of the Daily Reporter which was issued four days after the unions decided to pool their resources and talents to supply Pittsburgh with a regular fare of news. Here is a view of the 150 union members and friends who crowded into the press room as the paper began to roll. Out-of-town papers were selling for 35c a copy.

The stereotypers cast plates and send them to the Pittsburgh Courier press room where paper handlers and pressmen complete the job. When the papers come off the press, the mailers bundle them and the drivers, using their own cars and trucks, get them out on the street.

THESE WORKERS normally are accustomed to fast methods of an assembly line set-up. But they are putting out the Reporter every day under the handicap of working in small commerical shops not geared to the speed necessary to the production of big city newspapers.

So close was the cooperation between the unions that the Reporter was able to get into production within four days after their memberships had given the green light. Hundreds of problems had to be solved. Scarce newsprint had to be found in other cities and brought to Pittsburgh. Printing plants, presses, equipment, desks, typewriters had to be obtained.

Newsprint was the biggest headache. It's as hard to get as butter and meat were during World War II and its price, ranging from $110 to $200 a ton, is many times more than a few years ago. As a result, not until 3:15 p.m. Saturday, Oct. 14, was it definitely known that the presses would roll at midnight for the first edition. In the week following, the Daily Reporter was a day-to-day proposition, depending on daily newsprint shipments.

FROM THE start the Reporter got an enthusiastic welcome from Pittsburghers who had been without newspapers for two weeks . The first edition was bought up in a few hours. One dealer sold 3000 copies in less than two hours. Another sold 1000 in a half hour, asked for 3000 more. An order for 2000 from U.S. Steel had to be turned down. All sales are on streets or by dealers—there are no home deliveries.

The Reporter emphasizes local news with national and international news from a Transradio Press leased wire. Ads are limited to a total of two of the eight pages and, because of demand, space is now being sold two days in advance.

Within a few days after its first appearance, the Reporter began running into new difficulties. It became obvious that the Pittsburgh Newspaper Publishers Association was pulling strings to check or halt the Reporter's progress.

This was indicated by the fact that newsprint became even harder to get and that a trucking company suddenly backed out on its agreement to haul a load of newsprint from another city.

While the Reporter had more than its share of troubles trying to find newsprint, tens of thousands of tons of it, owned by Pittsburgh publishers, were piling up in railroad yards and warehouses here. More than 120 carloads from Canada were counted at one time but the publishers wouldn't turn loose an ounce of it. The Reporter published a picture showing the stacks of newsprint rolls.

ALTHOUGH out-of-town newspapers were almost impossible to get during the first two weeks of the shutdown, there was an abundance of them on Sunday, Oct. 22. The city was flooded with papers from a dozen other cities, chiefly New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and Detroit.

Many of these were bootlegged from trucks manned by scab drivers for as high as 30c and 35c a copy. News and sports sections were missing from some but all had comics. Previously, the out-of-city newspapers had refused to send in more than the usual amounts, in compliance with a request by Pittsburgh publishers.

Meanwhile, the Mailers and publishers are still holding meetings but there are no prospects for an early settlement of the dispute. The basic difference is over money. Mailers want a $1 per day boost, the publishers have offered 75c.

Individually, the Mailers failed to show up for work on Oct. 1 in protest against the publishers' "take-it-or-leave-it" attitude.

This Might Have Been In The U.S.A.

SOME SECTIONS of Canadian business are urging their outlets to hoard now in order to make a killing when prices go higher, the Canadian Congress of Labour warned Minister of Trade and Commerce C. D. Howe in a letter made public last week.

The CCL specifically referred to the Canadian Reporter, national organ of the fashion industry. It cited an editorial advising retailers to buy heavily now so as to take advantage of "upward price pressure in every field."

"This, of course, is precisely the way to push prices even higher," the CCL wrote Howe. "No doubt these subsequent price increases will be accompanied by the well-worn explanation that they have been caused by wage increases, whereas as a matter of fact the goods were purchased and higher prices anticipated months before.

"The current position of members of our organization reflects that of the people of Canada generally. They are now carrying the burden of sharply increased prices and are being forced to seek wage increases which will no more than compensate them for already higher prices. At the same time at least one section of our economy is being urged to use this as a springboard for further price increases."

The letter was signed by Pres. A. R. Mosher and Secy.-Treas. Pat Conroy. Locals of CIO unions in Canada are affiliated with the CCL.

A POCKET-SIZED BOOK telling of the accomplishments of American labor—"Gift of Freedom"— has proved so popular among Austrian workers that a second printing of 100,000 copies of the German version has been necessary. Here Austrian Social Minister Karl Meisel and Clyde M. King, chief of the ECA Mission to Austria, are examining one of the first copies of the new edition. The booklet was prepared by members of ECA's labor liaison staff, which was recruited to do the important job of selling European trade unionists on the benefits of the Marshall Plan and counteracting Communist propaganda.

Maybe AMA Should Pay Income Tax

MAYBE the American Medical Association ought to pay income taxes. At least, that's what a couple of unidentified Congressmen are thinking, and so are some members of the Truman Administration.

One of the Congressmen has drafted a letter he may send to Secy. of the Treasury Snyder, putting the question bluntly.

"Do not the extensive propaganda and political activities of the AMA now and its prospectively still larger activities of this sort deprive the AMA of its legal status of a scientific tax-exempt organization?" the letter asks.

The Congressman requests Snyder for a direct answer or for a decision based upon proper inquiries. The letter points out that this year, for the first time in the 103 years of the AMA's existence, the society has levied membership dues, of $25, to finance its "National Campaign," for a new program of "aggressive, effective leadership for the medical profession on a national level . . . of service both to the profession and to the public."

HE CHARGED this "educational campaign" was out-and-out lobbying, and involved the aid of such "scientific bodies" as the Trailer Coach Manufacturers' Association, an Idaho credit group, a plywood distributors' group, and the Toastmasters Club of West Frankfort, Ill.

He pointed to direct political activities of the AMA, quoted AMA literature, and then continued that the AMA was formed in 1847 for scientific and educational purposes, and that its constitution gives as its purpose "to promote the science and art of medicine and the betterment of public health." He adds that "it does not seem to me that the campaign above described can possibly fall within the category of scientific and educational purposes."

He quoted also a 1943 Illinois ruling denying to the AMA exemption from the unemployment insurance tax on its claim that it was purely a scientific and educational institution. Adding that the Illinois Supreme Court upheld the ruling, the Congressman said that "the AMA was even then devoting a sufficiently large proportion of its activities and funds to propaganda to deprive the AMA of any right to be exempt from the tax."

CP Paper Staff Fails To Seek Pact

ANOTHER story, indicating that when bigger and better phonies are found running around loose, they will likely turn out to be Communists, comes all the way from California.

Almost every issue of the People's World, Communist newspaper published in San Francisco, runs a feature about what good trade unionists members of the Communist Party are. They work like little beavers to sign workers into unions, the stories say.

Now, however, it turns out that the little red beavers on the staff of the People's World have had their unit status taken away from them by the San Francisco-Oakland CIO Newspaper Guild because of their eight-year refusal to seek a contract with the management of PW.

Guild efforts to obtain a contract on the Commie paper date back to at least 1942 when Pat Frayne was elected executive secretary in an attempted cleanout of party liners by SFONG.

That effort failed and in subsequent years—as the issue came up time and again in SFONG meetings—employes of the PW took no action on requests that they draft contract proposals so the Guild could begin negotiations.

By a decisive vote, the quarterly Guild membership meeting upheld action of the SFONG Representative Assembly in ending PW unit status. The action makes PW employes Guild members at large, and ends their representation on the SFONG executive committee and representative assembly.

Ala. Cop Guilty Of Rights Violation In Death Of Negro

A FORMER Lafayette, Ala., police officer has been found guilty in Federal Court of violating the civil rights of a Negro by beating him to death with a truncheon while he was in custody.

The policeman, James R. Clark, who previously had been acquitted of a state murder charge, received a 10-month federal sentence on the civil rights count.

A former fellow-officer on the Lafayette police force, Doyle Mitchum, received a six-month sentence. Mitchum, who had pleaded guilty to the federal charge, also had been acquitted of murder in the death of Willie B. Carlisle.

Clark imediately appealed his sentence. The conviction marked the third successful government prosecution of civil rights cases in which Negroes were allegedly mistreated or denied protection by white policemen in the South.

In Georgia and Florida similar Federal Court convictions were returned after defendants had been cleared in the state courts.

Clark and Mitchum were accused of flailing Carlisle with a rubber hose after they had arrested him for letting air out of police car tires.

A Negro eyewitness gave testimony of the beating. A doctor testified Carlisle died of a brain concussion.

JOE GLAZER

Glazer is singing one of the tunes recorded in the CIO's new collection of eight labor songs which may be obtained from the Dept. of Education and Research for $2.50. Now education director for the Rubber Workers, Glazer wrote or adapted the words and tunes of old hymns and folk songs into CIO songs during the six years he was on the Textile Workers' education staff.

CIO Education Dept. Offers New Album Of 8 Labor Songs

A GROUP OF catchy labor songs that will enliven any union affair is included in the second record album recently put out by the CIO Dept. of Education and research.

Eight songs, sung by Joe Glazer and the Elm City Four, never before recorded, are on the two 12-inch unbreakable records in the album.

Glazer, thrumming his own accompaniment on his guitar, has been a favorite at CIO union meetings, conferences and social events for more than five years. He was a familiar figure at affairs of the Textile Workers Union particularly, as he was on the TWU education staff from 1944 until the past summer when he was appointed education director for the United Rubber Workers.

One of the favorite union songs recorded in this second CIO album is, "Ain't No Stranger Now." Maybe you know the chorus. The last two lines go:

Since I've been introduced to the CIO
I ain't no stranger now.

Here are some of the words of another favorite, "Humbling Back":

I went fishing with the foreman on Sunday
I thought I had the inside track
But he forgot about me on Monday
And I had to come a-humbling back.

They asked me to join up with the union
I said nothing doin' here Jack
The union man said brother you'll be sorry
Some day you'll come a-humblin' back.

The album containing these and six other favorite songs may be ordered from the National CIO Dept. of Education & Research, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C. Price is $2.50.

Hiring Rate High

Factory hirings eased off during September but still set a three-year high for the month. More workers quit and fewer were laid off. The hiring rate was down to 58 per 1000 workers as compared to 66 per 1000, due mostly to seasonal declines in food and tobacco.

"Pete just carries payrolls—I hafta carry companies' profits!"

Freedom Forum Exposed:

'Benson Could Have Asked CIO About Communism'

AN ANALYSIS of Freedom Forum, the "Operation Gaspipe" by which many industrialists are turning their employes into captive audiences for exposure to the propaganda of reactionary, anti-union trained seals, is available for distribution by the Public Relations Dept. of the CIO Wisconsin Industrial Union Council.

The pamphlet is the work of William Abbott, the council's public relations director, who was assisted in research by Editor Robert Treuer, of the Wisconsin CIO News.

Abbott describes Freedom Forum as "part of the great wave of reaction . . . that has hit the United States every so often in the past" and which has usually been beaten back by progressive American elements after taking a tremendous toll in security, lives and the strength of democratic institutions.

"FREEDOM FORUM," he writes, "is headed by Dr. George S. Benson of Harding College, Ark.

"He writes a syndicated column, which goes into thousands of newspapers, puts on radio programs, and makes movies distributed by MGM. He also sponsors Freedom Forum institutes that train men to give tricky talks before groups of workers on 'This Is Our Problem.'

"Benson was a missionary in China who suddenly came into big money. He then began a national campaign to 'save' Big Business from 'Communism.'

"Benson could have asked CIO about Communism. We know about it because we've faced Communists and beaten them. But Benson isn't really after the Commies; he's after unions and the government."

Among the backers of Freedom Forum, the pamphlet lists "some pretty unsavory elements." Among them are:

E. F. Hutton, Harding College trustee and New York millionaire who "has contributed to the Anti-Semitic, Franco-supporting American Action, Inc."

Don Belding, New York advertising man "who sold Hutton on the scheme of peddling 'anti-labor Americanism'."

The Veterans' Industrial Association, a strikebreaking outfit.

The American Guard, which has been described as having "everything the Brownshirts had except the brown shirts."

Southern Outlook, an anti-Jewish, anti-Negro publication.

General Comics, Inc., which publishes big business anti-labor comics.

The Foundation for Economic Education, a genteel, slick counterpart of the more flamboyant Committee for Constitutional Government.

The Small Business Economic Foundation, another purveyor of anti-labor comic books.

The Educational Reviewer, which "tries to spread the Freedom Forum type propaganda into schools."

"MIXED UP with these anti-Negro, anti-Jewish and anti-labor organizations," the pamphlet continues, "are some of our major corporations.

"General Motors and the du-Ponts have contributed great sums of money for this large-scale reactionary offensive. Here is a partial list of corporations interested in Freedom Forum:

"Republic Steel Corp., Standard Oil Cos. of California, Indiana and Ohio; Swift & Co.; Truscon Steel Co.; Bankers Trust Co.; Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp.; Carnation Co.; Milwaukee Road; Chrysler Corp., Dodge Division, and the U. S. National Bank."

What can be done?

"GET THE right answers. The Forum boys are pushovers for you to knock down with facts.

"Benson emphasizes two things: First, profits. He says they are too low. He uses this argument against the government's corporation tax program so that you will have to pay more taxes. Also, the boss can use this argument against you when you ask for fair wages.

"Second, taxes. Benson says the government is spending too much. He opposes welfare measures for you, but not for corporations."

The pamphlet then discusses profits, giving data to show they are higher than they have ever been and that the employes' share of gross income is too low. The federal budget is also dissected, to show that when Freedom Forum orators demand a tax cut they mean a slash in the modest proportion of the tax dollar earmarked for the benefit of the great mass of Americans.

Copies of "An Expose of Freedom Forum" can be obtained by writing the Wisconsin State Industrial Union Council, Public Relations Dept., 952 N. 12th st., Milwaukee 3, Wis.

Lobby Report Smeared But Not Read By GOP

THE THREE Republican members of the House Lobby Investigating Committee last week issued a statement blasting the preliminary report of the Democratic majority—without having read it.

The dissidents are Rep. Brown (O.), Halleck (Ind.) and O'Hara (Minn.).

"A hasty examination of this distorted report, which we have not had time to read thoroughly," they said, "indicates that the majority generally approve as in the public interest all lobbying which favors passage of measures in the program of socialization, and disapprove all activities designed to uphold private initiative and government."

The statement revealed clearly that the examination the three gave the majority report must have been hasty, indeed.

The fact that the majority reached few conclusions, but for the most part merely set forth facts unearthed at committee hearings, is completely brushed aside by the minority.

The Republicans, for instance, claim the majority "say all lobbying by business and conservative elements is bad; all lobbying by left-wingers, labor organizations and Fair Deal office holders is good," when as a matter of fact the majority said no such thing, nor did it say anything that could reasonably be interpreted to mean that.

The majority report was signed by Chairman Buchanan (Pa.), whom big business and anti-union forces last week were doing their best to defeat for re-election; Reps. Doyle (Cal.), Lanham (Ga.), and Albert (Okla.). It was made public on Oct. 24.

It was described in the Brown-Halleck-O'Hara statement as a "'socialist white paper' for the 1950 campaign."

The statement ranks high as a masterpiece of distortion, misstatement and innuendo. It carries its own description in the words it applies to the majority report—"lopsided as the leaning tower of Pisa, as intolerant as an article in Pravda, and as questionable as the testimony of Alger Hiss.

BUCHANAN later issued a statement expressing regret that the minority attacked the interim report, which he described as "fair and unbiased, as anyone can tell by reading it."

"The original draft of this report was submitted to all members of the committee as long ago as last August," he said. "It was discussed in executive session, and suggested changes were advanced by both minority and majority members. It is, therefore, difficult for me to understand what the minority members mean when they say they have not had time to read the report thoroughly. . . .

"The Lobbying Committee has sought the facts without favoring any group, business or labor, and will continue to do so. We did not attempt to probe ideas or ideologies. We are not trying to stop lobbying by any group, but we feel very strongly that lobbying should be carried on in the open."

G.N.L.

"Sure it's a grindstone! When a working man loses an election bet, that's the payoff!"

House Probers Find Ex-Rep. Dirksen Ran Errands for Real Estate Lobby

FORMER Rep. Everett Dirksen, Republican opponent of Sen. Scott Lucas (D.) in the latter's election fight for another term from Illinois, is revealed in a new publication of the House Lobby Investigation Committee as an errand boy for the real estate lobby.

Specifically, evidence in the lobby probers' possession shows that Morton Bodfish, lobbying genius for the U. S. Savings & Loan League, pulled the strings whenever he wanted a bill killed, promoted or amended in the House—and that Dirksen jumped.

Bodfish, who receives a salary of $20,000 a year as chairman of the league's legislative committee, plus a $10,000 pension credit, never appeared before the lobby committee during its active days. As soon as the investigation got under way, he entered a rest home.

THE COMMITTEE, which is headed by Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.), has made public evidence showing that Bodfish and Dirksen, operating through the Republicans (especially during the GOP-controlled 80th Congress), won a pipeline into the U. S. Treasury for the real estate lobby.

They did this, the evidence shows, by legislation giving the mortgage bankers and the savings and loan organizations control of virtually all housing financing—except low cost housing, and they have succeeded in blocking federal attempts to do much about that.

Dirksen served several terms in Congress before retiring in 1948 because of an eye condition that proved less serious than he feared at first. The lobby committee's compilation of the evidence indicates that the real estate lobby picked him as its candidate against Lucas.

If it did, this was nothing short of tit for tat. While still in Congress Dirksen tried hard to have Bodfish named executive director of the Hoover Commission. In a letter to Bodfish he commented, "What a job you would be able to do!"

Not to be outdone, another letter dated June 30, 1947, shows, was Bodfish.

"Marshall and Dirksen is still the only ticket that can win for those of us who are proud to be right of center," he enthused. The "Marshall" was not identified.

THE U. S. Savings & Loan League is composed of about 3700 separate savings and loan associations, cooperative banks and state savings and loan leagues. Since 1946 it has had an income of $3,926,280.

It has worked closely with the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, the Producers Council (building materials), National Association of Real Estate Boards, Home Builders Association and Retail Lumbermen's Association to influence legislation in Congress. A blueprint of its typical operations is provided in one of Bodfish's reports, which read:

"A concerted line of action by these groups was agreed upon with regard to legislative proposals in which there was a common interest.

"This teamwork was largely responsible for the modifications in the original Patman Bill, for the blocking of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft Bill on the House side, and for the crushing defeat of Reorganization Plan No. 1 (a Senate proposal, approved by President Truman, to tie together all U. S. housing agencies under one administrator).

"Representatives of practically all these groups appeared before House and Senate committees to oppose the permanent National Housing Agency. . . . There can be no doubt that their arguments against the permanent absorption of the Federal Home Loan Bank by a powerful over-all National Housing Agency had much to do with the rejection of the President's proposal."

THE SAVINGS and loan league had one usually successful technique when a bill was introduced which appeared to menace the stranglehold of its members on housing financing: It popped up with a carefully prepared counter-proposal which made the stranglehold a little tighter. Dirksen as often as not was the one who dropped the alternative into the legislative hopper during his service in the House.

He did other favors for the lobby, too. In 1948 he tried to have the Lobby Act amended to remove the savings and loan league from coverage. In another case he introduced a bill to compel the Dept. of Justice to call off its prosecution of the league on charges of violating the Anti-Trust Act. The measure failed, but a criminal charge was dropped. An injunction suit against many league members in the Chicago area, however, has been set for trial on Dec. 12.

Gabby Foreman Causes Re-Vote

Because of back-seat driving by a foreman who belonged to a car-riding pool, there will be another National Labor Relations Board representation election at Farm Tools, Inc., Mansfield, O.

The CIO Auto Workers lost an election last February, but contended to the NLRB that it was because a foreman spent his time riding back and forth from work as a member of a car pool berating the union. The board upheld the contention, ordered a new election, and also instructed another foreman to stop telling workers the plant would close if the union won.

Maybe Matador Should Take Boss By Horns

Bullfighters at the world's largest bullring, the Plaza de Mexico, Mexico City, are finding that the stubborn bull isn't the only thing they have to fight. Their employer canceled their contract, hired non-union bullfighters, and reopened the ring they had shut down for two weeks in a strike for higher pay.

Alfonso Gaona, manager of the 60,000-seat stadium, canceled contracts with the three striking unions saying he could not pay the "fantastic" salaries demanded by the matadors, members of three unions.

Semanticist Denham Coins A Nice New Word

ROBERT N. DENHAM, former general counsel of the tional Labor Relations Board, apparently seeing red after his resignation at President Truman's urgent request, has now decided that somewhere, somehow, there are some Communists in the NLRB.

Or to quote him exactly, "the impress of pinkishism" is to be found "among" a group of 700 NLRB employes.

He said this at a meeting of the American Veterans Committee Washington chapter last week. The AVC had invited him to take part in a debate about the Taft-Hartley Act.

Challenged to prove his charge, Denham said he couldn't and added that he had no intention of reflecting on the integrity of the five members of the board, with whom he had been feudin', fightin' and fussin' for months before he resigned.

"I can't put my finger on it," Denham said, amplifying his statement, "but it's there."

THE SUSPECTED 700 were all hired before the Taft-Hartley Law went into effect, he added, whereas another 700, all hired since then, were clear.

Whether this broadside had anything to do with the Taft-Hartley Law, which he had been invited to discuss, remained unclear. His audience was surprised, not only at the vagueness of the charge and the new word "pinkishism," but because apparently he had never made public reference to these suspicions before. Not, at any rate, in any testimony he had given on Capitol Hill.

Equally surprising to the audience, which included at least one labor lawyer, was his statement that the Taft-Hartley Law should be amended—to end the absolute power of the NLRB general counsel to decide which cases to prosecute.

This was one of the features of the law most severely attacked by labor, and one that Denham hotly defended all the time he was general counsel.

IN FACT, TESTIFYING before the Senate Labor Committee on Feb. 7, 1949, he said he "could not have accepted the office unless the statute was basically sound," and added that the absolute power of the general counsel's office was "the keystone" of what he described as "restoring confidence in the essential integrity of the board's procedures."

He told the astonished audience of veterans that he did not regard the proposed amendment as a basic change.

Winding up his speech, he said the administration had shown a "deplorable lack of guts" in failing to prosecute people who signed non-Communist affidavits under the T-H act after "technically resigning" as Communists.

Thar's Gold In Them Hills, But Not For Phone Workers

EVEN THE proximity of gold does not mean high wages in telephone industry.

Take the case of telephone workers in Kirkland Lake, Ont., a town of 20,000 in the heart of a huge gold mining area. There the Northern Telephone Co. pays telephone operators $75 a month, supervisors $5 more, and line foremen $1 an hour.

As soon as organizers for the CIO Communications Workers arrived, an "independent union" was formed, headed by the director for a large mining company, and Northern passed out wage boosts of $2.50 to $10 a month.

CWA reports that it has signed a majority of workers, has filed the cards with the Canadian Labour Relations Board in Ottawa, has produced receipts as required by law, showing that workers paid initiation fees, and that the next step is a representation election.

Local C-4, with negotiations with Northern Electric Co. of Ontario deadlocked, is awaiting the next step—compulsory arbitration. Such decisions are not binding, and a strike is permissible. The union has asked 15c an hour, the company offers 2c. The firm is Bell's manufacturing subsidiary in Canada.

"City Hospital? Send an ambulance right away!"

CIO News Staff Reminds You:

When You Vote, Remember We Can't In Washington

THE EDITORIAL staff of the CIO News has been belaboring you for weeks with good, sound advice:

Get out and vote on Election Day.

It's too bad the editors can't practice what they preach—those of us who live in the District of Columbia.

Uncle Sam still gets first crack at our paychecks, just like he does at yours. But we can't tell him how to spend it, through our representatives in Congress.

We haven't any.

We haven't even a vote.

We want the vote. It seems pretty silly to us to have the United States ballyhooing democracy all over the world, telling the people of other nations what a fine thing it is—and then denying it to us who live right in the shadow of the Capitol or Washington Monument, the White House or—say, the Internal Revenue Bureau's headquarters.

This doesn't apply to all the editors. Some live across the city line in Maryland or Virginia. They can vote. We who live inside the city limits can't.

HERE IN Washington we do not have any city cops or firemen. They're all employes of the federal government. If we want to get a dog tag or a license for an automobile, a permit to alter a house or to open a taproom, we get it from a federal employe.

We may not have the vote, but we have one thing: We have the most expensive city council in the world.

It costs $80,000 a day to run it. Of course we don't elect it. We haven't the vote. You do. You help pay for it, too—sucker! It's known as Congress, and it does wonderful and fearsome things. For instance—

On Aug. 14, 1950, United Nations' forces launched their first desperate counterattack against the Chinese Communists. The House had a tough day, too. It was considering a bill regulating the running at large of goats in Washington.

On Sept. 11, Congress was trying to figure out if it should control subversives by passing the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon-Wood bill (which it did later). The House, though, had to divide its attention. It had to take time out to pass a bill regulating the disposal of dead human bodies in the District of Columbia.

On Sept. 13, President Truman asked Congress for "early and favorable" action on a bill making Gen. George C. Marshall eligible to serve as secretary of defense. He got favorable action—eventually—from the Senate, but not early action. The Senate was too busy that day. It had to take final action on a bill to preserve the architectural flavor of Georgetown, part of the District, and so help us, it had to approve the spending of $50,000 on a high school stadium.

You might think we in Washington would be proud and happy to have Congress work as our city council. You're wrong. We think it does a lousy job.

REP. MCMILLAN (D. S. C.), chairman of the House District of Columbia Committee, tells why. On Sept. 30, as Congress was grinding toward its election recess (your election, not ours), he said he was "certainly happy" that the House had spent only three hours since Jan. 1 discussing and passing 26 bills that became District laws.

We're certainly not happy about it. That's an average of six minutes, 12⅔ seconds per law. We think the affairs of a city of 800,000 population merit a whale of a lot less of a brushoff.

We don't think much of Rep. McMillan in Washington. There's a Home Rule bill up, but he's pigeonholed it so deep it will take a lot of dynamite to get it out.

You are the dynamite.

This bill has been passed by the House. Discharge Petition No. 19, if it gets 22 more signatures in the House, will bring it to the floor for action in spite of anything he does to block it.

It's a start. It allows us to elect a local government, but no congressmen. We want it anyway.

YOU—WE HOPE—will exercise your right of voting for Representatives.

Now we, the editors of the CIO News, ask you to go to work on your representative for us and for other citizens of Washington. Tell your representative to sign the discharge petition as soon as he returns to Washington later this month. If there's any delay it will be too late.

We're pretty sure the bill will pass when it gets action in the House. And we think President Truman will sign it.

Then those of us who are residents of Washington will, like you, be in a position to exercise the rights of citizenship we're entitled to.

And we'll be eternally thankful to you.

The Editors of the CIO News

Puerto Rican Laborers Are Fleeced Of $2000

The Puerto Rican farm hands who came to this country this summer to work in the fields have had plenty of trouble. First, thousands of them in Michigan got stuck with low wages and bad living conditions. Now, in New Jersey, 100 of them got fleeced of $20 each by two flashily dressed men who guaranteed them jobs at an Illinois steel mill. The money was for transportation.

The strangers showed the farm hands a contract which guaranteed them exemption from military service if they went to the mill, which is non-existent. The workers had just finished harvesting the crop in the Glassboro, N. J., area.

GM Gravy Train Really Rolling

General Motors reported that it made more money in the first nine months of this year than in the entire year of 1949, when it set a record for corporate earnings.

The net for the first nine months of 1950 totaled $702,655,156, compared with $656,434,232 for all of last year.

The earnings amounted to $7.89 a share on the new common stock outstanding after the two for one split effective Oct. 2 and compared with $502,414,029 or $5.60 a share in the same period in 1949.

Paul R. Porter Is Named Assistant Head Of ECA

Paul R. Porter, head of the Marshall Plan mission to Greece and a member of the CIO Newspaper Guild, has been named assistant administrator of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

The post is one of the top in the ECA setup and will bring Porter directly under Administrator William C. Foster. He succeeds Richard H. Bissell, Jr., who recently became deputy administrator.

It was on Porter's recommendation that ECA aid to Greece was recently cut because a succession of Greek governments had not carried out pledges to clean up the economy so that the heavy burden on the great mass of the populace could be eased.

Forter, a graduate of the Univ. of Kansas, was editor of Kenosha Labor, published jointly by CIO and AFL unions in Kenosha, Wis., when he entered government work during World War II. He was chairman of the War Production Board's Shipbuilding Stabilization committee from 1942 to 1945 and then went to the Dept. of State.

He was named U. S. member of the European Coal Organization and later served as chief of the Mission for Economic Affairs in London. From 1947 until his ECA appointment he served as alternate, first to William L. Clayton and later to W. Averell Harriman, while they held the post of U. S. Representative to the Economic Commission for Europe.

Former Mayor Roger D. Lapham, of San Francisco, was sworn in last week as Porter's successor in Greece. He formerly was head of the ECA mission to China and during the war was an industry member of the War Labor Board.

PAUL R. PORTER
Foster's Right Arm

Bamford To Head TWUA In The South

James W. Bamford has been put in charge of the CIO Textile Workers' Southern Area. No replacement has been named to take over his old post as assistant woolen and worsted director.

Reviewer Doesn't Like 'Waiting-Room Willie'

HAVE YOU seen "The Sad Case of Waiting-Room Willie?" It's a "comic book"—at least that's what the American Medical Association calls it.

Anyway, it tries to be awfully funny by ridiculing the national health legislation advocated by President Truman to bring medical care to all Americans who need it. The measure has the strong support of the CIO and other labor groups.

The AMA helped stymie the health bill in the last Congress. But apparently it fears that the health program has a firm and lasting appeal to Americans, for millions of dollars taken from doctors by assessment are being spent to fight the bill.

You've probably seen some of those big ads that have been running in newspapers and magazines recently in the AMA's "educational campaign" to smear national health legislation as "socialized medicine."

THE AMA's Baltimore (Md.) City Medical Society published the "Waiting-Room Willie" comic book, and each physician in Maryland has been asked to order at least 200 copies at 3c apiece. The AMA itself is trying to help get the book circulated widely elsewhere as well.

An editorial in the AMA Journal notifies doctors that copies of the comic book may be purchased from the Baltimore Society at 3c each, or at a lower rate to "societies purchasing lots of a million or more."

It's likely you may see one in some doctor's or dentist's office. If you do, take a look at it. Labor people and other intelligent citizens who know the national health bill was devised to bring medical attention within the reach of everybody who needs it will find that the lies and distortions in this "comic book" are comic all right, but not the way the AMA meant.

"Waiting-Room Willie" is comical—but it is also downright insulting to the intelligence of the American citizen whom it hopes to fool with nonsense, designed, says the AMA Journal "to dramatize the unfavorable aspects of socialized medicine in a form that is readable, entertaining and nontechnical enough to reach all the voters."

The back page of the booklet has a suggested letter "for help if you're in a hurry," to be sent by voters to their senators or congressmen. It urges legislators to "vote against all such socialistic bills."

"It may look like an easy road and have some popular appeal at first," goes the suggested letter, "But I believe it will hurt us morally and destroy our self-respect to lean on the government for medical care, housing, education. etc."

H. R.

NLRB Continues 'Homey' Shop

A shop with a "homey" atmosphere can't do away with it simply because a union steps in.

That, in effect, was the ruling of the National Labor Relations Board handed down Oct. 27 ordering the Consolidated Frame Co., of Los Angeles, Calif., to reinstate six members of the CIO Textile Workers and to bargain with the union.

Before TWUA started organizing the shop, which makes picture frames and framed mirrors, the men had been allowed to make up lost time when they were late, to go home early, to do some of their personal work at the shop. The firm cut out all privileges and five hours weekly overtime which had become customary. The men struck and were fired. The NLRB ruling said the company's action was an unfair labor practice.

CIO Asks Bargaining Rights At Howard Univ.

CIO membership cards may soon become as usual for service trade personnel as textbooks for students at Howard Univ., Washington, D. C.

The CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee recently requested recognition from the university as bargaining agent for cafeteria workers, engineers, porters, maids and janitors employed at the school.

In a letter to the university's president, Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, GCEOC Secy.-Treas. Milton Murray revealed that 90% of the workers at Slowe and Carver Halls had signed cards in the CIO union.

He also notified Dr. Johnson that GCEOC had a near majority of non-teaching employes at the school enrolled and expected to request bargaining rights for them in the near future.

"The boss said I'd get ahead faster without the union, but I'll bet he was just pulling my leg!"

Compensation Rates Lowered, Benefits Up

A 6.3% cut in workmen's compensation and employers' liability insurance rates in Oklahoma on Dec. 1 will bring total reductions in the past four years to 15.9%.

Apparently the insurance companies must have cleaned up in the old days, because coupled with the reductions to the employers have come higher benefits for workers.

A series of investigations and negotiations with the companies by Gov. Roy A. Turner (D.) and State Insurance Commissioner Donald Dickey have raised workers' average indemnity benefits to $518.64, higher than any surrounding state.

The new rates, which will save employers $1 million a year, apply only to renewals and new policies after Dec. 1.

Peron's Labor Support Reported Crumbling

STRUCTURAL weaknesses are beginning to appear in the glittering but flimsy facade Dictator Peron has erected around his version of fascism in Argentina, according to an unsigned article in the current issue of Free Labour World, official organ of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

One of the first things Peron did when he seized power, the article recalls, was to move in on the trade unions. He bought off some leaders, exiled others; some died "mysteriously," others were jailed. Union property was seized by the state, and recalcitrant officials found themselves stripped of all power. Treasuries were looted.

One by one, the article continues, the free unions fell. The last to go was the General Confederation of Maritime and Allied Trades, which in August ended a three-month strke in acknowledged defeat because its capacity for resistance had been exhausted.

BUT NOW the uneasy peace that Argentine workers bought when they exchanged their freedom for higher real wages is beginning to crumble, and even the members of the government-controlled unions are growing increasingly restive. Unauthorized strikes are on the increase, the article says.

"This unrest," it continues, "is due partly to the inflation and resultant rising cost of living brought about by the Peron government's insanely nationalist and unrealistic economic policy.

"This inflation is bound to increase if the present policy is continued, with the result that the workers who have so far supported Peron because of the improvements in living standards they have enjoyed under his regime—at the cost of their freedom—will no longer do so.

"It is true that the loan of $125 million recently granted by the United States to Argentina may have retarded this development. From the point of view of the free labour movement and of democracy, this loan was an act of inexcusable shortsightedness—the sacrifice of principle and the long-term interests of world democracy to some imaginary short-term advantage and to the profit of those American business men on whose debts the Peron government was defaulting.

"WHETHER mistaken or not, however, the loan can have only a temporary effect in staving off for a time the inevitable consequences of Peron's economic policy.

"Peron himself describes this as his country's 'Third Position'—something which is neither capitalism nor Communism, but a compromise embodying the best features of both and omitting their defects.

"In fact, it closely resembles the economy of Hitler's Germany under the direction of Schacht, with the significant exception that Argentina does not possess the highly developed industrial resources that enabled Schacht to keep his system working for so long. Argentina's economic position is precarious, which means that the Peron regime is also precarious, and there are signs that Peron himself is not unaware of this fact."

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

Five thousand workers of the Campbell Soup Co., Camden, N. J., who once were members of a CIO local industrial union that CIO turned over to the FTA, voted almost unanimously to leave the discredited FTA and return to the CIO as Local Industrial Union 80. Congratulations to the local officers and committees and to Reg. Dir. George Craig for a fine job well done. This means the end of Prof. Henderson and his group and a further burden on the officers of DPO. Local 80 took over the old contract AND NEGOTIATED AN 11c AN HOUR WAGE INCREASE. Plans are being made to march on.

Impressive proof of the desire of insurance employes for representation by CIO's Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee was again seen last week when agents of the Home Life Insurance Co. in Pennsylvania and Delaware voted 301 to 9 for the IAWOC-CIO.

Every time an opportunity to choose is afforded the workers in this field, CIO is their overwhelming choice. This is the third election in a row in which CIO has been the victor. Reg. Dir. Joseph Walsh, Field Reps. Paul McDonald, Ben Stahl and Vincent Quinn, and a committee of the agents themselves deserve high commendation for organizing the large turnout of CIO votes. The IAWOC-CIO continues to grow and show its strength.

Reg. Dir. Craig reports that in a union shop election at the American Tobacco Co., Philadelphia, the workers voted in favor of the Amalgamated Food and Tobacco Workers Local 1711, CIO, by a vote of 450 for 159 against.

Asst. CIO State Dir. T. D. du Cuennois reports that in a representation election at the Norfolk Tallow Co., Norfolk, Va., the Oil Workers International Union, CIO, was victorious by a vote of OWIU 43, no union 28, challenged 10.

Reg. Dir. John Easton reports that in a union shop election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board for Chemical Workers Local 445, Huntington, W. Va., the vote was 22 for, 6 against, 2 challenged. Reps. Koletka of UGCCW-CIO and Joe Rice of CIO conducted the campaign.

Field Rep. Peter Flynn reports that in a union shop election at the Ford Instrument Co., Long Island City, N. Y., the workers voted in favor of Local 1726, Engineering, Technical and Clerical Federation, CIO, by the following vote: eligible 62, 60 for, 0 against.

William F. Donovan, director of District 28, United Steelworkers, reports that USA-CIO won a union shop election at the Cleveland Steel Barrel Co., by the following vote: for 152, against 8, not voting 18. Rep. Joseph Kanecki supervised the election for USA. Another union shop election at the Buckeye Forging Co., Cleveland, O., showed the following results: eligible 206, for 187, against 3. Rep. Francis Stark supervised the election for USA, assisted by local union officers.

CIO Field Rep. Harry Tucker reports that the Cannery Workers Local 3-6, Longshoremen and Warehousemen, Bellingham, Wash., voted 59 to 19 to disaffiliate, and all but six voted to affiliate with the CIO and apply for a local industrial union charter.

Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes reports that the CIO won a representation election at the American Creosote Works, Inc., Winnfield, La., by the following vote: eligible 86, CIO 55, no union 14, void 1.

Joseph W. King, president of Local 35, United Paperworkers, reports that in a representation election at the Garten Table Pad Co., Philadelphia, Pa., the workers voted unanimously in favor of the UPA-CIO.

Al Hartnett, assistant to the Chairman of IUE-CIO, reports that in a representation election at the Variable Condenser Co., Newark, N. J., the workers voted in favor of the IUE by 229 to 26 for no union.

CIO Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports several representation elections. The Auto Workers were victorious by 90% at the Reliance Mfg. Co., Los Angeles. UAW Intl. Rep. Don Garriga was in charge of the campaign. The Textile Workers won at the Charrion Mfg. Co., San Diego, Calif., by a majority, in a campaign which was conducted by Intl. Rep. W. H. Conn assisted by CIO Field Rep. Howard Rizer and T. Ramulgia, of the State CIO Educational Dept. The Clothing Workers won the right to represent the workers at Norton Brothers and Morse, Los Angeles.

150 Steel Union Locals Aid CARE

Members of the CIO Steelworkers have given widespread aid to CARE as the result of a reminder from Secy-Treas. David J. McDonald urging continued support to the CIO-CARE campaign to help needy union members abroad.

More than 150 locals sent gifts. Most of them purchased one or two $10 CARE food packages for immediate relief. But 15 sent in gifts of $25 to $50, and a couple, along with the Wisconsin CIO Council, gave $100 each. Still others pledged the purchase of one or more packages a month for varying periods.

The CIO Community Services Committee is among the organizers of CARE. Orders for food or textile packages for needy workers in Europe and Asia may be sent to the CIO Consultant at CARE, 20 Broad St., New York 5, N. Y.

Swedish Parliament Aids Stranded Seamen

Swedish seamen beached in foreigns ports will no longer be left stranded indefinitely under a new law recently passed by the Swedish Parliament.

It provides for the establishment of labor exchanges in foreign ports to serve as clearing houses for available or potential jobs. First exchanges are being set up in New York, San Francisco and Antwerp.

CIO Protest Blocks Rent Gouge At Pontiac

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

WHILE Los Angeles landlords and city councilmen were still turning the air blue over Housing Expediter Tighe Woods' refusal to sign their rent decontrol resolution, Woods last week turned around and did it again.

This time, he refused to approve a decontrol resolution passed by the City Council of Pontiac, Mich.

His reason: the tenants had obtained the required number of signatures on a petition putting the question onto the Nov. 7 ballot, and Congress had not intended to make it impossible for citizens to vote on this issue if they expressed the desire.

The action came after a complaint from the Pontiac CIO Council, which told Woods that the City Council had voted decontrol in an obvious effort to stop the referendum.

WHAT THE Pontiac landlords would do was unknown as the CIO News went to press—but the Los Angeles landlords, screaming as only profiteers can scream, had gone to court to seek a permanent injunction forcing Woods to sign the decontrol order. The City Council acted on June 28 but the order is ineffective unless approved by Woods.

The landlords claimed that Woods had no right to decide which decontrol resolution to sign and which not to sign. Woods (and the language of the law) disagreed. Hearing was set for Nov. 6. The landlord spokesman, Frank W. Babcock, owner of three apartment houses containing 140 rental units, flew to Washington to present his own case.

According to newspaper reports, Babcock claimed that he would be able to collect more than $3100 extra in rents per month, or an average of $22.14 per unit, if controls were lifted and furthermore, his apartment houses would be worth $25,000 more apiece on the market.

So he proposed also to sue Woods for damages on these visionary profits. (This is comparable to the case of the woman who didn't buy a dress for $49 and proudly told her husband that by not buying it she had saved him $49 which she figured she could now spend on something else.)

In Milwaukee, Mayor Zeidler asked Gov. Oscar Rennebohm to investigate new charges of rent gouging following decontrol. He cited instances of increases from $25 to $80 a month. Rennebohm already had refused to call a special session of the Wisconsin Legislature to consider state control, but indications were he might reconsider.

As of Nov. 2, exactly 261 communities with a 1940 population of 10 million had voted to ask continuation of federal controls beyond Dec. 31. Another 40 applications were pending.

These figures represented less than 10% of communities presently under federal control, but on the other hand the decisions covered one-sixth or more of all rental units now under control.

THE OFFICIAL figures did not include actions taken in the past week by three of the nation's larger cities—Philadelphia, St. Louis and Pittsburgh, with a combined 1950 population of 3,589,000. All three city councils voted continuation by sizable majorities.

On Nov. 7, the question of continuing controls past Dec. 31 will be voted upon in Massachusetts and Connecticut, since those legislatures have decided to treat the issue as a state-wide problem.

All but six cities in Rhode Island will likewise vote the proposition up or down, and so will numerous others in several states, including Walla Walla, Wash.; Akron, O.; Bloomfield Hills, Mich.; Deptford, Paulsboro, and Woodbury, N. J., and Iowa City and Fort Dodge, Ia.

Laundry Workers Get 5c Hike In Detroit

Approximately 1800 laundry workers received a 5c hourly cost-of-living increase as a result of negotiations between Local 391, CIO Amalgamated Colthing Workers, and the Detroit Laundry Institute and the Hand Laundry Association.

COMPLACENT smile of Mayor David Lawrence (left), of Pittsburgh, shows that he knows that when Councilman Patrick Fagan examines the label in his coat, it will turn out to be that of CIO Clothing Workers. Fagan's inspection of mayoral toga came on first anniversary of Clothing Workers' union label campaign.

CWA Is Set To Strike Western Electric Co.

THREE CIO Communications Workers divisions prepared last week for strike action Nov. 9 against the Western Electric Co. unless last-minute, satisfactory arrangements are negotiated with the company.

The strike would directly involve Division 6, covering 10,000 workers in Western Electric installation departments in 43 states and the District of Columbia; Division 18, representing 6000 distributing house employes working in 28 locations across the country, and Division 68, representing 700 manufacturing workers in Haverhill, Mass.

The walkout, authorized by the CWA international executive board after year-long negotiations over wages, would tie up the work of 300,000 other Bell Telephone System employes as the WE unionists plan to picket telephone exchanges in every sizeable community.

The items in dispute are wages and terms of contracts. The company has offered Division 6 an average wage hike of 11½c an hour, unequally distributed throughout the various wage levels. Division 18 was proferred 10c an hour, likewise improperly distributed, and Division 68 was offered 8c, plus an additional increase for bonus workers which would bring the average up to 10c.

The company is seeking an 18-month contract with no reopening provision in all three cases, which amounts to a virtual wage freeze.

IN ANNOUNCING the strike date, CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said:

"The international executive board by unanimous action has set this strike date. The international has taken complete charge of all three negotiating sessions. We shall seek satisfactory settlements between now and Nov. 9. If agreement is not reached by that time, those 17,000 workers will strike.

"Considering the way wages of telephone workers have dropped steadily in relation to other workers over the past 10 years and the unsatisfactory way in which the companies want wage increases distributed, present offers are to say the least unsatisfactory.

"Seeking to impose an 18-month contract on telephone workers with no wage reopener, not even a living cost escalator clause, is a disgraceful and irresponsible act by the Western Electric Co. in this time of skyrocketing prices.

"It's always been our policy to respect bona-fide picket lines. This provision in our rules applies with special emphasis to picket lines set up by our own members."

1950 Babies Face Task Of Aiding Aged

BABIES BORN this year may have to bear the brunt of supporting their elders 25 years from now, if present population trends continue.

For the population as a whole is steadily growing older, while the number of people in the older age groups who are working is steadily growing smaller.

Recognition of the problems such a trend would bring to the country has brought forth a number of studies concerned with an aging population. One of these is a bulletin issued by the Institute of Labor and Industrial relations of the University of Illinois, called "Who's too Old to Work?" It was written by Richard C. Wilcock.

The bulletin discusses the problem of age as an obstacle to employment of two groups — those from 45 through 54 years of age, and those who are 65 and over. About 40 million people, or more than a fourth of the population, at present are 45 years or older, Wilcock points out. Within 10 years, this age group will make up one-third of the population if present trend continues, and within another generation, every other person in the country will be 45 years or older, he calculates.

Census figures show that in 1900 well over 60% of the men 65 years old and over were in the labor force, but in 1949 only 48% were in the working force.

Wilcock analyzes the problem in terms of the individual worker, the job, production and the total economy, and then discusses ways of meeting it. The latter includes steps by individual companies, union, community and research groups and government agencies to open up more jobs for older people.

"Society may be expected to gain in many ways," he says. "Older persons who wish to work will not be forced into unwanted retirement. The costs of welfare will become less burdensome. The nation's production and standard of living will benefit. Finally, a large and active labor force helps to keep the nation prepared."

Union members living in Illinois may obtain a free copy of "Who's too Old to Work?" from the Institute of Labor & Industrial Relations, 704 S. Sixth St., Champaign, Ill. Others may have it for 10c a copy.

BUTTON FOR VOTERS: Most Wisconsin voters will receive this lapel button (enlarged above) to show they have done their civic duty and to encourage others to go to the polls. The buttons were distributed by election clerks, but were the gift of the Citizens Non-Partisan Conference on Political Education, in which the CIO and AFL cooperated with other groups.

San Diego, Cal., Locals Organize New Council

SAN DIEGO, Cal., locals of CIO unions have established a new Industrial Union Council to replace the previous Communist-dominated body which lost its charter by revocation action of CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

The new council was organized at a city-wide convention over which Irwin L. DeShetler, Southern California CIO regional director, presided.

Its constitution contains a bar to membership of any union which participates in the activities of a subversive organization, and prohibits council endorsement of a candidate who supports the Communist Party or any other totalitarian movement.

Unions represented in the membership include the Communications Workers, Steelworkers, Clothing Workers, Auto Workers, Newspaper Guild and Furniture Workers.

Officers elected were Bruce Moss, CWA Local 9, president; Glenn R. Dodd, Newspaper Guild, vice president; Robert L. Spears, Auto Workers, secretary-treasurer, and Mrs. Lawrence Pierce, Clothing Workers, recording secretary. Trustees chosen were Walter Westfall, Furniture Workers; James Olmstead, CWA, and Mrs. Enid Clancy, Auto Workers. Named members-at-large of the executive board were Dave Jacobs, Clothing Workers; Edmund Rucker, Newspaper Guild; George Hauk, CWA, and Yern Martin, Steelworkers.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 13, 1950 82 No. 46

Pickets from CIO Communications Workers Div. 6, of Western Electric Co., parade outside Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. offices in downtown Washington, D. C., to applause of bevy of pretty operators who refused to cross the line. Story was same all over U. S. last week when installers of Div. 6 and warehousemen and distribution workers of Div. 18 walked out Nov. 9 in protest over Bell System's insistence on offering sub-standard pay raises. (See Page 2.)

Inflation Blamed On 'Speculative Profiteering'

"OLD-FASHIONED speculative profiteering" on commodity exchanges and in other business places has been "the major cause of price inflation since June 25," the CIO Economic Outlook charges in its latest (October) edition.

"Even the most reactionary business spokesman must know he can't get away with blaming the unions for the price rises which the Korean invasion set in motion," commented the Outlook, which is issued by the CIO Dept. of Research and Education.

"Nor will any useful purpose be served by scolding the American housewife. She just hasn't been hoarding copper, gasoline, rubber, lard, milk or bread in the kitchen pantry. But the prices of all these are up."

The Outlook said that more price increases are being announced "every day," in many cases "simply because the getting is easy." But it added that "neither increased labor costs nor lack of adequate profits can justify most of the raises."

THE CIO publication placed much of the blame for the situation on the Defense Production Act, passed by Congress late in the summer.

"The Defense Production Act empowers the use of total wage, price and rationing controls," the Outlook said. "But if circumstances force us to this extremity, the American people will find, even then, that the act is cruelly deceptive.

"Under its terms, wages and salaries can be clamped down, but the cost of living can still go up. Food, rent, and medical costs are major items in the average family budget. But neither the act nor any other federal legislation provides for a real freeze of these major family costs.

"The largest expenditures of the average family are for food. But the Defense Production Act does not provide for a firm ceiling over food prices."

The Outlook said it is "hard to understand" why Congress "so willingly" voted an increase in the necessary down payment for a second hand car, while at the same time refused "to demand higher down payments from commodity market speculators who profiteer on a national emergency."

The act's provision for simultaneous wage controls for workers involved in producing items that are price-controlled is unwise, the Outlook said.

"If the price of steel or rubber were frozen, for example, wages of steel and rubber workers would go under controls automatically," it noted. "If steel workers ate steel and rubber workers ate rubber, this might make sense. But they spend their paychecks for food and clothing."

THE OUTLOOK suggested that such arbitrary wage controls would also have the effect of turning workers away from essential industries into those not closely related to the defense mobilization effort, and that it might cause "intolerable . . . chaos" in plants producing both price-controlled and price-uncontrolled types of goods.

Workers entered the mobilization period "at a decided disadvantage" because before the Korean crisis they "had not shared fairly in the division of the output of industry," the publication said.

"Now, since June 25, labor is at a further disadvantage because of the totally unwarranted price increases which are being reflected in rising living costs," it added.

Biggest Rubber Company Grants 12c Hourly Increase

THE U. S. Rubber Co., biggest of the "big four" rubber companies, has granted a 12c hourly wage boost to its 33,000 employes in 19 plants throughout the country.

Reached after 19 days of negotiations, the U. S. Rubber contract follows the pattern set earlier in settlements with three other large rubber companies—Goodyear Tire & Rubber, Goodrich Rubber, and Firestone Tire & Rubber.

The 1950 contracts have ironed out inequities in pay rates for various parts of the country, one of the long-standing goals of the union.

The Rubber Workers also have obtained three other agreements recently. One of them—with General Tire & Rubber Co.—covers 2600 employes in Akron, Ohio, and Waco, Tex., and provides a 12c-an-hour package, including a 10c-across-the-board wage boost and 2c to be applied to the correction of intra-plant and area wage inequalities.

Employes of the Lacrosse Rubber Mills Co., La Crosse, Wis., gained an agreement worth 12c an hour in recent negotiations, including a general increase amounting to more than 8c hourly plus a welfare program worth 4c an hour.

Employes at the Goodyear Tire & Rubber warehouse in Massillon, Ohio, won a straight wage increase of 12c an hour in their new settlement.

Workers Idled By Strike Get Benefits

New Jersey auto workers made idle by a strike of fellow CIO Auto Workers in Michigan will be paid unemployment insurance.

The New Jersey Supreme Court has ruled 5—2 in favor of 4000 workers at the Edgewater and Metuchen plants of the Ford Motor Co., who were laid off from May 11 to June 7 last year because of lack of parts.

The company opposed payment of the $250,000 unemployment insurance on the grounds that the New Jersey and Michigan workers were members of the same union and barred under state law. The law disqualifies any worker if he is made idle by a labor dispute in which he takes part, has a direct interest, or supports financially.

The court said the New Jersey locals neither authorized the Michigan strike nor took a strike vote. It pointed out the local workers continued at their jobs during the strike until laid off for want of materials. LPA

Retail Food Prices Rise

The buying power of the average worker's pay envelope contracted another notch, it was revealed last week when the Bureau of Labor Statistics announced that food prices went up 0.2% between Sept. 15 and Oct. 15.

The retail index, based on a special survey of retail prices of 50 foods in eight cities, was shown to have jumped to 209, or 2.2% above the figure of June 15, just before the Korean invasion. The wholesale index stood at 169.4, or 7.6% above the pre-Korea level and 11.8% more than the comparable week in 1949.

Eggs, dairy products, cereals and bakery products, coffee, fruits and vegetables all went up. Meats, poultry and fish, sugar and fats and oils went down. Dairy products went up 5.3% in the month, 9.3% since June. Eggs soared 8.6% since Sept. 15, 39.2% since June 15. Coffee price increased 2.2% in the previous 30 days and 15.6% since June.

CWA Strikes Western Electric

THE CIO Communications Workers threw picket lines around Bell Telephone System exchanges in 43 states last week as the company refused to move from its position of "adamant insistence on substandard wage increases and wage freezes."

Key unit in the strike was Western Electric Div. 6, which represents employes of the Western Electric Co. who install telephone equipment in all states except Maine, Vermont, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Rhode Island.

While only 17,000 members of three divisions were directly involved in the dispute over the two main issues, thousands of other telephone workers throughout the country refused to cross picket lines. Most companies were forced to use supervisory employes to carry on a semblance of service.

In addition, 600 warehousemen and distribution workers, members of Div. 18, were out in Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Denver, Los Angeles, Louisville and Kansas City, Mo. Warehousemen in St. Louis had already ben out a week. Div. 18 members in Haverill, Mass., likewise walked out.

JOINING DIVS. 6 and 18 in direct strike action were 16,000 members of CWA Div. 15, employed by Michigan Bell. The union there was seeking a reduction in the differential between 10,000 Detroit workers—who receive up to $20 a week—and 6000 other workers in other Michigan areas. The strike had been scheduled for Nov. 6 but was postponed until Nov. 9 so all three divisions could act simultaneously.

Top federal mediators, headed by Clyde M. Mills, assistant director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, attended day-long talks between the company and CWA officials Nov. 8 but failed to resolve the two major issues in disputes. These were:

1. A "substantial" wage increase beyond the company offer of 10c an hour for distribution and warehouse workers and 11c for installers.

2. A company proposal for an 18-month contract without a wage reopener at frequent intervals.

CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne termed both company proposals "bad."

"We have been negotiating with the Bell Telephone System on these disputes for over a year," he said. "The company is still insisting on inadequate wage increases which average only 9½ an hour (for all Bell System employes).

"They likewise want to have complete say as to how these increases would be distributed. Some of our members would get nothing, others would receive only a few cents.

"The company is also insisting on long-term contracts without the opportunity for wage reviews at frequent intervals. They have one proposal for an 18-month contract with no reopening clause and another for a two-year agreement with a wage review at 15 and 16 month intervals."

Beirne said imposing such long wage freezes on telephone workers during the present period of skyrocketing prices is asking too much.

"We have surveyed wage increases given other workers in other important industries during the past months," he declared. "In no single case have we found an industry which has frozen wage levels for so long a period as the Bell System has attempted to impose upon us."

THE COMPANY cannot plead inability to pay a "substantial" increase, he added.

"Telephone business is booming," he said. "A record number of telephones are in service. Bell System profits have gone up sharply as shown by the fact that the company made $110 million more in the past 12 months than it did in the same period a year ago.

"Wages of telephone workers are lower than those paid to other workers in substantially comparable industries. It is not sensible, nor is it desirable, for the world's richest corporation to pay its employes such wages as it does."

Beirne pointed out that for the 12 months ending Aug. 31, Bell System consolidated net income reached $327,232,570, equal to $11.98 for each of the 28 million outstanding shares. He said this was an increase of $110 million over the previous 12 month period, when consolidated earnings equalled $8.91 on the 24,700,000 shares than outstanding.

"PROFITS FOR the third quarter of 1950 showed a steady increase," he declared. "On a system basis the corporation netted $91,757,000. On an annual rate that is $12.76 a share. This compares with $59,464,000 for the same period in 1949."

In a letter to Beirne, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said the telephone union "has displayed patience in seeking to reach a fair and peaceful agreement on the issues involved," in the face of the company's "brazen disregard for the economic welfare of its employes and a stubborn refusal to bargain collectively in good faith."

Murray predicted that the "ranks of your union will remain firm and strong" and promised that the CIO will "render whatever assistance your union may require."

In Washington, D. C., as in 10 other cities, CWA members attended pre-strike meetings on Nov. 8. Some 3500 heard Div. 50 Pres. Eleanor Jane Palmer, representing 2700 operators and traffic employes, declare that the capital's 320 installation workers were making the fight for 7000 other CWA members in the area and must be supported.

During the first day of the walkout, local service was disrupted in a number of localities which do not have dial phones. Long distance calls were on an emergency basis in Pittsburgh, Indianapolis, Washington.

CIO Asks Better Weapons To Fight Inflation

THE DEFENSE Production Act "fails to serve as a weapon against impending inflation," and must be revised, Administrative Chairman Emil Rieve, of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, warned on Nov. 9.

Whatever its political complexion, the next Congress will have to give "thoughtful and constructive consideration" to the economic programs which are growing out of the defense mobilization program, he added. He demanded "selective and general price controls without the necessity of wage controls," instead of the inequitable wage-price tie-in now in the law, and extension of effective rent control.

Rieve is president of the CIO Textile Workers. He and other members of the Committee on Economic Policy met Nov. 9 with the Council of Economic Advisors. They are Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, of the Rubber Workers; Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, of the Clothing Workers, and Pres. Walter Reuther, of the Auto Workers. CIO Pres. Philip Murray, the chairman, was unable to be present.

THE TEXT OF Rieve's statement follows:

"The Defense Production Act fails to serve as a weapon against impending inflation. There is an urgent need to revise this law.

"The wage-price tie-in provision of the act is inequitable and unworkable. If put into effect, it would freeze wages in those industries whose prices were controlled. But neither this act nor any other federal legislation provides for effective controls of prices or rents.

"SINCE steelworkers don't eat steel, the law makes no sense. Operation of the wage-price tie-in would tend to freeze wage and salary earners in an underprivileged position in the economy.

"Amendments to the act should provide authority for selective and general price controls without the necessity for wage controls, and the means for effective controls over food prices, and grade labeling.

"Extension of an effective rent control law is essential to protect millions of families, in defense production centers and elsewhere, from impending rises in the cost of shelter. The President should also be granted authority to regulate speculation in the commodity markets.

"Such revisions of the Defense Production Act would go a long way toward establishing the basis for an effective and balanced mobilization of our resources.

"In view of all this, pay increases now being obtained through collective bargaining represent an attempt by wage and salary earners to bring their buying power up to a position of equity in the national economy.

"American corporations are reaping a record harvest of profit this year. They can well afford to grant a substantial wage increase without raising prices. By last spring, business was assured of a boom year; events since the invasion of South Korea point to an all-time peak. The spectacular record of corporate profits contrasts sharply with the economic position of working people.

"Wage and salary earners failed to receive an equitable share of postwar increases in man-hour productivity. Inflationary prices, which contributed to soaring corporate profits, cut into the buying power of the pay envelope.

"The growing disparity between workers' standards and profits is brought into sharp focus by a comparison of economic statistics in the years between 1944, the war-time peak, and the first half of 1950, just before the Korean aggression. In that period:

"Workers' productivity increased by 2½ to 3% each year.

"Buying power of hourly earnings in manufacturing industry rose only 5%.

"Buying power of weekly earnings declined 7%—because of higher prices and a reduced workweek.

"Corporate profits, after taxes, rose 82%.

"Buying power of corporate profits rose 37%.

"Rising prices and soaring profits since June 25 have widened the disparity between wages and salaries on the one hand and corporate profits on the other.

"WAGE INCREASES without price rises at this time could be granted if corporate enterprise would cease its continuous search for record-breaking profits. American corporations are earning such huge profits this year that wage boosts can easily be absorbed by most firms without being passed on to the consumer in the form of higher prices.

"Profits are now reaching an all-time record. It is estimated that the corporate net after taxes this year will be $23 billion, greater than at any other time in our history.

"These peak profits are being bolstered by profiteering and speculation. Retail prices are already higher than at any other time, except for a brief period in 1948. And the full impact of post-Korean rises in wholesale and commodity prices has not yet been felt at the retail level by the consuming public.

"Prices of 28 basic commodities, which had risen an average of 1.4% between Jan. 3 and June 23, advanced 12% in the first month after the invasion of South Korea.

"The index of wholesale prices went up by less than eight-tenths of one percent a month during the first half of the year—but it has jumped over 7% since the start of the Korean war.

"These price rises were the result of speculation in the commodity markets and extraordinary inventory-building by business. For instance, commodity speculators are permitted under the Defense Production Act to traffic in essential commodities, with little cash investment—and they have reaped millions of dollars of ill-begotten profits on the nation's emergency.

"WORKING people are paying and will pay for these business practices. Mark-ups are taking place all along the line, from manufacturers to distributors. The boosts in commodity and wholesale prices are being translated into increases at the retail level.

"There can be no moral or economic justification for business to use the mobilization effort as a means for reducing the living standards of wage and salary earners. Preventing justified wage increases, while prices and profits continue to rise, is not an equitable remedy for the problem of inflation. To work out an equitable remedy should be the job of the government—including effective action on rising prices and a stepped-up savings program.

"These problems transcend partisan issues: they directly concern the welfare of all the people of the nation. The new Congress, regardless of its political complexion, must give thoughtful and constructive consideration to these tremendous economic problems."

Pittsburgh May Lose Only Daily Newspaper

THE PITTSBURGH Daily Reporter, only daily newspaper in a city of more than 750,000 population, faces a shutdown because of lack of newsprint—even though the city's warehouses are bulging with unused stock.

The reason is that the Daily Reporter is published by 10 unions on strike or locked out by the community's three daily papers. And the newsprint manufacturers are ganging up on the union-operated journal in an obvious effort to run it out of business and deprive the citizens of any newspaper.

The 10 unions began publication of the Daily Reporter on Oct. 15, two weeks after the Press, Sun-Telegraph and Post-Gazette stopped publication in a wage dispute with the AFL Mailers. The CIO Newspaper Guild, the AFL mechanical unions and the Teamsters joined forces to give the city a substitute daily as an emergency public service. It was to be discontinued as soon as the regular dailies resumed publication.

Since then, the Daily Reporter has existed on job lots of newsprint and odd size rolls it had to buy at premium prices. Newsprint manufacturers refuse to sell to it. Appeals to nine Canadian and American manufacturers for regular allocations were rejected. They refuse to ship as little as 100 tons a week to meet minimum needs. The regular dailies, in the meantime, are holding their newsprint pending their reopening.

Sam Eubanks, executive vice president of the American Newspaper Guild, has wired Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.) to take the House Monopoly Sub-committe, of which he is chairman, to Pittsburgh for an on-the-scene investigation of "evidence of collusion between daily newspaper publishers and paper manufacturers to black out news" in the city.

"The manipulation of newsprint supply in an endeavor to suppress this city's sole daily news organ is a prime example of vicious effort of monopoly control in newsprint production and distribution," Eubanks wired Celler.

Eubanks testified before the committee on newsprint monopoly last summer In 1948, the Guild made a comprehensive study of the effect of monopolostic practices in the newsprint industry on the newspaper industry.

Guild Wins Pay Boost

Members of CIO Newspaper Guild on the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Eagle have won a 7% pay boost. A strike threatened before the agreement was reached on $120 minimum weekly pay to experienced reporters and a 35-hour week.

"Daddy just told me about the bees and the flowers!.. The drones are in clover cause the workers ain't organized!"

Convention Radio Records To Be Sold

Five 15-minute recordings of the proceedings of the National CIO convention suitable for broadcasting by local radio stations will be available to industrial union councils, CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, director of organization and councils, announced last week.

The convention will be held Nov. 20-24 in the Palmer House, Chicago.

The recordings are similar to those which were available last year and attracted favorable attention. Made on the convention floor, they will contain portions of speeches and debate. They are being produced by Guy Nunn, commentator for the CIO Auto Workers and outstanding radio newsman.

Haywood in a letter urged state and local councils to secure time on their local stations for the programs.

"These convention broadcasts will pay dividends," he said, "in helping our members more fully understand labor's position on national issues, as well as increasing the appreciation of the general public for CIO's contribution to the welfare of the country."

Recordings may be ordered direct from the UAW-CIO Radio Dept., 411 W. Milwaukee, Detroit 2, Mich., at a cost of $5 for each show. Orders should specify if tape recordings or platters are wanted. The recordings will be airmailed to local radio stations direct from Chicago.

Ohio Bakery Sued

The Attorney General of Ohio has sued the Continental Baking Co. for agreeing to "keep the price of bread at a fixed figure, preventing free and unrestricted competition." He asked the court to issue a cease and desist order.

New Contract Averts AP Election Strike

A NATIONWIDE election eve strike of the Associated Press was narrowly averted Nov. 3 when the CIO Newspaper Guild and management reached agreement on a two-year contract.

The rank-and-file Guild negotiating committee was preparing to count ballots marked by members in a strike referendum when negotiations were completed after more than 10 months of fruitless meetings in New York.

The agreement provided for binding arbitration of the Guild's demand for general wage increases and higher minimum wages. The decision will be made by an arbitration board composed of two representatives each of Guild and the AP, with an impartial chairman named by the American Arbitration Association.

Both general increases and higher minimums will be openable again on the anniversary date, subject to arbitration that will not be binding.

ONE OF THE Guild's major triumphs in the non-money section of the new contract was a clause providing for arbitration of grievances. Management had fought long and hard to block it, but the Guild negotiators kept up the battle because of the obvious crying need of such protection for the members. Management also lost out in its fight to include in the new contract a proviso giving it the right to make discharges for economy.

The Guild succeeded in having correspondents in one and two-man bureaus for the first time covered by the overtime and night differential clauses. The cutoff point for coverage by the same clauses of supervisors and special writers was raised from $125 to $145 a week.

Maximum severance pay was increased from 30 to 36 weeks, the vacation clause was improved and the time between shifts was placed at a minimum of 12 hours.

Management agreed to check off the dues of Guild members employed in the London bureau if it can be done according to law.

Own Dispute No News To Associated Press

The Associated Press likes to pride itself on full coverage of the news. However, it didn't do so well in its own recent labor dispute.

Despite requests from a number of member newspapers, the AP refused to put out stories from time to time during its negotiations for a new contract with the CIO Newspaper Guild.

It wasn't until the Guild threatened a strike a few days before the elections that the AP decided to do any real bargaining. When the settlement was finally reached on Nov. 3, the AP then moved its first story about its own dispute on its own news wires.

'Field Factory' Owners Ask FHA Aid For Hands

The laws governing the Federal Housing Administration should be changed so that farm workers qualify for loans, said Burt Imes, spokesman for the large farm owners, at a hearing in Merced, Calif., of the Governor's Agricultural Labor Commission. Imes said 80 to 90% of the field hands are good credit risks.

Liberal Forces Lose Ground

But Outcome Of Nov. 7 Election Provides Congress With No 'People's Mandate' Against Fair Deal Measures

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE MAN "WHO couldn't possibly win"—Harry Truman of Missouri—was swept back into the Presidency.

Elected with him in 1948 were enough Senate and House members to give the Democrats a majority in Congress.

The issues on which Truman campaigned were clear-cut. He ran on a Fair Deal platform and he told the voters frankly and bluntly what he would try to do if returned to the White House.

Consequently his election was regarded by many persons as a mandate from the people regarding certain types of legislation.

The Republican Party, however, refused to accept the election results as a mandate. GOP lawmakers teamed up with Dixiecrats to block important Fair Deal measures.

Despite this, you're going to hear—and have already heard—that what happened at the polls last week was a mandate against the Fair Deal.

Nuts!

THE OUTCOME OF the elections has undoubtedly made the difficult task of the Truman administration even more difficult.

It's hard to get legislation—even important foreign policy legislation vital to the nation—through a "house divided against itself." And Congress in January will be a sharply divided "house."

Regardless of this and the heat generated by election campaigns, it is reasonable for the people to ask—and expect—Congress to quit playing partisan politics with our foreign policy.

The stakes are too high. World peace is hanging by a weak thread. Our nation is regarded by the world as the strongest of the democratic countries. Regardless of how we're divided on domestic matters we must present a reasonably united front to the world on international issues.

We must or we're in for serious trouble.

MANY OF THE "experts" who were positive of a Truman defeat in 1948 had figured out by dawn last Wednesday exactly why the Democrats lost ground.

Some of them were as wrong as they were in '48. Badly wrong were those who began painting labor as an unimportant political force.

Labor-supported candidates were beaten in some races. They won in others. The "batting average" wasn't too good—and it wasn't too bad.

The Taft victory in Ohio was a bitter pill for the unions to swallow. The Donnell defeat in Missouri was sweet music to their ears.

Liberal forces unquestionably lost ground but they did not take the beating they suffered in the last "off-year" elections. The 1946 elections gave the nation the "awful 80th, do-nothing" Congress.

The fact is that last week's elections demonstrated no decisive, sweeping trend in public thinking on basic issues.

This is made clear by the close outcome and by the fact that many of the campaigns were fought on phony issues.

ONE OF THE phoniest and most distorted of the issues was communism in our own government.

The case of Senator Tydings of Maryland provides a good example. Until the rise of McCarthyism, Tydings was not considered even as a liberal and certainly not as a Red-loving radical.

But he was smeared with the Red brush and was defeated.

Also defeated were a number of other Democrats who were smeared with the same brush although they had excellent anti-Communist records.

The public cannot point with pride to the calibre of many of the campaigns. Some of them were extremely dirty—extremely underhanded.

Religious intolerance, for example, became a strong factor in the campaign against Senator Taft's opponent, Joseph Ferguson.

IN A WAY IT'S a good thing the campaigns are over and the ballots have been counted.

The United States faces some very serious international problems — problems which couldn't be viewed clearly in the light of partisan politics.

It also has some serious domestic problems stemming directly from the national emergency.

It's time now to lay politics aside, insofar as possible, and tackle these problems head-on.

It's time for the domestic Red-smearing to cease and for members of both parties to get to work doing everything they can to solve the big Red problems—those created by international communism.

REALLY A SHAME

We've got a confession to make.

The CIO News hammered away for months at the "register and vote" theme. Yet on election day only half the newspaper staff went to the polls.

The others were disfranchised because they live in voteless Washington, the "citadel of world democracy."

Congress serves as the "city council" for the nation's capital but doesn't permit residents of the city to vote.

Try to explain this to some European or Oriental when you're making a "pitch" for democracy and against Communism.

Yeah, just try.

And try also to explain the great democratic ideal which makes it "proper" for some states to place a tax on the right to vote and other states to limit sharply voting by those whose skins are dark.

Really, it's disgraceful, isn't it?

And while you're trying to explain things and sell foreigners "the American way" you might take a crack at this one:

Give some logical, understandable reason for the inability of Negroes to obtain free access to hotels and restaurants in Washington, D. C., and many other cities of the nation.

Then, just to clinch your argument, try to explain the "fairness" of the Taft-Hartley Act to workers overseas.

We know of no simpler way to make a monkey of yourself.

Members of Congress and the state legislatures certainly must be aware of these things. Then why don't they do something constructive about them?

We suggest you try to find out by writing and asking them.

A LONG WAY BUT NOT FAR ENOUGH

The United States has come a long way since those bloody revolutionary days of 1776 but it still has a long way to go before the ideals of our founding fathers become the hard realities of our every-day lives.

Right now is a good time to speed up the drive for real democracy.

We're on the spot. Make no mistake about it.

Communism is on the move. It already has swept a large portion of the world.

We of the United States must provide the leadership for those who hate Red totalitarianism. We must provide a way of life which men and women everywhere will want to copy.

We can't sell racial segregation to the peoples of Europe and Asia. We can't sell them limited voting. We can't sell them Taft-Hartleyism.

We're foolish if we try.

And we can't justify our shortcomings by pointing out that Red totalitarianism stinks.

We ought to get one thing straight: We may love our own country and our own way of doing things but all the rest of the world doesn't love us.

We're frequently regarded overseas as phonies because of such things as voteless Washington and racial segregation.

Fortunately we have a system which makes it possible to right our wrongs. We should use it more often for that purpose.

See NLRB If Mouse Is In Radio

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board doesn't have bats in its belfry but it's got a little bit of everything else.

If you pitch pennies on the job, or knock off for a couple of days to hunt elk—even if a mouse gets into your radio—you're likely to wind up before the NLRB.

Of course, while it can be an ordinary mouse, it's got to be something more than an ordinary radio. It's got to be—or at least it was in the case of Dwight L. Stephenson—a radio transmitter.

Dwight, a radio engineer at radio station KVEC, San Luis Obispo, Cal., was active in signing up other engineers for union membership. He held meetings in his home and signed all the technicians attached to both the AM and FM outlets of the station.

When the Federal Communications Commission canceled the FM license of the station, KVEC said that all engineers would have to double as announcers to hold their jobs. Two of the men who had attended meetings at Stephenson's home lost their jobs when they either refused or failed to perform both jobs. Stephenson was kept on.

THE STATION went off the air one night and Stephenson told the chief engineer there was a mouse in the transmitter. The chief scoffed. When the station went off the air again the next day Stephenson was fired.

The NLRB ordered his reinstatement saying: "The mouse was there. When the chief engineer put a jumper across a voltage switch which had burned out and got the station back on the air he extinguished the mouse in the process."

S. S. Hightower, a sawmill worker in La Grande, Ore., wasn't as lucky. He didn't get his job back at the Mt. Emily Lumber Co. after he took off to go elk hunting.

Hightower told the NLRB he was fired because he circulated a petition among the men asking that the mill be shut down for the opening of the elk season. The NLRB pointed out he had had two weeks in addition to his two weeks vacation and that he had had a month off when the plant was shut down—plenty of time to go hunting.

Alberto Winterton, an edger at the plant, testified that he talked to Hightower after he returned from his hunting trip and that Hightower told him, "My Daddy always told me that if my work interferes with my pleasure I should quit work—so I went hunting."

In his efforts to get permission to go hunting, Hightower went to practically every boss in the plant. As a matter of fact he went to everyone except August J. Strange, president and general manager of the company. He couldn't find him—Strange had gone elk hunting.

ANOTHER Northwest lumberman nixed by the NLRB in his effort to regain his job is Charles E. Rippetoe, who was fired by the Magnolia Lumber Co. in Ashland, Ore. Rippetoe had been active in a revolt staged by the truck drivers when their pay was cut, but Rippetoe admitted to being caught "in a prone position" in the cab of his truck "during his lunch hour."

The NLRB examiner ordered reinstatement of another worker fired for union activity and told the company to stop interfering with efforts of the AFL Teamsters Union to organize the plant. Rippetoe's discharge was upheld when it turned out his lunch-hour nap was taken at 3 p.m.

If Marshall Denby, a deaf mute, and Carrington Hamner, employes of the U. S. Rubber Co.'s Scottsville, Va., tire cord plant, had been familiar with an old adage, they'd have their jobs today.

The adage—"Don't do as I do, do as I say"—might have warned them to pay more attention to company admonitions not to gamble.

The NLRB report says that at one time the company "did not interfere with employes matching coins for Coca-Colas in its cafeteria, the practice being indulged in by the supervision from the plant manager down as well as by the rank-and-file employes."

"This practice of gambling spread from the confines of the cafeteria," the report states, "to locker and wash rooms and to the working areas of the plant."

THINGS GOT so out of hand that the company ordered supervisory employes to set an example. When that didn't work, bulletins were printed prohibiting gambling under penalty of immediate discharge.

Denby and Hamner both were active in an organization drive being conducted by the union, and they both liked to pitch pennies—a bad combination. Denby even donated the use of his ball park.

Though both men denied they were matching coins at the time the company claims they were, the NLRB examiner upheld the company after a parade of witnesses said they had watched the two men tossing pennies during working hours. LPA

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher
Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII November 13, 1950 No. 46

Frank Just Didn't Want To 'Hang Around'

HE WAS a giant of a man—more than six feet tall and nearly as large from front to back as from top to bottom.

His voice and his smile were as big, comparatively, as his body. He almost rumbled when he spoke. And his grin was something to behold.

People just naturally smiled back when Frank let the corners of his mouth turn upward and his straight, white teeth flash against the background of his black face.

Frank had gone to school only a couple of years. He could read and write simple sentences—usually with difficulty—but he had a lot of what is often called "native intelligence."

He was "looked up to" by nearly everybody in the mill village where he had lived since he was a boy.

When problems arose, as they frequently did, it was customary to "drop by and see what Frank thinks about it."

SOON AFTER the CIO organizer arrived in town to attempt to set up a union at the mill at which Frank worked he was told, "If you want to get us colored folks in the union you'd better go down and talk to Frank first."

So the organizer went to the clean, little shack which housed Frank and his family.

Frank stood before a big wood-burning stove, a cloth tied around his middle, when the organizer was ushered in. He was frying catfish.

The organizer introduced himself and extended his hand. Frank wiped his big, greasy paw, then gripped the organizer's hand and shook it firmly. He flashed his big grin.

"May sound funny to you, mister, but this is the second time I ever shook hands with a white man. The other fellow was a preacher from up North."

Frank hesitated, then said, "I know what you're here for and I want to talk with you—but I can't talk until I've had my catfish."

The organizer said, "It sure smells good."

"Sure does," said Frank. "If you'd like to have some I'll have one of the kids fix up a plate for you. We can sit out in the swing, where it's cool, and eat and talk."

A SHORT TIME later the organizer and Frank were eating catfish, greens and "hush-puppies" and talking about the CIO.

Frank asked many questions because his knowledge of unionism was limited. The CIO man tried to supply all the answers.

Frank frequently asked, "Can you prove that?" The organizer said he could furnish proof.

Frank's question went directly to the point. He wanted to know about wages, working conditions, control of the union, negotiations, grievance procedure, etc.

About three hours later Frank declared, "I'm satisfied. I'll help you organize a union at the plant but I don't know whether we can win. The Negroes will go along with you and me but I don't know about the white folks."

AT THIS point the organizer thought it proper to warn Frank that he might get into trouble because of union activities.

"I'm trying to be completely honest with you," the organizer said. "The company is very anti-union and you might get fired if you came out in the open and worked for the CIO. It's happened before."

Frank flashed his big smile and rumbled:

"Mister, you ain't telling me nothing I didn't know before you spoke. You're just guessing, but I know I'll get fired if the company thinks it can get by with it.

"But after you told me how things are in a well organized plant I just don't want to hang around here any more if we don't have a union."

A.L.S.

An Ungainly Critter To Ride!

Students Shun Workers' Problems, Educator Says

HIGH SCHOOL students just can't get excited about "pensions at 65." They'll take an action-packed episode of counter-spy or a smooth-voiced crooner every time.

In a survey, they ranked strikes and labor troubles 150th in a group of 159 on their interest scale.

Yet, six out of every seven high school pupils will go to work directly from high school; one in every three students will join a union; and all will become taxpayers, consumers and citizens.

A University of Illinois librarian suggests that in spite of these effects on their lives, high school students are indifferent to labor-management issues.

Overall ineffective coverage is given by the mass communications, according to the librarian, Ralph E. McCoy of the university's Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations Library. They leave high school students with ideas, impressions and attitudes on labor-management relations—but with little real understanding.

Just what effect do these mass communications have on the students' understanding of the subject? McCoy discusses the question in an "Occasional Paper" issued by the university's Labor School.

In his paper, entitled "Labor-Management Relations and High School Pupils; A Survey of Communications Behavior," McCoy analyzes the five media.

"Movies have not only failed to treat labor issues, but they have generally neglected the rank and file worker as a central character," McCoy says.

"Radio's contributions . . . are largely through newscasts and discussion programs. Radio dramatic serials neglect the working man as a central character.

"THE DAILY newspaper is probably the major source . . . for the majority of Americans. It is doubtful that the average high school pupil will get much beyond the headlines of labor items.

"Magazines . . . offer a more balanced and complete picture . . . are more likely to stress the peaceful solution of labor problems, although their analyses . . . cannot always be relied upon.

"The high school pupil is not likely to have very wide contact with books which will contribute to his understanding in this area. Most social studies textbooks do not deal adequately with labor problems and the labor movement."

This ineffective coverage, plus the students' indifference, leaves the responsibility for developing understanding of labor-management relations to the high school; and high school librarians and social studies teachers share in this responsibility, he says.

These librarians and teachers must select materials to represent the points of view of both unions and management. They must choose from a vast mound of propaganda, he writes, the best, most objective, most complete materials—and present them in a "popular" way. Some of this "better" material, he lists and analyzes.

Single copies of "Occasional Papers" are free on request from Herbert Goldhor, editor, "Occasional Papers," Univ. of Illinois Library School, Urbana, Ill.

Church-Labor Meet For Students Nov. 20

The 10th annual interseminary conference of the National Religion and Labor Foundation will be held in Chicago on Nov. 20-22, the first three days of the National CIO convention.

The foundation announced that the meeting is being held in conjunction with the convention so that students for the ministry may see one of the country's major labor organzations in operation, meet many CIO leaders and get their help in forming the aims and program of a religion and labor movement.

Approximately 150 delegates from 20 or more seminaries representing many denominations are expected to attend. The conference, the foundation hopes, "will lead to a more active program in church-labor relations on the seminary campuses."

Encyclopedia Told To Quit Kidding

The Federal Trade Commission has ordered the firm selling the 25-volume Funk & Wagnalls New Standard Encylopedia to stop misleading the public.

The FTC said the company admitted that its claims on sales were false, that claims on subjects covered were false, and that claims as to the size of each volume were false. The company's defense was that these claims were "inadvertent" and are no longer made.

The FTC ordered the firm to stop running down competitors by saying they are "too expensive for the average American citizen," and that they contain "a mass of outworn, sometimes false and misleading information." Said the FTC dryly, "The evidence shows that revisions are currently made by the publishers of other encyclopedias as well as by the respondents."

Victories Of Republicans Strengthen Hold Of Dixiegops In Congress

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

SOME 40 MILLION Americans—too few—went to the polls last Tuesday and voted their fears and uncertainties as well as their positive convictions.

When the smoke of the fiercest off-year campaigns in the 20th century cleared away, the voters had retained in Democratic hands the nominal control of the House and Senate—but Republicans had picked up five Senatorships and 31 House seats, as well as seven governorships.

The Republican-Southern Democratic coalition, which had been riding herd with increasing boldness on the 81st Congress, was firmly in control of the 82nd. And the Republicans, nominally in the minority, were in a beautiful strategic position—able to snipe, obstruct, and strangle, without having to take party responsibility for their actions. Their eyes were on 1952.

The fears which had led to this reaction at the U. S. polls were immediately reflected in Western Europe. In terms of international cooperation realistically aimed at preventing the spread of communism by positive methods, things looked dark. In both houses but particularly in the Senate, the Marshall Plan and the Point 4 program had lost votes, and the State Dept. vilifiers had picked up strength.

With nothing to go on except that some of the most vicious of Secy. of State Acheson's attackers had managed to get re-elected, the GOP masterminds immediately invented a "mandate" for Acheson to resign. He said he wouldn't.

The only real feather in the caps of the McCarthy school of thought—the "State Dept. is full of reds" boys—was the defeat in Maryland of Sen. Millard E. Tydings, who as chairman of the Senate committee investigating Sen. McCarthy's charges against the State Dept. had had the courage to repudiate the smear for what it was, and say so in no uncertain terms.

(McCarthy was not up for re-election himself, but in Wisconsin, his home state, Sen. Wiley (R.), the Claghorn of the North, campaigning on the straight-out McCarthy platform, got re-elected. This was interpreted as a big victory for McCarthyism, although the facts were that Wiley's margin was a good deal narrower than it had been in 1944.)

As for domestic legislation, the outlook was actually little worse than it had been for the last year of the 81st Congress. Hopes for a more liberal approach were dashed.

Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act was out. Fighters for fair excess profits legislation and for a tax law that would be harder on the rich, easier on the poor, would have perhaps more of an uphill fight.

The constant defense against special-interests legislation such as the Kerr Natural Gas bill would require more vigilance. There was just about no hope of a let-up in the bogey-ridden insanity of Congressional dealings with the domestic Communist problem.

In the State capitals, the balance shifted from 29 Democrats and 19 Republicans to 22 Democrats and 26 Republicans. The worst blow to the liberal cause was the defeat, by a narrow margin, of former OPA Administrator Chester Bowles, who was running for his second term in Connecticut. He lost to Rep. John Davis Lodge, Jr. (R.), brother of Massachusetts' Sen. Lodge (R.).

SEN. BRIEN M cMAHON
Wins Easily in Connecticut.

SEN. WILLIAM BENTON
Wins in Connecticut.

MR. AND MRS. THOMAS C. HENNINGS, JR. were in a happy mood after it became certain he had defeated Sen. Forrest Donnell, reactionary Republican.

The one resounding State House victory (not a gain) was in Massachusetts, where Gov. Paul A Dever (D.) was re-elected. The other Democratic losses were in Arizona, Colorado, Maryland, Michigan, Nevada and New Mexico.

Two Republicans came out with increased national importance looking toward 1952—Gov. James A. Duff (R. Pa.), elected to the Senate, and Earl Warren (R. Cal.), re-elected Governor. Thomas E. Dewey (R. N.Y.) also was re-elected.

ROUGHLY, half of the candidates supported by labor and liberals were re-elected, the other half defeated. Unquestionably the most stinging blow, and the most rejoiced in and pontificated about by the GOP, was the failure to defeat Robert A. Taft in Ohio. Large as the vote was, too few people voted, there as elsewhere, to effect a change in the national atmosphere.

On the other hand, the slaughter that has taken place in every off-year election since 1934 was not repeated. CIO-PAC Director Jack Kroll, commenting that "we wanted to avoid the results that are usual in off-year elections," added: "I think we succeeded."

Here are the figures on Democratic losses in off-year elections since 1934:

Year	Senate	House
1938	6	80
1942	9	50
1946	12	55
1950	5	31

"Apparently our organizational work has helped to activate the opposition," Kroll added. "That's all right with us, for every American should vote. In a democracy, a big vote is a good vote. We were more effective than we were in 1948; if we hadn't been, we'd be facing a Republican Congress now."

Kroll Sees Insecurity Influencing The Vote

PAC Director Kroll issued the following post-election statement:

The results of the election reflect a feeling of insecurity and uncertainty on the part of the American people resulting from the complex situation in which we are now engaged as a result of Communist aggression in the Far East and threatened aggression elsewhere in the world.

The people are concerned over the possibility of world-wide conflict with its hardships in terms of casualties, shortages, increased taxes, and other sacrifices.

I hope it will not be misunderstood by the democratic nations abroad as an unwillingness to assist them in resisting Communist aggression and I hope it will not be used by the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition as a lever to force the withdrawal of the United States into isolationism. That would be a tragic twisting of the results.

As far as CIO-PAC is concerned, one of our major objectives was the securing of a maximum registration and vote. I am gratified that the vote in this off-year was a record vote and that a greater number of Americans participated in this election than in any previous off-year election.

Our labor political action groups worked harder and more effectively than they ever did before. They were confronted by the unscrupulous use of the "Big Lie" technique and by the expenditure of unlimited sums of money.

As Americans we accept the results of the election without qualification and as Americans we intend to work with even greater energy and devotion toward the achievement of American goals.

ELECTED WITH LABOR'S SUPPORT: Sen. Wayne Morse, liberal Republican, shown above with two of his daughters, was re-elected in Oregon.

REP. ADOLPH SABATH
Oldest Congressman Returned.

REP. EMANUEL CELLER
Back for Another Term.

Compromise Firmly Seated In Senate By Election Results

THE SENATE line-up is now 49 Democrats to 47 Republicans. Included among the Democrats are 22 Southerners, many of whom vote more often against the administration than for it.

This means that compromise is firmly in the saddle in the Senate, and that the liberals are more firmly in the minority. The most serious effect will be on international affairs, with a possible shift of sympathy away from Western Europe.

The Democrats dropped six seats: they lost their majority leader, Scott Lucas of Illinois; their majority whip, Francis Myers of Pennsylvania; the chairman of the Labor Committee, Elbert Thomas of Utah; and the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, Millard Tydings of Maryland.

One reactionary, out of all the targets, fell before liberal attack—Forrest Donnell (R.), of President Truman's home state of Missouri. He was licked by a comfortable margin by Thomas Hennings, Jr.

The other two Democratic losses were the seats formerly held by Sheridan Downey of California and by Glen Taylor of Idaho.

Labor's biggest disappointment was Robert A. Taft's re-election. The total Ohio vote was in the neighborhood of 2.7 million—compared to pre-election estimates ranging from 3.3 to 3.5 million.

His rival, State Auditor Joseph Ferguson, lost by more than 400,000 votes. Even Taft had under-guessed his victory margin, putting it in the neighborhood of 40,000. The vote was some 200,000 below the 1944 total, when Taft last ran, but it appeared that Taft picked up about 100,000 net votes while the Democrats dropped about 300,000.

Lucas lost out to former Rep. Everett Dirksen, a wavering isolationist who once supported the Marshall Plan and helped materially in putting it through the House. During the campaign he spoke of it as a "rat-hole" and trumpeted demands for a "clean-up" in the State Dept. and a "strong" policy in the Far East.

Myers lost to Pennsylvania's Gov. James H. Duff, a standard conservative with a falsely liberal reputation. Myers actually ran behind Richardson Dilworth, Democratic candidate for governor, but the Democrats did better than they had done in 1946 when the last Senatorial contest took place. In 1946, Edward Martin (R.) won by 550,000; Myers lost by 126,000 in 1950.

SCHOLARLY Elbert Thomas went down before Wallace Bennett, last year's president of the National Association of Manufacturers, in Utah, after one of the dirtiest campaigns on record.

But the biggest surprise, really, was the defeat of Tydings. Suave and sarcastic, he had been a tower of strength on the Senate floor for the State Dept. and the Defense Dept. Sen. McCarthy invaded Maryland and spoke against him, and this unquestionably had something to do with the upset. Tydings took the Governor and one House member down with him.

In California, attractive Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D.) also lost out in a McCarthy-type campaign to Rep. (now Sen.-elect) Richard M. Nixon (R.), member of the House Un-American Activities Committee and the man who kept the Alger Hiss case alive.

REP. JOHN CARROLL (D.) failed to unseat Sen. Eugene Millikin (R.) of Colorado, Taft's right-hand man in the Senate. Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper, Republican, of Iowa, another McCarthyist, defeated former Under Secretary of Agriculture Albert Loveland (D.). Former Asst. U. S. Attorney Gen. eral Alexander Campbell failed to pick off Sen. Homer Capehart (R.) in Indiana, also a McCarthy worshipper. And Sen. Alexander Biemiller of Wisconsin.

REP. PETER W. RODINO, JR.
Newark, N. J., Likes Him.

REP. REVA BECK BOSONE
Wins Again in Utah.

Connecticut re-elected two Democratic senators, Brien MacMahon, chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, and William Benton, whose margin was so close it is being contested. But Gov. Chester Bowles was defeated.

And Rhode Island sent its fighting liberal Gov. John Pastore (D.) to the Senate to replace William Leahy (D.). Pastore was the only state governor to ask publicly for repeal of the Taft-Hartley law.

Three members of the GOP's progressive group were re-elected — Wayne Morse of Oregon, Charles Tobey of New Hampshire, and George Aiken of Vermont.

SEN. HERBERT H. LEHMAN led the Democratic ticket in New York State to win re-election. With him are his wife and his manager, Edward C. Maguire.

Liberals Lose Some House Contests, But Many Win

IN THE House, the Democratic majority is now 234, plus one independent, to the GOP's 200. The Democrats lost 31 seats, all of them outside the South. With few exceptions, all the defeated Congressmen were liberals, who had won by small margins in the 1948 sweep.

Carving the marginal liberal bloc out of the rest of the picture for the moment, this means that a little less than two-thirds of the gains made in 1948 were retained—not a bad record in an off-year. No marginal reactionary districts were re-captured.

In terms of legislation, it will be the same story as in the Senate, though possibly not so close. About 100 of the Democrats are from the South, and most of them waver back and forth, voting a large part of the time with the conservative coalition.

Among the worst losses to labor was Tom Burke (D. O.), who lost out in a three-way race to independent Frazier Reams, after winning from a Republican in 1948. Burke is the only CIO member in Congress.

Still in there fighting will be many of the old, familiar liberal bloc, smaller in size but staunch in ideals and purpose. Among them are:

Havenner, Shelley, Doyle and Holifield of California; Ribicoff of Connecticut; Sabath of Illinois; Madden of Indiana; Garmatz of Maryland; McCormack and Kennedy of Massachusetts; Dingell of Michigan; Weir and Blatnik of Minnesota; Rodino and Addonizio of New Jersey; Celler, Klein, Powell, and Roosevelt Jr., of New York; Flood, Walter, Kelley, Eberharter and Buchanan of Pennsylvania; Forand and Fogarty of Rhode Island; Rayburn of Texas; Mrs. Bosone of Utah; Jackson of Washington and Bailey of West Virginia, who defeated ex-Sen. Holt.

Missing from the ranks will be: Helen G. Douglas of California; Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse of Connecticut; White of Idaho; Jacobs of Indiana; Mrs. Mary T. Norton of New Jersey, who did not run; Pfeifer of New York, defeated in the primaries; Cavalcante and Davenport of Pennsylvania; and Biemiller of Wisconsin.

The 31 losses were concentrated in 14 states. Indiana and Ohio each dropped five, Illinois four, New York three, Pennsylvania, California, Missouri, and Oklahoma two each, and Connecticut, Colorado, Idaho, Maryland, Wisconsin and Nebraska each one.

REP. RAYMOND MADDEN
Indiana Winner.

The House Democratic leadership sailed through unimpaired, and no House committees changed chairmen.

Reassuring note: the entire House Lobby Investigating Committee, headed by Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.) was re-elected.

So was Rep. Ralph Gwinn (R. N. Y.), whose over-generous use of his mailing privileges on behalf of the hyper-reactionary Committee for Constitutional Government was flayed by the Lobby Committee.

REP. FRANK BUCHANAN (right) was returned to Congress from Pennsylvania. Here he is when he announced plans for the lobby probe.

Revolt Brews In NAREB Over Assessment Plan

THE NATIONAL Association of Real Estate Boards holds its annual convention this week in Miami Beach, Fla., with a minor rebellion brewing among its members.

From various parts of the country have come protests from local boards and members, verging in some cases on the violent, over an assessment proposed by the national office to raise $1 million for a campaign to turn half of the nation's home renters into home owners.

The NAREB is king-pin of the groups that fought effective rent control and adequate housing legislation to watered-down compromises in Congress. It apparently is taking a leaf from the American Medical Association, which tapped 140,000 U. S. doctors to raise a big fund to fight President Truman's national health insurance plan.

The assessment, which must be approved by this week's convention to become effective, is for $25 plus $5 for each salesman for the next three years. First notice members had was in the Oct. 30 issue of the association's weekly news letter—two weeks before the opening of the convention.

The Chicago board in a resolution sharply criticized the national office for the "short and abrupt" notification it gave and called for complete rejection of the plan in any form.

The attitude of the Chicagoans was duplicated elsewhere. And everywhere local boards, in addition to objecting to the manner of notification, labelled the plan untimely and impractical.

Besides, a lot of realtors make their livings with rental properties.

Labor To Seek More Liberal Jobless Aid

ORGANIZED labor throughout the country is planning to campaign for liberalization of state unemployment compensation laws when 44 state legislatures meet next year.

Labor wants weekly benefits increased, the compensation period lengthened, allowances for dependents added or increased, and coverage broadened.

In the last three years some 38 states have liberalized the maximum potential benefits in a benefit year. Twenty-one states now limit coverage to firms employing eight or more workers; 17 states to firms with one or more workers; and 12 to firms with three, four, or six workers.

Many states in recent years have cut unemployment tax contribution rates for employers. Organized labor in many states will seek repeal of the so-called experience or merit rating provisions under which employers with low labor turnover records are now able in most states to obtain lower tax rates.

According to "The Book of the States," published by the Council of State Governments, maximum weekly unemployment compensation benefits now vary from $15 to $26 without dependents, and from $20 to $40 or more with maximum dependents in the 11 states which provide dependents' allowances. Only two states, with 2.8% of the covered workers, provide maximum weekly benefits of $18 or less.

All other states provide maximum basic weekly benefits of $20 or more. Twenty-eight of these, with 65% of the covered workers, provide $25 or more, including dependents' allowances. LPA

Oregon School Faces FTC Charges On Ads

Western Training Service, a correspondence course school at Portland, Ore., must answer to the Federal Trade Commission for advertising claims FTC says are false.

The FTC says these claims are false: That the school is a branch of the U. S. government or has some connection with the U. S. Civil Service Commission; that it is in a position to place students in civil service jobs.

Korea Film Available

THE U. S. ARMY film, "The First Forty Days," a 25-minute, 16-millimeter black and white combat picture of the Korean War, is now available for public use through Army film library centers.

It is a photographic record, filmed under combat conditions, of the American soldier in overcoming serious handicaps in the initial phases of the war.

The film can be obtained on loan from Signal Corps libraries in each Army area. It may be bought from the Office of Education, United World Films, Inc., 1445 Park Avenue, New York, N. Y. Requests for the film should refer to the designation Miscellaneous Number 7761.

The film can be obtained from the Army areas listed below:

First Army Area: Me., N. H., Vt., Mass., Conn., R. I., N. J., N. Y., Del. Commanding General, First Army, Governors Island, N. Y.

Second Army Area, Ind., O., Pa., Md., Va., W. Va., Ky. Commanding General, Second Army, Fort Meade, Md.

Third Army Area, N. C., Tenn., Miss., Ala., Ga., S. C., Fla. Commanding General, Third Army, Fort McPherson, Ga.

Fourth Army Area, N. M., Okla., Ark., La., Tex. Commanding General, Fourth Army, Fort Sam Houston, Tex.

Fifth Army Area: N. D., Minn., S. D., Wyo., Colo., Neb., Kans. Commanding General, Fifth Army, 1660 E. Hyde Park Blvd., Chicago 15, Ill.

Sixth Army Area: Mont., Ida., Wash., Oreg., Cal., Nev., Utah, Ariz. Commanding General, Sixth Army, Presidio of San Francisco, Cal.

In all cases, the request should be addressed to the attention of the Signal Officer.

Gompers Memorial Fund To Roosevelt

A $100,000 Samuel Gompers Memorial Fund to provide scholarships, improve educational facilities and develop labor education opportunities at Roosevelt College in Chicago has been sponsored by AFL Pres. William Green, CIO Pres. Philip Murray, and Pres. Albert J. Hayes of the Machinists.

The fund, to be presented to the college in December, is part of this year's nationwide observance of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Gompers, AFL founder and long-time president.

Union spokesmen said the school was chosen as recipient of the fund because of its "extensive labor training and research program, its stand against bias and discrimination in higher education, and the provision for equal representation on the college's Board of Trustees of both management and labor."

Auto Union Wins Strike At Harvester

A 10-WEEK strike of CIO Auto Workers against International Harvester Co. ended Nov. 6, with 24,000 UAW members returning to work. An additional 14,000 employes idled as a result of the strike also returned.

UAW won the points in dispute, including evening up of the pay differentials at the company's various plants.

Immediate pay raises of 10c an hour were granted. The five-year contract also includes a 4c "improvement factor" raise annually, and a cost-of-living escalator granting 1c each time the BLS index rises 1.14 points.

A NEW higher-rates wage structure gives day workers an extra 6c an hour, bringing straight-time pay to $1.80 an hour. Liberalized vacation provisions are included, and also a modified union shop, under which present union members must stay in the union, and new employes must join within three months.

The contract also calls for a joint union-company study leading to a new wage payment system to replace the present piecework system. If agreement on the system is not negotiated by April 15, 1953, either side can cancel the current provisions on it.

Covered by the pact are 3750 employes at Melrose Park, Ill.; 700 at the McCormick works in Chicago; 2040 at Memphis, Tenn.; 3670 at Fort Wayne, Ind.; 3200 at Indianapolis; 3850 at Springfield, Ohio; 150 at East Springfield, Ohio; 1550 at Louisville, Ky.; 3000 at Evansville, Ind.; and a small number at Stockton and Emeryville, Cal.

Ford Takes Over Plant

A huge surplus war plant at Chicago has been taken over by the Ford Motor Co. for the construction of engines for B-36 planes. The plant was used by Dodge during the last war and later by Preston Tucker in his unsuccessful attempt to build a new automobile. Ford signed the Air Force letter contracts authorizing the deal on Nov. 3.

Tenants Lose Bout In Rent Control Fight

THE LOS ANGELES Tenants' Council has lost another battle in its fight to keep rent ceilings—but it may still win the war.

On Nov. 6, Judge Alexander Holtzoff, in Federal District court in Washington, upheld a request for a writ of mandamus against the decision of Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods to keep rent controls on in L. A.

Woods refused to confirm a 10 to 4 vote by the L. A. city council June 28 decontrolling rents, after he listened to a tape recording of council sessions. He said the testimony was slanted and did not warrant removal of controls.

Judge Holtzoff ruled that Woods did not have the right to "go behind" the action of the council and "review the evidence" on which it based its decontrol resolution. He said that while he personally felt "the equities are with tenants" there was nothing for Woods to do under the present rent control law except act in a rubber stamp capacity for the council's action.

The judge left a door open for further action, however, by postponing the effective date of his order to Woods for 10 days to allow an appeal.

George J. Solomon, attorney for the tenants' group, said an appeal will be filed as soon as he can obtain a copy of Judge Holtzoff's order. He said that while he was certain the Court of Appeals would act speedily on the appeal, that no action would be forthcoming for about a month.

It is customary to delay putting a court order into effect until final action is completed. There is also a possibility that the case may be appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court.

EVERY DELAY brings the spring primaries in Los Angeles nearer. Politicians are agreed that the rent issue will be too hot a potato for councilmen to ignore.

Unless the Los Angeles Hotel, Motel & Apartment House Owners' Association can railroad decontrol through soon, they may well lose their fight. They are also fearful that Congress will pass legislation extending rent controls when it meets in January. LPA

Weirton Poll To Be Probed

THE NATIONAL Labor Relations Board will investigate the recent election at Weirton Steel Co. plants in Weirton, W. Va., and Steubenville, Ohio.

The election, won by a company union, was marked by threats and discrimination, according to charges filed with the NLRB by the CIO Steelworkers.

The investigation will be another page in the company's 13-year-old fight against organization of its 6000 workers. A. U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals ordered Weirton to dissolve its old company union last July, and the Steelworkers pressed for an election.

Organization efforts were futile, according to union charges, because employes were threatened with loss of their jobs if they acted as CIO observers in the election, workers were told to take off CIO buttons or be fired, and the company told workers they would know how everyone voted in the NLRB poll. LPA

Special Price Survey Opens

THE U. S. Labor Dept. Bureau of Labor Statistics last week began a special survey of retail prices at Youngstown, O.

This is the second BLS price study at Youngstown as part of its plan to revise its Consumers' Price Index. Checkers will visit 300 representative stores each month for six months to determine what types of stores and in what neighborhoods price data should be collected to give an accurate measure of price changes.

The revised index, now scheduled to begin the end of this year, will give economic planners and labor-management wage negotiators a better picture of consumer price trends. Originally planned to be put into effect next summer, BLS moved the date up because of fluctuations caused by the Korean War and new economic controls.

The index measures price changes since 1935-39 in food, apparel, house furnishings, rent, fuel, utilities, and miscellaneous goods and services purchased by lower-income groups. The revision will reflect the price of many new consumer goods, including frozen and baby foods, home permanents, television sets, toasters, and hospitalization costs. LPA

"The Iron Curtain members insisted on running this part of the international library their way."

Reported Metal Cutbacks Protested

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers has protested the reported 20 to 30% cut-back of copper and other metals to become effective Dec. 1. In a telegram to Secy. of Commerce Sawyer, Reuther said that the cutback "will seriously affect production in our industry, which is the second largest consumer of copper."

Reuther requested that the order be withheld until interested parties had been fully advised and consulted "on this order and all related measures to increase copper supply and to allocate available supply to essential military and civilian uses."

CP's New Peace Line Has Rough Going In Britain

By GERVASE N. LOVE

IF THE SOVIET propagandists and their stooges had any measurable capacity for embarrassment, they'd be red up to their pink little ears over Communist China's injection of itself into the Korean situation and its invasion of Tibet.

The so-called Partisans of Peace, who have been carrying the ball in the worldwide campaign for signatures to the fake Stockholm Petition, changed their line a few months back when it became apparent they were getting too much mileage out of "controlling" the atomic bomb. Their new line combined reduction of "every form of armament" and a declaration against "aggression wherever it may occur."

The Partisans haven't reported yet on their reaction to the Red Chinese aggression in Korea, but their rationalization will probably, as usual, be a dilly.

THE STOCKHOLM Peace Petition is the one that talks so fulsomely about "absolute banning" of atomic weapons and "strict international control," which the Russian delegation to the United Nations has been fighting tooth and nail. The Partisans claim they have secured 330 million signatures to the petition, some 290 million of them in countries dominated by the Communists.

The Communist-sponsored "World Peace Congress" being held this week in Sheffield, England, has been showered with disconcerting questions and demands in view of the recent stress of the Stockholm Petition circulars on aggression.

The area council of the Durham Miners' Union, representing 110,000 workers, challenged the congress to condemn the Chinese invasion of Tibet and to uphold the stand of the United Nations in Korea.

"The fundamental purpose of the congress is not peace but support for totalitarian aggression by the Cominform and its satellites," the Miners asserted in anticipation of the rejection of their demand.

The British labor movement has been almost universal in its condemnation of the congress and its professed purpose. A. E. Hobson, secretary of the Sheffield Trades Council, called it a "disgraceful hollow sham" and made it clear that the city's 100,000 union members want no part of it. Prime Minister Clement Attlee described it as "bogus" and "an appeal by the wolves to get the sheep to demonstrate against the use of shepherds and sheep dogs.

SIR VINCENT Tewson, general secretary of the Trades Union Congress, reminded affiliates of TUC's 13-1 vote in support of its general council's proscription of the Sheffield Congress and the British Peace Committee.

The Soviet campaign for control of all arms is as big a fraud as the drive for control of atomic weapons, if past experience is any guide. At the UN, Soviet representatives have often cried for "strict international controls" in proposals the majority has found to be transparent fakes.

The posturing of the Reds on aggression and arms control serves only to confuse, and to screen Soviet refusal to join in cooperative efforts to promote peace and security that have a chance of working in the interests of all nations—not Rusisa and her satellites alone.

French Detour Fifth Column

The French government opened warfare on another front last week in its official attack on the fifth column in France.

It removed four Communist majors and 29 deputy mayors from their posts in Paris boroughs and replaced them with non-political officials, according to an announcement in the official journal.

FAR CORNERS of earth are explored by Robert Oliver (center), executive assistant to ECA Labor Advisors in Washington. Here he is in Paris getting pointers on French labor situation from Max Rolland (left), French reporter for Labor Information, and Harry Martin, chief of labor information and labor adviser to Ambassador Milton Katz, ECA chieftain in Europe. On returning to Washington, he left for Southeast Asia with ECA Administrator William C. Foster and other government experts to study background for ECA program there.

ICFTU Plans Greater Role In Education

WORKER education in Europe will be greatly expanded under a program drawn up at a recent European Conference on Education in Brussels, sponsored by the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The role of organized labor in general and adult education as well as in direct education of workers in trade unionism was dissected by 50 delegates from 15 countries who approved the establishment of international labor colleges as part of the expanding program.

"The proclaimed aim of the ICFTU," said the conference's public statement, "is to contribute to the progressive development of education.

"Conscious of the fact that trade union and worker education cannot be separated from general education, the trade union movement, nationally and internationally, is interested in all spheres of education and must actively take part in general education planning.

"It should become universal practice to include trade union representatives in all educational committees and bodies—governmental and non-governmental—dealing with improvements or changes in education. The knowledge of the university-trained technical experts on education must be supplemented by the experience of workers' representatives."

W. B. Beard, of the British Trades Union Congress, was elected chairman and Dr. Heins Kuppers, of Germany, deputy chairman.

In addition to the delegates, the sessions were attended by observers from several other nations, including the United States and the unionists in exile from eastern European countries, and by the Intl. Federation of Worker Educational Associations, UNESCO and the Intl. Labor Organization.

Free Union In Red China Keeps Commy Conquerors Off Balance

THE FREE labor movement China, undaunted by the ever-present danger of death, is operating underground and keeping the Communist conquerors off balance in many places.

It is operating under the direction of the Free China Labor League, which is based in Formosa—still in the hands of the Nationalist government—and is affiliated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The FCLL was established less than a year ago. In addition to the Formosan headquarters, it has going branches in several sections of the mainland. Its membership is small but growing.

SOME OF THE things the members have been doing to harass and annoy the Reds on the mainland are described in a booklet, "Free China Labor League—What It Is and What It Does," published in English in Formosa during the summer.

"After the Reds occupied a given area," it says, "the usual routine was to exchange the Chinese national flag for the Red flag.

"This happened also in factories, a matter which was strongly opposed by patriotic workers. The FCLL has been directing these workers to raise objections to the changing of flags. This work has been rewarded with commendable results.

"For example, when the Red agents were directing a mass meeting attended by over 6000 workers in the Sung Sin Cotton Mill (ninth factory), the Red flag was suddenly taken down and the Chinese national flag was hoisted in its place.

"The photographs of Joe Stalin and Mao Tze-Tung (China's puppet dictator), were also taken off the wall and those of Dr. Sun Yat-sen and President Chiang Kai-shek put up instead. There followed a free-for-all melee in the works auditorium, resulting in over 30 killed on each side.

"IN MARCH, 1950, when the Macao Branch of the Chinese Mechanics Union was holding a union meeting, the same thing happened and the Communist kanpos (officials) were driven away from the hall. Since then, this union has gone completely underground for fear of Soviet reprisals. . . .

"FCLL members are already on the spot to direct passive resistance movements in factories and workshops in Shanghai and in other cities. Our efforts have been rather successful. The failure of Shanghai workers to purchase all the 'victory' bonds allotted to them is a vivid example. The obstruction put up by the workers against the removal of factories to the north is another example.

"At the end of April, 1950, we sent one of our workers to Canton with the specific mission of secretly distributing anti-Communist leaflets in Canton on the International Labor Day (May 1). These leaflets first appeared in the Kumsin Theater, the largest cinema house in west Canton, on the night of April 30.

"Then, they were discovered in every street in the city of Canton, even inside the palatial mansion of Mayor Yeh Chien-yin. Communist kanpos lost face and furiously arrested over 300 'suspicious elements.' Our brother worker sucessfully concluded his mission and returned to our fold."

After Great Britain recognized Red China, the British government at Hong Kong froze the Chinese Nationalist government's property there for eventual transfer to the Reds. Five fishing boats which had put into the port for repairs were included.

The Communists belabored the crews with kindnesses, including three months' salary, formation of education groups, rosy promises, red flags and visits by movie actresses. The FCLL then went to work on the same crews, converted them completely and prompted them to slip out of the harbor to freedom.

"Under the direction of the league," the FCLL booklet continues, "Workers and peasants on the mainland have organized themselves into guerrilla forces in the suburbs of Shanghai, in the mountain ranges, in the lake districts and in the coatal towns of Anwhei, Chekiang, Kiangsu and Shantung.

"THEY ARE either known as 'the Federated Army of Free Workers and Peasants' or 'the Free Workers and Peasants' Army for Defeating Communism and Saving China.' Over 100,000 workers and peasants are successfully harassing and attacking Soviet troops in these areas.

"In such other regions as Honan, Hupeh, Hunan, Kwangtung and Szechuan, workers are participating in general guerrilla activities. For instance, in a district in eastern Honan, about 10% of the 50,000-man guerrilla unit are workers. In a south Chekiang area, as high as 40% of the 20,000-man guerrilla forces are workers. The FCLL has been in close touch with these guerrilla troops, getting intelligence from them and trying every possible means to give them succor.

"Our plans for future anti-totalitarian activities are being made with a view to preparing the path of Nationalist counter-attacks. We shall attempt to cover a wider area of mainland China; we shall cut off the enemies' communication lines; we shall blow up their munition dumps; we shall create riots and strikes in their factories.

"We shall give them no rest until they are totally defeated."

Worldwide White Collar Conclave Set

THE FIRST worldwide conference on non-manual workers will be held under the auspices of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at its Brussels, Belgium, headquarters April 18-21, 1951.

The meeting was called at the suggestion of the ICFTU's Intl. Consultative Committee for Professional, Administrative, Commercial and Supervisory Employes, of which Pres. Harry Martin of the CIO Newspaper Guild, is a member. The committee will meet in Brussels Dec. 20-21 and again just before the international conference on April 16-17.

According to the committee's plans, invitations to send delegates will be extended to national unions representing six categories of white collar workers. These are:

1. Teaching (teachers of every description).

2. Entertainment (actors, artists, musicians, etc.).

3. Writing (journalists, press photographers, etc.).

4. Health services (medical practitioners, dentists, chemists, opticians, nursing and hospital staffs, etc.).

5. Public and civil service employes.

6. Industry, commerce and communications (scientific workers, technicians and administrative staffs).

Because of the high degree of organization among U. S. newspapermen, stage and screen actors, musicians, and other professional workers, the committee expects this country to be well represented.

The possibility of establishing international labor secretariats for organizations of teachers and journalists, it is tentatively planned, will be explored at meetings of workers in those two groups.

200 Negroes Admitted To 21 Dixie Colleges

APPROXIMATELY 200 Negroes were admitted this fall to 21 southern colleges and universities from which they formerly were barred by segregation laws, the Southern Conference Educational Fund announced last week on the basis of a survey.

But, warned the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in a release the following day, "recent developments in the legal fight to break down segregation in education clearly indicate that a hard and intensified battle still lies ahead."

The conference noted that race barriers have been lowered in the graduate and professional schools of state universities in 11 of the 17 segregation states, and that in three states private colleges also have dropped the old bars.

"Due to the commendable policy of most of these institutions of not recording the race of students on registration forms, accurate enrollment figures cannot be ascertained," said Aubrey Williams, SCEF. "The estimate is based on information received from deans, faculty members and published reports."

Williams said 60 Negroes have been admitted to the Univ. of Oklahoma. The tally for admission of Negroes to schools in other states is as follows: 21 in Texas, 12 in Arkansas, 15 in Kentucky, nine in Missouri and three in Virginia, In addition the Univ. of Louisville, a municipal institution, has admitted 18 Negro students, while four private colleges in Kentucky opened their rolls to more than 30.

"Perhaps the most surprising aspect of this liberal development," said Williams, "is that it has been effected without a single untoward incident having been reported. In our survey faculty members reported that these new students have been received with uniform cordiality."

The NAACP fear is based on the continuing fight against the lowering of racial bars in some southern states. Thurgood Marshall, NAACP special counsel, cited particularly the appeal of the State of Louisiana against admitting qualified Negro graduate students to Louisiana State Univ., and the refusal of a lower court to order admission of Negroes to the Univ. of North Carolina Law School.

"The Supreme Court decided the Sweatt and McLaurin cases last June," said Marshall, "too many people grew complacent, accepting those decisions in and of themselves as the imminent end of all segregation and discrimination in public education . . .

"The decisions were but precedents for future legal action. There will be cases and more cases—appeals and more appeals, before segregation and discrimination are removed from public education."

Fortune Hits General Foods For Ousting Jean Muir

FORTUNE, the magazine of big industry, which sometimes speaks as sharply to its pets as if they were naughty adolescents, rears back in its November issue and blasts General Foods, the Jell-O giant, for failing to live up to any kind of moral standards.

What got Fortune's goat was General Foods' abrupt dismissal of radio actress Jean Muir, who was to have appeared as Mother Aldrich on Jell-O's "The Aldrich Family," after Miss Muir's name had appeared on a "privately compiled and publicly peddled list of people alleged to belong to Communist or fellow traveler organizations."

(Miss Muir's name was listed in Counterattack, a publication issued by former FBI agents.)

FORTUNE notes grimly that General Foods paid no attention to Miss Muir's denials, and refused to back down even after the authors of the attack had done so.

Yet all General Foods had to go on, aside from the dubious list itself, was approximately 30 telephone calls and letters of protest, obviously inspired, although the program has millions of listeners.

(Fortune notes that an informer attacked General Foods, too, as follows: "I think General Foods should have been as respectful of Miss Muir's rights as they were of my rights in protesting.")

"In the Muir case," Fortune says, "General Foods thought it was facing a divided public when it was merely yielding to a handful of busybodies. The company thought it was staying out of a brawl. But it takes two to make a brawl, and three was no brawl.

"The other party to the imaginary controversy, the mass of cool-headed, reasonable American citizens, was not present at all. It presented itself and spoke its piece only after General Foods had acted.

"General Foods did not actually take the side of those who informed against Miss Muir (and were careful not to admit they were persecuting her). But it did proceed as if it thought the vast majority of Americans were ignorant of the Bill of Rights and indifferent to fair play.

"And it got off very easily. For if no boycott was organized against its products, the explanation was simply that fair and reasonable people don't act the way fanatics do."

THE ARTICLE, which is titled "What Mother Aldrich Might Have Sold," then goes on to mourn that it's apparent that business is not living up to its moral responsibilities. It outlines what General Food might have done. It might, for instance, have announced that while it would not knowingly employ Communists, neither would it "be hustled into infringement of rights possessed by our citizens under the Constitution."

"The question of right or wrong, fair or unfair, attaches itself to every form of public enterprise," Fortune continues. . . . "What needs to be demonstrated (where it is true) is that the men who run tne system really believe in the great principles they are constantly proclaiming."

The article then went on to damn the three Washington newspapers which refused to run an advertisement prepared by independent grocers, attacking the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., commenting that this was bad enough, but that what the A & P failed to do next was even worse.

The A & P, says Fortune, should have bought space to publicly deplore the action of the Washington papers, and to assert that A & P believes in every kind of competition including competition in advertising.

"IT IS NOT enough," says Fortune sternly, "to mouth commonplaces about free enterprise and competition, at banquets and in laboriously produced throwaways. What is wanted is a constant demonstration to the man in the street that business means what it says about these principles."

(Unfortunately, the magazine says, the one time that American business did atempt to show a little imagination along these lines recently, the State Dept., with its "severely imbecile legalism," stepped in and prevented it.

(Delegates to the March 25, 1949, Soviet-style "Cultural and Scientific Conference for World Peace," meeting in New York, were invited by the National Association of Manufacturers to make a brief tour of major industrial areas and manufacturing plants, but the State Dept. said no, thus giving the communists a ready-made grievance.)

Labor Asks Acheson To Block Dilution Of FAO Functions

THE CIO HAS joined with other labor groups and farm organizations in asking Secy. of State Acheson to prevent the UN Food and Agricultural Organization from being "reduced to little more than a research organization."

Acheson was told in a communication from the group that farm labor leaders "cannot believe you are fully aware of the position of the United States delegation is taking under the direction of the economic advisors of the State Dept."

Reduction of FAO's functions "in the face of the world's great need," they said, would be a "complete breaking of faith with the objectives agreed upon by the nation's representatives at the original Hot Springs Conference in 1943 from which PAC was born."

Signing the communication, sent last week to Acheson, were CIO Pres. Philip Murray, AFL Pres. William Green, Pres. James Patton of the National Farmers Union, Pres. Murray Lincoln of Farm Bureau Insurance Companies and Pres. H. L. Mitchell of the National Farm Labor Union.

"We believe most earnestly," they said, "that the cause of peace and human welfare throughout the world requires our nation to lead in helping FAO set up machinery that would encompass the whole field of food production and consumption.

"This means not only the protection of the income of farm people but also the raising of living levels everywhere through the channeling to distressed areas of so-called 'surpluses' and the encouragement of agricultural production in underdeveloped areas of the world.

"We are confident you will move in response to this urgent request so that FAO can overcome the temporarily disrupting effect of the transfer of headquarters from Washington to Rome and become a realistic instrument for peace and human betterment."

"He complains about the eggs we lay! How about the ones HE laid in his factory labor policy?"

Court Leaves GI Vacations In Air

Vacation rights of 350,000 ex-GIs have been left up in the air by the U. S. Supreme Court's refusal to act on the appeal of Roy Brown, a veteran employed by the Watt Car and Wheel Co., Barnesville, O.

Brown thought his war service should count towards the five-year minimum needed for two-weeks vacation. The company didn't. It went to the U. S. Circuit Court in Cincinnati, which said war service did not count as continuance employment. In Philadelphia the U. S. Circuit Court ruled just the opposite. In a similar case it said a veteran "is entitle to whatever vacation rights would have accrued to him had he not shouldered a gun and gone off to war."

Lucky veterans will be able to apply service in the armed forces toward vacation credit in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware and the Virgin Islands. Veterans in Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee can not count their time in uniform.

Second Union Granted Hearing On Wis. Law

With one union already on their schedule for a hearing, the U. S. Supreme Court has granted a hearing to another union on the same complaint—that Wisconsin's public utility anti-strike law is unconstitutional. The law brands as a criminal offense any activity of public utility employes which interrupts an essential service.

The CIO Chemical Workers first requested a hearing, and then the AFL Street, Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employes Association. The Supreme Court will rule on the constitutionality of the law.

Railroads Agree To End Deadhead Mail Car Fee

COME next January, the nation's railroads are going to stop sticking Uncle Sam twice for hauling the mail. A stipulation to that effect was entered before the Interstate Commerce Commission Nov. 8.

Ever since 1916 the railroads have been charging Uncle Sam for hauling a carload of mail to its destination, and then charging him exactly the same rate for return of the railroad car, empty.

No other customer of the railroads has been stuck that way. All other customers pay a one-way rate, and even that one-way rate is under the rate charged Uncle Sam for the outgoing trip.

The ICC of course must agree to the stipulation. At the hearing Nov. 8 the railroads introduced their exhibits, and the Post Office Dept. it's exhibits, and then the hearing was adjourned to Nov. 29, when the argument will be over new rates for hauling the mail. Final decision is up to the ICC, and it is possible that the new one-way rate set by the ICC may approximate the present round-trip rate.

Estimates as to the extra cost to the government of the round-trip provision range from $30 million to $100 million a year. Legislation to repeal that provision was introduced in the Senate last year by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D. Minn.) and was fought by the railroads at hearings on the measure. The Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee decided the matter needed "further study."

The committee asked the Postmaster General, General Accounting Office and the General Services Administration to make the study. They did, and all recommended elimination of the "round trip" provision.

The results of the study were published last month. Shortly thereafter the railroads capitulated, and notified the Post Office Department that they would agree to eliminate the provision January 1, 1951. LPA

Guild Veteran Joins ECA Staff

Kenyon Kilbon, veteran member of the CIO Newspaper Guild and former financial editor of the Paris edition of the New York Herald Tribune, has been named labor information officer of the ECA mission in the Netherlands.

He succeeds Joseph Carter, who has been appointed acting information officer of the mission. Kilbon, formerly a member of the Herald Tribune staff in New York, joined the Guild when he entered the newspaper business in 1938 and was active in affairs of the New York local.

Ask Labor Law Change

Prohibit minors under 18 from working in hazardous employment. Keep children under 16 out of manufacturing and mechanical jobs. Allow youths under 18 to work only 44 hours a week, instead of the present 48. Keep children under 14 out of farm work, unless it's on their parents' farms.

These and other changes in Ohio labor laws have been recommended by the Ohio Commission on Children and Youth. It will take the recommendations to the Mid-Century White House Conference on Children and Youth, to be held in December.

In Kentucky

Council Changes Hotels Over Racial Dispute

THE 11TH annual Kentucky CIO Council convention bitterly denounced racial discrimination.

The delegates had good reason to take a strong stand on the issue. Because of the refusal of the Cobb Hotel to serve both Negro and white delegates in the banquet room, the sessions were moved to another hotel. The convention was held at Paducah, Nov. 4-5.

Council Pres. Al Whitehouse said both white and Negro delegates were served without question at the 1947 convention in Paducah.

The convention also adopted a resolution endorsing the candidacy of Gov. Earle C. Clements, Democratic nominee to the U. S. Senate who was subsequently elected. The defeated Republican candidate, Charles I. Dawson, was strongly denounced.

SUPPORT WAS pledged Pres. Truman's national health program. Whitehouse verbally lashed the opposition of the American Medical Association to the health program, terming its position "unjustified and reactionary." The convention also called for continuance of rent control and for additional federal housing projects.

Whitehouse told the 200 delegates the aims of the state council included "bringing democracy into our work-day world."

"We want status for members of the CIO," he declared. "We want to feel that we are recognized as far more significant than the machines we operate and the material we handle. We want security and an end to the ups and downs of the business cycle. We want a cushion against the hazards of unemployment, sickness and old age.

"This of course, means wider participation for all in economic and political decisions. And this wider participation means that you will make trade unionism a way of life in your community."

OTHER SPEAKERS included Anthony Smith, assistant director of CIO Councils; William B. Taylor, CIO regional director, and L. R. Willis, state commissioner of industrial relations.

Whitehouse was reelected to his eleventh term as president and Henry Siebert was named to the newly created post of vice president. Fred Foss was reelected secretary-treasurer.

The constitution was changed to provide for only three officers and 12 directors. The officers and directors will form the executive council.

"Look, Sam! That non-union shop is afire! Shall we stroll down to the fire station and report it?"

Kaiser Calls For More Production

Henry J. Kaiser has urged a 30% expansion in steel capacity—with temporary controls if they are needed.

He also wants more production in aluminum and other basic industries to relieve shortages and curb inflation. He estimated that steel production could be upped 30 million tons a year in three years.

"If there is no other way to get expansion," Kaiser said, "then we must accept controls. We tried getting along without expanding during the war, but we eventually had to do it. The same kind of expansion is needed now."

Job Unfinished

Puerto Rico Children Need Help Of U. S.

THE LOT OF children in Puerto Rico has been improved immensely in the last few years, but their needs are still great, according to a report on "The Needs of Children of Puerto Rico," by the Interdepartmental Committee on Children and Youth.

The report was released last week by Federal Security Administrator Ewing, committee chairman. The committee was established in 1948 at the request of President Truman and includes representatives of nine major branches of the federal government.

The report on Puerto Rico was prepared by a group headed by Russell C. Derrickson, associate chief of the Caribbean branch of the division of territories and island possessions in the Dept. of the Interior, and followed a year-long study.

"NO conscientious citizen on the mainland of the United States," said Ewing in releasing the report, "can read about the tremendous problems of the people of Puerto Rico in meeting the needs of children without becoming impatient to help them get ahead faster and farther.

"What Puerto Rico has done, especially in the last half-dozen years, to build more and better homes, schools, and health and welfare services, recreation opportunities and child labor protection, adds up to an exciting chapter in America's democratic struggle for the good life for all its people.

"But that is not enough. With a child population larger than in 32 of our 48 states, and with a per capita income less than half that of our poorest state, Puerto Rico needs help from the rest of us if its children are to have the good start in life we crave for every child under the flag of the United States."

THE REPORT flatly stated that the needs of children and young people in the island "are greater than for any comparable group under the United States flag." It continued:

"They call for extraordinary effort on the part of the federal government to aid Puerto Rico not only for the benefit of the children and youth themselves, but also to equip them to share in raising the economic and social status of the island and to enjoy the opportunity of discharging their responsibility as citizens of the United States."

The committee recommended that the island be given full participation in all grants-in-aid programs for children, as it has been participating on the same basis as the states in some of them. The report was written in June, and since then Congress has extended the old age and survivors insurance and public assistance programs to Puerto Rico, and has broadened its participation in the U. S. Employment Service.

The report shows, among other things, that approximately 20% of the insular budget is earmarked for health services, and approximately 39% goes for elementary and secondary schools.

Among the results is a decrease of 21% in the maternal mortality rate and 19% in the infant mortality rate between 1943 and 1948. In addition, the ratio of children not attending school has been cut from 91% in 1900 to 47% in 1947-8.

THE GOVERNMENT distributes milk to more than 9000 infants, and food and milk to 39,000 children in the pre-school and the 6-8 years age group who do not attend schools. Social services for children in their homes have been stepped up, and the child labor law, passed in 1942, compares favorably with the best of the state laws. Funds for recreation have been increased from $23,000 in 1940 to $525,000 in 1948.

The report also lists many of the things that remain to be done before Puerto Rican children are given a start in life comparable to what the average mainland youngster gets.

The slum population, more than 48,000 families in 1947, is increasing at the rate of 2000 families a year. Sixty-six per cent of all births in 1948 were attended by midwives. Island children are, on the average, two years behind the standards set for mainland children in their physical development. Juvenile delinquency is virtually ignored.

In January, 1949, more than 1700 crippled children were on a waiting list for treatment. The island has one physician for about every 2550 persons . . . while Mississippi has one per 1500 and New York one per 200 persons.

CIO Wins Poll Despite Threat

THE CIO United Paperworkers, in the face of what appeared to be almost insurmountable difficulties, scored a 2-1 victory last week in a National Labor Relations Board representation election at the Continental Paper Co. plant in Ridgefield Park, N. J.

The victory came after a long, bitter strike which ended last March and during which the AFL Paper Mill Workers tried to recruit strikers on the picket line. A settlement was reached after the company announced the closing of the plant.

During the election campaign an active UPA member was threatened with a gun by an AFL representative, and W. J. Alford, Jr., company president, strongly endorsed the AFL union, the UPW charged. Practically every worker eligible to vote cast a ballot.

The dispute between the union and the company was touched off by discharges following the union's request for a new contract. The union had been demanding changes in a profit-sharing plan concocted by Allan Rucker, head of the reactionary Tool Owners Association, which lowered the pay of Continental employes while wages in the rest of the industry were soaring.

"We trust now," said UPA Pres. Harry D. Sayre, "that the management of Continental will sit down and negotiate in good faith with our union as legally required by the laws of our nation, and as morally expected in these days of crisis and world mobilization against communist aggression."

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The election day came and passed, and like most off-year elections it showed reverses against the party in power. However, it was not like 1946; the Democratic Party still has a small majority in the Senate and a substantial majority in the House.

Organized labor lost a number of its friends. In the United States we hold elections so that we may give the people choice, and a good winner should also be a good loser. It is up to trade unions to build themselves stronger, become bigger and better. Elections come and go, but our unions must go on forever.

Our job is to get down to "brass tacks" and bring more and more members into our unions throughout the country. Our first and primary purpose is to organize. The election results make our job a little more difficult, and it means we will have to work all the harder. We must go forward by keeping our eyes on the "union ball." Our workers need more money and security, and there is no other force to get it for them except the union.

All eyes are turning to Chicago where the CIO Annual Convention will be held Nov. 20-24. We have had an interesting year and a year of action. The CIO is in a sound, healthy condition to make further advances.

I am happy to report that the strike at the Campbell Soup Co. in Camden, N. J., has been settled. Congratulations to all.

Let us not forget, we must continue to organize, organize, organize!

Pres. Harry Sayre, of the United Paperworkers of America, reports that the UPA-CIO won a thumping two-to-one victory in a representation election at the Continental Paper Co., Ridgefield Park, N. J. The AFL suffered a trouncing in trying to oust the UPA-CIO.

Reg. Dir. Walter Harris reports that in a representation election at Burke Golf, Inc., Newark, O., the Textile Workers was victorious by a vote of TWUA 35, no union 20. In a representation election at the Columbus Metal Products Co., Columbus, O., the United Auto Workers won by a vote of UAW 25, no union 15. Rep. Waldo Sneary was in charge of this campaign.

Reg. Dir. George Craig reports that in a representation election at the Kiwi Shoe Polish Co., Ltd., Philadelphia, Pa., the workers voted CIO 17, no union 1, void 1. Congratulations to Mary Montanaro for a wonderful job.

Sub-Reg. Dir. Ralph Tillotson reports that in a representation election at the Carnation Milk Co. plants at Cambridge Springs and Corry, Pa., the workers voted as follows: Cambridge Springs, USA-CIO 63, no union 4; Corry plant, USA-CIO 5, no union 3.

Reg. Dir. James Leary reports the following union shop elections won by the United Steelworkers of America-CIO: Vicking Refrigerators, Inc., Kansas City, Mo., 115 yes, 2 no, 2 void; Witte Engine Works, Kansas City, 84 yes, 5 no, 1 void; Standard Steel Co., Kansas City, 175 yes, 0 no, 0 void; and Koch Butcher's Supply Co., Kansas City, 118 yes, 1 no, 0 void. In a representation election at the I. J. Cohen & Co., Inc., Kansas City, Kan., the workers vote as follows: 11 yes, 2 no. These campaigns were handled by USA Sub-Dist. Dir. Harold Edwards, and Hubert Dalton and Intl. Rep. James Baker, USA-CIO.

Floyd Gartrell, district director of the United Rubber Workers, CIO, reports that in a union shop election at the Goodyear Rubber Co. plant, Los Angeles, Calif., 1213 voted yes, 172 no.

Reg. Dir. Lee Tucker reports that the Veteran's Administration at Ft. Roots Hospital, Little Rock, Ark., has recognized the Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee, CIO, as bargaining agent for 530 attendants.

Director William Donovan of District 28, USA-CIO, reports winning another union shop election at the Reid Products Division of the Standard Products Co., by a vote of 371 for to 47 against. Rep. Francis I. Stark supervised the election for the district office.

Reg. Dir. Craig reports that the CIO turned over to the Barbers and Beauty Culturists Union, CIO, a group of approximately 40 men from Lebanon, Pa. These men were formerly an independent group. Reps. Fred Robinson and Morris Miller, USA-CIO representatives in the Lebanon area, and the president of the Lebanon Industrial Union Council, Charles Engelbach, were responsible for the campaign to bring these barbers into the CIO.

What Makes The 'Reactionary Conspiracy' Tick

By IRVING FAGAN and CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

THE ANTI-LABOR lobbies, though they denied at congressional hearings that they are linked, are in fact tightly organized into a network. Like the giant corporations from which they draw their financial support, they have interlocking directorates.

By and large, the same firms, the same individuals, support all the lobbies in the network.

This network has a Brain Trust, a Mass Distributor, and a Catalyst, the group that pulls the others together. Combined they form what trade union researchers have dubbed "The Reactionary Conspiracy."

A review of the files of the House Committee on Lobbying has disclosed the existence of this "Reactionary Conspiracy," which the probers expected to find.

Here's how this conspiracy shapes up:

BRAIN TRUST: The Foundation for Economic Education is the conspiracy's brain trust. The foundation is located in Irvington, N. Y., a few miles up the Hudson River from New York. Its head is Leonard Read, a veteran of the National Industrial Conference Board and the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce.

It prints books, pamphlets and leaflets advancing the reactionary view on public issues. But Read claims that he tries to reach the "influencers," says he doesn't attempt mass distribution of his viewpoint. Nevertheless, since the foundation was established in 1946, it has handed out some 4 million pieces of literature and planted articles in at least 389 newspapers and magazines.

All this activity had cost the foundation $1,030,458 by the last accounting. About 68% was contributed by 20 business firms and corporations. Of $141,953 raised from individuals, 51% came from 20 persons. Here are the big contributors: William Volker Fund, General Motors, Earhart Foundation, U.S. Gypsum, Donaldson Brown, Chrysler, Consolidated Edison, E. I. Dupont de Nemours, Gulf Oil, Marshall Field Co., Montgomery Ward, Sun Oil, U. S. Steel, Republic Steel, B. F. Goodrich, National Steel, Armour, Intl. Nickel, Libby-Owens-Ford, Alfred P. Sloan Foundation, Lammot du Pont, N. Y. Airbrake, Kresge Foundation, Standard Oil of New Jersey, Monsanto Chemical, Sears Roebuck, Detroit Edison, Westinghouse, Nash-Kelvinator, J. L. Hudson Co., and the Maurice & Laura Falk Foundation.

The foundation's literature attacks rent control, taxes, the Marshall Plan, social security, the TVA, health insurance, farm price supports and the repeal of Taft-Hartley. Union researchers say Read is "one of the best organizers and fund raisers on the reactionary front." Neither Read nor his Foundation for Economic Education is registered under the Lobby Act.

MASS DISTRIBUTOR: If it's the job of the Foundation for Economic Education to "influence the influencers," it's the job of the Committee for Constitutional Government, headed by Edward A. Rumely, to achieve mass circulation of literature assaulting the Fair Deal and organized labor. Founded back in the 30's, the CCG distributed 82 million books and pamphlets between 1937 and 1944, and since then its activities "have greatly expanded," congressional investigators discovered.

Rumely himself was recently cited for contempt of Congress, over Republican objections, because he refused to tell the Lobby Committee who his chief backers were. But the congressmen found who many of his supporters were anyway. Rumely claims that he "sells" his literature to corporations and that the corporations aren't really contributors or backers at all.

However, when a corporation "buys" 5000 copies of a CCG book such as John T. Flynn's scurrilous "The Road Ahead," Rumely has a list of persons prepared in advance to whom the "purchased" copies are to be sent.

The CCG, which is a registered lobby, is not only a front for big business interests, but it has fronts of its own. Fighters for Freedom, America's Future, the Constitution & Free Enterprise Foundation and Features for America are all subsidiaries of the CCG.

Rumely, who once was briefly jailed for efforts in behalf of Germany during World War I, has plenty of money to work with. From 1947 to 1950, the CCG's main account had deposits of $1,285,125. Average check deposited was $1320. (The Lobby Act requires that every contributor of more than $500 to a lobby group be registered. But, according to Rumely, these checks were for book "sales.")

The Constitution & Free Enterprise Foundation had deposits of $139,239, and its average check deposited was $1199. America's Future had deposits of $1,054,721 and the average check was $1326. The CCG, which was founded by the reactionary Rochester, N. Y., publisher, Frank Gannett, represents the kind of Republican thinking that holds Gov. Thomas E. Dewey to be "red-hot radical."

CATALYST: The dictionary says a "catalyst" is a substance that initiates or accelerates chemical action between two or more other substances without combining with either of them or undergoing any chemical change. Labor researchers think Merwin K. Hart's National Economic Council is the catalyst of the "Reactionary Conspiracy." They quote Lammot du Pont, of the Delaware dynasty, as calling Hart's organization just that. Lammot du Pont is one of the chief backers of all the reactionary networks.

The NEC was formed in 1943. It grew out of the old New York State Economic Council, also headed by Hart, who is chiefly known as a friend of Spanish Dictator Francisco Franco and for his anti-Semitic views. (Gerald L. K. Smith, the rabble-rousing racist, wrote Hart in 1949, saying, "God bless your courageous soul.")

Labor researchers quote the House lobby probers as saying the NEC, a registered lobby, finances itself by "a particularly vigorous effort to point out to its contributors the tax-saving virtues of large-scale institutional sponsorship of the council's publications."

The view of the big-business backers of Hart and the others was expressed by Lammot du Pont a year ago when he wrote: "We all have many calls upon us, but in my opinion the NEC should stand among those at the top or near the top of any businessman's list."

BY THEIR own admission, Hart and his backers favor new restrictions on labor unions, removal of the present Supreme Court members from office as "socialistic," and barring of the present justices from ever holding judicial posts again; limiting the government's power to tax, aid to Spain, a ceiling on income taxes, giving tideland oil to the states (whose governments the oil companies can put it in their hip pockets), and taxation of cooperatives.

At the same time, they're against public housing, the Marshall Plan, Point Four, civil rights legislation, TVA and farm price supports. Naturally, Hart's literature follows this line.

There are, of course, other organizations in the "Reactionary Conspiracy," such as the National Tax Equality Association, the American Medical Association, Spiritual Mobilization (which plugs reaction with religious themes), the National Association of Real Estate Boards, the Edison Electric Institute and others. But it's the organizations headed by Hart, Rumely and Read in which activity centers. They are the main strands in the network.

Read, Rumely and Hart are the field generals of the "Reactionary Conspiracy."

Council Replaces One Ousted By CIO

MEMBERS of CIO unions in Contra Costa County, Calif., have completed establishment of a new CIO Council to replace one that lost its charter because of its domination by the Communists.

The new council was set up at a meeting in Oil Workers Hall, Martinez, in the heart of the heavily-industrialized East Bay area, by some 35 delegates from locals of the Oil Workers, Steelworkers, Rubber Workers and Auto Workers.

The charter of the old council was revoked last August by CIO Pres. Philip Murray after a hearing by CIO Regional Director Tim Flynn of San Francisco on charges that it was "no longer representative of CIO membership" in the county.

JACK BRUHL of the Oil Workers was elected temporary president. Other temporary officers named were Gene Conkel, Steelworkers, vice president; E. J. Amiot, Auto Workers, secretary-treasurer, and George Kelty, Oil Workers, sergeant-at-arms. They will serve until regular elections early next year.

The new council set as its first business the enrollment of all Contra Costa County CIO unions, which have a total of some 10,000 members, and a last-ditch fight to save rent controls in the urban sections of the county.

It adopted a constitution which bars affiliation of or support for organizations or political candidates "who are consistent supporters of or who actively participate in the activities of the Communist Party or any fascist, totalitarian or other subversive organization which opposes the democratic principles to which our nation and this organization are dedicated."

"It so happens I'm the union representative at this plant—NOW will you read this contract?"

Biz Seeks To Relax Trust Curbs

SEC. OF Commerce Charles Sawyer and his 90-man big business Advisory Committee met at Sea Island, Ga., for a three-day semisecret discussion of the defense program.

The business spokesmen made another try to seize full control of defense spending through manipulation of the anti-trust laws.

Just before the conference closed, Secy. of Defense George Marshall told the big business spokesmen that the Defense Dept. is half way through the job of drawing up a four-year military production program in which orders will be scheduled so evenly that there will be no peaks and valleys of employment.

Before that, the business leaders had expressed their willingness to pay higher taxes to support the defense effort. However, they opposed the idea of an excess profits tax even if the tax should be patriotically labeled a "defense profits tax." They also bitterly opposed price controls unless or until the defense program reaches $30 billion a year.

INSTEAD of controls, the big business representatives said they wanted the anti-trust laws relaxed so they could indulge in practices now held illegal. Presumably, they also wanted advance rulings on certain practices, something the government has opposed in the past.

Reports of the big business committee's views on the anti-trust laws touched off some fireworks in Washington and elsewhere. George J. Burger, vice-president of the National Federation of Independent Business, called for "all-out enforcement of anti-trust laws" in connection with defense production. Burger asked whether the Dept. of Commerce and its head had "become the voice of big business." He said that the nation's ability to fill defense needs wouldn't be impaired in any way if the anti-trust laws were vigorously applied.

Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.), chairman of the House Subcommittee on Monopoly, said:

"We must at all costs avoid a repetition of the flagrant abuses made possible in the last war by exemptions being granted in an irresponsible manner."

Celler was highly critical of the secrecy surrounding Sawyer's conference at Sea Island. In the beginning, Sawyer flatly told newspapermen they wouldn't be welcome. However nearly all that happened leaked out anyway.

ONE SUBJECT that came in for broad discussion was manpower. Discussion revolved around draft deferment "referral" (the steering of workers to particular areas or plants where men are needed), training of women, and—of course—strikes. Some wanted government to persuade organized labor to give a "no strike" pledge, but it was believed that most of those present preferred to bargain by themselves. Meanwhile, the committee decided to set up regional groups in important labor centers such as Pittsburgh, Chicago, Detroit and Cleveland.

Production Administrator William H. Harrison and Sawyer told the advisors that the 10% expansion planned by the steel industry was woefully inadequate. Harrison also contended that plans to increase steel production didn't mean much unless ways were found to obtain more manganese. LPA

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5¢ a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 20, 1950 82 No. 47

READY FOR 12th CIO CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION IN CHICAGO

Convention Speakers

MAURICE J. TOBIN (left) and W. STUART SYMINGTON
Secy. of Labor and head of the NSRB, respectively

OSCAR CHAPMAN
Secy. of Interior

SEN. PAUL DOUGLAS
Illinois Democrat

DR. MORDECAI JOHNSON
President, Howard Univ.

HENRY MORGENTHAU, JR.
Former Secy. of Treasury

In Chicago There's Nary A Dull Moment

Chicago, scene of the 1950 CIO Convention, is one of the most visited cities in the world.

Every year some 20 million people drop in to look it over—and a major proportion of them are, like the CIO folks, delegates and guests at conventions.

Chicago exudes excitement as perhaps no other American city. And the excitement centers in the Loop, an area five blocks by seven blocks bounded by the elevated railway tracks, at one edge of which is the convention hotel, the Palmer House.

The hotel lies at the northeast corner of State and Adams sts., and has an entrance on Wabash ave., which runs parallel with State st., one of the world's biggest shopping streets. Within three or four blocks from the hotel are the big department stores. A block beyond Adams st. is Michigan ave., site of most of the specialty shops. Across Michigan ave. is Grant Park, Chicago's "front lawn," and beyond that is glittering Lake Michigan.

Most of the city's movie and legitimate theatres are within walking distance. So is Orchestra Hall, where the concerts are given, and the Art Institute, famous for its exhibits. The impressive Board of Trade building, with its observation tower rising 605 feet above the city, is a few short blocks down Adams st.

The Furniture Mart, largest building in the world, lies along the Chicago River just north of the Loop. Restaurants—good ones—are plentiful in all parts of the city, and the Gold Coast, the main night club section, is a short cab or subway ride to the north. The stockyards are some distance southwest of the hotel.

The delegates will have plenty of entertainment besides what they make for themselves, with the theatres, night clubs, museums, window shopping and just plain gawking.

For football enthusiasts major college and professional games will be on tap right after the convention. Later goers-home can take in the Northwestern-Illinois Big Ten contest Nov. 25, or stay over another day and see the Bears play the San Francisco 49ers.

At the Stadium the Blackhawks meet the Boston Bruins in a bruising hockey game the night of Nov. 23. And every afternoon and evening there is indoor ice skating at the Arena.

Mrs. Anna Rosenberg Gets Manpower Post In Defense Dept.

NO WOMAN has ever held as high a post in the United States Military Establishment as Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg, who on Nov. 15 became assistant secretary of defense.

A Dept. of Defense press release said:

"Mrs. Rosenberg, in addition to performing the duties of Assistant Secretary of Defense, will specialize in matters relating to manpower and personnel policy, both subjects in which she is an acknowledged authority."

The release also contained an impressive list of governmental posts she has held.

But that does not begin to tell the story of Mrs. Rosenberg, which shows that America is still a land of opportunity where a person of ability may rise to great heights irrespective of place of birth or sex.

Mrs. Rosenberg (nee Lederer) was born 48 years ago in Budapest. Her father made furniture for Emperor Franz Joseph.

PERHAPS THE best thing that ever happened to her came when the Emperor canceled an order for furniture. For then her family went broke and came to the United States, settling down in New York to start over again. She was then about 10 years old.

Not so many years later—when she was 16—her unique talents, the ability to give sensible advice and the ability to mediate disputes, came to the fore.

This was during World War I, when boys at Clinton High School in New York, went on strike because military drill lengthened the school day an hour and a half.

Anna attended Wadleigh Girls' High School. What the boys did was really none of her business, but she told them:

"For God's sake, don't queer things by striking!"

Then this mite of a girl—she is only 5 feet 3 inches tall now—persuaded the Board of Alderman to shorten the school day.

HER TALENT for giving sensible advice has earned her as much as $60,000 a year as a public relations counsel for several nationally known firms.

It was tact as a mediator that won her a series of tough jobs for city, state and federal governments.

She served on the New York City Industrial Relations Board, the National Recovery Administration during the depression, the Social Security Board and the War Manpower Commission.

President Roosevelt paid tribute to her ability when he named her to several posts.

Another who thought highly of her was the late Mayor La Guardia of New York who once remarked:

"She knows more about labor relations and human relations than any man in the country."

And General Marshall doubtless knew that he needed Mrs. Rosenberg's unique talents when he recommended her for the difficult task of helping to shape manpower and personnel policy for the Dept. of Defense.

MMSW Wins 1 In 12

The Commies north of the border aren't faring any better in labor unions than they are in the U.S. A recent tabulation of Canadian elections involving the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers and right-wing unions shows the Commie-dominated union won only one election out of 12. The total vote was 4392 for right-wing unions, 1675 for MMSW.

Mrs. Rosenberg Has Held Variety Of Federal Positions

Here are some of the posts held by Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg:

Personal representative of President Roosevelt in 1944 and President Truman in 1945 in the European Theater of War; Secretary of President Roosevelt's Labor Victory Board from 1942 to 1945; member of the Advisory Board of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion from 1944 to 1947 and of the Manpower Consulting Committee of the Army and Navy Munitions Board.

Also, she served as a member of the President's Advisory Commission on Universal Military Training and allied matters connected with the national defense, and as a member of the New York State War Council.

Other posts held by Mrs. Rosenberg since 1935 include: Regional Director of the National Recovery Administration, of the Social Security Administration, of Defense, Health and Welfare Services, of the War Manpower Commission and as a member of the Advisory Committee on Policy of the Office of Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs.

Recently Mrs. Rosenberg has been serving as a public member of the Committee on Mobilization Policy of the National Security Resources Board and as special consultant on manpower problems to Chairman W. Stuart Symington of the National Security Resources Board.

Chapman: Steel Shortage Slows Whole 'Machine'

Steel-making capacity is inadequate, Secretary of the Interior Oscar L. Chapman told the American Petroleum Institute at Los Angeles. The shortage, he said, is "threatening both the national defense program and the civilian economy." Chapman urged the steelmakers to "raise their sights."

The shortage of specialized steel products for the oil industry is "reaching alarming proportions," said Chapman, who heads the Petroleum Administration for Defense.

Thus Chapman joined those who have criticized the steel industry for years, for its shortsightedness and for its belief in an economy of scarcity. "Inadequate capacity to make steel puts the brakes on our whole industrial machine," Chapman declared.

MRS. ANNA M. ROSENBERG (center) takes the oath of office as Assistant Secretary of Defense from Felix Larkin, the department's general counsel (left), while Secretary of Defense George C. Marshall holds the Bible for her.

Murray Looks Back A Decade

CIO: For Millions A Better Way Of Life

PHILIP MURRAY, in his report to the 1950 National CIO convention, looks back on "ten long turbulent years" as president.

He finds them good, all things considered, because while they have been "years of struggle and strike and strife," they also have been "years of growth and adjustment" which have left the CIO stronger, more united, more dedicated than ever before to the principles of democracy."

The man who a decade ago stood on the platform at the Atlantic City convention, the applause of election still ringing, and dedicated to the CIO "my life, my being, my energy and such little wisdom as God Almighty may have given to me," reported to the 1950 convention that the organization he heads, particularly in the 10 years he has been president, "has literally reshaped the thinking and the economic and political life of our beloved United States."

"THROUGH the CIO, and only because of the CIO," he reported, "millions of American workers have obtained a better way of life for themselves and for their families.

"The measure of the economic advances wrested from American corporations by the unions of the CIO can be counted only in scores of billions of dollars. The CIO has given renewed strength and spirit to our American democratic institutions.

"Never in all human history has one single organization brought so much good to so many people."

The place of the CIO in American history is assured, he said, and the members can take pride in the fact that at a crucial period, "they have built an organization which, indeed, has become a bulwark of our democratic society."

He noted the growth of CIO during the last decade into a fighting organization true to its heritage and objectives, which survived all assaults.

PHILIP MURRAY
Looks Over 10 Years As Head Of CIO

"We have fought off the attacks of employers who would smash all unions," he recalled; "of legislators who would seize from our hands the traditional rights of American citizens; of totalitarians who would bore into our organizations in order to subvert them and pervert them in the interests of the evil ideologies of dictatorship. But no outside interest, no hostile force, has been able to thwart our constant progress."

Murray did not dwell long on the decade of his leadership. Instead he looked forward to "an atomic, electronic era, the outlines of which are as yet barely perceptible," upon which the world is entering.

Much remains to be done, he said. Poverty, disease, insecurity and war must be abolished. Unions will be needed, "strong . . . democratically organized . . . thoughtful . . . imaginative." They must not be "hidebound or inflexible, but zealously ready and eager to meet the future."

In his review of the year he reported that the "harassment, opposition and obstructionism" of Communists he noted in his 1949 report has been overcome . . . "and that today the CIO is more united than at any time in the past."

He recounted the expulsions of 10 Communist-dominated unions and the salvation of another, the Furniture Workers, when the party-line bloc in its leadership was defeated at its convention. He continued:

"I am proud that this process was accomplished under thoroughly democratic procedures, with each of the unions which had been charged with Communist domination receiving full hearings and complete due process.

"The totalitarians were loud in their criticism of the CIO and its determination to maintain and strengthen our democratic form of organization. The record is clear, however, that their fulminations were devoid of facts. In practically every case, the accused leaderships in effect pleaded guilty to the charges lodged against them; they merely sought to challenge the right of the CIO to unearth and expose their plot."

The proceedings, he added, gave the Communist movement in this country its most serious setback, while at the same time increasing the unanimity, mutual understanding, effectiveness and militancy of the CIO.

He predicted that "before long, the influence of the Communist Party on the American labor movement will have been erased once and for all."

SINCE THE Cleveland convention, Murray reported, CIO unions have made "admirable records." Company-paid pensions and welfare and security programs have become the "accepted norm" in wide sectors of industry. Wages have been improved as CIO unions remained alert to threats to the living standards of their members and their improvement. The Social Security Act has been improved, "a major victory for the American people, and long overdue."

The "heinous act of aggression perpetrated by the North Korean Communists and their Kremlin sponsors" interrupted CIO progress toward a better life, Murray said.

He recalled that upon the invasion, he quickly pledged to President Truman the CIO's full support of the U. S. and UN fight against this aggression. He expressed the hope that the reaction of the democratic sector of the world to the attack may halt Kremlin imperialist efforts to control the world, and pledged CIO support of the defense mobilization.

But the CIO has no intention of permitting profiteering, he said. Instead it is demanding equality of sacrifice as a guiding principle, not as mere lip service. And it wants full participation of organized labor in both the planning and operational stages of the defense program. He pointed out that he represents the CIO on the Committee for Mobilization Policy of the National Security Resources Board, and predicted that other CIO representatives will be named to responsible posts in the emergency.

HE REGRETTED the inadequacy of defense legislation, not only on taxes but in controlling inflation. He urged the CIO and the nation to develop a program of moral and spiritual leadership and offer it to the democratic world as part of our fight to preserve world freedom.

To this end, every practical proposal to help the economic and social institutions of non-Communist nations must be encouraged, he said—and at home, we must build "an America without poverty, without bias and prejudice, without exploitation or strife" to prove the efficacy of the democratic method.

The "democratic internationalism" of labor as expressed through the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, he said, is "gratifying," and he forecast for the ICFTU in the future "significant and constructive contributions" to unionism throughout the world.

Workers' Buying Power Falls Over 7% In 6 Years

THE ECONOMIC history of the United States for the decade of his presidency was reviewed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in his report to the 1950 convention.

During that time, he found, the nation met the challenge of a global war by virtue of "an expanding and dynamic (economic) system in which free men are capable of achieving higher living standards and are also capable of meeting the needs of their own defense."

But the postwar period was a challenge to American workers, he recounted. Only the strength of the labor movement saved the country from the destruction of unions and the depression that followed World War I, he said, and leaves us today facing "the new responsibilities of mobilization in the decade of the 1950s with confidence and hope."

His history showed that in spite of the strength of the labor movement, the buying power of the average worker, under bitter reactionary attack, fell between the wartime peak in 1944 and the first half of 1950 by more than 7%. Inflation, he asserted, "took its toll from wage earners at a time when corporations made record profits."

CIO-AFL Talks Are Credited To Joint Endeavor In ICFTU

One of the by-products of the joint CIO-AFL participation in organization of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has been the labor unity talks the CIO proposed last April, Pres. Philip Murray said in his report to the convention.

Representatives of the CIO and AFL met at his suggestion and agreed on continuing, cooperative joint activities on international relations, legislation and political action. Since then, reported Murray, "our two organizations demonstrated, on both the national and local level, their ability to work together."

There will be more meetings, he said, "in the hope that we shall make progress in the direction of the cherished goal of every American union member: the attainment of labor unity."

"Meanwhile," he continued, "I know that our unions will continue their splendid endeavors in behalf of the membership and in support of the welfare of this nation. Our organizations, which have done so much to bring dignity and security and happiness to millions of families, will not be deterred from their constant struggle to protect the workers of this country and assure them a stake in its liberties and its general well-being.

"In a world torn by the threat of dictatorship and discord, the Congress of Industrial Organizations stands as a beacon light on the road to a better, a democratic future for all mankind."

"The buying power of weekly earnings in manufacturing," he specified, "from the first half of 1946 to the first half of 1950, increased only 5.9%, far less than the 11% average increase in productivity. In the same period, the buying power of corporate profits rose 43%."

PROFITS ARE still going up, Murray said, with the Korean war an added factor, and the buying power of workers is continuing to drop despite the success of CIO unions in winning wage increases for their members.

The Defense Production Act, which aims at effective mobilization and a stable domestic economy, was passed without regard for economic reality, he said, and its proviso for simultaneous wage and price controls is "both inequitable and unworkable." It is a failure as an anti-inflation weapon, he insisted, and will only serve to weaken the mobilization effort.

For an economic program to marshall the economic and spiritual strength of free Americans and make it the major factor in extending the frontiers of freedom, Murray proposed:

"1. The needs and goals of mobilization should be defined, and a greater effort must be made to increase public understanding of the crisis.

"2. The mobilization program should be bold enough to do all that is necessary now, so that it can move rapidly, if necessary, into an all-out effort.

"3. It should be the clearly defined policy of the government that all sections of the civilian population equitably share in any sacrifices. Defense legislation and administration should embody this policy.

"4. Nothing should be permitted to stand in the way of the immediate expansion of military production. There should also be assurances that essential civilian production will be given preference over the production of luxuries.

"5. All possible protection should be given to the living standards of the people.

"6. The domestic economy must be stabilized and effective anti-inflationary measures, based on equality of sacrifice, should be carried out.

"7. The American economy should once again become an 'arsenal of democracy,' supplying not only armaments to the free nations, but also aid in improving the living standards of all peoples who are politically free to help themselves."

Dividends Up Income

Personal income in September was at the annual rate of $228,300 million, a new high, and $2900 million over the August level. The explanation: a sharp jump in corporate dividend payments. Personal income includes wages and net income from farm and non-farm enterprises.

CIO Has Broken Back Of American CP

Commies Ineffective Unless Entrenched In Labor Movement—And They Have Only A Toe-hold Left In U. S.

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE PRE-CONVENTION issue of the CIO News last year carried the following statement:

"It's been a long, bitter, nasty fight and it won't end this week, no matter what action is taken this week by the CIO at its convention in Cleveland.

"The Commies and fellow travelers may be kicked out of the CIO—or they may walk out—or the convention may pave the way for their expulsion.

"Any of these three moves would mean the lefties are through as a force inside the CIO, but it wouldn't mean the left-right fight in the trade union movement is over.

"Some of the skirmishes in the future probably will be nastier than any that have occurred in the past if that is possible.

"So it would be foolish to regard what happens this week at Cleveland as anything more than it actually is—an important battle in the worldwide ideological war."

WELL, IT'S convention time again—and time to take a look at what has happened within CIO, and to the ideological war, during the past year.

Eleven unions charged last November with being Communist dominated are no longer in the CIO.

Two were kicked out by the convention. Eight were ousted by the Executive Board after hearings. One voted to withdraw, declining to appear before a hearing committee to fight its case. It also was expelled.

One union facing Commie charges—the Furniture Workers—cleaned its own house and was permitted to remain in CIO.

And what about the statements of the Commies that such a course would wreck the CIO—make it weak and ineffective.

The CIO is numerically stronger today than it was at the beginning of last year's convention.

And it is no longer hindered in its organizational work by the Red taint which a comparatively few Commies were able to give the whole organization.

TO PUT IT bluntly—and factually—the CIO in a year has broken the back of the Communist Party in the United States.

A Communist movement which does not have its roots firmly in the labor movement is like a house without a foundation.

There is still a CP. It still wields influence over American workers. The fight still goes on.

It makes a lot of nasty noise. It still controls a handful of independent unions, but its strength is waning.

This doesn't mean that there isn't an important "mopping up" job still to be done.

There is. And the job is important. And it's a job the CIO intends to complete. It intends to clean out the few remaining strongholds of Kremlin company unionism.

THE IDEOLOGICAL war has gone well during the past year in some parts of the world—and badly in others.

The action taken by the CIO within its own house and by the CIO and AFL in helping establish the International Confederation of Free Trade Union has given encouragement to liberty-loving workers the world over.

The fact that the CIO ousted the Commies and is now stronger than a year ago should provide a valuable lesson for union groups in other countries.

Unfortunately, our country as a whole has not moved as rapidly or as boldly as the CIO in the battle against Red totalitarianism.

The CIO has spent money and energy—and a lot of both—fighting the Commies. Until the beginning of the Korean war the U.S. was spending "peanuts" on the same cause.

The CIO coupled deeds with propaganda to accomplish the job. Our Congress has been stingy on both counts.

WELL, AS WAS said before, it's convention time again—and it's time for anti-Communist trade union leaders to tackle new problems.

This year it will be different. The convention won't be cluttered up by a bunch of party hacks spouting the old Kremlin line. There won't be a lot of jockeying along ideological lines.

The task ahead, because of Communist activities outside the U. S., is now much greater than the one we thought we faced a year ago.

But, certainly, the CIO must have gained some "know-how" from its experiences that would prove valuable to the nation as a whole in its campaign for freedom and against totalitarianism throughout the world.

So it's not unlikely that the convention will point out that one of the greatest contributions our country could make to the fight against the Commies would be to help men and women everywhere obtain a higher standard of living.

IT MAY BE DULLER, BUT—

Memorandum to CIO convention delegates:

Those of you who were at the 1949 convention in Cleveland really saw some excitement. Remember?

Philip Murray and those who supported his viewpoint gave the Commies and their buddies a verbal beating. Then a majority of delegates gave the United Electrical Workers and Farm Equipment Workers the gate and paved the way for expulsion of other Commie-dominated unions.

Yes, there were lots of fireworks last year.

Things are going to be different this year.

There won't be as much excitement, which—in a sense—means the convention will be duller.

But it won't be of less importance.

You and the working men and women you represent face a lot of problems. Some of them are extremely serious.

Well, this year you have an opportunity to tackle problems head-on without having to bother with the shenanigans of delegates who are more interested in the Kremlin line than in the welfare of CIO members.

But you won't be able to get away from the Communist issue. A lot of the problems confronting you stem directly or indirectly from efforts of the Reds to take over the world.

Take the cost of living as an example. The Commie invasion of South Korea provided the excuse for boosting the price of many products. And the fighting itself placed an additional burden on all Americans.

Your taxes—and the taxes of everybody else—were boosted to help finance the preparedness program made necessary by Red activities.

YOU HAVE A LARGE TASK

Because conditions throughout the world and in our own country are what they are, you have a big task before you this week—and the actions you take will be important. Those of us on the CIO News believe one of the outstanding things you can do is to spell out a program for equality of sacrifice in the difficult days ahead.

No segment of our population should be permitted to profit from bloodshed and national preparedness. No segment should be required to carry an undue share of the burden.

There hasn't been equality of sacrifice up to this point. Labor—organized and unorganized—has been taking an economic beating as prices and profits mounted.

Your organization already has a program designed to make democracy work better—and a strong democracy is the best safeguard against communism.

Perhaps you will find ways to sharpen and improve this program. Perhaps your best efforts along this line would be to let more people know more about our program.

This is the week in which your job is to help make policy decisions—and the decisions you make will be watched closely by labor all over the world.

And what you do this year—like what you did last year—will have a direct bearing on the future of the world.

Don't let anybody tell you it won't. You delegates will be speaking for some six million workers and their families.

And you speak a language the workers of the world understand.

Greater Conservation Is Urged

THE CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation continued during the past year its campaign for use of the country's natural resources in the interests of all the people, according to its report to the CIO Convention.

It particularly pressed for passage of Missouri Valley Authority and Columbia Valley Authority legislation and enactment of the St. Lawrence River power and seaway project, soil conservation, federal control of forest cutting on private as well as government-owned land, the development of wilderness areas and expansion of outdoor recreational facilities.

Importance of the river valley authorities revolves to a considerable degree around inexpensive hydroelectric power development in which "the interest of the membership of the CIO . . . is apparent," the report said.

"New industries in areas like the southeast and northwest mean new opportunities for union organization," according to the report. "They mean more jobs in these new plants and higher incomes for the people of those regions. The construction and equipment involved amount to billions of dollars worth of employment for construction workers, steel and aluminum workers, building equipment workers, electrical workers, iron and copper ore miners, and so on.

"Electrification means inexpensive electric current for homes and farms. We are concerned at the same time with the immediate economic interests of the workers in the agencies which produce, transmit and distribute hydroelectric power, and determined to protect and extend their collective bargaining rights."

In the St. Lawrence project the report said:

"Of importance not only to New York but to the entire New England region and to states like Pennsylvania and Ohio, in respect to electric power, and to the entire Great Lakes Basin in respect to navigation, the CIO has urged Congress to take prompt action on this proposal."

The committee also worked with organizations protecting wildlife and salmon fisheries in the Columbia Basin, and joined other groups opposing unfair seizure of American Indian lands.

Committee members are John Brophy, chairman; Anthony W. Smith, executive secretary; James A. Davis, Missouri CIO; A. L. Kojetinsky, Steelworkers District 34; Irwin L. DeShetler, CIO regional director, Los Angeles; Chester Dusten, CIO regional director, Portland, Ore.; Rodney C. Jacobson, Minnesota CIO; Harry Boyer, Pennsylvania CIO; Harold J. Garno, New York State CIO; J. William Belanger, Massachusetts CIO; Earl A. Crowder, Tennessee CIO; J. J. Hickman, Texas CIO; Clarence L. Palmer, Utah CIO, and Joseph Fisher, Utility Workers.

Councils Shift Emphasis

THE ROLE OF the industrial union councils has shifted in recent years from one of primary emphasis on organizing to the broader and more complicated one of legislative, educational, political and public relations work, according to report of the Councils Dept.

At present, there are 39 state councils and 236 city or county groups.

"In the few cases where intervention was necessary," the hand of Moscow has been removed from the helm and control is now 100% in the hands of the membership.

John Brophy, who for 10 years was director of Industrial union councils, has assumed important new duties in New York as adviser to the United Nations for the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, and his former duties have been assumed by Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, Director of Organization.

THE STATE councils, the report explains, now are the centers through which CIO maintains contact with the state governments, while the city and county councils serve the same functions in relations to local governments.

Both state and smaller councils are called on for legislative work, not only local and state but national; labor and general education; public relations; race relations; regional planning and political action. They are the groups which work, in cooperation with the national office, to try to sell and implement CIO policy.

All council work is extremely important, the report stresses, but probably the most vital facet of the work is year-round, intensive legislative and political activity.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer

Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, John Green, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher

Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII November 20, 1950 No. 47

He Put The Blame On Wrong Group

THE ORGANIZER shook his head as if bewildered and then declared, "He was the darndest, stupidest guy I ever talked to."

He was referring to a worker who had said, "I know all about unions and I don't want to have anything to do with them!"

The organizer was a bit burned up and showed it. He kept talking about "that stupid guy" and then he got around to telling the whole story. Here's how it went:

A FEW DAYS after being assigned to a new membership drive the organizer came across a mill worker who looked familiar.

"Didn't I meet you over in ———?" the organizer asked.

"You sure did and I don't want to have anything to do with you. I know all about unions and I don't want anything to do with them, either."

"How come?" the CIO man asked.

"You remember Joe ———? Well, you guys just about ruined him and his family and I don't want the same thing to happen to me."

"What about Joe?" the organizer asked.

"He really got a lousy deal from you guys. After you came to town he talked with you fellows and then became a voluntary organizer.

"That's when his troubles started. His wife was active in the PTA and the women there really made life miserable for her after Joe joined the CIO—gave her an awful kicking around."

THEN THE mill worker told about what happened to Joe and the Sunday School class he had been teaching.

"You remember that Citizens Committee the company set up to fight the union? Well, that group turned on the heat until Joe finally decided he'd better quit teaching the class. Things got so hot he just up and walked out of the church.

"That was just the beginning. Joe didn't really get in trouble until you guys lost the NLRB election. Joe had been with the company about 15 years and was a good worker—but the company fired him the next day after the election.

"He hunted around town for a couple of days and finally landed a job at a garage. He was a pretty good mechanic and he was doing fine until one of the mill officials came in for some gas and saw him working there.

"The mill official and the boss at the garage had a little talk and Joe was out of a job a few minutes later. The boss said he either had to fire Joe or lose the mill's business.

"It took Joe about a week to find another job; finally got one at the ice house. It didn't pay much but it was work and Joe needed money for his wife and kids."

JOE'S EMPLOYMENT at the ice house, the mill worker said, lasted less than a week—and then he was fired again because of "company pressure."

"He hung around town for a week or 10 days but nobody would put him to work because everybody was afraid of what the mill would do. You remember how the company ran things around town, don't you?"

The organizer said he remembered all too well.

"Well, I left town, just because I wanted to, a few weeks later and I haven't seen Joe since. But I've heard he was blacklisted by all the mills in the state and finally had to go to work in a little filling station in a town where nobody knew about him.

"So I guess you can see why I'm against the unions."

The organizer hesitated a moment and then said, "The company illegally fought the union. It illegally fired Joe. It was responsible for illegally getting him blacklisted and it had no right to interfere with PTA and church work.

"Don't you think you should blame the company and not the union?"

"Hell, no," replied the mill worker. "The company was there before the union was and Joe would still be on his old job if you fellows hadn't come in and stirred up trouble."

A.L.S.

Ten Years Of Progress

French, Italian Workers Need Better Conditions—Martin

WITHOUT THE Marshall Plan the Communists "would long since have moved in upon the governments of Italy and France," Harry Martin, president of the CIO Newspaper Guild and labor information director of the Economic Cooperation Administration in Europe, told the Commonwealth Club of San Francisco in an address last week.

The Reds would have applied "pressures from without and fomenting disturbances from within," Martin said, so that the Communist army might now have been at the Atlantic, rather than the Elbe River in Germany, had it not been for the U. S. aid to Europe.

"In the short space of two and a half years," he said, "if we have done nothing else, at least we have kept the forces of Stalin from sweeping across the face of Western Europe.

"We have halted the westward thrust of the Russian bear. We have won new friends abroad and we have given them the means for economic survival. They are our partners in every sense of the word as we seek further answers to the new crisis that lurks around every corner.

"WE MUST SHOW them that democracy can be defended at the Elbe and that we are with them in the determination that their own lands shall not be despoiled again by the crunch of the hostile armored boot . . .

"Without joint resistance by all the free peoples of the earth, there is small chance that any one free people—even ourselves—can last for long. The strongest single forces now pledged to stand beside us in this worldwide striving for peace and for freedom is the power of the free workers of the earth."

Although the working people of free Europe constitute the sturdiest bulwark against Red aggression, Martin pointed out, "it is a tragic fact that in some of the countries, notably in France and in Italy, conditions among the workers have not kept pace with other improvements" wrought by ECA.

"This is a situation that must need be remedied," said Martin, "and remedied ere it is too late if we are to depend, as depend we must, upon the great body of the toilers in these countries to provide their share of the forces available to fight in their defense.

"This is a fact that is recognized by all the thinking elements of American leadership and that must be faced up to fairly and squarely by the European governments and by the business leadership of the nations in question."

Martin paid tribute to David Zellerbach, a San Franciscan and former chief of the ECA Mission to Italy, as one who was "unceasing in his criticism of the underdeveloped attitude of the Italians toward labor."

"There were times," he said, "when he lectured the Italians so frankly on these matters that he almost sounded like an American union president!

"He did this because the situation demanded it, because he knew that the only way to defeat Communism in Europe is to destroy the factors that make Communists of people—factors like hunger, disease, poverty and want.

"COMMUNISM has a vested interest in chaos; the well-fed, well-clothed and well-housed of this earth do not make ready converts to the cause of the Kremlin, except perhaps for a few crackpots in our own country . . .

"Dave Zellerbach spoke for the little people in Italy. He spoke up for land reform and for a better share in the fruits of recovery for the poor people. His former assistant and present successor, Leon Dayton, is carrying on that same campaign.

"This approach has created consternation in the ranks of the Communists and of the survivors of Fascism alike. For it has given the lie to the Russian charge that all of America is dominated by Wall Street and it has given the lie with equal force to the notion of the reactionary forces in Italy that they are welcome to use American money through the Marshall Plan to exploit the proverty of the more unfortunate citizens.

"The fight has not been won, but it is being won and it will be carried on until that day when victory smiles upon the battle so well begun."

Martin reported with "regret" that Communist unions are still stronger than their free rivals in Italy and France, where the workers have not had "a fair share of the fruits of recovery."

CP, Anti-CP Unions In Italian Strike

The buying power of the average worker in Italy is so low that anti-Communist unions were driven to cooperate with Communist labor organizations in staging a nationwide industrial strike on Nov. 14 to force increases in wages.

An estimated five million workers left their jobs just as local bus and trolley workers returned to their posts after a 16-hour strike aimed at achieving the same end. Reports indicated that about 80% of the workers joined the walkout in the industrial north and up to 50% in less industrialized sections.

CIO Made Up Losses Due To Expulsions

ONE OF THE most momentous decisions made at the last convention was to rid the CIO of the disruptive-minded, left-wing groups which had set out to destroy the organization. Twelve months later this decision has been carried out to the letter.

The potential loss of 675,000 members might have forced a less resolute course of action. The housecleaning process, beginning with the outright expulsion of the Electircal Workers and Farm Equipment Workers at the 1949 convention and ending with executive board expulsion of eight more unions, was completed on schedule.

Allan S. Haywood

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and organization director, reports that the membership loss has now been made up through the utmost cooperation of all CIO affiliates working closely with his department. He points out that many members of the expelled unions have returned to the CIO and many thousand new members have been added.

PERHAPS THE outstanding organizational accomplishment of the past year has been the amazing success of the year-old Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers under the leadership of the administrative chairman, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, in winning 210 out of 245 NLRB elections and becoming the dominant union in the field.

Starting as a newly chartered union with the bargaining rights of its prospective membership in alien hands, IUE-CIO has expanded into an organization that speaks for 276,557 workers in the industry.

However IUE's potential membership far exceeds this total because there are many thousands of workers in newly organized plants where NLRB elections are pending and other thousands in plants where the discredited UE won elections by tiny margins many months ago.

IUE scored outstanding gains in the major manufacturing chains with substantial majorities at General Motors, Westinghouse, General Electric, RCA, Remington-Rand and others. In addition, workers in scores of independent companies have chosen IUE as their bargaining agent. The new union has issued charters to 229 local unions.

WITH THE second round of NLRB elections under way in the industry, many local unions which were forced to remain under UE domination will now have a new opportunity to renounce their Communist leadership and affiliate with the IUE-CIO.

National wage patterns were set in the industry by contracts signed by IUE in August and September. The General Electric agreement, settled after a two weeks' strike in 12 plants, gave IUE members a 10 to 15½c an hour wage boost and included a one-way cost-of-living escalator that will raise wages with increased living costs but will not allow pay cuts should the cost-of-living decline.

Fifty thousand Westinghouse workers got a 10c an hour wage hike in addition to non-contributory pensions and elimination of inequities while Sylvania Electric Corp. employes won a 15c an hour package, two additional paid holidays, life insurance, disability benefits and other improvements.

OTHER BRIGHT spots in the organizational picture for the past year include the chartering of the Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee and the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee. The former has been assigned jurisdiction of workers employed by governmental bodies or civic agencies and has now passed the 35,000 mark in membership.

The Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee was established to cover a portion of the jurisdiction formerly held by the United Office and Professional Workers and has retained within the CIO many of the workers claimed by that ousted organization.

In the western part of the country particularly, the United Steelworkers have had outstanding success in reorganizing workers formerly covered by Mine, Mill and Smelter contracts while the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union has assumed partial jurisdiction over former Food, Tobacco and Agricultural locals.

THE OVERALL picture shows that during the period from July 1, 1949, to June 30, 1950, the CIO participated in 1818 representation elections conducted by the NLRB and won 1072 of them. For the same period 1192 out of 1223 union shop elections were won.

Following are excerpts from the reports submitted to the organization department on progress made by the international unions since the last convention:

Auto: . . . the average dues paying membership of the union last June, July and August for the Auto Workers' 1106 locals was 1,107,326. For September the figure rose to 1,118,046. Virtually the entire membership was covered by agreements containing hospitalization - medical-insurance programs. Substantial wage increases were won and contracts improved.

Clothing: . . . the intensified union label drive, held in conjunction with stepped-up organizing work brought in several of the last remaining holdouts in the men's clothing industry. Dozens of shops in the South, the Mid-West and elsewhere now operate under Clothing Workers' contracts for the first time after many years of stubborn resistance.

Steel: . . . the steel union now has more than 2000 locals and about 1900 collective bargaining contracts. The average hourly rate for steelworkers is $1.71 and negotiations are now being carried on with various companies for a substantial wage increase.

In 1949, the United Steelworkers of America made collective bargaining history. After a long strike against an intransigant industry unmindful of its obligations to its workers, the Steelworkers Union succeeded in negotiating agreements with virtually the entire steel industry, providing insurance and pension benefits for workers in the industry.

Not only did this glorious victory of the Steelworkers yield benefits to them, but, by breaking the solid front of the opposition of many industries to pensions and insurance, it has proved a major factor in the successful campaigns of unions in other industries to obtain similar benefits for their employes.

Vision On Damascus Road Department

The wages of workers should be increased in line with higher profits from improved technology —but the pay boosts shouldn't mean higher prices.

This sentiment is that of the CIO but the words are those of Charles E. Wilson, president of General Motors, and were voiced in Philadelphia last week when he received a gold medal "for the greatest contribution to American business in 1950" from the alumni of the Univ. of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Finance and Commerce.

The "full acceptance" by GM and the CIO Auto Workers of the idea that higher living standards depend on technical advances. Wilson said, is a "very significant step ahead. The five-year agreements negotiated by the UAW and GM, he said, recognizes that "it is logical, fair and reasonable to maintain the purchasing power of an hour's work in terms of goods and services the employe must purchase in his daily living."

Woodworkers: . . . outstanding accomplishment of 1950 was the negotiating of a Health and Welfare Plan. Also the Intl. Woodworkers secured three paid holidays in the lumbering industry for the first time. In the last ten years this union has tripled its membership.

Shipbuilding: . . . In 1940 the Marine and Shipbuilding Workers began its plan for stabilization of the shipbuilding industry during the time of national emergency. The next year the first stabilization raise was brought into the pay envelopes of IUMSW members and the Bethlehem Memorandum of Understanding established. The union has continued its fight for membership gains during the past year.

Textile: . . . During the fiscal year the Textile Workers Union has signed 144 new agreements covering 11,000 workers. Elections were won in 62 plants for 10,500 workers. Renewed interest is being shown throughout the South by textile workers in the wake of increased organizational activities. Employer opposition has continued to flourish.

Stores: . . . the union has stressed organizational drives among the better grade department stores in New York, New England, Chicago and the South. During the past year Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union locals have signed many new contracts providing for wage increases and security clauses. Local 50, Bakery and Confectionery Workers Union, with 3000 members, reaffiliated with RWDSU during the past year. A local of the Fur Workers has transfered to the union in Pittsburgh.

Gas, Coke: . . . during the fiscal year United Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers organized 61 new locals with a total membership of 7727. When the union came into the CIO in 1942 it had 5975 members. The number is now in excess of 60,000.

Barbers: . . . About two-thirds of the membership of the Barbers and Beauty Culturists Union of America is now covered by non-contributory welfare insurance, such as hospitalization, sick benefits and death benefits.

Furniture: . . . The Communist anti-CIO elements which dominated the United Furniture Workers were decisively defeated at the union's recent Sixth Constitutional Convention. The membership adopted a resolution by a 4-1 vote supporting the program and policies of the CIO and is now firmly a part of the national body. Intensive organizing campaigns are under progress in key furniture centers in the South at the present time.

Shoe: . . . The United Shoe Workers have been in a terrific struggle with the Wage and Hour Division of the Dept. of Labor to prevent the granting of learner certificates to manufacturers who seek to avoid payment of the minimum wage and has been successful in limiting the certificates. The union has won about 12 NLRB elections during the past year.

Oil: . . . The Oil Workers Intl. Union has negotiated a number of excellent pension programs during the fiscal year which equal or excel those in other industries. The union is fighting now for substantial wage increases and prospects look good.

Optical: . . . The Optical Workers won more than 75 NLRB elections during the past year. Organizational drives are now under progress at the American Optical Co. main plant in Southbridge, Mass., and at the Bausch and Lomb Optical Co. at Rochester, N. Y.

Marine Engineers: . . . The National Marine Engineers Beneficial Association recently concluded negotiations for a 5½% increase in basic wages for licensed engineers employed by the member companies of the Atlantic and Gulf Coast Maritime Association. Pacific Maritime Association member companies agreed to the increase earlier.

Rubber: . . . The United Rubber, Cork, Linoleum and Plastic Workers Union won 26 out of 44 NLRB elections during the fiscal year. At present 100,000 members are covered by non-contributory pension plans, 17,000 by contributory plans and 4000 by a combination of both.

Utility: . . . The Utility Workers have won three NLRB elections among the employes of the Boston Edison Co., Boston, Mass., since the last convention. These victories added more than 3000 members to the ranks. The union now represents the employes of the majority of the large electric generating plants in the country.

Packing: . . . The outstanding victory of the Packinghouse Workers during the year was the signing of a master contract with Wilson and Co. An 11c pattern won at Armour and Co. has already spread through the industry. The union won 15,000 new members during the past 12 months.

Stone: . . . The United Stone and Allied Products Workers won union shop elections involving 80 companies during the year. Wage increases have ranged from 5 to 11c an hour. Vacation plans have been improved and extended. Pension plans have been negotiated to cover approximately 40% of the membership.

Paper: . . . The United Paperworkers during the past year won elections in 20 plants with about 3000 employes. Over 60% of the members are now covered by better than average pension agreements. More than 75% are covered by insurance and welfare plans.

Telephone: . . . The Communications Workers have added workers in one more company of the Bell System, the Ohio Bell Telephone Co., during the past year and now has 16 of the 23 Bell companies under agreement. It also holds contracts for about 60 of the larger independent companies in the U. S. and holds some contracts in Canada. Altogether CWA represents more than 300,000 workers in the industry.

Transport: . . . In 1950 the Transport Workers Union won a 10 year battle for union recognition on New York municipal transit lines and now represents 42,000 employes of the N. Y. City Board of Transportation. The new agreement established the principle of the 40-hour week in municipal transportation.

Insurance: . . . Collective bargaining elections have already been won by the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee for the employes of four companies. The IAWOC has set for itself the task of bringing into the CIO the 750,000 men and women who work for insurance companies.

Government: . . . The Committee has now passed the 35,000 mark in membership and is demonstrating that government and civic workers can be organized into an effective trade union group.

Maritime: . . . The gains of the past year have put the NMU well into the foreground of the seagoing unions. In spite of a severe drop in shipping, the union has held a solid core of 45,000 dues paying members.

Transport Service: . . . In the year 1950, UTSE gained seven units among red caps, cannery workers, tobacco workers, fertilizer workers and timber preservers.

Glass: . . . The Federation of Glass, Ceramic and Silica Sand Workers gained 2530 members in 14 new locals since the last convention. The union also gained 3500 new members in old locals for a total membership gain of 6030.

Brewery: . . . During the past year the Intl. Union of United Brewery, Flour, Cereal, Soft Drink and Distillery Workers won 25 out of 29 elections in the U. S. and Canada involving a total membership gain of 1213.

Radio: . . . Organizing efforts of the American Radio Association were stepped up during the fiscal year and as a result the union now holds contracts with 128 steamship companies. Across-the-board wage increases of 6.38% to meet the rising cost of living were won.

Playthings: . . . The Playthings, Jewelry and Novelty Workers Union continued to make organizational progress during the year. The union completed negotiations of its first two non-contributory pension plans.

Lithographers: . . . The Amalgamated Lithographers now boasts a membership of well over 20,000 distributed over 76 locals. In addition to improvements in actual working conditions, the union has been successful in increasing wage scales and take home pay. Welfare programs and union-administered pension programs have been established.

Newspaper: . . . The vast majority of Newspaper Guild members won wage increases in 1950 collective bargaining with raises ranging from $2 to $15 weekly. Settlement of the N. Y. World Telegram and Sun strike resulted in the establishment of a city-wide $120 top minimum for key classifications.

Big Biz Opens Drive On Profits Tax Plan

NOW THAT THE Republicans figure they're going to run Congress with the aid of the economy-minded Dixiecrats, big business has launched its campaign to head off an excess profits tax.

The first heavy calibre gun was fired Nov. 14 by the Committee for Economic Development, a research organization of 130 businessmen and educators influential in determining business policy.

The CED came out flatly and said Congress shouldn't enact an excess profits tax. Instead, it proposed an increase of 5% on all income in excess of exemptions and the present tax, which would yield an estimated $3 billion—a lot of it from those least able to afford it.

In addition, it proposed revision of the present corporate profits tax plus a "defense profits tax" of 15% which it believes would yield another $3 billion. And on top of that, it suggested raising another $1 billion by excise tax boosts.

THE SAME DAY the CED came out with its program, President Truman sent a message to Congress asking it to enact during he lame duck session a $4 billion excess profits tax program, retroactive to July 1, 1950.

On Nov. 15 the House Ways and Means Committee opened hearings in accordance with what Chairman Doughton (D. N.C.) said was last session's "mandate" to try and report out an excess profits levy during the short session.

The only witness on the first day was Secy. of the Treasury John Snyder, who supported President Truman's position and suggested a 75% levy. He testified after the committee, by a strictly party vote, decided to limit its hearings to excess profits legislation, to shut off debate on Nov. 22, and to consider "insofar as possible" a single witness as the representative of his industry.

On Nov. 17 Stanley Ruttenberg, director of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, appeared before the committee and called for a levy retroactive to July 1, 1950, that would produce $6 to $7 billion more than the amount raised by normal and surtax rates on corporations. He proposed that the base period for an excess profits tax be the years 1946-9, when profits before taxes were $29 billion.

"Using the base period suggested," he said, "it would be necessary to have a rate of 85% on all excess profits net income to produce the desired amount of revenue which we have suggested. This, of course, is the same rate as World War II."

RUTTENBERG testified an excess profits tax is necessary for four reasons—it produces revenue, it is fair and equitable and designed to capture only excess profits, it is anti-inflationary, and it is "part and parcel of an overall stabilization program."

He cut the ground from under those who advance the more common arguments against such a levy. The claims that it causes waste and inefficiency, and destroys initiative and incentives to modernize as well as to invest and expand plant and equipment, he demonstrated, were contrary to the tradition and practice of competitive business in this country.

The allegation that it hits all corporations, not just those making the largest profits, simply isn't true, he said. He showed that during World War II, only 1880 corporations or less than 1% of the total reporting net incomes, paid taxes on excess profits of $1 million or more. The claim that it is administratively unworkable, he said, can be made for any important piece of legislation, but the advantages of such a tax outweigh the disadvantages.

Publicity Dept. Keeps Public, Members Informed About CIO

THE CIO Publicity Dept. devoted most of its efforts in the past year to keeping CIO members and the general public informed about important CIO activities, Publicity Director Allan L. Swim said in his report to the convention.

The department gave special attention to the CIO legislative program and political action campaign, and was particularly active, through the CIO News, in publicizing what went on during the events leading to the expulsion of the Communist-dominated unions and the return of many of their members to the CIO.

The department, the report said, played a leading role in establishing the CIO Press and Public Relations Conference, an informal group which meets regularly in an effort to improve and coordinate the projects of the CIO and its affiliates. Swim was active in developing the program of expansion and improvement in the services of the Labor Press Association.

Pertinent information about the CIO was made easily available to press and radio, hundreds of press releases were prepared and distributed, frequent press conferences were arranged, radio appearances were undertaken and thousands of mail and telephone queries about the CIO were answered. In addition, the department distributed thousands of pamphlets prepared by CIO departments and committees.

Through the CIO News, press releases and special features, the report continued, the Publicity Dept. provided much material carried in the publications of international and local unions and councils. It also printed and distributed two issues of the CIO News Voting Record.

Besides the weekly national edition, the CIO News regularly published special editions for four national and international unions.

The department obtained for the CIO regular sustaining programs on two major networks, participated frequently in programs on a third and sponsored Robert R. Nathan, economist and commentator, on the American Broadcasting Co. system. The CIO was one of the sponsors of "The First Freedom," a National Broadcasting Co. program, and provided a number of participants for "Cross Section — USA" on the Columbia Broadcasting System.

CIO's Fight For Just Taxes Will Continue

THE COMMITTEE on Taxes, in its report to the convention, serves notice that the CIO will continue to fight for "shifting of the present burden of taxation from those least able to pay to those best able to pay."

Income taxes paid by individuals earning less than $5000 a year have increased, while the share of the tax burden carried by corporations has fallen.

The committee reports that in 1940 approximately 2½% of the total taxes were paid by persons with incomes of less than $5000, but that this year the taxpayers in that category will pay more than 24% of the total federal revenue.

During the same 10 years corporation taxes paid the federal government increased from 24% of the total revenue in 1940 to only 30% of the total revenue in 1950.

This situation is particularly unfair because "it is estimated that corporate profits, after taxes, in 1950 will be more than 2½ times what they were during the peak of World War II."

The committee recommends two steps to meet the situation:

1 An excess profits tax. It argues that such a tax would be anti-inflationary. Corporations, the committee says, "would be less inclined to increase profits if they knew that they would retain only five to 10c of every dollar (depending on the rate of the excess profits tax) of increased profits.

"In addition, an excess profits tax would be anti-inflationary because it would take cash from corporations that they would use to accumulate excessive inventories or to invest in highly profitable but non-essential enterprises dealing with luxury goods and services."

2 Plugging tax loopholes, which include gaps in estate and gift taxes and granting permission to married couples to split income between themselves for tax purposes. This later provision gives largest tax relief to persons with incomes of $10,000 a year.

"A person over $10,000, for example, saves over 15% of his tax bill," the committee says ". . . an individual earning $50,000 a year saves over 24%, or $6000. This $6000 saved from taxes by the $50-000-year individual is actually more than 85% of our population earned last year.

"The tax law which passed this year is the result of an effort to re-establish the tax rates that existed in 1945. Persons with incomes of less than $5000 will pay approximately the same amount they did in 1945. But those with incomes above $5000 will pay less as a result of the split income provision.

". . . the 1950 Revenue Act enlarged a few of the existing loopholes which reduce the burden of taxation upon high income individuals."

Members of the committee are: O. A. Knight, chairman; Joseph Beirne, Emil Mazey, Arthur Goldberg and Stanley Ruttenberg.

UN Urged To OK Genocide Convention

The CIO last week asked U. S. delegates to the United Nations to "do all in their power to prevent legal barriers being erected to the speedy adoption" of the International Genocide Convention.

Civil Rights Aided By Court Decisions

THE PAST YEAR has seen dramatic advances on the civil rights front in the form of three Supreme Court decisions, but it also has seen a disgraceful abrogation of responsibility by Congress.

These are the main findings of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination in its report to the convention.

James B. Carey

The Supreme Court decisions in the Henderson, Sweatt and McLaurin cases — in all of which the CIO intervened as a friend of the court — brought forth the new doctrine, devastating to the foes of civil rights, that segregation is discrininatory in itself whether it takes place in public transportation or in education.

Heretofore, the segregation practitioners had relied on the seemingly fair-minded idea that people have a right to choose their associates. This is true enough, the Supreme Court said in effect, but there is a vital difference between voluntary and involuntary separation.

"The Court conceded (in the McLaurin case) that the individual students in the Univ. of Oklahoma had a right not to mingle with members of different races if they desired not to do so," the report says, "but it stated that the state had no power to deprive Negroes of the right to secure voluntary acceptance by their fellow students.

"This means that although individuals can practice prejudice, if they so wish, the state cannot force them to do so."

The report then contrasted this with the record of the 81st Congress, which passed no civil rights legislation, and in fact retrogressed by testing the new Wherry cloture rule in the Senate and proving that "it is impossible to secure civil rights legislation while the present rule prevails."

Stating that the Senate is a victim of "legislative self-paralysis" as a result of the unworkable Wherry rule, the Committee calls on all CIO members to support the Lehman bill, which would end filibusters by providing for limitation of debate by a majority of those present and voting, after a given subject has been debated for 15 days.

"We will achieve the enactment of the Civil Rights Program as the voters of America convince the members of Congress that it is politically wise to translate into legislative reality the commitment of both parties as spelled out in their party platforms," the report comments drily.

CIO, meanwhile, is abiding by the principle, enunciated three months before the first of the Supreme Court decisions by Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel, that CIO will not "abide by any statutes, regulations or ordinances which seek to compel any CIO organizations to practice segregation in their own activities."

Another victory on the civil rights front was won, the report states, when the American Bowling Congress, which has over one million members and exerts absolute control over competitive bowling in this country, dropped its "white only" requirement as the result of a law suit instigated by the CIO under Illinois statutes.

The Committee also is exerting pressure on the State Dept. to end "intolerable discrimination" in wages, education, housing and recreation in the Canal Zone, where the U. S. is sovereign. There, U. S. citizens are paid $2.05 an hour on the average, with premium pay for overtime and holidays, while noncitizens are paid an average of 48c an hour, straight time.

Twelve additional unions have set up Civil Rights departments, and assigned staff members to them, since the last convention, the report states, bringing the total to 17. Conferences have been held at Cleveland and Denver, and more will follow.

The members of the Committee are: James B. Carey, chairman; George L-P Weaver, director; Willard S. Townsend, Secretary; W. Richard Carter, Arthur Goldberg, Mrs. Bessie Hillman, James J. Leary, William H. Oliver, Morris Pizer, Harry Read, M. Hedley Stone, Philip Weightman, and Boyd L. Wilson.

Interest Revived In Auxiliaries

The past year has witnessed a marked revival of interest and activity in the CIO Women's Auxiliaries, according to the Convention report.

Under the leadership of Pres. Lillian Sherwood, Grand Rapids, Mich., and Secy. Bertha Perrin, Warren, O., the Congess of Women's Auxiliaries has chartered or reactivated a "considerable number of new groups" during the past year.

Social Security Advance A 'Start' Committee Says

"The years 1949 and 1950 are milestones in the people's march toward genuine social security, and the CIO and its affiliates can rightfully claim major credit for the advances," said the convention report of the CIO Committee on Social Security.

"For more than a decade, Congress failed to improve the social security program. . . . But our union efforts to achieve it through collective bargaining brought a dramatic change."

The law that finally passed brought an additional 10 million people under federal old age protection and raised benefits by an average of 70%—but it was only a good start, the report adds, and "our effort to obtain genuine social security through both collective bargaining and political action must continue."

Among the new goals: repeal of the noisome Knowland amendment, which was "a shocking blow to unemployment insurance"; continued improvement of Social Security programs; better jobless benefits; national health insurance.

Social Security Committee: Emil Rieve, Chairman; David J. McDonald, Secretary; Emil Mazey, Joseph Childs, Irving Simon, John L. Yancey, Joseph Beirne, Jacob Clayman.

CONVINCED that their cause was just, 109 employes of the Longview Furniture Co. plant left their jobs Nov. 6 after the company refused to talk about rehiring two members of the plant's organizing committee whom it had fired. In this picture, which was taken two hours after a picket line was thrown around the plant, the workers are making strike plans.

JOHN V. RIFFE, national director of the CIO Organizing Committee, tells a Hickory, N. C., audience that it is high time that they instead of northern industrialists get some of the milk from the South's "industrial cow."

109 Fight 'Battle For All N. C. Furniture Workers'

By PAUL HARDING

ALL THE obstacles the employers can throw into their paths are failing to slow the organizing campaign of the industrial workers of the Hickory-Newton-Lenoir area of North Carolina.

Petitions have been filed by CIO with the National Labor Relations Board in 11 plants employing nearly 2000 workers. Some of the petitions date back as far as three months or more, but with the board operating under the Taft-Hartley law no elections have yet been held.

The companies—most of them operate furniture factories—are using every trick in their trade and in their lawyers' books to delay the elections in the hope that the workers will tire and drop their plans for unions.

Several hearings, preparatory to the holding of elections, have been set only to be postponed by shrewd company attorneys. Workers leading their local plant CIO organizing committees have been fired. Bosses and sub-bosses talk against unions in general and CIO in particular at every opportunity.

THEN CAME what was to have been the death knell of the CIO movement in the area—a strike. Neil Hickey, director of District 5, CIO Furniture Workers, and acting area director for the CIO Organizing Committee, says he is firmly convinced the furniture manufacturers are working in concert to prevent union organization.

"They have tried their best to force us into a strike, at first one plant and then another," Hickey says. "But the workers refused to be fooled. They didn't walk out anywhere until they were forced into it, and then the provocation was so flagrant and such a clear-cut case of discrimination that no one could mistake the cause."

At the Longview Furniture Co. plant in Hickory two members of the organizing committee, Elmer Frye and Wayne Ball, asked for and received permission to go home because they were ill. When they returned to the plant they were told they were fired, despite the fact that they had witnesses who heard their request granted.

When both the superintendent and the president of the company refused to meet with other members of the workers' committee to discuss the matter, the workers walked out. Of 114 production workers, 109 laid down their tools and came to the union hall for a meeting. At the end of a week of the strike there were still only five scabs in the plant.

Meanwhile, membership application cards continue to come in from nine other plants in the area employing approximately 3000 more workers. Plant gate meetings are held daily at noon time at one or more of the 20 plants where organization is actively and openly underway.

ORGANIZING committees are being formed in still more plants. And interest is not confined to furniture. Petitions for elections have been filed for a brick yard and a lumber mill. Workers from such establishments as laundries and soft drink bottling companies have asked for help in organizing.

So far, there has been no "Battle of the Overpass" or encounter with hordes of Pinkertons but, says Hickey, "I wouldn't be much surprised." The organized opposition is terrific.

The local newspaper, reporting the Longview strike, said "physical violence" was threatened, which was vigorously denied the next day by the local constable.

The striking workers wanted to put three of their number on the radio in a transcribed program to explain to the public what the strike was about. The station manager refused to accept the program, but finally relented after a two and one-half hour battle with Richard Conn, CIO Organizing Committee publicity director, who threatened immediate action through the Federal Communications Commission if the program were not accepted.

But the strikers were taking such opposition in their stride.

In the words of Walter Brown, Sr., Longview Organizing Committee chairman, the CIO members were prepared to continue their strike at Longview "until justice is done and Frye and Ball are returned to their jobs. This is not only our battle but the battle of all furniture workers in North Carolina."

THERE'S PLENTY OF ZIP in the North Carolina organizing campaign. Workers are crowding around a hill-billy band—"rootin' and stootin'" for the CIO. Members of the band are employes of the Southern Desk Mfg. Co., Hickory.

ORGANIZING is in the air throughout the entire Hickory-Newton-Lenoir area of North Carolina. One of the many plants where men are "talking union" is the Southeastern Cabinet Co., makers of DuMont television cabinets. Here organizing committeemen from the cabinet plant are meeting with Rep. Raymond Schnell in the CIO office in Lenoir.

Document Proves

T-H Aids Dixie Textile Mills To Thwart Unions

THE MOST documented indictment of the Taft-Hartley Act to date has been prepared by Isadore Katz, general counsel of the CIO Textile Workers.

The 112-page book entitled "Taft-Hartleyism in Southern Textiles—Feudalism with a New Face" was presented to the Senate subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations Nov. 14.

"It takes a man of strong convictions, unfettered with wife and children, to be a union man in the South," Katz said. "Churches and schools are used against him. There is no equality in the communications of ideas as far as the union is concerned. He is hounded socially, economically and spiritually and then thrown out of the community."

In case after case, supplemented with photostats of company anti-union letters and professional hate sheets which are distributed on a wholesale scale throughout the South, Katz showed the tremendous pressure exerted on the workers to keep them from joining unions.

HE CALLED attention to the emergence of the "suave legal technician" as a union-buster, replacing the companies' paid "musclemen." "Any attorney who can't tie up a case in the courts for at least two years under present T-H provisions is a lousy lawyer," he declared.

The pattern as engineered by company lawyers, Katz said, was shown by what happened to a TWUA campaign in Anderson, S. C. When the union began the Anderson campaign, it was met by an almost complete mobilization of the opinion-forming agencies of the community.

In this particular instance the "dirty work" was done by the local Chamber of Commerce, and a local columnist writing in the Anderson "Independent."

The columnist warned the public that it was about to "learn first hand of the biggest racket since the Tripoli pirates were exacting tribute off the Barbary Coast." He spoke of that "black engulfing wing of the CIO" which leads workers "down the torturous trail of blood, sweat and tears" leaving ghost towns and ghost jobs in its wake.

"These emissaries of misfortune who hail from the 'so-called' melting pots of the Northern cities, are people of strange races and are imbued with alien ideologies which are blended together to produce all manner of men, including numerous arrogant mongrels," he wrote.

FOLLOWING ON the heels of a series of similar columns, came appeals from the Anderson Citizens Committee in the form of newspaper advertisements in the Independent. These full page ads hammered home the lesson that a union means "friction between free labor and organized labor, strife, discontentment, misunderstanding and loss of time."

Katz called attention to the similarity of employer resistance the union encounters in widely separated areas of the South in charging that there is an overall union-busting pattern available to any textile mill owner who wishes to make use of it.

To back up his contention, he submitted pre-election letters from owners of mills in North Carolina and Georgia. Though the language differed, identical reference was made to racial prejudice and distrust of "outsiders," and contained the same pleas for a continuation of the "personal relationship" which had existed between worker and mill operator in the past.

Photostats of the notoriously anti-CIO newspapers, "Militant Truth" and "The Trumpet" were included in the exhibits prepared for the subcommittee.

The former is a paper published by Sherman A. Patterson of Chattanooga, Tenn. It almost invariably appears at Southern textile mills a few days before an NLRB election is scheduled. It follows closely the pattern of the "Trumpet" published by Parson Jack, Baptist Minister of Columbus, Ga.

Certain trade magazines in the South are edited as though they had a vested interest in anti-unionism. One of the more widely circulated, the Textile Bulletin, published in Charlotte, N. C., recently put Sen. Taft (R. O.) on the spot in an attempt to discredit the Senate subcommittee's investigation of the status of Southern collective bargaining.

The owner-editor characterized the investigation as a "sinister drive" and urged textile employers to put their faith in Taft and Sen. Donnell (R. Mo.), who was defeated for re-election Nov. 7.

"Senators Taft and Donnell," wrote editor David Clark, "want copies of what textile management sends in to the subcommittee so that as a minority, they can check for accuracy what Sen. Murray and his crowd claim in the majority report."

KATZ SAID HIS collection of letters, sermons, columns, advertisements, radio speeches, news stories, magazine articles and editorials are fair samples of the anti-union barrage laid down by those who control the avenues of communication in the textile villages and towns of the South.

"The object is to associate the concept of unionism with ideas of strife, evil, loss, hunger, violence and fraud," he declared. "When perversions of religious feeling, racial prejudice, sectionalism and subversion are added, the psychological barriers to unionism are made almost impregnable."

Katz stated that southern companies, particularly in the textile industry, only wants delays so they can break the unions. "The Taft-Hartley law affords them the legal means to get such delays," he said.

"This law cannot be appraised in a vacuum," he added. "It must be studied on a human level. It must be shown how it affects the lives of the workers in the mills."

The use of injunctions was denounced by Katz. He said they deprive people of trial by jury and are supposed to speed justice. "In actual practice however," he said, "judges get caught in a web of injunctions and court cases drag on long after the original labor dispute is settled."

CIO Is Establishing Itself In South As Friend Of Community Improvement

Leaders of the Southern organizing drive, hampered by Taft-Hartleyism in its most vicious forms, have been quietly establishing a wide basis of support for CIO organizing projects by selling CIO as a force for improvement of entire Southern communities.

This is the gist of the report of the Southern Organizing Committee to the CIO convention.

The results in the past year: CIO has participated in 98 elections; 87 more petitions are pending; the staff is engaged in organizing work at approximately 200 more mills or plants employing some 40,000 workers, and many of these situations are devolping to the point where petitions for elections will be filed.

"We are exerting every effort to have CIO accepted as an organization interested in improving conditions in the community; as the schools, churches, professional people, grocers and all other people in business would benefit from better working conditions for industrial workers as well as a higher payroll coming into the locality . . . We have taken great strides toward that acceptance," the report states.

The committee staff also has sponsored radio programs on a Southwide scale, featuring cowboy, hillbilly and gospel singers. Service of these entertainers are also offered free to any church or civic benefit shows which will carry the CIO message.

"Our staff members," the report continues, "also have been encouraged to establish their homes in the community where they are working and take an active part in the church, school and general social life of their locality. As a result of their efforts along these lines the CIO is becoming better known day by day in many small communities."

Death, Injuries Continue To Take Heavy Toll

IN THE PAST year, the CIO Committee on Health, Safety and Welfare has continued to press for workable, flexible safety codes and for full employment of the physically handicapped, the committee's convention report said.

CIO has participated in a number of conferences on the subject and there has been "a slight improvement in the record." The most important gathering was the President's Conference on Industrial Safety, in 1949 in which CIO was represented by more than 90 delegates. Another conference will be held in 1950.

Death and maiming injuries continued to take a heavy toll, however. During the year, nearly 16,000 workers were killed outright, close to 90,000 more received disabling injuries, and nearly 2 million more incurred injuries that caused loss of working time.

The report concluded:

"Ten years ago organized labor found itself almost completely excluded from these activities . . . Today CIO is recognized as an active and militant force in the fields of health, safety, welfare and rehabilitation of the handicapped. We are still confronted with lesser degrees of opposition to our participation."

Members of the CIO Health, Safety and Welfare Committee are: James B. Carey, Chairman; Emil Mazey, Secretary; Harry Read, Director; David J. McDonald, Ernest Weaver, James E. Fadling, T. M. McCormick, and William Pachler.

CIO Men Elected To Legislatures

Manley J. Wilson, editor of the CIO International Woodworker, was elected an Oregon State Senator in the recent election, one of many CIO members named to state legislatures. A former State Representative, he defeated Irving Rand, Portland attorney, 99,488 to 97,470.

Two members of the CIO Auto Workers were elected to the lower house of the Illinois Legislature. William Pierce, president of Local 449, was chosen at Rockford and Harvey Pearson, UAW regional staff member, was elected at Waukegan, Donald Perryman, a member of the Glass Workers, was named to a second two-year term in the Missouri Assembly from Crystal City, where he is a machinist's helper in the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. plant.

Researchers Expose Business' Erroneous Arguments

THE STUDY of economic forces and trends plays an important role in the CIO—but with a difference. Viewed from either a purely academic standpoint, or interpreted solely for the purposes of business, economics is likely to be stripped of all human realities.

CIO researchers, on the other hand, examine economic facts in the light of the experience and problems of workers. That's the big difference, and it's an important one.

Together with its research work, the CIO carries on educational activities, both linked together in the Research and Education Department headed by Stanley Ruttenberg. The National CIO's education program is carried on under the direction of George Guernsey, associate director.

An outline of the department's work was contained in Pres. Murray's report to the CIO convention.

Both the National CIO researchers and those of the CIO's affiliated unions, the report explained, "follow the practice of presenting facts, arguments, and economic analysis to prove the justice of the workers' demands and the ability of employers and the economy to meet them.

"AS PART OF their task union economists must deal with many broad economic problems—not only wages, hours and other phases of everyday working conditions, but also prices, industrial capacity, monopoly, full employment and planning for defense.

"Business employs high-priced statisticians and publicists to defend its position and philosophy. The labor movement must constantly expose erroneous arguments and explain the problems and role of industrial workers in a modern economy."

IN ITS monthly bulletin, "Economic Outlook," the CIO researchers discuss some of these important problems.

Testimony was also prepared and presented to Congressional committees on such problems as taxation, social security, the physically handicapped, full employment, reciprocal trade agreements, profits and extension of labor education.

Other phases of the department's work:

- Special assistance to the CIO's internationals, councils and local industrial unions, and cooperation with newly established research departments of CIO affiliates.
- Consultation with government agencies through labor research advisory committees. "Through these activities the unions have undoubtedly contributed to the value of government statistics," states the report, "and our research representatives have become increasingly familiar with the types of materials available and the uses to which they can properly be put."
- Liaison activities with such government agencies as the Council of Economic Advisors, National Security Resources Board, Women's Bureau, as well as numerous outside organizations, and foreign unionists and economists.

AN IMPORTANT part of the work of the education wing of the department has to do with interpreting CIO policies to members through schools and conferences and by supplying materials and guidance for union education programs.

Using such educational techniques as films and institutes, an extensive program has been worked out to help workers meet their problems. A great part of this work has been done in the last six years. Today, about 70 staff members of CIO affiliates are assigned to full-time education work.

In 1950, the department sponsored for the first time a one-week educational staff training conference, held at Pawling, N. Y., attended by some 40 union representatives. It also expanded its summer school program to include regional schools for the Kansas-Oklahoma area, Pennsylvania, and New England.

Another phase of CIO educational activities is the film program, first started in 1947, which now has 2100 film users on its mailing list. Of these, 900 are CIO local unions, and 1200 are community, school and church groups.

Bell Uses Injunctions, Lockouts In WE Strike

CIO Communications Workers were being hit by injunctions and lockouts by the Bell Telephone System as the 43-state strike of 17,000 CWA installers and distribution workers entered its second week.

The installers of Div. 6 and the distribution workers of Div. 18 are on strike against Western Electric, but other CWA members refused to cross picket lines.

Bell companies were quick to seek out obliging judges who issued sweeping injunctions to outlaw picketing by the Western Electric employes in 10 states.

The majority of these injunctions were obtained in the South by Southern Bell but other companies in the Midwest and even in the industrial Northeast also applied to the courts for picketing bans.

THE ACTION of Bell companies in obtaining anti-picketing injunctions brought from CWA Pres. Joseph Beirne the charge that the companies are "turning the courts into strike breaking agencies" in "a nauseating spectacle of subversion of justice."

"The judge that issues the injunction is as much a company tool as the management man who issues an order to lock out workers," he said.

Beirne said the companies are attempting to obtain "yellow dog" contracts in an effort to break the strike by insisting that operators sign statements declaring that they will cross picket lines before they are permitted to go to work.

The union has countered by filing unfair labor practice charges in wholesale lots, charging that workers have been locked out. Reinstatement of the affected workers will be sought with full pay for all time lost.

THE STRIKE has been effective in all 43 states except in isolated instances. Flying squads of pickets, roaming from one exchange to the other, have proved effective in disrupting company plans to make strike-breaking schedules.

In Chicago, the CIO Executive Board, meeting in pre-convention session, voted full support for the striking telephone workers. A unanimously passed resolution extended to "the striking telephone workers the complete solidarity of the whole CIO membership" and pledged to CWA "our full and wholehearted support in their righteous struggle against the powerful telephone monopoly."

The resolution branded the Western Electric as "arrogant and stubborn" in its refusal to bargain "in good faith" with the union and charged the company's attitude "had forced" the union to strike.

The union is seeking a 15c wage boost and a one year contract. The best reported company offer has been a 9½c per hour raise in a two-year contract with no reopening on wages for 16 months.

Counseling Heart Of CSC

THE WORK of the CIO's Community Services Committee has become increasingly built around union counseling programs, the committee reports.

A corps of volunteers for various community activities has been trained by the CSC to work as referral agents for fellow workers and neighbors in need of such things as jobs, food, homes, legal aid, medical care, nurseries or other services.

CSC's volunteers are taught how to untangle red tape where necessary, so that they can quickly and intelligently refer people to the proper agency.

The counseling service this year was expanded to include the training of workers in civilian defense, in recognition of the tension caused by the international situation. Strike relief and foreign aid are other important phases of the CSC's work.

The committee has launched a drive among CIO affiliates and members for funds for Korean relief. The money will be used by CSC, in cooperation with the CIO International Affairs Committee, for comfort packages for the men and women of the United Nations in Korea and for aiding the Koreans to build a democratic trade union movement. CSC, in cooperation with CARE and the State Dept. Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid, spearheaded the current CARE for Korea campaign.

The committee: Irving Abramson, chairman; John Brophy, treasurer; Ted F. Silvey, secretary; Leo Perlis, national director; George Baldanzi, Joseph A. Beirne, Harry Boyer, L. S. Buckmaster, Harold J. Garno, John J. Grogan, Bessie Hillman, Emil Mazey, David J. McDonald and August Scholle.

Textile Division Will Seek Raise

THE WOOLEN and worsted division of the CIO Textile Workers will ask for a wage increase and the cotton-rayon weaving division will hold a meeting in Washington Dec. 16-17 to determine a collective bargaining policy.

The decision to ask for a wage raise in the woolen industry was reached by 300 delegates representing 70,000 TWUA members in 150 mills, meeting Nov. 11-12 in Boston. They heard Pres. Emil Rieve point out the changes in the industry since the last contract was signed in February, 1948.

"While we have successfully negotiated a 12c an hour interim wage increase," Rieve stated, "this is not sufficient to compensate the worker for increases in the cost of living, and to bring him the standard of living which textile workers deserve, and the industry can afford."

Pegler Too Hot For Syndicate

Westbrook Pegler wasn't shocked at the attempted assassination of President Truman and hopes "it will be a lesson" to him.

In a column so venomous that King Features Syndicate ordered it "killed" after it had been distributed, Pegler urged the assassination of Joseph Stalin but denied he favored assassination of President Truman.

Here is a typical quote: "I hope this well be a lesson to Truman and the anonymous eye-rolling disembodied hypocrites of the editorial page who have been croaking that the nation will view this dastardly resort to anarchy with shock and horror."

Housing Unit Finds Plans Deteriorating

THE REPORT of the CIO Housing Committee consists mainly of a series of biting attacks on two groups—the real estate interests and the government housing authorities.

The real estate lobby, having failed to destroy rent control at the federal level, "shifted its focus to local option," the report states, and the "methods used to secure these (decontrol) actions by governing bodies have hit a new low in the moral corruption of local government."

The report points to the Los Angeles story, "where there were charges of bribery in the effort to secure a City Council vote in favor of decontrol."

The committee can take a good deal of credit for the retention of rent control on the federal books even in its present weakened form, and for passage of what housing legislation was adopted. The report indicates, however, that it has been butting its head against a stone wall when it comes to adequate government administration of the housing program already enacted, or to understanding on the part of mobilization officials that the way to control housing inflation is not to make it impossible for only the rich to buy homes.

"Too many housing officials in the government believe that they meet the problem (of housing shortage) when they have arranged to juggle the terms of mortgage financing," the report says. "Too few of the government's housing officials are concerned or interested in terms of adequate space, community planning, incentives for cutting costs, or simplification in construction procedures."

IN SPITE OF this bungling, the report asserts, housing was booming until the Korean crisis. Then "housing, the greatest area of domestic need, was the first area to be affected . . . This civilian industry, which was rapidly expanding for the first time after two long decades of insufficient production, was cut back by an over-zealous bureaucracy incapable of meeting the problems assigned to its care. The government's effort to deal with the housing problem exclusively by way of credit controls is undesirable, unworkable, and unfair."

The report suggests that the government resurvey the whole emergency question, with the understanding that an annual production goal be set, to include adequate military installations and housing for workers in essential plants.

"Even more crucial," the report continues, "are the developments under the (low-cost housing) program . . . A more total failure could not have been achieved if it had been planned that way. One year from the date Congress approved the Housing Act of 1949, only 640 units had been started."

EMPHASIS WAS put, instead, on evicting so-called "over-income families" from existing projects, with no re-examination of the relation of the old income ceiling to the present cost of living, and no provision for the evictees.

Housing Committee: Walter Reuther, chairman; John Green, Emil Rieve, L. S. Buckmaster, Willard Townsend, Michael Quill, Jacob S. Potofsky, Sam Scott, Joseph Froesch, David McDonald, Lewis Clark, James Fadling, Leo Goodman, director.

Rent Control Is Voted By 315 Communities

THE CITIZENS who voted on Nov. 7 may have been divided in their opinions about candidates, but they were just about unanimous—where the issue was before them—on the subject of rent control.

Extension of rent control past Dec. 31 was on the ballot in 353 communities. It carried, overwhelmingly, in 315 communities, with a total population of 5½ million. The 38 communities which voted no averaged less than 1000 population and were mostly summer resorts where a huge proportion of year-round residents are summer landlords.

In Boston, largest city where the issue was on the ballot, extension was voted by better than four to one, which is more than any candidate received.

The Nov. 7 actions brought to nearly 700 the total number of communities which have decided to request continuance of federal controls beyond Dec. 31. Under present law, controls automatically expire on that date unless communities at present under controls vote by then to continue them. The law expires June 30, 1951.

Chances for strengthening rent controls in the lame duck session of Congress, however, dwindled almost to the vanishing point as the result of the elections. Tighe Woods, director of the Office of Housing Expediter, has decided to press for: (a) extension of the Dec. 31 deadline to next March 31, and (b) power to recontrol in areas surrounding newly activated military installations. Before the elections he had inferred he was going to ask for all-out powers.

In Akron, O., largely as the result of activity by the CIO Rubber Workers, the voters defeated a decontrol resolution passed earlier by the City Council. The vote was 45,337 to 35,825.

Thirty-six communities with populations of over 100,000 each have not yet acted to extend controls beyond Dec. 31.

Labor In Politics Called Part Of American Pattern

"LABOR political action is today an accepted part of the democratic American pattern," the report of the CIO Political Action Committee states, "and it is being relied upon in a constantly increasing measure to carry on the informational work that is necessary to the functioning of a representative form of government."

The PAC report was written before the Nov. 7 elections, so it could carry no comment on the results. But it did say emphatically that PAC could take major credit for a "reversal of the historic trend toward public apathy in the 'off-years'."

Jack Kroll

The remark proved prophetic, since well over 40 million persons voted this year as compared with 28 million in 1942 and 34 million in 1946.

"AN ACCOUNTING every two years instead of the heretofore four years has served to strengthen and tighten our entire structure of representative government," the report continues, "and has served to place emphasis on issues and political philosophies rather than personalities."

"Equally healthy," it continues, "has been the increasing number of labor union members running for public office. Today there are over 1000 members of our organization who hold either an elective or an appointive public office."

The report also stresses the growing unity of labor on the political front, citing as evidence the fact that in 1948 there were only 10 functioning united labor committees, whereas now there are 37 state committees composed of virtually all unions in the state and "they are acting, practically without exception, in a unified manner, determined to achieve common goals."

Labor's growing activity has, of course, brought intense reaction, the report notes, such as:

"1 Even greater and more direct activity in politics by the nation's big industrial corporations.

"2 The increasing use by the powers of wealth of 'front' organizations, contributions to which are tax-deductible, to carry on political activity."

As an outgrowth of these factors, the report finds, there has been an "abandonment of party lines" by the reactionary forces; the same groups which opposed liberal Democrats in the North supported reactionary Democrats in the South.

All of this heightened political activity by labor's enemies, the report concludes, means that CIO-PAC must work increasingly hard.

Members of CIO Political Action Committee are: Philip Murray, chairman; Jack Kroll, director; David J. McDonald, secretary-treasurer; Joseph Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, James B. Carey, Jacob Potofsky, Walter Reuther, Emil Rieve, Emil Mazey, William Pollock, Frank Rosenblum, Desmond Walker and Carleton Werkau.

Merchant Ship Decline Feared

THE U. S. merchant marine is dangerously weak and will grow weaker after the war in Korea unless something is done to bolster it, the CIO Maritime Committee said in its convention report.

The situation is the same in the ship construction and repair industry, the committee added.

Both merchant marine and ship building operations have declined since the end of World War II, the committee reported. After an all-time low in last June of 1162 seagoing vessels, 1335 ships are now in operation under the American flag, but "a sharp decline will take place" when Korea is peaceful again.

The Maritime Committee is composed of Joseph Curran, chairman; Herbert Daggett, John Green, William Steinberg and Hoyt Haddock, executive secretary.

CIO Backs HST In Efforts For World Peace

THE ever-increasing importance of the United States in international affairs is reflected in the joint convention report of the CIO International Affairs Dept. and the International and Latin-American Committees.

The report also indicates the growing importance of the American labor movement in this country's dealings with other nations—important because of the international solidarity of workers who are beginning to realize, more and more, that what affects the laboring people of one country may well be felt in any number of other lands.

In reviewing the year the department found, of course, that the outbreak of hostilities in Korea overshadowed all international developments, because the Communist aggression made obvious the necessity of direct action through the United Nations to restore peace.

The CIO stands solidly behind President Truman's efforts to preserve peace and resist aggression, its traditional position.

It also supports the President in most other phases of the country's foreign program, the report shows.

THIS IS particularly true in the European Recovery Program, which the CIO has backed from its inception. As in other years, the CIO opposed slashes in the appropriation, and it raised its voice with increasing vigor in support of those aspects of the program "that would lead directly to improvement of the living standards of the workers in the aid-receiving countries," Several CIO personnel serve as labor advisers at various levels in the program.

The report recalled that the CIO has given consistent backing to the President's Point Four program of economic and technical aid to under-developed areas of the world. It also has constantly stressed that the program will be successful "only if labor's representatives are closely integrated into the policy and operations of Point Four."

The report notes that the CIO has long urged a greater degree of labor participation in the Dept. of State and its various agencies. CIO officers in a statement to Secy. of State Acheson early in the year emphasized that "an immediate increase in labor participation in government agencies dealing with international matters will provide immediate and constructive benefits." The labor movement has channels of communication and relationship, the officers said, which must be used if a democratic U. S. policy is to be successfully prosecuted.

"A serious defect in American foreign policy," the report continued, "is, however, the absence of American labor from its highest councils. Leaders of American labor, in urging greater participation for the trade unions in the foreign affairs agencies of government, are seeking the preservation of the things that are dear to every American—democracy, freedom, liberty.

"Up to this time the only delegation which has included persons from the labor movement has been that attending meetings of the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. Stanley Ruttenberg, on behalf of the CIO, served as a member of the UNESCO delegation this year as he has done on previous occasions."

THE REPORT noted that the CIO was well represented at the Free World Labor Conference in London in December, 1949, and participated actively there in organization of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

The ICFTU succeeded the World Federation of Trade Unions, in the formation of which in 1945 the CIO was represented by the late Sidney Hillman, then president of the Clothing Workers. The CIO and other democratic labor bodies withdrew in 1949 when it became apparent that the Communists had gained control of it to a degree beyond redemption. CIO participation in the organization and affairs of both bodies, the report points out, is a result of the breakdown in the isolation of American labor brought about under the leadership of Pres. Philip Murray.

During the year the CIO was represented at many international labor conferences, sponsored by the ICFTU. John Brophy, former director of industrial union councils was a member of an ICFTU mission to Asia during the summer. Shortly after his return he went on leave to serve at UN headquarters with Miss Toni Sender, on behalf of the ICFTU, which has a Category A consultative status.

Michael Ross, director of the International Affairs Dept., and Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, of the Clothing Workers, who is chairman of the International and Latin-American Committees, with Matthew Woll and David Dubinsky, of the AFL, are serving as UN consultants for the ICFTU.

Elmer Cope, CIO European representative, has served as permanent CIO alternate on the ICFTU executive board and emergency committee.

During the past year the CIO has continued working with the Trade Union Advisory Committee on international affairs set up in the Dept. of Labor.

The CIO has continued to give its support to the hard-pressed labor movements of Latin-American nations, the report points out. As reactionary strength grows, attacks against bona fide labor movements have gained in force. In Argentina, Dictator Peron "seems to have succeeded in crushing the last remnants of a free labor movement." In Venezuela, Peru and the Dominican Republic the labor movements have been driven virtually underground.

IN PUERTO RICO, the Latin-American Committee cooperated with the Organization Dept. in successful negotiations for affiliation with the CIO of the General Confederation of Workers. It also joined in the campaign to organize "silver workers" in Panama into a legitimate CIO union. In the United States the committee has exhibited a "strong responsibility" for Latin-American workers, the report finds.

Members of the CIO International Committee are Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman; Walter Reuther, David J. McDonald, Allan S. Haywood, Emil Rieve, Joseph Beirne, Frank Rosenblum, Joseph Curran, L. S. Buckmaster, O. A. Knight, John Green; Michael Ross, secretary.

Members of the CIO Latin-American Affairs Committee are Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman; George Baldanzi, L. S. Buckmaster, Lewis Clark, Joseph Curran, Sam Eubanks, O. A. Knight, Martin C. Kyne, David J. McDonald, Emil Mazey, Ernesto Ramos Antonini, Willard S. Townsend; Dr. Ernst Schwartz, Secretary.

Minnesota CIO Establishes Farm-Labor Relations Body

TAKING NOTE of the great progress of the CIO farmer-labor relations program in the state, the Minnesota CIO Council Convention meeting at Duluth set up a permanent committee to bring about a greater understanding by farmers and workers of each other's problems.

The committee will be composed of one representative from each CIO international union and one from each industrial union council in the state, and will have a full time program director.

Delegates reaffirmed the declaration of previous conventions for wholehearted approval of the consumer cooperation program and urged all affiliated locals to give effective support to the promotion of consumer cooperative action.

CIO Reg. Dir. Fullerton Fulton told the convention that the overwhelming majority of the workers in Minnesota locals of unions expelled for following the Communist Party line are now back in the CIO.

THE THREE-DAY session was notable chiefly for the lack of controversy, in marked contrast to former conventions when left wingers were within the organization.

In the only dispute which reached the floor, the delegates voted 176 to 150 to reject a proposal by the executive board that per capita dues be increased 5c monthly to continue the extensive research and farmer-education program. Instead, the delegates voted continuation of voluntary contributions to finance these projects.

Robert Gannon, state research director, told how CIO efforts in the state had been largely instrumental in bringing about the defeat of three of Minnesota's most reactionary legislators in the recent elections.

Glenn Chinander, director of District 2, Packinghouse Workers, reported excellent success with CIO booths and exhibits at 33 fairs, and said he found farmers seeking out the CIO to get information on issues and individuals.

THE CONVENTION passed a number of other resolutions among which were: condemnation of the McCarran-Mundt-Nixon-Wood Act; endorsement of a federal mine inspection and safety code law; support of federal legislation against discrimination because of race, creed, color or national origin; and the reduction of appropriations for the meat inspection division of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

Glenn Peterson, of Duluth, was re-elected president, and Rodney C. Jacobson, of Minneapolis, secretary-treasurer.

Ousted Unions Will Hold Parley

The bobtailed remnants of the so-called unions kicked out of the CIO because of their Communist domination will weep on each others' shoulders at a conference in Washington on Nov. 28.

The mutual consolation session was called by Harry Bridges, president of the Longshoremen. Other sponsors represent the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers; Fur Workers, Marine Cooks & Stewards, Distributive Workers, Communications Association, United Electrical Workers and Public Workers.

Wholesale Food Price Index Up 6c

The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index jumped 6c in the week ended Nov. 14 to $6.58, highest in seven weeks.

The index is now 64c above the figure when hostilities began in Korea; 46c above the 1949 high; 11c below the 1950 high of $6.69 set Aug. 29; and 78c below the all-time high of $7.36 on July 13 1948.

Greater Political Action Urged By Texas Council

POLITICAL action was the keynote of the recent Texas CIO Council convention at Austin.

Delegates representing 62,000 CIO members in the Lone Star state adopted a Political Action Committee report which said in part:

"We recognize that the serious defeat suffered by organized labor in the recent elections was due to the fact that we failed to get out the vote. We believe that only by an immediate all-out effort devoted to organization of precinct groups can we regain that ground lost."

Dir. John Riffe of the CIO Organizing Committee said that the Southern drive was moving into high gear and that the number of elections was increasing all over the South. He added that the CIO has been successful in every election held during the last six months. A resolution was passed pledging support to a continued drive to organize the unorganized.

Secy.-Treas. J. J. Hickman of the council recommended a legislative program which was approved by the delegates embodying the following proposals:

1. A new state labor code repealing anti-labor statutes.
2. Enactment of a state safety law.
3. Adoption of a state wage-hour law.
4. Revision of the Texas child labor and school attendance laws.
5. Improved workmen's compensation.
6. Improved unemployment compensation.
7. Abolition of the poll tax.

In addition, the convention called for removal of pension ceilings; voiced opposition to continuation of the sales tax; proposed creation of a state commission to set utility rates; and voted support for an expanded state health program.

Newly elected officers were: Joe Ivy, Auto Workers, president; A. A. Rister, Packinghouse Workers, vice president; Paul Gray, Communications Workers, 2nd vice president; John Naler, Steelworkers, 3d vice president and J. J. Hickman, Oil Workers, secretary-treasurer.

KOREAN WAR PLUS RISING EMPLOYMENT CAUSES COMMITTEE TO CHANGE NAME

So great has been the impact of the Korean war on conditions in this country that one CIO committee had to change its name.

After the outbreak of the war the CIO Full Employment Committee found that it was no longer faced with the problem of joblessness, but that it was concerned with "the question of mobilization, and its economic impact upon wages, prices and related questions."

So it became the Committee on Economic Policy, which is serving as a "general coordinating center for various defense economic policy activities of the CIO."

Before this change in events, the committee faced the task of taking steps to end unemployment, an accounting of which is given in its report to the convention.

The committee points out that "unemployment moved from 3.4 million in November, 1949, to 3.5 in December, 4.5 in January and 4.7 in February."

It called for an expanding economy, but found that in 40 to 50 labor markets, "special measures were needed to furnish immediate assistance and relief to workers and their families."

To dramatize the plight of the workers in these areas, the committee organized a series of "pilgrimages" of representatives from approximately 10 of these blighted sections last spring to Washington where they met with government officials.

The CIO also proposed "special public works programs, devices to encourage location of new plants in these (blighted) areas, travel allowances to enable workers to move to jobs elsewhere and a special unemployment compensation system which would extend the duration of unemployment compensation payments to workers in these stricken areas."

A bill to accomplish this latter purpose was introduced in the House.

Members of the committee are: Philip Murray, chairman; Emil Rieve, administrative chairman; Jacob Potofsky, Walter Reuther, L. S. Buckmaster; Nathaniel Goldfinger, executive secretary.

13½c Package Won By TWUA At Rome, Ga.

The CIO Textile Workers have negotiated a contract containing a 13½c package for the 1200 workers employed at the Rome, Ga., plant of the Celanese Corp. of America. The contract contains a general wage increase of 10c an hour, wage adjustments of 2c, and improvements in vacations, paid holidays and other items amounting to 1½c, according to Herbert W. Payne, the union's synthetic yarn director.

Legal Dept. Reports:

T-H Continues To Show CIO Fears Justified

THE CIO Legal Dept. spent a large part of the last year resisting attacks on unions under the Taft-Hartley Act and trying to tear down T-H barriers to organization, the department said in its report to the 1950 convention.

At the same time, it was uniformly successful in defeating attempts to prevent the CIO from purging its ranks of Communist-dominated unions, it reported. Arthur Goldberg is the head of the department.

The report is divided into four main sections: Taft-Hartley, Communist-line unions, labor law developments, and litigation.

Life under the third year of T-H "continues to demonstrate" that the fears CIO expressed when the act became law were fully justified, the report says. The fact that unions which were in existence in 1947 have not been destroyed does not mean that T-H has not been repressive, it continues—"rather it is a glowing tribute to the strength of organized labor that it has succeeded in maintaining its ranks despite the anti-union weapons handed to employers by the act."

All over the country, the department asserts, but especially in the South, "employers have been encouraged by T-H to commit unfair labor practices, to refuse to recognize unions, to force strikes which they can destroy by injunctions, and to petition for collective bargaining elections in which strikers may not vote, but in which strikebreakers may vote."

"IT IS CLEAR," says the report, "that the drastic reductions in the success of unions in organizing since T-H became law cannot be attributed to any lack of organizational activity by organized labor, since very great efforts at organizing have been made these past few years. It can be attributed solely to the vicious provisions of the act."

The act has not, as its congressional supporters predicted, reduced the number of strikes, according to the report. In national emergency strikes, it has given employers the forced labor of their employes for 80 days. It has impeded the settlement of walkouts.

It has victimized unions by the injunction despite lip service to the Norris-LaGuardia Act, the report went on. It has weakened protection for workers fired because they tried to organize unions. It has forced needless expense on unions and the government by making useless elections an imperative prelude to the union shop. It has made the law absurd by requiring non-Communist affidavits from labor leaders—and getting them from virtually every Communist and fellow-traveller in the labor movement. It has given employers, under the guise of free speech, the right to force their employes to listen to anti-union speeches.

And it has borne out CIO's prophecy, made in 1947, that establishment of the National Labor Relations Board's general counsel as an independent office would inevitably lead to a breakdown in the board's operations.

"The case for repeal of T-H has been amply documented by the experience of the last three years," this section of the report concludes. "Sen. Taft himself has been forced to admit that the act contains 28 defects. The time for a change is overdue."

THE REPORT also recounts the legal maneuverings of the Communist-dominated unions to stay in the CIO after their pasts caught up with them.

Five lawsuits were started by the Office & Professional Workers, Public Workers and Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers. Steps in the CIO defense were outlined in the report. All five suits ended in failure. In none, the report points out, "were they even able to secure a temporary injunction."

Developments in labor law were many in the last year, according to the report, which described several U. S. Supreme Court decisions as "of very great importance."

"These decisions fall into three categories," it said: "first, those dealing with the right to picket; second, those involving the applicability of state laws to matters covered by the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947; and third, the non-Communist affidavit cases.

"In the picketing cases the Supreme Court restricted, to what extent is not yet clear, its ruling in Thornhill v. Alabama (1939), that picketing is an exercise of free speech protected by the Constitution. On the other hand, the court twice held that state laws may not validly apply to matters covered by the federal act.

"Taken together, these decisions admonish labor unions that they should hereafter stress, where applicable, the contention that federal legislation excludes state interference, and should not rely exclusively on due process arguments."

The lessons to be learned from the picketing decisions are three, the report said. Since the power of the states to prohibit picketing has been increased, the first lesson is that the necessity for political action at the state level likewise has increased, and the right to picket must be protected at the polls and in the legislatures.

The second lesson is that in view of the wide discretion given state judges to enjoin picketing, "unions must take a greater interest than heretofore in the records, attitude and backgrounds of those judges." The third lesson, for labor lawyers, is that in trying to protect the right to picket, "they must rely less on due process and freedom of speech and more on other available doctrines."

THE REPORT showed that in addition to what has been recounted above, the Legal Dept. appeared for the CIO in a number of other cases, most of them specifically involving the rights of labor. CIO lawyers, in line with CIO policy, also filed briefs amicus curiae in several cases of general importance involving civil and political rights.

One of the most significant of these cases involved the American Bowling Congress and its "Caucasian clause," under which only white men were permitted to participate in its tournaments. When the ABC refused to drop this clause from its bylaws, the CIO and the Auto Workers asked the Attorney General of Illinois to file an action to revoke its charter. The State filed suit and the CIO intervened as amicus curiae. The court ruled the clause was against public policy and gave the ABC a chance to remove it at its then forthcoming convention, which it did.

The report also discussed briefly seven other cases in which the CIO either was directly involved in significant court actions or filed amicus curiae briefs. In addition, it noted that the department handled a substantial volume of run-of-the-mill litigation.

Balderdash Dept., Chicago Division

The Chicago Journal of Commerce has taken a good long look at 169 big corporations and found them cleaner than the inside of an unopened box of soap flakes.

The financial newspaper found the corporations (a) aren't hoarding and (b) aren't profiteering—that inventories haven't been kept in the normal relation to sales and that "the prices of the things they buy have gone up faster than the price tags they put on the things they sell."

11-20

'Not Enough Liberals In 81st'--Legislative Dept.

THE CIO Legislative Dept., which tries to bring CIO's point of view before members of the House and Senate, had an uphill fight during most of the past year, the department's report to the convention said.

Unquestionably, the work of the department was hampered in the past by "increasing confusion in which a number of organizations claiming to speak for CIO were in fact supporting policies diametrically opposed to those of the CIO," the report continued.

As a result of the clean-up of Communist influence, "the views of our organization were given deeply serious consideration by members of Congress, and they were cited with regularity during the course of Congressional debate," the report said.

Although the gains in social legislation were relatively small in relation to the desired program, it is also true, the department said, that "the 81st Congress brought to an end a period of 10 years of stalemate on labor and social welfare legislation . . . (It) proved, in fact, to be a holding operation against home front reaction." The fact that the 81st's record was "mottled" is explained as follows: "There simply were not enough liberals in Congress."

The resume of the 81st Congress included:

Labor bills: No progress. Congress failed to repeal Taft-Hartley, and to act on the special proposal to legitimize maritime hiring halls under Taft-Hartley, disapproved the NLRB reorganization plan which would have ended the dictatorial powers of the General Counsel.

Congress also failed to act on the labor extension service proposal, to enact the equal-pay-for-equal-work bill, and to amend the Railway Labor Act which would permit union shop and check-off provisions in railway labor contracts.

Social security and welfare: "Perhaps the most important accomplishment of the 81st Congress in the field of welfare legislation was the long overdue passage of improvements in the Social Security law."

Housing and Rent Control: Congress passed an excellent low-cost housing and slum clearance bill, let the people down badly on middle-income housing, and passed a rent control renewal which was only partially satisfactory.

Health Insurance: This got nowhere.

Anti-monopoly bills: The principal measure, the Celler bill, passed the House but failed to be acted on in the Senate, and now stands little chance of passage. It would have greatly strengthened existing laws. The basing-point bill, which would have made legal certain big-industry practices disapproved by the Supreme Court, passed, but a veto was upheld .

Power development: Three major power development issues failed to make any headway—the St. Lawrence Seaway, and the Columbia and Missouri Valley Authorities.

Kerr Gas Bill: The proposed amendment by Sen. Kerr (D. Okla.) to the Natural Gas Act would have weakened the authority of the Federal Power Commission to regulate prices and rates on natural gas. This was passed, vetoed, and the veto was upheld.

Lobby probe: The hearings conducted by the special House committee headed by Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.), which revealed the extent of the corporations' influence-buying network of "front" organizations, were classed as "extremely valuable."

Civil liberties: Congress took a long backward step when it approved the dangerous McCarran-Mundt-Nixon bill because it felt it "had to do something" about the Communist problem.

Aid to education: The Senate bill, an excellent measure, was bottled up in the House Labor and Education Committee on a religious issue.

Foreign Policy bills: The Marshall Plan squeaked through with an adequate appropriation after barely surviving a determined "economy" attack by Sen. Taft (R. O.). The Point Four program, likewise, barely passed. On the other hand, Congress approved a shocking loan to Dictator Franco of Spain, which Pres. Truman held in abeyance. The military assistance program to Western Europe was continued.

Defense Mobilization: After the outbreak of the Korean war, Congress passed a number of measures designed to rebuild America's fighting strength, but failed to give adequate protection to the nation's economy. "The familiar issue of equality of sacrifice versus protection of special interests rapidly came to the fore;" for the most part, the special interests won.

The department is headed by Nathan Cowan.

CIO Has More Members Than In 1949—Murray

THE CIO HAS more members and more strength than a year ago, CIO Pres. Philip Murray said last week at the end of a pre-convention session of the organization's executive board.

Murray revealed that the Intl. Union of Electrical Radio & Machine workers now has 226,800 dues-paying members, and will have another 80,000 as soon as legal technicalities growing out of the fight with the Communist-dominated Electrical Workers have been cleared away.

To reporters Murray expressed strong confidence in the work of the CIO Political Action Committee, despite setbacks to the liberal cause in the Nov. 7 voting.

The CIO-PAC "unquestionably will continue to function," Murray said. "We will continue to press for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

"The position of our organization on Taft-Hartley hasn't changed, and we will continue to press for its elimination."

THE CIO PRESIDENT said that CIO and AFL have been getting along very well and added that he hopes to see a renewal of CIO-AFL unity talks after the CIO convention.

Murray attributed the CIO's growth during the past year to two factors: increases in the size of many unions, and the march back to CIO of thousands of members of unions expelled as Communist controlled.

The United Auto Workers, Murray reported, now has a membership of close to 1,200,000 and the United Steelworkers, recording substantial gains, have come up to about the same figure.

Pointing out that the Communist-dominated UE is greatly weakened, Murray also noted that more than 50,000 workers have come back to the CIO from what he described as the "small, straggling expelled unions."

Of 150,000 workers once in the Mine Mill & Smelter Workers, Murray said, about 125,000 are now back in the CIO's ranks.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., NOVEMBER 27, 1950 82 No. 48

THE CIO CONVENTION at Chicago last week celebrated the tenth anniversary of Philip Murray as president. In the top photo, Murray (third from the left) looks at a book containing signatures of delegates which Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers (left) has just presented to him. CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey (right) and CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood also are examining the book. In the lower photo, delegates demonstrate before electing Murray to another term as president. Carey and Haywood also were re-elected to additional terms without opposition.

CIO To Press For Liberal Goals—Murray

A CALL TO a continuing fight to gain the liberal goals of the Congress of Industrial Organizations — despite the results of the Nov. 7 elections—was sounded by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in his keynote speech in the 1950 convention.

"We are not going to give up the fight," he bluntly told the enemies of labor and liberalism. "We are going to continue our fight for the enactment of our liberal program by the Congress of the United States."

Murray ranged far in his address, which opened the convention sessions. He discussed the election, the international situation and the problems of mobilization, economic trends, and wages and profits, and he reviewed briefly the story of the CIO not only during the last year, but during the decade since he first took the reins of office.

And he served notice that the CIO never will consent to the freezing of wages of American workers until other segments of the population, especially profit-swollen industry, are forced to join in the equality of sacrifice that the needs of the defense effort make imperative.

The CIO leader, speaking slowly and carefully, minced no words in talking about the election.

"I do not believe," he said, "that the people of the United States, in making a determination of the issues presented to them on Nov. 7, actually passed upon the domestic problems of our government.

"The issue was one of mobilization, the building up of a proper defense organization to maintain universal peace and to protect our democratic way of life. Wrapped up in those issues was the question of communism, the charge made by certain diabolical men that the administration in Washington harbored Communists, and that all of the right-thinking people in the U. S. who supported the position of our administration in these international matters were either Communists or party liner followers.

"And so, in the course of the six or seven weeks during which the campaign lasted, most of the Republican Party converged upon the homes of the American people to impress upon them the fact that organizations such as ours—or they made the allegation that organizations such as ours—were Communistically inclined or Communistically inspired, that the President of the United States leaned his sympathies toward things that had Communistic inclinations.

"NEVER WAS there a more diabolical campaign conducted in the history of the U. S. Issues with respect to the domestic needs of the American people were forgotten, and in the heat of this political war questions of housing, social security, the proper kind of a farm program, Taft-Hartleyism, were never presented to the people in a proper way.

"I do not take it, therefore, that the decision arrived at by the people constituted a repudiation of any of the policies of this great organization of ours, the National CIO; nor do I take it that their decision constituted an outright repudiation of the President of the United States or his liberal followers.

"But I have confidence in the American people, just like you have, and I am quite sure, just as sure as I am standing upon this platform here this morning, that the voters of our country will repudiate this gang of demagogues in 1952."

He paid particular attention to the Taft-Hartley Act in his discussion of what the CIO will be fighting for in the months ahead.

"Who is there in our great country that can state that the Taft-Hartley Act has developed better labor-management relations?" he asked.

"IT IS certainly universally agreed that it has not brought about universal industrial peace . . . The act has not solved the so-called national emergency disputes . . . The act has certainly weakened workers' protections . . . Can anyone in this hall say to the people of his own organization or to the people of the United States that the act has thwarted Communism in American labor unions or in American industry?

"Our organization must proceed as it has always proceeded toward the enactment of better social security legislation, designed to protect the interests of the infirm and the weak, the sick and the aged. Is there anyone in this hall who can truthfully state that social security was an issue in the recent election? Manifestly it is one of the things that causes grevious concern to the workers of the United States and to their dependents; and yet that issue was not one of moment during the recent political controversy.

"It is evident that minimum wages are too low. Although they, were increased to 75c per hour, it is nevertheless obvious that higher costs of living make it incumbent upon the Congress to enact legislation providing for a minimum of at least $1 per hour for all people.

"Was there an issue presented to the American people dealing with the question of slum clearance during the recent federal elections — decent housing? And although the nation is in the midst of a great defense mobilization program, was consideration given by the Republican Party particularly, or its candidates, to the development of defense housing projects? This was thrust out of the window in the interest of half-hearted isolationism and vicious political demagoguery dealing in substance with the international situation.

"Was there any forthright public discussion in the recent election with respect to the burden which is presently placed upon the teachers of our children—increased salaries, the improvement of our educational facilities, the erection of new schoolhouses, etc.? No.

"This great organization of yours attempted in the course of this campaign to present all of those issues to the American people, but they were subordinated by people hungry for office and deceitful in their method of presenting the facts to the people. There was no forthright discussion upon these matters at all."

On international affairs Murray raised again the long-uttered cry of the CIO for labor representation in the country's foreign activities.

"We would like to have more real policy-making representation in the State Dept., in the Economic Cooperation Administration and in the other foreign programs. We must fight to be given a larger part in the conduct of our country's Voice of America programs, not only as they affect the preparation and the making of a speech or an address to the peoples behind the Iron Curtain, but also in the effectuation of policies that have to do with the operation of the Voice of America as such.

"Our labor forces can and will and must supply spiritual and moral leadership to the democratic forces. This is not a mere phrase. It has been used often. But it is meaningful, in the sense that it means a great deal to all of the people that organizations such as ours have a God-given obligation to provide spiritual and moral leadership to other peoples not only at home, but throughout the entire universe."

MURRAY ALSO briefly touched upon the work of the CIO International Committee and the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, with which the CIO is affiliated, and declared the CIO is "against appeasement in any form" although its ideals are those of peace.

He tied in his discussion of the mobilization effort with wages, profits and economic trends. He recalled his own membership on the Advisory Committee of the National Resources Security Board, the chairman of which, W. Stuart Symington, spoke at a later convention session. He also told, in a few words, of some of the other agencies already created or being created.

"As a member of the Advisory Committee," he said, "believing that I reflected your will, I have cast my vote against wage controls.

"I should not like our position to be misunderstood in that regard by simply saying to you we have voted against wage controls, and let it go at that. There must be good, sound reasonable ground upon which a man promises a vote of such far-reaching importance. And I shall endeavor to point that out."

He then told about the fantastic increase in corporate profits from the $4.1 billion of 1936 to 1939 to the approximate $24.5 billion that trends indicate that American industry will net this year—a sixfold increase. He continued:

"There is no moral justification for the maintenance of a profit-making system at a time when so many people of our country are actually undernourished . . .

"CIO does not express opposition to profit. It believes in the kind of a free enterprise system that yields a reasonable profit, but it does not believe in the kind of a free enterprise system that promotes legitimate theft in the free enterprise system. This free enterprise system that we have built up through the years, we do not believe, has given a license to American business to extort money from the pocketbook of the consumer.

"Our opposition to wage controls at this time is predicated on the well-grounded belief that American labor must first catch up, its wages must be hoisted, and if regimentation must come and all people must sacrifice, then by the eternal God there must be equality of sacrifice in every segment of our national life."

HE CALLED FOR amendment of existing economic controls legislation to eliminate the requirement that wages and prices be controlled simultaneously in any given industry, and to permit the President to control prices "without necessarily regimenting labor, until if and when there has got to be universal regimentation to fight off Communism."

The CIO is manifesting its usual interest on the whole economic mobilization front, he said, and continued:

"We have placed Pres. Reuther of the Auto Workers in charge of our affairs in the National Production Authority. We have asked Pres. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers to assume the regulation of our affairs in the Manpower Authority. We have requested Pres. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers to take over the price situation, and we have assigned Pres. Rieve of the Textile Workers, when and if it does come, to assume charge of our affairs in all matters pertaining to wages and wage stabilization.

"We have requested the Dept. of Defense, the Manpower Authority, the National Production Authority, the Symington Committee and all other agencies which have to do with the building up of our national defense program to give to our organization representation on each of these agencies—but not jobs.

"We are not interested in jobs. We want men placed in positions on the policy-making level, where they may have something to say about what America is going to do in this defense effort as of the year 1950."

In reviewing the year he recalled the expulsion of "some ugly elements, some traitors," the Communist-dominated unions, which took out of CIO 850,000 to 900,000 members.

"During the past year we have brought back into our organization approximately 70% of all the members of these organizations," he said.

"Today, despite the expulsion of this crowd, your organization is numerically stronger than it was 12 months ago. Despite the use of large sums of money to reorganize the workers employed in those industries, we find that our organization as of today is not only financialy solvent, but more strongly entrenched than it was 12 months ago."

He singled out the Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee, Insurance and Allied Employes Organizing Committee, and Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers for their success.

Truman's Message To CIO

I greatly appreciate your cordial invitation to address the Twelfth National Constitutional Convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and I wish very much that I could attend. Unfortunately, however, my duties make it impossible for me to leave Washington at this time.

I hope you will extend my cordial greetings to the officers, delegates and members attending the sessions, which are of so much importance to them, to the labor movement and to the Nation as a whole. I wish you all a most successful convention.

Since your last convention, the forces of Communist imperialism resorted to open aggression in defiance of the United Nations. The United States has taken a leading role in meeting this challenge to the foundations of world peace.

Our armed forces are now fighting side by side with those of other members of the United Nations in Korea, to defend the basic principles of international law and order.

In cooperation with other free nations we are engaged in increasing our defense forces to the extent necessary to deter aggression elsewhere.

This is the policy to which the United States and the United Nations are committed. With our very existence at stake, we can and we must build defenses in keeping with this policy.

While such defense measures are essential, we cannot rely on military strength alone. We must assist other nations to meet not only the external military threat of Communist imperialism, but also the threat of internal subversion.

We must provide such economic and technical assistance as may be needed to strengthen other free nations in their devotion to democratic principles and in their will to resist tyranny. In the underdeveloped areas of the world, we must show the people that it is the way of freedom and not the way of communism that offers them release from their age-old bondage to poverty, disease and injustice.

In these great tasks, the role of labor is a vital one. The demands on our system of production can only be met if labor does its utmost to expand our output of defense materials and equipment. Our industrial capacity, and our labor force are better able now than they were in the days of World War II to turn back the challenge of world tyranny. Our unions must work toward the further expansion of our industrial strength.

Over and above this material effort, however, our unions have a great spiritual contribution to make to the cause of freedom. The labor movement in this country is a symbol of our concept of freedom. It can speak directly to the working people of other lands. By its example it can show that a free and democratic society is the best hope of the worker everywhere.

More than any other element in our country, the labor movement can refute the lies of Communist propaganda about the nature of our society, and our objectives in the world. Your organization is already doing much to spread the true message of democracy through the world. It must, in the future, do even more.

We must not forget that, if we are to achieve our aims, we have to increase our strength at home. We must continue to work for better health and better education for all our citizens. We must continue the job of eliminating discrimination on account of race, creed, or color. We must continue our efforts to achieve a fair labor law, and protect and improve collective bargaining.

The world contest in which we are engaged cannot be won by those who would turn back the clock of social progress. It can only be won by those who have faith in the people, and who realize that the liberal creed is the only effective answer to the false dogmas of Communist tyranny.

Our defense production efforts will call upon us all to make sacrifices of some of the good things we now enjoy, and to defer some of the material comforts we hoped to have in the near future. These sacrifices should be shared fairly by all groups in our population. If that is done, I am sure they will be shared willingly.

By working together, and with the help of Almighty God, we can win the peace with its rich rewards for all our people and for those all over the world who cherish liberty.

Faction-Free Conclave Lauds, Re-Elects Murray

By GERVASE N. LOVE

IT WAS A quiet convention—comparatively. Nobody called Pres. Philip Murray a dictator. Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey wasn't called a Fascist a single time. Nobody told off Vice Pres. Allen S. Haywood for anything.

Never were so few not missed by so many.

But the 12th constitutional convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations was a constructive one. More than 500 delegates representing 32 national and international unions and organizing committees, 175 industrial union councils and 127 local industrial unions spent a week of work at their sessions in Chicago's Palmer House, a week of hard work.

They worked on the issues—the genuine and real issues that affect every American trade unionist, not the phony issues that the missing brethren raised year after years in the past to hamstring and louse up the work of other conventions.

And to top it off, they elected Philip Murray to the first term of his second decade as president after a gay, noisy, jubilant and genuine demonstration of confidence and affection.

FROM THE moment his name was offered to the delegates by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, of the Clothing Workers, until CIO Vice Pres. E. S. Buckmaster, who was in the chair, called in vain for further nominations, the delegates clapped, cheered, whistled, staged impromptu parades and showered each other and the rostrum with confetti, brightly colored streamers and even torn-up bits of newspapers. They stamped the floor, pounded their tables, raised rebel and cowboy yells, thumbed ashtrays on the big silvered trays that held water pitchers.

Delegates from the fledgling Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, chartered a year before at the tumultuous Cleveland convention, marched around the hall and up on the rostrum with placards bearing such inscriptions as "IUE-CIO For Phil" and "IUE Marches With Murray and Carey." Haywood sang Scottish songs.

The demonstration showed that Potofsky had reached the hearts of the delegates in his brief but effective nominating speech.

"He is a man," he said of Murray, "who can bring hope to millions not alone in our labor movement, not alone in our own country, but to people everywhere throughout the world—the little people who work for a living and who struggle for freedom and security and a little place under God's sun.

"Such a leader is our president. He reacts instinctively for the under-privileged, the discriminated and the dispossessed. We are indeed fortunate in that we are able to provide organized labor, the nation and the democratic world with a man so symbolic of labor's coming of age, a man of moral and spiritual influence such as this man possesses."

Murray, making his eleventh acceptance speech, was deeply touched.

"IN LOOKING back over the past 10 years," he said, "one cannot help but express . . . his appreciation for the manifold kindnesses that you have constantly manifested to me.

"No one can recognize and appreciate more deeply than I do the honor which you have again conferred upon me. I sense the great, mighty obligations that go with the assumption of the presidency of the CIO. I know, like you do, that those responsibilities and obligations run to millions of people, many of whom I never have had the chance to meet; and yet they are living in countless communities and hamlets all over the United States and in Canada.

"And each day that God gives to me the strength and the wisdom to carry forward your purposes, I, like many of you, hesitate and wonder if I am worthy of the honor which you have oft-times conferred upon me.

"But to give me the strength, and the soul, and the purpose to carry forward, I look to you, because you are my strength, you are my source of inspiration, you are my courage and you are my wisdom. And with you lending your support to me, as you so graciously have down through the years, I pause occasionally to thank the Almighty God for you, and momentarily pray that He shall provide for me the essential guidance to do the work which you have assigned me."

HAYWOOD, nominated by Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald, of the Steelworkers, and Carey, named by Pres. Emil Rieve, of the Textile Workers, also were given acclamations and reelected without opposition.

There was one change among the CIO vice presidents. Pres. John Green, of the Shipbuilders, advised the convention through Murray of his unwillingness to serve again because of his health. He was succeeded by Pres. Michael Quill, of the Transport Workers.

Before the finale, the convention had laid down CIO policy on a long list of issues important to CIO members as workers, as Americans, and as men and women living in a world constantly growing smaller under the threat of a war of unprecedented devastation.

The echo of the expulsion of the Communist-dominated unions that started with the 1949 convention was heard but faintly. Action of the Executive Board in ousting them upon recommendations of trial boards was approved. The Marine Cooks & Stewards, one of the groups kicked out, sent a letter of appeal to CIO headquarters in Washington which was forwarded to Carey at the convention. Although it did not meet constitutional requirements, it was referred nevertheless to the Appeals Committee. That body found in it no reason to recommend a reversal of the board's action. No one appeared on behalf of the MCS.

IN ONE OF the convention's most important decisions, delegates approved a declaration on foreign policy which demanded in no uncertain words that the nations where devastation is being restored with the assistance of American dollars see to it that some of those dollars and the benefits of the industrial, agricultural and social rehabilitation they have brought about get down to the working people and the farmers.

The delegates expressed angry resentment that big business in some countries, especially France and Italy, is refusing to share its new-found prosperity with the great mass of the people. Speaker after speaker pointed out that the fight against Communism can be won only where men and women have a share in their wealth of their nations, where they have something to look forward to, where they have freedom and food and shelter and self-respect—that bullets alone won't win.

The Marshall Plan and Point Four were endorsed, but there was insistence that they be administered so the common people of the countries assisted share in their benefits. And the action of the United Nations in intervening in the Communist invasion of Korea was approved.

There was also an insistent cry that organized labor sit in at the top policy-making level not only in Marshall Plan and Point Four operations, but in all phases of United States foreign policy.

The delegates struck hard at domestic greed, too. They demanded that Congress enact an excess profits tax which will make the profiteers and speculators pay their proper share of the cost of rearmament and operating the country in an era of unprecedentedly high prices and profits lush beyond the imagination of the most avaricious. And they called for a re-shuffling of the whole tax structure to make it more equitable, so that those least able to pay won't have to shoulder such a large part of the burden.

THE DEFENSE Production Act was denounced as a fraud which will needlessly disrupt civilian production and must be amended before it can deal effectively with inflation. The requirement that wages and prices be controlled simultaneously in an industry came in for particularly hard attack. Here again the convention demanded participation for labor at the top level of all government policy-making.

The Subversive Activities Control Act, prompted by the defense campaign, was denounced as unworkable and ineffective, and an unnecessary and often cruel invasion of civil rights. President Truman was urged to create a national commission to plan effective control measures that will protect the rights of individuals.

On meeting the manpower needs for national defense, the convention pledged CIO to everything possible to meet production requirements. But at the same time, it opposed unequivocably a labor draft that would disrupt families, abrogate the rights of free labor and force workers to move from one plant to another.

In other actions the convention:

- Endorsed political action, praised CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll and his staff for their work, urged a stronger fight for liberal candidates for office at all levels, and launched the 1951 Dollar Drive.
- Approved a legislative program in the best traditions of the CIO's historic liberal stand, the New Deal and the Fair Deal.
- Endorsed Murray's labor unity meetings with the American Federation of Labor, and directed the CIO Unity Committee to continue meetings in the hope of achieving organic unity.
- Pledged continuance and stepping up of organization drives on all fronts.
- Accepted the report of Carey, as chairman of the IUE-CIO Administrative Committee, on the growth of the IUE from a paper set-up created a year ago to a lusty international with more than 260,000 dues-paying members and contracts covering some 300,000 workers.
- Endorsed the principles of the Tennessee Valley Authority and urged their application to all river development projects; this was the only issue on which there was disagreement, and it was settled in temperate, restrained debate that was in marked contrast to the acrimony often engendered by Communists and party line delegates at past conventions.
- Again attacked the Taft-Hartley Act and promised continuance of the fight for its repeal and the enactment of fair and equitable labor legislation.
- Warned internationals and locals to guard against state legislation permitting injunctions in labor disputes, lest the virus loosed by T-H spread further at the state level.
- Demanded that all Americans be granted their full civil rights in fact and insisted upon the extension of genuine democracy to all parts of the population.
- Called for major improvement in old age, survivors and disability insurance and public assistance.
- Asked Congress to strengthen the Wage-Hour and Public Contracts (Walsh-Healey) Acts and requested additional funds for the bureau so that the law can be properly administered.
- Endorsed the principle of fuller disclosure of atomic energy information within security limits, demanded that farming out of Atomic Energy Commission work to private industry be ended, and condemned Russia for blocking in the United Nations an international system of atomic energy control and inspection.
- Urged widespread reforms in the electoral system, including abandonment of the outmoded Electoral College in presidential elections.
- Endorsed the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, sent greetings to the Israeli Federation of Labor, demanded full free and democratic rights and government in Latin America and approved the work of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee for economic and social progress below the border, pledged support to Panamanian workers in the Canal Zone working for economic parity with American citizens there, and voiced full support to CIO members in Puerto Rico.
- And heard inspiring addresses by a list of distinguished speakers.

CIO LEADERS AND DELEGATES crowd around Michael Quill, president of the Transport Workers, whose right face profile is in the center of the photo, to congratulate him on his election as a CIO vice president. He succeeds Pres. John Green of the Shipbuilders.

NOTICE

Because of space limitations, The CIO News is unable to print all news of the National CIO Convention in this week's issue. Additional important articles, including excerpts from the resolutions on economic mobilization and workmen's compensation, as well as additional photographs, will be printed next week.

Delegates Come From Every State

More than 500 delegates attended the 12th CIO Constitutional Convention. They came from every one of the 48 states and from Canada, Alaska and Puerto Rico.

Thirty-two national and international unions and organizing committees were represented; 37 state industrial union councils; 148 city and county industrial union councils and 127 local industrial unions.

The Auto Workers had the largest representation, with 30 delegates, while the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee, had the fewest, two.

Fight To Continue For Civil Rights Bills

Resolution Calls For Repealing Wherry Amendment, Passage Of FEPC And Anti-Lynching Measures, Outlawing Poll Tax

THE CONVENTION approved the following resolution on civil rights and the extension of democracy:

America, from the earliest moment of her history, has striven toward the realization of the ideal that every human being has an inherent dignity and integrity which must be respected and safeguarded. We in the CIO maintain, in accordance with our democratic American heritage, that the welfare of the individual is the final goal of group life. Each of us, to be secure in the rights he wishes for himself, must be willing not only to respect but to fight for the rights of other men.

The Declaration of Independence explicitly recognizes the basic moral principle that all men are created equal as well as free. In that philosophy the Congress of Industrial Organization wholly concurs. We in the CIO have continuoulsy sought to implement the moral principle of the equality of all men, by building social institutions that will guarantee equality of opportunity to all men. Freedom without equality of opportunity is an illusion.

We in the CIO accept fully our responsibility to further economic opportunity, religious freedom and political participation for all. Our ultimate goal must be full economic, political and social equality for all persons and all groups, in thought, expression and action, without discrimination because of race, creed or national origin.

The system of segregation that the dead hand of the past has fastened upon our generation is crumbling little by little. In several states we have succeeded in strengthening the machinery for the protection of our civil rights.

Individual safety and security of person has been increased; several states have strengthened their law enforcement agencies to provide greater protection against mob or vigilante action. Few people would have ventured the prediction, three years ago, that a sheriff in the state of South Carolina would secure the indictment of the head of the state Ku Klux Klan.

Many southern states have passed unmasking laws, aimed at forcing the Ku Klux Klan into the open. An even larger part of the American people has come to realize that a violation of the rights of even one citizen jeopardizes the rights of all. America's conscience is slowly awakening to the contradiction between our ideals and our day-to-day practices.

The Senate of the United States, however, has not only failed to move forward with the times but has actually moved backward. For years, filibusters by a minority of Southern Senators have blocked the passage of federal FEPC legislation and of other federal civil rights proposals.

During the past session, the Senate not only failed once more to enact the FEPC bill or any other federal civil rights legislation, but, in a corrupt and cynical deal between Southern Democrats and Northern Republicans, strengthened the filibuster technique by adopting the Wherry Amendment, which requires 64 votes for cloture and exempts from any limitation on debate a motion to change the cloture rule or any other Senate rule. Removal of the Wherry roadblock must be a first step to the passage of civil rights legislation by the Senate.

Six additional states did, however, during the last sessions of their state legislatures, create Fair Employment Practices Commissions, making a total of ten states which now have such Commissions. In a series of historic decisions, the Supreme Court of the United States has struck down restrictive housing covenants, segregation and discrimination in higher education, and has banned segregation in interstate travel. The people of South Carolina have voted overwhelmingly to abolish that state's poll tax.

However, although we can point to these changes, we can ill afford to become complacent. The struggle for equality and liberty must be a continuing one. The need for intensifying our efforts is greater today than ever before. As we improve our civil rights in America we simultaneously strengthen our moral leadership in the family of nations. The United States is not so strong that we can ignore what the world thinks of our record. Our foreign policy gains strength as we put our own house in order.

Now, Therefore, Be It Resolved:

That the Twelfth Constitutional Convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations hereby pledges itself to continue the struggle to achieve the full, equal enjoyment of all the rights guaranteed in the Constitution of the United States, regardless of race, color, creed or national origin.

We recommend:

That each CIO affiliate strengthen its Civil Rights Committee or Department on Fair Practices within its respective organization, and that each International Union seek to have incorporated in its collective bargaining agreements non-discrimination clauses, particularly pertaining to hiring.

We demand:

1. The repeal of the Wherry Amendment and support of amendments to permit the breaking of filibusters by a majority of those voting
2. The passage of a federal fair employment act and of state acts in those states not now having such legislation.
3. Enactment of a federal anti-lynching bill.
4. The passage of federal and state legislation outlawing poll taxes and other restrictions on the right to vote.
5. The enactment, in federal appropriations for state aid, of safeguards against segregation.
6. The enactment of a strengthened federal civil rights law and the adoption of similar legislation in all states which now do not have such laws.

Convention Calls For Revision Of Subversives Control Act

THE RESOLUTION adopted by the convention on civil liberties and internal security follows:

Two problems of paramount importance and difficulty confront our nation today—and may continue to confront it for years to come. The first is to meet and repel the two-pronged Communist threat; the threat of armed aggression abroad posed by the Soviet Union and its satellites, and the threat of disruption, sabotage and espionage at home posed by the Soviet-oriented Communist Party and other agents of the Soviet Union. Both of these menaces to our American democratic system we must meet and turn back without ourselves irreparably damaging the free society we seek to protect.

Our armed forces must be and are being strengthened. At home we must be ever vigilant against the possibility of Communist sabotage and espionage. We in the CIO have repeatedly given our support to measures to strengthen the laws against sabotage and espionage.

We in America must not yield to panic and hysteria. The conception that individual freedom may safely be curtailed in time of crisis is always dangerous, and could be fatal to our democracy in a crisis of long duration—as the present one may unfortunately be. Moreover, reactionary forces are eager to use the Russian threat as a pretext to restrict and destroy liberal movements of all sorts—including particularly labor organizations.

The irresponsible headline-seeking activities of Senator McCarthy during the past year, and the similar conduct of the House Un-American Activities Committee during prior years have, unfortunately, created an atmosphere of alarm and insecurity which, heightened by the world-wide conflict between democracy and aggressive Communism, seriously endangers every individual's democratic rights.

This atmosphere resulted during the past year in the enactment, and subsequent passage over President Truman's veto, of the so-called Subversive Activities Control Act. In prior years it had resulted in a federal loyalty program which failed and still fails to accord procedural fair play to persons under investigation.

The 81st Congress, under the impact of the Korean crisis, gathered together every pending proposal labeled by its author as anti-subversive, lumped them all together, and passed them as the Subversive Activities Act. The Act is a composite of ill-considered and unrelated proposals which have little in common save their claim to being anti-Red.

The Act seeks first, to secure the registration of "Communist" organizations and their officers and members. The tests laid down for requiring registration tread dangerously upon freedom of speech and belief, since they depend upon political tenets rather than actual conduct.

The concept of freedom of speech, enshrined in the First Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, requires that everyone be free to hold whatever beliefs he will and to advocate whatever he chooses, so long as he does not act illegally or incite to violation of law. This old and sound tradition of our democracy is flaunted by the Act's registration provisions.

The registration requirement is, moreover, naive in the extreme, since, as the Attorney General has pointed out, real Communist organizations, after prolonged resistance to registering made possible by the Act's cumbersome procedures, will, if the constitutionality of the Act is upheld, simply dissolve and go underground, thus rendering more difficult the FBI's task of keeping them under scrutiny. Hence there is great danger that the impact of the registration sections will fall, and fall only, on organizations which are not Communist but simply advocate unpopular causes.

The provisions barring members of Communist organizations from working in defense plants are even more unworkable, for they are to be operative only as to plants listed by the Secretary of Defense as "sensitive." The Secretary's unwillingness to hand our nation's enemies a list of our critical war plants will no doubt destine this provision for the repose it well deserves.

Other provisions of the Act, as has already become apparent, unreasonably hamper the entry of aliens into the country. These sections on immigration and naturalization betray no underlying rationale except the sort of ignorant and bigoted anti-foreignism which gave rise a hundred years ago to the Know Nothing Party. The provision barring from this country anyone who was ever a member of a totalitarian organization—regardless of when, or at what age, or of whether the membership was voluntary—have seriously jeopardized our foreign relations and the good will we are attempting to build up under the European Recovery and Point IV programs. Others of the provisions dealing with aliens are so ill drawn, and so complicated, and their interrelation with existing laws so obscure, that the Department of Justice has stated that months will be required to ascertain their meaning.

Another portion of the statute provides for the internment—on evidence which may be kept secret from the internee—in time of war, invasion or insurrection, of persons likely to engage in espionage or sabotage. The provisions for internment on secret evidence owes more to the practices of the Bourbon monarchs than to the principles of democracy.

There can be no challenge to the right and duty of the Government to insure that only persons of loyalty and discretion occupy posts, whether in the government or outside, which involve the performance of functions or access to information affecting our national security.

A decent respect for the rights of the individual under our democratic American system requires that he shall not have his opportunity to earn a livelihood jeopardized or his reputation destroyed without a full and fair hearing. Yet loyalty and security investigations of government employes and of workers in "sensitive" private employment still lack the procedural safeguards which the common law has long recognized as essential to a fair hearing. Federal loyalty boards regularly act upon the basis of FBI reports avowedly comprised of unevaluated and unverified accusations by informants whose identity is not disclosed even to the Board. Persons under investigation are thus not confronted with the witnesses against them, or even advised as to their names or as to the nature of their testimony. There is no way for the most loyal American to defend himself against the unknown accusations of anonymous accusers.

These are difficult times. The problem of preserving our democratic system and the maximum amount of individual liberty consonant with national security, while mobilizing our strength and guarding against threatened aggression without and espionage and sabotage within, is not an easy one. It is a problem which calls for careful and dispassionate consideration by our most eminent leaders. It cannot be said that the Congress has as yet made any contribution, save a negative one, to its solution.

Now, Therefore, Be It Resolved:

This convention of the CIO calls upon President Truman to create a national commission of outstanding citizens from all walks of life, to include members of both Houses of Congress, to report and recommend measures that will fully protect the democratic rights of every individual while guaranteeing the necessary measure of national security. Such a commission should subject to its scrutiny the entire problem of safeguarding our internal security without impairing our civil rights, including particularly the issues raised by the Subversive Activities Control Act (McCarran Bill) and the present loyalty and security programs.

Pending the report of such a commission, we urge repeal of the ill-considered and unwise Subversive Activities Control Act, with the exception of those provisions tightening the existing sabotage and espionage laws which were requested by the Department of Justice. We commend President Truman for his courageous and far-sighted veto of that Act, and express our regret that Congress did not likewise place statesmanship and devotion to democracy ahead of panic and politics.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer

Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Michael Quill, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher

Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII November 27, 1950 No. 48

ALL EYES AND EARS!

TVA Resolution Adopted, But Utility Workers Accept With Reservations

THE ONLY DEBATE of the convention came on the resolution reiterating the position the CIO has long taken endorsing the principles of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Opposition was registered by delegates from the Utility Workers, who saw in it an endorsement for what they termed "socialization" of the electric power industry.

However, after CIO Pres. Philip Murray gave his interpretation of the resolution, explaining that the preamble "can be construed as we want" to construe it, and that the "resolve" is "but a reaffirmation of the position which our organization has taken repeatedly since 1944," Pres. Joseph Fisher, of the Utility Workers took the floor for a second time.

"I HAVE LISTENED to Pres. Murray's interpretation of the resolution before you," he said, "and on the basis of Pres. Murray's interpretation that we are voting on the Resolve that is a reiteration of the policy that CIO has taken in previous conventions, and reserving the right to question any other interpretation of the resolution by anyone, I believe we can concur with Mr. Murray in acceptance of the resolution."

The convention resolved that:

"We reaffirm the position which has been taken by the CIO time and time again endorsing the Tennessee Valley and the principles for which it stands as set forth above, and calling for the development of the hydro-electric power potentials of America on a scale which will meet the needs of the American people for both peacetime purposes and for defense."

THE PRINCIPLES referred to public generation and long-distance transmission of power, with public or co-ops getting the preference for local distribution; public construction and operation of auxiliary plants, and credit to municipalities and co-ops for the purchase of existing facilities where desirable. The resolution also called for protection of the workers' right to organize and bargain; administration of all river engineering and power operations in a region by a single federal agency, and "the management of all electric power and river engineering work in accordance with sound policies of regional planning and the cultivation and conservation of natural resources."

The Utility Workers, according to Harold J. Straub, director of organization, objected to the last one.

Anthony W. Smith, secretary of the Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, started off the debate by stressing that the resolution repeated the stand the CIO has taken so often in the past. Public ownership and operation of parts of the country, he stressed, is necessary to provide a "yardstick" for proper measurement of the services privately-owned utilities give. The CIO has taken the same position, he said, with regard to the Columbia Valley, the Missouri Valley and the St. Lawrence Seaway.

"Oh-oh . . . looks like the manager's found where you hide the organizing leaflets."

Fisher registered the Utility Workers' opposition on the basis that the language of the resolution was "misleading," and claimed it would harm the Utility Workers, other labor unions and the country as a whole.

The union favors and always has the development of river valleys, he said, but maintained that the present resolution "attempts to apply to the development of all hydro energy the so-called enunciated principles of TVA, and that has never been the policy of the CIO in the past." Proponents in the Resolutions Committee, he claimed, sought to use the resolution to implement "nationalizing our industry."

John Brophy, chairman of the committee, said that the plan as submitted from the beginning did not contemplate nationalization of the industry. He said:

"IT IS NEITHER socialization nor nationalization; it is a practical approach to the basic problems in the interests of the workers primarily, so there can be an ample amount of electric power to be utilized in our great industries, so that the ultimate consumer in the towns and in the villages and on the farms may get this precious power to use to their human interest and to their advantage.

"It means the enriching and broadening of human life, the strengthening of collective bargaining and the unionization of the workers."

Secy.-Treas. William Pachler, of the Utility Workers, also spoke against the resolution, as did Straub. Favoring it, in addition to Pres. Murray, was Pres. Joseph Beirne, of the Communications Workers.

CIO Acclaimed By Douglas For Fighting The Kerr Bill

SEN. PAUL DOUGLAS (D., Ill.), longtime expert on labor relations, told the delegates that the CIO had done a magnificent job of organizing mass industries and improving the conditions of the workers.

Douglas praised CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers for their courage in fighting Communists and for their outstanding success in ridding CIO unions of any Red taint.

"Fourteen years ago," Douglas declared, "there was little or no unionism in the great mass production industries. American trade unionism had found an entrance and strength in the building service trades and in many of the hand trades and in the needle trades, but it had not been able to get a foothold in steel, rubber, autos and the great machine industries of the country upon which the industries of the country turn.

"And it seemed very doubtful indeed whether these industries ever would be organized, the strength of the companies was so great, their power was so strong, and the power of organized labor seemed to be so weak that at that time it seemed impossible for flesh and blood to unionize.

"Now virtually all of these great mass production industries are unionized, steel, autos, rubber and aluminum, and the metal trades, the oil industry, and many others. On the whole, you are mopping up the industries and plants which are not organized; you are sweeping them into the fold."

DOUGLAS ALSO praised labor for its part in the political and legislative field.

"Your organization helped in little known battles in which it would have been relatively easy for you to have stood aside," the senator said. "The first was the so-called Kerr bill, which would have exempted the sale of natural gas pipelined by producers from regulation and would have enabled oil monopolies to boost the price of natural gas and this ultimately would have fallen with great weight on the ultimate consumer.

"The ordinary type of union would have said 'it is not our business,' but large groups of CIO went into the fight and fought shoulder to shoulder with us. When President Truman courageously vetoed that bill, we had so many votes that forces of monopoly did not dare to pass it over the President's veto."

Douglas led the fight in the Senate against the Kerr bill.

Passing to the field of labor legislation, he said: "Now I am going to say something which you probably will not like. I believe the Taft-Hartley Law was, on the whole, an iniquitous law. I believe it was framed with the idea of retaliation upon organized labor and to give the employers weapons with which they could destroy organized labor."

BUT IN ANY revision of the law, he said, there would be a tight obligation on the part of both labor and management to bargain collectively. He also favored a closed shop with an open union. He opposed high admission fees to unions and received a big hand from the CIO delegates.

On the Communist issue, he said, "I want to compliment the CIO for the magnificent job. It took a lot of courage for Jim Carey (in the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers) and Walter Reuther (in the Auto Workers) to make their fight."

"HE DID NOT LACK the courage of his convictions," said CIO Pres. Philip Murray (left) when he introduced Sen. Paul H. Douglas to the convention. He was referring to the fact that Douglas not only toured Illinois in support of President Roosevelt's foreign policy in 1941, but that in 1942, at the age of 50, he enlisted in the Marines.

CWA Pickets Thaw ATT Wage Freeze

THE 11-DAY strike of 17,000 telephone equipment workers in 43 states ended Nov. 19 on the eve of the CIO convention, in what Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers described as "a magnificent victory."

CWA members in Divisions 6, 13, and 68, employed by the Western Electric Co., which makes equipment for the huge Bell System, won wage increases ranging from nine to 14c an hour and—even more important—broke the pattern of 18-to-24-month wage freezes in the Bell system by gaining a 15-month contract, reopenable after 14 months.

The strike of the 17,000 members directly involved was supported throughout the country by loyal refusal of switchboard girls and other CWA members to cross picket lines—and the lines themselves were operated on a "hit-and-run" basis. None of the bemused company officials knew where to expect a picket line next. Best estimate of the total number involved at any one time was 120,000.

The company fought back with injunctions, threats, intimidation and angry public statements—but to no avail.

Michigan members of Division 15, employed by Michigan Bell, also went out. They won reclassifications and weekly wage increases of $3 to $5. They had been seeking to eliminate or reduce the differential between wages paid 10,000 workers in Detroit and the far lower sums received by other Michigan Bell employes.

OTHER strike-won gains included: elimination of "the sloppy distribution of increases in the merit ranges which the management had insisted upon," additional holiday pay for the installation workers, and non-discrimination clauses in all four contracts.

"We licked an unreasonable, unjust, and arrogant bunch of top level management good and proper," said Beirne.

"The contract terms contain the largest pay boosts negotiated this year in the Bell system, and the contract term is the shortest," he continued. "We are certain this splendid demonstration of solidarity will have its beneficial effects on all negotiations in the future."

Before the strike, the best reported company offer had been a two-year contract with a 16-month wage reopener, and a top wage increase of 11¼c hour with the management reserving the right to determine distribution of merit increases.

And this offer, rejected by CWA as "completely bad," had come after more than a year of negotiations.

IN ST. LOUIS, CWA Division 20 announced it would reopen its wage clause immediately, "in line with the national pattern," in its contract with Southwestern Bell, which covers 50,000 workers in Missouri, Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Kansas and part of Illinois.

Throughout the negotiations, the Western Electric management exerted extreme pressure on CWA to accept inferior contracts already put into effect between the company and other unions, both AFL and independent.

"The AT&T leaders handed out what amounted to approximately 8c per hour to the independent and AFL unions in the Bell system," Beirne said. "In every single instance they froze wage levels for 18 months. As a matter of fact, on November 16 (while we were battling the company on the picket lines) it was proudly announced by Western Electric that the IBEW-AFL in Allentown, Pa., had accepted an 18-month wage freeze. . . .

"As a result of the wonderful stand and field work by virtually every officer of our union, together with the solid support of virtually our entire membership, we have seen the Bell System give in on every major point in the dispute."

Murray Gets Symbol of 'Eight Lights'

RABBI Jacob J. Weinstein of K. A. M. Temple, Chicago, who addressed the convention on opening day, asked the delegates if they realized the influence the decisions made by the convention on international affairs have on the working masses of Europe and Asia. "I have just returned from Europe and Asia," he said. "I have spoken to the representatives of the working masses on the continent and in the Middle East and they watch your decisions closely."

He said that Histadrut, the General Federation of Labor in Israel, and the workers' leaders in France look to the CIO for guidance.

"The workers in both Israel and France say that if the CIO can have the confidence to go along with the liberal trends in the great nation of America, we can have confidence in it too," Rabbi Weinstein said.

Rabbi Weinstein presented President Murray with a Chanukah lamp from Jerusalem. He said the lamp is an ancient symbol of "the eight lights that were burning in the temple when the Macabees won it from the pagan forces of the Syrian Greeks."

Mayor Kennelly: 'Murray Great American'

MAYOR MARTIN H. Kennelly, who welcomed the delegates to Chicago, said that "Philip Murray is a great American."

Kennelly quoted with approval what Murray has frequently said: "What is good for the community is good for labor—and what is good for labor is good for the community and the nation."

Kennelly praised CIO officials who have been appointed to responsible positions in the city government.

"These men have brought credit, not only to themselves and to the community," he declared, "but also to the whole CIO and Philip Murray. Whenever a question comes up which affects the welfare of the people, they can be depended upon to be in there working."

Kennelly said that no one realizes the dangers of Communism better than the leaders and members of organized labor. He added that the CIO was to be congratulated for already taking the necessary steps to rid itself of left-wing factions.

"Treachery and subversive action must be searched out and stamped out and I am confident that the CIO will continue its vigilance and do just that," Kennelly said.

CLOSE HARMONY: This picture was taken at the pre-convention dinner at which the host was the Chicago CIO Council. Left to right: Mayor Martin H. Kennelly of Chicago; Danny Thomas, singer; Michael Mann, CIO Regional Director of Illinois, and CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

Injunctions Against Labor Are Scored

THE CALL to battle against "the oppressive evil of government by injunction" was sounded again in a convention resolution calling for the outlawing of the weapon employers have used with success for more than half a century.

The very nature of the injunctive process, the resolution asserted, "virtually ensures that its use in labor disputes will result in strikebreaking and injustices to labor," and that empowering judges to issue injunctions in labor disputes gives them jurisdiction in a field in which they are not informed, and for which such agencies as the National Labor Relations Board were created.

The Taft-Hartley Act has revived government by injunction, the resolution pointed out, and has encouraged the issuance of injunctions by state courts.

"The Taft-Hartley Act with its unfair, one-sided, anti-labor injunction provisions," it said, "must be repealed, and the Norris-LaGuardia Act restored to its original effectiveness.

"Anti-injunction laws must be enacted in all states where they do not now exist. Existing anti-injunction laws must be strengthened by corrective legislation to guarantee that they will be effective."

'Organize As You've Never Organized'—Murray

THE GENERAL slogan of the CIO in 1951 must be exactly the same as that slogan was on the day when the organization was created in a small committee meeting held in a room in the President Hotel in Atlantic City in November, 1935.

The slogan was "ORGANIZE—ORGANIZE—ORGANIZE."

This was the suggestion offered by President Philip Murray in a discussion of the resolution on organization at the Chicago convention. And the suggestion was rousingly cheered by the packed convention hall.

Murray's suggestion was in line with a general spirit permeating the convention proceedings — a spirit of re-dedication to that most basic of all union objectives —organization.

IN HIS MOST forceful style, Murray told the delegates that CIO, although it has more than 6 million members, has just begun the work of organizing the unorganized. He pointed out that there remain millions of unorganized workers in the United States.

Although the CIO has organized hundreds of thousands of workers in the past few years, it has not done the job in the way that it should be done, Murray asserted.

"The unorganized workers in the United States constitute a millstone around the economic necks of all the organized workers in the country," said Murray. "Their conditions of labor are bad; their wages are low; they find themselves in an economic plight from which they cannot extricate themselves without the assistance of the organized workers.

"I feel about this situation today, when the Steelworkers have a million members, as I did in 1935 when the Steelworkers didn't have 1500 members. We must organize.

"Please, for your sake, for your country's sake and for the sake of the people whom you are privileged to represent in this convention, make effective this resolution by organizing, after this convention is over, as you have never, never organized before," Murray concluded.

Allan Haywood, vice president and director or organization, pointed out that further organization can be the only foundation for any further advances that CIO can make.

"YOU TALK about PAC and yes, it is essential," asserted Haywood. "Who are you going to build with unless you have men in the unions? Who are you going to educate unless you bring them into the unions?

"Our program must now be again as it was in 1936 and 1937. Let us go into the highways and byways and help every union we can to bring members into this great union of ours that will stand as a real fighting force in the bulwark of democracy."

Haywood told of the accomplishments of CIO in the past year in organizing the unorganized and in re-winning for CIO the members of Communist-dominated unions which have been expelled from CIO in the past year.

Tracing the disintegration of some of these former CIO unions, he concluded with the warning: "And I want to say to that great warrior, Bridges, 'Be ready, Harry, we're coming.'" He was referring to Harry Bridges, president of the Longshoremen and Warehousemen, who were expelled from CIO a few months ago. He pointed out that revolutions are already going on within Bridges' union as the rank-and-file work to throw out pro-Communist leaders.

Sol Stettin, Philadelphia, a regional director of the Textile Workers, followed Haywood in the discussion to repeat the call for a revival of the spirit of CIO's early days.

STETTIN related an experience in Pottstown, Pa., where, through the activities of local members of the CIO in going before the plant gates and contacting the workers individually, they were successful in organizing three of the mills in that locality.

An example of the feeling of former members of pro-Communist unions who have rebelled from the pro-Communist line of leadership and returned to CIO was voiced by Daniel Harkins of Local 80, Food and Tobacco Workers, Camden, N. J.

Harkins traced his experiences as a member of the old FTA, which was expelled from CIO. He told of the dirty tactics used by FTA, of the rebellion staged by rank-and-filers who wanted to return to CIO and of the final success of this move.

"I want to say, speaking for our local, we are happy to be back in CIO because it was in CIO we were born, it was through CIO that we made our many gains and it is in CIO that we want to and will remain," Harkins concluded.

Vote for adoption of the resolution on organizing was unanimous. The resolution called for renewed devotion to organization in two fields: (1) workers not having any sort of union representation and (2) workers seeking an escape from the pro-Communist unions. The resolution expressed thanks to Vice President Haywood and his staff and to Director John Riffe and the staff of the CIO Organizing Committee.

FOR A UNION BUILDER: At the close of the convention discussion of organization, Allan S. Haywood, vice president and director of organization (left), received a token present from Vice Pres. A. R. Kinstley of the Oil Workers in recognition of Haywood's record as an organizer. Kinstley is handing Haywood a plastic cigaret case bearing the inscription "This Case Belongs to a Union Builder." The Oil Workers, as a part of its current Union Builder organizing program, presents one of these cases to each of its members who obtains a new member.

SOL STETTIN

Stettin, who is a regional director for the CIO Textile Workers with headquarters in Philadelphia, said that to do a good job of organizing the unorganized the spirit of the CIO in 1935, 1936 and 1937 is needed.

CIO Will Continue Drive To Organize Unorganized

The following resolution was adopted by the convention on organizing follows in part:

The CIO is dedicated by its Constitution to organizing unorganized workers and uniting them in unions for their mutual aid and protection. Throughout its existence, the CIO has striven to fulfill this pledge.

Since the passage of the Taft-Hartley Act, new organization has become more and more difficult. Indeed, under Taft-Hartley, even established unions have held their own only by strenuous effort and persistent determination.

Already the CIO Organizing Committee has brought the benefits of unionism to thousands of unorganized workers in the south. It is a tribute to the leadership, zeal and courage of Director John Riffe, and his staff, that the CIO has made substantial progress in the south despite the frenetic and unscrupulous opposition of employers and their allies.

NOW, THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED THAT:

The CIO will continue its drive to organize the unorganized. It renews its pledge to bring into unions the millions of unorganized workers still denied the benefits of union organization and collective bargaining. The CIO recognizes that only by the organization of the unorganized can the gains heretofore made by labor be protected and extended.

We congratulate Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, Director of Organization and Councils, for the energetic organizing activity which has enabled the CIO to maintain its strength and membership.

We extend to the CIO Organizing Committee and to its Director, John Riffe, our appreciation for their courageous and vigorous fight to organize Southern workers.

We commend the members and leaders of the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, the Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee and the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee for their successful campaign to bring free democratic trade unionism to workers formerly dominated by Communist groups. We pledge our full support to these new organizations in their continuing efforts to smash Communist influence in our democratic labor movement. To the members of these unions, and of other national unions and local industrial unions who have come back to the CIO from organizations expelled for Communist domination, we offer a warm fraternal welcome and our pledge to help their struggle for better conditions.

Canal Workers To Get Help

ALL DEPARTMENTS and committees of the CIO were instructed by the convention to use their resources to work by negotiation and through legislation for social and economic justice for Panamanian employes of the U. S. government in the Canal Zone.

The resolution also voted continued support and encouragement of the organization of the workers into Local 900 of the CIO Government and Civic Employees Organizing Committee, and recommended to internationals that they "render appropriate assistance to aid in the alleviation of the human suffering existing in the Canal Zone."

The resolution was passed after John Yancey, of the Transport Service Employes, who is working with the GCEOC and was assigned to the Canal Zone, described minimum wages of 26c an hour—an increase of 16c an hour since the U. S. first started working in the Canal Zone in 1903.

The top rate for Panamanian workers, he said, is $2 for a few, but the average is 48c, while the average wage paid American citizens is $2.06. The resolution pointed out that the Panamanian workers receive no pension on retirement, that housing is worse than in the worst U. S. slums, and that "the worst America has to offer in the way of race segregation has been transplanted" there.

Reuther Calls Bias In U. S. Weapon For Communists

SPEAKING IN support of a civil rights resolution, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers told the delegates that unless America develops a moral leadership to go with the economic and military power, we cannot lead the free forces in the world.

"Discrimination on the home front in America," he said, "has given the Communists the most effective and devastating propaganda weapon they possess. They are drumming into the ears of millions of people in Asia the fact that American democracy does not match its noble promises by practical performance.

Speaking in favor of a civil liberties and internal security resolution, Secy.-Treas. Mazey of the Auto Workers charged that the McCarran Anti Civil Liberty Act "is an attempt to limit freedom of discussion and to impose thought control."

"This law," he declared, "is aimed at all organizations which are trying to change conditions as they exist in America at the present time. We must be on guard that in our desire to wipe out Communist oppression we do not adopt measures which in themselves will bring about Fascism in America."

Mazey commended Pres. Truman for his courage in vetoing the McCarran Act.

U. S. Unions Tougher

An important aspect of American workers' high living standard is the power of their trade unions, according to a team of French productivity experts who have just returned from a three-month tour of the U. S. The 13 men, all production specialists, said American workers have better equipment and better bosses, but that they do not work any harder than French workers.

Fight Pledged On State Curbs

The convention renewed the CIO's stand against restrictive state labor laws and again called on affiliates to continue, with renewed vigor. the fight to remove them from the statute books.

"Attempts by reactionary employer interests to secure state laws restricting legitimate union activities," said a resolution, "will be opposed to the utmost.

"The fight for a better America will be carried out not only in Washington, but in every state capital throughout the land."

The resolution noted that organized labor was unable to secure the repeal of any adverse and unfair state legislation during the last year. This was in contrast to 1949, when portions of anti-labor laws were repealed in Delaware, Missouri and New Hampshire.

Convention Declaration On Foreign Policy

THE WINNING of enduring peace is the primary goal of all people everywhere. The CIO pledges its full and unlimited resources towards strengthening democratic forces in America and throughout the world in a common effort to create the economic, political and social bases on which peace must be built.

The struggle between freedom and tyranny—between democracy and communism—is a struggle for men's minds, their hearts, and their loyalties. We cannot win this struggle—we cannot make freedom secure and build peace in the world if we fight communism with guns alone. We shall defeat the forces of communist tyranny and create the world environment in which a just and lasting peace can be won only if we mobilize the full strength of the free people of the world to fight the forces of communism on every front. This requires that American democracy fully mobilize its human and material resources—its economic and spiritual power to forge both the weapons of war to stop Communist aggression on the military front, and the tools of peace to fight poverty, hunger and injustice on the economic and social fronts.

1. KOREA

The CIO welcomes this occasion to reaffirm its complete support of our government and the United Nations in the struggle against Communist aggression in Korea. We renew our pledge in face of the further aggression by the Red Chinese puppets of the Soviet Union.

After the eventual conclusion of the fighting in Korea, a great task lies ahead for the United Nations. Our government must take the lead in pressing for thoroughgoing measures which will make the reconstruction of Korea an example and inspiration for all Asia.

The false promises and dictatorship of the Communists must be replaced not by discredited feudal regimes but by bread, land, peace and freedom under a United Nations Commission for all Korea.

2. UNITED NATIONS

The CIO hails the prompt and decisive action of the United Nations in Korea to preserve world peace and stability as the "effective collective measure" which it is required to take by Article I of the Charter.

On the basis of this action a lasting system of collective security must be constructed. When the Security Council cannot act because of the obstructive veto of the Soviet Union, we fully endorse the decision adopted by the General Assembly that it must undertake the function of suppressing aggression and other threats to peace.

The United Nations has proved worthy of the support we have given it since its inception. The need for collective security has already given rise to such regional pacts as the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, which we welcome as the democratic response to the totalitarian threats.

The United Nations is growing into the cohesive international community organization which the free world requires. It is becoming apparent that the UN requires greater powers in various functional ways: military force against aggression, inspection for control of atomic energy, in shipping and communication.

3. DISARMAMENT

The CIO reaffirms its support of all sincere efforts to obtain general disarmament including international control of atomic energy with full powers of inspection.

The CIO rejects with contempt the false peace plans—such as those propounded at the Stockholm, Sheffield and Warsaw conferences—advanced by the Communists for propaganda purposes to disguise the expansionist aggression of the Soviet Union. As President Truman said before the UN General Assembly last month, "The plan must be foolproof. Paper promises are not enough. Disarmament must be based on safeguards which will insure the compliance of all nations.

"The safeguards must be adequate to give immediate warning of any threatened violation. Disarmament must be policed continuously and thoroughly. It must be founded upon free and open interchange of information across national borders."

4. AFFIRMATIVE ACTION

Communism offers the hungry and underprivileged peoples of the world the promise of economic security at the price of political and spiritual enslavement. We must prove to the people of the world that in a democratic society men can have both bread and freedom. We must answer the propaganda of the Cominform not by pious slogans about democracy's virtues, but by a bold program of social and economic action.

What was begun as the Marshall Plan for Europe and extended to the underdeveloped countries of the world through President Truman's Point Four program must be greatly expanded. The Gordon Gray report, on the basis of which the President is drafting a peace program to submit to Congress, spells out the nature of the task which confronts us and the other free peoples of the world in developing the positive alternative to communist infiltration, subversion and aggression. We support the broad objectives of that report. We welcome as a move in this same direction the recent British Commonwealth conference to explore methods of assisting the development of Southeast Asia.

Our export of industrial techniques under Point Four will provide maximum advantage to us and our friends abroad only if it is joined hand-in-hand by the introduction of those social and labor techniques through which the American people have developed our own system of checks and balances in our industrial civilization.

These techniques can best be taught by the men and women of American labor, with their wide experience and humanitarian outlook.

There is a clear and present need for broad, long-range projects as recommended in the Gray Report. We obviously must plan in terms of decades rather than months. We need to raise our sights on what we are able and willing to do to help people help themselves, and to work at the job of creating the conditions for peace throughout the world.

5. EUROPEAN RECOVERY

The continuing success of the European Recovery Program in most of the participating countries is a source of considerable satisfaction to the CIO, which has supported the Marshall Plan from the very beginning.

The disappointments with the results accomplished in a few of the countries are accented by the manner in which they stand out against the larger background of the program's general success. The CIO Convention, therefore, reaffirms its support for the ERP, but at the same time calls for bold new policies to encourage improved distribution of national income.

We call for increasing emphasis on measures which will lead directly to improvements in the living standards of workers in the aid-receiving nations, especially in Italy, France and Western Germany, where there is imperative need for legislation and economic reforms which will permit to working people to share more fully in the benefits of the recovery effort.

Simultaneously, we call for action that will assist with the building of strong, free trade union movements in these countries, in keeping with the explicit Congressional directive to foster the growth of the democratic forces.

The CIO recognizes that ECA has helped to accomplish a great degree of economic rehabilitation from the disasters of World War II, but it believes that the agency must quickly adapt its program now to achievement of improved living standards as an essential adjunct to the program of mutual defense. It is imperative that the workers of France, Italy and Western Germany, be given a way of life that is worth defending if they are to be counted upon as forces participating in the resistance to the threat of Communist aggression. ECA must, therefore, be prepared to insist that governments of the cooperating nations adopt and carry out policies of dividing the fruits of recovery among all the segments of society.

The CIO is aware of, and approves in general, the ECA's careful effort to avoid interference with the internal affairs of the friendly European nations, but feels the time has come when we cannot sit by idly if and while American tax money goes to swell the profits of the few and to maintain a feudalistic economy rather than to the improvement of the living standards and working conditions of the people as a whole. It is our frank belief that we must attach such conditions upon the use of ECA money as will insure an equitable distribution of the benefits.

If the present state of economic demoralization of workers — attendant upon a growing gap between prices and buying power—is permitted to continue, the Communists will be the sole beneficiaries.

It is apparent that there is an urgent surplus population problem in Europe, particularly in Italy and Western Germany, which is delaying the rebuilding of Europe on a sound economic base. The CIO urges that ECA resources are made available to assist in the reallocation of European manpower and to deal with the local over-population situations. To further European economic recovery, we urge our government in international conferences actively to promote the development of plans for labor reallocation and emigration. We believe that Congress should adjust our own immigration laws and regulations to allow the United States to do its share, with other free nations, in contributing to the solution of the problem.

The CIO is thoroughly in support of the Military Assistance Program by which our government is helping our friends in Europe. The CIO contends that the Military Assistance Program can and must be achieved without undue sacrifices on the part of the less favored sections of the populace. We believe, with Paul Hoffman, that Western Europe can bring this about; we must see to it that there is such planning.

6. EUROPEAN UNITY

The CIO welcomed the Schuman Plan as a means of strengthening the unity of Europe by outlining a program for supra-national coordination of the heavy industries of the Continent. We commend representatives of the ICFTU for the assiduous attention with which they have followed the development of the plan. We repeat that the success of the plan is contingent, however, upon the working out of details in a manner satisfactory to trade unionists participating in the conferences concerned with it.

We believe all such measures looking toward closer integration of western Europe should receive the most sympathetic consideration of our government.

In the achievement of economic integration the power of the cartels to restrict production and dominate the economic life of the European community must be broken, and the economy organized to achieve maximum production and abundance based upon the needs of the people.

We urge our government to hasten the conclusion of a peace treaty with West Germany. The reconstruction of a united democratic Germany has been prevented by the refusal of Russia to cooperate with the three Western occupying powers. Further delay is dangerous. The exclusion of the German people from the European community and lack of return toward normal self-government only weakens our friends in Germany and runs the risk of strengthening the militaristic and Nazi remnants.

The German people must pursue much more diligently the task of ridding their country of Nazi influences in all social activity if they are to be re-accepted into the community of free nations. We praise the efforts of the German trade unions and pledge them our full support in opposing Communism. We urge them to redouble their efforts to expose and defeat the collaboration of German industrialists and cartels with Soviet Russia and its satellites.

7. INFORMATION SERVICE

The CIO welcomes the recent decision to expand greatly the U. S. Information Service. The Russian propaganda machine has demonstrated, what they learned from Hitler, the power of the repeated lie. Our answer and our strength must be the repeated truth. An essential part of this expansion of information work is the decision to seek the participation of persons from the labor movement. The appeal of the Communists is addressed to the workers, and it can be best refuted by the workers themselves.

8. LABOR PARTICIPATION

The CIO strongly believes that our nation will directly benefit by the appointment of men and women trained in the ranks of labor to influential positions in the planning, policy and operational divisions of the State Department.

Such an infusion of labor-minded citizens into our foreign affairs program would constitute a long-overdue recognition of the need for using every resource at the nation's command to solve the enormously complex problems which face our government throughout the world.

Labor's participation in the ECA has accounted for much of the popular success of the recovery program; labor's moral appeal and experience have helped avert policies that might have weakened the understanding of ECA by the great mass of European workers.

It is essential that the experience of American labor should be be used in the delegation of the United States to the General Assembly of the United Nations, to the Economic and Social Council and to the various Commissions and Specialized Agencies.

9. STATE DEPARTMENT

The irresponsible and unsubstantiated attacks of McCarthyism against Secy. Dean Acheson and the State Dept. have weakened our efforts to give leadership to the democratic forces of the world against the forces of Soviet tyranny and aggression. We applaud the Secretary of State's courageous refusal to be diverted from the high tasks of his office by the reckless charges of Sen. McCarthy.

The growing pressure of McCarthyism must be resisted, and the State Dept. must strengthen its efforts to work with and encourage the genuine democratic forces throughout the world which truly represent the hopes and aspirations of people.

We believe that the effort to maintain and extend the frontiers of democracy is more than a political struggle. Economic well-being is necessary for political stability and individual freedoms. The influence of our government must be directed toward expanding world trade and eliminating barriers to economic cooperation.

10. DICTATORSHIPS

The CIO deplores, as dangerous to democratic unity and ideals, the granting of economic aid to the totalitarian dictatorships of Franco Spain and Peron Argentina.

The $62,500,000 loan to Franco (authorized by Congress in September, 1950) threatens to weaken the precarious position of the democratic forces in Europe and Asia, and to hinder the mobilization of the anti-totalitarian people of Europe against the encroachments of Communism.

The CIO likewise deplores the recent decision of the United Nations to modify its 1946 Resolution on Franco Spain. The re-establishment of Ambassadors at Madrid and the admission of Spain to the Specialized Agencies of the UN will not help the democratic forces in the world. The Franco appeasement will certainly lose us more allies among the workers and farmers of Europe—our best friends on the Continent—than it can possibly gain for us in terms of short-run military expediency.

In the same way, aid to Peron's Argentina can only divide, weaken and confuse the hard-pressed democratic forces throughout Latin America.

The free world can and must defeat the military aggression launched by the Kremlin and its Communist puppets. The free world can — and must — provide that moral leadership and wise action which will provide democratic alternatives to Communist ideology for every citizen of the world.

Our task is difficult. But we will win by our determination, our boldness and courage, our faith in the democratic ideals by which we live.

Share Asked For Workers In ECA Benefits

AN INDIGNANT cry welled up from speakers on the convention foreign policy resolution over the failure of some countries to give the working people of those nations a share in the postwar prosperity built up by American aid.

Speaker after speaker reiterated that only when the workers share in a nation's prosperity are the forces opposed to world Communism strong. In those countries where greedy industrialists and capitalists have hung on to the money this country has poured into them through the Marshall Plan, the Communists are still strong, they said.

"It is our firm conviction," said Jacob S. Potofsky, chairman of the CIO International Committee and president of the Clothing Workers, "that the Marshall Plan and Point 4 are steps in the direction not only of rehabilitation of the devastated countries of the world, but also in bringing hope to their peoples.

"THESE instruments must reach the masses of the people. If we offer criticism of the policies of the European Economic Administration, it is because we feel very strongly that the objective is not to make the rich richer.

"The objective, as we understand it, is to give the peoples of the world real democracy, without any molestation; and our criticism is directed to policies that do not permit the hundreds of millions of dollars our country is pouring into these countries to seep through to the working people, to the masses of the people.

"We feel that some of these countries ought to be strong enough to afford their government to be self-sustaining. We feel they ought to have a wage, whether in France or Western Germany, sufficient for those people to live decently. We feel there ought to be land reforms in Italy and other countries so the peasants and the poor people would have an opportunity to assert themselves. We want the Marshall Plan in France to be directed toward that end."

Potofsky stressed the CIO's long stand against loans to Franco or Peron, because "we oppose Fascism and we oppose Communism." He recalled the CIO approved the Schuman Plan for the integration of Eastern Europe's heavy industry provided European labor is properly represented, there is no cartelization, and Nazi industrialists "do not come back to arm the world to war."

"The CIO believes in labor participation in the State Dept. and every agency of our government," he said, "and we want participation not because we want jobs but because we want peace and security. We want participation on the highest policy-making level."

PRES. Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers touched off the discussion with a stirring plea to extend the fight against communism from the military front to "men's minds, their hearts and their loyalties."

"We have to take away poverty and hunger and social and economic injustice, which are the sources of Communist strength," he said.

A LUNCHEON MEETING was held by the CIO International Committee on the opening day of the convention. Left to right: CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, Secy.-Treas. David McDonald of the Steelworkers, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, committee chairman; CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Michael Ross, committee secretary; Gust De Muynck, an assistant secretary general of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, and Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel.

"As long as people are hungry, as long as people are denied the elementary matters of social justice, the Communists will be able to exploit that poverty in the world and turn it into power. So our task is not only to forge the weapons of war but to work on the positive job, because we have to prove by practical demonstration that men can have both bread and freedom. . . .

"In those countries where there are strong, free, democratic unions, with the power and the will to fight to win a fuller measure of economic and social justice for the great mass of people, Communism is weak. But in those countries where there are not strong unions to fight this battle for the great mass of the people, the forces of Communism are strong."

CIO PRES. Philip Murray deplored McCarthyism in the recent election and called on the country's leaders, "whether they be Republicans or Democrats, to provide the light, to give guidance to the people—intelligent guidance—without tearing the heart out of America and creating a state of despondency in the minds of the people." He described it as "unfortunate" that the U. S. should be torn asunder over what the country should do to fight Communism.

"We have expressed to the officers of the ECA," he said, "our desire to have the government, through the State Dept. and the ECA, see to it that the governments to whom we give funds to assist in industrial and economic rehabilitation pass those benefits that accrue to the poor people. . . .

"We have insisted in cases such as the one which presently prevails in France and in Italy that our administration take a positive position with respect to the distribution of our American funds among the peoples in those countries.

"In other words, that where it is discovered that industrial output has gone up and profit-making is present, that the industrialists who derive benefits through the use of our money then contribute toward the development of a free and democratic society by providing a better standard of living for the people in those countries."

Pres. Harry Martin of the Newspaper Guild, who also is ECA chief of labor information in Europe and a labor adviser to ECA, recounted Western Europe's gains in industrial and agricultural production, transportation and trade since the ECA went to work.

"WESTERN Europe has made a phenomenal comeback since the dark days of despondency at the close of the war," he said. "And, as a general thing, our friends of the European trade unions feel that the workers in MOST of the participating countries have shared in the benefits of the recovery program as well as in the sacrifices attendant upon the restoration of their homelands."

He told of the inroads democratic forces have made on Communist political strength in elections in the countries where the workers have shared in the benefits of the improved economy, then conceded that in France and Italy, where there has been little if any sharing, communism is still strong — though under constant challenge from "new and vigorous young free labor movements."

In both countries, he said, the workers are trapped between feudal-minded industrialists, outdated labor laws, and unions that for the most part are dominated by the Communists.

"Those encrusted apostles of the status quo," he said, "are, in many cases, the very same well-heeled characters who financed Fascism in Italy, who played footsie with the notorious Vichy collaborationist government in France, who have sold out their people before and who, God forbid, will sell them out again if it should ever become essential to the preservation of their own skins or even merely compatible with the continued cramming of their own pocketbooks."

HE ENDORSED the "bold new steps" called for in the resolution, explaining that there is a growing sentiment within ECA itself that they have to be taken. He added:

"Such steps are certain to be criticized in some circles on both left and right as undue interference with the internal affairs of a sovereign nation.

"I do not call it interference if we tell a friendly government that it must NOT use our dollar aid to finance the further enrichment of a greedy patronnat."

Vice Pres. John Livingston, of the Auto Workers, who spent several weeks in Europe, told of finding American-owned plants paying 37c an hour in Germany (General Motors) and $25 to $40 a month in France (Frigidaire). Through the convention he called upon American manufacturers with investment abroad to do their share in building up democracy by paying their own workers a decent wage.

Vice Pres. Jack Altman, of the Wholesale and Retail Workers, warned against letting the United States get involved in a series of small "wars" push-buttoned by Soviet Russia, and urged that should this problem have to be faced eventually, we should "say to Russia that we will bring the war where it belongs, on Soviet shores and not on the satellites, because we must attack the heart, the nerve system, if war does come."

WALTER P. REUTHER Opposes Reaction of Left and Right

JACOB S. POTOFSKY, International Committee Chairman

Legislative Program Highlights

The resolution on the legislative program, which was adopted by the convention, called for:

1. Repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act and the enactment of a fair and equitable labor relations law, based on the principles of the Wagner Act; and for the defeat of any proposals which will approve the use of injunctions to break strikes or to weaken the collective bargaining process.

2. Enactment of an effective excess profits tax. The present 81st Congress has given a moral commitment to enact an excess profits tax this year, and it should honor its pledge. The 82nd Congress should enact a permanent, progressive tax program that fairly levies the burden of increased taxes on the basis of ability to pay, and closes old and new tax loopholes. It should defeat the NAM and similar plans to put $8 billion of the $10 billion in necessary new taxes on low income families by a sales tax costing more than $300 per year family.

3. Extension and strengthening of nationwide rent control to meet the new housing emergency. Millions of families in defense production centers and elsewhere must be protected against impending rises in the cost of shelter. In view of the early expiration of the present laws this legislation must be enacted by the 81st Congress.

4. Amendment of the Defense Production Act to provide our government with a truly effective weapon against inflation. Special interest loopholes in the law must be closed, and commodity speculation must be regulated. The Act's wage-price tie-in provision is inequitable and unworkable. If put into effect, it would freeze wages in those industries whose prices were controlled. Since industrial workers do not customarily eat the goods they produce, the law makes no sense. Operation of the wage-price tie-in would, moreover, freeze wage and salary earners in an underprivileged position in the economy. The Act should provide authority for selective and general price controls without the necessity for wage controls and should provide for effective controls over food prices and for grade labeling.

The Act should moreover be amended to make more adequate provision for eliminating bottlenecks in the production or distribution of materials by expanding facilities. Such expansion should, if possible, be handled by federal aid to private enterprise. If necessary it should be handled by government construction, lease or operation.

5. Repeal or drastic amendment of the Subversive Activities Control Act to do away with unworkable "registration," dangerous listing of defense facilities, discrimination against aliens which daily makes our international position ridiculous, and elimination of other evils described by President Truman in his veto message.

6. Granting of Statehood to Alaska and Hawaii, and of home rule for the District of Columbia. These measures are long overdue and are urgently needed to strengthen democracy's case in the contest with Communist propaganda.

7. Repeal of the Knowland "scab-or-starve" amendment and establishment of a nationalized system of unemployment insurance and public employment offices, now obviously needed for the effective mobilization and best use at highest skills of all our manpower. Pending the establishment of such a system, Congress should provide improved Federal benefits standards as regards amounts, duration and eligibility, and should extend coverage and provide for the transfer of benefit credits from State to State as manpower needs may require.

8. Improvement of the Wage-Hour Act to increase the minimum wage to at least $1 an hour, strengthen its overtime provisions, remove discriminatory exemptions, extend coverage to at least 7 million more workers engaged in commerce or in industries affecting commerce, and restore the Secretary's power to sue on behalf of workers for unpaid wages due under the Act.

9. Provide adequate funds for the enforcement of the Public Contracts (Walsh-Healey) Act; defeat attempts by employers paying substandard wages to repeal or weaken the Act.

10. Adequate appropriations to increase military strength, increase the military strength of our allies in the United Nations, and launch an all-out peace offensive to help people in underdeveloped areas to help themselves; this means an increase of billions a year in ECA and Point Four aid.

11. Provide federal aid to build houses for those who need them most. Repeal present discriminatory credit regulations which prevent workers' families from buying new houses; substitute direct controls that will provide:

Strict allocation of building materials with top priority (after defense projects) for public housing and houses priced to sell to average families, and control and roll back prices of building materials, and control sale prices of houses, both old and new.

12. Enact an FEPC bill and other civil rights legislation recommended by the President's Committee on Civil Rights. Specifically, we call for:

Passage of a Fair Employment Practices bill; passage of legislation outlawing poll taxes and other undemocratic restrictions on the right to vote; enactment of a federal anti-lynching bill.

We also call for passage of measures to bar segregation in inter-state travel; enactment of safeguards against segregation in federal appropriations for state aid, and reform of the procedures of Congressional Committees to insure fair treatment of witnesses and of persons and organizations who are made the subjects of testimony before such committees.

To make possible enactment of the first five of those measures, it will first be necessary to repeal the Wherry Amendment to Senate Rule XXII which by (1) requiring 64 votes to limit debate and (2) exempting from any limitation on debate changes in this and other Senate rules, attempts to lock in place forever minority rule by filibuster.

13. Federal aid to education and an effective Labor Extension Service in the Department of Labor.

14. Add national health insurance to the Social Security Act, also permanent and total and temporary partial disability insurance; increase old age benefits to provide a decent minimum standard of living; and extend the Social Security Act's coverage to all migrant farm and industrial workers.

15. Establish uniform Federal standards and codes for industrial health and safety and for workmen's compensation.

16. Adjust veterans' benefits to meet rising costs and similarly modernize the veterans' readjustment allowances program.

17. Speed construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Power Project, certified as a national defense necessity by the Department of Defense and President Truman.

18. Undertake the integrated regional development of rivers and natural resources utilizing the experience gained in TVA.

19. Provide for the development and maintenance of a U.S. merchant marine of size and status commensurate with this country's role of leadership in world affairs.

20. Initiate a comprehensive forestry program, including direct federal regulation of timber cutting on all timber lands, in order to stop the dangerous depletion of our timber resources.

21. Support a farm program geared to a full economy, including reasonable price and income support, farm credits, soil conservation, improvement of rural living standards, and protection of consumers.

22. Enactment of measures directed toward expanding world trade and eliminating barriers to economic cooperation.

23. Defeat special interest raids, such as attempts to: restrict Federal regulation of gas rates, remove submerged oil resources from Federal control, or give immunity to monopolistic basing point practices.

24. Free Congress from anti-democratic minority control, delay and hidden votes by:

Repeal of the Wherry amendment (as stated above); providing for the selection of Congressional Committee chairmen and members; providing for joint House and Senate Committee hearings on identical or similar bills;

Installing electrical voting devices in both Houses to save time and give people a record of every vote cast by their elected Representatives and Senators; defeating any attempt to restore the House Rules Committee's veto power over legislation; providing for the broadcasting and televising of Congressional debates.

25. Do away with the outmoded electoral college and provide for direct election of President and Vice President.

Chapman Flays Apostles Of Scarcity

SECRETARY of Interior Oscar L. Chapman told the convention the stability of the nation's economy is being threatened by the scarcity-economy profiteers.

These profiteers, he said, are capitalizing on the current crisis by raising prices under circumstances which he termed "unjustified and unpatriotic."

He praised some industry leaders who are "holding the line on prices and putting the spurs on production.

"We will win the fight against inflation," Chapman said. "I hope we will be able to win it with a minimum of controls. But if additional controls are necessary, your Government is going to impose them. We cannot permit the economic anarchy of unrestrained inflation to impair the productive energy and the standard of living in America."

NSRB HEAD SYMINGTON, INTERIOR SECY. CHAPMAN.

The secretary said that in any application of controls, care must be taken to see that they apply to rich and poor alike.

He stated that because the problem currently facing the nation is of indefinite duration, the civilian economy could not be cut heavily without jeopardizing civilian efficiency and morale.

"The indefinite duration of the problem also makes industrial expansion much more important than during World War II," Chapman said. "It requires us to keep our industrial power strong and to make it stronger, so that the military load will become easier to bear after the first year or two and so that our economic strength will remain intact against any possibility of some greater crisis later on."

CHAPMAN called current steel production "inadequate." The gap between steel production and demand, civilian and military, will be wider next year. Our steel shortage is not the result of inefficient use of the facilities we have on hand. He continued:

"Instead our growing shortage is the result of the short-sighted policies of a few men, who lacking confidence in the future of America, have refused to expand steel facilities at the pace our economic growth demands."

He declared the American people cannot afford to permit the growth of the nation to be stunted and its security jeopardized by the "faint-hearted apostles of a scarcity economy. He said:

"By trying to play it safe, these men are endangering the country's future. Steel and other basic industrial capacity must be increased beyond the narrow limits presently blueprinted by industry. We have no time to lose. With so much at stake we cannot afford to hope we will have enough—we must make sure we will."

The Secretary said that labor must expand its education program because distortions and propaganda mislead the people.

Because of this misleading propaganda, Chapman said, "it has become more important than ever before that the labor vote be an informed vote.

"This means a bigger and more objective labor press. It means a tremendous educational program, employing with ingenuity and energy all the possible media for public education.

Chapman said that "labor must be equally well-informed and equally prepared for action on international issues" as it is on domestic ones.

Labor "should strive, for example," he said, "to make the Point 4 program for the development of the underdeveloped nations of the world as important to the working men and women of America as low-cost housing; to make free world trade as important as rent-control."

Responsibility Heavy On CIO Cardinal Says

SAMUEL Cardinal Stritch, Archbishop of Chicago, told the convention that the people have placed "tremendous responsibility" upon the leaders of the CIO.

"Only a few years ago," he said, "it was a question of advocating the right of labor to organize. Labor was not widely organized then. Now it is, and now comes the realization of the tremendous responsibilities the people of this country have placed upon the leaders of the CIO."

Cardinal Stritch said there is a deep conflict in the world today on whether there shall be enjoyment of human rights by the individual in a properly ordered society of brotherly relations or "whether there shall be the totalitarian method which makes slaves out of the common man."

He said the theory of democracy "rests basically upon deep religious principles—the principle that our native rights derive from God and the principle that we are bound together in Christ in a brotherliness of His sacred blood."

He asked the blessing of God on the deliberations of the convention and prayed that "progress may come out of this meeting, so that we here in the U. S. will show the world how to live together in justice."

Resolution On Philip Murray's Leadership Of Ten Years

Ten years ago—on November 22, 1940—Philip Murray was elected to his first term as President of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. He assumed office in a time of extreme crisis—for our nation and the democratic world, for our CIO and the democratic labor movement of the United States.

During the decade that followed, Philip Murray has given magnificent leadership to our organization, in times of war and peace and international crisis.

Under his wise, thoughtful and forward-looking direction, the Congress of Industrial Organizations has constantly moved forward toward its goal of achieving a better life for the working people of America. Called to the presidency at a time when our CIO was besieged with serious internal difficulties, Philip Murray gave our unions confidence and a renewed strength of belief in the justice and honor of labor's cause.

Constantly and self-sacrificingly, Philip Murray has given generously and wholeheartedly of his time, his energy, his experience, and his skill to the welfare of our organization. Without him at our helm, it is difficult to conceive that our CIO could have gained the strength, the stature and the respect which it now commands throughout the nation.

Throughout all these years, Philip Murray has remained steadfast to the highest ideals of democracy. Under his leadership, the CIO has thwarted the efforts of Communist infiltrators to subvert our unions, so that today, Communist influence in the American labor movement is at an all time minimum.

Philip Murray, through his inspiring service to organized labor, has contributed much to the effectiveness of our democracy. His efforts have helped directly to bring billions of dollars of additional wages to the families of working men and women. His successful pioneering in the complex fields of welfare and security have helped to banish fear and distress for millions of families once haunted by the fear of improverishment in periods of illness and old age. In every phase of CIO activity—political action, civil rights, legislation or community service—Philip Murray has left the positive imprint of his constant striving to help the people of this country.

Today, with our nation once more in the shadow of international conflict, Philip Murray is helping our America—and, indeed, the democratic forces everywhere—to develop the essential military and civilian strength to repel the forces of Communist aggression. Not only in the United States but throughout the entire world, men and women of democratic faith recognize in Philip Murray an ally in the relentless struggle to overcome dictatorship and build a better world.

On this anniversary of a decade of service, the Twelfth Constitutional Convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations hails its great president, Philip Murray.

Speaking for ourselves and for the workers in factories, offices, stores, mills and mines, we commend him for his unparalleled contribution to the welfare of free men and women, and his unswerving devotion to the cause of organized labor.

We value his leadership and guidance; we treasure our association with a man who will go down in American history as one of the truly great citizens of the Republic—a servant of the people who has led them unceasingly toward the goal of a happier, more peaceful, more secure future.

We look forward to the continued leadership of Philip Murray—leader of labor, peerless citizen, inspiring fighter for democracy.

Further Unity Talks Given Endorsement

CONTINUED talks with the AFL on the achievement of labor unity were authorized by the CIO convention.

The resolution spoke with satisfaction of "the progress that has already been made in the direction of labor unity"—presumably a reference to mid-summer agreements for joint action on legislation, political action and international affairs.

CIO Unity Committee members, headed by Pres. Philip Murray, were directed by the convention to "continue to meet with the representatives of the AFL and other bona fide labor organizations" to seek the "cherished goal of every union member: the attainment of organic unity of all American labor."

MURRAY, in a speech on the resolution, voiced hope that after the convention and the current steel negotiations, further talks with the AFL would be resumed.

He added the hope that it may be possible to broaden the scope of future talks to include spokesmen from "legitimate" unions outside both the CIO and the AFL.

"However, despite the Federation's obvious unwillingness to permit others of these organizations to come into the unity discussions at the moment, we believe that more expeditious progress could be made if they were included," Murray declared.

At present, there is a "practical working unity" between the AFL and CIO—both nationally and in the cities and states—which has produced many benefits, the CIO president reported.

This unity trend reflects "grass roots sentiment," he said, and reflects "a steadily increasing interest in the attainment of organic unity."

Profits Tax Asked To End Profiteering

A RESOUNDING cry for an excess profits tax to eliminate profiteering and speculation growing out of the rearmament drive was raised by the convention in one of the more important resolutions.

The delegates demanded that Congress enact a measure which will yield at least $6 to $7 billion at a rate of at least 85%, the same rate that applied to excess profits in World War II.

The resolution pointed to the unprecedented high profits being piled up after taxes by industry—an estimated total of more than $23 billion for 1950, compared to $4 billion prior to the war—and it raised an outraged voice in a strong call upon Congress to require that big business join the rest of the country in equality of sacrifice.

IT ASKED Congress to close all the tax loop-holes through which billions of dollars are siphoned off every year while workers and others of low and moderate income are called upon to pay an ever greater part of the cost of running the government.

"A powerful campaign of manufacturing and commercial interests," the resolution warned, "aided by a willing press and endorsed by their professional apologists, seeks to shift the tax burden still more heavily to those least able to bear it.

"It aims to kill the excess profits tax and to substitute for it, first, a corporation tax which favors the great corporate monopolies and, second, a gigantic and permanent scheme of sales taxes falling with crushing burden on the people least able to bear it. . . .

"The CIO will continue vigorously to oppose any type of sales tax, manufacturers' tax or transactions tax because such a tax is regressive and bears most heavily upon the mass of people.

"We shall continue to press for a tax structure designed to allocate the tax burden equitably among taxpayers. Such a program envisages the elimination of all excise taxes not regulatory in character, an increase in personal income tax exemptions, and the permanent shifting of the burden from those least able to pay to those most able to pay."

Comprehensive Program For Conservation Advocated

A THOROUGH-GOING plan for the conservation, expansion and development of the country's natural resources was approved by the convention in two resolutions, one dealing with regional development and conservation, the other with forest management policy.

Both resolutions were approved after Pres. E. J. Fadling, of the Woodworkers, urged their passage. The resolution on forest policy commended the Woodworkers for the "outstanding leadership it has given in its industry and to America generally in the development of its comprehensive and public-spirited forestry program."

The forest policy resolution pointed out that the last stands of timber suitable for heavy construction and plywood are being cut in a "destructive" manner, and that supplies are being depleted one and a half times as fast as they are growing. The program provides for general federal overseeing of all timber cutting and management, extension of facilities, the preservation and development of old growth forests on a long-range rotation basis, extension of the national forest system, and larger appropriations to permit expansion of all phases of federal work in forestry.

THE ACCOMPANYING resolution renewed the CIO's stand for establishment of a national board of review, at the White House level, to rule on all programs for river engineering and related activities.

It called for orderly development of hydro-electric power potentials under public auspices, flood control primarily by watershed protection, proper forestry, soil conservation and storage of water on the land, and only secondarily by dams, irrigation and drainage of swamps only under proper conditions; commercial river navigation projects on a self-supporting basis; protection of natural beauty and development of outdoor recreational facilities, and widespread distribution of electric power generated in river valley developments.

The St. Lawrence Seaway project was endorsed as of vital importance to stabilization of industry in New England and the Middle West, and Congress and state legislatures were asked for larger appropriations for conservation work.

Slave Labor Probe Asked

The CIO convention recommended specific actions to bring freedom to working men who are held as slaves in certain countries.

A resolution adopted by the convention recommended that the United States seek through the United Nations to establish a commission to investigate forced labor in Soviet Russia, Russian satellites, South Africa and parts of Asia.

The convention also called upon the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions to redouble its exposure of forced labor.

A separate resolution pledged continued support to the ICFTU and approved a decision to establish a regional labor organization in the Western Hemisphere to carry out the purposes of the ICFTU. This regional organization will be formed at a conference in Mexico City next January. The convention promised full cooperation in the Mexico City conference.

It's Old Hat

The O.K. Hat Novelties Co. of Brooklyn, N.Y., must stop telling the public that "hats made in whole or in part from old, used, or second-hand materials are new or are composed of new materials," says the Federal Trade Commission. If the material is old, the sweatband must say so.

Many Of Murray's Ideals Now 'Realities'

THE Officers' Report, described in detail in last week's edition of the CIO News, was unanimously approved by the convention.

Such action was recommended by a committee which paid tribute to CIO Pres. Murray for his accomplishments during his decade in office.

"As the delegates well know," said the committee's report, "this convention marks the tenth year of unselfish, tireless and faithful devotion to the presidency of our organization by Philip Murray.

"Many of the ideals which he expressed when he was elected to the office of president have become realities. The years of struggle and strike and strife through which he courageously led us have really been years of growth and adjustment for the members of our unions and for all the people of America.

"And, as he says, 'The CIO is stronger, more united, more dedicated than ever to the principles of democracy.' It has indeed done much to reshape the economic and political life of the United States . . .

"Your committee desires to congratulate our great president, Philip Murray for his most inspiring direction of the affairs of the CIO. His record of unselfish devotion to the cause of the working men and women of America is unparalleled. Every word of his great report to the convention gives evidence to this fact.

"We commend the work of the departments and committees and the staff of the CIO, and in concurring in the entire report and moving its adoption, we wish for Philip Murray continued health, happiness, and the blessings of Almighty God."

Pastor Backs Fight On Bias

THE PASTOR of the oldest Negro congregation in Chicago told the convention he found himself particularly at home addressing the delegates because "I have found myself always concerned in the problems of men who toil with their hands."

Rev. Archibald J. Carey, minister of Quinn Chapel, who has been a member of Chicago's City Council since 1947, said he wanted to express his appreciation for the great service the CIO has rendered in the battle against racial discrimination.

"I would like to ask you to keep up the fight," he declared. "I know it is not necessary. I know it is that to which you are dedicated, but at the same time I would like to ask that you keep up the fight until every man in America, regardless of his race or religion or the condition in which he may be born or the job in which he may work, shall have the right of all free men."

Mr. Carey declared that the CIO has waged a more gallant battle than any other organization "to help make men whom God has chosen to put into one particular racial group the same as all other men."

Health, Safety Plans Urged For Industry

Protection of the health of America's industrial workers through improved federal and state legislation and re-endorsement of a national health insurance program were among important points in action by the convention to safeguard the welfare of laboring people.

Another resolution urged the inclusion of labor and other consumer groups on state and local boards of health; extension of state public health services, and grants of public funds to expand hospital and clinic facilities.

HENRY J. MORGENTHAU, Jr., said: "Roll Prices Back"

CIO SECY.-TREAS. JAMES B. CAREY pins a visitor's badge on Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin while CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Pres. O. A. Knight of the Oil Workers look on.

Morgenthau Spots Defense Act Holes

CONTROL of inflation is on the must list if America is to meet the challenge of democratic world leadership, Henry Morgenthau, Jr., told convention delegates.

"Inflation is an angry tiger, not a purring pussy-cat; it won't be kept in bounds with milk-toast programs," Morgenthau said.

In introducing the former Secretary of the Treasury to the convention, CIO Pres. Philip Murray hailed Morgenthau as a "great American citizen" who has served his country as statesman, public servant, author, philanthropist and great humanitarian. Morgenthau once worked as a machinist, Murray said, and "is at home here with us."

Discussing the United States' mission of world leadership of the democracies, Morgenthau asserted that it is a matter of record that without the social reform movement of recent years and the growth of labor unions, "people in other countries would have been less attracted to American leadership, and more suspicious of our motives and interests."

AGGRESSIVE Communist imperialism, "in the game for keeps," has thrown down a challenge that cannot be met by half-hearted efforts, Morgenthau declared. "Our armies will be no stronger than our home front."

Outlining a number of specific proposals for the home front, Morgenthau urged that production goals be set "to meet the needs of the Communist challenge to our way of life. We should build what we need, not what some profit-hungry corporations say we need in order to give them even higher profits," he said.

Another imperative, Morgenthau declared, was an inflation control program, under which prices would be rolled back to what they were when the Korean war started.

He criticized the Defense Production Act as being full of "special interest loopholes" and failing to utilize the price-control lessons of World War II. The Act's provisions for wage controls are punitive, "but not effective against inflation," Morgenthau declared. "We can control prices of things; we do not now need to control the return to a man for his personal work."

Next. Morgenthau outlined what he considered to be an effective tax program, based on his 12 years' experience under the leadership of former Pres. Roosevelt. He urged that as much of the cost of the country's defense efforts as possible be paid for now.

SUCH A program would require an excess profits tax, "particularly since corporations' profits have reached the astounding figure of $23 billion after present taxes," and a tightening of the scores of loopholes written into the present tax law, Morgenthau said.

He also urged higher income taxes, "equitably distributed on the basis of ability to pay."

Morgenthau also recommended rent control, where necessary; control over basic defense products, to avoid waste and black marketing; and rationing where scarcities develop.

Secy. Tobin Confident Americans Continue To Support Fair Deal

SECY. OF LABOR Maurice Tobin declared that "the CIO has a 100% record for the preservation of freedom in the world and containment of atheistic, socialistic Russian communism."

He said it was a great day for the U. S. when the CIO was brought into being.

"This organization has contributed much to the general prosperity of our nation," he declared, "and I am confident you will continue to make that kind of contribution towards a sounder United States of America.

"CERTAINLY under your program, there is no room for followers of false ideologies, just as there is no room for them in America itself. You have supported President Truman wholeheartedly in his attempt to contain communism during the last five years and I want to congratulate you for the contribution you have made along those lines."

Tobin said the CIO has also made great contributions in other directions. He called the steel settlement of last year "an agreement which brought about a just treatment of the aged workers in that industry and which laid down a pattern that guarantees security for aged workers in this country for all time to come."

He pronounced that settlement "a contribution in no small measure" to the writing of the social security law enacted in the 81st Congress.

On the international front, Tobin declared, "we are confronted with very troublous times." He said he is worried as to "whether or not there is any danger that we may go as our country went following World War I."

"Today, when I hear leaders of the opposition party using such terms as first denying they are isolationists and then questioning whether Europe is defensible, or how large an army do we need at home, or asking if the American people will stand for a 3 million man Army and universal military training, or how we are going to raise the money for this defense force, I do worry just a little bit."

TOBIN CALLED for a continuation of the Truman Fair Deal program which he said "has brought prosperity to every segment of America's economy. The farmers of America, the businessmen, the merchandisers, the manufacturers, the working people of America all have enjoyed greater prosperity under the New Deal and the Fair Deal than during any other period in the history of American life."

"The Fair Deal program is a program for private enterprise with sound insurance policies and a genuine floor under the economy," he added. "I cannot see where any group should be dissatisfied with the kind of economic program which has been written during the last 18 years.

"Apparently the American people felt the same way in the election because we should remember that both branches of Congress are still in control of the majority party and the strength demonstrated reflects the thinking of the American people."

He predicted that "with God's help we will see the day when men all over the world will enjoy the freedom and peace that is now ours at the present time."

$1 Minimum Wage, Strengthened Walsh-Healey Act Advocated

STRENGTHENING of the Wage-Hour and Public Contracts (Walsh-Healey) Acts is vitally necessary during this period of mobilization, the convention declared in a resolution on the two pieces of minimum wage legislation.

Demanding a new Wage-Hour Act minimum of $1 an hour to replace the present 75c, the resolution pointed out that wages "are inhumanly low in many industries which are essential to our economic mobilization." The wage floor, it maintained, "must be raised and extended to protect a large number of workers."

The resolution recalled the 1949 convention's condemnation of weakening of the act's overtime provisions and enforcement machinery by the same Dixiegop 81st Congress that raised the minimum from 40 to 75c. It continued:

"The weaknesses of the amended statute have been accentuated during the past year by questionable administration of the act by the Wage-Hour and Public Contracts Division, and particularly by the Exemption and Public Contracts Wage Determination Sections. Administrative rulings have chiseled millions from the wages of the nation's lowest paid and most defenseless workers.

"The Exemptions Branch has granted so-called 'learner exemptions' for subminimum wages on a wholesale basis, thereby depriving many thousands of workers of even the inadequate 75c minimum. The Exemptions Section's abuse of power in authorizing employment at subminimum rates has been particularly flagrant in the shoe industry."

THE RESOLUTION warned that employer interests are now trying to weaken still further the overtime provisions of the law through loosening of regulations on profit-sharing and welfare plans "which in reality are speed-up devices or 'pie in the sky' plans promising little for the worker."

The weakness of enforcement was laid in the resolution to inadequate appropriations which do not permit prompt following up of complaints.

Prevailing wage determinations under the Walsh-Healey Act have fallen behind, the resolution pointed out, but commended Secy. of Labor Tobin for moving to bring them up to date promptly upon his appointment. It pointed out, too, that the act was passed to insure that profitable government contracts do not go to wage-chiseling employers. Prevailing wages have been set so low in some industries, it added, especially in aircraft, that as few as 2% of the workers will be affected.

Minn. Unions Raise Funds For Hospital

Labor unions in Duluth—CIO, AFL and Machinists—have taken the lead in raising a $100,000 fund to establish a 50-bed cooperative hospital here. The institution will be known as Arrowhead Hospital and will be operated in conjunction with Arrowhead Health Center, a health clinic.

All Blood Is Red

The board of governors of the American Red Cross has endorsed a plan to stop indicating the race of blood donors on its records.

The racial designation has been carried for purposes of medical research, according to Red Cross officials. However, since it is known that all human blood is alike, regardless of race, the practice will be discontinued.

IUE Reports Phenomenal Growth

THE LUSTY, young Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers reported to the convention the largest and swiftest membership growth in American labor history since the early days of the CIO.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, in his role as chairman of the IUE-CIO Administrative Committee, received an ovation when he told the delegates that the year-old union—it was chartered Nov. 2, 1949—had a membership of more than 251,000 and contracts covering more than 300,000 workers.

The IUE-CIO was created following the CIO's expulsion of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers (UE) on grounds that the UE was Communist-controlled and had, in fact, been an arm of the Communist Party "masquerading as a labor union."

In a report prepared for the IUE-CIO's second annual convention, scheduled to open in Milwaukee Dec. 4, the union's Administrative Committee told the CIO that it had already won NLRB elections covering the majority of workers in the electrical, radio and machine industry. Elections in the three major chains, General Electric, Westinghouse and General Motors, gave the IUE-CIO large majorities over the crumbling UE.

"The substantial and in many cases unprecedented gains achieved in IUE-CIO's 1950 agreements not only brought new and inestimable benefits to those covered by the agreements; they also gave many thousands of non-IUE members a clear example of what our union's policy of militant and aggressive bargaining can produce," the report said.

"The phenomenal growth of the IUE-CIO from no membership just 12 months ago to more than a quarter of a million today is the most crushing defeat Communism in the American labor movement ever suffered," said Carey. "Not many years ago the UE could claim more than 500,000 members; today it has approximately 100,000, and these are leaving almost as fast as NLRB elections occur. With its half-million members UE was not only the ideological leader of other left-wing unions; its huge treasury was a constant source of funds for numerous Communist-front groups."

IN ADDITION to major economic gains made by IUE-CIO during its first year, the report pointed out, "in the political and legislative field the workers of our industry are no longer shackled to the whimsical shifts of the Communist Party line.

"The IUE-CIO pledged itself to complete unionization of hundreds of thousands of unorganized workers in the industry, and to obtain contracts providing for maximum wage, pension, insurance, vacation, grievance and other benefits."

In a recommendation to its own convention, the IUE-CIO Administrative Committee proposed that the union's two top officers, the President and Secretary-Treasurer, be elected by secret mail referendum of the membership.

Carey pointed out that "instead of permitting the membership to select its executive officers, which is clearly the most democratic method, the UE has named them at handpicked conventions which have invariably been packed with known Communists."

Murray Grateful For Lusty IUE

CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in commenting on IUE's report, expressed "the deep and profound gratitude of the officers of the National CIO and the members for the splendid work" Carey and the new organization have done since the Cleveland convention.

"The old UE was the heart and the very core of American Communism," he said. "Within the inner sanctum of that organization many of the plots were mapped out to subvert the American trade union movement and to undermine our government. The real leaders of the American Communist Party always took refuge and found shelter within the councils of the UE. . . .

"I join with Secy. Carey in predicting that before the close of next year the communistically-dominated UE outfit will be almost, if not entirely, eliminated from the labor movement in the United States.

"I am proud, as I am quite sure other leaders of the CIO, are, of the part we all played in the building of the new IUE."

CIO PRES. PHILIP MURRAY congratulates CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey on the growth of the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, of which Carey is administrative committee chairman.

Aide Reports Membership Of ICFTU Is 50 Million

GREETINGS from the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, world labor body to which the CIO belongs, were brought to the convention by Gust De Muynck, fraternal delegate from the ICFTU.

De Muynck, a Belgian, is executive assistant to J. H. Oldenbroek, general secretary of the ICFTU, which has headquarters in Brussels, Belgium.

He outlined briefly the history, growth and membership of the ICFTU, born in London just a year ago, with a membership of nearly 48½ million workers in 53 countries and 59 national centers. As of June, 1950, he said, the membership had risen to 50 million, and applications were still coming in. These came from such widely separated points as Switzerland, Pakistan, Malaya, Thailand and the Falkland Islands.

Plans for the immediate future, De Muynck said, call for a national regional conference in Karachi in May, 1951, and the sending of delegates to Africa and Mexico City, and an envoy to Turkey. These follow in the path laid down by the delegation to the Far East earlier this year, in which John Brophy of the CIO took part.

The ICFTU constitution in its preamble, De Muynck explained, pledges aid in establishing full employment, improving working conditions and raising the standard of living of the people in all countries throughout the world, and presents "a staggering task ahead of us."

Only through helping develop the industrially backward countries and promoting their trade union movements can we have world peace, he said. Danger signals appearing in these areas in recent years have been ignored by some of our so-called statesmen, who have underestimated their importance. Everywhere over these huge areas can be found harsh exploitation of labor, low productivity, intense nationalism, together with a "growing awareness among masses and individual workers that existing conditions of extreme poverty can be eliminated by proper organization of national economies," De Muynck said.

Of utmost importance to the free trade union movement in this problem, he declared, is "a parallel hostility towards the capitalist system and belief in the messianic role of Russia."

Asserting that there "is no international problem that has not a direct bearing on the trade union movement," De Muynck declared that "there is today a paramount need for the world to have a strong free democratic trade union movement."

Marine Cooks Denied Plea On Expulsion

A PURPORTED appeal by the Marine Cooks & Stewards from its expulsion from the CIO on charges that it is Communist-dominated was forwarded from National CIO headquarters to the convention.

Although it did not comply with the requirements of the CIO constitution, the union's letter and statement nevertheless were turned over to the Appeals Committee, of which Secy.-Treas. William Pollock, of the Textile Workers, was chairman. Pres. Hugh Bryson and Secy.-Treas. Eddie Tangen, of the MCS, were invited from the platform to appear before the committee. Neither showed up, but the statement accompanying the letter was read and discussed at the meeting.

The statement contended that the Trial Committee which recommended MCS's expulsion ignored the record; that the test of whether or not it has fulfilled its objectives is its record, which shows 100% organization of its jurisdiction; that the expulsion violated the autonomy guaranteed the MCS by the CIO, and that the expulsion constituted retroactive application of constitutional provisions adopted at the 1949 convention.

"The appeal offers nothing of substance that was not fully considered by the CIO Executive Board," Pollock reported to the convention.

"The Appeals Committee, therefore, recommends that the appeal of the National Union of Marine Cooks and Stewards be denied by the convention."

Before putting acceptance of the report to a vote, Pres. Philip Murray again called for Bryson and Tangen, or any other representative of the MCS, to present their point of view to the convention. No one responded to his invitation, and the report was adopted.

The convention immediately thereafter adopted a resolution formally approving the expulsion of the nine unions charged with being Communist-dominated.

Wage Peace Is Advice Of Dr. Jenney

DR. RAY FREEMAN Jenney, pastor of Bryn Community Church, Chicago, declared that "the time has now come for all labor unions to stand for world-wide peace and be prepared to pay the price for peace."

"I contend that we can attain anything we are willing to pay the price for, if we are willing to pay for it in time, in money and intelligent effort," he said.

"We must wage peace as men wage war. On the whole, the working man does the fighting. He must be prepared to take up the role of peacemaker now."

The nation is in danger of being made into a military state, he claimed.

"We fight a war against the things that would enslave mankind" he said, "and after we have won the victory on the field of battle, we discover that we have fastened upon ourselves the sins of our beaten enemies and lost many of our essential rights as individuals."

Improve Social Security, Convention Urges

IN A RESOLUTION on old age, survivors and disability insurance and public assistance, the convention called upon the incoming 82d Congress to adopt an adequate social insurance system and related measures essential to a seven-point program.

The program approved by the convention demanded universal coverage; a national program for both temporary and permanent disability insurance; adequate benefits related to earnings in the highest quarters of the best five successive years, liberalizing the formula.

The proposals also included restoring the full 1% annual increment and raising the wage base ceiling to at least $5400 of earnings a year; redefining "employe" so as to cover all employes in fact; permitting women to retire at age 60; providing for contributions from general revenues before the payroll tax is increased, and improving the public assistance program with federal grants to the states for all needy persons, including the unemployed, and no ceilings, with federal standards excluding residence requirements and liens on property.

"In connection with state legislation," the resolution added, "we urge our affiliates to continue seeking to improve state laws dealing with public assistance and health, and, pending development of a national social insurance system, with unemployment insurance, temporary disability insurance, workmen's compensation, and other social security programs along the lines recommended by the CIO through its Social Security Committee."

Pres. Emil Rieve, of the Textile Workers, chairman of the CIO Social Security Committee, recounted the development of social security since the middle 1930s and commended the 81st Congress for extending its benefits to 10 million additional people. At the same time, he said, it failed to authorize permanent or partial disability insurance—bowing to the demands of the insurance lobby—and passed the Knowland Amendment which permits the states to flout federal minimum standards for grants for unemployment compensation.

"But by and large," he said, "the law has been improved, the benefits having been raised about 77%. We are not satisfied. In the 82nd Congress we are going to put in an amendment to strengthen further the social security law, and it will depend upon us, what we do, whether we will secure these improved benefits or not."

CIO Can't Temporize On T-H: Goldberg

ARTHUR R. Goldberg, CIO General Counsel, declared that "the CIO cannot and will not compromise its position" against Taft-Hartley and called for outright repeal of the act.

CIO General Counsel Arthur J. Goldberg

"Our unions in America call upon everybody to support the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act so that free and unfettered labor can continue to organize in this country," he said.

Goldberg stated that the philosophy of the Wagner Act, for which the CIO stands, is a philosophy which said it is good for the country "to permit and encourage organization of people into trade unions."

"The philosophy of the Taft-Hartley Act," he declared," is diametrically opposed to this principle. Its philosophy is that labor organizations should be discouraged.

"The CIO cannot compromise the difference between these two basic principles. Amendment after amendment to which we might agree would not accomplish the result of repealing Taft-Hartley. What we must do is elect enough congressmen and senators who will fight for Taft-Hartley repeal."

He reminded the delegates that it was only by a two-vote margin in the Senate that the Lucas amendment, which would, in effect have brought about Taft-Hartley repeal, failed to be adopted.

"I say to this convention and I shall continue to say to succeeding conventions that repeal of Taft-Hartley remains the prime objective of the American labor movement and the CIO," Goldberg said.

He said it was the 80th Congress which made the Taft-Hartley Act a political issue, and charged that Sen. Taft "knew then and now admits it was a bad law and had no place on the statute books."

Visa Extension For DP's Is Urged

The United States can contribute a greater share to the recovery of Europe by promoting additional immigration of displaced persons to the United States and other countries.

This action was recommended by the convention in a resolution which asked Congress to extend the deadline for the issuance of visas under the 1950 Displaced Persons Act for at least six months. The resolution pointed out that a number of the visas already authorized will not have been issued by the present deadline on June 30, 1951.

The resolution urged the government actively to promote plans for reallocation and immigration in international conferences called for the purpose.

World Crisis God's Reason For America—Dr. Johnson

BY THE defect of moral principles, America has turned over the initiative in the world struggle to Russia and to communism, Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard Univ., Washington, D. C., told the convention.

In a long speech that by its sound logic and oratorical brilliance held the restless delegates in their chairs for more than an hour, Dr. Johnson sharply criticized the moral positions taken by the Western powers throughout modern history and recommended a program for the future that can save the world for democracy.

Specifically, Dr. Johnson stated that America must take the leadership in ending the colonial system, under which two-thirds of the world's people have been exploited by the Western powers for the past 150 years.

Pres. Murray (right) greets Dr. Johnson

HE TRACED the record of colonial exploitation by the British, Dutch, French and other empires. He pointed out that the program offered by communism to the people exploited by these empires held terrific moral appeal to the downtrodden of Asia and Africa. Then he concluded that America must take the leadership in enforcing the abolition of exploitation of the black, yellow and brown races.

Dr. Johnson recommended that the United States expend at least one-tenth of its $300 billion annual productive capacity to a program for the economic development of poor nations.

He recommended that the United States insist that the United Nations appoint a commission of 40 to 100 of its leading scientific, technical and organizational experts to attack the problem of making the world produce enough to provide subsistence for all the people.

"That is the one thing in this world that the world hungers for," said Dr. Johnson, "and the Russians say that we are inherently incapable of doing it."

But Dr. Johnson insisted that "We are the only nation in the world prepared to do it. We could do it with one-tenth of our productive power without diminishing a single dollar of expenditure for military defense.

"IF EVER a people were born and developed by God for such an hour, we were brought to history for such a time as this," said Dr. Johnson.

Dr. Johnson warned that this is a dangerous program, that it may be too late for it. But he insisted that this is the destiny of the fortunate people of America. "God has given the American people the genius to do beyond other people that ever lived on earth," he said.

In a passionate and prayerful conclusion, Dr. Johnson said, "And if we don't do it, He will take away our candlestick with a broken heart, because it was for this hour that He brought us into this world."

At the conclusion of the powerful address, CIO Pres. Philip Murray, obviously deeply moved, thanked Dr. Johnson for "delivering to us from your very soul this inspired address."

Murray added that "The moral to be found . . . in the talk that Dr. Johnson presented . . . is one which has been referred to ofttimes in the course of CIO conventions . . . It was an inspirational address that could come only from the soul of a man. He must be inspired by God . . ."

Dr. Johnson's address will be distributed to all CIO affiliates in pamphlet form.

T-H Has Proved Too Effective In Its Anti-Union Designs

The convention adopted the following resolution on Taft-Hartley:

The Taft-Hartley Act has been in operation now for more than three years. That Act was designed to provide employers with weapons to combat organization of their workers and established unions. Tragically for labor, the Taft-Hartley Act has proved all too effective in accomplishing its anti-union designs. Every labor organization has felt its crippling effects.

Taft-Hartley has hampered and obstructed the organization of the many millions of unorganized workers in America. New organization has been brought to a virtual standstill. Only by the most strenuous efforts have established unions been able to hold their own in fields already organized.

The Taft-Hartley Act has encouraged employers stubbornly to refuse to conclude equitable agreements, since, if strikes result, they can take advantage of such strikebreaking provisions of the Act as that which entitles employers to an election in which strikebreakers vote while strikers may not vote.

This has widened the gap between workers' earnings and their living costs, and has encouraged industry to deny wage increases despite soaring profits and prices. Similarly the Taft-Hartley Act has also encouraged employers to become uncooperative and adamant in the handling of grievances.

Taft-Hartley's restoration of the labor injunction has enabled employers to obtain the intervention of the federal government to break strikes and to destroy the morale of strikers. Under the administration of General Counsel Denham, employers were, in effect, revested with the oppressive injunction weapon against strikes and peaceful picketing. Of 37 injunctions obtained by General Counsel Denham during his incumbency, 36 were against unions, and only 1 against employers.

The union security authorization election provisions required under the Act have been demonstrated to be a farce but have swelled the Board's backlog by thousands of cases, and have delayed the correction of unfair labor practices. Indeed the so-called union protection provisions in the law have become virtually a dead letter. In many cases the office of the General Counsel has refused to issue complaints upon union charges.

In the cases where complaints do issue, the Board's huge backlog of work and its processes result, in most cases, in an effective denial of any relief. When an employer succeeds, by unfair labor practices, in breaking a union in his plant, it is no effective remedy, for the board two years later to order the employer "to cease and desist."

Moreover, the board has warped the free speech provisions of the law so as to permit employers openly and deliberately to interfere in elections, in order to destroy the right of workers to vote for an organization of their own choice. Under Taft-Hartley the board has even sanctioned the Nazi-like "captive audience."

Employer propaganda that this law has benefited the rank and file and that it is opposed only by the leaders of labor has not deceived the workers. It is the rank and file who have been required to work against their will by anti-labor injunctions. It is the rank and file who have suffered because of the use of the law to weaken their unions and hold down living standards.

The CIO is as determined as ever to secure the removal of the Taft-Hartley law from the statute books, and there will be no slackening of our efforts to this end. We shall continue to seek not only the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act but the enactment of a law providing additional and much-needed protection to labor's basic rights.

During the 81st Congress the CIO supported measures which would have repealed the Taft-Hartley Act and re-enacted the basic principles of the Wagner Act.

It continues to be our considered judgment that only through the enactment of labor relations legislation along these lines can the Congress provide a climate and rules that will permit the organization of the unorganized and free collective bargaining to develop in the years ahead.

We restate our uncompromising opposition to the use of injunctions. These are neither effective to promote labor-management peace nor sound as an instrument of public policy in a democratic society.

NOW, THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED:

The CIO shall continue to seek the repeal of the unfair and unjust Taft-Hartley Act, and the enactment of a fair and equitable labor relations law, based on the principles of the Wagner Act, which will give adequate protection to the rights of labor and due encouragement to free collective bargaining as the cornerstone of industrial peace.

It's Not Unfair

The General Counsel's office of the National Labor Relations Board refused, Nov. 23, to take the case of 10 former office employes of the CIO Maritime Union, who were discharged for "improperly intervening" in the union's right-left fight.

'Production Is No. 1 Problem'—Stevenson

GOV. Adlai E. Stevenson, of Illinois, told the delegates to the CIO convention that "production is our number one problem."

Stevenson, who was elected with CIO support, said:

"The business at hand is production—production which is our accident insurance in a dangerous world. Production is our No. 1 problem. It has been called our greatest non-secret weapon."

Stevenson paid tribute to Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, for calling attention to the waste of war, but added:

"The free nations of the world unfortunately find themselves for the time being in grievous circumstances—not of their own choosing or making—which leave them no alternative but to gird their military might.

"We must provide the means to protect what we have in the way of democratic government and economic and social justice."

He warned that military preparations should not stand in the way of social progress.

Illinois' Governor saw a parallel between 1938 and 1950. He said:

"At that time our economy was also poised on the threshold of a gigantic expansion. Although those who knew that then were few in number, there was in the offing a life-and-death necessity for staggeringly large production efforts.

"Today we are in the same situation. One difference is that now most people are aware of this fact and are of one mind in their acceptance of it. The country as a whole is, thus, scrutinizing much more narrowly the intentions and practice of those groups who make up our mass-production industries."

Stevenson said that the public is interested in private capital investment, the taxing of profits accruing from the mobilization efforts, and the policies and practices of labor.

HE ADDED that he was "happy to say that I know of no segment of organized labor which needs or deserves less admonition on wise labor policy for the defense of the free world than the CIO." He recalled that the CIO leadership was one of the first to recognize "the menace of fascist aggression."

Stevenson, however, did not give labor an entirely clean bill of health. He made some caustic remarks about "many abuses of unemployment compensation."

He said that "there are some craftsmen employed in our state institutions who are not giving the taxpayer a full measure of service for his dollar of pay."

"Moreover, public employes cannot conserve the taxpayer's dollar and maintain fair and effective employment relations with all public servants through threats of political reprisal or strikes against essential public services," he added. "Responsible labor leadership cannot condone such things, let alone encourage them."

Rogge Lashes Reds

O. John Rogge, U. S. delegate to the World Peace Conference, gave fellow delegates a jolt when he said that prompt intervention by the U. S. in Korea has saved Germany from a similar fate.

Addressing the Communist-packed assembly, Rogge urged Russia to accept some of the ideas from the West and warned that the United States would not tolerate breaches of world peace by the Reds.

In his booming voice, Rogge the former Assistant United States Attorney General and a founder of the World Peace Conference, charged that Communists talked loudly of peace while committing acts of aggression.

THESE FRENCH LABOR LEADERS, who attended the convention, have spotted something which amuses them. Holding the booklet are Maurice Bouladoux, general secretary of the French Confederation of Christian Workers (left) and Pres. Harry Martin of the CIO Newspaper Guild, who is labor information director and adviser to ECA in Europe. The French group are members of a labor advisory committee to ECA. See story below.

VISITORS FROM GERMANY: Alexander Wilde of the Office of International Affairs, Dept. of Labor, with microphone in hand, translates the convention speeches for the German labor and youth leaders, some of whom are listening on earphones.

European Convention Visitors Get UN Type Translation

EQUIPPED with devices similar to those used at the United Nations to allow them to follow speeches in English, two groups of visitors from Europe "sat in" on the CIO convention.

Each guest wore an earphone connected to a mouthpiece into which an interpreter spoke.

A group from France included representatives of the three anti-Communist labor federations — Federation of French Christian Workers (CFCT), Force Ouvriere, and the Federation of Engineers and Supervisory Forces (CGC)—and was brought here by ECA. Guy Hoist, principal assistant of the French Minister of Labor, was with this party.

All of them are members of the French labor advisory committee to the Marshall Plan.

A German group, which came to this country under the auspices of the Office of International Affairs of the Dept. of Labor, consisted of trade union and youth leaders.

MAURICE Bouladoux, CFCT's general secretary, who claimed membership of a million for his organization, said he listened with great interest to CIO Pres. Philip Murray's keynote speech because the French labor movement faces some of the same problems that Murray discussed. For example, the French corporations are making the biggest profits in history.

Bouladoux said that since the freeze was taken off prices and wages in France and collective bargaining was restored, CFCT had concluded 100 contracts providing for pay increases of about 10%. But, he continued, though prices jumped when they were unfrozen, wages are not keeping up with them.

Robert Champion, secretary of the Force Ouvriere, said that he was enjoying his visit in this country because he was meeting many American trade union leaders. From them he had learned, he added, many facts about the American trade union movement which he hoped to be able to use.

One of the reasons that the French anti-Communist unions are not more powerful is that dues are low, he said. Because of Russian support, the Communist-dominated General Confederation of Labor (CGT) can operate on low dues and continue to take a demagogical attitude.

Adalbert Hoehne, 22-year-old native of Bremen, Germany, said that people in his city were not so afraid of the revival of the Hitler movement as they were of the Communists, who are active on the waterfront. However, he said, the Communists for the present are being largely ignored despite the disproportionate amount of noise they are making.

Hoehne gave some examples of the high cost of living in Bremen. He said that a skilled worker receives about 200 marks a month after taxes are deducted, but that a suit of clothes costs from 120 to 160 marks. He and his parents live in two rooms and share a kitchen with another family. For these so-called living quarters, they pay 35 marks a month, Hoehne said.

There is much unemployment in Bremen because of bombing during the war, the dismantling of factories by the Russians, and the recent transfer of a sizable amount of U. S. shipping to Rotterdam. The Communists, he said, were trying to use unemployment for their political advantage.

Hoehne is a shop steward in the youth section of his union at an electrical instrument plant.

Both Hoehne and Max Ehrhardt, chairman of the white collar workers' union in Wuerttemberg-Baden, agreed that the Christian Democrats had lost seats in the parliamentary elections in Hesse and Wuerttemberg-Baden because that party had reversed its position to favor militarization.

The Social Democrats, who are foes of militarizations, increased their seats in the two state elections.

EHRHARDT said that part of the victory of the Social Democrats in his state could be attributed to the personal popularity of Dr. Kurt Schumacher, the party leader. The people are not completely against militarization, he said, but they want more assurance of help from the Western powers.

Both the German youth group and the French union leaders were taking courses at Roosevelt College during their stay in Chicago.

OTHER members of the French delegation included Jacques Michollin and Jacques Sylvain Brunard, both of the Force Ouvriere, and Rene-Jacques Jouffert and Maurice G. La Chesnais, both of CGT. They were accompanied by O. W. Singleton, of ECA, and Andre Klotz and Paul Herbin, translators from the French Embassy staff.

Others in the German group were Adolph Heidorn, Hannover; Albert Remppel, Stuttgart, head of the Union of Restaurant and Food Workers; Erich Schieffer, government official; George Mueller; and George Reuter, Dusseldorf, second vice president of the German Trade Union Federation (CGT) in charge of the press and education division.

Besides Hoehne, members of the German youth group were Karl-Heinz Boesche, Kassel; Willy Bopp, Munich; Erich Groha, Schwienfurt-Main; Ruth Eva Koehn; Edward Pomierski, Dchongau; and George Herhardt, Theodor Falk and Edwin Fritz Schoenleben all from Nuernberg.

The Germans were accompanied by Alexander Wilde of the Dept. of Labor's OIA.

Jim Crow Still Rides In Diners

Elmer W. Henderson, Negro who won his fight before the Supreme Court to bar discrimination in railroad diners against members of his race, charges the Southern Railway still practices bias.

He has asked the Interstate Commerce Commission to hold hearings against the railroad because its instructions to dining car stewards specifically refer to "white" and "Negro" passengers and suggest seating "white persons with white persons, Negroes with Negroes."

Faith Renewed In PAC; Dollar Drive Launched

THE CONVENTION renewed the faith of the CIO in a program of political action on behalf of all Americans and endorsed the CIO Political Action Committee as "one of the great instrumentalities working on behalf of democracy."

It pledged the CIO to redoubled efforts "to push forward the liberal program" it supports. In addition, the convention in its resolution directed CIO-PAC "to continue to act on an independent, non-partisan basis, giving support to the progressive forces in the two major parties, basing its judgment of candidates upon their records and platforms."

The resolution launched the 1951 dollar drive for PAC and called upon all affiliates to participate. It gave "praise and approval" to work of the PAC, Director Jack Kroll and his staff, CIO regional directors and their staffs and the PAC Depts. of the international unions.

"UPON THE success of our political action efforts depends, in a major part, the future well-being and strength of our democracy and our nation," the resolution concluded. "Toward this end we shall continue to move with unalterable determination and with a firm conviction in the ultimate achievement of our goals of peace, security and prosperity."

Introduction of the resolution proved that what defeats were suffered in the recent elections have only spurred the CIO to greater and more intensive efforts in the political field. There was long discussion of the resolution, all of it constructive, there wasn't a single word of defeatism.

"You are undoubtedly reading in the newspapers," said Kroll, "that we have lost an election and we have taken a licking.

"I don't regret that licking too much. We don't like it, but what I regret more is the fact that we have lost so many good fighters, stout hearts, men and women in public life, in Congress and the Senate, who have been fighting for the welfare of people throughout America."

KROLL SAID he was convinced that the majority of CIO members who went to the polls followed in their voting the recommendations of PAC, "and I don't believe we have a damned thing to apologize for in the election." If there had been more aid from non-labor groups supporting liberal candidates, he said, "we might have had a different story to tell here."

"We haven't any alibis to offer," he said. "We don't seek to put the blame on the shoulders of candidates who trimmed sail and tried to appease the opposition. We won't waste time lamenting the caliber of some candidates or the effectiveness of their organizations. That is water over the dam."

Vice Pres. George Baldanzi of the Textile Workers told the convention that one lesson to be learned from the election is that the citizens "will no sooner follow PAC-CIO in an attempt to elect a lot of racketeers than they will if the Democrats or Republican Party sponsors them."

JACK KROLL, PAC DIRECTOR

"Secondly," he said, "we know that in those areas where we worked—and when I say worked I mean actually down in the rank-and-file, and not by resolution or speeches—where we actually set up effective political action committees, many of the candidates that we were sponsoring won."

SOME of the blame for the election losses, he said, rests upon some Democratic leaders who "gave us a lot of political hacks instead of men of great standing in this country to run for office."

John Despol, delegate from the California Industrial Union Council, warned that "unless we build our political action at the city and county levels we will find those holding public office at those levels of government being utilized to assist in electing reactionaries at the state and federal levels." Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas, labor-backed Democratic candidate for the U. S. Senate who was defeated in California, is already at work on the lower political levels in Northern California, he said.

Secy.-Treas. William Pollock of the Textile Workers called upon CIO-PAC, now that it has done a good job of getting union members registered, "to take on the next task, the educational task of teaching our people to examine the issues."

"Why," he asked, "should our people fall for the propaganda of the American Medical Association? Can they tell me for one minute the citizenery does not want medical insurance? Nonsense! The Medical Association has done a better job.

"Why aren't our people up in arms against no legislation on excess profits taxes? Because the National Manufacturers' Association is doing a more effective job than we in labor.

"WHY aren't we up in arms on the question of equality of sacrifice? We must battle to bring the issues to the people in language they can understand. We take pride that in our organization are those who are among the best thinkers in the nation. Let us use these people to take the messages to the people so they understand, so the Tafts cannot be re-elected, and the Nixons and all the rest."

Secy.-Treas. David McDonald of the Steelworkers, who also is secretary-treasurer of PAC, called for more deeds and fewer words on the political front if labor ever is to attain its goals.

Secy.-Treas. Charles A. Della of the Maryland Industrial Union Council demanded that international unions who did not carry their share of the political action fight in the recent campaign get into it from now on. Local officers must be sold on political action, he maintained, because if they are not, "they can't sell the stewards."

Delegate James A. Davis of the Missouri Industrial Union Council publicly thanked Kroll and the entire PAC for the aid given in defeating Sen. Forrest Donnell, tory Republican who was seeking re-election.

Auxiliaries Aid Community, DP's, Unions And PAC

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

WHAT does a CIO housewife who belongs to the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries do in her spare time to help promote unionism and worthwhile community affairs?

You'd be surprised at the extent and variety of these activities as reported by the women delegates to the CWA's annual convention held in Chicago concurrently with the regular CIO convention.

Reports on these activities in industrial centers where the CIO women have active groups functioning was one of the highlights of the CWA convention. Picked at random, here are some of the CWA projects delegates told about:

A raffle to raise money for a hospital; gifts of clothes, candy and fruit to a displaced persons center; donation of a film projector and screen to a school for mentally deficient children.

Cooking and serving dinners at picnics and other union affairs. (One delegate told how her group served 20,000 cups of coffee, among other things, at a Labor Day picnic, working until 2 a.m.)

Sales of homemade bakery goods to raise money for the union; organization of a car caravan which carried 150,000 tons of food to striking miners.

Sending cartons of clothing, food and toys to trade union families abroad.

Sponsoring baseball and bowling teams; holding classes for wives at educational institutes and summer schools.

Furnishing kitchens for union halls; helping in organizing drives.

Serving on boards and committees for the YWCA and other community groups; circulating petitions calling for price control.

And, perhaps the most widespread of all, long hours of hard work at political activity, such as addressing envelopes, typing registration lists, answering telephones and performing other duties connected with PAC.

The CIO women met separately at their own convention for three days, listening to and discussing these reports, hearing special speakers, making plans for the coming year, electing officers, and then adjourned to listen in on the remaining sessions of the main CIO convention.

Their newly elected officers were sworn in at a ceremony held on the platform at the regular CIO convention, where the women were greeted by CIO Pres. Philip Murray and other CIO officials, and where CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey administered the oath of office.

Mrs. Lillian Sherwood, Auto Workers, Grand Rapids, Mich., was re-elected to her second term as president, and Mrs. Bertha Perrin, Steelworkers, Warren, Ohio, was re-elected for her third term as secretary-treasurer.

A slate of vice-presidents and state advisers also was elected, composing along with the president and secretary-treasurer a 13-woman executive board authorized to head up CWA work until next year's convention.

Four vice-presidents elected at the convention were: Mrs. Dolly Wilson, Lansing, Mich., Auto Workers; Mrs. Evelyn Smith, Warren, Ohio, Steelworkers; Mrs. Minnie Zoller, Beaumont, Tex., Oil Workers; and Mrs. Rosalie Manns, Cincinnati, Ohio, Transport Service Employees. Two additional vice-presidents will be elected later for the Packinghouse and the Transport Workers unions.

Five state advisers elected were: For Minnesota, Mrs. Bessie McPheeters, Electrical Workers, Hopkins, Minn.; for Michigan, Mrs. Pauline Roberts, Auto Workers, Detroit; for Wisconsin, Mrs. Irene Kult, Auto Workers, Kenosha, Wis.; for Indiana, Mrs. Esther Briggeler, Auto Workers, Evansville, Ind.; and for Iowa, Mrs. Gwendolyn, secy-treas., State Auxiliary Council, Des Moines, Ia.

Ernestine Snell, member of the Transport Service Employees Auxiliary in Chicago, welcomed the delegates to the city.

Political action, an important part of the CWA's work, was the main theme of the convention's main speakers. Bill Kemsley, education director of the Michigan CIO Council, stressed the importance of women voting in his speech to the CWA convention, and Tilford Dudley, assistant PAC Director, spoke on some of the lessons to be learned from the recent election.

Mrs. Sherwood told the delegates that "the past election makes us realize more than ever the tremendous job that lies ahead of us during the next two years." If every CIO member and his relatives of voting age had gone to the polls, she said, "the results would have been very different."

BOARD MEMBERS of CIO's Congress of Women's Auxiliaries are being sworn into office at the convention, after being greeted by CIO Pres. Philip Murray. Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, who administered the oath of office, does not appear. Left to right are Pauline Roberts, Esther Briggeler, Secy.-Treas. Bertha Perrin, Dolly Wilson, Bess McPheeters, Murray, Pres. Lillian Sherwood, Rosalie Manns, Minnie Zoller and Evelyn Smith.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 4, 1950 82 No. 49

SETTLEMENT of wage negotiations between CIO Steelworkers and U. S. Steel Corp. brought average pay boosts of 16c an hour to 165,000 Big Steel employes. Shown signing the contract in Pittsburgh after its acceptance by Steelworkers' wage policy committee on Nov. 30 are (left to right): Pres. Philip Murray of the Steelworkers and Vice Pres. John A. Stephens, in charge of industrial relations for U. S. Steel. Watching (left to right) are Secy.-Treas. David J. McDonald of Steelworkers, and Vice Pres. E. E. Moore of Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corp., a U. S. Steel subsidiary. A few hours later, Bethlehem Steel agreed to same terms, Republic Steel made same offer. Anticipating settlement, the companies had hiked prices 5.5%. Story on Page 3.

VICE PRES. ALBEN W. BARKLEY (seated) and Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the CIO Clothing Workers (left) look on as William F. Foster, president of the Merit Clothing Co., Mayfield, Kentucky, signs the first labor agreement in the company's 51 years of operation. The history-making pact was signed in Barkley's Washington, D. C., office and was witnessed by him. He has long been friendly to both the company and the union and used his good graces to arrange the settlement. Others in the picture are Mrs. Foster, wife of the firm's head and ACW Vice Pres. Charles Weinstein.

Sign Clothing Pact In Barkley's Office

IT'S A BIG step from the back rooms of the Chicago sweatshops where some of the first CIO Clothing Workers contracts were signed to the pretentious office of the Vice President of the United States, but the union has made the grade.

Last week in Washington, D. C., under the beaming smile of Vice Pres. Alben W. Barkley, ACW officers headed by Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky and Vice Pres. Charles Weinstein put their signatures to a contract with the Merit Clothing Co., of Mayfield, Ky. Barkley signed as a witness.

The occasion marked the first time a collective bargaining agreement has ever been signed in the vice president's office.

It was the first labor-management contract ever signed by the 51-year-old firm and brought to a successful conclusion the efforts of the "Veep" to arrange a settlement.

BARKLEY, in a jovial mood, recalled that the sons of his father's family physician had established the Merit Pants Co. many years ago. In time the company changed its name to the Merit Clothing Co.

"The old company made my first pair of ready-made pants," he said. "They were my Sunday pants for a long, long time."

The Vice President, a native Kentuckian, is a long-time friend of both Potofsky and the company's president, William F. Foster. He said he was "happy to have been able to help bring the Merit Co. into the fold of cooperative relations" and was "sure the agreement will be successful because the leaders of both sides are fair and reasonable men."

"I have faith in the Amalgamated, in Jack Potofsky, in the Merit Co. and in Billy Foster," he added.

A joint statement by the union and the company termed the agreement "a milestone in labor-management relations in the clothing industry."

"This contract," it said, "achieved between a leading producer in the field and a strong, responsible labor union, will guarantee greater stability to the industry and offer even greater benefits to the retailer and the consumer.

"Every effort was made to enlarge the area of agreement. Each side was impressed with the consideration of the other. The good will generated during the course of negotiations argues well for the future relations between the firm and the union."

The agreement provides for a wage increase of 12½c an hour, effective Nov. 20; 2% of the weekly payroll for health and life insurance, and an additional 3% for old-age retirement benefits and other provisions of the standard Amalgamated contract.

In addition to the Merit contract, the Clothing Workers rang up another first last week.

THE PALM Beach Co., foremost manufactures of men's light weight clothing signed its first collective bargaining agreement after 16 years of effort by the Clothing Workers.

The concern had been one of the few major clothing manufactures in the country unorganized by ACW. In recent months, partly as a result of the union's label drive, Haspel Bros., Inc., makers of seersucker and cord clothing, and A. Sagner and Co., of Baltimore, also have come to terms with the union.

Three thousand Palm Beach workers in eight plants are covered by the new agreement. They wil receive increases of 13% above the present pay range of 75c to $1.80 an hour. Also included is a second week's vacation and inclusion in the union's industry-wide social welfare benefit plans.

Under the latter, members get acident and sickness insurance coverage, hospitalization and retirement pensions of $50 a month in addition to social security. The plans are entirely company-financed, the employer paying 2% of the payroll into the insurance fund, 3% into the retirement fund.

Company officials said the new contract would not result in a price increase.

Adequate Funds Are Asked By IWA For Safety Inspectors

A TOTAL OF but 38 inspectors is available to carry on safety inspections, educational work, first aid training, etc., in 37,000 hazardous industrial, business and other operations in the state of Washington, delegates from the CIO Woodworkers tartly reminded the Governor's Safety Conference held recently at Olympia, Wash.

Not a single inspector is familiar with logging operations in the pine areas of Eastern Washington, William Crawford, president of the Woodworkers' Southern Washington District Council, told the conference. He demanded an adequate appropriation from the next Legislature to end the suffering created because "funds for this humanitarian work were cut too low by the 1949 session."

Manley J. Wilson, editor of the International Woodworker and a delegate from IWA international headquarters in Portland, Ore., who also is a member of the Oregon Industrial Safety Advisory Committee, said the situation is just as bad in Oregon. Wilson was elected an Oregon state senator last month.

The Legislature there at its last session, he said, arbitrarily cut the State Industrial Accident Commission's proposed budget by 5%, with the result that "with 34,000 firms under state insurance coverage, we have a total of 28 inspectors."

Crawford led a panel discussion on "Yarding and Loading" in the logging section of the conference. Henry Faubian, of Cathlamet, Wash., and Vernon Castle, of Sultan, Wash., who were in the Woodworkers' delegation, were awarded certificates of merit for their work in industrial safety during the last year.

Protect Servicemen, UAW Locals Told

The CIO Auto Workers have advised local unions to protect members entering the service by taking steps to insert in their contracts clauses covering seven points recently approved by the international executive board.

Model forms of the clauses, prepared by the UAW-CIO Veterans' Dept., were sent with the notice to the locals.

The points were:

Re-employment rights upon return regardless of the type of discharge; re-employment rights for probationary employes; guarantees of promotional opportunities granted during absence in the armed forces; vacation pay for year of entrance and year of return; full pension credits; continuation of life, hospitalization and surgical insurance benefits during service, and establishment in each plant of a Labor-Management Military Deferment Committee.

For A Successful Christmas Party—Try CIO Films

EVERY YEAR it's been customary for hundreds of CIO groups to give Christmas parties for the children of union members. If your union is planning to fling one this year, you'll be interested in some suggestions that the National CIO's Education & Research Dept. has to offer.

If you'd like to show some special Christmas movie programs for children, for instance, you can obtain a selection of films from the department's film division, but you'll have to hurry. Associate Director George Guernsey says that film orders should be in by Dec. 14. So airmail or send in your requests special delivery right away, giving exact date or dates you plan to use the films which are all 16 mm. sound. Two selections of Christmas movies are available:

1. A 40-minute program, rental $8. This includes four or five different short films (Christmas songs, comedy and cartoons) and a special Christmas short.

2. A 35-minute program, rental $5. In this selection is a Treasury Dept. color movie, "America, the Beautiful," or other two-reel film, plus a comedy and a Christmas short.

THE CHRISTMAS shorts, one of which goes with each selection, include Mickey Plays Santa Claus, Night Before Christmas, Silent Night, Christmas Dream, Santa's Punch and Judy, and Christmas Night.

Among the comedy cartoons are All-American Mickey, Gold Rush Mickey, Mickey and the Giant, Mickey Saves the Airmail, Cholly Polly, Beanstalk Jack, Movie Star Mickey, The Circus Wakes Up, Sandy Steps Out, and the Princess and the Dragon.

One of these three comedies will also be included in each program: W. C. Fields in The Great Chase; Charlie Chaplin in The Adventurer, and Abbott & Costello in No Indians, Please, and Riot on Ice.

Guernsey warns that you shouldn't consider a film as definitely scheduled until you receive confirmation. There's a big demand for the films and it may outrun the supply, so be sure to get your order in at once.

Here are some other suggestions, based on the experience of hundreds of previous CIO Christmas parties:

1. A special committee to arrange the party may be set up, or the regular union entertainment committee, with extra members added, may be used. But be sure to have a large committee, for there's lots of work to be done. And start early.

2. Any time from Dec. 15 to 31 is best for a Christmas party, but be sure to check on dates of other large parties (church, veterans' organizations, etc.) to avoid setting the same date if possible.

3. The union hall is the best place to hold the party, if you have one big enough. Other possibilities are church rooms, local halls, or if you expect a very big crowd, a movie house, in which case Saturday morning will probably have to be the time.

4. Cost of the party can be figured by the number of cents per child. Successful parties with a good show and candy for each child should cost less than 25c per child.

5. If this is your first party, and your finances are slim, you may want to limit the party to the children, grandchildren, etc., of union members. If you have a large local in a small town, you may want to invite everyone, but you'd better set an age limit. Usual limit is 12 years, which means that kids up to 14 will come. As to parents, let 'em come if space permits.

6. Admission should be by ticket. This can be handled through shop stewards. To get an estimate of number of children to expect before printing tickets, prepare a mimeographed form for stewards to circulate for signatures of members who want tickets. Experience has shown that usually, two tickets are distributed for every child that comes, because members ask for more than they can use or their children may be sick.

But be prepared for either more or less than your estimate, for it's hard to judge, especially the first year.

Orders for either of the two film programs offered should be sent to George T. Guernsey, CIO, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C. Copies of the 48-page comic book, Joe Worker and the Story of Labor, may also be obtained for distribution at the Christmas party. Price, 10 for $1, 100 for $6.

Airmail Payments Break-Down Asked

The convention adopted a resolution endorsing the recommendations of President Truman and the Hoover Commission to Congress for legislation by Congress separating airmail subsidy payments from airmail compensation.

Total airmail payments have risen to an estimated $125 million for this year. Under existing laws there is no break-down and the amount of subsidy is concealed. The CIO contended in the resolution that this concealment "makes it possible for air lines to use public funds for anti-labor and strike-breaking purposes."

Cost Of Living Reaches All-Time High And Will Continue To Soar

THE COST of living soared to an all-time high on Oct. 15, the Bureau of Labor Statistics announced last week.

Its consumers' price index soared to 174.8% of the 1935-39 average, a jump of .6% from the 173.8 registered on Sept. 15 and .2% more than the previous all-time high or mark reached in August and September, 1948.

The new figure, which represents an increase during the previous month in the retail prices of all principal commodities covered by the index, is 2.7% greater than the 170.2 chalked up on June 15, just before the start of the war in Korea; 3.7% greater than on Oct. 15, 1949, and 31% higher than the 133.3 of June, 1946, when price controls ended.

The jump in the index brought wage increases to hundreds of thousands of union members working under escalator clause contracts.

UNDER ORDINARY circumstances they would have received 2c an hour. But most unions and employers took cognizance of a 1.3 point lag in the BLS figure for rents, representing an error accumulated since 1940, and most workers will receive 3c an hour. The BLS will not add the figure to the index until January, when some other changes also will be made.

More than 600,000 members of the CIO Auto Workers employed by General Motors, Packard, Ford, Kaiser-Frazer, Studebaker, Bendix and North American Aviation get the 3c beginning with the first pay period after Dec. 1. Only Chrysler is not covered by the UAW standard escalator clause, which provides for a 1c per hour increase for every 1.14 points rise in the BLS index figure.

An estimated 300,000 additional U. S. workers also will get the pay boost.

Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers warned that the increase in the cost of living "is a foretaste of much worse to come unless effective action against it is taken by government and taken quickly."

"Coupled with the rise in corporate profits to new all-time levels," he added, "the increase in living costs testifies to the success of big business in shifting to the shoulders of those least able to bear it the cost of the Korean War and the defense program."

THE BLS FOUND that during the month ending Oct. 15, the largest price increases were made by house furnishings, with a 2.3% jump, and apparel, with a 1.5% raise. A seasonal drop in meat prices kept the increase in the food classification to .2%. This resulted in a new figure of 209, the same as for Aug. 15 and 3.6% less than the record high of 216.8 established in July, 1948.

But prices are bound to go still higher. The BLS figures do not reflect advances made since Oct. 15. The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index as of Nov. 28 stood at $6.67, an increase of 4c in a week and only 2c below the 1950 high. A year ago it stood at $5.79.

The BLS wholesale price index between June 20 and Nov. 21 increased 9%—much of which has not yet been passed on to the consumers.

The CIO Dept. of Education and Research warned that food prices probably will increase sharply during the next few months as the harvesting and slaughtering season ends.

More and more, it warned, will consumers feel the results on civilian production of cuts made necessary by mobilization orders which are only beginning to trickle out to factories and mills, and which probably will not really begin to roll for another month at least. Wholesale prices of industrial products have been steadily increasing since last spring, and their full impact has not yet been felt in retail outlets.

"Unless something is done, and done fast, there will be really serious inflationary pressure on prices by spring," a department spokesman said.

Yule Seals Endorsed

CIO Pres. Philip Murray last week urged all Americans, and especially CIO members, to support the Christmas Seal sale of National Tuberculosis Association.

U. S. Steel And Bethlehem Give 16c, Hike Prices 5.5%

THE CIO Steelworkers and U. S. Steel, behemoth of American industry, agreed last week on a general wage increase averaging about 16c an hour for 165,000 production workers employed by six subsidiary operating companies.

The settlement was announced Nov. 30, when the union's wage policy committee accepted it at a meeting in Pittsburgh.

Termination of the negotiations set in motion a series of wage and price increases throughout basic steel. A few hours after the U. S. Steel settlement, the Steelworkers and Bethlehem Steel agreed to the same terms. In Cleveland Republic Steel announced it had made the same offer to the union.

The U. S. Steel and Bethlehem pay boosts became effective on Dec. 1. And at the same time the companies, despite fantastic net profits for the first nine months of the year, made effective price increases of 5½%.

The pay boosts range from a basic 12½c an hour for workers in the lowest labor grade, sweepers, to 28c for the highest, the blooming mill operators.

IN ADDITION, the pact provided for a reduction in the differential between wages paid steel workers in the north and the the south by giving employes of the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co. an increase ranging from 17c to 32½c an hour and averaging 20½c. This cut the differential from 14½c to 10c an hour.

The basic steel wage rate was raised by the settlement from $1.18½ to $1.31 an hour. Workers in the top class were advanced from $2.85 to $2.86 an hour.

The wage increase resulted from action of Philip Murray, president of the Steelworkers and of the CIO, in writing to Benjamin F. Fairless, U. S. Steel president, some weeks ago, asking that in view of increases in the cost of living the contract signed a year ago be opened for renegotiation of the wage clauses.

Under the agreement, the company was not required to make any change in wages until Jan. 1, 1951. However, in his letter Murray expressed the hope that the company would yield on this point in view of the difficulties its employes were having in making ends meet as prices climbed higher and higher.

THE COMPANY agreed at least to discuss Murray's proposal and meetings began late in October. The settlement followed. It was signed by Murray and John A. Stephens, U. S. Steel vice president in charge of industrial relations. Other contract clauses, including expiration on Dec. 31, 1951, remain unchanged.

The Republic offer was sent to William F. Donovan, the union's district director, who was out of the city. Without waiting for an answer from the Steelworkers, the company announced that "appropriate" price increases would be put into effect on Dec. 1. A meeting was arranged later for Dec. 2.

Republic, like U. S. Steel, has a southern wage differential problem.

IN ANNOUNCING acceptance of the U. S. Steel offer, the wage policy committee said it was instructing the various other negotiating committees "to resume collective bargaining conferences for the application of the general 16c an hour increase and, where appropriate, the additional 4½c per hour increase to eliminate area differentials."

Fairless told the union negotiators that with "all factors considered" the settlement probably will end up by representing an increase averaging nearer 18c than 16c. In a formal statement he said the boost amounted to approximately 11% and will mean about $125 million a year in additional wages, based on current tonnage.

Meanwhile, the union and a U. S. Steel subsidiary, the Oliver Coal Mining Co. of Duluth, Minn., were working out an agreement for a 12½c an hour across-the-board increase plus 8½c to go into a pool for job standardization.

The basic steel industry has 32 standard labor classifications, with an increment of 5c an hour between each, into which all employes fall. The mining end of the industry has never had standardized classifications in the past, and is expected to end up with about 16 labor grades with a probable increment of 3½c an hour.

Michael DiSalle, Toledo Mayor, Named Price Control Director

MICHAEL V. DISALLE, liberal young Democratic Mayor of Toledo, O., was appointed Director of Price Stabilization by President Truman on Nov. 30.

DiSalle campaigned for the Democratic nomination for U. S. Senator from Ohio earlier this year on a platform of opposition to the Taft-Hartley Act and friendship for organized labor. Although he polled a good vote in and around Toledo, he was defeated by State Auditor Joseph Ferguson, who lost to Sen. Taft (R.) in the general election.

He is regarded as an able administrator and is held in respect by industry as well as labor.

DiSalle, who is 42, said he expected to resign as mayor and start to work for the federal government immediately. His appointment filled the last of the important jobs in the economic controls setup made necessary by the war in Korea.

The father of five children, and a lawyer, DiSalle originated Toledo's famous Labor-Management Citizens' Committee, which frequently averted threatened strikes by seeking to conciliate and mediate industrial disputes. He attended Georgetown Law School, but was not graduated from there, and holds an honorary law degree from Notre Dame.

With Columnist Drew Pearson, he launched and carried to completion a campaign among Italian-Americans of writing letters to the old country prior to the election there two years ago—an important factor in keeping the Communists from winning.

UNENVIABLE JOB: Here are the labor members of the wage stabilization board, with some of their colleagues. Standing, left to right: Prof. Clark Kerr, Univ. of Calif.; Henry Bates, President of AFL Bricklayers; Prof. John Dunlop, Harvard; Elmer E. Walker, Machinists vice-president. Seated, left to right: J. Ward Keener, vice-president of B. F. Goodrich Rubber Co.; Cyrus Ching, Federal Mediation chief who is chairman of the new board; Emil Rieve, President of CIO Textile Workers. The two other board members were absent.

N. Y. Bias Group In Crackdown

Refusal by an employment agency to accept procedure recommended by the New York State Commission against Discrimination has led the commission to issue the first cease and desist order in the five and a half years it has operated.

The order was issued against the Kirk Lucas Agency, of New York, on a complaint by John W. Woorm. He charged the group sought information about his religion and national origin before offering him a job. More than 1800 earlier compaints, including one against the same agency, were settled by the commission without such action becoming necessary.

Reds Make National Unity Essential

Badly Divided U. S. In No Position To Give World Leadership To Forces Now Battling International Communism

By ALLAN L. SWIM

MANY American soldiers who thought a few weeks ago that they might be home by Christmas are now dead.

The wave of optimism which swept the country when the Korean war appeared near an end suddenly turned to pessimism.

The Chinese Communists, whom the party-liners referred to as "merely agrarian reformers," were responsible.

Their armed forces—armed largely by Russia—slashed into the United Nations army as it prepared to wind up the Korean campaign.

And the world appeared to be on the brink of a major war.

IT SHOULD have been obvious to most Americans as early as 1946 that Russia was determined to extend her influence far beyoud her own borders.

It should have become obvious when the Reds seized Czechoslovakia that Russia was willing to go further than mere ideological war.

And the war in China and the aggression in Korea should have convinced all of us in this country that we were heading for real trouble.

But there were those who clung to the idea of business as usual, legislation as usual and unusual profits.

And there were those who were more determined to fight non-existant Commies in our own government than the very real Commies who were threatening the peace of the world.

So today we find ourselves in a very dangerous position.

WE'RE ill prepared to fight a major war although one threatens—and we're not prepared to cushion the economic shock of rearmament.

We've recently come through an election campaign in which our foreign policy was made into a partisan political football.

We've already entered a period of profiteering and inflation.

Price increases—most of them completely unjustified—have placed a heavy burden on many consumers.

Congress has made inadequate provisions for financing war and preparedness and little is being done to house and feed those who must be shifted from one part of the country to another as war production is stepped up.

And on the very day that the Chinese Reds began cutting down UN forces some leaders of the Republican party began sniping at President Truman, commander-in-chief of U. S. armed forces.

NOBODY has all the solutions to all the problems that confront us now and are likely to confront us in the future.

We in this country are not calling the shots. Russia is doing that. We don't know whether we're heading for world-wide conflict or whether fighting will remain centered in the Orient.

But a few things appear to be certain:

1. Democratic forces are already heavily engaged in a major conflict with Communist totalitarianism.

2. The United States must supply large amounts of equipment and large numbers of men if the democratic forces are to win.

3. They won't win unless the United States is able to forge the same type of unity which carried it victorious through the last war.

4. And such unity is sadly lacking at the present time.

WHETHER the Republicans like it or not, Harry Truman is President and the leader of the nation.

Whether the Democrats like it or not, the Republicans have strong, determined forces in both houses of Congress.

And whether the Republicans and Democrats like it or not, the Communists have created problems which make it absolutely necessary that both parties and the administration get together on a war-foreign affairs program.

And while they're doing it they also should get together on a domestic program which will make it possible—and necessary—for all segments of our population to share equally in the sacrifices that must be made.

And they can't afford to wait until we're facing disaster before doing it.

NOT STARTLING NEWS

We seldom waste time raving and ranting about the so-called commercial press even when we feel that we're being kicked in the shins.

But occasionally we have an urge to point out what we think to be wrong or ridiculous about the way news is handled.

And this is one of those occasions.

Back in 1949 a total of 245 news and radio men crowded the press tables at the Cleveland CIO convention. Their mission was to write about the Commies getting the axe.

They got what they came for—and their papers back home and the radio stations all over the country shot the works.

They shot the works despite the fact that all of the Commies who had infiltrated the CIO did not provide either the CIO or the nation with a dangerous and frightening menace.

Well, the CIO had another convention out in Chicago a couple of weeks ago—and this time only 127 news and radio men were present.

There was no excitement either at the press table or at the editors' desks back home when the convention turned its attention to a far-reaching foreign policy statement.

Yet the program proposed in the statement was of greater importance to the United States than the decision reached a year earlier to expel Commie-dominated unions.

The program outlines some concrete steps which the CIO believes our nation must take if we're to progress in our campaign against international Communism. And much of it is based on experience gained by the CIO in its own dealings with the Reds.

A number of the fellows at the press table told us frankly—and confidentially—that they knew the program was extremely important and that workers all over Europe would be encouraged by it.

But, they added, their editors and publishers couldn't get excited over a labor organization's views on foreign affairs.

Oh, well, that's the way it goes.

WE'RE STARTING CAMPAIGN NOW!

In view of what happened on Nov. 7 and in view of the fact that it's less than two years' till the next general election, we've decided to start getting our licks in early. And we're going to be in their pitching until the 1952 ballots are counted.

Why?

Well, the answer's simple.

PAC has a sound program. The liberal forces did better in 1950 than in the last previous off-year elections.

Furthermore, we think it's ridiculous to crawl into a hole somewhere and waste a lot of time licking our wounds.

Reaction and conservatism bounced back a bit after taking a bad beating in 1948. Liberalism can be made to bounce back even more in 1952 if those of us who believe in it go to work and stay at work.

So, we'll have our bucks ready for PAC the first time a solicitor comes around. And we hope others will, too.

Year-Old ICFTU Widely Accepted

THE INTL. Confederation of Free Trade Unions celebrates its first birthday this week. It was set up during a conference in London in December, 1949, at which most of the free labor bodies of the world were represented. The CIO played a leading role.

Now, 12 months later, it is a well-established organization that has won respect wherever it is known—and that is from one end of the world to the other.

It has initiated a wide range of activities to carry out its aims and purposes. Some of them are well under way, others are just starting, and still others are in the paper stage, as might be expected of a brand-new organization.

ONE OF the early fears has been laid quietly to rest. This was that the ICFTU would be inspired by the merely negative ends of opposition to communism.

"It is true," said a recent ICFTU statement, "that the ICFTU has taken a strong stand on such questions as forced labor in the countries of Communist dictatorship, and will most certainly continue to do so until the evil is extirpated. But it has also protested just as vigorously against similar abuses in Spain and some Latin American countries . . .

"The ICFTU and its affiliated bodies are undoubtedly opposed to the disruptive policies pursued by the Communists within the trade union movement. It is fighting them not as an end in itself, but just insofar as they stand in the path of the organized labor movement in its broad advance toward the goal of economic security, peace and freedom.

"In other words, the aims of the ICFTU are essentially positive aims: establishment and maintenance of full employment, the provision of economic and technical assistance to the underdeveloped areas of the world in the interest of the peoples concerned, and the extension of the participation of organized labor in the formulation and application of social and economic policy at all levels.

"These are no mere propaganda declarations, but some of the practical objectives which the confederation considers capable of realization through national and international action.

"And as an earnest of its intention to achieve them it has already taken the initiative in the UN Economic and Social Council for the adoption of full employment policies by all member states. Another campaign which the ICFTU is carrying on is for effective trade union participation in the Schuman Plan, as part of its wider objective of the economic integration of Western Europe."

The Schuman Plan, advanced by France, provides for unification of most of the heavy industry of Western Europe. The CIO, the ICFTU and national labor bodies abroad favor it in principle, but demand that precautions be taken against cartelization and restriction of production, and insist on representation in its administration.

During the year of its existence the ICFTU has been granted consulative status with the Intl. Labour Organization and the Economic and Social Council and the Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization—both UN organizations. It has become so active in the ILO that a special branch office has been set up in Geneva, Switzerland, near the ILO office, and J. H. Oldenbroek, ICFTU general secretary, has been elected secretary of the ILO Workers' Group.

PROGRESS HAS been made in establishing ICFTU regional organizations, with an inter-American body to be discussed at a meeting in Mexico City in January and an Asian body at Karachi, India, later in the year. One for Western Europe was set up at a meeting in Brussels last month.

A mission that included John Brophy, former director of CIO industrial union councils, toured Asia last year and another will soon be visiting Africa. As a result of the Asian visit, an ICFTU Information and Advisory Centre is being established at Singapore.

Sufficient Funds For BLS Requested

In a resolution commending the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics and its staff for their accomplishments in the face of budgetary restrictions and a minimum of legislative aid in collecting accurate data, the convention asked Congress "to provide adequate funds to enable the bureau to do the job for which it was created."

Besides additional funds, the resolution called upon Congress to permit the bureau as much freedom in analyzing its statistics "as is given the statistical agencies of the Commerce, Agriculture and Interior Depts. to deal with the problems of employers, farmers and the extractive industries." It also asked Congress to give the BLS the power by law to collect data comparable to the powers of the Census Bureau.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer

Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Michael Quill, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher

Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII December 4, 1950 No. 49

Clients Just Kept On Popping Up

IT ALL started when a CIO organizer was arrested on a charge of violating a hastily-enacted city ordinance regulating the distribution of leaflets.

It ended when two weary attorneys left court after defending seven men instead of the one "client" they had when they arrived in town.

What happened in between was a bit fantastic, according to those on the scene.

Here's the story:

Hugo Black, Jr., law partner of Jerome Cooper, attorney for the CIO Organizing Committee, and Robert Cahoon, attorney for the Textile Workers at Atlanta, went to North Carolina to defend the organizer arrested on the leaflet distribution charge.

On the day after their arrival they appeared in municipal court to await the calling of their case.

They waited and waited and waited.

It was Monday and the court docket was heavy with cases of those who had celebrated well but not too wisely over the week-end

The judge wasn't pro-union and so the attorneys knew their hearing would be among the last.

News travels fast in a small town courtroom and before long word got around that the two attorneys were connected with the labor movement.

A MAN WHO HAD BEEN arrested on a misdeameanor charge walked over to Cahoon and asked, "Is it true that you are a CIO lawyer?"

Cahoon said he was.

"I'm a CIO member with the Steelworkers," the man said. "My father and two brothers are CIO members. Will you defend me?"

Cahoon and Black went into a huddle, then told the man they would defend him. They notified the judge and took over his case.

After a lengthy hearing a "not guilty" verdict was given.

Almost immediately another defendant approached Black and Cahoon, displayed a membership card from a CIO Packinghouse Workers local in Chicago and asked that they defend him.

They agreed to do so—and again the verdict was "not guilty."

Four other defendents produced CIO cards. Black and Cahoon agreed to represent them.

And the prosecuting attorney appeared to suffer from near-apoplexy!

AN ATTEMPT WAS made to disqualify the two lawyers on the grounds they were not residents of North Carolina.

Both produced credentials which showed they were entitled to practice in the state.

The judge then ordered a recess during which he and the prosecuting attorney went into a huddle, obviously in an effort to figure some way of getting off the "hot spot."

Finally court was reconvened. The CIO organizer and the four other defendants were acquitted in rapid succession.

Total score for the attorneys for the day was seven hearings and seven acquittals!

After the two weary attorneys boarded a train for home that night Black said to Cahoon:

"You know, Bob, not one of those guys we represented—except the organizer—had a paid-up CIO card. They were all from five to 10 years out of date.

"But I've got a hunch that what we did for them won't hurt the CIO in that town."

Apparently it helped. Since then the CIO has won NLRB elections in five plants in the town and has filed petitions for three more.

A.L.S.

NO WAY TO FIGHT THE FIRE!

Banking Group Blamed For Basic Industry Shortages

By IRVING FAGAN & CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

STEEL is short. So is aluminum. So are copper and perhaps oil and a dozen other things. There even is talk of a shortage of electric power—and if they try to expand aluminum production electric power is the first thing they have to have.

But, you ask, how can these things be? Isn't America the greatest nation in the world? Didn't we build all those ships and planes and tanks and rifles and bullets and jeeps for World War II? The answer, of course, is "Yes" both times. But the shortages are there, nonetheless.

FACT IS, AMERICA'S potential has barely been scratched. If the energy and materials potentially available to Americans could really be put to use there would be few shortages to worry about.

And the vaunted American standard of living would soar to new levels. But the shortsightedness and greed of the owners and managers of industrial America have made the shortages inevitable. The result is on the financial page if not the front page of your morning newspaper.

Ben Fairless, the blustering president of the United States Steel Corporation, made no bones about the situation the other day in a speech delivered in Los Angeles. There's enough steel, he said boldly, enough to meet minimum needs. You know what "minimum needs" means, don't you? It means there's not enough steel for the defense effort without cutting civilian production to the bone, if then.

Fairless bragged about Big Steel's expansion plans—which will bring more steel two long years from now. But he failed to remind his listeners that back in January, 1949, President Truman threatened to put the government in the steel-making business if the private makers didn't enlarge their capacity.

In a probing little book called The Pursuit of Plenty, A. G. Mezorik sums up the situation rather neatly by writing:

"The leaders of the rear guard who hold the world back by stunting industrial capacity apply their individualistic code to the unfettered exploitation of the raw resources from which they make their finished products, refusing to accept responsibility for the conservation of those resources no matter how essential they are to the country or the world. This is the oldest form of industrial backwardness, familiar to all in every colony and indeed in our own South and West.

"The newer form, so evident in the privately owned electrical industry, in oil, and as the President pointed out so sharply, in steel, is the refusal to expand mills and factories, keeping those purposely to a capacity less than public interest demands so that markets, prices, and profits can be easily controlled.

"THE POLICIES FOR those industries are uniform, decided by a small group of bankers whose essential interest is to make all the products and services which they control yield assured high profits. The men who operate the industries carry out those policies whether it goes against their grain or not."

Mezerik repeatedly brands oil, steel and the public utilities as the "trinity" which holds the reins and cracks the whip over the present day economy.

Mezerik wrote his book before Korea made military production our first concern. Consequently, he thought in terms of bridges, highways, irrigation projects, dams, factories, fertilizers and hundreds of items other than tanks, planes and bombs.

If you were to develop the sprawling Missouri Vally, for instance, he says there must be plenty of steel available at prices free from "monopolistic restrictions." And there must be plenty of aluminum, copper and other things. Yet, he insists, "In this entire country, there is not a single locality with sufficient excess electric power to install one additional aluminum factory."

DEWEY ANDERSON, executive director of the Public Affairs Institute, reaches very similar conclusions by following a somewhat different route. Commenting on the post-Korean aluminum situation the other day, Anderson said the 35% cut-back which has been ordered in civilian consumption of aluminum is no solution at all.

The real solution, he said, would be expansion of production—by about 70%—and elimination of monopoly pricing by the industry's "big three." And to expand it would be necessary to develop low-cost power projects wherever possible. Why couldn't they have been developed before?

Now they're talking about expansion of aluminum and of steel—and of other things. But somehow, there's never much talk until a defense program makes it necessary. And the trouble with a defense program is that neither a submarine nor a six-motored bombing plane, necessary as both may be, can have much positive effect on national wealth or living standards.

And even in the present situation, you read where the barons of big business are saying there's plenty of this and that.

Economic Stabilization Resolution

The CIO convention adopted a resolution on economic mobilization, which resolved:

The economic resources of our country must be fully mobilized to discharge our grave responsibility. The Congress of Industrial Organizations pledges its total strength and determination to the success of this mobilization program. Sacrifices will necessarily be imposed on the people while this task is being accomplished. We willingly accept those sacrifices, but we shall demand that they be equitably shared among all economic groups, with the burdens imposed in accordance with capacity and with primary regard to maintaining the basic strength of the nation. Free people cannot be fully mobilized for years of effort nor can we build and maintain high national morale if millions of workers and other low income people are asked to tighten their belts while big corporations continue to enjoy the luxury of business and profits as usual.

Within the framework of the largest possible total production, the essential requirements of our armed forces and those of our allies must be satisfied first. This must be our fundamental goal. It pertains not only to the quantities required but, what is equally important, to the time limits within which they are required. The fact that we now appear to be engaged only in partial mobilization should not militate against this basic principle. To date there appears to be little evidence of a sense of urgency in mobilizing our economy to meet military requirements. We must not suffer again from "too little, too late." A well planned, well organized and well implemented mobilization program will give our fighting men what they need at the earliest possible date. We must move more rapidly, more effectively in planning, organizing and implementing the mobilization effort.

Only with a well-defined program as to types, quantities, and the time periods involved, will it be possible to measure the impact of these requirements on the economy and the degree of mobilization and types of economic controls needed to carry out this program with the utmost speed and efficiency.

While meeting these priority military requirements, we must not neglect essential civilian needs. We cannot repeat too often that America's strength and America's security depend on its ability to produce. We must keep our economy strong and healthy. High morale and productivity of workers, farmers and management necessitate the maintenance of essential services and the production of essential goods. We learned in World War II that the strong economy required here at home in support of the fighting front can be achieved only if we give preference to essential activities over those which are non-essential. Failure to give preference to essential needs and failure to maintain essential civilian production can be harmful to the entire mobilization effort.

Piecemeal measures will not do the job. Across-the-board curtailment of civilian industries without regard to defense production or civilian needs will not assure full utilization of the nation's productive powers. Credit restrictions which impose inequitable burdens on low-income consumers and cut production of essential civilian products are no substitute for a planned and integrated mobilization program. Manipulation of interest rates and bank credit will provide no magic solution of the difficult tasks which confront us. The task ahead can not be done by push-button mobilization. Only a well planned, coordinated program will assure full development of the nation's productive resources and their maximum utilization in meeting the nation's military and essential civilian requirements.

New high levels of national output of goods and services must be achieved. Through full mobilization of the labor force, expansion of plant capacity, and with safeguards for the basic needs of the civilian population, we can increase the national product by 25 per cent within the next five years. Monopoly interests which deliberately promote scarcity must be made to raise their sights. Their private economic decisions cannot be permitted to put shackles on the nation's capacity to produce. If they do not willingly meet our needs, the government must step in to see that they do, or do the job itself.

The Defense Production Act must be amended to enable the government to deal effectively with the problem of inflation. Ever since the Korean invasion occurred, we have seen consumer prices move upward, with the threat of sharp increases yet to come in the next few months. There has been an orgy of profiteering, and corporate profits after taxes in 1950 will reach the spectacular total of $23 billion. No comparable rise in wages has taken place.

Control over commodity speculation is imperative. Hoarding must be severely penalized. Loopholes through which certain favored commercial interests can now escape regulation must be closed. The inequities of the new tax law must be removed by imposing an excess profits tax on corporations and by raising the taxes on high-income families in proportion to the tax increases imposed on workers' incomes.

In the face of inflationary price rises, stimulated by speculation on commodity markets, the wage-price tie-in provisions of the Defense Production Act are grossly inequitable and totally unworkable. They would freeze wages in industries placed under selective price control, but they would leave the prices of necessities which workers must buy uncontrolled. Taken together with the elastic price controls written into the Act for the benefit of food processors, the wage-price tie-in would freeze wage and salary workers in a disadvantaged position. The Act should provide authority for effective price controls without the necessity for wage controls and should provide for effective controls over food prices and grade labeling.

Goals and targets must be established. Programs, resources and requirements must be coordinated. These principles must serve as the plan that governs the program of the National Security Resources Board and its subsidiary organizations charged with carrying out our mobilization program. This necessitates centralized direction of the program rather than the haphazard shot-in-the-dark operation of separate agencies such as Federal Reserve Board, National Production Authority, Economic Stabilization Agency and others with each going in uncoordinated, decentralized directions.

American labor, while pledging its fullest cooperation and support in the job of mobilizing maximum productive power and military strength to meet the threat of communist aggression, insists that labor be given effective representation in the agencies charged with mobilization. Such representation is necessary to afford labor the opportunity to participate fully in the policy-forming and administrative functions of all government agencies involved in the mobilization operation. Labor must be consulted on all social and economic issues involved in mobilization. Such labor participation on an equal basis with industry is not a matter of jobs but rather a matter of affording labor opportunity to make its full creative contribution in the mobilization effort.

Experience in World War II proved conclusively that free labor could out-produce slave labor. On the basis of that record of performance, we state our profound conviction, and we insist, that free labor can be mobilized on a voluntary basis more effectively than through a system of compulsory controls. Labor's basic rights and standards must be protected. In stating our willingness to make whatever sacrifices may be found necessary, we insist that industry make comparable sacrifices. This is in the interest not only of our members and all workers but also in the interest of national unity, strength, security, survival and victory.

In the world-wide struggle between tyranny and freedom, American labor has much more than just toil and technical skill to contribute. The people all over the world will better understand our democratic objectives when they know that labor in the United States is playing a leading role in the fight against Communism. Labor must be accorded active participation and leadership in every important facet of our mobilization effort, and in our further programs to improve living conditions in free countries and countries aspiring to freedom.

In adopting this resolution, we speak first and foremost as American citizens deeply concerned for our country's security and welfare, and with a deep appreciation of our country's responsibilities for world leadership. The security, the dignity and material well-being of the workers, in America as well as throughout the world, are identified with the preservation and extension of the democratic process. Organized labor is completely dedicated to exert its every capacity and ability to help make our country strong—economically, militarily, and morally—and to help our country use that strength to bring peace, security and abundance to mankind.

Aluminum And Copper Cutbacks Are Protested

CIO PRES. Philip Murray took time during the convention to send a telegram to Commerce Secy. Sawyer protesting cutbacks in industrial use of copper and aluminum.

Murray sharply commented on the effect of the recently issued restriction on aluminum which has resulted in thousands of workers being laid off. He predicted that the contemplated copper order would create similar dislocation.

"Like the ill-considered credit regulations issued by the Federal Reserve Board," he said, "these metal orders will arbitrarily slash production and employment without any tie-in to defense production, without any related plan to assure increased supply of these scarce materials and without any program to allocate the reduced civilian supply to uses that are vitally important to preserve the strength and vigor of the nation's economy."

PRES. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers, in a telegram to President Truman, criticized the proposed dismantling of the Toeging Aluminum plant in the American zone at Toeging, Bavaria.

"This destruction of aluminum production capacity in a country receiving ECA assistance and at a time when serious aluminum shortage at home compels us to do everything possible to increase production does not make sense," he said.

U.S. Probe Asked In L.I. Tragedy

Full federal investigation of the disastrous Long Island Railroad wreck was demanded by the convention.

Secy.-Treas. William Pollock of the Textile Workers, who presented the resolution from the floor, added that "we should demand the prosecution of all individuals whose neglect has contributed to these great disasters."

"I think we should insist that this railroad install all of the latest safety devices so these people can travel in safety," he said.

Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union, a Long Island commuter himself, gave the resolution a fervent second.

Noting that his next door neighbor had been killed in the wreck, Curran said that the Long Island R. R., a subsidiary of the Pennsylvania, had been investigated before, but that state probes had proved a "farce."

FCC Phone Rate Control Asked

AMONG the resolutions passed at the recent CIO convention was one urging enactment of legislation vesting all power to regulate telephone rates in the Federal Communications Commission.

It was approved after Joseph Beirne, president of the Communications Workers and CIO vice president, explained that at present, 44 states and many municipalities have their own regulatory bodies which, in recent years, "have not served the people well." Only uniform rates and regulations, he claimed, will save the industry from being turned over to public ownership at the behest of indignant subscribers.

The convention endorsed in principle the proposals of the Newspaper Guild for establishing centrally located daily newspapers owned and operated by unions in cooperation with interested individuals, and congratulated the 10 Pittsburgh, Pa., newspaper unions "for their excellent demonstration of trade union solidarity and spirited public service by publishing the Pittsburgh Daily Reporter as a joint newspaper" during the recent city-wide strike and lockout there.

Secy.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the Auto Workers called for approval of the resolution as a step toward answering more effectively "these slanderous attacks the American press is carrying out against the labor movement as a whole."

In another resolution the delegates approved pending legislation which would provide assistance to labor and management in the development of apprentice training by the U. S. Bureau of Apprenticeship.

Convention greetings were sent to the state of Israel. Delegates also endorsed efforts of the American Trade Union Council of the National Committee for Labor Israel to raise $2 million from U. S. unions to support the work of Histradrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor.

LIGHTER NOTES at the convention were struck by Joe Glazer, education director of the CIO Rubber Workers (left), and "Texas Bill" Strength, who has been appearing on radio programs sponsored by the CIO Organizing Committee.

Shortages, Inventory Idle 90,000 In Detroit

More than 90,000 workers employed by Chrysler and Ford auto companies were temporarily idle because of steel shortages, parts shortages, and inventory shutdowns, it was reported at Detroit Nov. 24.

YOU NEEDED a union label of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers in your suit to be eligible to get a free chance on a new suit. Here Mrs. Strength, wife of "Texas Bill" Strength, is getting the number of the union label in the suit of David C. H. Finn, delegate of the CIO Communications Workers. Alexander Martini and Harold Freed, of Chicago (seated, left and right), ACWA union label representatives are jotting down the number at the CIO convention.

SECY.-TREAS. EMIL MAZEY of the CIO Auto Workers appears to be pleased with the copy of the Pittsburgh Daily Reporter which he is discussing with Executive Vice Pres. Sam Eubanks of the CIO Newspaper Guild. When a strike of AFL Mailers was followed by lockout on city's three dailies, the Guild joined the Mailers and eight other newspaper unions in publishing the Reporter. The strike has been settled. The photo was taken at the CIO convention.

Co-ops Are Endorsed As Aid To Unions

Support for the cooperative movement as a supplement to trade unions was again endorsed at the CIO convention. The resolution on the subject also urged that cooperatives recognize unions formed by their employes.

CIO affiliates were asked to give their backing to the Council of Cooperative Development set up to coordinate the efforts of the Cooperative League of the USA and the labor movement.

Children Remembered

A program that will provide equal opportunity for every American child through public and private child health and welfare services, immediate passage of the federal aid to education and school construction bills and other measures was endorsed by the CIO convention.

The resolution also called for support for the Mid-Century White House Conference convening in December.

Bargaining Faith Is Re-affirmed

Pointing to the vast accomplishments collective bargaining has made in the past, the convention re-dedicated itself to that basic objective of trade unionism—the improvement of wage standards and real earnings of American workers.

A resolution pointed out that in accomplishing this end, the growing inequity between wages and profits must be narrowed.

Average hourly earnings which were 66c in manufacturing industries in 1940 are now almost $1.50, the resolution noted. However, rising prices and profiteering have prevented workers from securing real improvement in their living conditions. For example, the buying power of average earnings since 1944 has increased by only 5%, while the buying power of corporate profits after taxes over this same period has increased by 37%.

Convention Approves Farm Price Supports

The CIO endorsed the principle of government support for farm prices in a farmer-labor unity resolution. It smartly rapped Congress for rejecting the Brannan plan for increased food consumption at lower prices and the Aiken plan for boosting food consumption among low income groups, but itself offering nothing "to protect farmers against loss, consumers against waste, taxpayers against paying for food that is wasted or destroyed."

The resolution warned workers and farmers against permitting food profiteers and speculators to divide and rule them. It also noted that the farmer is getting less out of the consumer's food dollar now than he got in 1945, and gave CIO support to help for farmers through credit, rural electrification, soil conservation, crop insurance, and housing, health and soil projects, in the interest of giving them greater security.

Let People See Congress On TV

If the people could see and hear Congress in action, congressmen would be more likely to heed the wishes of the people.

That idea is implicit in a resolution passed by the CIO convention. This resolution suggested several reforms in congressional procedures— one of the suggestions being to provide for broadcasting of congressional sessions on radio and television, coast to coast, in full, without editing, censorship, selection or comment.

Resolutions recommended that the President and Vice-President be elected by direct, popular vote; re-designation of election districts, particularly those of state legislatures; direct and open primaries, simplified registration, and salary increases for state and local officials.

Several reforms of congressional procedure, to allow more democratic operation, were asked.

Migratory Workers Aid Is Requested

Concern for the welfare of the nation's migratory workers, one of the most oppressed groups in America, was expressed in a resolution passed at the convention calling for special attention to the problems of these workers and urging measures to improve their situation.

Delegate Nicholas Dragon, CIO director in Phoenix, Ariz., gave the convention some examples of how the importation of Mexicans into Arizona's cotton and vegetable producing areas had thrown local workers out of jobs by the thousands and had lowered wage rates.

Some 4000 to 5000 Mexicans were recently brought into the Avondale, Ariz., area, displacing residents who had been working there for years. On the border, Dragon said, where immigration authorities had only two men, it was admitted that 25,000 Mexicans had illegally crossed the border in a short time.

Compensation Laws 'Inconsistent, Overlapping'

The CIO convention resolution on workmen's compensation, in its foreword, called attention to the "maze of inconsistent and overlapping laws" which result in inequalities along geographical and jurisdictional lines. To give relief from "an unjustified burden," the convention in part resolved that:

1. The most satisfactory plan for the compensation of work-connected injuries and diseases would be a national workmen's compensation law with broad coverage, equitable benefits and fair and efficient administration. To this end, the federal government should make an immediate and comprehensive investigation and should make recommendations to the Congress for National Workmen's Compensation legislation.

2. Until such a law is enacted, the CIO shall recommend amendment of present State workmen's compensation laws in according with the following standards:

a. The coverage of workmen's compensation should be broadened to provide for the compulsory coverage of all employers including small establishments and employments now classified as non-hazardous.

b. A statutory benefit level should be established which would indemnify the worker for at least 80% of his wage loss.

c. Maximum weekly or monthly payments should affect only a limited proportion of workers at the upper wage levels.

d. Benefits should be determined on the basis of average earnings, which should not be less than the worker's rate of pay for full time work, and should allow for normal overtime. The average should be adjusted to correspond to normal increases in earnings during continuance of disability.

e. Compensation for total disability, whether temporary or permanent, should be paid for the entire duration of disability. For permanent total disability this means that the benefit should be payable for life.

f. The entire procedure governing compensation for permanent partial disability should be revised to discard present arbitrary, inconsistent and inadequate schedules of payments. Compensation should be determined according to the individual's loss of earning capacity. Indemnification for temporary total disability should be paid in addition to the compensation for permanent partial disability.

g. Compensation for fatal injuries should be paid during the dependency of eligible survivors and should not be subject to any arbitrary expiration of benefits.

h. If a worker sustains a second injury which aggravates a pre-existing condition, the compensation payable to him should be based on the full severity of disability after the second injury.

i. Compensation should be paid for injuries which disfigure an employee by scarring or misshaping some member of his body. In determining the amount of such compensation, a proper recognition should be given to any curtailment of the individual's opportunities to find work in the future, as well as the social and psychological effects of the disfigurement.

j. Occupational diseases should be fully compensable without total maximum benefit amounts or maximum benefit periods.

k. Many injuries are incurred without a history of an unusual violent accident. Today such disabilities are too often left uncompensated. All personal injuries or diseases arising out of employment should be subject to the workmen's compensation law.

l. Medical care must not be subject to arbitrary maximums on money or time which stop the protection before the worker has fully recovered. Medical care must cover all services necessary for maximum restoration of the worker to health and should include prosthetic devices where necessary.

m. Rehabilitation measures to restore the injured worker to maximum capacity must include adequate income maintenance during such rehabilitation as well as prompt training in the use of prosthetic devices, if necessary, and in the acquisition or development of useful, suitable and remunerative vocational skills.

n. Administration of workmen's compensation laws must be recast and improved to bar present practices which deprive workers of benefits to which they are entitled and reduce or delay payment by improper challenge of claims. Administration should be the responsibility of a tripartite board consisting of labor, management and public representatives. A simple hearing procedure must be established which should not require representation by legal counsel. In the adjudication of claims for compensation no statement by the injured or by a survivor, waiving his rights, shall be held valid.

o. Workmen's compensation laws should be amended to provide for an exclusive State fund. This would reduce the high proportion of the workmen's compensation premium dollar that is kept by the insurance companies and reduce their underwriting activities.

Congress And U. S. Agencies Rapped In Housing Failure

THE RECENT CIO convention voiced a rousing denunciation of present federal practices with regard to housing, and approved a seven-point recommendation aimed at giving housing to those who need it most at prices they can afford.

Government policies in recent years, established by Congress and carried out by the agencies, have given builders "a pipeline into the federal treasury" while at the same time undermining the low-cost and low-rent housing programs, the resolution stated.

The real estate interests "infiltrated into all the agencies of government and public bodies concerned with housing and by foul means and fair fought the public housing program in local communities"—and the Public Housing Administration didn't fight back.

Congress turned down the most important section of the middle-income housing program, and then weakened rent control seriously—in both instances because it was "intimidated" by the real estate lobby, the resolution continued. On top of that, the Federal Reserve Board adopted a "banker-minded" attitude on housing credit and thus "gave the real estate industry a new opportunity for profiteering."

Faced with this situation, the convention:

1. Asked President Truman to call a housing conference to review the whole situation.

2. Requested the conference to study available manpower and materials and then set a housing production goal for 1951, and recommended:

3. That priorities on new housing be given first to the military and then to "those civilians who need the housing most."

4. That the federal-insured mortgage program be reviewed—and reduced.

5. That Congress be urged to enact a genuine middle-income housing bill.

6. That Congress pass an "adequate rent control law."

7. That Congress and the conference consider CIO recommendations about the establishment of an "industrialized housing industry."

LEO PERLIS, director of the CIO Community Services Committee, is "talking" CSC in front of the organization's booth in the lobby of the CIO convention hall in the Palmer House, Chicago. The convention gave CSC $5000 for Korean work.

Latin American Unit Endorsed

The convention endorsed the work of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee for the economic and social progress of the Latin American countries.

The convention demanded, in Latin American nations where they have been abrogated, the restoration of democratic, civil and human rights.

This includes, the resolution made clear, restoration of a free democratic and independent trade union movement and unconditional freedom for union leaders forced into exile for their safety. It also demanded that defense contracts awarded in Latin American countries contain stipulations guaranteeing adequate wages and proper working conditions, and strict adherence to labor contracts and existing social and labor legislation.

The convention authorized Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, of the Clothing Workers, as chairman of the Latin American Affairs Committee, to wire Secy. of State Dean Acheson, a request that Columbia continue to give Haya de la Torre, Peruvian labor leader, safety as a political refugee in that nation's embassy in Peru. The convention also asked that Peru grant him safe conduct out of the country.

Stone Union Wins Hike

A new contract which ties wages to the Bureau of Labor Statistics' cost of living index has been signed by Branch 135, CIO Stone & Allied Products Workers, and the Huron Portland Cement Co., Alpena, Mich.

The pact will mean an immediate increase and an automatic 1c hourly increase or decrease for every 1.3 fluctuation in the index. Wages will not drop below the 170.8 base established in the 1950 contract.

Kingfish Won't Be Commemorated

A 48-day strike by CIO Textile Local 948, in New Orleans, against the Federal Fiber Mills, ended recently in victory for the union. Wages were increased from 12 to 14c an hour, and the agreement also includes two weeks' vacation after five years, hospitalization, sickness, accident and life insurance, and a strong seniority clause.

Only unsatisfactory angle: while the contract provides seven paid holidays, the union was unsuccessful in its fight to get the employer to substitute Huey Long's birthday for Independence Day.

Continued Support Of LPA Is Urged

The convention voted to continue its wholehearted support to the Labor Press Association and urged affiliates to support it and to subscribe for its services for their newspapers.

Labor Press Association is engaged in providing news of interest and importance to union members to labor newspapers, and also is supported by the AFL and the larger unaffiliated unions. The resolution praised it for the "real contribution to the trade union movement" it has made, and noted "numerous improvements" in its various services since the 1949 convention.

Handicapped Neglect Called Short-Sighted

The tragic short-sightedness of our inadequate programs for the rehabilitation of millions of the nation's physically handicapped citizens has been glaringly revealed by the growing need for manpower in the present period of defense mobilization, it was pointed out at the convention.

A comprehensive program for the handicapped recommended in a resolution called for extension of medical service, special educational aids, income maintenance, vocational training, employment services and grants for the unemployable. The program, the CIO insisted, must be coordinated with workmen's compensation and disability programs to provide income for jobless workers and their families.

Private Contracts Of AEC Flayed

The convention renewed the CIO's proposal to President Truman, the Atomic Energy Commission and Congress to end the practice of contracting out AEC work to private corporations.

It also called upon the AEC to adopt Tennessee Valley Authority policies in methods of operation and production.

The resolution demanded "an end to the unauthorized and un-American practice of turning over to privates employers Federal Bureau of Investigation reports containing unverified, unevaluated, secret charges against employes."

The resolution pledged CIO support to the United Nations for international control of atomic energy, and condemned Russia and its satellites for refusing to join in adequate international safeguards. It also denounced the phony Stockholm Peace Petition instigated by Russia.

75 Attorneys Attend CIO Legal Parley

Approximately 75 attorneys, most of them representing CIO affiliates, attended a legal conference Nov. 23 and 24, following the conclusion of the CIO convention at Chicago. A banquet was held Nov. 24 in connection with the conference, which was sponsored by the CIO Legal Dept. Principal banquet speaker was Sen. Morse (R. Ore.).

"Off, Rover, off. Your object lesson on unfair advantage is painfully clear. I agree, Taft-Hartley's got to go."

Convention Urges Puerto Rican Aid

The convention passed a resolution supporting the people of Puerto Rico "in their efforts to progress through democratic means" to the political status and relationship with this country the people desire.

Recognition was given a recent congressional enactment which would permit the Puerto Rican people to decide by referendum if they wish to draft their own constitution or continue the present political relationship with this country.

Congress was urged to apply social security "in its entirety" to Puerto Rico—particularly seasonal workers in the sugar industry.

"We urge that sufficient Federal funds be appropriated to enable Puerto Rican authorities to provide schools and teachers to secure an adequate education for all children," said the resolution.

Farm Price Support Principle Endorsed

The CIO endorsed the principle of government support for farm prices in a farmer-labor unity resolution.

Congress was rapped smartly for rejecting the Brannan plan for increased consumption of food at lower prices and the Aiken plan for boosting food consumption among low income groups, but offering nothing "to protect farmers against loss, consumers against waste and taxpayers against paying for food that is wasted or destroyed."

The resolution warned workers and farmers against permitting food profiteers and speculators to divide and rule them. It also pointed out that the farmer is getting less out of the consumer's food dollar now than he got in 1945, and gave CIO support to help for farmers through credit, rural electrification, soil conservation, crop insurance, and housing, health and soil projects.

$5000 Presented For Korean Work

The National CIO Community Services Committee was commended by the convention for its work of union counseling and its health, welfare and defense programs.

At the same time the convention urged all affiliates not only to aid in developing and promoting its work, but also to help it follow up the military victory in Korea by winning the peace with the aid of the CSC fund for Korean rehabilitation.

On behalf of the CIO, Pres. Philip Murray presented to CSC Chairman Irving Abramson a check for more than $5000 for the committee's work in Korea—a sum representing approximately what would have been expended by the CIO for a banquet. The check was given through Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers.

Abramson explained that, working with the International Committee, the CSC has started raising funds to provide comfort packages for troops in Korea, to aid in Korean relief, and to help the Korean labor movement build strong democratic trade unions.

Support Given Label Campaigns

The CIO convention asked the cooperation of all members in supporting the union label campaigns of various unions, with particular emphasis on those of the Lithographers, Clothing Workers and Paper Workers.

The Clothing Workers have been carrying on an intensive campaign urging CIO members and the public to buy only clothing carrying its union label.

International and local unions and all councils were urged to use CIO-made products in their purchases of printing. One resolution urged the purchase of paper bearing the Paper Workers watermark, and another recommended the use, wherever possible, of the lithographic method of printing and the Lithographers' union label.

'Voluntary' Manpower Solution Asked

THE CONVENTION reaffirms the belief of the CIO that manpower problems during the mobilization period can be dealt with constructively and effectively "only through voluntary cooperation of American labor."

A resolution adopted by the convention declares that workers "are not machines to be pushed around and directed from above. They are responsible citizens in a democracy which must keep strengthening its democratic institutions if it is to win the world-wide struggle against communism and other forms of totalitarianism."

THE resolution suggests adoption of an eight-point program based on experience gained during World War II which should be applied during defense mobilization or if a large-scale war should develop. The program follows:

"1. Manpower problems must be considered in the determination of basic policies on location of plants, allocation of scarce materials, credit controls, placement of war contracts, and selection for service in the military forces.

"2. Organized labor must have adequate representation in policy decisions on such matters.

"3. Men and women will be reluctant to work under substandard conditions and the resultant alleged manpower shortages will be seized upon as an argument for national service legislation, as was done in World War II.

"4. American labor is prepared to cooperate wholeheartedly in national defense. We insist, however, upon proper recognition, conditions and equality of treatment.

"5. Voluntary cooperation of workers through their unions can more effectively solve manpower shortages than coercive measures.

"6. The labor force can be expanded and more efficiently utilized if workers are utilized without prejudice because of race or sex, if jobs are adapted to the special needs of the aged, the handicapped, and mothers available only for part time work.

"7. The labor force is increased and absenteeism and labor turnover are reduced by the provision of adequate community facilities, including decent housing, medical care, day care centers for children, transportation, and so forth.

"8. If left under state control, the public employment offices will not provide an efficient machinery for job placement, and will interfere with the movement of workers to places where they are most needed."

The resolution asks for the immediate return to federally operated unemployment insurance and public employment offices.

However, if Congressional support is lacking for a national system for all the workers, the resolution calls for legislation to establish adequate federal standards on unemployment insurance.

Also favored are adequate appropriations for agencies in charge of employment, unemployment insurance and other phases of the manpower program. The resolution calls for immediate repeal of the Knowland amendment, under which state officials could withhold unemployment compensation from workers who refuse to scab.

Another manpower resolution says that "conscription and service must be limited to the armed forces."

SOME OF THE 127 NEWSPAPERS and radio reporters who covered the CIO convention: They took notes at this press table, and then either wrote or phoned in their stories.

Eleven-Point Program Is Proposed To Rehabilitate U.S. Merchant Marine

AN 11-POINT program for rehabilitation of the U. S. merchant marine was approved by the CIO convention, which pointed out that "positive and constructive" action by Congress is necessary if ship building and repair industries are to be rejuvenated.

It provides for federal appropriations for rebuilding the U. S. passenger line fleet and building fast new cargo vessels, with the modernization and repair of vessels in the reserve fleet.

In addition, the resolution reiterates CIO support for a subsidy program to permit the American merchant marine to compete against low-wage, subsidized foreign competitors, with recapture of the funds if the operations are profitable, and supports full participation by the merchant marine in the transportation of all cargo directly financed by the U. S. government.

The resolution also opposes reconstruction of the German and Japanese merchant fleets; demands that commercial vessels under military control be returned to private ownership, and asks the Truman administration to adopt a realistic policy of training seamen.

It also asks the exemption of seamen from induction into the armed services and enactment of the Merchant Seamen's War Service Act; urges that marine hospital benefits be extended to all seamen, and that social security and unemployment insurance be provided for crews of government-owned vessels.

Congress is asked to forbid by law the transfer of U. S. vessels to foreign flags with a ban on government contracts to ship operators who do not comply, to amend the mutiny statutes, and to revise archaic maritime laws. An end to the financing of lockouts with ship subsidy funds also is requested.

CIO Convention Now Can Be Scheduled Anytime In Last Three Months Of Year

Three sections of the CIO Constitution were amended by the convention upon the recommendation of the Committee on Constitution.

One amendment, which deals with Section 2 of Article VII, setting the date of the annual CIO convention, substitutes the phrase "last quarter of the year" for "months of October or November."

This change will give officers a span of three months rather than two in which to schedule coming conventions.

Another amendment changes Section 1(a) of Article VIII. The section previously stated that each National and International union "shall pay an additional per capita tax of 2c per member per month . . . for the 12 month period commencing with November 1949."

The original purpose of this section was to provide funds to complete the job of reorganizing those organizations which were dominated by Communists. Because the task has not been completed, the committee recommended, and the convention adopted a motion to substitute "1950" for "1949."

The third amendment changes Section 2, Article VIII to provide that "each local industrial union shall pay . . . a per capita tax of $1 per member per month to the CIO. . . ." Their previous per capita tax was 75c per month per member.

This amendment brings the per capita tax of industrial unions more in line with that of CIO international unions and is expected to encourage industrial unions to affiliate with international unions.

Symington Says More Taxes A 'Must'

CHAIRMAN W. Stuart Symington of the National Security Resources Board, told the recent CIO convention that "there are two basic ways to control inflation and all of us are going to make the effort to control the value of the dollar so that we don't blow up from an economic standpoint."

He said additional taxation is one of the methods.

"Additional taxation is going to be hard on everybody but I believe it is necessary in order to reduce the amount of goods available," Symington said.

"We are operating on a full economy at present and when increased military expenditures are applied there will be such an excess demand for goods that it will be necessary to withdraw some of the buying power from the market."

He pointed out that the second step essential to control of an inflationary trend is to increase the supply of goods to the point where it meets the demand.

"That is the greatest way for prices to fall and the greatest way to have full economy and at the same time preserve our way of life," he said.

SYMINGTON stated that at the top policy level "labor has a position right along with industry, agriculture and the public, and I think it is necessary that people in all these segments have a voice in the decisions made by the board."

Referring to the international front, Symington declared that "Point Four and its development is absolutely essential to the security of our nation."

He warned that "regardless of how things work out in Korea, Indo-China, Tibet or Germany, we all realize that the world is never going to be the same again."

"I believe that the basic fight going on in the world is the fight for the minds of men. I believe that democracy can only live when it is sold to the people and it can only be sold to the people by giving them the truth. Democracy has to be sold all over the world, or else we will be isolated, and if we ever become isolated, we will perish," he said.

ICFTU Unit Leaders Convention Visitors

Among the distinguished foreign visitors to the convention were Pres. Marius Madsen and Secy.-Gen. Juul Toulsen, of the World Trade Secretariat of the Food & Drink Workers, an ICFTU industry organization with headquarters in Copenhagen, Denmark.

Madsen and Toulsen were the guests of the CIO Packinghouse Workers, which is affiliated with the secretariat, and while in Chicago conferred with leaders of that union, the CIO Brewery Workers and several AFL unions in the food and beverage industry. They were introduced to CIO Pres. Philip Murray by Michael Ross, secretary of the CIO International Committee, and Dr. Ernst Schwarz, secretary of the Latin-American Affairs Committee. They sat through most of the convention sessions on the platform.

Tobin: No Need To Abandon 40-Hour Week

By WILLIAM WEISS

SECY. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin last week told the 17th National Conference on Labor Legislation that current defense production has not yet reached the point where relaxation of the 40-hour work week is justified.

Should it become necessary, he said, "we will want to work out cooperative operating procedures, to sustain basic labor laws, and to take care of real emergencies when, for brief periods and under certain conditions, hours standards may be relaxed."

Tobin apparently was referring to suggestions from industry sources that the 40-hour week be abandoned.

THE CONFERENCE, made up of state governors' representatives from 40 states, the District of Columbia, Alaska and Puerto Rico, was the largest held since the conference was founded in 1933. Many state CIO officials were designated by governors as representatives of their states.

The nation must maintain its high standards and move forward, Tobin declared.

"Can anyone argue that a free, untired, healthy, vigorous and highly skilled working force is not superior to a slave working force?" Tobin asked. "Should we not be more than ever insistent upon high standards? All of the protections and conservation methods that can be thrown about our producing force will pay dividends in the long haul."

HE SAID the outcome of the struggle between the free world and the slave world may depend upon how well the trained, efficient productive force of this country can out-produce the manpower at the disposal of the aggressors.

"We certainly cannot win unless every American is trained and equipped to give the utmost service," he added. "We rightly boast of our know-how and now is the time to spread that know-how."

REPRESENTATIVES OF CIO were very much in evidence at 17th National Conference on Labor Legislation in Washington. Seated (left to right): Fredrick Klair, vice president, Delaware Council; Harold Shapiro, California Council; Fritz Flebbe, vice president, Louisiana Council; Nathan Cowman, director, CIO Legislative Dept.; Anthony W. Smith, assistant director of Industrial Union Councils; Harry Kranz, legislative director, New Jersey Council; Max Greenberg, New Jersey Council; George L-P Weaver, assistant to the chairman, National Security Resources Board; Katherine Ellickson, assistant CIO research director. Standing (left to right): Neal Edwards, president, Indiana Council; Reg. Dir. Lee Tucker, Arkansas; Tom Owens, Rubber Workers Washington representative; Reg. Dir. Michael Livoda, Colorado; Charles Webber, president, Virginia Council; George Jabar, president, Maine Council; Daniel Gallagher, Connecticut Council; Knox Walker, sub-regional director, Mississippi; Reg. Dir. Robert Starnes, Louisiana; William Kirkland, PAC president, Columbia, S. C., and John Edelman, Textile Workers Washington representative.

Tobin declared that in the current state of affairs, industrial safety and health "assume a new and urgent priority. We simply cannot afford industrial accidents. Every eye that is lost, every arm that is injured, every human body damaged or killed is an asset to those who would destroy us and a calamity for the free countries of the world. We must do our utmost to insure the health and safety of every worker."

He said the immediate need of the nation is to expand defense production as rapidly as possible while at the same time maintaining a high level of civilian production.

"If we are to have total mobilization—a development resting not with us but with the Kremlin—the basic need is plant capacity and adequate trained manpower," he said.

"What we hope to achieve at this moment is a more gradual expansion of our total plant output by adding defense production to civilian production. Thus we enlarge our total trained manpower sufficiently to permit total mobilization if it becomes necessary. This is more practical and sensible than trying suddenly to expand after a crisis is upon us.

"The time and the distance may be long or it may be short. Whatever it is, a free America must and will be ready. No one will coerce us. We will do the job voluntarily and in a spirit of true cooperation."

PRES. TRUMAN, in a message to the conference, said "manpower for defense production is one of the nation's most vital needs in our great effort for peace and against aggression."

"Never more than now is the cooperation of all the people needed for the success of that endeavor," the President said.

He declared that the "wisdom and courageous counsel" of governors' representatives at the meeting are necessary to assure adequate state labor standards "for sustained production over the long pull."

During the opening day session, delegates from several states were asked to comment on progress made in their respective states in the matter of labor legislation.

One of them, Pres. Charles C. Webber of the Virginia CIO Council, declared that in the field of labor legislation "we in Virginia are apparently going backwards rather than forward."

He cited the repeal of the state rent control act and passage of legislation aimed at removing Virginia from any Federal rent control law.

Webber declared that "under domination of the Byrd machine, it is impossible to get any kind of progressive legislation passed in the state." He said that what has happened in Virginia in regard to racial discrimination "should give aid and comfort to the Communists."

He pointed out that because of the state's vicious anti-labor laws, the National Labor Relations Board "cannot come into the state to hold an election."

THE INDUSTRIAL Health and Safety Committee reported progress during the past three years in the development of specialized safety programs for high hazard industries. It said a number of the states have already held or are planning to hold governors' safety conferences following the President's Conference on Industrial Safety.

The Committee on Special Problems of Women and Young Workers called attention to the urgent need of maintaining policies that will conserve manpower resources. It called for participation of women workers in the production effort and recommended expansion of vocational guidance and placement services to young people through public employment services.

The Committee on Labor Standards and Working Conditions said that sound labor standards and good working conditions are basic to good employe morale and high production. It suggested that the defense program can best be served not only by maintaining existing labor standards but by improving working conditions through the strengthening of labor legislation and administration.

The Committee on Training recommended that the promotion of apprenticeship and other types of on-the-job training continue to be carried on on a voluntary basis and that resort to a national service act, whereby workers would be assigned to jobs, be avoided at all costs unless there is total war.

Rumely, Kamp Indicted; Refused To Tell Of 'Angels'

By GERVASE N. LOVE

A COUPLE of the country's brasher apostles of reaction were indicted last week by a federal grand jury in Washington on charges of contempt of Congress.

They were Dr. Edward A. Rumely, presiding genius of the noisy Committee for Constitutional Government, and Joseph P. Kamp, executive vice president of the Constitutional Educational League, Inc.

They had been cited by the House after that body's Lobby Investigating Committee reported they wouldn't come clean with the names of the people who pour an apparently never-ending supply of cash into the propaganda machines they use to fight the battles of the far right-wingers and to oppose the Fair Deal and organized labor.

Since most of the donors are ultra-wealthy Republican industrialists and business leaders, Republican congressmen fought long and loud against citing them.

RUMELY WAS indicted on a similar charge during the 1944 lobby probe. The jury disagreed at his first trial, and a second one freed him. This time he was indicted on eight counts growing out of his refusal to tell the lobby investigating committee who "purchased" large quantities of books and pamphlets of which the CCG was the ostensible publisher.

He had worked out a neat gimmick by virtue of which the CCG and its affiliates accepted gifts only up to $490. Under the Lobby Act these do not have to be reported.

Donors wishing to give larger amounts to help spread the CCG's brand of neo-fascism gave "orders" for CCG books literature to be sent to recipients usually named by Rumely. As "purchases," these likewise did not have to be reported under the Lobby Act, or so Rumely claimed.

The theme of the Rumely publications is that nearly everything which does not increase the wealth and power of the country's wealthiest and most powerful individuals is "socialism," and hence contrary to the American tradition.

Kamp is an admirer of the Nazis, and a blatant anti-Semite and anti-Catholic. He is particularly virulent in his fulminations against the CIO. He got out of jail after belatedly serving four months on a similar charge filed against him after the 1944 lobby probe just in time to catch the current indictment, which includes but one count.

HE POSES as an anti-Communist and when arrested in New York after the indictments were returned in Washington, blurted that he is being prosecuted "because I dared to expose the Communists and their dupes on the government payroll." Like Rumely, he refused to tell the House probers who bought large quantities of the literature he disseminates. But unlike Rumely, his outfit is not registered under the Lobby Act.

Rumely and Kamp enjoyed the distinction of being indicted at the same time as William L. Patterson, executive secretary of the Civil Rights Congress, which has been classified as a Communist-front organization by the Attorney General. Patterson also refused to produce records the Lobby Committee asked for.

Also indicted at the same time on charges of contempt for refusing to answer questions before the Senate sub-committee investigating Sen. Joseph McCarthy's (R. Wis.) charges of Communism in the State Dept. were Earl Browder, former Communist Party chairman in the United States; Frederick Vanderbilt Field, registered agent for Communist China financial interests, and Philip J. Jaffe, former editor of Amerasia magazine, who was convicted in 1945 on a charge of conspiring to steal government documents.

All six were released in bail of $1500 each to await trial.

There Should Be Lots Of 'Beefing'

The Agriculture Dept. is going to upgrade all beef cuts, effective Dec. 31, just to make it more confusing for people on a budget

No reason was given for the change, which was announced last week.

But, starting Jan. 1, "prime" and "choice" will both be called prime, and the present "good" grade will be called "choice." A new grade, from the upper crust of those presently called "commercial" will be called "good," the rest will be still called "commercial."

Looks like the Agriculture Dept. is pointing the way for meat merchants to make more profit on the same cuts of meat, in case price control, so-called, is imposed under the new and as yet untried law.

Women's Status Bill Given Endorsement

The Women's Status Bill as opposed to the so-called Equal Rights Amendment, was endorsed by the CIO convention in a resolution urging all government agencies to apply the principle of equal treatment for women.

CIO affiliates were asked to cooperate with the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination in special efforts to overcome discrimination against women on the job, and to continue striving to protect the seniority, up-grading, pay, layoffs and other job rights of women by writing these terms into union contracts. Encouragement of active participation of women in unions was also urged.

Chemical Workers Get Birthdate Holidays

Each of the 175 employes of the Plastic Manufacturing Co. at Stamford, Conn., will get a paid holiday on his birthday under a new contract obtained by the CIO Chemical Workers.

Red Unions Meet, Plan 'Informal' Apparatus

SOME 500 spiritless representatives of the unions kicked out of the CIO because of their Communist domination held what they called a National Labor Conference in Washington last week.

They sought to cheer up each other with speeches aimed at convincing them they amount to something in the American labor movement. In conformity with past practice, they parroted the proposal of Pres. Harry Bridges, of the Longshoremen, that they not set up a third labor federation "like the AFL or the CIO" at this time, but establish an "informal" apparatus. His suggestion for a joint meeting of the executive boards of the bodies involved was approved with the same lackadaisical celerity.

They also launched a petition campaign for four points of a nine-point legislative program. These are general wage increases, no wage freeze, price control with price rollbacks and enactment of an excess profits tax with a lower bracket income tax cut.

The other points: Taft-Hartley Act repeal, McCarran-Mundt-Nixon-Wood Act repeal, FEPC, Magnusson Act repeal and defense of victims of anti-labor "frame-ups," the last referring to Bridges, convicted of perjury for swearing he was not a Communist, and leaders of the discredited United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers under or facing indictment.

Secy.-Treas. Julius Emspak and James Matles, organizational director of UE, were conspicuous by their absence—an absence reputedly caused by UE's desire to hang on to the dwindling number of non-Communist members it still has left. But three UE district officers were among the sponsors—Ernest DeMaio, James McLeish and Grant Oakes. Other sponsors, besides Bridges, were Secy.-Treas. Maurice Travis of Mine, Mill; Pres. Ben Gold of Fur & Leather; Pres. Hugh Bryson of the Marine Cooks & Stewards; Pres. Arthur Osman of the Distributive, etc., Workers; Pres. Joseph Selly of the American Communications Association, and Pres. Abram Flexer of the Public Workers.

Potofsky Gets Point 4 Post

Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the CIO Clothing Workers and chairman of the CIO International and Latin American Affairs Committees, last week was appointed a member of the Advisory Board on International Development, which is in charge of the Point Four program.

Nelson Rockefeller recently was named chairman of the board. Also named to the board from labor was Lewis G. Hines, special representative of the AFL. Others appointed include Dr. Thomas Parran, former surgeon general of the U. S., and Margaret A. Hickey, educator, lawyer and business woman and former president of the National Federation of Business & Professional Women.

UAW Local Pensions Club House Janitor

Local 662 of the CIO Auto Workers, in General Motors' lamp division at Anderson, Ind., can't be accused of not practicing what it preaches.

Last spring it went on strike along with other GM locals. Pensions were among the objectives of the walkout, which ended in a victory. Their own problem settled, Local 662 members looked around and found Bill Massey, custodian of their club house since it began operations about 15 years ago, ready to retire.

So they voted to pay him a pension based on the GM contract. He's collecting it now and operating a tourist court at Pensacola, Fla., where the winters are not so tough on a man 68 years old.

Overseas Air Safety Fight Endorsed By CIO

In a resolution condemning the drive to eliminate communications equipment and personnel essential to safety on overseas flight, the convention censured the airlines and pledged support to the fight to maintain high safety standards lauched by flight radio officers.

It demanded that the Civil Aeronautics Board require all U. S. flag overseas craft to carry equipment and personnel capable of transmitting messages on the international distress frequency.

"I shoulda known that you can't ignore a union man's rights!"

Sugar Workers Given Minimum Wage Raise

An increase in the minimum wage rate for the sugar industry in Puerto Rico from 40c to 55c an hour was proposed Nov. 28 by F. Granville Grimes, Jr., acting administrator of the Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Division of the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

The rate will become effective in 15 days unless interested parties file written objections. The industry is one of the island's most important. It employes some 15,000 workers, most of them members of the General Confederation of Labor, which is affiliated with the CIO.

Charity Is Given Most By Those With Least

AN EXCUSE often made for the big incomes received by wealthy people is that they give away large sums for "do-good" causes. Now comes an extensive and factual report made public recently by the Russell Sage Foundation which reveals the little-known fact that the poor are really the biggest givers.

The report shows that in the last 20 years, more than 60% of the total amount given for philanthropic purposes came from very low income groups. F. Emerson Andrews, a member of the Russell Sage staff for 20 years, was in charge of the survey, which required two years.

Contrary to popular impression, Andrews points out, "low-income families, because of their great numbers, contribute by far the largest portion of total philanthropic giving."

FOR EXAMPLE, in 1943, the report states that 82% of the total contributions came from families with annual incomes under $5000, while more than 60% came from those with incomes below $3000. These contributions constituted 2.4% of the total net income of families in the $5000 class and 1.9% of the income of those with incomes under $3000.

The stingiest givers, the report reveals, are those whose net income is between $10,000 and $20,000.

The total amount contributed to all philanthropic purposes, including gifts to churches, community chests, educational institutions, welfare agencies and other charities, was nearly four times higher in 1949 than in 1929, rising from more than one billion to four billion in 20 years.

ABOUT 90% of the amount given in 1949 came from living donors. The highest percentage of income contributed by any one donor was 12%, given by a person with a net income of $8000.

The study found that 74% of the total income for all philanthropic purposes came from individuals; 4% from charitable bequests; 5% from corporations; 3% from foundations, 14% from income from capital, except foundations.

In recent years, about 50% of the private donations have gone to religious groups. The latter includes not only church support but also hospitals, old peoples' homes, orphanages, foreign relief agencies and other religious charitable institutions.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The recently adjourned 12th Constitutional Convention of the CIO was a great event. Conspicuous by its absence was the totalitarian brigade. The CIO in the past year has more than made up the loss and has increased its overall membership.

Allan Haywood

Pres. Murray in his skilled manner performed a wonderful job in presiding over the convention and his message was inspired. It was his tenth anniversary as the leader of our great organization, and the attending delegates in many ways showed their appreciation for the service of a great leader of a great team.

Michael Quill, president of the Transport Workers Union-CIO, was elected one of the vice presidents of the National CIO.

The resolve was made to continue the important and vital task of organizing the unorganized by everyone in attendance, and that is our important aim of 1951.

The election results have not daunted the workers, as expressed by the delegates in their support of the Political Action Committee, at the convention.

The organizational staff gave Pres. Murray a banquet in honor of his anniversary. They presented him with a bond and it was his desire that the bond be turned over to a worthy charitable institution, which will be done in his name. All in all it was a great week for the CIO and America. Looking forward to meeting you all with greater results and achievements a year from now.

The writer attended a splendid gathering of Div. 20, Communications Workers, on Nov. 26 in St. Louis, Mo. Those in attendance received their officers' reports and the results of the recent strike enthusiastically. These telephone workers know "Ma Bell," and they intend to continue to make their union strong. The CWA has been a great asset to the CIO since its affiliation, already being the fifth largest union. Great opportunities are still present in this field.

The Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers (IUE)-CIO, has made tremendous gains in the past year. It is holding its first constitutional convention in Milwaukee, Wis., beginning Dec. 4th.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, Intl. Woodworkers, reports the following representation elections: Halsey Hardwood Co., Edenton, N. C., IWA-CIO 69, no union 28, void 1; McGuire Sales Co., Cosmopolis, Wash., IWA-CIO 10, AFL 5, spoiled 1; Vulcan Co., Antigo, Wis., IWA-CIO 104, no union 56; Hillyer-Deutsch-Edwards, Oakdale, La., IWA-CIO 298, AFL 238; Gladstone Boom, Gladstone, Ore., IWA 2, no union 0.

The following union shop elections were also reported: Michigan Pole & Tie Co., for 25, against 2; Newberry Mills, Newberry, Mich., for 24, against 2; Aloha Logging Co., Aloha, Wash., for 100, against 0; Jastad's Camp, Mayfield, Wash., for 43, against 6.

Field Rep. Albert Haywood reports that in a representation election at the Whitewater Manufacturing Co., Whitewater, Wis., CIO Local Industrial Union 1749 was victorious by a vote of 42 in favor of CIO, 23 against and 2 challenged.

Asst. State Dir. William Henderson reports that in a union shop election at the Roanoke Ice and Cold Storage Co., Roanoke, Va., the workers voted unanimously in favor of the Gas, Coke and Chemical Workers-CIO.

CIO Reg. Dir. James Leary reports that in a union shop election at the American Optical Co., St. Joseph, Mo., Optical & Instrument Workers of America Local 1258 was victorious by a vote of: for 6, against 0. The organizational work was done by the officers and members of Local 1258.

Reg. Dir. Ben Henry reports that in a representation election at Luggage, Inc., Des Moines, Iowa, the workers voted in favor of the Textile Workers Union by a vote of TWUA 25, no union 23. Intl. Rep. Howard Berge and Pres. Ralph Fetters, Local 312, TWUA-CIO, were in charge.

Al Hartnett, assistant to the chairman of IUE-CIO, reports that in a representation election at the Bay State Steel Co., Lynn, Mass., the workers voted in favor of the IUE-CIO by a vote of 14 to 0 for no union.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that in a representation election at the U. S. Steel Supply Co., Baltimore, Md., the workers voted in favor of the United Steelworkers CIO by 32 USA-CIO, 4 against.

Reg. Dir. John Maurillo reports CIO victorious in two union shop elections: C. H. Stuart Cosmetics, Newark, N. Y., 123 for 7 against; and C. H. Stuart Silver Counselor, Newark, N. Y., 48 for, 0 against. Field Rep. Peter Aversa conducted the campaigns.

Secy.-Treas. John C. Lawson, United Stone and Allied Products Workers, reports that USAPWA won a union shop election at the Staso Milling Co., Pembine, Wis. by the following vote: 63 eligible; 56 for; 5 against. Intl. Rep. Robert W. Kurtz was in charge of the campaign.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShelter reports that the United Furniture Workers—CIO won a representation election at the Jonas Furniture Co., Los Angeles, Calif., by a vote of UFW-CIO 28, independent 18. Intl. Rep. William Gilbert was in charge of the campaign.

FTC Probes Video Snob Ad

The Federal Trade Commission is going to look into that television advertisement, the one headed, "There are some things a son or daughter won't tell you."

The government regulatory bureau has sent letters to 22 television manufacturers and to Ruthrauf & Ryan, the New York advertising agency which is handling the television campaign. FTC spokesmen said the bureau would try to "determine the truth or falsity of statements and representations" appearing in the ad.

After it appeared, the ad came under fire from religious, educational and consumer groups and from many individuals. It was denounced as an appeal to class consciousness because it suggested that children in homes without television would be unwanted, unloved social outcasts.

The ad, first of a series, was sponsored by the 1950 American Television Dealers & Manufacturers. The FTC said it was acting because of the volume of complaints by parents and educators. The bureau is empowered to call a halt to false and misleading advertising, but its orders can be appealed to the courts. LPA

Merry Christmas For Toy Workers

More than 10,000 toy and doll workers in New York City have won a 10c raise in a contract signed by the CIO Toy & Novelty Workers with the Nat'l Association of Doll Manufacturers and the Stuffed Toy Manufacturers Ass'n. The agreement, running to 1954, grants an additional five cents in January, 1952 and another in March, 1953. On top of that, each time the cost-of-living index rises four points, there will be another five-cent raise.

Senate Body Gags But Votes More Rent Control

THE SENATE Banking Committee on Nov. 29 considered rent control in a closed-door session, groaned, and brought forth a proposed resolution stretching by two months the present Dec. 31 deadline for "local option" continuance.

If the resolution, reluctantly approved by the committee, gets by the Senate, the effect will be to give incorporated communities until next Feb. 28 to decide if they want federal controls continued until June 30.

The committee members, headed by Sen. Maybank (D. S. C.), obviously didn't want to do even this much. Their reason for doing it was, for the most part, their confidence that when the new Congress meets in January, it will refuse to pass any further rent control legislation whatsoever. The two-month deadline extension gives just enough time for the new Senate and House Banking Committees to hold hearings on the entire law.

President Truman had asked that the deadline be extended till March 31, and also that the House Expediter be given the power to slap controls back on in areas surrounding military camps. (The present law says OHE may recontrol only where it previously lifted controls on its own motion. Once the community itself has decontrolled, however, nobody can do anything about it.)

The House committee is expected to follow suit, although there is a bare chance it may go for the March 31 date. The Senate resolution will come up sometime this week, and it is in for a tough floor fight. Many of the Senators won't even go that far.

One community that would unquestionably benefit by the extension is Los Angeles, whose City Council last June passed a decontrol resolution which was fought in and out of court all summer and fall. A fortnight ago the decision finally went against the council order, and this time it stuck.

(What happened was that Tighe Woods, head of OHE, refused to sign the decontrol order on the grounds that the City Council had not lived up to the letter of the law, which requires full and well-publicized hearings and the consideration of evidence as to whether or not a housing shortage continues to exist. A lower court, at the request of a Los Angeles landlord named Frank W. Babcock, told Woods he had no right to inquire into just how the City Council had reached its decision, but the Court of Appeals reversed the lower court and Woods' decision stuck.)

LOS ANGELES landlords then decided to sit back and wait till Jan. 1, when rent control would be a dead duck anyway, since there was no chance of a council vote to extend controls beyond Dec. 31. The extension of the deadline until Feb. 28, however, would mean another two months of rent controls. Even more important in the Los Angeles situation, it would bring the issue up in the middle of City Council election campaigns.

The total number of communities which have voted to ask continuance of controls till June 30 now stands at about 700, with a total population of 22 million. The number of rental units involved is about 3.1 million. Great efforts are being made in other cities and towns to secure council action.

In Detroit, Pontiac, Mich.; Akron, San Francisco, Charleston, W. Va., and Baltimore, CIO Councils are active in pressing for extension. In all these places they are prepared to get thousands of signatures on petitions for referendums, if necessary.

WOOING THE SENATE Banking Committee, none too successfully, on behalf of improved rent control, were W. Stuart Symington (left), chairman of the National Security Resources Board, and Tighe Woods (standing), head of the Office of the Housing Expediter. They talked a long while about the need for keeping down the cost of living. But Chairman Burnet Maybank (right), of the Senate committee, turned thumbs down on anything but extending the deadline of the present "local option" rent control law.

Catching Chickens Before, Etc., Dept.

Frank W. Babcock, the Los Angeles landlord who just lost his court tussle with rent control, said in his legal brief that nasty old Washington was keeping him from raising his rents around 18 to 20%.

Turns out he was issuing a mild understatement. He was so sure he was going to win that he told his tenants, in the 104 rental units he owns, that effective Dec. 1, their rents would go up—from 90 to 100% in some instances.

One tenant wrote to the Office of the Housing Expediter and said Babcock had told her the rent would go from $51.75 to $85 a month, an increase of 64%. Since her husband earned only $250 a month, she said, they could not stand such an increase and would have to move—if they could find a place.

Senate Unit To Examine Political Smear Literature

THE SENATE Elections subcommittee is lifting the lid on a number of odoriferous Senate political campaigns, now that the results are in, and—if it can stand the stench—may decide that "remedial legislation" is needed.

Complaints have poured in from several states, enclosing samples of campaign literature used against candidates. (The only one brought by a Republic organization is the comic book used against Sen. Robert A. Taft (R. O.), which accused him of being unwilling to stand on his record.)

From Maryland, Utah, and North Carolina, bundles of offensive literature have been received, all seeking to smear candidates, especially liberals, with the Red brush. They were used against Sens. Tydings (D. Md.), Graham (D. N. C.) and Elbert Thomas (D. Utah), all of whom were defeated. They are very much alike, almost as though they had been dreamed up by the same minds and run off the same presses.

IN MARYLAND, for instance, a fake picture was circulated, showing Tydings aparently standing next to and cordially talking with Communist Earl Browder. Actually, the photo was a combination of two others, carefully pasted together. This was the only sample specifically described, but the rest was classed as "disgraceful — deceptive — unjust" by the committee staff.

Sen. Gillette (D. Ia.), sub-committee chairman, emphasized that there was no question of trying to upset election results—that the committee would simply decide if old laws had been violated or new ones were needed.

The committee also is investigating campaign expenditures, with a view toward shaping a "more realistic" law. The present law limits the amount candidates may individually spend, but says nothing about expenditure by separate committees established to help the candidate.

On the House side, complaints of campaign irregularities have been received from Ohio, Indiana, New York, and Tennessee.

Parley On Children Opens In Washington

The Mid-Century White House Conference on Children and Youth, the result of two years of preparatory work by more than 100,000 persons in all parts of the country, is being held this week in Washington.

It is seeking to determine what can be done to help every child and young person in the country get a fair chance to develop a healthy personality. A long list of distinguished speakers headed by President Truman includes Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers; Leo Perlis, director of the CIO Community Services Committee, and Donald E. Montgomery, of the UAW Washington staff.

Steelmakers All Alike—Canada Short, Too

Canada's steel situation is grim, because the industry has refused to expand. There was a shortage after World War II, and the steelmakers have done nothing about it.

In December, 1948, C. D. Howe, then Minister of Reconstruction, said Canada was producing 3,000,000 tons a year, and needed 4,000,000. In January, 1949, Babson's Canadian Reports said "steel is still the main bottleneck of national productivity." In May, 1949, the government shelved plants for expanding the industry, on assurance by producers they were increasing capacity.

Between 1939 and 1949 the government subsidized the industry to the tune of $51,776,438.65. In addition, the government permitted accelerated depreciation to three firms of $14,128,447.40 between 1939 and 1946. In the same period steel profits totalled $58,981,586.

SERVICE AWARD: In recognition of CIO Shoe Workers assistance rendered the American Federation of the Physically Handicapped, Mildred Scott, Federation secretary, presents an award certificate to Secy. James J. Mitchell of the Shoe Workers. Federation Pres. Paul Strachan is at left. The CIO convention supported training for the handicapped.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 11, 1950 82 No. 50

OPENING THE FIRST convention of the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers in the Municipal Auditorium at Milwaukee, Wis., last week, Administrative Chairman James B. Carey, who later was elected first president of the union, stands before a huge backdrop made up of composite photographs taken at local union meetings. Shown on the stage are (left to right) Harold (Pat) Martin, of Local 320, Syracuse; CIO Regional Director F. J. Michel; H. Richard Carter, special representative of the IUE-CIO national office; Pres. Herman Steffes of the Wisconsin CIO Council and Rev. Raymond A. McGowan, director of the social action department of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, who gave the invocation. See story on Page 7.

Press, Radio 'Blackout' Of CIO Revealed

FRANZ DANIEL, CIO Organizing Committee director of North Carolina, told a Senate Labor subcommittee in Washington last week that newspapers and radio stations of Anderson, S. C., "blacked out" the CIO Textile Workers side of the story during an organizational drive.

He said the two mediums "were effectively closed when we tried to reply to the campaign of fear conducted against the union during the time we were trying to organize the Orr Cotton mill."

Following Daniel's testimony, subcommittee Chairman Murray (D. Mont.) ordered subpenas issued for the following Anderson residents who had ignored an invitation to attend the committee sessions:

Wilton E. Hall, owner of Anderson radio station WAIM and editor of the town's two newspapers, the Daily Mail and the Independent; J. J. Lyon, Jr., vice president of M. Lowenstein & Sons and general superintendent of the Orr Mill; J. Leland Meeks, secretary of the Anderson Citizens Committee, and Z. M. Meeks, secretary of the Anderson Chamber of Commerce.

DANIEL related how he wrote to the Chamber of Commerce prior to the time the organizing drive started, explaining that due to requests from workers at the Orr Mill, the CIO was coming into town. He said he received an inflamatory letter in reply, telling him to "stay out of Anderson—we don't need the CIO here."

When TWUA began the campaign and sought to purchase newspaper space in which to answer charges made by the Anderson Citizens Committee, it was refused as was time on the radio, Daniel said. The newspaper's advertising manager told him that Hall had given orders that no CIO advertising was to be accepted.

A series of exhibits presented to the committee by Daniel showed how various community groups tried to establish an "anti-union atmosphere" in Anderson while the CIO was unable to get "one word of protest before the public."

CAUSE FOR CELEBRATION: These three Ford Motor Co. employes are among the more than 600,000 motor industry workers who will get a 3c an hour pay increase under the terms of CIO Auto Workers contracts. Every time the Bureau of Labor Statistics price index rises 1.14 points pay is increased 1c. These three are reading the good news. Raise is effective in the first December pay period. Ford and GM announced price hikes last week.

Rise In Auto Prices Called Inflation Aid

GOVERNMENT controls to stop "runaway inflation" were demanded by the CIO Auto Workers following announcement of price boosts on new models by General Motors and Ford Motor Co.

GM said price increases on 1951 Chevrolets, Oldsmobiles, Buicks, Pontiacs, and Cadillacs would be "something less than 5%." Ford price jumps will range from $87.50 (7%) for the Ford business coupe to $185 (5%) for the Lincoln Cosmopolitan convertible. Six weeks ago Ford said it planned "to hold the price line."

Walter P. Reuther, UAW president, called the rises "totally unjustified and unnecessary" and said they "underscored the need for decisive action by the government to stop runaway inflation and protect the living standards of the American people."

He contended companies can absorb material and labor costs and still make record profits. Reuther also warned that auto makers were touching off "a new inflationary spiral" which would spread to other producers.

C. E. Wilson, GM president, said the increase was due to higher costs of materials and labor—he didn't mention that his company made more money in the first nine months of this year than it did in any previous full year.

IN TESTIMONY prepared for a Senate-House controls "watchdog" committee, Reuther said that government credit controls are a "rich man's" racket that impose their burden upon low income groups "that can least afford to carry it."

The so-called regulation was imposed by the Federal Reserve Board as an anti-inflation move under the economic controls law. It requires purchasers of automobiles and other items to pay one-third down and the balance in 15 months.

"But it leaves the well-to-do and the wealthy free to keep feeding the fires of inflation by spending as usual," Reuther declared.

He said the regulation "makes practically no sense . . . when looked at in the light of the total mobilization job we have to do."

"It will throw thousands of people out of work for whom no defense jobs are yet available. It will disrupt the labor force of many plants, forcing them later to recruit labor when defense contracts come along."

Retail, Wholesale Food Prices Rise Again

RETAIL FOOD prices increased .7% from Oct. 30 to Nov. 15, it was reported last week by the Bureau of Labor Statistics which announced during the previous week that its consumers' price index soared to an all-time high on Oct. 15.

The retail food prices constitute but one factor in the consumers' price index, but make a day-by-day dent in the housewife's purse.

BLS reported further that prices were higher for 28 foods, lower for 20, and there was no change in two, but food prices will continue to climb—the index for Nov. 15 was estimated at 209.5 or 2.2% above June 15. Record high was 216.8 in July, 1948.

Fruits and vegetable prices in eight cities rose 7.2%. There were slight increases in cereals, bakery products, dairy products, fats and oils. Eggs, coffee, meats (which BLS reported in announcing the consumers' price index were undergoing a seasonal price slump), poultry, fish and sugar dropped slightly.

Biggest increases since June 15 were eggs (36.4%), coffee (12.4%), dairy products (10%) and fats and oils (9%). The cities surveyed were Atlanta, Boston, Chicago, Columbus, New York, Richmond, San Francisco and Washington.

As if that were not enough Dun and Bradstreet reported that its wholesale food price-index jumped last week to $6.77, highest in 27 months. The index is the sum of the price per pound of 31 foods in general use.

The index has climbed 14% since the start of the Korean war. The all time high was set July 13, 1948, at $7.36.

Close Trust Loophole, Is Advice Of 4

Donald Montgomery, Washington representative of the CIO Auto Workers, recently joined with spokesmen for three other organizations in seeking to close one of the major loopholes in the anti-trust laws.

The group wrote Sen. Estes Kefauver (D. Tenn.) urging him to press for Senate passage at this session of HR 2734, the so-called merger bill.

Kefauver was told that enactment of the bill is more necessary now than before "with monopoly increasing by leaps and bounds."

"Great corporations are securing control of industry after industry. Little business is being put out of business. Farmers are being forced to pay monopoly prices and big industry is using its enormous economic power to take over the entire economic life of the nation," the group said.

It was pointed out that under present law corporations may escape one of the main purposes of the Clayton Anti-Trust Act by buying up the physical assets of a company, even though the effect is substantially to lessen competition.

In addition to Montgomery, other signers were George Nelson, Machinists; Wallace J. Campbell, Cooperative League of USA, and Angus McDonald, National Farmers Union.

Steel Union Urges Action To Save Non-Ferrous Mines

A DELEGATION of the CIO Steelworkers from the large non-ferrous mining areas of the country has received assurances from the U. S. Bureau of Mines that the government is preparing programs to make maximum use of the nation's mining resources.

Concerned about the increasing shortage of copper, lead and zinc, the Steelworkers took the lead in arranging a meeting with James Boyd, Director of the Bureau of Mines.

The union's aim was to determine what could be done under the new Defense Production Act to help many copper, lead and zinc mines that have been either shut down or on the verge of being shut down.

The group was headed by Nick Zonarich, International Representative, and included George Haycock and Gene Sari of the upper Michigan region, Mathew Lahey and Donald Weierman from the Utah area; Frank N. Hoffman, Wahington representative of the Steelworkers, and Everett M. Kassalow, CIO liaison representative with the National Security Resources Board staff.

The union representatives pointed out that early last spring, the Steelworkers had urged the passage by the Congress of an appropriate conservation and development program which would preserve and protect the basic non-ferrous mining strength of the country.

Much valuable time has already been lost and the union is seeking assurance that those programs can now go forward under the Defense Production Act.

DELAY experienced in getting on with this program has already resulted in the loss of many miners to other industries. Quick action is necessary, the group stated, "if we are to get any of the smaller marginal mines back on a sound footing and encourage much needed new exploration and development throughout the industry."

Officials of the Bureau of Mines indicated great interest and sympathy with the Steelworkers' presentation. They stated that they were shaping various programs which they felt would cover most of the situation described by the delegation.

Boyd agreed that under the Defense Production Act funds might be available for purchase by the federal government of the output of some marginal or sub-marginal mines at above market price if necessary. Funds also would be available to aid some companies with new exploration and development work, as well as to purchase needed equipment.

NEW PRICE CHIEF

Michael DiSalle, who was elected Mayor of Toledo, O., with labor support, has been appointed by President Truman as Director of Price Stabilization. This photo was taken as he testified before the Senate Banking Committee, which recommended that the Senate confirm him.

GETS FEDERAL POST

President Truman has nominated John W. Gibson to be a member of the Displaced Persons Commission. Gibson is a former Assistant Secy. of Labor and one-time president of the Michigan CIO Council.

Future Of U.S. Youth Discussed By 5500 At D. C. Conference

YOUTH held the spotlight in Washington last week. The occasion was the Midcentury White House Conference on Children and Youth.

Labor had a voice in the discussion. Symbolic of the recognition given unions was a huge photomural on the stage of the National Armory, where the sessions were held. The property of the CIO Auto Workers, it was a dramatic picture of children, looking upwards expectantly.

The 5500 delegates attending the conference participated in 31 panel sessions during the four days of the conference, and gathered every evening to hear a main speaker. All aspects of the youth question were gone into exhaustively, from techniques of infant care to employment opportunities for college graduates.

The possibility of war, and the realities of taxes, the draft and the international crisis were constantly present as the delegates met. President Truman addressed the conference on its opening day and minced no words on the dangers of the present situation.

BUT IF ONE aspect of the complex question dominated the conference more than any other, it was the status of public and private education in the United States. The school system took a pasting from a series of experts and from the students themselves.

The criticisms were familiar, but the emphasis was newly impressive. Schools, the conference found, were inadequate, teachers were underpaid and unsatisfactory, curricula were unrealistic and dull, opportunities were unequal and the general level of education was too low.

A number of union officials participated in panel sessions. Space does not allow quotation from all of them, but here are some highlights:

Harry Kranz, educational director of the New Jersey CIO, advocated inviting officials of labor and management to speak before high school classes on the problem of job opportunities.

Olga McGee of CIO Auto Workers said the automobile industry prefers to hire workers between the ages of 25 and 35 and does not give young people 18 to 21 a chance at jobs. Other delegates pointed out that many employers have refused to hire youngsters eligible for the draft.

Samuel Jacobs, also of the Auto Workers, who was leader of the group on inadequate incomes, said that the unions are playing an increasingly important role in enriching the lives of families and their members and that these services are particularly important to unskilled and semi-skilled workers who earn low incomes.

He also pointed to the psychological benefit to families in giving them a sense of belonging to a group.

Kenneth Kramer of the CIO Textile Workers declared that CIO is in "the front line of the economic battles of our time to raise the general standards of living and is not concerned only with the financial interests of our own members."

CIO has supported programs which would reduce the "inadequacies of our present social security program," he said, and has called for passage of disability insurance programs, adequate unemployment compensation insurance, and national health insurance.

"WE SHOULD have an understanding of the problems of the children and the family as well. We should try to insure high wages, full employment, adequate social security and benefits for all segments of our people," he said.

Donald Montgomery, Washington legislative representative of the CIO Auto Workers, warned that in estimating the effect of the war on health services and other needs of children "we completely underestimate the productive power of this country." The mobilization program is in bad shape, he said, and citizens must rally to correct it.

Leo Perlis, executive director of the CIO Community Services Committee, expressed concern for raising family income. Perlis suggested more labor unions and more collective bargaining, more equitable tax legislation and further social legislation. He said we must change our incentives and stress the personal values to be gained from cooperative efforts.

THIS PHOTOMURAL, the property of the CIO Auto Workers, was prominently displayed on the stage at the National Armory, at the Mid-century White House Conference on Children and Youth. The original photo by Esther Budley was taken on film two-and-a-half inches square and was blown up to 20 feet by 27 feet. Conference, attended by 5500, lasted four days.

Boss Jailed In Wage-Hour Law Breach

Philip Elgeizer has started serving a six-month term for violating the federal wage-hour law. He is the first defendant in New York state to go to jail for such an offense.

He was sentenced on pleading guilty to criminal contempt of court, and was ordered to pay $542.53 in back pay and interest to five of his 16 women employes. He failed to comply with an injunction issued in 1942 ordering him to pay the then legal minimum wage of 40c, pay overtime, and stop falsifying his records.

He was then forced to pay $214 in back wages. A second inspection in 1949 revealed he was still defying the law, hiring young girls and elderly women, some over 70, and paying them as little as 20c an hour. He runs the only dress factory in Petersburg, a community of 900 in Rensselaer County, N. Y.

CP Admits It Is Really In Bad Way

It is not news that the Communist Party of the U. S. is in a bad way.

But it is news when the party admits it.

The admission of the party's failure is included in a report of the CP's national committee to the party's biennial convention, which is scheduled to be held in New York City Dec. 28-30.

The report bemoans "the very marked tendencies toward liquidating the party. It continues:

"It is present in the low dues payments as well as in the impermissibly low sale of literature. Basically, these liquidation tendencies rise from retreat before the many new problems placed in our way by the enemy."

Cross-Section To Be On Air Soon

CROSS-SECTION USA—in expanded form—will be back on the air again soon, with CIO participating.

Dwight Cooke will be moderator of the Cross-Section show, which will be staged by the Columbia Broadcasting System and carried on the CBS network throughout the country.

First program of the new series will go on the air at 4:30 p.m. EST Saturday, Dec. 30. The show will be aired regularly each Saturday afternoon at 4:30 EST, 3:30 CST, 2:30 in the Mountain time zone and 1:30 on the Pacific Coast.

In some cases local CBS stations will record the program and put it on the air after regular broadcast time.

PLANS, ALTHOUGH not complete, call for union, business and farm organization representatives all over the country to appear on Cross-Section, which will be keyed to the important problems of the day.

At certain intervals, perhaps once a month, the usual program format will be altered so a forum discussion on important events can be broadcast from Washington or New York City.

Organizations which will provide most of the talent for the broadcasts are the CIO, AFL, Chamber of Commerce and Natl. Association of Manufacturers.

The programs, beginning Dec. 30, will last for 30 minutes, instead of 15 as in the past year.

(CIO councils and local unions should contact the CBS station in their area immediately and ask that Cross-Section be put on the air if it is not already scheduled.)

Philadelphia Teachers Will Get $200 Raise

All Philadelphia teachers will receive a $200 yearly raise effective Jan. 1, 1951 and other school system employes will get $100 to $200. An additional $200 will go to about 70% of the teachers next July to bring them up to new minimums.

New salary schedules will be as follows: Teachers without a college degree, $4000; with a degree, $4400; with a master's degree, $4800.

Stop Combining Corn To Make 'Hay'—FTC

The Federal Trade Commission has put its official foot down on corn. It's not the kind of corn purveyed by some radio comedians—this is the real McCoy.

Nine corn derivative manufacurers and seven of their sales subsidiaries have been ordered by FTC to "cease and desist from entering into or cooperating in any agreement" to fix prices for their products. Manufacturers cited in the order are:

Corn Products Refining Co., New York City; A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., Decatur, Ill.; Clinton Foods, Inc., St. Louis, Mo.; Anheuser-Busch, Inc., St. Louis, Mo.; Union Starch & Refining Co., Columbus, Ind.; Penick & Ford, Ltd., Columbus, Ind.; American Maize-Products Co., New York City; The Hubinger Co., Keokuk, Iowa; and National Starch Products, Inc., N.Y.C.

Let's Quit Throwing Rocks At Each Other

Problems Created By Red Aggression In Orient Much More Important Than Our Purely Partisan Differences

By ALLAN L. SWIM

THE SIMPLE — and ineffective — thing to do is to try to find a scapegoat to blame for the mess in which we find ourselves.

During the election campaign some Republican politicians tried to convince the people that Secy. of State Dean Acheson was responsible for our international difficulties.

Immediately after the election some of the same politicians tried to place the blame on President Truman.

We wouldn't be fighting in Korea, some of them said or intimated, "If the Administration hadn't coddled the communists."

Yes, McCarthyism was being worked overtime up to the very day the Chinese Communists began tearing into the UN battle lines in North Korea.

And little effort was being made by the GOP noise boys to place the blame squarely where it belonged—on Joe Stalin and his gang of international cut-throats.

WE'RE REALLY in a mess, and make no mistake about it. We're facing problems as serious as those which confronted us after we were attacked at Pearl Harbor.

There's one big difference:

Back in 1941 we knew we were in an all-out war and that we wouldn't survive unless we worked together and did our very best.

Today we don't know whether we're in a little or big war. We don't know whether the shooting in Korea is the main show or the sideshow.

We don't know whether the Reds will strike next in Europe or whether they'll strike again anywhere.

And we in the United States won't be the ones who'll decide what happens next.

The Communists—not the Truman Administration—are calling the shots. They're the ones who will decide whether the world will be engulfed in war.

WE OUGHT to try to be realistic about the situation and not spend so much time throwing rocks at each other.

Russia began her expansion program soon after the close of World War II. Since then the Commies have taken over a big chunk of Europe and all of China.

The Commies started an aggressive war in Korea. Chinese Commies thrust themselves into the conflict.

And for months the Reds have been waging a "little" war in Indo-China.

There is nothing in the record even to indicate that Russia is interested in peace. There is nothing to indicate Russia is about to abandon her program of expansion.

Russia has defied the United Nations. She has defied the United States. She has defied our allies.

So, isn't it extremely silly to say that Truman and Acheson are to blame for our mess?

And wouldn't it be ridiculous to continue fighting among ourselves when we're facing a major crisis?

YES, WE'RE in a mess—a bad one—and we ought to quit kidding ourselves about it.

We—all of us—should get our heads together and try to work out a program for providing ourselves with the maximum security.

We should dump partisanship into the ashcan insofar as foreign affairs are concerned.

And we should quickly abandon the idea that we can have a real preparedness-war program while conducting "business as usual."

UP, UP AND UP!

Back about the middle of the year the CIO News started carrying stories about increases in the cost of living.

Almost every week there were new developments to report:

The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale index had jumped a few more points. Rents went higher in decontrolled areas. Auto prices were hiked. On and on it went.

Then, late in November, the Bureau of Labor Statistics revealed what most of us had suspected—that the cost of living had reached the highest point in the nation's history.

The BLS figures were outdated when they were released. They referred to living costs as of Oct. 15.

When and where will it end? Nobody seems to know.

Well, why doesn't Truman slap on price controls? That seems to be a logical question for the consumer to ask.

But the answer is a bit more complicated than it might seem. We'll try to put it in simple terms:

After war broke out in Korea, Congress decided to provide the President with a gun with which to shoot at the forces of inflation.

It was a double-barreled weapon but it had only one trigger. One barrel was labeled "price control" and the other was "wage control."

And the mechanism was such that one barrel couldn't be fired without blasting away with both.

THE LAW NEEDS TO BE CHANGED

The problem facing the country when Congress fashioned the gun was one of soaring prices—not one of soaring wages—but that didn't make any difference to the lawmakers.

In effect Congress told the President, "OK, Harry, if you want to freeze things then you've got to freeze prices high and wages low."

The whole concept of the law was wrong. It wasn't designed to meet what is fast becoming a real emergency.

If Congress deliberately tried to put the President over a barrel it succeeded pretty well in doing so. And if Congress was determined to give wage earners a real rooking it succeeded in that, too.

What can be done about the situation?

Congress could—and should—change the existing law so a fair and realistic approach to the problem can be provided.

Industrialists, who are now enjoying the fattest profits in history, could—and should—exercise real restraint every time they think about reaching for their "price mark-up" pencil.

Inflation already is here and it could easily become much worse rapidly.

It's hitting everybody—but the worst sufferers are low-income wage earners who have received no pay increases the past six months and those who are forced to live on fixed incomes.

Oh, so you're burned up about it, too? Well, why don't you sit down right now and write your Washington lawmakers about it?

CSC Counselling Plan Aids CIO Needy

A WORRIED CIO member in a small shop in Erie, Pa., approached his local union counsellor one day and said:

"I'm in a jam! What can you do about it?" And he proceeded to pour out his troubles. His landlord has just given him an eviction notice, and because of the housing shortage, he couldn't find any place to move his family—wife and two children.

He'd been asked to move because he'd fallen behind in his rent, and also because the neighbors had complained about the noisy arguments that sometimes took place at night between the worried couple, nervous and tense over their predicament.

This is one example of the kind of family problems union workers bring to counsellors serving under the program sponsored by National CIO Community Services Committee. The CSC has just issued a mimeographed pamphlet containing 19 such case studies reported by its counsellors in various parts of the country, to help explain the nature of its union counselling program.

WHAT IS a union counsellor? He's "the steward who deals with workers' out-plant problems," says CSC. Obviously a union cannot take on the responsibility of solving the many kinds of troubles that harass workers' families, but through the union counsellor program, it can direct them to sources where they may be helped.

All kinds of public and private agencies exist for the sole purpose of aiding people in various kinds of trouble, but the average worker does not always know just what they are, or how to reach them. And when he does, sometimes he's likely to be confused by the application forms, qualification requirements and general red tape with which these agencies are too often surrounded. A union counsellor is trained to know how to lead trouble-ridden workers through this maze.

In the case of the Erie worker, the union counsellor found help for him through the Family Service Agency, and a conference with the landlord, who agreed to withdraw the eviction notice if the rent was paid and the arguments stopped.

THE Service Agency obtained memberships in the YMCA and YWCA for the son and daughter, gave some sound advice on how the family could get closer together, and now, the counsellor reported, "everybody's happy, including the neighbors."

Most of the cases reported are of a much more serious nature, although an eviction notice in these housing-shortage days can be pretty terrible, and CSC counsellors are often called in to help on such occasions.

In two case studies reported, artificial legs were obtained for workers who'd suffered amputations and suitable jobs found for them after a period of readjustment.

In one instance aid was obtained from the state vocational and rehabilitation agency, and in the other tragic case, the counsellor used such agencies as Family Service, Visiting Nurses, Dept. of Public Assistance and the Red Cross.

OTHER cases related in the CSC pamphlet tell of help given to union members in obtaining unemployment benefits; sickness insurance; and additional aid for mothers with large families, struggling with the high cost of living.

Serious illness in the family with doctors and hospital bills and little or no money coming in, was the most common cause of the family troubles reported.

The Union Counsellor's Casebook, together with a companion pamphlet, in printed form, the CIO-CSC Guide to Public Assistance, will be of great help to unions desiring to serve their members having off-the-job problems. The Guide gives basic information on residence and other eligibility requirements for general assistance under state and local programs, and points to their inadequacy.

It also contains a number of tables showing the variations in state and local relief programs.

Both the guide and the casebook may be obtained from the National CIO Community Services Committee, 1776 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. H. R.

CWA Seeks Pay Lost In Lockout

Court tests and tests before the National Labor Relations Board have been started by the CIO Communications Workers to get pay for workers locked out in the recent telephone strike.

In New York, where the State Division of Placement and Unemployment Compensation has ruled locked-out strikers are not entitled to immediate unemployment compensation, a referee will hear an appeal by Local 1. The state body ruled that workers who were locked out must wait seven weeks for payment, as provided under New York law for strikes.

Conferences between the Bell company and long lines operators bogged down over the company paying operators it refused to put to work unless the operators promised to cross picket lines. Then NLRB test suits were filed by the union in Detroit, Washington and California.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Michael Quill, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director: Henry C. Fleisher
Assistant Editors: Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan, (On Leave), Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Act of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII December 11, 1950 No. 50

Yes, They Really Knew Each Other

IT HAPPENED at the CIO convention at Chicago a few weeks ago—but it had its beginning back in 1923.

A CIO representative walked up to a top official of a CIO affiliate, introduced himself and then said:

"I've seen you around conventions for years and each time I've seen you I've gotten the feeling that we used to know each other."

The union official shook hands and said that "I've had the same feeling."

They started swapping stories and recalling events of the past—and finally the following emerged.

TWO YOUNG men who shipped out of the Port of Baltimore 27 years ago got fed up with the extreme leftists who were gaining power in their union.

They and a small group of fellow seamen decided to do something about the situation.

They were poorly equipped by training to do the job but they had a lot of enthusiasm. So they pitched right in.

They didn't know the size of the task they had undertaken and they didn't visualize the possible consequences of bucking the leftist leadership.

But they began campaigning, and one of them—a fellow named Bill—was elected union port agent at Baltimore.

The other fellow and about 19 of his cronies, however, soon learned that they had been "blacklisted" by the lefty union leaders.

THERE WAS a long, cold winter that year and things were really tough for the unlucky 20.

Try as they might, they were unable to get jobs as seamen. There simply wasn't anything available for the group.

The port agent, however, received $30 a week and would have been able to get by easily had he not felt an obligation to his fellow "conspirators."

Each payday he found one or more of his buddies in dire need. He'd hand out a couple of dollars here and a couple there, and almost before he knew it all his money was gone.

This happened week after week. And it didn't take the group long to learn that $30 doesn't amount to much when split some 20 ways.

THE PORT AGENT and his buddies didn't slow down on their union political campaign, however.

They used their "blacklisting" as political ammunition—and it proved effective.

Bill's friend, a fellow named Neal, eventually ran for a union office in opposition to the administration and was elected.

Time passed. The 20 men traveled to the far ports of the world.

Bill finally shifted to a new type of job and joined a new union. He was one of the first men assigned to the field when the CIO opened its organizing drive in the South in 1946.

Neal also worked his way toward the top in the union field.

NEAL AND BILL—after a lapse of a number of years—saw each other at every CIO convention. Somehow or other they always failed to get together for a chat.

And, frankly, neither was exactly sure who the other was.

But it was different out in Chicago a few weeks ago.

When they started putting the pieces of their little puzzle together the whole story emerged.

And Neal Hanley, secretary of the National Maritime Union, said to William Smith, CIO Florida director, "I don't know how I could have forgotten the fellow who helped keep me from starving back in 1923."

A.L.S.

SHACKLES!

Indonesia To Mark First Year Of Independence Soon

INDONESIA, land of steep mountains and soggy marshes, of spirits and ghosts and Oxford English, of fabled riches and low-paid plantation workers, will mark its first anniversary as a nation this month (December 27).

It will be an event, and not alone to the 75 million inhabitants of the hundreds of islands which make up the 4000-mile archipelago. Many nations of the world—and many labor leaders—will be watching as the Indonesians celebrate their first year of independence after three centuries of Dutch rule.

ON THE SPOT for the occasion will be a dozen American "ambassadors" of good-will—Marshall Plan employes sent to the 2000-island nation to give it a helping hand. Living under difficult circumstances, these U. S. envoys are helping to dispense sorely-needed supplies — penicillin . . . books . . . agricultural tools . . . fishing equipment—in short, the basic needs of a colonial economy being transformed into an independent and self-sustaining nation.

American labor leaders are squarely behind the Marshall Plan's program of aid for Indonesia. They know, as the government knows, that free institutions and free trade unions cannot live where there is poverty and want.

The CIO and AFL also have placed a firm stamp of approval on the major goal in Southeast Asia of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions—to "expand and strengthen" free trade unionism.

United States labor leaders are aware that much needs to be done.

On the positive side, leaders have learned that the new Indonesian government—unlike the former Dutch government, which frowned on labor unions—encourages organization of workers. In fact, the Indonesian minister of labor said in a speech recently that "labor organizations must grow in every field—industrial and agricultural."

"It has become a deeply-rooted understanding among us," he declared, "that social guarantees for our labor class cannot simply be expected from and be left in the hands of employers alone. The laborers themselves must take part in the fixing of their wages and salaries, work hours, and other conditions."

And then:

"In the interest of the laborers themselves, good orderly means must be used to attain those aims, and those means are good labor organizations."

The Ministry of Labor has prepared legislation for the promotion of trade unionism, according to recent reports, and has already established a "labor movement department."

ON THE DARK side, however, it is well known that the Communists have already managed to obtain a foothold in the Indonesian labor movement.

By 1946 the Communists were working busily in the trade union field. In December of that year, they amalgamated the Federation of Industrial Trade Unions of Indonesia into SOBSI, claiming a membership of one million—based primarily on sugar workers. (SOBSI is short for the All-Indonesian Central Labor Organization.)

SOBSI, following its Communist leadership, affiliated with the Red-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions and sent a representative to the Peking Labor Day meeting in May of this year. At that meeting, leaders attacked the "imperialism" of the U. S. and praised the Peoples Government of China, indicating a close adherence to the Communist Party line. Later, the SOBSI decided not to furnish aid directly or indirectly to the United States in its "Korean colonial war."

HOWEVER, there are several small unions with Democratic leanings and their leaders hope eventually to obtain control of the Indonesian labor movement.

Workers and employers have had so little experience in collective bargaining that strikes occur again and again before any real effort has been made to reach an agreement. Some are Communist-inspired, but many are caused by the low wages instituted during the Dutch regime.

There are many other difficulties—including the still-retained custom of hiring certain plantation workers on a long-run contract basis, of using labor bosses, etc. However, there is little total unemployment, even in Java, which suffers from a chronic surplus of labor.

But major problems facing the new nation include a crippling inflation and a dearth of well-trained government workers. The latter produces an ironic situation—in which some flagrantly nationalistic Indonesian cabinet ministers must retain Dutch advisers.

Free labor and free governments throughout the world, seeing the many problems, can only hope that the new nation will emerge from them strong and democratic. Indonesia has the moral and material support of the American Government—and the heartfelt good wishes of the U. S. labor movement.

Quill Reports To Convention:

TWU Membership Up 35% Since Red Expulsion

By ALLAN L. SWIM

IT WAS A story of internal strife, a housecleaning and the rebuilding of a union—and Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union told it briefly and simply.

He walked to the microphone last week at Transport Hall in New York City, banged his gavel to quiet delegates to the seventh biennial convention of TWU and said:

"It was two years ago—almost to the hour—that we opened our last convention. Then TWU was a divided organization with clouds of dissension and disunity hanging over our heads.

"Despite the predictions made by certain people at the end of that convention, we haven't folded up. In the past two years we've built a great union. We've added about 35% to our membership and we're sound financially."

The "certain people" to whom Quill referred were Communists and sympathizers who were removed from TWU leadership posts at the 1948 Transport convention.

QUILL PLACED strong emphasis on the importance of the TWU "housecleaning" although he devoted little time to its discussion. In his report to delegates he summed the matter up this way:

"When we convened in Chicago in 1948 the Communists were in full control of the finances of our union. Our treasury was rifled and our organization was in debt.

"But the important part of our union was free and unshackled—the great rank and file and the delegates who represented them at that historic convention. By democratic methods these delegates brought our organization back to a true American trade union program, and outlined a policy which has brought our members tremendous improvements in wages, hours, working conditions, pensions, vacations, paid legal holidays and union security.

"Despite the fact that we left the sixth convention in debt, we are happy to report today that we have put our house in order. We have paid all our debts and we are a financially sound organization. We have a fighting fund for the inevitable 'rainy day' when TWU members must hit the picket line."

THE ANXIETY over the world situation which is felt by all Americans was quite evident among convention speakers and delegates.

The TWU Executive Board took recognition of the situation by reporting to the convention:

"Members of the Transport Workers Union, like all Americans, are troubled by the clouds of war which again hang over our heads. Our democratic way of life, not only in the United States but in every country outside the Iron Curtain, is threatened.

"Many of our members already have been called to the colors. Some have died in battle. Some have been captured or wounded.

"TWU and CIO made heroic contributions to our fighting forces during the last war. The labor movement in America pledges full cooperation in maintaining maximum production for defense and necessary civilian goods during this emergency."

However, the board's report said, conscription should be limited to the armed forces.

"We oppose all forms of legislation which would force employes to work for specific employers or groups of employers," the board said.

"The abrogation of the rights of free labor will neither advance production nor strengthen America's moral leadership in the world-wide contest for survival between freedom and Communist enslavement.

"Free labor can out-produce, out-think and out-fight totalitarian forces which depend on slave labor. But to do so labor must remain free."

MANY OF THE delegates, frankly, got a kick out of seeing the president of their union "eat political crow."

It happened because Quill supported Ferdinand Pecora for mayor of New York City and Vincent Impellitteri was elected to the post.

And, furthermore, about 34,000 of TWU's 44,000 members in New York are employed by the city government which Impellitteri heads.

When Impellitteri appeared to address the convention, Quill said:

"It is kind of difficult for me to introduce the next speaker, but I have tackled difficult tasks before and I imagine I will muddle through this one in some way.

"In the last election I asked the TWU people to vote for another candidate that I liked very much and still do. And apparently the TWU fellows said, 'You may be all right as a representative of this union, but you are a bum as a politician.'"

The delegates roared with laughter and a big smile spread over the mayor's face.

"We have asked our mayor to greet this seventh biennial convention, and we asked him to come without any strings—only as mayor. We are not asking for commitments. We are not asking for promises. We are not asking for a damn thing that we are not entitled to as workers!"

MAYOR Impellitteri, smiling broadly but making no direct comment about the election other than to say he hoped to be "the mayor of all the people," told delegates the world situation sharply focuses attention on the importance of the New York transit system.

"We are in the midst of a world crisis," he said. "Our leaders are fighting—with what chance of success we do not know—to avert a third world war. Should that great struggle burst upon us, we know that our city would be one of the primary industrial and propaganda targets in the world."

Should there be an atom bomb attack on New York City, he said, "our transit system will be our lifetime."

"Buses and subway trains would be needed to move the injured and to evacuate devastated areas. Subway stations would serve as shelters and hospitals."

Impellitteri said he didn't want to be considered a "prophet of doom—yet I do want you to know the possibilities that lie ahead of you, as I see them."

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD, CIO vice president and director of organizations and councils, reviewed the "housecleaning" which resulted in expulsion from CIO of 11 unions charged with being Communist dominated.

Then he told delegates that CIO now has 219,000 more members than it had just before the first Commie-dominated union was expelled in November, 1949.

Haywood made an appeal for stepped-up organizational work by all groups of the CIO.

He hit sharply at the North-South pay rate differential and told of progress being made by CIO unions in eliminating it.

"There's no reason for lower pay in the South," he declared. "Just take a train some time from New York to Atlanta and then buy a train ticket from Atlanta to New York. You'll find it costs the same both ways."

Haywood said that the CIO's membership campaign in the South will "continue until the workers there are organized."

"THIS CONVENTION will be an historic occasion, for since your last international meeting the union has made the most significant gains in its history," said President Truman in a message read to delegates.

"The grave period that lies ahead will call for complete devotion to the highest duty of every American. The members of the Transport Workers Union of America, I am sure, will make a patriotic and valuable contribution to the cause that unites us all.

"While planning for the future, the union may at the same time take pride in its steady growth over the past two years.

"The important agreement signed this year in New York City obtains for the union its long-sought recognition on municipal transit lines and brings increased benefits to a large segment of your membership. Elsewhere, also, you have made substantial progress."

ALLAN S. HAYWOOD (center) has long coveted a beautiful blackthorn cane owned by Pres. Michael Quill of the Transport Workers Union (left), according to Quill. So when Haywood visited the TWU convention last week a duplicate of the Quill cane was presented to him. TWU Secy.-Treas. Gustav Faber (right) was on hand for the presentation ceremony which took place after Haywood addressed the convention.

Reds Out—Meet Short

TWU, with its ideological battling behind it, decided to hold its 1950 convention over a period of three days, instead of the usual five.

Consequently, most of its sessions were confined to union business with only a few speakers on the program. Among these were:

Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel; Louis Hollander, president of the New York State CIO Council, and Morris Iushevitz, secretary-treasurer of the New York City CIO Council.

Pledge To CIO Kept

A report to delegates signed by Pres. Quill and Secy.-Treas. Gustav Faber says:

"Two years ago we pledged our unswerving allegiance to the CIO, its policies and program and to our great leader, Philip Murray.

"We have kept that pledge."

Series Of Secret Meetings In 1934 Gave Birth To TWU 16 Years Ago

Pres. Mike Quill of the Transport Workers often is referred to by news reporters as "a colorful character" and by some friends as being "as Irish as Murphy's pig."

Quill was born in 1905 in County Kerry, Ireland, the son of a poor farmer. During his youth, the Quill home was a hideaway for Irish revolutionists wanted by the Black and Tans.

Quill joined the Irish Republican Army at the age of 14.

His first job in this country was on a pick and shovel gang. Later he toured the coal regions of Pennsylvania, selling religious pictures. Then he held a succession of jobs in New York—as railroad guard, gateman, platform man and ticket agent.

In 1934 he and six fellow workers began holding "secret" meetings which resulted in the formation of what is now the Transport Workers Union.

Quill was elected president of the yet-unaffiliated union in 1936, helped affiliate it with the CIO in 1937 and has served as its president since.

Last month Quill was elected a CIO vice president.

In 1937 Quill was elected a member of the New York City Council and was re-elected in 1943 and 1945. He helped form the New York City CIO Council and served successively as president and vice president until 1947, when he resigned in protest against the council's opposition to CIO policy and its support of Henry A. Wallace.

IUE Convention Elects Carey 1st President

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, its infancy a thing of the past, doffed the short pants of its boyhood last week and carelessly tossed them into a remote corner of the vast Milwaukee Auditorium.

Then it donned the long trousers of manhood and stepped out on its own to a place beside its brother CIO unions, strong, unafraid, independent, articulate, ready to take on its self-imposed task of chasing the Communist-dominated United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers out of the rest of the industry.

CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey former UE president, who was named chairman of the IUE-CIO Administrative Committee which was appointed when the discredited UE was kicked out of the CIO at the 1949 CIO convention, presided. He sounded the keynote when he said:

"The electrical, radio and machine industry is divided into three parts—the organized, the workers who are in the IUE-CIO; the disorganized, those who are in the UE, the AFL Electrical Workers, and other unions, so-called; and the unorganized, who are in no union at all. Our job is to make them all organized."

The delegates elected Carey as their first president by acclamation when he was nominated without opposition. Al Hartnett, who has been his administrative assistant and who had served as convention secretary, was elected secretary-treasurer without opposition.

THE CONVENTION was in refreshing contrast to UE conventions of the past, when pro-CIO leaders like Carey and Harry Block, of Philadelphia, also a member of the administration committee, were hooted down and jeered whenever they tried to speak from the floor.

At Milwaukee in 1950, however, it was different. Any delegate who wanted to speak could be heard—and was heard. Any delegate who wanted to tell off the presiding officer told him off—and got told off in return when the chairman thought he had it coming to him.

Issues were debated and discussed with vehemence and deep feeling, but there was little catcalling or booing, and everybody had his chance.

It was not a cut and dried convention. There was unanimous agreement on most things, sharp differences on others.

PANORAMIC BACKDROP on convention stage gives Daniel Arnold, of Local 103, Camden, N. J., an opportunity to point out himself to (left to right) Al Giordano, Dot Ladd and Ernest Polak, degelates from the same local. Several other delegates had the same experience.

But a permanent constitution was adopted—a good constitution aimed at coordinating the strength of the individual union member, the local, the district and the international to carry out, as the preamble says, "a policy of aggressive struggle to improve the working and living conditions of all workers in our industry." It replaced the provisional constitution adopted at the founding convention in Philadelphia in December, 1949.

THE NEARLY 400 delegates, representing some 150 locals and five district councils, likewise spoke out boldly on the problems that confront them as union members and as Americans by endorsing in strong language the principles laid down a fortnight before at the National CIO convention.

The delegates spent a full morning discussing whether the annual convention will be held in the last quarter of the year or at some other time.

A compromise was finally evolved which satisfied everybody: it will be held in the last four months of the year, with the executive board committed to a policy of scheduling it in September or October.

THE recommendations of the constitution committee, which was headed by Block, that national officers be restricted to two—president and secretary-treasurer—and that they be elected by mail referendum for two-year terms, touched off long debate.

A sizable faction was opposed to the mail feature, claiming that many members who habitually do not attend meetings would vote without being sufficiently informed upon the records and aims of candidates.

Proponents of the proposal, which also carried the recommendation of the administrative committee, discounted such a claim and asserted that a mail ballot offered the broadest possible opportunity for every member to mark a ballot. After 11 opponents of the recommendation and 10 of those favoring it had spoken, it was approved by a substantial vote.

Debate on financial sections of the constitution was preceded by a warning from Carey that the union cannot operate as a strong union should unless the per capita tax, which has been 50c per member per month, is raised to 75c.

Earlier, the certified public accountants who examine the IUE books, L. H. Huffnagel and M. C. Connick of Main & Co., explained the financial report in detail and told the delegates how to read it so they could understand it.

THEY also held themselves available after the convention session for discussion with delegates who wanted to ask questions about the union's financial affairs—an opportunity which Carey said he believed was unprecedented in labor union annals, and one of which many delegates took advantage.

When discussion of the financial clauses of the constitution began, Richard Bauer, head of IUE-CIO's accounting department, gave a detailed breakdown of income and expenditures for October and November, and of projected receipts and outgo for December. He showed that with a 50c per capita, the international will operate in the red, but that with 75c it can about break even with a dues-paying membership of 200,000, and expand as membership increases.

The proposal was discussed the full morning of Dec 7. Many delegates explained they had been instructed to vote for the 50c by locals which, they conceded, had not had full information upon which to base judgment. Speakers urged such delegates to vote for the higher per capita and then go back and tell their members why they had done so, expressing confidence that when the need for the 75c was explained at home, their action would be endorsed.

The 75c per capita was finally approved by an overwhelming majority voice vote.

Defeated, however, by a close margin on a roll call vote was a proposal that minimum local dues be set at $2 a month instead of the present $1.50, which the constitution and administrative committees had urged so local unions would have enough money to fight off UE efforts to win back some of the locals it has lost.

THE DELEGATES approved a 34-point legislative program that called for aggressive and liberal action on many fronts both at Washington and the state capitals, with repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act one of the major items.

After a warning by Carey that Communist UE members and officials have access to plants where secret defense weapons are manufactured, the convention approved unanimously a resolution favoring an immediate meeting of labor and management in the electrical industry with national defense officials for a thorough-going discussion of internal security.

Carey singled out the General Electric Co. plant at Schenectady, N. Y., where the UE has bargaining rights. He named individuals he said were Communists who hold office or employment in the UE and are allowed in parts of the plant where secret weapons are being made. He added a warning that many of the items can be rendered useless or dangerous by not following specifications rigidly.

The resolution also called for discussion at the proposed meeting of the industry's over-all defense requirements in terms of volume, type, timing, manpower and materials, and what can be done to cut back civilian production without working hardships.

AS PRESIDENT Truman began his meetings in Washington with Prime Minister Attlee, of Great Britain, the convention sent the President a telegram of support reiterating the union's stand against communism at home and internationally, urging that the fight against it be carried on to a successful conclusion, and asking the President to disregard the growing isolationist clamor for abandonment of the United Nations.

A broad collective bargaining program was endorsed, with a demand that employers, because of higher living costs, negotiate wage increases now regardless of contract expiration dates.

Not Beer That Made Milwaukee Famous

Mayor Frank Zeidler of Milwaukee cruelly disillusioned delegates to the IUE-CIO convention in his address of welcome.

"It is peculiarly fitting," he said, "that a convention of people who work in the electrical industry be held in Milwaukee. For I suppose it would shock you to find out that contrary to the general belief, the products of the electrical industry that are made in Milwaukee are worth more than our beverages!"

ANOTHER resolution promised the union's continued support to the course of the UN and the United States in Korea, and on behalf of IUE-CIO members, pledged "their sweat and toil, their hearts and loyalties, to the patriotic duty of defending our country and the free world."

A message of greeting from CIO Pres. Philip Murray was answered with a resolution of appreciation and thanks for his unwavering support in bringing the union into being, and the proffer of an honorary lifetime membership.

The convention was welcomed to Milwaukee by F. J. Michel, CIO regional director. The Rev. Raymond A. McGowan, director of the Social Action Department of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, gave the opening invocation and urged the union to follow policies which assure local justice by increasing the income of the workers and reducing the profits of business. Pres. Herman Steffes of the Wisconsin CIO Council, Pres. Charles Schultz of the Milwaukee CIO Council, Mayor Frank Zeidler, CIO Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood, Irving Abramson, chairman of the CIO Community Services Committee, and Rabbi J. J. Weinstein also spoke.

AL HARTNETT
Elected IUE-CIO Secy.-Treas.

IUE True To 'Best Interests Of U. S. Workers'—Truman

The following letter was sent by President Truman to the IUE-CIO convention:

The fine record achieved by the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers during the past year is one of which you may be justly proud as you meet in Milkwaukee. That record has been one of devotion to the best interests of American workers and of determined opposition to the totalitarian forces that would subvert and corrupt labor.

Today the members of your union have an increased opportunity not only to demonstrate their faith in democracy and their opposition to totalitarian philosophy, but to help raise our industrial production to the levels required to assure victory. Your members are key workers in our economy.

The grave period ahead will call for complete devotion to the highest duty of every American. The freedom of labor everywhere is at stake. I am sure that the members of the International Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers will make a valuable and patriotic contribution as we go forward together in the fight to protect our liberties.

I want to congratulate your membership on its achievements of the past year, to extend my cordial greetings to the delegates attending the convention, and to wish you well as you continue American labor's fight against the immoral influences of domestic and international Communism.

Will Lobby Kill Public Housing By Referenda?

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

THE REAL ESTATE lobby, tongue firmly in cheek, is going to ask Congress to "postpone"—a polite word for kill—all low-rent public housing projects under the 1949 Housing Act for the duration of the emergency.

And in the same breath, the lobby is going to work on all the state legislatures to tie the hands of state and local housing authorities by forcing expensive, time-consuming referenda every time a state, county or city dreams of approving a new low-rent project.

All of this is the direct result of what happened in California and elsewhere on Nov. 7. The election results didn't satisfy the lobby, but they had wild success in a few highly important housing referenda, results of which got very little play in the papers.

From these referenda, the lobby emerged licking its collective lips and deciding that it would from now on use the referendum as a weapon in its own interests.

IT'S A well-known Kremlin and anti-Kremlin tactic. It was well-known to Machiavelli. It's "smart," and it's as old as the concept of referendum itself.

The underlying theory is (a) that it is politically dangerous to oppose a proposal to send something to referendum and (b) that one of the best ways of hog-tying any proposal decided upon by the people's elected representatives is to send it to referendum, cleverly worded so that "yes" means "no." The propaganda machines are turned loose so that the outcome is weighted in favor of the group that has the most money.

(As a matter of fact, it took the real estate lobby a while to persuade itself to adopt this tactic. Until recently, it made the political mistake of opposing referenda in every community where the city council had voted its way, and supporting referenda only when it hoped to throw out a city council decision it regarded as unfavorable.

(But now, the line is: send everything to referendum, and let the pro-public-housing forces put themselves on the politically awkward spot of saying "no" to "giving the people a direct choice.")

THE CALIFORNIA story is simple and diabolical. There was drawn up, early in the summer, an honest-sounding petition for referendum, which got 215,740 signatures. The petition was considered so important that the lobby, in this case masquerading as the Committee for Home Protection, paid 12½c each for the names.

Persons who were asked to sign it were told that the petition simply would put the public housing question before the public on Nov. 7, and a great many of the signatures came from persons who were heartily in favor of more and better public housing. So the question went on the Nov. 7 ballot.

When the referendum question was unveiled, it turned out to ask: Should the state constitution be amended so as to require every community governing body to send to popular referendum any proposal for a public housing project?

Again, the proposal sounded reasonable to a lot of people who favored public housing. The real estate lobby, of course, touted it as "simple democracy."

It was left to the fighters for public housing—the experienced ones—to point out:

(a) That any time a referendum was desired, it could be had under existing law.

(b) That to force a referendum was in many cases unnecessary.

(c) That referenda were expensive as all get-out (a single election in Los Angeles County costs the county $800,000, and there would have to be one for each project).

(d) That a far more fair method of putting all sides of an issue before the public was in free and open hearing, already required by law.

THEY COULD have added—and in many instances did—that the voters had little chance of deciding on the real merits of an issue if one side was well-heeled and the other had no slush fund, in a referendum campaign.

The amendment carried, by approximately 1,540,000 to 1,500,000. Undoubtedly a great many who voted for it did so in complete good faith, thinking they were striking a blow for democracy.

The lobby spent millions putting it across. The little local committees of volunteers, who sniffed what was in the wind, worked hard—but they couldn't buy television time, they couldn't put full-page ads in all the California papers, they couldn't pay for wholesale lots of radio time.

California's Gov. Earl Warren (R.) opposed the idea in no uncertain terms, labelling it "a roadblock and a departure from representative government"—but not even his powerful voice prevailed against the touching popular belief that the more people who vote on an issue, the better democracy is served.

To understand why the real estate lobby considered this worth such a tremendous outpouring of funds and energy, one has only to examine what has been happening in various communities where there have been public housing referenda recently.

What made the California builders chuckle with glee and congratulate themselves they had just about stopped public housing cold in the entire state was the unquestioned success in other states of the "big lie" propaganda technique developed by the National Association of Home Builders and distributed in "kit" form to branches and front organizations all over the United States.

PUBLIC HOUSING was on the ballot in seven communities outside California. On the surface, the results were four victories for public housing, and three defeats. Closer analysis, however, shows that, except in Newark, N. J., the real estate lobby can take comfort from all results, and even in Newark they'll get another crack at it.

In Newark, the voters by a two-to-one majority approved the release of 15 acres of city-owned park land for low-cost housing purposes. The vote was large and the majority emphatic.

The vote did not constitute approval for the project itself, however, and all sorts of objections can—and unquestionably will—be raised before the first spadeful of dirt is lifted.

By a tiny margin, voters in Bay City, Mich., approved the creation of a public housing authority—the very first step in a long process. The vote was 7,948 to 7,521. This was a referendum forced by the real estate groups after the city council split on the question of setting up the authority. Tactics used in the referendum were appalling.

The Saturday before the election, for instance, unknown persons invaded all six of the city's Catholic churches and inserted vicious anti-housing propaganda leaflets in copies of "Catholic Weekly," a paper awaiting Sunday morning distribution. The plan, fortunately, backfired when the leaflets were discovered late Saturday night, and removed.

The real estate group in Bay City has only to await the housing authority's first move toward building a housing project before trying the same tactics again, and the least it can expect to accomplish is intolerable delay.

IN EDINBURG, Tex., the realtors' move to abolish the housing authority—which hasn't started to build anything—was licked 536 to 423, but the same opportunity exists for further attempts. In Arkadelphia, Ark., the city council's preliminary approval of a 75-unit project was sustained by a vote of 799 to 503, with the same possibilities for further delay.

In Madison and Kenosha, Wis., and Lane County (Eugene), Ore., public housing suffered outright defeats, by impressive majorities. Tactics used by the real estate lobby were identical, and showed a combination of cleverness and viciousness which the supporters of public housing could not or would not match.

The central appeal was to the pocketbook. The old standard phony cry, "Can you afford to pay somebody else's rent?" was used in all three elections, and in Madison and Kenosha the referenda questions were so worded as to leave the clear, and completely false, impression that the cities would derive no income from the projects, and consequently would be forced to raise taxes.

THE QUESTION in Madison, for instance, was: "Resolved that the city of Madison shall not execute any contract or agreement with the Housing Authority . . . for the construction of dwellings which are to be free from the general property taxes assessed by the City of Madison."

Without background knowledge, almost anyone reading that question would believe that city taxes on property-owners would be increased if the housing project were built, since the city would get no income from the project. In this instance, 300 units were involved.

The truth is that public housing projects pay a fixed fee instead of taxes, and that in every known instance where a study has been made of income to the city or county from the project fees as compared to previous tax income from the property, the project has paid more in fees than the property ever paid in taxes. In other words, the city has profited, in terms of cash income.

(St. Louis, for instance, found that the fixed-fee payment from its first housing project in 1946 was $85,453—or 251% more than the taxes formerly assessed against that property and even more than that in terms of taxes actually paid.)

FAR MORE important than this, however, is the drop in what the city has to pay out, when a housing project is completed. Blighted land costs the city more, and pays the city less, than land on which a project is built.

(The Denver Post made a thorough study of Denver slums and came up with the following conclusions:

("Denver's blighted area comprises less than 10% of the land in the city, about 6% of the population and 6% of the living units. Yet this same area receives 40% of all general relief funds, a third of which goes to pay rent for relief families; 34% of all aid to dependent children . . . it accounts for 32% of all police calls . . . it produces 30% of Denver General Hospital's case load . . . it provides a third of the work load for the city sanitation department . . . In a year, the Welfare Dept. pays $443,702.40 to landlords of the blighted district . . . yet assessment records show that blighted property pays less in taxes than standard areas.")

BUT THE Madison voters, and those in Kenosha, never heard this side of the argument. The weak voice of the volunteer groups trying to sell the idea was completely drowned out by full-page newspaper ads, radio commercials, and the pro-landlord Wisconsin State Journal. All the ads sought to scare home-owners by threatening them with doubled taxes, or by telling them their land would be seized and condemned at whatever value the Housing Authority might set.

Renters were scared by being told they would be paying out—in new taxes—the equivalent of their own rent "to maintain people who in many cases make more than you do." The fact that these three appeals were black, open lies made no difference. The voters did get scared.

The voice of racial prejudice was raised in a nasty whisper too. Whites were told the Negroes would over-run their areas. Negroes were told they would be barred from the project. Whites were told they would be forced to share the project with Negroes. Anything went.

A small group of well-off suburban housewives who were determined to help get the project started because they were good-heartedly worried about juvenile delinquency were called "carpetbaggers" and the downtown voters were told not to let those rich "outsiders" tell them how to vote.

The vote in Madison, after this campaign had gone on for a full three months, was 16,063 for killing the project and 13,480 against.

IN KENOSHA, it was 12,294 to 10,631 in favor of breaking an agreement the city council had made with the local housing authority. The question before the voters was almost identical with that in Madison, and the appeals were the same.

In Lane County, Ore., where the housing situation is extremely acute, the voters bounced the public project idea by the astounding vote of 22,149 to 11,065—after almost the identical campaign.

No wonder the real estate lobby has embraced the idea of sending every housing project proposal to referendum. And, in view of the election results, no wonder they dare now to talk about "postponing" all federal outlay of money for housing projects. All the present law does is state that money will be available if and when the cities decide they want projects, but even this goes too far for the landlord lobby.

Author Calls Builders Of Shoddy House 'Con Men' Who Blacken Building Industry

Philip Wylie, whose success as an author stems from his mastery of the art of raging at the world, had this to say in the Miami Sunday News after a small hurricane—nothing unusual for Florida—had ripped the roofs off of shoddily constructed veterans' housing sold at high prices:

"No doubt some of the men who put up the come-apart houses are the sort who sit around with well-heeled colleagues complaining that the country and the government have gone to the dogs. If so, they are the dogs.

"They are the second-raters, the shysters, the gyp artists, the con men who set the style that lowered the quality and put up the cost and blacked the eye of the whole great building industry.

"It is time to take off their roofs and see who they are. For they can talk up a bigger breeze than the hurricane itself. but nothing will alter the fact that most homes built properly stood up, but the ones they built folded up.

"And nothing will alter the terrible fact that a man who builds a house in Miami can build death and disaster right into it by failing to do those essential things which every good contractor knows and does."

Taxpayers Described As Slum Subsidizers

A Washington landlord died recently and left an estate of $800,000, of which $700,000 was the assessed value of his slum properties.

Comments the National Housing Conference: "A story like this shows why real estate operators oppose slum clearance and public housing.

"There is a big profit to be made in slums, subsidized by the taxpayers who dig down to pay for the hospitals, detention homes, prisons, firemen, policemen, social workers, and all the complex of municipal expenses needed to heal the scars which slums leave on the people who must live in them."

Shoe Union Raises Per Capita To $1

Pres. William E. Thornton of the CIO Shoe Workers has announced that six amendments to the union's constitution, passed at the last convention in October, have been ratified in a membership referendum.

He said the most important amendment was on the raising of monthly per capita tax from 85c to $1 for the purpose of furthering organizational work.

Another amendment provides for six instead of five regions. The purpose of the added region is to concentrate more on the unorganized shops in Ohio, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee, Thornton said.

Outlook Uncovers 'Save America' Drive On Welfare

A SUPER-COLOSSAL "Save America" campaign has been launched by the propagandists for special privilege.

"This time they are out to protect us from the Welfare State," the CIO Economic Outlook charges in its November issue.

"Ever since November, 1932, when Roosevelt emerged the victor and Big Business monopoly in Washington ended, the chorus of doom has been getting louder.

"With each succeeding election those self-styled champions of freedom and the common man—the NAM (National Association of Manufacturers), the Chamber of Commerce, the Republican National Committee, and now, their AMA (American Medical Association), and Real Estate Board satellites—have been giving out with more frenzy and woe."

The Outlook, which is issued by the CIO Education and Research Dept., said that when the peoples' choice continued to be the Fair Deal after Roosevelt was gone, "a new line of attack was master-minded in one more desperate effort to send chills down the voters' spines.

"'The federal government is enslaving America,'" they cried. "'We're on the last mile down the road to serfdom! Arise and save yourselves from the Welfare State.'

"No one escaped the din and fury of the welfare state charge as it resounded across the land in the recent political campaign. And millions of unsuspecting voters listened intently, since taxes weigh heavily on the American home and few know exactly where their money goes."

THE OUTLOOK made a breakdown of Federal budgetary expenses for the 12-month period ending with the Korean invasion to show where the money went. The survey showed that out of every tax dollar of the 1950 budget of $40.2 billion, 75c or $30.3 billion went to meet the costs of past wars and to prevent future ones.

Out of the $9.9 billion remaining, only $1.8 billion was expended for health, education, public assistance, recreation, public housing, school lunches, and for operating the U. S. Dept. of Labor.

"These are all of the much derided welfare and social services given to the so-called unproductive and underprivileged citizens," the Outlook points out. "To pay for them Uncle Sam collected and spent less than 1% of the total national income in fiscal 1950.

"If these are the 'handouts' that are undermining the moral fibre of the people and destroying free enterprise, what then are the consequences of the generous aid that Uncle Sam gives private business?"

THE OUTLOOK declared that "every move toward social progress has fought against the charge that freedom and private enterprise were being undermined.

"While business needs continued to be thought of as legitimate concerns of government, it was insisted that all human needs should be taken care of by private enterprise or by private charity.

"Why is it that when government generously aids its businessmen they call it 'Americanism,' but when it tries to raise the living and cultural standards of millions of human beings—these particular efforts are condemned as handouts and as welfarism?

"The basic truth that government must promote the general welfare is no alien idea. Our Founding Fathers said it twice in the Constitution of the new United States.

"The activities of the federal government which the Chamber of Commerce calls 'class angled and income leveling' have not lessened the initiative of Americans, destroyed their self reliance, nor dragged all of us down to the level of the lazy and inefficient, Quite the contrary."

[High school students this year are debating the welfare state. CIO Councils and affiliates were urged to get this copy of the Outlook into the hands of high school debating teams.]

Guernsey-Montgomery for the Economic Outlook, CIO.

Negro Pastor Of White Parish Hits Press And Hypocrisy

REPORTERS AND other curious visitors descended on the Staffordsville, Conn., Congregational Church on Sunday, Dec. 3. They wanted to see the new pastor.

It wasn't a sudden burst of piety. It was the fact that Rev. Roland T. Heacock is a Negro whose 75-member congregation is white. Mr. Heacock, a one-time Army chaplain, spotted the strangers, observed:

"It is a sad commentary on the state of democracy and Christianity that when an obscure, untalented Negro minister takes over the pastorate of a tiny rural Connecticut church, it is big news. Why should it be big news?

"Why shouldn't we, human beings, just accept one another regardless of the color of the skin or our eyes, if we are decent and worthy?

"And why, may I ask, is not the Christian religion in the forefront, practising this simple, elemental precept we so loudly proclaim—the worth and dignity of human personality?

"The plain truth is, and I take this opportunity of saying so, so that reporters may report it, the plain truth is that the Christian Church should hang its head in shame at its snobbery, racism and class consciousness."

THE MEMBERS of the congregation liked the new pastor's inaugural sermon, entitled "The Vision and the Answer." One whose approval he gained was Mrs. Ida Walbridge, 82, mother of the deacon.

Mr. Heacock was pastor of a large Negro church in Springfield, Mass., for 17 years, before becoming a chaplain. He came out of retirement to take the post here after an eye operation. He had been threatened with blindness. LPA

Belanger Is Re-elected By Mass. Council

HEEDING A request for unity from several union leaders, 700 delegates to the 12th annual Massachusetts CIO Council convention resolved their differences and re-elected J. William Belanger president for another two-year term.

Interest during the three-day meeting, which was held at Springfield Dec. 1-3, centered on the contest for the presidency which developed between Belanger and Council Secy.-Treas. Salvatore Camelio.

At the outset, Camelio, who is regional director for the CIO Rubber Workers, had the pledged support of the delegates of several international unions.

A crucial factor in Belanger's election was the decision of Joseph Salerno, New England director for the Clothing Workers and Belanger's predecessor as state CIO head, to advise the ACW delegates to vote for Belanger instead of Camelio, for whom they were pledged.

Camelio then withdrew from the presidential race and was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

The plea for unity was made on the basis that there is an immediate need for organized labor to work in close harmony due to the seriousness of the international situation.

A principal speaker at the convention, Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin, discussed the current war crisis.

Tobin said that for the current year, manpower requirements for national defense can be met without serious disruption of the nation's economy.

"Nevertheless, to make sure of this we must have expanded programs of labor recruitments, training and utilization," he said.

PRES. EMIL RIEVE, of the CIO Textile Workers gave a hard-hitting talk on what organized labor faces in the near future as a result of the grave crisis in Korea. Rieve has recently been appointed a labor member of the Wage Stabilization Board.

Other speakers included: Gov. Paul A. Dever, who was elected in November with the help of organized labor; New England CIO Reg. Dir. Francis Carmichael; PAC Dir. Jack Kroll and Assistant CIO Councils Dir. Anthony Smith.

A resolution was passed calling for New England regional development, using water resources as sources of electric power supply. Congress was called upon to take immediate action for the realization of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Hydro-Electric Power Development and for exploration and study of the water power resources of New England.

A resolution for labor unity called for the attainment of organic unity of all American labor and approved the steps that already have been taken by the CIO, the AFL and other labor organizations toward this goal. An amendment to this resolution instructed the convention to notify all CIO unions in the state of the action taken in this respect.

The delegates also passed resolutions endorsing a civil rights program; pledging support of Histradrut, the Israel labor movement; proposing a $1 an hour minimum wage; calling on Congress to extend the Displaced Persons Act to Dec. 30, 1951; and urging Congress to continue the present rent control bill and provide for its enforcement.

TWUA Member Gives 16 Pints Of Blood

CIO Textile Workers at Rockingham, N. C., helped set a record donation of 316 pints of blood for a single Red Cross chapter. Claude Johnson, one of the TWUA members, has given 16 pints of blood—a county record.

Medical Society Sued For $100,000

Hospital Claims AMA Affiliate Tried To Kill It

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

IN ELK CITY, a small farming community in southwestern Oklahoma, an outstanding medical institution known as Community Hospital has been putting up a valiant fight on two fronts against tremendous odds for nearly 20 years.

A group health cooperative operating under a prepayment plan which provides a complete medical and health service for its members and their families, the hospital is incorporated under the state laws of Oklahoma as the Farmers' Union Hospital Association. Dr. Fred Shadid is its director.

At present some 2800 families, with a total of about 8900 members altogether, rely on this hospital for medical services.

The hospital has an out-patient department run on a fee-for-service basis where non-members are accepted for medical treatment to the limit of the hospital's capacity. In addition to Oklahoma, the hospital has members in Texas, Colorado, Kansas, Arkansas and New Mexico.

ONE OF the nation's pioneer cooperative hospitals, Community has a fine reputation for the quality of its services and the excellence of its professional staff. In fact it is considered to be the best-equipped and best-managed hospital-clinic in southwest Oklahoma, filling a vital health need in the area. Citizens who use its services would regard it as a major calamity if Community should be forced to close.

And yet, ever since it was set up in 1931, this cooperative medical center has had to fight a bitter war for its very existence.

While it has been carrying on its campaign to cure the sick and injured, and preserve the health of the people in the area (the hospital is a strong advocate of preventive medical care) it has been forced to wage a defensive fight on a second front against a ruthless enemy.

You probably can guess who this enemy is. Yes, it's that old diehard foe of progress, the American Medical Association. In the case of the Community Hospital, the guerrilla attacks against it have been waged through the AMA's affiliate in the area, the Beckham County Medical Society.

FOR ABOUT 20 years, the county society has been trying persistently and constantly to destroy the Elk City medical cooperative by stabbing it in the back and by forcing public and private medical agencies to boycott it. It's really a scandalous story. Apparently there are no means too low for AMA groups to use.

You who have children will remember the recurring polio epidemics that have terrorized parents so frequently in recent years. Well, early in 1949, the staff of Community Hospital, aware that infantile paralysis moves in a three- to four-year cycle, anticipated a polio epidemic for the following summer, and set about instituting a hygenic program designed to reduce exposure and minimize the number of cases.

A polio unit was set up and equipped in Community Hospital, and one of its doctors was sent to the University of Colorado's Medical School to take a post-graduate course in the treatment of infantile paralysis.

Community Hospital's supporters call attention to the fact that no other hospital in the area anticipated the epidemic or took steps to meet it.

To carry on its anti-polio campaign, the hospital needed financial aid and an official of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis who called on Community Hospital's medical director, stated that the Foundation would make funds available for a polio unit.

A month or so later, however, the medical director was informed that the Foundation could not give any funds for this purpose, because Community Hospital was not recognized by the Oklahoma Commission for Crippled Children, a state agency supported by public taxes.

An attempt to secure the Commission's approval failed completely, whereupon Community's medical director called in the press and gave publicity to the whole story. Public indignation was intense, and letters and telegrams of protest from aroused citizens were sent to the National Foundation, which eventually reversed its decision and wired funds for the polio unit.

WHAT happened to make the foundation officials reluctant to give the funds promised?

Why did the commission refuse its approval?

Why were the efforts of the hospital to protect its members and the community from a threatened menace interfered with and unnecessarily delayed? Why were the hospital's doctors forced to spend time and effort that should have gone into their medical work, on fighting for the right to do it?

Community Hospital's doctors charge that the Beckham County Medical Society brought pressure on the commission to refuse its approval of the hospital and both publicly and secretly did everything possible to prevent the medical center from raising funds.

The American Medical Society, which is the parent body of all state and county medical societies, has been opposing all voluntary health plans except those it sponsors. It may or may not be connected with the Beckham County Society's particular fight, but the society is carrying out AMA policy.

The "polio incident" is only one of the more recent scandals in which the county society has been allegedly involved in its fight to monopolize medical care in the area.

Some of them are outlined briefly in a petition for relief filed a short time ago in the state district court in behalf of the hospital by Attorneys Thurmond Arnold and Walton Hamilton of Washington, both nationally known authorities on anti-trust cases, and L. G. Brewer, of Elk City, Okla.

The petition, filed in the name of the Farmers' Union Hospital Association and 11 individual plaintiffs, charges the society with violations of the state's anti-trust laws and asks a minimum sum of $100,000 damages. Under the law, damages in anti-trust suits are trebled, which brings the amount of damages to $300,000.

THE SOCIETY filed an answer asking that more specific details be given and that a good part of the points in the complaint be struck out.

Judge Keane of the state court for the southwestern district of Oklahoma has set a hearing on the case for Monday, Jan. 8, at Sayre, Beckham county seat.

Roy Litel, Oklahoma attorney who does legal work for the big oil interests, and is also legal counsel for the state medical society, has been retained to defend the county medical society.

In its suit for damages the hospital charges in general that the society has violated the state common law and anti-trust laws in several ways. The society conspired to interfere in the hospital's affairs by imposing a professional boycott upon the hospital, its doctors and medical technicians, through circulation of false reports, and by numerous other unlawful acts, according to the hospital.

A number of these allegedly malicious and illegal acts are described in the petitions. Perhaps the most serious allegation is the way the society has maintained its monopoly by refusing membership to all doctors associated with the cooperative hospital.

This, it is charged, is not done openly but by underhanded means such as requiring that all applicants be recommended by two members of the society—but bringing pressure to bear upon the members to refuse to endorse the group health plan doctors.

Not a single other application for membership in the society by any practicing physician of "orthodox medicine" was turned down during the period covered by the complaint, the hospital alleges.

SINCE membership in the society is a requisite for professional association with other state, federal and private agencies, keeping the cooperative hospital's doctors out of the society means a practical boycott. The Community's doctors charge that the society has undertaken to supercede the state, which issues licenses to practice medicine, by its pressure on public and private agencies to bar the hospital's doctors from their services.

On one occasion, the society allegedly dissolved itself to get rid of a member, Dr. Shadid, then medical director of the hospital, who had belonged to the society for 20 years. Some months later, the society was set up again, leaving Dr. Shadid out, thus ousting him without risking the publicity of a formal expulsion.

This also excluded him from the state medical society and the AMA, as the county society is the unit through which membership in both groups is based.

Other underhanded tricks allegedly used by the county society include, the petition says:

RAISING of a large "slush fund" to "persuade" the Oklahoma legislature to pass a statute which would have the effect of outlawing the hospital;

Creation and circulation of false and malicious reports reflecting upon the personal integrity and professional reputation of the hospital's staff;

Intimidation of doctors who would like to work for the hospital but fear to put in jeopardy their standing in medical circles by becoming associated with an institution that has been made a victim of a nation-wide boycott.

The same type of morality the society has been accused of has also been charged in suits against various AMA affiliates in other states. Two of the most important ones were started in 1948 in Oregon and in California.

The Oregon case was brought by the U. S. Dept. of Justice against the state medical society, the Oregon Physicians' Service, various county medical societies and other AMA-sponsored groups and individuals involved, on charges of trying to monopolize prepaid medical care in the state.

In California, an independent prepayment health plan in San Diego, named the Complete Service Bureau hauled the San Diego Medical Society into court, charging it with a systematic drive to destroy the Bureau through a whispering campaign, smear ads, and reprisals against the plan's doctors and patients. The case is still in the courts and is reported to be coming up again this month.

A decision in favor of the state medical society and other defendants in the Oregon case was handed down last September by Judge Claude McCulloch of the U. S. District Court of Oregon, who held that the practices of which the AMA doctors in the state were accused had not violated the anti-trust laws. The Dept. of Justice is said to be preparing an appeal of the case to the Supreme Court.

AMA Lost The Only Monopoly Case Against It That Went To High Court

The one case involving the monopolistic practices of the American Medical Association and its subsidiaries so far to reach the U. S. Supreme Court resulted in an outstanding victory for the principle of independent group health plans.

The case to come before the Supreme Court concerned the Group Health Association of Washington, D. C., a non-profit medical cooperative first started by employes of the Federal Home Owners Loan Corp., and later opened for the voluntary membership of other government employes and residents in the area.

The AMA's medical society in Washington first attacked the Group Health in a District of Columbia court, charging the cooperative with being improperly engaged in the insurance business and in the "corporate practice of medicine." After the court upheld the cooperative, doctors connected with it were refused membership in the medical society or were expelled if they already belonged, and Group Health patients were refused admission in local hospitals.

In 1938, the U. S. Dept. of Justice brought an anti-trust suit against the AMA and certain of its subsidiaries and individual doctors, and Group Health was subsequently upheld in a unanimous decision handed down by the U. S. Court of Appeals for the District.

The defendants appealed, and in January, 1943, the U. S. Supreme Court affirmed the conviction of the AMA and D. C. Medical Society for violation of the Sherman anti-trust act.

Only MD's May Insure Health In 22 States

Under pressure from medical societies affiliated with the AMA, 22 states have passed laws designed to prevent anyone but physicians from setting up medical insurance plans. These states are Alabama, California, Florida, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina and Tennessee.

Bills permitting the incorporation of cooperative health plans introduced in Minnesota and Wisconsin in 1947 were fought bitterly by AMA medical societies in both states. In Wisconsin, a combination of rural groups supported by labor unions was successful in passing the bill, but in Minnesota, the bill was kept from being reported out of committee.

"In a way it's a relief—it was getting so there was one investigation after another to worry about."

Organizing Is Your Job, Council Told

ASSISTANT CIO Organization Director R. J. Thomas told delegates to the recent Delaware CIO convention that "each of you has a responsibility to the CIO to organize unorganized workers in this state under the banner of the CIO."

Thomas said that National CIO stands ready to help organize but must not be expected to do the entire job.

"You have taken an obligation by passing a resolution to help organize these workers," he said. The convention was held at Wilmington.

Thomas said that organized labor should not be discouraged by the results of the Nov. 7 election.

"That election was not a defeat for us," he said. "It is a matter of record that more progress was made by liberal forces than in any other previous off-year election. CIO-PAC made important gains and in spite of some disappointments laid the groundwork for a resounding victory in 1952."

One of the most important resolutions passed by the convention urged creation of a state dept. of labor and industrial relations.

IN A SPEECH at the convention, Lieut. Gov. Alexis I. duPont Bayard endorsed the resolution.

"If you work as vigorously for this measure as you did for repeal of House Bill 212, you are going to get a state dept. of labor," Bayard said.

He was referring to an anti-labor law, which was passed by the General Assembly in 1947 and repealed by that body in 1949.

A resolution passed by the convention called for continuation of federal rent control. The delegates also adopted a number of resolutions pertaining to other proposed state legislation.

Proposals included a state income tax based on net rather than gross income with an exemption on the first $3600 of earned income, revision of the state unemployment compensation law to increase benefits to $42 a week for 26 weeks and payments for strikers.

THE CONVENTION also urged a revision of the state wage and hour act to increase the minimum wage to $1 an hour, and passage of a state labor relations law providing for collective bargaining elections and certification of union representation.

Another resolution proposed a law requiring motorists to post bonds in accidents involving property damage or personal injury, and compulsory insurance for reckless drivers.

Speakers included John Edelman, Washington legislative representative of the CIO Textile Workers; Tilford Dudley, assistant National PAC director, and E. D. Hodson, Delaware CIO regional director.

Gilbert E. Lewis was re-elected council president for the tenth consecutive year. Elmer J. Hammel was named secretary-treasurer.

Missouri May Give Jobless Higher Income

The governor's advisory commission on unemployment compensation of Missouri has recommended an increase in unemployment compensation payments from $20 to $25. The commission, however, turned down a plan to increase payments from 20 to 24 weeks.

THESE DELEGATES from 16 local unions formed the Alameda County, Cal., CIO Council. The new council replaces one whose charter was revoked by CIO Pres. Philip Murray after it was found to be "no longer representative" of CIO membership in Alameda County.

ICFTU Body Flays Spain, Red China

The executive board of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, meeting recently in Brussels, Belgium, adopted resolutions censuring the dictatorships of Communist China and Fascist Spain.

One resolution protested against the decision of the UN Assembly to revoke a 1946 resolution urging the withdrawal of ambassadors from Franco-Spain and barring Spain from membership in the UN Specialized Agencies.

Another resolution condemned the "double act of aggression which the Communist regime of China has been committing, by joining the aggressors against the Republic of Korea and by invading peaceful Tibet."

A third resolution noted "the reactionary and anti-union trade union policy of the Peruvian government" which has issued sanctions against the Federation of Textile Workers in that country.

Other resolutions condemned the attacks of Communists forces on trade union liberties in "several democratic countries" and called for the speedy convening of a Japanese Peace Conference to obtain early repatriation of the Japanese still detained in Soviet-controlled territories.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer addressed the Seventh Annual Convention of the Transport Workers Union of America in New York City. The capable Michael Quill, president of the TWU, presided, and did a wonderful job. The TWU has made great progress since the writer and the union met 13 years ago in New York. The writer arrived in New York as Regional Director at the time the TWU was formed. Since the first contract was negotiated, the TWU has made tremendous gains for its members in wages, social security, holidays, pensions, etc.

Allan Haywood

It has proven itself a dynamic organization and Michael Quill, Gustav Faber, associated officers and members are to be congratulated. The writer, by the way, was presented with a diploma and a shillelagh at the convention and I cherish them greatly.

One of our first significant NLRB election victories since the recent CIO convention has taken place in Lima, Ohio, and Detroit, Mich. The Food & Tobacco Workers employed by the Div. 6 Cigar Chain resented being put in a merger with other groups to form the Distributive, Production and Office Workers. In the midst of the terrific snow storms that swept through Ohio and Michigan, out of 1542 eligible voters, 1185 voted as follows: CIO Brewery Workers 707, DPO 449, challenged 6.

Brother Paul Fessenden was in charge of this campaign, assisted by CIO Reps. Andrew Evans and Thomas Brennan, the Ohio CIO Council and Reg. Dir. Walter Harris. This is one more nail in the casket of the "Dying Puny Outfit" and its officers, Ossman, Henderson and Durkin.

The writer attended the IUE-CIO convention in Milwaukee. Wisc., and from there will go to the Chemical Workers district convention in St. Louis, Mo. More about them next week.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bender reports that in a union shop election held at the Bendix Frieze Instrument Co., Towson, Md., the IUE-CIO was victorious by the following vote: Eligible 422, IUE-CIO 247, against 127, void 2.

Reg. Dir. Michael Mann reports the following CIO election victories in Illinois: Representation—Euclid Candy Company of Illinois, Inc., Chicago, Ill., eligible 110, United Bakery and Confectionery Workers Union, Local 15 (affiliated with the Chicago Joint Board, RWDSU-CIO), 67, against 35. Reynolds Metals Co., McCook, Ill., eligible 9, Steelworkers-CIO 7, against 2.

Union security elections—The Borden Co., Bordens Soy Processing Div., Kankakee, Ill., eligible 29, Chemical Workers-CIO 23, against 3. Inland Steel Co., Chicago, Ill., eligible 14,891, Steelworkers-CIO 11,358, against 1,143. Gilbert & Bennet Mfg. Co., Blue Island, Ill., eligible 53, Steelworkers 48, against 1. Hemp & Company, Inc., Macomb, Ill., eligible 209, Steelworkers 178, against 10.

Reg. Dir. Pete Mosele reports the following USA-CIO union shop elections: Lovell & Dressel Co., Inc., Arlington, N. J., eligible 75, 38 for, 20 against. American Can Machine Shop (office workers), Newark, N. J., 73 for, 27 against. Buffalo Tank Co. (Bethlehem Steel subsidiary), Dunellen, N. J., 72 for, 27 against. Glaser-Steers Co. (Belleville Plant), Belleville, N. J., 40 for, 0 against.

Adolph Germer, Director of Organization, CIO Intl. Woodworkers, reports that in a representation election held at the McIntosh Lumber Co., Blue Lake, Calif., the workers voted in favor of the IWA-CIO by the following vote: eligible 117, IWA 67, no union 39. IWA Reps. Bill Baker and Leonard Simmons and Vice-Pres. Al Hartung handled this campaign.

Al Hartnett, Assistant to the Chairman, IUE-CIO, reports the following IUE election victories: David Paradise Co., Union City, N. J., IUE 15, no union 0. Eisler Engineering, Newark, N. J., IUE 68, UE 58, no union 0. Ruggles Klingeman Mfg. Co., Salem, Mass., IUE 26, no union 14.

Morris Pizer, President, United Furniture Workers-CIO, reports the following UFW-CIO election victories: Keyport Wood Products Co., Keyport, N. J., UFWA 35, AFL 9. Owosso Furniture Co., Benton, Ark., UFWA 251, no union 65. Lincoln Industries, Damascus, Va., UFWA 370, no union 247. Mason-Parker Co., Gardner, Mass., UFWA 98, no union 37. Aladdin Co., Bay City, Mich., UFWA 73, no union 34, AFL 5.

John Riffe, National Director, CIO Organizing Committee, reports the following election victories in the South: Farm Industries, Decatur, Ala., RWDSU 73, no union 8. Robert Scholze Tannery, Chattanooga, Tenn., UGCCW 67, AFL 30, challenged 1. Wertheimer Bag Co., Wilmington, N. C., UTSE-CIO 61, against 10. Norfolk Tallow Co., Norfolk, Va., OWIU-CIO 43, against 28, challenged 10. Greenback Industries, Inc., Greenback, Tenn., USA-CIO 23, against 3. Buffalo Tank, Charlotte, N. C., USA-CIO 22, against 2. Halsey Hardwood Co., Edenton, N. C., IWA-CIO 69, against 28, void 1. Montevallo Limestone Co., Montevallo, Ala., USA-CIO 13, against 0. Container Corp. of America, Fort Worth, Tex., UPA-CIO 269, no union 67.

New Council Is Formed At Oakland, Cal.

SIXTEEN local unions with 10,000 members are affiliated with the new Greater Alameda County CIO Council, which was organized at a recent special conference in Oakland, Cal.

The new council was formed after CIO Pres. Philip Murray four months ago revoked the charter of the old council, which was found to be "no longer representative" of CIO membership in Alameda County.

It was announced that the new council will seek to give effective central representation to East Bay CIO locals in community affairs and political action, and to assist—in cooperation with the CIO local and international unions—in organizing, bargaining and strikes.

The immediate goal is a stepped-up drive in cooperation with all of organized labor to win six-month extension of rent control in Oakland and other East Bay cities.

TIM FLYNN, Northern California CIO regional director, told the delegates:

"This council is being formed in a very critical period for this nation, and for the labor movement. This council must get CIO representation on all government war agencies in this area, to see to it that our people get protection."

Temporary officers were elected unanimously. These officers, who will serve until nomination and election of council officers, executive board members and trustees early next year, are:

President, Arnold F. Campo; vice president, S. M. Pratt, and secretary-treasurer, James McKenna.

This is the third new council to be formed in California in recent weeks. Councils found to be failing to represent the CIO membership were replaced by new ones in Contra Costa County and San Diego.

Poll Ordered For Packing Shed Area

The National Labor Relations Board has directed a representation election so that 4300 California packing shed workers can choose between a CIO union and a CIO-expelled union.

The unions involved are Local 78, United Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers, CIO, and Local 78, Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Workers, FTA. They seek to represent employes of 63 companies banded together as Imperial Valley, San Joaquin Valley and Yuma Valley Shippers Labor Committee.

FTA, expelled by the CIO March 1, 1950, protested the use of the same local number by the CIO union, but the NLRB overruled the objection. FTA also protested the election on the basis of a claim it represented the workers with individual contracts for many years and with the overall employer group since 1947.

A date in February, to be determined by the regional NLRB director, was picked to hold the election in the Imperial and Yuma valleys. At that time 4300 workers will be engaged in packing lettuce, 50% or more of whom will move on to the San Joaquin valley to pick melons.

The CIO last October defeated FTA in an NLRB election for representation rights of 3600 lettuce shed workers in the Salinas-Watsonville area of California.

House Passes Watered-Down Excess Profits Bill

THE LAME duck session of Congress is playing ducks and drakes with the excess profits question.

The House on Dec. 5 passed a bill which would raise somewhere between $3 and $3.5 billion a year. The tax rates would allow corporations—particularly the big ones—to keep profits almost as high as those of the lush 1946-49 period.

In other words, the bill says that there should be an extra tax of 75% of corporate earnings above 85% of the best three-year average in the four-year 1946-49 period.

Or if this costs too much, then the corporation can decide to pay it another way: 75% of all earnings exceeding a stipulated percentage of invested capital. (The greater the amount of invested capital, the smaller the percentage exempted from the tax.)

WHICHEVER WAY the corporations decide to do it, the total paid can't exceed 67% of entire earnings for the year.

CIO had suggested the rates be a whole lot tougher: 85% of earnings exceeding 75% of earnings in the entire four-year period, instead of the best three out of four, with no alternative way of figuring it and no ceiling. This would have raised between $6 and $7 billion, which the government is going to have to get from somewhere.

The House did this by a vote of 378-20, which indicates nothing whatsoever about how thoroughly Congress embraces the principle of excess profits taxation. What happened was that the GOP had its own substitute proposal and when this was licked, all the ones that had voted for it climbed on the bandwagon, in order to have it show in the record that they did vote for some kind of an excess profits tax.

THE GOP substitute was put forward as "much fairer": it would have raised regular normal and surtax corporation rates by 5% and then would have allowed the corporations to keep 100% of earnings equal to those in the best three years out of the four before starting to pay an 85% excess profits tax.

Opponents of this measure said that a raise in the regular tax rate, which now totals 45%, would hit hardest the corporations that were smaller, newer, or having the hardest time. It was the same principle as a sales tax, they said—and indeed it was, and indeed the GOP is prepared to go ahead in the next session and recommend a sales tax, too.

Neither the GOP nor the House majority would apply their tax increases to corporations earning less than $25,000 a year. Both made their proposals retroactive to July 1, 1950.

Practically all the experts dammed the House bill — some saying it didn't go far enough, other decrying the excess profits principle. The Senate Finance Committee received the measure with less than enthusiasm. The wise money said the group, headed by conservative Sen. George (D. Ga.), who is flanked by Sens. Taft (R. O.) and Millikin (R. Colo.), might try to stall the whole proposal till January or later.

Labor's position is emphatic, although the AFL proposal differs from that of the CIO in some details. The unions fear, since Congress is going to have to raise more money, that if the added burden is not carried by those who can best afford to bear it, it will be passed on to those who can't, in the form of heavier income taxes and, possibly, a federal sales tax.

Senate, House Pass Differing Versions Of Rent Control

LOOKS like some kind of an extension of automatic federal rent control will come out of Congress, whether or not the city of Los Angeles is decontrolled.

The House and Senate on Dec. 7 sent to conference differing versions of a rent control bill, and ironically enough the fate of Los Angeles tenants is now directly in the hands of the conferees.

The House bill, passed 221-152 after a GOP motion to bounce the bill back to the Banking Committee had failed, would extend till March 31, 1951, the deadline for community decision on whether to keep controls till the end of June. (The present law says that federal controls continue automatically only till the end of this month. If communities want it continued beyond that, they must make the decision before Dec. 31.)

THE SENATE bill would push the deadline forward only until Feb. 28. This passed 55-28.

Not only is the Senate bill less satisfactory than the House bill, but it contains a large joker aimed specifically at Los Angeles tenants and supplied by none other than Sen. Cain (R. Wash.), the darling of the landlord lobby.

By voice vote, the Senate adopted Cain's amendment, which says in effect that communities can decontrol by simple resolution of the governing body.

The Los Angeles city council did exactly that, back in June, but Tighe Woods, head of federal rent control, refused to sign a decontrol order, and the U. S. court of appeals in Washington sustained him. Woods' reason was that the council had acted without holding the hearings or considering the evidence required by law. Cain's amendment simply legalizes what the council did.

No such shenanigan cropped up in the House bill, so the conferees have a 50-50 chance to sustain Woods if they want to.

The Senate defeated an amendment by Sen. Flanders (R. Vt.) which would have required Woods to raise all controlled rents to the level of uncontrolled rents in the same area.

Sen. Taft (R. O.) was right in there pitching against the extension. Rent control is purely a wartime measure, he said, and this isn't war.

MEANWHILE, the Office of the Housing Expediter reported that a total of 845 communities, with a combined population of 25,631,000, had voted to ask extension of federal rent controls till the end of June. Approximately 3,730,000 rental units are involved, or just about half the number now under controls.

This left some 1600 communities with populations of 1000 or more still to be heard from. They were in a sort of never-never land — their governing bodies had taken no action either to extend controls or get rid of them.

Included in the list of cities still silent as the present deadline approaches are Detroit, Baltimore, New Orleans, Minneapolis, Seattle, Kansas City, Indianapolis and Denver. In all these places, city councils are under strong union pressure to vote for extension.

12-11

Council Asks End Of Separate Maryland Univ. For Negroes

APPROXIMATELY 150 delegates attending the twelfth annual Maryland CIO Council convention at Cumberland called on incoming Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin and the 1951 legislature to discontinue the Univ. of Maryland's separate school for Negroes.

"Negroes should be privileged to go to any college they wish—including the Univ. of Maryland at College Park," the resolution stated.

Maryland CIO Reg. Dir. Frank J. Bender told the delegates that the CIO insists it shall have a share of any improvements in the methods of production.

"We want a share in the increased profits which larger and more efficient equipment brings to owners and investors," he declared. "We want, regardless of the price of milk, or the price of shoes, or the price of rent, or the price of meat, increased earnings. That is the American way."

IN INTRODUCING State Sen. B. Kimble to the convention, Bender called him "labor's best friend in Annapolis." Kimble said it was necessary for labor in Maryland to present a united front to get favorable legislation passed in the state.

"What labor needs in this state," he declared, "is a single legislative committee which will speak for all organized labor. Until this is brought about, labor will get only the crumbs."

Anthony W. Smith, assistant director of CIO councils, outlined the CIO's regional planning program, designed to relieve urban congestion by the decentralization of industry. He said the CIO has prepared a proposal for the systematic moving of industry from the crowded, atom-bomb-vulnerable cities to rural areas.

The only issue which brought debate was an auditing committee report recommending that dues to the council from the state's locals be advanced from 2c per month per member to 5c. By a split vote, the delegates voted a compromise which increased the per capita tax to 3½c.

THE CONVENTION proposed that the 1951 legislature raise the minimum weekly unemployment compensation payment to $35, exclusive of extra dependency benefits. The present top—not minimum—is $25 weekly.

The delegates also went on record as favoring legislation that would:

Set up a graduated state income tax with higher personal exemptions, tighten the state's labor laws, provide minimum wages and hours for industries in intra-state commerce, and expand the state labor department.

Also requested was legislation that would require industries to pay employes weekly, tighten the law relating to installment purchase of land, provide for the installation of voting machines and tighten the anti-pollution laws.

Ernest J. Moran of the Auto Workers was elected president when Bender declined to run for the office. Charles A. Della, Steelworkers, was reelected secretary.

NAACP Plans To Aid Jailed GIs In Tokyo

THURGOOD Marshall, special counsel of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, will fly to Tokyo as soon as the final clearance is obtained in order to aid convicted 24th Infantrymen, according to Walter White, NAACP executive secretary.

"Appeals for aid from imprisoned Negro soldiers and reports from war correspondents, returned officers and enlisted men, indicate that many of the convicted GIs have been victims of racial discrimination and need our full support," White said. For this reason, he added, the NAACP committee on administration this week approved the plan to send Marshall to the scene of the courts-martial.

The NAACP, which has made the defense of these soldiers the No. 1 item on its legal defense agenda, has received a constant stream of letters from the imprisoned men asking for assistance. Sentences imposed by courts-martial in the war zone range from 10 years' imprisonment at hard labor to death.

Marshall will leave for Tokyo as soon as final clearance is obtained from the State and Defense Departments and arrangements made for transport.

Action on behalf of Lt. Leon A. Gilbert, whose death sentence was commuted by President Truman to 20 years in prison, will be pushed to the limit, Marshall said.

He recently conferred in Washington with NAACP attorney Frank Reeves and Judson E. Ruch, York, Pa., attorney, retained by Mrs. Gilbert.

The lawyers agreed to act as co-counsel for the convicted officer in all future handling of the case. While on duty in Korea, Lt. Gilbert was accused to refusing to obey an order of a superior officer. He said that he knew that the carrying out of the order would have meant death for him and his men.

MCS Vote On Ban On Reds Urged

The Portland branch of the Marine Cooks & Stewards union wants a nation-wide secret referendum of MCS members on a constitutional amendment to ban Communists from the Union. The union was expelled by the CIO on charges of Communist domination.

The Portland branch resolution said: "the innocent membership of the NUMCS has had to pay from their pockets with funds, and carry the taint of being among the disloyal, because of the actions of a certain few in our union that seek to destroy all the advantages of being American, under immunity and protection of the Bill of Rights which guarantees the freedoms they seek to destroy."

James Randall, chairman of the Committee to Combat Communist Influence in the NUMCS, said his group now represents more than 1000 members of the union.

"Walt, I'd like you to meet Al Zing, jet test pilot."

WEEKLY PUBLICATION
of the
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
$1.00
A YEAR
5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 18, 1950 82 No. 51

New Contract Brings Chrysler In Line With GM And Ford

THE CIO Auto Workers last week signed a contract with the Chrysler Corp. containing an escalator and other clauses similar to those in agreements between the union and General Motors and Ford.

Like the Ford and the GM agreements, the Chrysler contract contains a 4c-an-hour annual pay raise and maximum monthly pensions of $125. Under the old pact, the maximum pension was $100 monthly.

The new agreement, which replaces the three-year contract signed last May with the UAW after a bitter 100-day strike, covers 105,000 hourly rated production workers and 20,000 salaried employes.

The 4c increases become effective on June 1, in 1951, 1952, 1953 and 1954. In addition, workers also will receive an immediate 1c-an-hour increase. The new contract contains no reopening clauses.

The cost-of-living adjustment formula provides for a 1c advance or decline in wage rates with each corresponding 1.14 change in the Bureau of Labor Statistics consumers price index. Adjustments in pay will be made at quarterly intervals with 11c as the downward limit.

The new pact also grants a modified union shop.

Increases in insurance benefits include raising sickness and accident payments from $25 to $32 weekly and company payment of half the family premiums for hospital and medical insurance.

THE CONTRACT gives Chrysler workers their third pay increase in eight months.

Last May the company and the union signed a three-year agreement calling for an estimated 11c an hour increase, chiefly in pension and insurance benefits. Subsequently agreements were reached peacefully with Ford and GM.

In August, Chrysler started a round of voluntary pay raises in the industry by agreeing to UAW proposals for a 10c-an-hour wage boost for all workers and 15c hourly for skilled employes.

Eastern Poverty Stirs Millions Against The West, Says Brophy

COMMUNISTS in Asia have capitalized on the "unbelievable poverty" of the people and have poisoned the minds of millions against the West, John Brophy, representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions at the United Nations, told a Catholic Conference on Industrial Problems at Portland, Ore., last week.

But the poverty, he maintained, is due not so much to the pressure of population as to failure to develop resources—a "great challenge" which the ICFTU is doing its part to meet by building up trade unions, providing technical aid, raising capital for the development of agriculture and other means.

"Are we going to win? Is there time?" he asked. "There is an obligation on us. We must strive for peace. We have to be missionaries of social justice to all lands."

A feature of the conference was the presentation of an actual problem, without identities, in industrial relations to a panel of industry, labor and public representatives of which George Brown, secretary-treasurer of the Oregon CIO Council, was a member.

The panel considered a case in which a worker failed to appear, seriously impairing a production schedule. Management penalized him two days' work. His union protested the punishment was too severe, making the claim that he had automobile trouble while returning from a vacation.

Only one panel member—Prof. Vladas Juodeika, of the Univ. of Portland—upheld the company. The two industry and two labor members, and the second public member, agreed the punishment was unjust or too severe.

Company Fined For Vitamin Deficiency

If you have been taking vitamin B-complex tablets made by the White Laboratories Inc., Newark, N. J., and you haven't been bubbling over with pep and energy, the Food and Drug Administration of the Federal Security Agency isn't surprised.

FSA has slapped a $2000 fine on the concern, charging that the tablets it manufactures were 40 to 67% below the potency of the various listed components. The firm pleaded guilty, attributing the shortages to a "clerical error."

Pegano To Head CWA Education

Pres. Joseph Beirne of the CIO Communications Workers has named Jules Pegano educational director of the union.

Pegano was formerly educational director for Virginia Div. 33 and did an outstanding job in that capacity. He has long been active in union work. Prior to his assignment with Div. 33, he was field representative for the AFL Intl. Ladies Garment Workers.

CIO, AFL And IAM Unite In Aiding Liberal College

IN A STIRRING display of labor unity, CIO Pres. Philip Murray, AFL Pres. William Green and the independent Machinists' Pres. Al Hayes addressed a banquet to raise money for liberal Roosevelt College, Chicago.

Green said that he hoped that the occasion foreshadowed another "to celebrate the formation of a united labor movement."

The CIO and the AFL have been cooperating more closely in international relations, the legislative field and political action since Murray made a unity proposal last April 4.

In a letter to the AFL, the Railroad Brotherhoods, the Mine Workers and the Machinists, Murray at that time proposed the establishment of a joint committee to coordinate labor's efforts in the economic, legislative and political spheres and to seek the organic unity of all American labor.

THE PROPOSAL was subsequently accepted by the Miners Union and the Machinists, and the Brotherhoods and the AFL proposed further study.

A meeting of committees of the CIO and the AFL immediately reached agreement for continuing cooperation in international relations, legislation and political action.

At the CIO convention in Chicago last month, a resolution was adopted endorsing the action of the CIO committee and directing it to continue to meet with AFL and other labor organizations to attain "organic unity of all American labor."

The Roosevelt College dinner, attended by top mid-Western CIO, AFL and IAM leaders as well as the national heads, was held in support of the college's Samuel Gompers Memorial Fund, which will be used to expand labor education and provide scholarships for needy students.

Keynote was struck by William A. Lee, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, who said: "Who knows? Maybe our opportunity to sit here and break bread will lead to ironing out the little differences that keep us apart."

SPEAKERS hailed Roosevelt College for admitting students without regard to race, religion or economic class and for putting labor on a level with other educational fields.

(Both management and labor are represented on Roosevelt's board of trustees. President Walter Reuther of the Auto Workers and Morris Bialis, manager of the Chicago Joint Board of the AFL Ladies Garment Workers Union are board members.)

"Up until very recently our institutions of higher learning for the most part were either unfriendly to the cause of organized labor, or, if not unfriendly, somewhat apathetic and aloof," Murray told the diners. "Frankly, for many years the American labor movement was suspicious of many of our colleges for this very reason . . .

"We had the feeling that many of them were too snobbish to become associated in any way with the labor movement and too cautious, too conservative to present our side of the picture to their students and to the public at large."

Green pointed out that Roosevelt "is the first American educational institution to give labor education equal status with other specified training in the arts, sciences, and professions."

(The director of the labor division, Frank McCallister, ranks equally with the deans of other divisions.)

IN MOST other schools, Green said, labor has little or no say. "Labor, which gave so much to the cause of popular education and whose children make up the majority of the students, still has relatively little influence in its administration," he said.

"The very interests who led the resistance against the expansion of educational opportunities are frequently in positions of control of school administration. In many, if not most, areas, educational facilities are in the hands of the enemies of mass education, rather than of its friends."

As a consequence, the AFL president said, "teachers are overworked and under-paid, and those who engage in union activities or who try to expose their students to both sides of current economic and social questions are often victimized.

"Courses which might help youth in meeting the responsibilities of citizenship are watered down or slanted to suit the tastes of reactionary school board members."

HAYES declared that labor education will help give working people their rightful role in American life. He also noted that disunity in labor is slowing down union progress.

"Labor has been on the defensive since the end of the war," the IAM head observed. "We have to expend all of our energy and much of our resources to hold our ground or to make inch-length advance . . .

"How much of our predicament is due to our own disunity can be measured, I think, by the strength we still maintain in our divided condition. How much stronger we would be to deal with reaction if we were united is not difficult to imagine."

Among other top leaders at the banquet were Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization; Joseph D. Keenan, director of AFL Labor's League for Political Education; Willard S. Townsend, president of the CIO Transport Service Employees; and P. L. Siemiller, general vice president of the IAM.

LPA

ICFTU OKs Mission's Report On Far East, Launches Probe Of Conditions In Austria

THE EXECUTIVE board of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has accepted the recommendations of its mission of last summer to the Far East and adopted a six-point emergency program to flight off Communist influence in Asian trade unions.

Meanwhile, an ICFTU delegation last week investigated the economic and social effects of the continuing diplomatic stalemate in Austria. Particular attention was paid to the situation of the workers.

One phase of the Far Eastern program, the establishment of an information and advisory center in Singapore with jurisdiction over Asia, has been put into effect. Heading the temporary office there is Dhyan Mungat, a member of the seamen's union of India.

Other points were:

Appointment of an ICFTU representative for India, Japan and the Philippines, to be responsible to the Singapore center.

Establishment of labor colleges, as quickly as possible, at Singapore and Kandy, Ceylon.

ICFTU participation in the work of the United Nations Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, with emphasis on free trade unionism and ICFTU leadership in working for relief of the Asian masses from poverty and low living standards.

Requests to national labor centers of countries having substantial investments in Asia "to undertake a vigorous campaign against the reactionary labor policies which characterize certain industrial business and plantation firms."

Expression of ICFTU concern over growing repressive labor legislation in Asia.

The mission to Asia included John Brophy, at that time CIO director of industrial union councils and now on leave to serve as ICFTU representative at the United Nations.

IN AUSTRIA, the Soviet Union has obstructed negotiations for a peace treaty, causing serious economic dislocations, although the Western Powers have aided the country by cutting down the cost of occupation.

The situation has been aggravated by the widespread Soviet confiscation of Austrian industries on the pretext that they are German properties.

Members of the delegation are Pres. U. Oosterhuis of the Netherland Trade Union Federation; Robert Willis, member of the general council of the British Trade Congress, and Alfred Braunthal, head of the ICFTU Economic and Social Dept. During their visit in Austria, the delegates were the guests of the Austria Trade Union Federation, at the request of which the mission was granted.

"Where do I go to complain about the complaint department?"

Auto Industry Rejects Voluntary Price Control

"VOLUNTARY" price control went out the window last week, the first time it was formally tried, while manufacturers all over the nation went on announcing first-of-the-year increases in anticipation of a freeze.

The auto industry, one of the major factors in this country's economic life, was called to Washington and given a gentle "or else" in the wake of a vigorous and sincere appeal to hold the price line voluntarily.

The steel industry had earlier refused to take any such step, but that was before the general hue and cry for dramatic, drastic price action had reached its present intensity—before the Korean reverses, in short.

Important officials of the 10 leading auto manufacturers spent all day closeted with Economic Stabilization Administrator Alan Valentine and Price Administrator Michael V. DiSalle. At the end of the conference, the manufacturers publicly announced they were not going to reduce prices.

TWO IN particular—Ford and General Motors—were singled out for appeal, since they had just finished announcing price increases. But all were asked to cooperate. The general idea was that Ford and GM should rescind their increases and the others should promise to hold the line at least till next March. The manufacturers unanimously replied that they wouldn't do it.

Valentine told the group that unless they took some voluntary action, it would be impossible to "avoid mandatory controls." Beyond that he did not go, except to say that ESA would "announce a decision shortly."

The rumor factory immediately started operating a mile a minute, its production increased by President Truman's forthcoming address to the nation, which was scheduled for late last Friday night.

Among other industries that have announced price increases for the near future are electrical products, tools, hardware, shop equipment, and other metal products, all of which are slated to go up from five to 10%.

OTHER PRODUCTS on which manufacturers announced substantial boosts in the year's closing weeks inculded tin, up 8c a pound; wrapping and tissue paper, up 25c a ream; newsprint, $10 a ton; automobile and truck tires, 7½%; shoes selling for under $10, up $1 a pair; coffee, up 2c a pound; furniture, up eight to 20%; wool carpets, 10% (50% over a year ago); rayon fibre, 6c a pound; heavy oil, 25c a barrel; records, 10c each, and television sets, 10%.

Producers were trying to pin the blame for the new high prices on labor costs. Labor economists easily demonstrated, however, that wage raises are only a small percentage of costs and profits are booming.

A recent survey by Dun & Bradstreet showed that eight out of 10 business executives plan to raise prices on their products the first of the year. They expect bigger sales than ever in the first three months of 1951.

"I went to the doctor last night about those bumps on my arms, but he says they're all right . . . they're muscles."

Anna Rosenberg Probe Is A Dud

What had all the earmarks of a blundering, bumbling reactionary plot to smear Mrs. Anna M. Rosenberg as a Communist and deprive the country of her services as Assistant Secretary of Defense flopped last week with a thud that must have made the Kremlin quiver.

The Senate Armed Services Committee, which previously had voted to recommend confirmation of her appointment, unanimously renewed its recommendation on Dec. 14 after exhaustive hearings. The hearings were instituted through alleged information that came from Benjamin Freedman, New York anti-Communist, anti-Zionist businessman who has connections with the lunatic fringe of neo-fascism in the United States. The chief witness, Ralph De Sola, a former Communist, testified he saw Mrs. Rosenberg at meetings of a Communist front groups. All his supporting witnesses refused flatly to bear him out.

Opponent Concedes Williams' Election

Michigan's teeter-totter gubernatorial election seesawed to a finale last week when former Gov. Harry F. Kelly (R.) conceded the re-election of Gov. G. Mennen Williams (D.).

—From Washington Post

"We're Gonna Have To Do Something About That Boy."

Company Can't Use Affidavit Lack As Afterthought--NLRB

A UNION'S failure to file non-Communist affidavits under the Taft-Hartley Act can no longer be used by an employer as an excuse for refusal to bargain unless he relies upon it at the time he refuses to bargain, the National Labor Relations Board ruled last week.

The board's action closed one of the many loopholes through which recalcitrant employers have been ducking unions of their employes. The ruling was made by a majority consisting of Chairman Paul M. Herzog and Members John M. Houston and Paul L. Styles.

It was based, essentially, on the fact that T-H sets up the non-Communist oath as a pre-requisite for action on its grievances by the board, and nowhere "wipes out the obligations of employers."

Members James J. Reynolds, Jr., and Abe Murdock, dissenting, held that a union's right to exclusive recognition is a privilege created by Congress, and that Congress "effectively and completely extinguished the privilege" for a non-complying union.

The decision overruled an earlier action in December, 1949, involving the AFL and the Andrews Co., Spartanburg, S. C. At that time a majority consisting of Reynolds, Murdock and J. Copeland Gray, who was succeeded soon after by Styles, held that an employer was not obliged to bargain with a union unless it had already complied at the time it sought to bargain.

THE PRESENT case started when the CIO Textile Workers on Sept. 3, 1947, a month after the effective date of T-H, asked the New Jersey Carpet Mills, Inc., of Engishtown, N. J., for recognition as exclusive bargaining representative of its employes. The period was one of grace so far as non-Communist oath compliance was concerned, and union officers had not filed the affidavits. They did so, however, by Oct. 24, 1947.

The company at first ignored the union's demand for recognition, then refused to recognize it without an NLRB election.

Agents of the firm asked employes about their membership in the union, threatened them with loss of pay if the union entered the shop, and discriminatorily discharged Richard Perrine, NLRB said.

The union's lack of compliance at the time the demand for recognition was served was not mentioned by the company until it filed its formal answer to the NLRB complaint, issued by the General Counsel at the request of the union on March 14, 1949.

"The conclusion is inescapable," said the majority in its opinion, "that in refusing to recognize the union, the company was motivated, not by a good-faith doubt of the union's majority, but by a desire to destroy the union's majority through procrastination and delay."

THE BOARD found unanimously that the company had not bargained in good faith after the union had complied with the filing requirement.

It unanimously ordered the company to bargain in good faith, cease discouraging membership in the Textile Workers or any other labor organization of its employes, and stop questioning its employes about their union membership, threatening them with loss of pay and other disadvantages if the union won bargaining rights, and to reinstate Perrine with back pay.

The majority also found that the company had violated the law by refusing to bargain in the period before the union complied.

"The issue before us is one of law," it wrote, "raising technical questions of construction of a statute written in 1947. It relates to the legal consequences of temporary non-compliance under the status as written, not to the undoubted evil of communism in labor organizations.

"This being so, we do not believe that, even though all of us abhor communism, a procedural limitation upon the 'use of the processes of the Board,' by which Congress denied a remedy through Government to those who fail to satisfy Government's requirements, can or should be converted by this board's own decision into a nullification of a right conferred on employes by statute."

Herzog went further. He said in a separate observation that he would not hold it a violation of the law when an employer tells a union that he is refusing to negotiate with it because of non-compliance at the time the union asks to negotiate.

Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO General Counsel, said:

"The CIO welcomes and applauds the decision rendered today by the National Labor Relations Board in the New Jersey Carpet Mills case.

"That decision overrules in large part the earlier decision of the board in the Andrews case, in which the board had held that an employer could defeat a charge of refusing to bargain with a union by showing that at the time of the refusal this union was not in compliance with Section 9(f), (g) or (h) of the Taft-Hartley Act.

"UNDER THE Andrews decision, an employer whose refusal to bargain was in fact in no way related to the compliance status of the union could, long after the event, defeat an unfair labor practice charge by pointing to the union's perhaps inadvertent non-compliance.

"In the vast majority of refusal to bargain cases in which the question has been presented, the employer did not in fact raise any issue of compliance until long after the refusal to bargain. Thus, the board's new decision amounts in practical effect to an overruling of the Andrews decision as regards the majority of pending cases."

There Is No Peace On Earth

But There's Comfort In Knowing That We Of Free Nations Are Fighting For—Not Against—Peaceful World Order

By ALLAN L. SWIM

YOU FLIP ON your radio these days and you hear Christmas music—you hear about "peace on earth and good will toward men."

It's a welcome relief from the news reports telling about misery and death in Korea and the struggle that goes on within the United Nations.

But somehow it has a hollow sound.

It always has a hollow sound when men are killing each other on the field of battle—when there is no peace on earth.

And yet the music and the Christmas talk are good—for they reflect our wishes. They are symbols of our desires. And they tell us we haven't substituted the god of war for the Prince of Peace.

PERHAPS THE Christmas season is a good time for us to look at the troubles in which we find ourselves—to look at them from a "different" point of view.

Our own nation, founded on the theory of freedom and the brotherhood of man, is now leading the world crusade against communism.

To most people this is a campaign of democracy against totalitarianism, a struggle of statism against capitalism.

But it goes much deeper than that.

The Communists threaten the very foundations of religion throughout the world. They would make an international mockery of the things for which Christ died.

They—if they could—would destroy the church and substitute for it worship of the state.

IT IS TRUE that many persons in the United States and in the other free countries do not go to church.

But they can if they want to. The churches are there. They are operated as their members see fit.

Imagine how it would be if the government suddenly issued a decree closing up our churches or placing them under strict government supervision.

If that happened, then one of the things for which the founders of our nation fought would be gone.

Yes, freedom of religion would be gone.

And civilization would have taken a backward step.

Keep this in mind when you read or hear about the Communists—because one of their first moves when they take over a country is to close or assume control of the churches.

ACTUALLY WHAT we are fighting is not communism, in the true sense of the word. We are battling pagan totalitarianism.

The Russian leaders have been employing almost exactly the same tactics as were used by Hitler and Mussolini.

First was the "big lie." Then came expansion without warfare. Then came real war.

The difference is that the Russians have been able to get others to do the bloodshedding.

Underlying it all is an utter disregard for freedom and the dignity of the individual. Nowhere can you find any evidence of "do unto others . . ."

And nowhere in the Red set-up can you find anything to indicate that humanitarianism is likely to replace viciousness.

AND SO, AS has happened before, we have come to another Christmas season in which we must fight, maim and kill if we are to achieve the peace we so desire.

We cannot concentrate our full attention—not even for a single day—on a great historical and religious event—Christmas.

We can wish and pray for—but not brag about—peace on earth and good will toward men.

But it is comforting to know that we of the free nations are struggling to preserve something that is good—that we are fighting to prevent the creation of a world society in which freedom to worship would be forbidden.

LET'S CUT IT OUT!

We had hoped that the brickbat throwing season in Washington would come to an end as the international situation became more serious—but we hoped in vain.

We had hoped, too, that the mud-slinging which accompanied this year's political campaign would end with the election—but it didn't.

Those who began yelling "get Dean Acheson" in an effort to influence the election outcome are still at it—and in some respects the situation is now worse than it was a few months ago.

The latest twist to McCarthyism goes this way:

"It makes no difference whether Secy. of State Acheson is innocent or guilty of the charges made against him; he should be fired because he no longer has the confidence of the American people."

Those who peddle this phony line act as if Acheson instead of Joe Stalin provided our No. 1 problem.

They act as if the "battle against the State Department" is as important as the battle against the Reds in Korea.

It's disgraceful—and it ought to stop.

It ought to stop because it's wrong, because there is no justification for the "get Acheson" drive and because our internal squabbling is demoralizing to our own government and to our allies.

And, furthermore, there's no indication that a new secretary of state—if one were selected—would get any better treatment than that accorded Acheson.

ANNA ROSENBERG ALSO IS VICTIM

Latest victim of the brickbat throwing—other than Acheson—is Mrs. Anna Rosenberg, selected a few week ago as assistant secretary of defense, who was accused of having attended Communist meetings at some time in the distant past.

The Senate Armed Services Committee has some very important work dealing with the nation's security which should be handled, but it spent much of last week looking into the accusations against Mrs. Rosenberg.

The evidence against her—if indeed it was evidence—was provided by a fellow who says he was an ex-Communist. He said he had seen Mrs. Rosenberg at the meetings.

She flatly denied the charge. Senators examining FBI records said they contained nothing to back up the accusation. And the committee cleared her by unanimous vote.

Mrs. Rosenberg has a long and good record of public service. There is nothing in it to indicate that she is one of those "subversive elements" about which some of our lawmakers love to rave and rant.

Maybe those responsible for the charge against Mrs. Rosenberg were actually out to get her—but there's a growing suspicion in many quarters that Secy. of Defense Marshall, who wanted her as an assistant, is the real target.

One of the objectives of the Reds right now is to disrupt the operations of our war-defense set-up. They must be getting a kick out of seeing somebody else do the job for them.

Colliers Takes After AMA

THE AMERICAN Medical Association got it in the neck from an unexpected source last week.

In its Dec. 16 issue, Collier's, a weekly magazine which by no stretch of the imagination could be termed "pro-liberal," took the AMA to task for the organization's continued opposition to federal aid to medical education. The article was written by Albert Q. Maisel.

"There is strong public and professional support for financing an expansion program with federal funds," the article said. "But the leaders of the American Medical Association are against the idea. So far they have blocked the passage of legislation which would make such a program possible."

Maisel said the AMA must shoulder the responsibility for the shortage of medical personnel which is constantly becoming more critical. He wrote:

"They (the AMA) are the one big obstacle in the path of Congressional efforts to meet the shortage with federal aid . . . the solution which has the backing of most medical school deans, of leading university presidents, of both Republicans and Democrats and (by a unanimous vote) of the U. S. Senate.

"By their action in fighting the measure to a dead stop in the House of Representatives, they have made it entirely possible that wounded American soldiers in the future will receive some second or third rate substitute for the marvelous medical services that saved tens of thousands of lives in World War II."

THE MAGAZINE declared that federal aid to medical education is not socialized medicine. It added: "As long as the danger of general war and atomic attack against our civilian population exists, the argument that federal aid may lead to federal control of medical education is academic, to say the least."

The unsuccessful efforts of Rep. Biemiller (D. Wis.) to get the measure before the House after the Senate had passed it were told. Despite the bipartisan support of Rep. Scott (R. Pa.), former Republican National Committee chairman, the measure was bottled up in the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Two efforts by Biemiller to have it brought to the House floor for a vote proved unavailing when the motion was defeated by a one-vote margin on both occasions.

"Finally," Maisel said, "the AMA came out openly against the bill. Early in 1950, Louis H. Bauer, M.D., chairman of the AMA Board of Trustees, stated that aid to medical education was now added to the long list of measures meeting AMA opposition."

Bauer said the bill "as presently drawn . . . would give the government a foot in the door . . . for federal control of medical education. There are certain very drastic amendments which will have to be made to that bill before we can approve it."

The AMA's friends on the House subcommittee kept working over revisions until last May.

"Despite the tendency on the part of Congress and the AMA to look the other way," the article continued, "the grave problem of medical shortages still exists and the pressure is mounting for some action to solve it."

Bernard M. Baruch was listed as one of those demanding that something be done. He is quoted as saying he is not in favor of socialized medicine (which usually means compulsory health insurance) but believes the medical profession has got to do something to meet the needs of the people. He declared the first way is to increase the output of doctors.

The Collier's article concluded with the observation that "unless immediate steps are taken to solve our chronic and growing shortages of medical, dental, nursing and public health personnel, your health and that of your family, your neighbors and your sons in service will be jeopardized for years to come.

"If the AMA continues its fight in the new Congress, we trust that the lawmakers will have the courage to enact the measure anyway in the interest of urgent necessity," it added.

THE Senate-passed bill would provide $250 million in federal aid. Against that figure, the AMA has announced it is donating $500,000 to the nation's 79 accredited medical schools. Biemiller termed the contribution a "Trojan gift" intended to obscure the "selfish motives" of the AMA.

He said the donation would bring merely "fatal indecision and inaction." Noting that AMA has been alone in its opposition to such legislation, Maisel declared: "It has claimed time and again that the financial crisis in our medical schools could be met with private aid. Yet all efforts to obtain such aid have failed. That $500,000 contribution does not change the situation in the slightest."

ICFTU Congress Meets Next July

The second world-wide Congress of the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions will open at Milan, Italy, July 4, 1951. Delegates will represent 55 million members in nearly 60 countries.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President — James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer

Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director, Henry C. Fleisher

Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan (On Leave) Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C. Under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII — December 18, 1950 — No. 51

He Really Put It Right On The Line

THE TWO organizers—a man of about 60 and a husky young fellow just back from military service—were in a bad spot and they knew it.

The membership campaign they were directing became hard. Then it became rough. And then it looked hopeless.

With an NLRB election just a few days away and defeat regarded almost as a certainty, the young organizer got instructions to leave town.

He was being assigned to another campaign—one which didn't look hopeless.

He left on schedule—but before he departed he made one bold move to protect his older friend.

This is the story of how it happened—and how it worked out.

AT FIRST things were easy for the two organizers, but they began tightening up when the company learned its workers were signing union application cards.

Before long the company launched its own campaign—a campaign of threats and intimidation.

The older organizer was the company's particular target. But nobody displaying any interest in unionism was spared.

Active volunteer organizers were followed by supervisors and company officials almost every place they went.

Company officials issued orders which resulted in union sympathizers being shifted rapidly from one unpleasant job to another.

Some of the more active unionists were threatened with dismissal.

AFTER THE company's campaign got into high gear the organizers began receiving threats.

They were told on several occasions to "get the hell out of town while you're still able to get out by yourself."

The young organizer didn't like the threats but he figured he could do a fairly good job taking care of himself in a physical encounter—if the worst came to worst.

But he was worried about his companion. A bad beating might mean the end of a man of his age. So the young man kept close to his fellow organizer.

And though the threats continued nobody seemed willing to create violence.

THEN, AS the campaign drew near a close, the young organizer received instructions to leave town and let his companion remain for the election.

"I've got to do something to keep him from getting beaten up," the young man told himself.

He figured and figured but didn't come up with anything that looked like a solution until he and his companion took a sound truck to the mill gate at shift-change time.

The young organizer, using a portable microphone, began giving a pro-union talk to workers leaving and going into the plant.

Then he noticed the superintendent and two of his "stooges" sitting in a car nearby listening and watching.

He hesitated a minute, then moved quickly over to the superintendent's car.

STILL USING the microphone, the young organizer addressed the superintendent as several hundred workers stopped to listen.

"You know who I am?" he asked.

"Yes," replied the superintendent.

"Well, I'm leaving town tomorrow; been transferred to a new job. Old Man ——— will be left here all by himself—and I just want to tell you guys before witnesses that if anything happens to him I'm going to hold you personally responsible. No matter where I am, I'm coming back here and . . . That's all I'm going to say."

The crowd cheered. The young organizer left town the next day. Shortly thereafter the "impossible" occurred. The union won the NLRB election. A.L.S.

NOT THE REAL POINT!

Steel Reported In Business Doghouse For Failure To Expand

THE BIG NEWS about the steel shortage is that the fats cats of industry are fighting over it in public, according to A. G. Mezerik, who tells about it in the Dec. 11 issue of the New Republic magazine.

It all happened last month in Chicago at a meeting of the American Society for Metals, where Edward L. Ryerson, president of the Inland Steel Co., said that "it is sheer nonsense" to suggest that the steel industry should be arbitrarily required to increase its capacity by 20 to 30 million tons in the next two years.

Charles E. Wilson, president of General Motors, was another speaker at the dinner. He had been having his trouble getting steel. Ryerson's remarks were all that Wilson needed to cause him to blurt out in his speech that steel executives "ought to get the dust out of their eyes and go ahead with the rest of industry. . . .

"The steel industry has expanded its capacity only eight times since 1900, while the oil industry has expanded 30 times, the electric power industry has expanded its output by 70 times, the automobile industry about 2000 times."

The trouble with the steel industry is that its leaders are "apostles of the scarce market and the guaranteed big profit," according to Mezerik. Another basic fault of the industry is that a handful of men control it, Mezerik says.

THE LATTER point, the author says, is corroborated by a new but unpublished report in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission, which shows that U. S. Steel in 1945 "controlled 35.2% of the capacity of the industry for making steel ingots and castings.

"Including the interlocks (interlocking directors), 54% of the entire steel industry can, according to the FTC report, be considered part of U. S. Steel."

Mezerik reminds his readers that almost two years ago President Truman in his State of the Union message threatened to put the government in the steel business if the industry continued in its refusal to expand the capacity of the mills.

The Korean war highlighted the steel scarcity. Mezerik does not have much good to say about Commerce Secy. Sawyer, who was placed in charge of steel policies. Sawyer, Mezerik says, "began by blithely accepting the steel industry's own estimate of its ability to supply America's needs, thus almost duplicating an earlier tragedy."

The earlier tragedy, Mezerik recalls, was "administration acceptance" of an industry estimate of defense needs in 1940, an acceptance which "almost caused a national disaster."

BUT OTHER federal officials, realizing the gravity of the steel scarcity, did not follow the industry's lead and other industries began clamoring, notably the oil industry. Mezerik says:

"Independent producers, such as the Lone Star Steel Co. of Texas, who wish to expand their facilities are up against a Washington setup dishearteningly familiar from the last war. The government officers, charged with the authority to implement steel expansion, are Big Steel's nearest and dearest friends. The independents are already shouting grievances. Their chorus of protest was brought to a climax by Wilson's demand that steel 'Go ahead with the rest of industry.'

"Though the protest is becoming insistent it is far from certain that the banker-insurance-steelmaster combination will now proceed with an expansion program of 20 million tons, the minimum required to keep pace with the needs of the industries which depend on steel."

Greece Establishes Training Program

An apprentice training program has been established within the Greek government's Ministry of Labor, and it is expected to further significantly that country's industrial development.

Answering the need for greater numbers of skilled workers will be a "key factor in the industrial development of Greece," according to D. Alan Strachan, ECA Labor Adviser to Greece.

"The Greek worker is by nature as industrious, ingenious, and adaptable as any in the world," Strachan said. "The better the machinery Greece is able to acquire, and the more diversified the industries she establishes, the greater will be the need for well-trained skilled workers. This program should go far toward meeting that need."

Marshall Plan experts have helped at several stages in planning the program, and it has been designed to conform with recommendations of a Greek study team, representing labor, management, and the government, which recently toured the United States under Marshall Plan arrangements.

TWU Elects Quill Again; Wins Pact

PRES. Michael Quill was re-elected president of the CIO Transport Workers on the last day of the union's seventh biennial convention at New York City.

Elected with Quill to international offices was a full administration slate including Gustav Faber, secretary-treasurer and Matthew Guinan, vice president.

On Dec. 10, a day after the convention ended, TWU signed a three-year wage agreement with American Airlines, which gave 4000 maintenance and store workers a wage increase of 4c an hour, retraoctive to Dec. 2. A similar 4c increase will be given each succeeding year.

The new contract also contains a cost of living escalator clause. Under this clause, wages will be increased 2c an hour Jan. 1.

Wages will rise an additional 2c an hour for every increase of 2.35 points in the consumer price index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The adjustments will be made on a quarterly basis.

Quill described the agreement as a "tremendous victory" for the union. He said it put wages and working conditions for American Airlines workers ahead of all other airline industry contracts.

GRATEFUL members of CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers at their convention in Milwaukee, Wis., presented brief case to Isadore Katz (right), general counsel of CIO Textile Workers, in appreciation for legal aid he gave them without cost during struggles of past year. Shown at presentation are James B. Carey (left), newly elected IUE-CIO president, and Secy.-Treas. Al Hartnett. Katz thanked delegates in a short speech.

CIO, AFL Join In Demands On Packers

THE CIO Packinghouse Workers have again joined with the AFL Amalgamated Meat Cutters in asking wage increases from the "Big Four" of the packing industry. No specific figure was set in the proposals.

The two unions, which won a 11c-an-hour wage boost last August by their concerted action, represent 180,000 employes of Swift, Armour, Cudahy, Wilson and major independent companies. The contract signed then was for a three year period but contained three wage reopeners.

The first reopener date is Feb. 11 and the unions presented their proposals last week to comply with the 60-day notice requirement.

Spokesmen for both unions said they would "cooperate closely" in the coming negotiations

CWA'S Red Faces Dept.

THE CIO Communications Workers received support from an unexpected and totally unwelcome source during the recent telephone strike.

Seems the propaganda machine of the Chinese Communists picked up the strike story and with customary disregard for the facts, reported a garbled version over Radio Peiping.

And believe it or not, the National Committee for the Chinese Union of Postal and Telegraph Workers broadcasted its moral support, greetings and advice to the striking workers.

According to the broadcast "the telecommunication workers" were putting up a stupendous battle against "American monopoly capitalism" in spite of the "obstruction of the head of the union who betrays the workers' interests.

"The Korean war, now being expanded by the imperialist capitalists into a war against Red China, was started by the 'American reactionary government' whose objective is to cause living standards in America to fall while the profiteers clean up.'"

American workers were urged to "end all this by resolutely opposing capitalistic expansion and the unleashing of an aggressive war by the American reactionary government."

CWA leaders declined the advice and offer of support because "having the freedom to organize and strike, CWA was able to do all right in its battle with AT&T."

Higher Pay Urged In P.R.

HIGHER minimum wage rates for five industries in Puerto Rico have been recommended by industry committees set up under the Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Act.

A provision of the act authorizes the Wage-Hour Administrator to order industry minimums below the 75c an hour statutory minimum in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. All recommendations will be aired at public hearings in Washington, and may be accepted or rejected, but not modified, by Administrator William R. McComb.

In wholesaling, warehousing and other distribution, a committee that included Stanley H. Ruttenberg, director of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, approved a 25c increase to a minimum of 65c an hour at a meeting in San Juan. Ruttenberg and the three industry members of the committee voted against it—Ruttenberg because it wasn't enough, the others because they thought it was too much.

Ruttenberg also voted, along with the other two labor members, Nicolas Nogueras-Rivera and Miguel A. Collaso, against an 18c increase in the minimum for the banking, insurance and finance industries. The proposed boost would raise the present minimum of 40c to 58c an hour. Ruttenberg's position was that the industry could easily afford 75c.

New minimum rates of 57c an hour for the manufacture of beer and 60c for rum, other alocoholic beverages and industrial alcohol were recommended by another committee, also by split votes. The present minimum in the beer industry is 40c, and in the other industry 30c.

A third committee unanimously recommended a new minimum of 30c an hour for workers manufacturing decorations and party favors.

Canadian Workers Caught In The Wage-Price Pincers

NEARLY one-third of the more than one million Canadian workers employed by firms which report to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics have less real purchasing power than they did in 1946, according to a recent study of DBS figures by the Research Dept. of the Canadian Congress of Labour.

Only slightly more than 20% have from $2 to $5 weekly in additional purchasing power, and 23.4% are better off by $1 to $2, it revealed. The 6.7% with $5 to $8 more in real wages, it added, are largely in lower-paid categories.

INCREASES IN PRICES have eaten away some or all of the additional dollars the workers are getting in their pay envelopes, the CCL found in its examination of official Dominion figures. In many cases pay increases have been more than wiped out by higher prices.

"During a period when workers' real earnings have actually declined or risen negligibly, profits have gone up substantially," said the CCL, with which CIO unions in Canada are affiliated.

"Profits before taxes earned by industry as a whole in 1949 were almost $2 billion ($1,914,000,000). This is about 35% higher than in 1946 (when price controls were lifted). Profits after taxes were about $1.25 billion. This represents almost a 65% increase over 1940.

"It is too early to predict just how high 1950 profits will be, but with the accelerated defense program there is every indication that they will, if not exceed, at least equal last year's level.

"The relationship of rising living costs of workers' earnings demonstrates to what extent hard-won and essential wage gains are being daily whittled away. The decline in workers' real earnings points emphatically to the need for a comprehensive and immediate program of price controls. Certainly, it is imperative that such a program be implemented before workers' living standards are depressed even more."

The CCL study showed that because of skyrocketing prices, the $17.39 a week in cash which workers in primary steel and iron have won since 1946 has dwindled to a mere $1.90 in purchasing power. In the automobile industry, a $17.33 cash pay boost has turned out to be worth only $1.07 when it comes to buying something.

On the other hand, workers in the electric light and power industry have $2.17 less a week in purchasing power than they had in 1946 despite wage increases totalling $12.32, while in steam railroads, a $14.93 a week increase has ended up as a $2.34 loss in real wages. Workers in finance are even worse off. They have received increases of only $8.09 a week, leaving them $3.98 in the hole.

IN AN effort to boost purchasing power of the workers—or at least to prevent it from sinking even lower—the four major Canadian labor bodies have joined forces in a nation-wide campaign for the imposition of price controls and the retention of rent controls. In the group are the CCL, the Trades and Labour Congress, the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour, and the Dominion Joint Legislative Committee of the Railway Transportation Brotherhoods. The campaign marks the first joint action by the four groups in Canadian history.

"The repeated appeals made by all of our organizations individually having failed to impress the government with the need for immediate price control measure," they said in a joint statement, "the four major trade union centres now are inaugurating a jointly-sponsored nation-wide campaign.

"STATEMENTS TO the effect that wage increases are the cause of higher prices are misleading. Since the removal of controls, prices have been free to rise at the will of the employer. Wages, on the other hand, can only be adjusted by negotiation, conciliation or even arbitration.

"The impact of higher prices is being felt in the living standards of almost every Canadian family. Now they also face the threat of higher rents with the removal of remaining rent controls.

"The burden of these conditions —both prices and rentals—has fallen on all sections of our population, and with particular severity on those with fixed incomes, such as our older citizens who are dependent on pensions. Our efforts are directed at providing relief for the Canadian people generally."

IUE-CIO Elects Three Trustees

Three trustees were elected at the convention of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers in Milwaukee, Wis., before sessions were concluded on Dec. 8.

Selected from among nine candidates were John Essick, of Local 601, Pittsburgh, who will serve three years and act as chairman; James Seymour, Local 229, Bridgeport, Conn., two years, and Robert Elsner, local 801, Dayton, O., one year. Elsner is a member of the Administrative Committee, which will continue to function until other members of the executive board are elected and take office.

Little Drops Of Water, Little Grains Of Sand...

By GERVASE N. LOVE

THE CASUAL drop of rain that distinguishes itself by falling into someone's eye has untold billions of brothers and sisters, aunts and uncles and cousins.

And it's a good thing. For rain is water, and civilizations are built on a combination of water, land and people. What happens to the water depends on how the people treat the land. Without water, none of the miracle that is America could have been possible.

In the hope of developing a nation-wide water policy that could be applied under all conditions in every part of the country, President Truman last January appointed a Water Resources Policy Commission to make recommendations on the extent and character of federal participation in major water resources programs.

WRPC also was charged with appraising the priority of such programs from the standpoint of economic and social needs, the criteria and standards for evaluating such projects, and legislation.

THE COMMISSION, headed by Morris L. Cooke, first Rural Electrification Administrator and one of President Roosevelt's ace trouble-shooters, has just presented the President with the first section of its three-volume report, a 445-page study of the basic problems with suggested solutions.

Because of its breadth and depth of treatment, the chances are that it will influence American thinking on water policies for many years to come. The remaining two volumes will be issued in January.

"In the brief span of a century and a half," the commission says in its report, "American farms and cities have spread over the land from the Appalachians to the Pacific. Great harbors have been built, navigable streams maintained and improved; large cities have been supplied with adequate quantities of pure domestic water, their wastes carried away by more water; in the arid and semi-arid West, deserts have been made to bloom; and large and small dams provide for flood control, hydroelectric power, and irrigation.

"All these things are the achievements of human ingenuity and enterprise—the work of many pioneering individuals, many men of technical skill, and the cooperation of local, state, and federal governments.

"ON THE debit side, man's activities in exploiting nature have also been destructive. We have used water badly, without proper respect for its natural cycle, turning it from a friend to an enemy.

"We have destroyed forests, leaving barren, denuded mountainsides from which rain water and melting snow pour unchecked; we have overplowed and overgrazed our lands; we have dangerously increased soil erosion, allowing precious topsoil to be carried to the sea, muddying our streams, filling up our reservoirs, and increasing the damage from floods.

"These are serious wastes. If they continue unchecked, they will impoverish us and our children. But it is the strength of a free society that it can recognize and correct its mistakes. It is dynamic and flexible. In all parts of the country—among engineers, conservationists, farmers, householders, and other ordinary citizens—there is a growing recognition that we must conserve and develop, as well as use, our natural resources. And in conservation and development, as in use, water is the key resource."

RIVER VALLEY properly developed yields dividends in terms of maximum use of land, checking of floods, generation of hydroelectric power, thus serving irrigation, domestic, industrial and recreational uses, President Truman's Water Resources Policy Commission reports.

One of the things that is becoming increasingly apparent, the commissioners report, "is that management, conservation, and use of our water resources is inextricably bound up with the management, conservation, and use of our land and that both are essential to our expansion as a nation."

"Floods cannot be controlled by building higher and higher levees, or permanently by building dams, if other things are neglected," they continue.

"The big streams are fed by small streams, and water control inevitably leads us back to the proper conservation of forests and agricultural land . . .

"In short, if we do not manage and conserve water, we suffer losses, some of them irreparable, in our other natural resources. If we do not manage and conserve those other resources, we shall lose the usefulness of our water: it will rush to the sea, robbing instead of enriching us."

The commission lists seven aims as the national objectives in the whole field of water resources. Summarized, these are:

1. Safeguarding of useful resources against deterioration from careless use or neglect, thus preventing decline of our productivity at a time when we require expansion. Included are all phases of soil conservation, flood management, control of ground waters, control of surface water quality, and sound forestry.

2. Improvement and higher utilization of this heritage through increasing production of land and water resources, a broader base for an expanding economy, with its contribution to national security. This covers management of water resources to transform them from ineffective or destructive into beneficial agents, watering arid land, supplying municipal and industrial needs, improving waterway channels, and generating hydroelectric power.

3. The opportunity of making full use of electric power by farms, urban homes, commercial establishments and industries, through a marketing policy for federal power aimed at encouraging maximum use at lowest possible rates.

4. Coordination of water and land resources undertakings with specific plans to meet national security needs.

5. Development of balanced regional economies, with emphasis on those of low economic opportunity.

6. Expansion of cultural opportunities, including all phases of recreational development.

7. Protection of public health, especially through pollution abatement and control, with provision for plenty of high-grade municipal water supply.

In formulating national policy, the commission set up a simple framework of eight principles. These are:

1. "The importance of clearly defined regional and national goals which water resources programs will be designed to achieve."

2. "The necessity of planning for a river basin as a whole instead of having a patchwork of plans by separate agencies for separate purposes."

3. "The importance of a simple procedure for determining whether the money to be invested in a river basin program will be well spent."

4. "The necessity for a system of repayment designed to treat alike all who enjoy the advantages of federal investment."

5. "The need for placing the annual financing of water resources undertakings on a river basin program basis and for recognizing the annual renewable resources investment program as a stabilizing factor in the economy."

6. "The importance of providing those who prepare plans for the Nation's river basin programs with all the knowledge which is required to assure good plans."

7. "The necessity for applying sound management principles to our watersheds, to the ground waters which replenish our supplies, and to the floodwaters which, harnessed, confer a host of blessings."

8. "The importance of utilizing all of these services which water resources offer in such a way as to contribute to the continued building of a strong Nation."

The commissioners on this framework then make 70 specific suggestions on 13 phases of policy—touching on program planning, evaluation, basic data, financing programs, reimbursement, water resources management, land reclamation, water supply, pollution control, waterway transportation, hydroelectric power; fish, wildlife and recreation, and future possibilities.

In many parts of their recommendations the commissioners see eye to eye with the National CIO, which has developed its policy under the guidance of the CIO Resources and Regional Development Committee.

The commissioners agree with the committee and the CIO that the basis of development should be the river valley. In general, though not necessarily specifically, they would apply the principles of the Tennessee Valley Authority, as the CIO has urged.

On the use of hydroelectric power they take virtually the same stand, and likewise on the development of the outdoor recreation facilities for which the CIO has been clamoring as a relief for its members from the tensions of urban and industrial life. The commission commends labor organizations, along with others, for their leadership in educating the public to the benefits of conservation.

Members of the commission, in addition to Cooke, are Leland Olds, former chairman of the Federal Power Commission, who was in charge of studies; Dean Paul S. Burgess of the Univ. of Arizona College of Agriculture, Pres. Lewis Webster Jones of the Univ. of Arkansas, Samuel B. Morris of the Los Angeles Dept. of Water & Power, Pres. Roland R. Renne of Montana State College, and Pres. Gilbert F. White of Haverford (Pa.) College.

Free Beer And Time To Drink It On Job

About $500,000 in Marshall Plan machinery went into the famous Tuborg Brewery in Copenhagen, Denmark—and out of it came a new era for its 2100 workers.

Productivity has increased greatly and a further boost is in sight when new plant layouts are finished (the workers will share in its savings), and an incentive plan enables workers to earn 2% to 3% more than their normal take-home — but that's not all.

The workers get free beer from the brewery—and a total of 60 minutes a day in rest periods for drinking it. They have a sick benefit plan and a tuberculosis foundation which pays a year's full wages to a stricken employe. There is a pension on retirement and an employe loan fund for emergencies, as well as a recreation program. And on top of all that, the brewery has a kindergarten for its employes' children, and sends them on free vacations every summer.

Striking Pamphlets Tell Europe How Marshall Plan Aids People

THE BUSINESS of telling 270 million people in Western Europe about the Marshall Plan and its aims has been one of the major projects of the Economic Cooperation Administration from the beginning.

It has resulted in the production of a number of extremely attractive and striking pamphlets, printed in a wide variety of languages at the expense of other governments as well as our own.

The pamphlets are aimed at explaining to Europe what the Marshall Plan hopes to accomplish and how it is trying to accomplish it—and, in some instances, what the United States hopes to get out of the billions of dollars it is spending abroad.

A particularly effective and dramatic booklet produced by the Netherlands government, won so much favorable comment that it has been reprinted in English.

Read by 25% of that country's 10 million people, it tells graphically and simply, with water-color illustrations and a few words, what things would be like in Europe had there been no Marshall Plan.

It begins with water-color "portraits" of well-fed, well-dressed men representative of the citizens of Marshall Plan countries, who "would look like this"— emaciated, ragged, despondent—"without the Marshall Plan."

It goes on to show that "Without the Marshall Plan Your Bread Would Be Bare . . ." illustrated by a slice of buttered bread ". . . and So Would Your Children," illustrated by a trio of bedraggled, half-dressed, poorly patched youngsters. It concludes with a rather startling representation of a Hollander in national dress and the exhortation "Heads Up . . . Shoulders Back . . . Sleeves Rolled Up . . . On Our Own Two Feet! That's How It's Got To Be!"

ANOTHER publication in French, illustrated in color, pen-and-ink drawings and charts, describes the sad state of Europe in the winter of 1946-7, the origin of the Marshall Plan, what it has done, what remains to be done, and a series of questions and answers.

The questions and answers are particularly pertinent, since they aim at laying to rest European fears of American political and economic domination. Summed up, the answers assure the fearful Europeans that the only thing the United States hopes to get for the money it is spending in Western Europe is freedom and strength in that part of the world to assure its own peace, and to provide legitimate markets for American trade.

Earlier this year His Majesty's Stationery Office in London had prepared by the British Economic Information Unit and the Central Office of Information a fine, slick-paper account of the first two years of Marshall Plan aid based on facts and figures from the second report of the Organization for European Economic Co-operation, which was published in February. It covers all of Europe, not just the United Kingdom, and is lavishly illustrated. It is offered for sale in England at seven shillings sixpence.

THAT'S HOW IT'S GOT TO BE!

Congress of Industrial Organizations
Financial Statement
Oct. 1, 1949 —Sept. 30, 1950

(Editor's Note: Below are printed excerpts from the detailed audit of the books of the Congress of Industrial Organizations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1950. These excerpts show the organization's total resources and liabilities as of September 30, 1950, and its income and expenditure accounts for the year ending on that date.)

STATEMENTS NO. 1
CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
Statement of Resources and Liabilities
as of the end of the fiscal year September 30, 1950

Total Resources	$1,132,612.82
Total Liabilities	77,172.02
Net Worth—Represented by the excess of Resources over Liabilities	1,055,440.80
Net Worth as of September 30, 1949	1,480,313.07
Net decrease October 1, 1949 to September 30, 1950	$ 424,872.27

STATEMENT NO. 2
Statement of Income and Expenditures, Oct. 1, 1949 to Sept. 30, 1950

INCOME
Per capita taxes from National Unions and Organizing Committees for general purposes		2,514,252.15
Less: Per capital taxes remitted to Canadian Congress of Labour		36,396.89
		2,477,855.26
Special per capita taxes earmarked for Southern Organizing Campaign (current collections)	859,405.56
Transferred from amount held in reserve September 30, 1949	10,594.44	870,000.00
Special per capita taxes earmarked for Special Organizing Campaign		700,791.38
TOTAL PER CAPITA TAXES		4,048,646.64
Per capita dues and initiation fee from Local Industrial Unions		155,549.77
Dues from Industrial Union Councils		7,632.75
Charter fees		1,300.00
Sales of C.I.O. News		97,370.80
Sales of educational and organizational supplies		47,606.52
Interest income from investment securities		9,800.00
TOTAL INCOME		4,367,906.48
EXPENSES AND CHARGES
Salaries, travel expense, and subsidies for National Unions and Organizing Committees		1,382,033.32
Departmental expenses		1,037,631.29
Contributions		87,530.00
Subsidies for Local Industrial Unions		23,781.30
Supplies for Local Industrial Unions		7,093.43
Regional and Field Offices
Salaries	645,900.38
Travel expense	520,890.85
Rent, telephone, telegraph, and other office expenses	165,942,26	1,332,733.49
Southern Organizing Campaign		870,000.00
Charge-off of note receivable		500.00
Transferred to reserve for special organizing		51,475.92
TOTAL EXPENSES AND CHARGES		4,792,778.75
EXCESS OF EXPENSES AND CHARGES OVER INCOME, OCTOBER 1, 1949 TO SEPTEMBER 30, 1950		424,872.27

UAW Local To The Aid Of Pennyworth!

HUMPHREY PENNYWORTH is not going to starve to death in Russia if Local 724, CIO Auto Workers, Flint, Mich., can do anything about it.

Bob Dingwell, Local 724 president, penned the concern of his members to Ham Fisher, creator of the cartoon character now languishing in an Iron Curtain jail. Pennyworth is the huge and fabulous character in the Joe Palooka comic strip who started out to swim the English Channel, got lost in the fog, and wound up in a Russian hoosegow.

Cartoonist Fisher has used this situation to point up the differences in Communist and American ways of life. Dingwell wrote to Fisher:

"Three cheers for your continued practice in showing instances of an American citizen's rights—no matter where he may be. We pledge our wholehearted support in returning Humphrey to America before he starves."

Fisher replied that he "was delighted that the members of your very American union feel as I feel about human rights in Soviet Russia."

THE CARTOONIST went on to say he had been labelled the "most anti-Fascist propagandist in in the world" by Joseph Goebbels, Hitler's drum-beater. "I am looking forward," wrote Fisher, "to Palooka being given as a high a compliment from Soviet Russia." LPA

Free French Unions Win Pay Increases

FREE FRENCH workers organized into unions of the Force Ouvriere and the Christian Federation of Trade Unions have managed in the last three months to pry wage increases for their members from a number of employers who are profiting mightily as a result of Marshall Plan prosperity.

Among the new contracts reported by the Paris office of the Economic Cooperation Administration is one at the Renault automobile factory in which the lowest-paid employes received a 5% boost, raising their rate from 94 francs an hour to 100 francs, or about 30c. Higher-paid workers won small increases.

In seaports, longshoremen have received a 16% raise, or 11 francs, to a scale of 81 francs an hour, or about 24c.

In the Paris area, metalworkers won a guaranteed hourly wage of 81 francs, an increase of 18 francs. Pulp and paper workers received boosts of 10 francs to a rate of 78 francs an hour in the unskilled classification, 19 francs to 85 francs an hour in the first skilled category, and 33 francs to 115 francs an hour in the fifth skilled category.

Textile workers in the north of France won a 10% increase.

Metalworkers in Lorraine negotiated an increase of 16 francs, making the new hourly rate 74 francs.

Other negotiations are still in progress and further increases are expected by union leaders.

Cruikshank Succeeds Shishkin In ECA Post

Nelson H. Cruikshank, national director of AFL social insurance activities, has been appointed head of the European Labor Division of the Economic Cooperation Administration, in Paris.

He succeeds Boris Shishkin, AFL chief economist, who has held the post since ECA operations were first pioneered, and who is returning to the AFL. Cruikshank, an organizer and economist, studied at Ohio Wesleyan Univ. and Union Theological Seminary, and is a member of the AFL Seafarers' Union.

Conn. Firm Indicted On Price-Fixing Count

The Jacobs Manufacturing Co., Hartford, Conn., has been indicted by a Federal grand jury on a charge of violating the antitrust laws by fixing and enforcing prices for the sale of industrial chucks to users.

Industrial chucks are used to grip and hold drills and other instruments which are employed in operating drilling and lathing equipment.

High Court To Hear Unions On Wis. Law

The U. S. Supreme Court has agreed to hear arguments on the constitutionality of the Wisconsin law requiring compulsory arbitration and outlawing strikes in public utility disputes.

The arguments, to be heard next month, will be based on cases involving the CIO Chemical Workers and the AFL Street, Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employes. The unions contend the law conflicts with the Taft-Hartley Act, which guarantees the right to strike and provides for settlement of disputes by collective bargaining.

POLITICAL ADV.

THIS KIND OF HOGWASH is what helps lick proposals for low-rent housing projects in communities where the public doesn't have the true facts. This particular one ran in Bay City, Mich., but alert unions shouted it down. Fact: such projects pay lump sums instead of taxes, and in every known instance, the resulting income to the community has been greater, not less, than the tax income. Also, costs, such as for police protection, are usually cut.

For Defense Housing: Slums

THE GOVERNMENT has quietly decided to take another long step in the direction of "rationing by pocketbook" in the housing field.

The Budget Bureau is determined to cut to the bone all government expenditures under the low-cost housing act, and at the same time the housing agencies are preparing plans to rush into Congress and ask for huge sums for "defense" housing.

Since present tough credit restrictions on housing would remain in effect except for specified "defense" projects, this would mean that:

a. The last chance for low-income people outside "defense areas" to rent accommodations they can afford would be gone;

b. New housing for sale would continue to be available only to people who could afford huge down payments and short-term mortgages—i.e., to those who probably are already adequately housed.

c. There would arise, in overcrowded "defense areas," more of what are now politely called "government slums" — i.e., just plain shelter, not built for durability and not maintained decently, but rushed up at 100% federal expense.

d. Private builders in "defense areas" would get further breaks in the form of additional government mortgage insurance.

e. And the renters of new "defense housing" would be paying more for less well-built accommodations than under the low-cost housing program, since the government would be planning to collect "normal rent" for its makeshifts.

The building program has yet to secure President Truman's approval. However, the cut-back in low-income housing expenditures is definite and has been announced by a Budget Bureau official.

CIO Leaders Threatened In Lansing Decontrol Fight

DECONTROL ACTION by the Lansing (Mich.) City Council brought skyrocketing rents and threatening letters to presidents of several CIO local unions who had supported extension of ceilings.

The threats were reported in the Lansing Labor News, official publication of Lansing area CIO unions. The letters attacking the CIO's position on rent controls warned that unless the union changed its stand, factory workers looking for places to rent would be "black-balled, blacklisted and boycotted" by landlords.

The Labor News reported that the unsigned communications were on the same stationery and appeared to have been typed by the same person on the same typewriter. The similarity also extended to the envelopes used, time mailed and postage.

Recipients included Pres. Oscar Wade, of the Lansing CIO Council, and Robert Dingwell, a vice-president of the Michigan CIO Council. The officials have not decided whether to turn the matter over to police.

Earlier Wade had protested the decontrol action in a letter to the City Council. He condemned the 10 councilmen who voted in favor of decontrol and praised the four who supported continuation of ceilings. He charged that the majority ignored the economic status of renters in reaching their decision.

No sooner had the council lifted federal controls than tenants began reporting rent increases up to 100%. Latest boosts were a three-room basement apartment from $40 to $60 per month; a three-room front apartment from $60 to $80; an upper two-room apartment, no bath, from $45 to $60, and a second floor single room and kitchenette, no laundry privileges, from $7 to $10 per week.

Improved Pacts Won By UTSE

CIO Transport Service Employees are winning better contracts in North Carolina, according to UTSE Southeastern Reg. Dir. Richard S. Hamme.

Hamme said the union has obtained contracts in five Tar Heel plants which grant wage increases, additional holidays and improved vacation benefits.

For example, workers at Standard Fertilizer Co., Williamston, will receive two additional paid holidays, three weeks vacation after 15 years service, a pension plan and a 5c-an-hour wage boost.

Other improved agreements were signed at Reliance Guano Fertilizer Co., Whitesville; Naco Fertilizer Co.; Smith-Douglas Fertilizer Co., and Joknson Cotton Co. The three latter plants are located in Wilmington.

In addition, contract negotiations are in progress with seven other companies in the state, Hamme reports.

U. S. Civil Liberties Reasonably Healthy

INTERNATIONAL tensions, heightened by the Korean war, threaten America's civil liberties in the fields of academic freedom and free expression of unpopular views, the American Civil Liberties Union reported last week.

The report, compiled from newspaper surveys of 16 typical U. S. cities, was made public on Bill of Rights day, Dec. 15—the 159th anniversary of the adoption of the first 10 amendments to the Constitution.

Aside from these two war-borne setbacks, however, the status of civil liberties was found to be fairly healthy.

The most notable advance—which may also be a result of defense activity—has come in the non-discriminatory employment of Negroes, ACLU said. Least progress was made in the field of housing segregation.

The survey, broken down into main civil rights categories, showed the following:

Freedom of Belief: This has suffered, as a result of hostility toward Communists and also as a result of the passage of the McCarran Subversive Control Act. One newspaper, the Hartford Courant, flatly said that the act itself "was the chief cause for viewing-with-alarm." Public opinion surveys conducted in Trenton, N. J., and Minneapolis showed large majorities in favor of the registration feature of the law, with only a minority agreeing with CIO that the law is unworkable.

Adoption of loyalty oath requirements for public employes and teachers was seen as another outcropping of the war atmosphere, although the crack-down has not, significantly, been confined to suspected Communists alone, but has extended to other unorthodox groups such as Quakers.

Academic Freedom: Little controversy has been aroused by the widespread loyalty oath requirement except in California, the survey showed. Only one case has been reported of actual dismissal of a teacher for membership in a subversive group, and this was in Pittsburgh, where, ironically enough, there is no loyalty oath requirement. Only one instance of actual book-banning has been reported, though there has been wide discussion of this possibility.

(Only one newspaper, the Christian Science Monitor, gave much attention to the subtle danger of enforced conformist teaching. "In an effort to offend no one's political or religious convictions," the Monitor said, "school children are frequently deprived of an opportunity to discuss, or hear discussed, all sides of controversial questions.")

Race Relations: Six cities have state or local Fair Employment Practice Laws, and eight have unofficial bodies fostering interracial goodwill. These have helped to mark off "tremendous strides" in their cities' advance toward racial and religious equality, ACLU said. But all the papers agreed that "flagrant violations of total equality still exist—particularly in housing and employment," although on the latter score there has been improvement.

Violence due to intolerance was uncommon, the survey showed.

Labor Relations: Some cases of interference with the right to strike or picket were disclosed, along with a rising use of injunctions.

Free Speech and Press: Censorship is very slight, the ACLU said; here and there local ordinances forbidding the sale of "Communist literature" have been adopted, but for the most part, this traditional hallmark of civil liberties has not suffered.

Free Assembly: Violations were few, the survey showed. When they did occur, the victims were unpopular political figures, including both Rightist Gerald L. K. Smith and Leftist Paul Robeson. Where there were such incidents—as in Philadelphia, Akron, Des Moines, Miami and Cleveland—the newspapers blamed police and municipal authorities. The Cleveland Press accused the police agencies of "generally confusing liberal, radical and subversive activities."

Council Man Cited As 'Man Of Week'

Henry Shipherd, president of the Philadelphia CIO Council, was cited as "Man of the Week" last week in Station KYW's "Inside Philadelphia" radio program.

Shipherd, a member of the Clothing Workers, was honored for being "in the forefront of every movement for the betterment of our city and its citizens."

He is a member of the boards of directors of the Philadelphia Movement, Community Chest, Red Cross, Philadelphia Fellowship Commission and Philadelphia Housing Association. He served as vice president of the recent United Fund Campaign, and currently is heading a drive for a free city college in Philadelphia.

"I also used to pick up a few dollars as a department store Santa Claus, but one year at this job ended that income."

PRES. JOSEPH GERMANO, of the Illinois CIO Council (third from right), introduces CIO Pres. Philip Murray at the council's eighth constitutional convention. Those in the photo are (left to right): Duane Greathouse, council vice president; John Doherty, Steelworkers international representative; Murray, Germano; Michael Mann, CIO regional director (partly hidden), and Maurice F. McElligott, council secretary-treasurer.

Business-Labor Unit Is Proposed By Murray To Aid National Unity

CIO Pres. Philip Murray has an answer to President Truman's complaint that he can't get "top-flight business leaders" to take important posts in government.

Murray suggests that the President name an advisory committee of labor-management leaders to aid him in achieving national unity "during this period of international crisis."

Any industry leader who refuses to serve should be drafted, Murray declared at Chicago. "Our younger men are being called into armed service," he said. "There's no reason why industrial leaders shouldn't also be required to serve their country in this time of need. And I don't mean any secondary people. I mean top-flight people."

MURRAY made his proposal during an address before the annual convention of the Illinois CIO Council.

He indicated that the committee should not include "politicians." It would deal with economic and social problems at home as well as with foreign relations.

"The day of petty bickering must come to an end," Murray insisted. "The day is here when we must have national and international understanding."

Murray's proposal is in line with labor's frequent offers to give its time and energy in the present national crisis.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice president and director of organization, reminded the 480 delegates that the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions celebrated its first year of life early in December. He called ICFTU the "one real hope for a suffering world." He said it was an antidote to the "industrial imperialists who have made us hated in many parts of the world."

Civil rights were stressed throughout the convention in speeches, and in a score of resolutions and committee reports.

Jack Kroll, national director of the CIO Political Action Committee, discussed the Nov. 7 elections. "We of PAC," he said, "did a better job of getting out the vote than we ever did before. But the job was not good enough, because big business did a better job."

John Alesia, Illinois PAC director, reported that the PAC will stay active year-round in 23 out of the 26 congressional districts in Illinois. He pointed out that in considering candidates for the state Legislature, over-all voting records are not too helpful.

"WE'VE HAD cases where a man voted 'right' in 12 out of 13 cases, and yet we knew the man was anti-labor," Alesia said. "The record of the final voting does not disclose committee voting and behind-the-scenes activity."

Alesia also reported that the three CIO members seeking office were elected. They are: Harvey Pearson, an Auto Workers international representative, and William Pierce, president of UAW Local 449, both of whom were elected as state representatives, the former as a Republican and the latter as a Democrat, and John Henneberger, president of Steelworkers Local 1008, who, running as a Republican, won the post of Cook County sanitary district trustee.

A CONVENTION resolution on political action said: "Failing to obtain candidates acceptable to CIO from either major party, we should consider the possibility of running independent candidates who can be wholeheartedly supported by CIO people and other liberal organizations."

A 22-point legislative program called for the following action by the State legislature:

Improved housing and extended rent controls, repeal of the State sales tax, restoration of relief cuts in the budgets of the Illinois Public Aid Commission, amendments to the state constitution (including re-apportionment of the Senatorial Districts and Supreme Court Districts, and revision of the Revenue article), consumer sponsored health plans, improvements in the Workmen's Compensation and Occupational Diseases Acts and in the Unemployment Compensation Act, and Fair Employment Practices Commission legislation.

Keep Services Out Of Shipping, Says Curran

A STRONG plea for private operation of commercial shipping in the event of all-out hostilities has been voiced by Pres. Joseph Curran, of the CIO National Maritime Union.

In a letter to Vice Admiral Edward L. Cochrane, chairman of the Federal Maritime Board, the seamen's leader said:

"Neither the Army, the Navy nor the Air Force should operate any commercial vessels, either for transportation of troops, supplies or material. The operators of the private merchant marine, with their vast experience, and maritime labor with its experience, should be called upon for this operation."

Moreover, the Maritime Board should make use of the know-how and skills of the men who ride the nation's merchant ships "in the planning and policy-making for this all-important arm of defense," Curran declared.

He was moved to call for labor participation in maritime planning by reports that ship operators would be asked to run the show without the benfit of union advice.

Speaking for the Marine Engineers Beneficial Association and the American Communications Association—both CIO—as well as his own union, Curran urged the federal agency to re-condition the entire reserve merchant fleet of 2000 ships. All shipyards should also be re-opened, he said, and work should be started on fast freighter-troop carriers.

THE MARITIME Board should also be empowered to set up a manpower plan and assure the nation of a pool of skilled seamen, Curran said. In addition, experienced seamen should be excluded from the draft.

"The maritime unions feel that no time should be spared in calling together all segments of the maritime industry to get these plans into active shape," Curran wrote. "Any delay in fully mobilizing the all-important sea transportation could prove to be fatal."

LPA

IUE Requests Pay Increases

The CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers served formal demands for "immediate substantial" wage increases on three major firms last week, and requested meetings as soon as possible.

The notices were sent General Electric Co., Westinghouse Corp. and Sylvania Electric Corp. Pres. James B. Carey warned that other higher-paying industries will successfully court electrical workers unless rates are raised substantially and quickly.

Benti New President Of CIO In Rhode Island

GOV. JOHN O. Pastore told the 300 delegates to the 13th annual Rhode Island CIO Industrial Union Council convention in Providence that "now more than ever, America needs the courage of the men in uniform, the all-out protective sinews of labor, and the wisdom of men in public office."

The Governor, who was elected to the U. S. Senate last November with the all-out support of organized labor in the state, deplored the fact that the shadows of war hung over the convention and called upon labor for a super-patriotic effort to "subjugate everything else to what we owe this blessed land of opportunity."

Noting that there is full employment in Rhode Island today, he said it is a tragic commentary on modern times that war, or the threat of war, is necessary to give everyone a job.

Jacob Clayman, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio State CIO Council, admitted to the convention that in respect to political action "little Rhode Island, the smallest of the 48 states, is the greatest of them all."

He said the recent election results demonstrated that labor needs a "revitalized" political party in most parts of the country. Declaring that labor needs "not less but more PAC," Clayman asserted, "our heads may be bloodied, but they are unbowed."

Major interest in the two-day meeting centered in the contest for president, which was won by Frank J. Benti in a close race with the incumbent, John F. Bello.

BENTI, WHO is the labor member of the Board of Review in the State Dept. of Employment Security, was victorious when smaller unions threw their support to him after the big Textile Workers delegation failed to agree on Bello.

Arthur Gourd, of the Textile Workers, was elected executive vice-president without opposition, while Neilson Woodbury, of the Rubber Workers, was named secretary-treasurer.

The delegates passed resolutions calling for wider use of the State Curative Center for the rehabilitation of workers disabled by industrial accidents; opposed proposed increases in state hospital fees; endorsed the principle that the Federal Communications Commission be given power to regulate all telephone rates, and urged Congress to take immediate steps for the realization of the St. Lawrence Seaway and Hydro-Electric Power development.

Another resolution urged President Truman to call a conference of representatives of labor, veterans, farm, church and welfare organizations for the purpose of working out a program to protect families which need good housing at rents and prices they can afford.

Oliver Urges Aid For Southeast Asia Labor

SUPPORT OF the working people of Southeast Asia is vital if the free world is to stop the sweep of Communism in the Far East; and if the free world is to get that support, the working people must have a way of life they feel is worth defending against Red oppression.

That is the conclusion of Robert Oliver, executive assistant to the labor advisers of the Economic Cooperation Administration, following a four-week trip through the Far East.

"In Southeast Asia we found brave new nations, still struggling to free themselves from the curse of colonialism," he reported.

"They need all the economic and technical help for recovery that the free world, particularly America, can give them—through the ECA, the Point Four program and by other means.

"IN GIVING them this assistance, it is imperative that we do what we can to see to it that the living standards of the people are progressively improved. Our funds must not be diverted to the profit of a few who are selfishly maintaining a feudal system of economy.

"There will be no will to resist the Communists or anybody else if the people of these countries have nothing more to look forward to than the starvation and frustration of the past."

Oliver made his trip with William C. Foster, ECA administrator, and other officials of the organization. They visited Japan, the Philippines, Korea, Burma, Thailand, Singapore, Indochina and Indonesia to see first-hand the problems confronting those countries and to plan ECA assistance to meet the problems.

Labor unions as we know them are new or non-existent in the East, Oliver found, although the workers are making progress toward united action. In some cases, he said, the Communists have captured the leadership of workers' organizations — just as they tried to do in America—and are turning them into political arms rather than true trade unions for the economic and social betterment of the members.

"THEY NEED the help of American and European labor," he declared. "They must be taught the techniques of organizing and of negotiating written contracts, and policing them with decent grievance machinery.

"In all countries I found right-thinking men of labor who want to do the job. They need our help, and they must have it if they are to survive — ultimately, perhaps, if we ourselves are to survive.

"In what looks more and more like an inevitable military showdown in that part of the world these countries must be willing and able to fight. Military strength depends on economic strength. And there can be no economic strength without participation of the working man. There is no true strength—economic or military—in a system where all the fruits of men's labor go to the top.

"If the march of Communism is to be stopped, it is the masses who will do the job. To do it, they must know that the system they are defending is a good system for them."

CIO Wins 52 Of 53 Elections In South

JOHN RIFFE, CIO Organizing Committee director, told the 200 delegates to the CIO Furniture Workers District 5 annual convention held recently in High Point, N. C., that "the five years of groundwork since the CIO began the drive to organize the South is now paying off."

"In the past 65 days," he said, "we have participated in 53 National Labor Relations Board elections and won 52 of them in a row. We lost the fifty-third by a small margin."

Riffe said the Furniture Workers would get the "full support of both the national CIO and the Organizing Committee" in the campaign to organize the furniture industry.

He called the furniture drive the Organizing Committee's "No. 1 project."

PRES. MORRIS PIZER of the Furniture Workers served warning on furniture manufacturers in the state that his union is determined to protect its membership. "We want to organize and bargain without strikes if we can," he declared. "But if employers force strikes on our people we will back them 100%."

The convention pledged full support to workers on strike at the Longview Furniture Co. in Hickory, N. C.

Later at a meeting of the UFWA executive board at New York City, Pizer announced that in the past six months new contracts covering approximately 35,000 workers resulted in wage increases of more than $7 million.

Pizer said that additional gains in the form of pensions, more paid holidays, and health and group insurance coverage were obtained by local unions in these negotiations.

A special report of the union's organizational department showed that UFWA had won important representation elections, particularly in the South, but also in Wisconsin, Connecticut, New Jersey and California.

Pizer expressed appreciation for the support given by the CIO and the CIO Organizing Committee.

Buckmaster Renames Eight

Reappointment of the general organizational director and the seven district directors of the CIO United Rubber Workers for the year 1951 has been announced by URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster.

He said his action appointing the men was approved by the union's executive board.

The eight who were renamed to the posts are Fleet Perrine, Akron, general organizational head; Rex C. Murray, district 1, with headquarters in Akron; Salvatore Camelio, district 2, Boston, Mass.; Floyd Robinson, district 4, Rock Island, Ill.; Floyd Gartrell, district 5, Los Angeles, Calif.; Norman Allison, district 6, Toronto, Ontario; Herbert Bennett, district 7, Trenton, N. J., and Ray C. Nixon, district 8, Atlanta, Ga.

Under the union's constitution, appointments must be made by the president to all eight positions every year.

Charles J. Carney

A former member of the CIO Rubber Workers and now a staff representative in the CIO Steelworkers District 26, working out of Youngstown, O., he was elected an Ohio State Senator from the Mahoning-Trumbull counties district in the recent election.

Finnegan Named As Aide To Carey

Les Finnegan, who writes the weekly column Cavil-cade for Labor Press Association, has been named administrative assistant to James B. Carey, new president of the CIO Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Stronger Trust Law Approved By Senate

THE SENATE, by a 55-22 vote last week approved the first major strengthening amendment to the anti-trust laws in more than 10 years.

The amendment makes it a violation of the laws for one corporation to buy up another's physical assets—plant and equipment—if such a purchase would result in establishing a monopoly.

The House already has passed a similar bill, and Senate-House conferees are expected to report the measure without delay.

The amendment closes a large loophole in the present laws—one that the CIO has shouted about long and loud. The present anti-monopoly laws make it illegal for one big outfit to buy up the controlling portion of another's stock, if monopoly would result, but says nothing about the actual purchase of machinery and equipment.

The amendment was sponsored by a large group of Senators, led by Sen. Herbert O'Conor (D. Md.). O'Conor told the Senate that this and other loopholes in the Sherman and Clayton Acts have made them "null," and urged adoption of the proposal as one way to protect small business and restore the meaning of the laws.

Lame duck Sen. Donnell (R. Mo.) opposed the bill, claiming it would produce business uncertainty. He didn't make his objection any clearer than that.

The Justice Dept. would be charged with determining when such a purchase constituted a monopolistic move.

Phila. CIO Sells Trees For Blind

The Philadelphia CIO Council will act as the largest distributor of tickets and posters in the 1950 Christmas Tree Sale for the Blind.

The sale of 43,000 trees, benefitting 15 member agencies of the Educational Week for the Blind, will be held at four sites in the city. The CIO is also cooperating with similar sales in Baltimore, Boston, Portsmouth, Va., and Springfield, Ill.

In the Quaker City 16,000 tickets at $1, $2, and $3 together with 2,000 posters have been delivered to 30 local unions throughout the city. Shop stewards will handle the placing of posters and sale of tickets.

Henry Shipherd, council president, pointed out that union members benefit because they are getting trees at a reasonable price and also helping the blind at the same time.

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The writer attended and addressed the second convention of the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers CIO, in Milwaukee, Wis. In my address to the delegates I pointed out the necessity of laying a sound, strong financial foundation to their union as a requisite to building a sound strong union, a union that can assume a forward position in building a bigger and better CIO. The IUE delegates are desirous of building a strong organization and I am confident they will bring this about. They raised their capita tax from 50c to 75c.

Allan Haywood

The IUE had been receiving 62.4% of its cash income in the form of a subsidy from the CIO. The convention showed the IUE is determined to prove its worth to the CIO and to meet all its exigencies and problems. It should continue the task of routing those who not only betrayed their union and its members, but who also betrayed their country and its democratic ideals.

The delegates elected James B. Carey as president by a unanimous vote and Al Hartnett as secretary-treasurer. Congratulations to Pres. Carey, Secy.-Treas. Hartnett, and members for a fine job well done!

From Milwaukee the writer went to Chicago where he attended a convention in his own home state, that of the Illinois State Industrial Union Council. This was the largest convention ever held by the council. I met many old acquaintances while there and in addressing the delegates I recalled the old days, and mentioned many things that have happened in the state of Lincoln, Lovejoy, and others. Pres. Joe Germano and Secy.-Treas. Maurice McElligott have done and are doing a splendid job. Keep up the good work, Illinois! The desire for freedom as expressed by Lincoln can be obtained through you, and bigotry, bias and racial prejudice will be overcoming in the spirit of Lovejoy, the martyr of freedom of the press.

The writer also attended the District Convention of the United Gas Coke & Chemical Workers in St. Louis, Mo. There were delegates from as far west as Oklahoma and all displayed an enthusiasm that 1951 will be a banner year for the UGCCW and the CIO.

While in St. Louis I met an old, old buddy, Bob Lyons, who was president of one of the old Mine Workers' locals. In fact, he was president of one of the old Knights of Labor locals. Bob is now retired. His mind is quite active, and his thoughts are still with his union. I personally owe a great deal to Bob Lyons. May he be active and happy for many years to come.

State Dir. Ernest Pugh reports that the United Furniture Workers were victorious in representation elections held at the Vaughan Furniture Co. and the Vaughan-Bassett Company, both in Galay, Va. The vote in the first was: eligible 255, UFW 171, against 72. In the second, it was: eligible 250, UFW 136, against 105.

CIO Sub-Reg. Dir. Sylvester Graham reports that in a union shop election at the field operations of the Montana Power Co. at Cut Bank, Mont., the workers voted for the Oil Workers 17 to 3. Staff Rep. George E. Jenkins conducted the campaign.

CIO Rep. Ted du Cuenois reports that the CIO won a representation election at the Yale-Towne Lock Co., Salem, Va., by a vote of CIO 474, Machinists 38, no union 10.

The American Newspaper Guild—CIO reports that the Erie (Pa.) Newspaper Guild won a representation election among commercial employes of the Erie Dispatch-Herald by a vote of 34 to 1. The Newspaper Guild of New York, was named the collective bargaining agent for editorial and commercial employes of El Dierio, Spanish language daily, by a vote of 24 to 4 in representation election.

Reg. Dir. Edward McCrone reports that in a representation election at the H. O. Canfield Rubber Co., Bridgeport, Conn., the workers voted in favor of the CIO Rubber Workers by the following vote: URW 147, independent union 136. The URW also won a representation election at the Danbury Rubber Co., Danbury, Conn., by a vote of URW 48, no union 39.

Reg. Dir. Robert Davidson reports that in a representation election the production and maintenance employes of the American Tool Works, Cincinnati, O., voted for the CIO Steelworkers 402, to 15 for no union. In another representation election held at the new Ford Co. plant Cincinnati, O., the workers voted in favor of UAW-CIO by a vote of 1331 UAW, no union 38. UAW Rep. Benny Wilberding conducted the campaign at the plant.

I want to take this opportunity to wish all my old buddies, associates, and many friends a very MERRY CHRISTMAS AND A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

Daily Earns Unions Profit

The 12 stockholding unions that participated in publication of the Pittsburgh Daily Reporter during the recent strike and lockout that closed the city's three daily newspapers have been voted dividends of $10 per share.

A total of $14,390 was alloted by the board of directors, including $5000 to the CIO Newspaper Guild. Each union thus received its original investment in full. Business Manager Leo Finegold, a Guild member, submitted a preliminary report to the directors showing that the corporation distributed about $43,000 in wages and salaries. The Reporter ceased publication when the regular dailies resumed after the settlement.

Unemployment Claims Decline

The Bureau of Employment Security has disclosed that during the week ending Nov. 25, initial claims for state unemployment insurance dropped 14.2% to 190,000.

At the same time, weeks of unemployment claimed declined 5.1% to 820,600. The declines were widespread, with 38 states reporting a smaller volume of initial claims and 26 states showing a decrease in weeks claimed.

Cox To Seek House Unit Veto Power

REP. Eugene "White Supremacy" Cox (D. Ga.) has served notice that, come January, he's going to try again to give the House Rules Committee back its old veto power over what bills the House may consider.

Cox has been seething ever since the 81st Congress adopted, on its opening day, a change in the House ground rules under which the Rules Committee could only sit on a bill for 21 days. After that, if the bill had been reported favorably by another House committee, the chairman of that group could call it up for floor consideration.

What Cox wants back is the old system under which the Rules Committee — of which he is a member—can hold up a bill indefinitely, even if it's been reported unanimously by another House group, by simply refusing to send it to the floor.

(The Rule Committee is the House "traffic cop"; it decides when and for how long the House can debate a bill.)

Effect of the amendment was to bring to the floor such Cox-hated bills as the anti-poll-tax measure, Alaskan and Hawaiian statehood, minimum wage improvements, social security amendments, and several housing measures. Without the amendment, committees sponsoring each of these measures would have been forced to get 218 signatures on a petition to force the Rules Committee to discharge the bill.

An attempt to repeal the amendment was made at the beginning of the second session, but it got licked. Cox now feels his chances have been improved by the defeat of several outstanding House liberals.

Carey To Farm Bureau: 'We Have Common Cause'

FARMERS and workers, more than ever before in history, have a common cause, James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO and president of the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, told the American Farm Bureau Federation at its convention last week in Dallas, Tex.

"We have a common cause at home, where we would be equal victims of an economic depression," he said.

"We have a common cause in the world outside our borders, where each victory for the freedom-hating enemy threatens our own freedom just so much more."

Carey spoke frankly in his first appearance as a CIO spokesman before a nationwide meeting of farmers.

HE WARNED them, bluntly, that "from the beginning of our history the forces of economic privilege, greed, monopoly have not only fought our attempts to get a wider democracy, but have tried to keep us apart."

"It has been the great corporations in mining, railroading, finance and manufacturing," he said, "that attacked each of us, yet tried to instill prejudice between us.

"You know how well your rural newspapers and many of the great city papers, the radio, the so-called educational material you get, are filled with attacks upon labor, calling it socialistic, anti-American, picturing us as a group of irresponsible, power-hungry dictatorial labor bosses, asking for more and more money for doing less and less work, who want nothing more than to keep this nation in a perpetual orgy of strikes.

"Now, truthfully, isn't that the picture of us by the organs of big business, that are flooded into your ears and minds and homes?

"I have seen this attempt all over the world—a game designed not only to keep labor and agriculture apart, but to pit them against each other. The end result is to force down agricultural prices, then use that as a lever to keep down wages, to have both farmers and workers in poverty while big business reaps the profits and keeps the political power.

"That happened in 1929 and we know the results. Just 20 years ago today you, the farmers, with your unsold surpluses, faced us, the workers, with our empty factories. We both needed each other, but the economic machinery had broken down due to greed and privilege."

TO PREVENT a repetition of 1929, Carey said, we have been erecting "safeguards" over the last 20 years.

"But all these safeguards—whether they were to protect our homes, our farms, our bank accounts, our securities, our jobs—have been met with blind opposition by these same forces of reaction and corporate privilege," he reminded his audience.

"We have heard only the wailing and gnashing of teeth, the words of despair: 'Socialism and bankruptcy.'

"Yet during this period no groups have prospered so much as these forces of corporate privilege."

Carey recalled that in 1939 wages and salaries took 63% of the national income, farms took 6.2% and corporate profits took 8½%, while today wages and salaries make up only 60% of the national income and the farms but 5.1%, whereas corporate profits have practically doubled to 16%.

"The actual truth is," he said, "that in the last four years, while corporate profits increased by $14 billion a year, the American people went into debt by $14 billion extra to buy up these high-priced goods. The corporations have been doing what you farmers have too much sense to do—they have been mining the soil by not returning to it the purchasing power to keep it in a healthy condition.

"And yet these same interests try to keep us apart by the cry of socialism! Their press and spokesmen in Congress raise even the cry of communism, to divide and confuse us, while they pretend to be the protectors of our democratic faith."

CAREY reminded his farm audience that manufacturers of farm machinery have had more than their share of the ever-increasing profits industry has been piling up. Intl. Harvester profits have risen 800% in the last decade, those of John Deere and Allis-Chalmers by 500% to 600%, while those of General Motors are "absolutely incredible," he said.

He repeated his often-reiterated charge that many corporations in the electrical industry are so greedy for profits that they prefer to deal with the Communist-dominated United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers rather than his own IUE, the union set up by the CIO to take over its jurisdiction, despite the threat to national security.

He used this as a jumping-off point for an account of the fight of organized labor throughout the world, and especially by the CIO, against Communism.

"WE OF the CIO have nothing to apologize for in our programs," he said. "Need I say there are no advocates of socialism in our leadership and very little in our membership. Yes, we favor free enterprise. We favor it so much that we want to see it work and, in the interests of our nation and not a few corporate giants.

"We of the CIO have no apologies to make for our political activity. Like many leaders of your own organization, we state our position on political issues. We have no desire to dominate any political party, and we will support members of any political party that believes in real Americanism, real democracy and social justice.

"We always have and always will work together economically and politically with all groups in American life who share the same ideals. Because we represent a cross-section of the rank and file of the American people, we have no interests separate from theirs."

He called upon the farmers, as well as business, religion and education, to face up with courage the same thing organized labor must face up to, that totalitarian communism — "the most brutal, ruthless, enslaving dictatorship in world history—is on the march." One of the main weapons against it, he maintained, is a speedy end to discrimination based on race, color and creed.

"We cannot talk to the 300 million people in India about freedom and justice," he said, "and then have the Communist newspapers in India blazon the story that a man of black skin cannot eat in restaurants, sleep in a bed, go to a movie in the so-called 'lily-white' sections of Washington, D. C.

"Just a few days ago, America was honored throughout the world by having one of its distinguished citizens given the Nobel Peace Prize.

"Yet that distinguished American, whom the free world honors, could not walk into this very city where we now meet and be served a meal, he could not engage a hotel room or even get a book in the public library, except in the segregated sections—because that man, Ralph Bunche, happens to be a Negro.

"WE CANNOT talk of slave labor in Russia, when states of virtual peonage exist in parts of our deep south. We cannot talk about the blessings of freedom when workers are beaten and clubbed and arrested for trying to organize into textile unions in South Carolina or agricultural unions in the Imperial Valley of California.

"We cannot say that America's beacon light, the Statue of Liberty, means anything if a man who had been a Communist in Bulgaria and had fled because he renounced Communism cannot even enter this country for sanctuary under the McCarran Act.

"Unless America is prepared to convince the world's people about our high purposes and aims, and to dispel the suspicions and doubts, it is useless merely to spend billions of dollars to put arms into their hands. The experience with the Chinese Nationalists should be a warning that arms can be sold or even turned against us by deserters to Communism . . .

"All of us must in this crucial hour examine our hearts and consciences and ask whether we are helping in this struggle, or whether through greed, intolerance, desire for power or office, we are not unwitting allies of the Communists."

He Practices What He Preaches Dept.

When Secy-Treas. James B. Carey of the CIO was in Dallas, Tex., to address the American Farm Bureau Federation, he gave the community and the convention a practical demonstration of the CIO policy against racial discrimination.

He respectfully declined an invitation to dine with Democratic state leaders at a Dallas hotel, from which Negroes are barred, and went to supper with members of Americans for Democratic Action at the Negro Y.M.C.A.

12-18

Unions Ready To Act Together In Crisis

THE CIO, AFL, Railroad Brotherhoods and the Machinists are ready to act jointly on stabilization and mobilization problems resulting from the national emergency.

At a meeting of representatives of the four organizations in Washington on Dec. 14, a United Labor Policy Committee was set up to deal with these problems.

The following paragraph from the committee's statement of principles outlines the purposes:

"Problems relating to the mobilization program on such issues as manpower, production, wages and prices arise each day and will require frequent representations to government agencies."

Subcommittees will be named to deal with problems of manpower, production, wages, prices and labor personnel for government agencies.

Each subcommittee will consists of three members, one from the CIO, one from the AFL and one from the independent unions.

The entire committee shall meet biweekly, on a date fixed at the previous meeting, but any of the participating groups may request a meeting. The chairmanship will be rotated among the four organizations.

There must be unanimous agreement on all decisions, but in case there is not, each organization shall be free to state its views to the government agency concerned with the particular problem.

The committee's statement made it clear that ULPC "will have no direct relationship with any government agency. It shall meet independently, holding itself in readiness to make representations to the President of the United States and government agencies having to do with mobilization problems."

Firm Ordered To Give Pair Back Jobs, House

A man and wife fired by the Sellers Manufacturing Co., Saxopahaw, S. C., and evicted from a company-owned house for union activity can have their jobs and their house back, the National Labor Relations Board has ruled.

Ralph Carrico was ordered reinstated with back pay and his wife, Pearl, is to get back pay, but she refused to return to her job. The board also told the company to provide the pair with a house.

Federal Rent Control Extended Until March 31—Longer Where Cities Ask It

CONGRESS HAS given some breathing space to tenants who are worried about the end of rent controls—but not much.

After brief debate, both houses last week adopted legislation extending till next March 31 the deadline after which federal rent control automatically expires unless local governing bodies have voted before then to retain controls till the end of June.

All this does is extend the present law, under which it is all too easy for communities to vote themselves out from under controls, and impossible for them to vote themselves back under once they have decontrolled themselves. In fact, it might be called a rent decontrol law.

There is this much to be said for it: rent control will continue in effect until the end of March in over 1000 communities where it now exists. Without the congressional action, all of these communities would have been without protection after Jan. 1 unless their city councils, in a kind of Christmas rush, had done something before Dec. 31.

ALONG WITH the extension went a quiet sell-out of the citizens of Los Angeles. Spurred by Sen. Cain (R. Wash.), both houses declared that decontrol could be accomplished by simple resolution of the city council, instead of the hearing-and-consideration routine prescribed by the present law.

The amendment was intended to validate the June 28 action of the Los Angeles City Council, which the Office of the Housing Expediter refused to recognize because there had not been adequate public hearing and the council had not considered evidence as to whether a shortage of rental housing existed.

(There still was some doubt as to whether the amendment was legally retroactive, although it was intended to be so. Housing Expediter Tighe Woods gave clear indication he wouldn't sign the Los Angeles decontrol order until he was thoroughly satisfied on that point.)

Between now and March 31, Congress will have a chance to review the entire rent situation, and it may be that the pressure of mobilization events will result in a stronger law.

Pressure is steadily mounting, for instance, for relief of situations in the neighborhood of newly reactivated military camps. Under the present law, Woods can recontrol only those areas he decontrolled on his own motion.

If decontrol was accomplished by local option, he is powerless and so is the local government. This results in a spotty situation near military camps, with the rent situation depending simply on who issued the decontrol order.

Cooperation With Boy Scouts Urged

All CIO Industrial Union Councils have been urged by Anthony W. Smith, assistant director of councils, to maintain contact with district officers of the Boy Scouts to further the conservation programs of the CIO and the Scouts.

In a letter to the councils, Smith, who also is executive secretary of the CIO Committee on Regional Development and Conservation, pointed out that the cooperation the CIO has received from the Boy Scouts in the field of conservation "has served to acquaint other progressive peoples with the public services rendered by the labor movement."

Smith said the scout conservation program will be given a special sendoff during Scout Anniversary Week Feb. 6-12 and asked that councils offer their continued cooperation to local Boy Scout groups.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION of the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

$1.00 A YEAR

5c a Copy—$1.50 a Year in Canada

The CIO News

Vol. XIII WASHINGTON, D. C., DECEMBER 25, 1950 No. 52

UNITED LABOR Policy Committee, organized as voice of most of organized labor in current crisis, is shown at meeting in Washington just before its views were presented to President Truman last week. Left to right, seated, Pres. George Harrison, AFL Railway Clerks; Pres. Philip Murray of CIO, Pres. William Green of AFL, Pres. A. J. Hays, Machinists (unaffiliated); Chairman George Leighty and Secy.-Treas. Arthur Lyon, Railway Labor Executives Association; standing, Arthur Goldberg, CIO general counsel and adviser to CIO delegation; Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey of CIO, representing Pres. Emil Rieve of CIO Textile Workers; Pres. Walter P. Reuther, CIO Auto Workers; Vice Pres. Elmer Walker, Machinists; Pres. Dan W. Tracy, AFL Electrical Workers; Pres. William C. Doherty, AFL Letter Carriers, and Secy.-Treas. George Meany of AFL. Missing are Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, CIO Clothing Workers, and Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, CIO Rubber Workers. Story on Page 3.

AMERICAN LABOR REPRESENTATIVES are busy telling Europe that Marshall Plan aid to Europe must be transmitted more rapidly into better living for workers. It was the news about a grant of Marshall Plan funds that radiates in the happy faces of this Austrian family. See Page 9 for story telling how Soviet Russia may hurt ECA aid to Austrian people.

Truman To GOP Critics Of Acheson

'It Is Not A Time For Vague Charges...'

THE irresponsible efforts of some Republicans — who haven't been able to win an indisputable mandate from the people in 20 years—to force the ouster of Secy. of State Acheson blew up in their faces last week.

A resolution passed by substantial majorities by the Republican caucuses in both House and Senate was bluntly rejected by President Truman with the flat statement that "Communism—not our own country—would be served by losing him."

Coupled with another politically inspired Republican move to demand Senate clearance on any agreement reached by the President and Prime Minister Attlee of Great Britain, at their recent meetings here, it united the Democratic majority in the upper branch of Congress as it hasn't been united in years.

It also brought from the CIO a cablegram to Acheson in Brussels, Belgium, where the North Atlantic Pact ministers were meeting at the time, signed by Pres. Philip Murray, which said:

"I WANT to convey to you our support and confidence in your efforts to mobilize the free nations of Western Europe against threats of Communist aggression.

"We deplore the irresponsible and unsubstantiated attacks upon you at this time while you are engaged in representing our nation in these important negotiations. We are confident that you will do all in your power to bring the Brussels meeting of the North Atlantic Council to a successful conclusion."

President Truman made his stand public at his weekly press conference, at which he appeared with a prepared statement he dictated to reporters.

"How our position in the world would be improved by the retirement of Dean Acheson from public life is beyond me," he read.

"Mr. Acheson has helped to shape and carry out our policy of resistance to Communist imperialism. . . . No official in our government has been more alive to communism's threat to freedom or more forceful in resisting it. . . .

"If communism were to prevail in the world—as it shall not prevail—Dean Acheson would be one of the first, if not the first, to be shot by the enemies of liberty and Christianity.

"These recent attacks on Mr. Acheson are old in the sense that they are the same false charges that have been made time and time again over a period of months. They have no basis in fact whatsoever.

"It is the same sort of thing that happened to Seward. President Lincoln was asked by a group of Republicans to dismiss Secretary of State Seward. He refused. So do I refuse to dismiss Acheson.

"If I did anything else, it would weaken the firm and vigorous position this country has taken against Communist aggression."

THE PRESIDENT threw the ball back at the Republicans and challenged them to offer policies alternative to Acheson's—if they have them.

"They owe it to their country," he pointed out. "This is a time for hard facts and hard thinking. It is not a time for vague charges and pious generalities.

"There are some Republicans who recognize the facts and the true reason for these attacks on Secretary of State Acheson and who do not agree with their colleagues.

"This nation needs the wisdom of all its people. This is a time of great peril. It is a time for unity, for real bi-partisanship. It is a time for making use of the great talents of men like Dean Acheson."

THE Republican charges against Acheson were that he permitted Communists to infiltrate the State Dept. and that his policies cost us the loss of China and forced us into the war in Korea. No proof has been adduced.

The Republican Senate defeat on the question of any Truman-Attlee commitment came on an almost strictly party-line vote on two phases of the issue after reunited Democrats teed off on their Republican associates with charges that they were weakening the country.

Sen. Fulbright (D. Ark.) told them that in voting no confidence in Acheson on the eve of the Brussels conference, they had acted "in an irresponsible manner, unworthy of a great party."

"The persistence of the Republicans in pursuing a policy of character assassination as a means of bringing about changes in the policies of our government," he said, "is an extremely dangerous course to follow.

"It smacks of Nazi totalitarianism. It is based upon an appeal to the prejudices and emotions of men, rather than reason. It can, if carried on, cause disruption among our own allies and division among our own people."

SEN. McKELLAR (D. Tenn.) who has often split with the Truman administration on domestic issues, made a dramatic plea for unity. The 81-year-old President Pro Tempore told the Senate that never in his 40 years of service in Congress had he seen more widespread disunity.

Whatever is done to "discredit" President Truman is "helping the Russians," he told his colleagues. He reminded them that the President and his cabinet officers were chosen lawfully and hold office lawfully, and cannot be dismissed overnight.

"Fellow Senators," he pleaded, "let us at this time of peril of our government, at this time of peril to our people, hold our criticisms and dissensions until a more propitious time.

"Our President, Mr. Truman, is our President, and will be until January, 1953. If we are forced into a war, he will be our Commander-in-Chief. . . .

"DON'T LET it be said of us that it was during our service that the United States lost her first great war. Let us forget politics, forget differences, forget everything except that our government and our people are in danger."

The first Republican setback came on their demand that their resolution be reported out by the Foreign Relations Committee by Dec. 21. This was defeated by a 45 to 30 vote. All Democrats voted against it. With them were three Republicans—Sens. Gurney (S.D.), Saltonstall (Mass.) and Margaret Smith (Me.).

The second defeat came on the motion of Sen. Connally (D. Tex.), the chairman, that the committee be given "unhampered" jurisdiction over it, which would include the right to pigeonhole. This was passed by a count of 47 to 29, with Sens. Gurney, Saltonstall and Smith again voting with the Democrats. G.N.L.

—From The Washington Post

"He Didn't Entirely Go Along With The Idea"

Carey Discovers Scab Labor Working At Soviet Embassy

THE RUSSIAN Embassy in Washington is using scab labor to install fire hoses, James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO and president of the Intl. Union of Electrical Radio & Machine Workers, discovered last week.

Carey, who is an old hand at smelling out Communist doings, said:

"Here is the shining example of Soviet Russia's flagrant hypocrisy in professing to be a friend of organized labor. There are more than 70 plumbing contractors in Washington who hire union labor and have union contracts, but the official Washington representative of the 'Fatherland of the Proletariat' deliberately selected a firm that employs scab labor and has no relations with the plumbers union.

"The embassy and its officials confirm what we have stated repeatedly: That neither Soviet Russia with its millions of slave laborers and its destruction of democratic trade unionism, nor its American branch, the Communist party, have any real interest in the welfare of working men and women.

"The embassy's employment of scab labor is a deliberate insult to organized labor in the United States. The Russian Embassy has aligned itself with the forces of this country's anti-labor and union-busting employers. Everyone knows today that the employment of non-union labor helps to depress the wage scales, hours, and other working conditions of other wage earners.

"Communism's fake protestation of concern for the improvement of workers' living standards is again proved to be a despicable fraud and deceit.

"The embassy could hardly have picked a more effective way to show its contempt of American trade union principles. There's a large touch of irony in the Soviet Embassy's hiring of non-union labor for protective measures against bombing, because the only bombing the embassy has to fear is that which could come only from Soviet Russia."

COMMENTED Pres. Martin P. Durkin of the AFL Plumbers Union: "This is just one more case revealing Russia's real attitude toward organized labor. Since the Communists seized power in Russia and other countries, they have either imprisoned or killed the officials of democratic trade unions. There can be no excuse, even for hypocrites, in engaging a non-union employer when there are scores of union contractors available."

The Soviet Embassy, perhaps not having thought about rigging up an excuse, had "no comment" when reporters for daily newspapers and press associations asked for it.

N. J. CIO Asks Voting Age Cut

The New Jersey CIO Legislative Committee has adopted an eight-point legislative program for 1951, ranging from state payment of hospitalization and medical benefits to reduction in the voting age to 18 years.

The committee, meeting in Newark, went on record as opposing the opening of any additional race tracks in the state as well as granting any extension of dates in their operation. It also passed a resolution condemning the practice of wire tapping on the grounds that it "jeopardizes civil liberties."

The 150-man committee, representing CIO locals throughout the state, also recommended designation of Election Day as a state holiday, elimination of the five-month county residence requirement for voting and the addition of two additional members to the three-man board of Public Utility Commissioners to represent labor and consumer interests.

Birmingham Racial Housing Restrictions Ruled Illegal

THE CITY of Birmingham, Ala., cannot restrict the use of its residential sections on a basis of color or race, the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans ruled on Dec. 20 in a body blow at discrimination below the Mason-Dixon Line.

The ruling upheld the legality of an injunction issued by Judge Clarence Mullins, in U. S. District Court at Birmingham, enjoining the city from maintaining housing restrictions founded on race or color. A group of Birmingham Negroes had attacked the city's zoning laws as unconstitutional.

An opinion was written by Judge Wayne G. Borah, a Louisianan, with Judge Leon McChord, an Alabaman, concurring. Judge Robert L. Russell dissented.

Judge Borah wrote that the 14th amendment to the Constitution prevents a state from interfering with property rights except by due process of law. Property, he held, "is more than a mere thing which a person owns." It includes the right to live in the property for lawful purposes, he said, without discriminatory regulation.

"The finding of the City Commission," Judge Russell wrote in his dissent, "that in the prevailing situation 'breaches of the peace, riots, destruction of property and life,' which neither the city nor other law enforcement officers could prevent, would follow attempts to violate zoning restrictions, was entitled to some consideration."

Power Firm Ordered To Reduce Its Rates

An Ingham County Circuit Court Judge at Lansing, Mich., has ordered Consumers Power Co. to reduce its rates by $1,161,000 annually. The amount represents the annual rate increase approved for Consumers Power by the Michigan Public Service Commission on August 12, 1949.

Circuit Judge Marvin J. Scanlon ruled that the procedure through which that rate increase was processed was illegal.

The President, The Crisis—And Labor

THE UNITED Labor Policy Committee, established as a voice for the views of organized labor in the present crisis, met with President Truman on Dec. 20 and told him what the spokesmen of U. S. workers think about some of the problems he faces.

The committee is composed of top representatives of the CIO, AFL, Railway Labor Executives and Machinists. Its delegation left with the President a statement reflecting its stand—and the stands of the component organizations—on such important things as control of living costs, other controls, the principles that should be applied in wage stabilization, control of purchasing power, and manpower.

Text of the statement follows:

Organized labor in America has established a United Labor Policy Committee composed of representatives of the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, the Railway Labor Executives Association and the International Association of Machinists. We pledge ourselves unreservedly to the service of our nation and to the support of the President in the present crisis.

Members Of United Labor Policy Unit

The United Labor Policy Committee, which was less than a week old when it had its first meeting with President Truman, is composed of the following members:

For the CIO—Pres. Philip Murray; Vice Pres. Walter Reuther, president of the Auto Workers; Vice Pres. Emil Rieve, president of the Textile Workers; Vice Pres. L. S. Buckmaster, president of the Rubber Workers, and Jacob S. Potofsky, member of the Executive Board and president of the Clothing Workers;

For the AFL—Pres. William Green; Secy-Treas. George Meany; Vice Pres. George M. Harrison, president of the Railway Clerks; Vice Pres. Dan W. Tracy, president of the Electrical Workers, and Vice Pres. William C. Doherty, president of the Letter Carriers.

For the Machinists—Pres. A. J. Hayes and Vice Pres. Elmer Walker.

For the Railway Labor Executives Association—Chairman George Leighty and Executive Secy.-Treas. A. E. Lyon.

The delegation that met with President Truman included Murray, CIO Secy.-Treas. James B. Carey, Reuther, Potofsky, Green, Harrison, Tracy, Hayes and Leighty.

Objectives

Our purpose is to develop a common approach to the problems arising out of the mobilization and stabilization program. We are deeply concerned for our country's security and welfare. The security, the dignity and material well-being of the wage earner in America as well as throughout the whole world, are dependent upon the preservation and extension of the democratic way of life.

We are fully aware of the grave emergency confronting our nation. We dedicate ourselves to help make our country strong and to use that strength to bring peace and abundance to mankind.

It is imperative that Labor be granted active participation and real leadership in every important agency in our mobilization effort. We regret that to date, Labor has not enjoyed opportunity for full participation in the mobilization effort.

Free labor can make its fullest contribution only if it is permitted to serve at all levels of defense mobilization both with respect to policy and administration. No one group has a monopoly of ideas in the mobilization of our resources. Each group has much to offer and cooperatively we can defeat the world-wide challenge of dictatorship.

Control Of Living Costs

The control of the prices of all the elements in the workingman's every-day necessities is the central problem in wage stabilization. We are compelled to point out that under the provisions of the Defense Production Act of 1950, it is impossible to control these prices.

Under this legislation, great increases are specifically permitted in the price of food which constitutes approximately 40% of the living expenses of the average American family. In addition, rents which constitute about 13% of living costs are not now effectively controlled.

So long as food prices and rents are thus subject to sharp and drastic increases, compensatory wage adjustments must be permitted. The present prohibitions upon control of food prices and rents are an effective barrier to any system of prices or wage controls, and the elimination of these prohibitions are preliminary to any workable stabilization action. Effective control of retail food prices can be achieved and at the same time, farmers can be assured fair prices for their produce.

The Defense Production Act should be promptly amended by the Congress to accomplish these ends.

General And Selective Controls

American industries are so integrated that no one of them can be singled out for the purpose of wage and price control. Price control, to be effective, must be general. Adequate machinery and vigorous enforcement procedures must be created. Otherwise, such controls will break down.

The government should strive for justice and workability in its stabilization measures. To subordinate these factors to pressure for hasty improvisations is not in fact speed, but is rather postponement of the time when real stabilization will be achieved.

While the imperative preliminary steps are being taken, other phases of the stabilization program must be taken into consideration to avoid later error and delay. With reference to wake stabilization, three basic principles should be considered so that they may be embodied in the regulations to be applied.

Wage Stabilization

The first of these has to do with procedures. At the present time, wage stabilization is subject to needlessly cumbersome machinery. As now provided, wage policy must first be recommended by a Board representative of labor, industry and the public. The recommendations of this Board are then subject to the arbitrary decisions of a single individual. This makes expeditious and just action impossible.

Review by a single top administrator, chosen for his general administrative experience rather than specific competence in the wage field adds nothing to the process of wage stabilization excepting uncertainty, procrastination and arbitrariness. Wage stabilization procedures should be revised so that the wage stabilization board is given the status and authority to make decisions on matters within its jurisdiction.

The wage stabilization policy must permit the adjustment of wage rates to compensate for increases in the cost of living. Wage stabilization must not become wage freezing. This policy must also provide for the correction of substandard wages and the adjustment of inequities in existing wage rates within or between industries.

The now well-recognized principle that wage earners should share in the benefits of industrial progress and increases in productivity which the nation must and will have from its industrial workers, should be specifically embodied in the wage stabilization policy.

Any wage stabilization policy must recognize existing collective bargaining agreements which themselves assure stability. This would apply, for example, to the automobile and other industries where existing contracts provide for the orderly adjustment of wage rates. The abrogation of contracts arrived at through collective bargaining would inevitably lead to industrial unrest and this will defeat the very goal of stabilization.

Overtime payments for premium work now protected by collective bargaining agreements or existing law must continue to be held inviolate. These provisions do not in any way preclude the working of a work week longer than that now considered to be normal. They merely provide the incentive for productive overtime and holiday work.

Purchasing Power

An equitable tax, savings, price and rationing control program is the answer to this problem of excess purchasing power. Rising taxes upon the workers as well as the rise in living cost have already cut their purchasing power. Furthermore, the Government has embarked upon a program of stimulating the voluntary investment of as much as possible of current wage payments in defense savings bonds.

The labor organizations stand ready to cooperate in every way in the attainment of this goal. Effective price and rationing controls will stimulate the flow of unspent income into voluntary savings. Savings will provide a pool of consumer purchasing power to drive the nation ahead when the emergency is over and production of civilian durable goods may be safely expanded.

Manpower

Our labor force is the nation's greatest single asset. Steps should be taken to strengthen and enlarge our manpower resources. These steps must recognize the fact that free labor can outproduce slave labor. Free labor will play its role in attaining our objective of maximum production. World War II experience demonstrates that maximum efficiency, cooperation and morale can be secured through voluntary manpower policies. Use of compulsory civilian labor will defeat our efforts to attain our goal of maximum production.

Conclusion

American workers and their unions offer these suggestions in order to get the emergency production program underway as quickly and effectively as possible. We conceive it our responsibility not just to offer verbal assurances, but also to point out those difficulties and problems which must be solved if we are to achieve maximum national security.

Wholesale Food Price Index Highest Since '48

The Dun & Bradstreet wholesale food price index jumped 3c during the week ended Dec. 19 to $6.80, the highest level since Sept. 28, 1948.

The last time the index stood higher was on Sept. 21, 1948, when it was $6.82. The new high level, caused by increases in prices of 14 of the 31 commodities that make up the index, compares with $5.73 a year ago and $5.94 on June 13, just before the Korean outburst.

Cost Increase Enough To Outfit 10 Divisions

The increase in the cost of the materials that go into rearmament has been enough in the last six months to outfit 10 Army divisions or buy 300 B-36 bombers, Sen. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.) told the Senate on Dec. 20.

The prices of the various things the defense establishment needs has jumped $3 billion since April or May, he said—"three billion dollars lost by inflation."

That amount also would pay for 2250 jet fighters, he added. Sen. Martin (R. Pa.), a former Army general, said it would buy enough tanks for 10 armored divisions.

Dirty, Underhanded Smear Campaign

Segments Of GOP Go After Acheson's Scalp While He's Speaking For Nation On Delicate, Important Foreign Affairs

By ALLAN L. SWIM

ONE OF the dirtiest, most underhanded, most inexcusable campaigns in recent American history is the one aimed at Secy. of State Dean Acheson.

That's blunt language—but the situation is one which calls for blunt, straight talk.

Those elements of the Republican Party which seem determined to get Acheson's scalp at any cost are doing nearly as much as the Communists to undermine American foreign policy.

And that policy is designed to prevent the spread of communism.

There may be some things wrong with our policy. Perhaps it needs changing here and there.

But there is no justification whatsoever for the smear job that's being done on the Secretary of State.

TO GET the full significance of what's been going on all you have to do is review the events of the past few weeks.

Acheson, as our nation's spokesman on foreign affairs, was getting ready to go to Brussels, Belgium, for a meeting of representatives of North Atlantic Pact nations.

There he was expected to play the leading role in establishing a strong armed force to protect Western Europe—a very delicate undertaking at the best.

In this task he deserved the full support of the American people.

But what happened?

Certain elements of the Republican Party spouted off loudly about Acheson's "treachery" and there were moves among GOP forces in both houses of Congress to seek Acheson's resignation.

The timing was wonderful—for those who don't mind giving aid and comfort to the Reds.

WE AROUND the CIO News office have been trying for a long time to find out about the "great sin" which the Secretary of State is supposed to have committed.

We've read many of the charges made against him and have followed closely the personal attacks leveled at him.

The most we can gain from this material is that some Republicans believe Acheson "coddled the Communists" and that he "left the door open for Red aggression in Korea."

Proof of such charges is completely lacking.

Actually, there are few if any men in the world who have played stronger roles than Acheson in the campaign against Red expansion.

Perhaps he has made mistakes—as who hasn't? Maybe there are times when he should have kept his mouth shut but spoke out. Perhaps there are times when he maintained silence when it would have been better to speak.

But those are minor things compared with the tremendously effective work he has done.

THE REPUBLICANS who are out to get Acheson keep shouting that our foreign policy is wrong—but they have no program of their own.

Oh, sure, there are those who are sore because Acheson didn't propose that we throw our armed might behind Chiang Kai-shek.

And there are those who believe that anything a Democratic administration does in the foreign field is automatically wrong.

Who's going to speak for us in foreign affairs, if not the administration and its chosen representatives? And who's going to determine policy?

The Republicans?

They're taken their story to the public every two years for the past two decades and only once were they able to win control of Congress. And the victory was largely on domestic issues.

There hasn't been a Republican in the White House since Herbert Hoover.

This doesn't mean the GOP doesn't have a right to help shape foreign policy. Far from it. What we need is bi-partisan or non-partisan foreign policy.

But events of the past—and the present—certainly provide segments of the Republican Party with no "mandate" for seeking the ouster of Dean Acheson.

LET'S MAKE IT FAIR

It's not hard to recall how it was last time—the last time our nation found it necessary to mobilize its forces against a strong enemy.

Things were turned topsy-turvy. Our normal way of doing many things went out the window. We tightened our belts. We made sacrifices.

But we didn't sacrifice alike.

We seem to be heading in the same direction again. We're engaged in war in Korea. A state of national emergency has been declared. We're mobilizing our manpower and resources.

None of us knows how far we'll have to go or how long it will take to get there. But we're on the way.

And we're repeating some of the errors we made the last time.

We're not really setting the stage for the equality of sacrifice—the equality of treatment—which a national emergency demands.

Let's take price and wage controls as an example.

President Truman asked Congress for authority to control prices if price control became necessary and to control wages if wage control became necessary.

At that time skyrocketing prices were creating a big problem and wages were trailing far behind.

What did Congress do?

It passed a bill which tied price and wage controls in one package and made it mandatory that both be applied simultaneously.

The intent of a majority of Congress obviously was to freeze prices high and freeze wages low.

Equality of treatment? Nuts!

WE MAY HAVE TO HAVE RATIONING

The government already has moved into the field of price control and it seems likely the first move will be followed by others. Then, if we follow the pattern set last time, there will come a day when we'll have to have rationing.

Maybe we won't—and we hope we won't—but just on the possibility that we will we want to get in our nickel's worth now.

In some parts of the country rationing worked well last time, but there were too many instances when it didn't work fairly.

There were too many instances in which women of wealth were able to buy filet mignon at stores which informed the the wives of workers that "we don't have a single piece of meat in the house."

There were too many instances in which people with "connections" were able to buy scarce articles which weren't available to the "average Joe."

It shouldn't be permitted to happen again.

None of us in civilian life can match the sacrifices of the men who go into battle.

But we can—and we should—make a real effort to see that the sacrifices are as equal as possible.

This means that we should not permit war and threats of war to bring great profit to a few and hardship to many.

Attack On Acheson Irks Herald Tribune

EVEN THE Republican New York Herald Tribune could not stomach the attack of the Republicans in Congress on Secy. of State Acheson on the eve of his departure to attend the meeting of the North Atlantic Pact Foreign Ministers' at Brussels. An editorial in the Dec. 7 issue of the paper said:

Governor Dewey and President Truman united in warning the United States of the key role which Europe plays in the Communist plan of aggression, despite present pre-occupations with the Far East. The European continent, with its great resources in plant, in trained technicians, administrators and soldiers, would be the perfect complement, from the Russian point of view, for Asia's masses. Organized ruthlessly by the Kremlin, Europe could provide a bridge of ships and planes for Communism's conquest of the Western Hemisphere. It would advance Russia many decades toward its goal of world subjugation, counter-balancing the technological lag of the nations which have hitherto succumbed to the Kremlin.

IN BOTH AMERICA and Europe there are illusions about Europe's position in the world. Some Americans are still convinced of the self-sufficiency of this hemisphere, still wedded to the paradoxical doctrine that the United States is too weak to be able to assist its friends, too strong to need them. A group of Western Europeans, on the other hand, argue that if their countries would stick their heads into the sands of neutrality, somehow the storm would pass them by, forgetting that their own weakness is a primary cause of international unrest.

Were it not for Russia's avid desire to convert the European dynamo to the uses of Communism and the inability of the Continental nations to resist, with their own strength, a Communist attack, the world would be far more secure today.

But these aberrations, whether the product of defeatism or isolationism, do not represent the public policy of the United States and Western Europe. The Atlantic Pact exists; the task of its members is to make it a living force for peace.

The United States must supply arms, it must place men on guard in Germany; Europe must subordinate its controversies over the forms of defense to the urgency of the hour and give substance to its own bulwarks.

It is extremely unfortunate that, on the eve of Mr. Acheson's departure for Europe to conclude arrangements for the joint defense of a continent, the Republicans in Congress should have passed resolutions censuring him. These moves do not affect the bases of American policy, on which both parties are in substantial agreement. If heeded by the President, they could only delay negotiations in which speed is of the essence.

Their immediate effect can only be bad. Europe would be, in Governor Dewey's words, "a still greater prize" for Communism than Asia. To prevent its conquest demands all the unity, all the hard-headed realism, all the intelligence, that the free nations can muster. Divided councils in Europe or in Washington could be fatal.

Biemiller Tees Off Again On AMA

A DOCUMENTED record of the American Medical Association's opposition to all major public health advances in the last 30 years was presented last week by Rep. Biemillar (D. Wis.) on the floor of the House in a blistering answer to charges made against him and the CIO by Dr. Elmer Henderson, AMA president.

Henderson had charged in an article in the Nov. 11 issue of the AMA Journal, under the title, "A Fancy Package of Untruths," that an earlier speech made by Biemiller contained "outright lies."

In the article, Henderson accused the Congressman and the CIO of misrepresenting the AMA's opposition to federal aid to medical education.

Biemiller charged that the AMA is spending eight times as much on its Fair Deal smear campaign as on its own program of aid to medical schools. He pointed out that it has changed its stand on the issue at least four times, at one time going along with unanimous Senate approval of exactly the same Biemiller bill it blocked in the House.

He noted that the AMA has recently bucked another vital public health and civil defense measure—federal assistance to local and state public health units—although even the National Health Council, to which the AMA belongs, asked for favorable action. And he answered Henderson's denial of a charge that the AMA had fought bitterly against voluntary plans.

The CIO News

Congress of Industrial Organizations

Philip Murray, President James B. Carey, Secretary-Treasurer
Vice Presidents: Joseph A. Beirne, L. S. Buckmaster, Joseph Curran, Allan S. Haywood, O. A. Knight, Michael Quill, Walter P. Reuther, Emil Rieve, Frank Rosenblum

Allan L. Swim, Editor and Publicity Director

Assistant Publicity Director, Henry C. Fleisher
Assistant Editors, Hollace Ransdell, Fred Ross, Arthur Riordan (On Leave)
Dorothy Rockwell Clark, William Weiss, Gervase N. Love

Editorial Office, 718 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Entered as Second Class Matter, Post Office, Washington, D. C.
Under the Acts of Aug. 24, 1912 and Feb. 28, 1925

Vol. XIII December 25, 1950 No. 52

Challenge Was Met And Victory Won

THERE WERE many stories in the newspapers about the "beating" labor took in the Nov. 7 elections.

PAC-endorsed candidates in various parts of the country were defeated, but there were bright spots.

One of them was out in Madison County, Ind., where an outfit named the American Guard decided to challenge labor, deal it a stunning blow and then, perhaps, spread its wings until it became a national organization.

What followed made one of those stories you didn't read often in the newspapers back in November.

So here it is, as told by a CIO local editor on the scene.

THE GUARD, to use his words, was set up by "fat-cat doctors, absentee landlord farmers, General Motors division executives and others to beat the CIO-PAC, which was fairly well established in the community."

The new organization soon launched its campaign. Its propaganda was sent to every boxholder in the county before both the primary and general elections.

Memberships were sold at $5 each but much of the Guard's money came from large contributions.

Madison County, heavily industrialized yet having a large farm population, obviously was intended as a proving ground for the Guard, whose constitution was set up so it could become a state-wide or nation-wide organization.

DURING THE primary campaign, the local editor reported, the Guard "started spreading the gospel of a Bolshevik under every bed and a Commie in every kitchen."

And this "gospel" was aimed at candidates backed by PAC and other liberal groups.

The Guard didn't endorse any candidates but it worked McCarthyism to the hilt.

As time passed the Guard really began shooting the works in preparation for the November elections.

Affiliation with a labor organization—or even friendliness toward it—was enough to discredit a candidate in the eyes of Guard leaders.

A CIO member was taboo—completely! The chips were down, and the Guard finally revealed its slate of candidates.

MEANTIME PAC had been busy, too, following the line of CIO political action groups throughout the country.

It faced not only the usual difficulties of a campaign but the smear tactics of the American Guard.

CIO members, perhaps angered by Guard tactics, really got on the ball.

The campaign went into its final stretch. The heat was really on.

Then came Nov. 7 and out came the voters.

That night the returns were counted—and here's what they showed:

ONE OF THE big targets of the American Guard—Pres. Ralph Myers of the Madison County CIO Industrial Union Council—was elected a state representative. (He belongs to the Utility Workers.)

J. J. Bailey of the AFL Teachers also was elected a state representative.

Charles Satterfield of the CIO Auto Workers was named county auditor and Gene Creagmile of the same union was elected county recorder.

Another UAW member, Joe E. Brogdon, won the sheriff's race.

A majority of the voters in the county voted for John R. Walsh of the CIO Oil Workers, candidate for secretary of state.

And the American Guard had a very red face!

A. L. S.

WRAPPING HIS CHRISTMAS TIE

Mayor Says Bigger U. S. Government Gives Added Service

IF UNCLE SAM seems to be reeling these days, don't blame it on the Korean situation or the Republicans.

The bewhiskered old gentlemen had grown so accustomed to fending off the slings and arrows of outraged—and outrageous—fortune that he was sent into a genteel sort of zig-zag when a kind word was said for him. Right out in public, too.

The determined analyst who worked his way through the mass of lies, distortions and unkind words heaped on Uncle Sam's shoulders down to the good beneath them was Mayor Cooper Green, of Birmingham, Ala.

He spoke at a dinner given by Alabama city officials to the Alabama delegation in Congress during the recent annual meeting in Washington of the American Municipal Association.

He told the congressmen that he had grown more than a bit tired of speeches bemoaning the fact that the federal government is a lot bigger than it used to be, and that it has swollen to such proportions that it devours more than its share of the taxpayers money.

Naturally, he said, the federal government is bigger than it used to be. But so are state and local governments, he added. The fact that the federal government spent 12 times as much in 1949 as it did in 1929 doesn't mean much, he said, because more than 70c out of each federal dollar in 1949 was spent for war, national defense and veterans' payments and benefits.

That, Green pointed out, left only 30c for normal federal operations, or about four times as much as government cost in 1929. And most state and city governments, he added pointedly, cost a lot more in proportion than they did in 1929—in fact, the state of Alabama spent in 1949 more than six times what it spent in 1929.

"THOSE WHO harp about the size of the federal government," the Mayor went on, "never mention the great increase in serviceability of that government, or the increased good that federal services have done for our people. . . .

"When we realize what 12 billion federal dollars is getting for us today in the way of federal services and benefits we wonder what $3 billion was spent for in 1929, when there were no old age and survivors insurance programs for the millions of our wage earners, no farm benefits, no soil conservation program, no program to electrify rural and urban homes. . . .

"The 1929 federal government that allowed big business to squeeze to death little business, let our banking system drift into ruin and bankruptcy. . . . And those who oppose government costs seldom, if ever, oppose the benefits of government."

Refusal Of Food And Drug Agency To Amend Bread Standards Protested

Refusal of the Food & Drug Administration to amend proposed standards for white bread has brought a flood of protest from labor groups. The standards are expected to go into effect about the first of February.

Donald Montgomery, Washington representative of CIO Auto Workers and formerly consumers' counsel in the Dept. of Agriculture, after asking the FDA to reconsider its bread standards, has repeated a charge that the government is trying to put a ceiling on the quality of the white bread consumed by the American public.

Similar complaints were filed earlier by the Cooperative League, and labor organizations, other than UAW. Commissioner Paul B. Dunbar responded by sending a 15,000-word explanation of his agency's action in the matter.

He said that FDA might consider setting up a new category of "high protein" bread in which Co-op Triple Rich could be sold. That's not what the co-ops want. They want to sell their product as "bread" or "white bread." Thousands of people buy it as such now.

The limitations set by FDA put a limit on the use of wheat germ, yeast food, and soy flour used in making white bread. The co-op bread is too good to come in that category. It contains more wheat and soy than is required.

"Apparently your reasoning is that larger amounts of these highly nutritious ingredients would deceive consumers," wrote Montgomery, "because (1) the loaf would lack the graveyard whiteness which millers and bakers impart to their bread, and (2) consumers would be getting a better-tasting and more nourishing product than the commercial bakers, through years of quality degradation, have led them to expect."

News Commentator Raymond Gram Swing has also joined in the bread fight. He told his radio audience last week that the FDA is setting a maximum standard of what constitutes enrichment.

TOP OFFICERS of the CIO Textile Workers confer during the union's north-south wage conference in Washington. The two-day conference, attended by more than 400 delegates from cotton-rayon mills, voted to ask substantial wage increases, quarterly cost of living adjustments, with annual wage improvements and other benefits for 200,000 TWUA members. Left to right are Secy.-Treas. William Pollock, Pres. Emil Rieve an Executive Vice Pres. George Baldanzi.

DELEGATES to CIO Textile Workers north-south wage conference hear Pres. Emil Rieve declare that the wage increases, pension proposals and insurance and vacation improvements sought by the union in 400 cotton-rayon mills can be afforded by the industry without further textile price increases. Union proposals were presented in conjunction with contract expirations in northern mills March 15 and wage reopenings in southern mills the same date.

750,000 House Units In Detroit Substandard

MORE THAN 750,000 Detroit residents are living in substandard dwellings or in standard dwellings but under substandard conditions. That was the report recently issued by the Detroit Housing Commission.

Of this total 250,000 live in what the commission classified as substandard housing. Substandard dwelling units are in need of major repairs or do not have inside toilets, baths or running water.

The remainder are housed in standard dwellings but under substandard conditions caused by two or more families occupying a unit designed for one family. The commission said that doubling up of families has taken place in 48,000 homes.

The commission found that the already critical housing problem was becoming worse by an influx of workers coming to Detroit for war jobs. Mark K. Herley, assistant director-secretary of the commission, reported that an "all-out war effort would make the job of housing these workers practically impossible."

Herley pointed out that more than 6000 families are waiting to get into public housing. A spot check of 16 management companies who operate large apartment buildings containing more than 11,000 units revealed only three vacancies during November and waiting lists of nearly 2000.

Herley said a woman complained "that as much snow was coming through the roof of the house she was living in as was falling on the ground." Four families were found living in a single-unit dwelling which had no plumbing facilities. Sewage had reached a depth of three feet in the basement of this house.

Steel Union Wins 16c

The CIO Steelworkers and the Wickwire-Spencer Steel Division of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Corp., Buflalo, N. Y., signed an agreement yielding average wage increases of 16c an hour to 1700 employes, retroactive to Dec. 1.

NAACP Aid For Accused Negro Soldiers

THE BEST proof that the fight for equality for Negro Americans has not been won is to be found in complaints of the treatment of Negro soldiers fighting in Korea, Roy Wilkins, administrator of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, declared last week.

The NAACP has made its first order of business the defense of Negro soldiers allegedly discriminated against in courts-martial, and is guiding appeals of convictions of four members of the 24th Infantry.

"The NAACP does not intend," said Wilkins, "that Negro fighting men shall be victimized through discriminatory action and branded as failures in the Korean fighting.

"Perhaps Negro troops made a few mistakes in Korea. But according to the information now coming through, and according to the prima facie evidence in the form of our retreat, a lot of mistakes were made by practically everyone, from the highest on down."

WILKINS, speaking at the annual dinner of the Greenwich, Conn., branch of the organization, announced that Thurgood Marshall, NAACP general counsel, will go to Tokyo to determine how the NAACP can best aid victims of "discrimination, humiliation and wholesale courts-martial actions."

The cases of the four members of the 24th Infantry were argued before a board of review in the office of the Judge Advocate General in Washington by Jack Greenberg, associate general counsel.

They include a master sergeant, a veteran of World War II with five battle stars and a record of exceptional bravery, who was sentenced to 20 years' imprisonment for alleged failure to obey an order to return to the front.

UAW Signs Pact With Briggs Co.

A five-year contract embodying cost of living wage increases has been signed by the CIO Auto Workers and the Briggs Manufacturing Co. It covers about 34,000 workers.

Wages immediately went up by 1c an hour, and minimum pensions were raised from $100 to $125 after 25 years' service. The agreement also provides for annual increases of 4c an hour in each June for the life of the pact, which may not be reopened on any issue during its duration.

Champion Of Labor Laws Dies At 73

JOSEPHINE GOLDMARK, a veteran of early fights for social and labor laws and once research director for the National Consumers League, died recently in Hartsdale, N. Y. She was 73.

For many years she was associated with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, former Secy. of Labor Frances Perkins, Justice Felix Frankfurter and her brother-in-law, Justice Louis D. Brandeis.

While she was research director for the Consumers League, Justice Brandeis was its counsel. The statistics and facts she dug up were incorporated into many briefs supporting early laws limiting working hours or regulating working conditions. Included was a brief Justice Brandeis used to help win the test case that upheld New York State's outlawing of night work for women in 1914.

She was the author of "Fatigue and Efficiency," which was published by the Russell Sage Foundation in 1912 and is regarded as the first scientific presentation of evidence that fatigue lessens efficiency. It played an important role in the fight for shorter working hours. She also worked with the committee that investigated the Triangle Shirt factory fire in 1912, and with Miss Perkins, the late Alfred E. Smith and the late Sen. Robert A. Wagner, helped prepare recommendations that led to many reforms in laws governing factory operations.

Better Cotton, Rayon Pacts TWUA's Target

SUBSTANTIAL wage increases, quarterly cost of living adjustments providing for annual wage improvements, minimum pensions of $100 a month and other contract gains will be sought for 200,000 Textile Workers in the cotton and rayon industry.

These are some of the decisions reached by 700 delegates to a conference held by the union at Washington Dec. 16 and 17. They represented TWUA members in 400 cotton and rayon plants in the North and the South.

The proposed minimum pension plan would include social security payments and provide for voluntary retirement at the age of 65 years.

These proposals will be submitted when the northern mill contracts expire March 15. The southern mill pacts do not expire until late next summer, but may be reopened for wages on March 15.

TWUA Pres. Emil Rieve told the delegates that wage increases, pensions and insurance and vacation gains sought by the union should be easily attainable because of record earnings and profits in the industry. He said all proposals could be granted without further increases in textile prices.

RIEVE, AT THE first joint TWUA North-South conference in seven years, said that third-quarter profits this year for 23 representative textile companies were 189% above those of 1949 and that the rate of profit exceeded that of 1948, when the industry was termed the nation's most prosperous.

He declared these profits resulted from an all-time high textile production and a 12% productivity increase that had not been shared by either consumers or workers.

"Textile workers are willing to rally their full strength behind the U. S. in the cause for freedom," he said. "But they are determined to prevent unfair burdens being placed upon them while American employers enjoy their greatest prosperity in history."

Rieve pointed out that cotton-rayon workers had only one wage increase since early in 1948. This amounted to 10% in the northern mills and slightly more than 8% in the South. As a result he said, cotton-rayon wages lagged 30c an hour below the average for the manufacturing industry.

TWUA also will ask better company-paid insurance, additional paid holidays, a third week of vacation pay and improved administration of contracts.

IN A RESOLUTION on "economic mobilization against aggression," the union called for speedy conversion "of our whole economy to the military and economic needs of this crisis." It recommended definite time schedules for production, voluntary mobilization of labor, full labor representation in government policy-making and equality of sacrifice.

Another resolution recommended an excess profits tax yielding $7 billion. Immediate passage of a price control law "without exemptions and special privileges" and retention and improvement of the Public Contracts and Fair Labor Standards acts were also asked by the TWUA delegates.

The Public Contracts (Walsh-Healey Act) controls wage payment in contracts awarded by the federal government. The Fair Labor Standards Act, which is popuarly known as the Wage-Hour Act, fixes minimum pay at 75c an hour and the work week at 40 hours.

Steelworkers Sign 2nd Youngstown Pact

The CIO Steelworkers and the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. have signed their second recent agreement—a pact giving wage increases of 11% to clerks and salaried employes at Youngstown, O.

The union and the company earlier had signed a contract giving wage increases averaging 16c an hour for production and maintenance workers.

CBS Asks Employes To Take Loyalty Oaths

THE COLUMBIA Broadcasting System — a private corporation — has asked its 2500 employes to sign the same type of loyalty statement as the federal government requires of applicants for civil service jobs.

This trend repeatedly has drawn the fire of the CIO and other liberal organizations because of the inherent infringement of traditional American civil liberty.

A CBS employe is asked whether he has ever been a member of the Communist Party, any Communist organization, any Fascist organization, or any organization which advocates overthrowing the government.

IF THE answer is "yes," the employe is entitled to state specifically which organization, and to give an explanation.

On the back of the statement is a list of organizations which the Attorney General considered disloyal as of Oct. 30, 1950.

CBS does not require notarization of the statements and will keep the replies confidential.

The concern of CBS over the possibility that its radio and television audiences were concerned about the loyalty of its employes was indicated in a memorandum sent to CBS employes.

In the memorandum, Joseph H. Ream, executive vice president of the organization, explained that the purpose of the loyalty statement was to make certain that Columbia enjoyed the confidence of audiences. He said:

"Because of the unique nature of broadcasting, it is important that, for the good of the country and our own organization, there be no question concerning the loyalty of any CBS employes.

"We are all aware that in the past year certain groups have had questions concerning alleged subversive influences in broadcasting. It is important that the true facts —based on the statement of each employe—be established."

REAM WAS possibly referring to charges made by a group of former FBI agents had published Counter Attack, anti-Communist weekly news letter, and Red Channels.

As a result of charges by Red Channels the General Foods Corp. last September fired Jean Muir on the eve of her appearance in the radio production The Aldrich Family.

At that time, Ireene Wicker, the "Singing Lady," returned from Europe—where she received a special blessing from Pope Pius for her radio and television programs and her work with children—to find that Kellogg Co. had cancelled her contract, apparently on the basis of being named in Red Channels.

Simultaneously with the CBS announcement, the National Broadcasting Co. told the press that negotiations are under way for a contract between it and Margaret Truman.

Which left newspapermen wondering whether NBC—which long has required loyalty oaths from new employes—would require the President's daughter to give one.

The Voice Is Voice Of Gerard, Words Are Words Of Rumely

By GERVASE N. LOVE

The Committee for Constitutional Government, which has spent millions of dollars in the last 14 years trying to influence public opinion and Congress, has figured out still another new gimmick for luring thick rolls of bills from the well-lined pockets of the wealthy suckers who keep it going.

It has embarked on a campaign to collect $300,000 to use the courts as a sounding-board during the forthcoming trial—and appeals, it is presumed—of its executive secretary, Dr. Edward A. Rumely, on a charge of contempt of Congress, and to replace a loss of $125,000 in income suffered as a result of its exposure by the House Lobby Committee.

RUMELY IS the operational head of the reactionary, anti-labor, anti-New Deal, anti-Fair Deal CCG. The CCG raised most of the millions it spent to push its tory brand of thinking on Congress and the people by what it called "sales" of "educational" material which were paid for by wealthy benefactors and distributed free to libraries, colleges, churches, "selected" lists, etc.

When the House lobby probers, headed by Rep. Buchanan (D. Pa.), asked Rumely for the sources of such income, he refused to supply them. At the committee's request he was cited for contempt by the House, despite the outraged bleats of some Republican legislators, and later was indicted by a District of Columbia federal grand jury.

The CCG's appeal for funds is being sent out under the name of Treas. Sumner Gerard. He begs for 12,000 subscriptions at $11 each to "Spotlight," a CCG publication; 15,000 suckers willing to be tapped for a total of $60,000, and enough upper bracket dupes to buy $108,000 worth of "literature" in king-size lots.

Rumely has attempted to distort the issue of answering the lobby investigators' queries into a question of freedom of the press.

"During Dr. Rumely's trial," said Gerard's almost tearful plea for funds, "we shall have an opportunity to establish anew, in national public opinion, respect for the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

"One serious problem confronts us. Financially, the Committee has not recovered from the more than $125,000 loss of income resulting from the Buchanan probers' assault.

"Yet, we all owe it to Dr. Rumely to provide him with the ablest legal counsel, for he has accepted the risk of imprisonment in this fight. We have already started a nationwide educational campaign on the issues involved. This effort must be broadened and carried forward until and during the trial. This, and the expenses incidental to the trial, will call for substantial amounts outside of our regular budget.

"IT IS INDISPENSABLE that the Committee be put into strong financial condition now. It has before it the greatest opportunity in its 14-year history. Chairman Buchanan has thrust our Committee in the foreground, provoked favorable nationwide publicity from leaders in all walks who want to support our resistance to encroaching socialism.

"In July, under the Buchanan attacks, Dr. Rumely contributed $1,000 to wipe out the deficit of our July operations. He now insists upon contributing with members of his family, another $1,000. I will not allow him to make this financial sacrifice, in addition to the risks he has run for us, without matching his contribution by underwriting an additional $2,000."

Workers Support U. S. Policy--Murray In Voice Of America

AMERICAN workers stand shoulder to shoulder behind their President and the United Nations in the present struggle to stop aggression, Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO told the workers of the world in a Voice of America broadcast last week.

"Only five years ago we won the battle for freedom against the Nazi butchers and Japanese imperialists—and in this struggle the productive power of American industry and American workers played a vital part," he said.

"Today, we will work again to protect free people and free nations from the attack of communist imperialism.

"The Communists cannot divide or deceive us. American workers know that communism breeds slave labor, as it destroys free trade unions and outlaws the workers' right to strike. We know who are the real aggressors; just as it was Hitler who invaded defenseless nations, it is now the Communists who are invading South Korea and Indo-China.

"When American workers criticize their employers or their government, do not believe that America is divided.

"Freedom does not weaken us. It gives us strength because we know for what we stand and for what we fight. In these difficult times, the great productive power of the free workers of America, combined with the industrial potential of American industry, will again produce the necessary military and economic resources to help freedom-loving people everywhere."

Right-Winger Wins Again In Bridges' Local

HARRY BRIDGES, voluble president of the Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union, suffered a major political defeat in his own local in San Francisco last week when Phil Sandin, a right-winger who has long opposed his policies, was re-elected president in a close race.

In the Local 10 contest Sandin defeated Bridges' handpicked candidate, Henry Schmidt. It was Schmidt who was convicted with Bridges a few months ago on charges of perjury growing out of testimony they gave when the latter won citizenship in 1945. At that time, both testified that Bridges was not a Communist. They are free in bond pending appeals.

A few days after the election Schmidt was barred from working on military docks in the Bay Area, the Army explaining he was considered an "undesirable" because of his conviction. The Navy had barred him previously from working at the Oakland Naval Supply Center.

In campaigning among the local's 6000 members, right-wingers denounced Bridges for calling President Truman's state of emergency speech a "declaration of war against the basic rights of the working people." Bridges was accused of singing "the high nasal tenor of the anti-American hate chorus that receives its background from the Kremlin organ." The ILWU was expelled from the CIO as Communist-dominated.

Miss. Prep School's Rejection Of Bias Brings Gift Shower

JEFFERSON Military College, the little Washington, Miss., prep school that turned down a potential $50 million rather than dedicate itself to discrimination and bigotry, isn't doing too badly these days.

The school was not in good financial condition about a year ago when Judge George Armstrong, Texas oil tycoon and hate merchant, offered it half the mineral rights on 26,000 undeveloped acres of his Mississippi holdings. His conditions boiled down to two: no Negro or Jewish students, and control of the board of trustees of the 148-year-old school for the Judge Armstrong Foundation.

When the board rejected the offer, $45,000 came in to the school in small gifts. They're still coming in—$1, $5, $10, $50 —from half the states and from Canada, Australia, England and Switzerland. A visiting Rhode Islander drove around the campus one day and left $10. An Illinois optometrist sent $50, pledged the same sum on each anniversary of his brother's death in Normandy.

Students have given up their spare time to work on the buildings, using materials donated by dealers from all over the state. A lot has been done, but a lot remains.

Stan Murphy, president of the board of trustees which rejected the Armstrong offer, now calls it a blessing in disguise.

"It made the town madder than hell," he said. "There is more interest in the school now than ever before. Until this happened, it was pretty much taken for granted."

W. MAGRUDER DRAKE, a retired businessman, has since replaced Murphy as board president and Admiral A. S. (Tip) Merrill has become chairman of the executive committee. Drake spends five to eight hours a day on school affairs. Merrill is heading a fund-raising campaign.

Maj. L. P. Montgomery, whose great-great-grandfather was treasurer of the first board, has become commandant.

"We want Jefferson to be a place as free of humbug as any place in God's world," he said. "We don't want to be a particularly rich school. We do want to be the best and soundest preparatory school in the country. That's a large enough order."

Shipbuilders Win Union Shop Vote

The CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers last week won a union shop election—by a 10-to-1 margin—among some 15,000 workers in Bethlehem Steel's seven East Coast shipyards.

NLRB reported 15,415 were eligible to cast ballots and that the vote was 10,599 in favor of the union shop and 1043 against.

Shipyards involved included two in Baltimore, two in Boston, and one each in Brooklyn and Staten Island, N. Y., and Hoboken, N. J.

Business Set For Ride On Re-Geared Gravy Train

BAD NEWS for all taxpaying workers, good news for most bosses: Congress is about to pass an excess profits tax bill which, in the CIO's opinion, will (a) fail to wrest from corporations their fair share of the huge extra sums needed for mobilization, and (b) probably work distinct hardship on smaller, newer business enterprises.

All details of the legislation were not clear as this edition of the CIO News went to press because the bill was in House-Senate conference.

But this much was clear: neither House nor Senate version would increase corporations' share of the extra tax burden in the same proportion as the share of the average taxpayer has already been increased. And there are more taxes to come for individuals.

Emil Rieve, administrative chairman of the CIO Committee on Economic Policy, condemned the bill as "inequitable, unfair, and a travesty on justice," and pointed out that it would allow corporations to retain 60% more on investment than did the World War II excess profits measure.

THE HOUSE version would take away from corporations 75% of all extra money they earn above 85% of the average profits made in their most profitable three years in the four-year period 1946-49.

The Senate version would relieve them of 77%, or 2% more, on the same basis. But part of the Senate increase comes in the form of a raise in the regular corporation tax rate and this is the feature that would hit smaller, newer corporations particularly hard. The Senate bill also has more liberal "escape" provisions than the House measure.

Congressional action came simultaneously with release of the December Economic Outlook, published by the CIO Dept. of Research and Education, which sets forth in detail the CIO position on the excess profits tax question.

Calling for a fair, equitable and adequate excess profits tax, the Outlook says in part:

In the pre-war years 1936-39 the average total corporate profits per year before taxes were $5.4 billion, with $4.1 billion left after taxes were paid.

Guernsey-Montgomery for the Economic Outlook, CIO.

In 1940, as the war clouds gathered, profits went up before taxes to $9.3 billion; after taxes, to $6.4 billion.

In 1941, the year which ended in the attack on Pearl Harbor, profits before taxes were $17.2 billion, after taxes $9.4 billion.

IN 1942 Congress enacted an excess profits tax law a lot tougher than either version now proposed. This lasted till the end of 1945. The average profit before taxes for this period was $22.5 billion; after taxes, $9.8 billion (or more, in spite of the admittedly large tax burden, than ever before.)

("In spite of the normal corporate and excess profits tax taking 55% of the total net income of the corporations," the Outlook comments, "industry after industry, corporation after corporation, that paid substantial proportions of these taxes, thrived and progressed.")

After the excess profits tax was repealed by the 80th Congress (and there were those at the time, including the CIO, who thought the tax was lifted too soon), here's what happened:

The average profit before taxes for the years 1946-49 was $28.8 billion; after taxes, $17.5 billion.

And in the first three quarters of 1950, the total has steadily mounted. Third quarter profits before taxes were at the annual rate of $42 billion: after taxes, $24.4 billion.

Result: As of now, the corporations' proportionate share of the tax burden is lower than it was during the war period, while the share of direct taxes upon the people has almost doubled. Neither House nor Senate bill remedies this. Here are the facts as the Outlook found them:

Year	Direct Taxes on People	Excises and Other Indirect Taxes Which People Pay Eventually	Direct Taxes on Corporations
	(Percent of Total Federal Revenue)
1939	28.0	46.0	26.0
1942-43 combined	31.4	24.5	44.1
1944-45 combined	47.8	14.4	37.8
1948	52.5	22.2	25.3
1950	46.7	23.9	29.4
1950 adjusted to reflect new taxes	48.8	21.3	29.9

The Outlook then explains the principle of an excess profits tax. It is supposed to do what its name implies—capture war-swollen profits, skimming off what is above and beyond the fair and equitable level. [CIO says this level should be 75% of average earnings for the four-year period 1946-49, and that the excess profits tax rate should be 85% as compared to the present normal and surtax corporate rate of 45%. This would let the corporations keep 15c on every dollar of excess earnings.]

FURTHERMORE, the Outlook continues, such a tax would be decidedly anti-inflationary, since it would remove one major incentive to raise prices. Corporations look at their price structure in relation to profits after taxes.

"The higher the excess profits tax rate, the less incentive there is to raise prices," the Outlook states.

The Outlook then attacked the pious contention of the National Association of Manufacturers that an excess profits tax hits all corporations, not just the big money-makers.

"This charge is not true," the Outlook says, "and it completely disregards the evidence."

Fact: Approximately only 20% of all corporations reporting net income during World War II paid an excess profits tax, and the greatest bulk came from those with an adjusted excess profits net income of $1 million or more.

CIO has recommended to Congress that it enact an excess profits tax bill that will raise between $6 and $7 billion, as compared to the estimated $3 to $4 billion that would be raised by the pending proposals.

Keeping Rabbits Would Be Cheaper

Unless you shot your own bear, you likely paid a pre-determined price for that fur coat you gave the little lady for Christmas.

So, in effect, said the Federal Trade Commission a few days before Santa was due, in ordering the Associated Fur Coat and Trimming Manufacturers, Inc., and its 700 members "to stop collusively engaging in practices found to have resulted in a substantial restraint of competition."

Members of the association make and sell 70 to 80% of the total U. S. volume of such products, FTC said, and have maintained a "virtual monopoly" in the sale and distribution of fur coats, other fur garments and fur trimmings.

Admiral Lauds Labor For Helping Seabees

Organized labor has been given a pat on the back for its help in strengthening the Seabees, by Rear Admiral Joseph F. Jelley, Chief of Naval Civil Engineers.

"Cooperation by union labor in Seabee recruiting has been of the greatest value," the Admiral wrote.

There Are Plenty Of Laws To Protect Corporate Profits

By IRVING FAGAN and CUSHMAN REYNOLDS
For Labor Press Association

PLENTY OF corporations don't have to care too much about what kind of excess profits tax goes on the law books. Their profits are pretty well protected regardless of what the 81st Congress does on EPT. For this Congress and past Congresses have already voted them plenty of favors.

Take a little matter called "amortization of emergency facilities." Congress put it through last summer to make things easier for those companies kind enough to accept defense orders requiring new plant facilities.

Briefly, if a business man finds he must build a new factory to make tanks or jet fighters, big-hearted Uncle Sam says he can write off the cost in five years. In other words, he can make 20% profit a year tax free. It must be a heart-warming thought to a rifleman crouched on a fireswept Far Eastern beach.

This section of the tax law ought to be headed "The Korean Bonanza" or " How to Coax Business to Make More Profits on the War," according to Sen. Humphrey (D. Minn.). Of course, there was such a provision on the books during World War II, Humphrey reminds us, but he points out that then Congress at least had the grace to pass an excess profits tax first.

OR TAKE THE matter of "percentage depletion." This is the little racket run by the oil and gas men and by the owners of certain other mineral properties. It goes like this:

If the owner of an oil well makes $100,000 a year he is permitted to set aside $27,500 as a "depletion allowance" before he even thinks about taxes. There are a lot of oilwell owners including, of course, the big oil corporations who make a great deal more than $100,000 a year. So the depletion allowance costs the Treasury money we little chaps have to make up. Humphrey thinks it costs $500 million a year to keep this gimmick on the books.

The oilmen naturally argue that "depletion allowance" is simply another word for "depreciation," that anybody with business property is entitled to depreciate his investment before taxes. But try depreciating some of your property at 27½%—if you're lucky enough to own business property.

Add the oil companies to the companies building new defense plants and you'll find that a large segment of the defense program will be operating under a tax subsidy. In other words, big business makes patriotism a matter of dollars and cents.

If you don't think so, go back to the oil depletion allowance for a moment. The Treasury has pointed out a number of cases where wealthy men whose annual incomes average over $1 million a year paid income taxes of less than 22.5%.

THE TREASURY also says that in 1947 oli firms worth more than $100 million claimed depletion allowances exceeding 13 times their original cost. Try that on your income tax blank if you own a corner candy store!

In addition, the oil men can deduct "development costs." A year ago President Truman said one oil operator was able to "develop" properties earning $5 million a year between 1943 and 1947 without paying a thin dime in taxes. He paid a scant $100,000 in taxes over a five-year period on an annual "side" income of $1 million a year. Meanwhile, we were taxing people making as little as $20 a week.

You might keep these and other "tax loopholes" in mind when Congress boosts your personal income tax again this winter. You might ask your Senator or Representative what he intends to do about them.

For you can rest assured that your taxes will be raised to pay for the expanding defense program. That's the price we all are prepared to pay to contain the Communist aggressors. That's the price President Truman told us we'd have to pay. We're going to give up a lot of things to meet the world menace.

PLUGGING THE tax loopholes won't avert a rise in personal taxes this winter. But what you can ask your Congressmen is this: Why should the big defense corporations and the oil companies get more favors than we little guys who have trouble enough paying the rent and the grocery bill? And when you talk to your Congressmen, shout loudly. Make sure they hear you. You can bet the oil men make sure they're heard.

AUSTRIA'S VOCATIONAL TRAINING includes classes for young, as yet unskilled workers. These boys are learning to be skilled technicians needed for the nation's important timber industry and its 5500 sawmills scattered throughout the forests. Reforestation is a vital part of Austrian recovery.

THIS GROUP OF WOMEN, shown at work in a small plant at Salzburg, Austria, makes weavers' shuttles. The factory was kept in production with the help of $70,000 in Marshall Plan funds, used to purchase imported wood needed for the shuttles. Funds are small but the work is highly important.

How Much ECA Aids Austrians Up To Soviet

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

IT'S TOO early yet to tell what effect the Korean war and the possibility of more Communist aggression elsewhere may have on the vast improvements made in European workers' standards of living under Marshall Plan aid.

Will it mean fewer homes, schools and hospitals built, and a drastic cut in consumer goods, as basic industries are speeded up for rearmament? Will the benefits which Europeans have received under the ECA program (such as those shown in the pictures from Austria on this page), necessarily diminish as production for war increases?

Answers to these questions lie in the future, but certainly Russian aggression has already placed a double burden on the rebuilding of Europe's economic life, by forcing her to arm for an emergency while continuing to produce for peace.

MUCH OF the energy and money that would have gone into rebuilding farms and factories in Austria, for example, will now have to be turned into such basic war industries as steel. Already Austria's steel production has been speeded up.

The country's biggest blooming (raw steel) mill in the Donawitz Smelting Works, which began operation last November, will attain full production of 45,000 tons in January. Present plans are to increase Austria's crude steel production to 1.3 million tons, reports ECA.

Preservation of democracy in Europe, however, depends not only on armament but also involves economic, social and political stability. That is why it is so important for the type of aid that American dollars through Marshall Plan aid have brought into the lives of ordinary people be continued.

Take Frau Ernst, a war widow with five children, who now has new, improved buildings on her farm, constructed with the help of Marshall Plan funds. The project of modernizing this farm was designed to aid, directly and by example, the recovery of Austrian agriculture.

Then there is the small factory near Salzburg which manufactures weavers' shuttles. The plant was kept going because $70,000 worth of Marshall Plan funds were authorized to purchase rare imported woods peculiarly adapted for the construction of its product. The inhabitants of Zell am See, many of whom work in the factory, will testify to the value of the aid they have received.

And there's the vocational school which has been in operation for the past several years, training young men for technical work in the nation's 5500 sawmills. Austria's timber industry is one of the most important in her overall economy.

Thousands of dollars have been allotted to expand this vocational school and increase its effectiveness, through the hiring of more instructors.

These are just a few of the many thousands of ordinary people throughout Europe who can give the lie to the anti-Marshall Plan propaganda of the Communists, that they are being ground under the heel of Wall Street.

Austrian Labor Editors To Tour United States

A group of Austrian labor editors will arrive in this country Jan. 12 for a six weeks' tour sponsored by the Economic Cooperation Administration, to observe and study American productivity.

The Austrian ECA team will not only talk to labor editors, but also will interview as many American workers as possible.

AN AUSTRIAN WAR WIDOW with five children discusses plans for new and improved buildings on her farm, constructed with Marshall Plan aid. This is an example of the kind of modernizing that will help bring about the recovery of Austrian agriculture, which is not yet back to the pre-war level. Farm improvement is urgently needed all over Western Europe.

SUCH RUINS as this farm at Blambach, Austria, are among the many reconstruction projects being carried on with Marshall Plan aid. With 20 million more people living in Western Europe than before the war, the agricultural expansion program is playing an important role in recovery. Improved U. S. seed and methods help step up production.

Labor United To Help In Crisis—Goldberg

"ALL OF us ought to press for national unity — among labor, management, the professions, everybody — to steer our country through these pressing times," Arthur J. Goldberg, CIO general counsel, told the Decalogue Society of Lawyers in Chicago Dec. 15.

Looking at the international situation, Goldberg said, "The best we can hope for is a prolonged state of international discussions—the worst is obvious."

He said our nation is in the most critical period in its national history, and that we stand ready to be involved in a major conflict —not just a cold war.

"Labor has come sadly to the realization that this nation must mobilize itself," Goldberg declared, "with the possibility and great probability of international conflict.

"Labor is united in support of our country's policies and program in this grave crisis. That doesn't mean that we don't differ with some phases of the policy.

"I only wish—and the CIO wishes—that the politicians, particularly in the Senate of the U. S., would unite for national unity."

Goldberg told the group about formation of the new 14-member United Labor Policy Committee, set up because "there is no room for division in the ranks of labor in this period of national crisis."

Referring to the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions and its recent mission to the Far East, Goldberg said, "Our situation may not be ideal, but we have to protect what we have and love, or face the possibility of something worse."

Of the domestic scene, Goldberg said, "We must engage quickly in all-out mobilization of our economy. Our biggest and best weapon is our productive technique and capacity."

Mobilization does not come overnight, he said, "and we cannot have 'business as usual' and have all-out mobilization, too.

"Labor is prepared to make any sacrifice necessary, but we insist on equality of sacrifice."

He reviewed the Defense Production Act of 1950 and described it as a "fraud and a sham to make the public think that the President can control prices and wages."

Selective price controls might have worked, Goldberg, "but the Defense Production Act says you must control the wages of the men who make the particular item that is controlled. It just could not work."

Describing the tremendous profits being accumulated by some corporations, Goldberg said, "We believe in the profit system, but we do not believe that exorbitant profits should be made out of this grave crisis that our nation finds itself in."

Pa. FEPC Bill To Be Introduced

A Fair Employment Practices Commission bill will be introduced into the Pennsylvania Legislature when it opens its new session in January, according to Clarence E. Pickett, chairman of the State Council for a Pennsylvania FEPC.

The measure would erect legal barriers to racial, religious or nationality discrimination by employers, employment agencies or unions, and would set up a five-man commission to use "conference, conciliation and persuasion" before proceeding to administrative and court hearings.

The proposal is backed by the CIO and AFL, both of which have membership in the council. CIO Pres. Philip Murray, whose home is in Pittsburgh, is a member of the advisory committee.

Cunningham Retires From Mediation Job

Edward J. Cunningham has retired as regional director of the Cleveland, O., office of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service after 41 years of government service. He entered the old Conciliation Service in 1917 and had been in charge of the Cleveland office since 1944.

Succeeding him as chief of the region is Morrison C. Garst, a former representative of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, who has been with the service since 1943.

The service also announced the appointment of Henry F. Tucker as regional director of the Detroit, Mich., region, of which he has been acting director since Oct. 1. A conciliator since 1943, he served in the Navy during World War II. He formerly was a staff member for the AFL State, County & Municipal Employees Union.

"Sure, go ahead and get it—just don't forget to take food off the budget."

TWUA Tells Truman How To Get Duck

THE CIO Textile Workers have asked for presidential intervention along the line of action which ended the recent railroad walkouts, in an effort to spur reopening of a Texas duck manufacturing plant.

In a letter to Secy. of Labor Maurice J. Tobin, the union's Washington representative, John Edelman, pointed out that while the Dept. of Defense continues to have difficulties in obtaining duck, a cotton fabric, from the textile industry, the Denison Cotton Mill, Denison, Tex., which produces the material exclusively, is currently conducting what amounts to a lockout of its employes.

Edelman said that the Denison company since June has continued its "stubborn refusal" to make a settlement with its employes.

"In view of the President's declaration of a state of emergency," he added, "it would seem essential that the government take prompt and energetic steps to have a plant such as the one at Denison, whose product is needed by our armed forces, get back into full production at once.

"Presidential intervention did apparently have a prompt effect in the recent walkout in several rail terminals. If it would take this kind of action to have the Denision Mill resume to production of needed materials, we strongly urge that the President's advisers bring the full influence of the Executive Office to bear in this situation."

Films Tell How ECA Aids Europe

HOW AMERICAN dollars, working through the Marshall Plan, have revived industries and whole communities in Europe, bringing new hope to the people, is told dramatically in a number of 16 mm. films now available for American union audiences.

Many of the films are outstandingly beautiful documentaries, produced by some of Europe's finest movie technicians. All of them tell in simple, understandable terms, the story of the rebirth of trade and commerce in Europe and the laying of the groundwork for a better living for the working people.

Produced in Europe as part of ECA's overseas information program, arrangements for their distribution in this country were announced last week by the labor information service of the Economic Cooperation Administration.

The National CIO's Film Division is planning to offer some of these films for showings before union groups. They run from 10 to 20 minutes each. Details may be obtained by writing to Associate Education Dir. George Guernsey at CIO headquarters, 718 Jackson Pl., N. W., Washington 6.

Among the films are: "Adventure in Sardinia," the story of the untiring efforts of the natives, aided by Americans, to wipe out the dread malaria which each year took hundred of lives on this Italian island.

"Henry's Story" is a moving human interest picture of the rebuilding of the French barge fleet on the Rhine.

Jobs Responsibility Of U.S., CIO Tells House

CONVERSION unemployment was termed a "national responsibility" in testimony presented last week to a House Ways and Means subcommittee by the CIO Social Security Committee.

"No employer, no state can prevent it or deal adequately with the problem," John W. Edelman, secretary of a CIO legislative subcommittee and Washington representative of the CIO Textile Workers, told the Congressmen.

Economic security in time of drastic economic shift is uppermost in the mind of every working man, he declared. He pointed out that cutbacks in the use of copper, steel and other materials are threatening the jobs of tens of thousands of workers.

"Many of these workers have already received layoff notices," he said. "There is no assurance that war orders will shortly flow into the plants where civilian production is curtailed. Many months may pass before these men and women again have full-time work. The rent must be paid and their children fed just the same.

"Later, as war production orders shift, or if plants are decentralized, other types of unemployment will occur. We hope that not too far in the future we will go through a reconversion for peace. Here again the nation will be confronted with unemployment problems which will be of such scope that no one state or group of states could possibly grapple with it."

EDELMAN said the CIO "deeply deplores" the failure of the entire Ways and Means Committee to consider problems of unemployment insurance following President Truman's recommendations last spring.

He reviewed for the subcommittee the CIO's position on unemployment insurance as set forth at the Chicago convention, urging an immediate return to federal administration of public employment offices and of unemployment insurance.

He declared that from experience gained during World War I and World War II, "it is absolutely necessary" to have a federal system of employment offices.

"The nation's manpower cannot be mobilized efficiently if the employment service is split into 51 separate jurisdictions," he said. "The essential inefficiency of this patch-work, or state-by-state system, make a sort of springboard for those who are constantly seeking an excuse to promote some totalitarian method of organizing our manpower reserves.

"TECHNICALLY, the state systems are subject to some measure of federal control, but even these vague and weak strings have been loosened by the vicious Knowland amendment to the Social Security Act. Pious declarations by state agencies, indicating a willingness to cooperate with the national administration, are simply not good enough.

"There must be national policies, nationwide mobility of labor, nationwide clearance of job openings, national cooperation of unions and management in communities to supply trained men and women for the war effort. The Office of Defense Manpower cannot perform its functions fully and swiftly unless the public employment offices are part of its machinery. With their federalization, an adequate national system of unemployment insurance is needed."

Edelman declared that the drastic manpower mobilization program that must be instituted cannot be delayed while state legislatures grind out their separate enactments. He called on the subcommittee to recommend that Congress assume responsibility for the imposition of higher standards in the administration of unemployment insurance and "proceed at once" to raise the scale of benefits "by whatever formula can be drafted by legislative drafting experts."

Emergency Defense Training Is Studied By Women's Bureau

TRAINING OF women for defense work was discussed at a recent meeting of the Labor Advisory Committee for the U. S. Women's Bureau.

Members of a panel on training agreed that an emergency program would largely be of a short-term nature, geared chiefly toward preparing women and other workers for specific jobs, rather than giving them the versatile training which is the goal of peacetime programs.

Frieda Miller, head of the Women's Bureau, reported that a study on the economic responsibilities of trade union women was under way and asked for suggestions on the contents and final form of the report.

On state labor legislation for women, the committee expressed concern that "misguided patriotism" in the defense period might cause such laws to be unwisely abandoned or relaxed, with resulting harm not only to the health of the worker but also to maximum production.

Both CIO and AFL unions are represented on the Women's Bureau advisory committee. Present at the meeting for the CIO were Helen Blanchard, Community & Social Agency Employes; Gladys Dickason, Clothing Workers; Katherine Ellickson, CIO Research Dept.; Lillian Hatcher, Auto Workers, and Wanda Pilot, Textile Workers.

Health Departments Called Your 'Best Buy'

The best health bargain an American community can get with its tax dollars is a full-time local health department, the Federal Social Security Agency says in a new pamphlet, "Your Best Buy."

The publication is aimed at one-third of the country's communities which do not have such services at present. It points out the advantages to the community of establishing a department and the need for such a department in suburban fringe and rural communities which might be turned into crowded areas by bombing of cities, and tells something of the services, staff and financing necessary for a good local program. The pamphlet can be ordered from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington 25, D. C., at 5c a copy, with discounts for bulk orders.

Los Angeles Tenants At Mercy Of Landlords

By D. ROCKWELL CLARK

CONFUSION on the rent control front, engendered by Sen. Cain (R. Wash.) claimed 390,000 victims last week when Housing Expediter Tighe Woods reluctantly signed the Los Angeles City Council's decontrol order, which had been fought in and out of court since last June.

The lid is off Los Angeles rents for good, apparently. At any rate, nothing short of a new and stronger rent control law, allowing the federal government to step in and reimpose controls, or an act of the California Legislature can give Los Angeles tenants any more protection from rent gouges. Even if it wanted to, which it doesn't, the Los Angeles City Council could not, under terms of the state constitution, pass any kind of a local ordinance.

Rent increase notices have gone out over the city by the thousands, and more are expected. OHE received word from one anguished tenant, the day after the decontrol order was signed, stating that his rent had been raised from $60 to $175 a month.

WOODS originally refused to sign the order because the City Council had not complied with the provision of law requiring full and adequate public hearing and the consideration of evidence as to the existence or lack of existence of a housing shortage in the area. What Cain did was to jam through an amendment to the recently enacted rent control extension bill, which in effect validated the City Council's action.

"This is the most distasteful task I have had to carry out in the administration of a law which has been filled with heartaches and headaches since its inception," Woods said as he signed the order.

He added that the City Council could have changed its mind "up to this very moment," and expressed the hope that "the landlords of Los Angeles will show more consideration for their tenants than the City Council has shown."

Once a community has voted to take itself out from under rent control, it cannot vote itself back: but if OHE has decontrolled on its own motion, it can reimpose controls. Hence Woods is in the ironic position now of wishing he had decontrolled Los Angeles some time ago on his own motion.

THE LOS ANGELES story throws into sharp relief the current policy battles over economic stabilization. The United Labor Policy Committee, in its statement to President Truman of last week, said:

"The present prohibitions upon the control of food prices and rents are an effective barrier to any system of price or wage controls, and the elimination of these prohibitions are preliminary to any workable stabilization action . . . The Defense Production Act should be promptly amended to accomplish these ends."

As matters stand now, the rent control law went virtually unamended—it merely extended the time limit before which communities now under federal controls must decide whether they want them continued until next June.

The business-and-profits-as-usual boys claim that it's unfair to have kept rents "frozen" when everything else has been free and easy for the past four years. They say, therefore, that even if anything more strict is done about rents, the landlords must first be allowed to collect what the traffic will bear. In other words, if there is any kind of tougher rent control law, it must be imposed only after a rent control "holiday."

The fact is that rents have not been frozen — far from it. There are more than 11 ways in the present law for landlords to get rent boosts, and during 1950, OHE has approved approximately one million petitions for increases, or about 86% of all petitions received. The increases have averaged $7.36 a month, or nearly 18%.

SOME OF these increases have come about through OHE's so-called "Chicago plan," under which landlords were offered a blanket percentage increase if they had not been granted one since 1947. This was thought up to take care of the smaller landlords who for some reason claimed to be unaware of the provisions of the law.

(As an OHE spokesman remarked last week, if the landlords are suffering unjust and discriminatory treatment under the law, how come the landlord lobby testified so vigorously against imposition of an excess profits tax?)

Furthermore, an 18% increase in rents means a far larger increase than that on net income, in many cases. The law allows a fair net operating income after expenses, and says that one may raise his rents as expenses increase in order to maintain his net income.

What happens more often than not, according to actual figures, is that the increase awarded the landlord more than makes up for increased expenses. For instance —and this is a real case—a landlord grossing $600 a year on one rental unit found his net from that unit was $50 a year—less than he was entitled to under the law. So he got a 15% increase, raising his gross to $690 per unit. But his expenses had already gone up and were now stabilized. Result: he adds $90 to his net income, or gets an increase of 180% in net profit.

This, incidentally, is a "fair" return under the law.

"I may have to detour this year, mama. The workers' buying power has gone to the nether regions!"

Navy Yard Optical Workers In CIO

The Government & Civic Employees Organizing Committee hasn't gone down to the sea in ships, but representatives of the new CIO affiliate have made a number of visits to the Naval Gun Factory in Washington, D. C.

As a result, workers in the optical section there have been granted a charter and are now officially recognized as GCEOC Local 3. GCEOC Secy.-Treas. Milton Murray says the workers decided they had more to gain by becoming associated with the CIO than by joining a craft union.

Brehm Indicted On Contribution Charge

Rep. Walter E. Brehm (R. O.) was indicted last week by a federal grand jury in Washington on charges of illegally accepting $1380 in campaign "contributions" from two women who formerly worked in his office.

At a surprise hearing before Judge Edward A. Tamm on Dec. 21, he pleaded not guilty and was freed in $1000 bond for trial on Mar. 12.

Brehm, who is 58, was re-elected to his fifth term at the Nov. 7 election. A resident of Millersport, O., he was accused of taking $380 from Mrs. Clara Soliday, 75, a former clerk in his office, in 1947 and 1948, and taking $1000 on five different dates in 1948 from Mrs. Emma S. Craven, who succeeded her.

White Knights Still Tilting At Windmills

By BRADFORD V. CARTER
For Labor Press Association

LABOR AND other liberal groups have been urging the Federal Communications Commission to set aside television channels for educational purposes.

The testimony of one witness revealed the all-too-common attitude exemplified by the man who once said "In this argument between Smith and Jones I'm neutral—I'm neutral against Jones." The witness is like those who speak of freedom, democracy, the right of both sides to be heard—and don't mean a word of it.

He was William J. Walbin, chancellor of the University of the State of New York and also chancellor of the Board of Regents of the State of New York.

Suppose his group got a television channel for educational purposes, FCC Chairman Wayne Coy asked Walbin. Would it give students and the public impartial information on great and controversial public issues? It certainly would, said Walbin.

"Suppose there is a serious strike in New York," Coy went on. "Would it be proper for you to tell people the issues, from the standpoint of both the strikers and the employer?"

WALBIN hemmed and hawed. That wouldn't be "wise," he said. To say anything about a strike "would not be for the best interests of education" and would "interfere with the work of the classroom."

"Isn't it important to tell students and the public about the issues involved in a big strike?"

Here's what Walbin replied:

"I am not sure how far an edutional institution ought to get into that sort of thing. They tried it at Vassar (a girl's college) and some of the girls went on the picket line. They did not get anything educational out of it."

Walbin's viewpoint is all too common among the "best people." About the time he was presenting his views on education and the public interest, Adelbert W. Lee was sounding off just a few blocks away.

Lee is a member of the Washington School Board. He wanted a textbook on government thrown out. It seems that the book pointed out that sometimes the poor need protection against the rich. Next week he had another complaint; it seems that the Conference of Small Business Organizations didn't care for two other texts used in the Washington schools. (The conference, contrary to the nice sound of its name, is not the protector of the corner druggist or the little candy shop —it's another lobby "front" for oil interests and similar groups.)

LEE SUGGESTED that an "outside expert" be called in to pass on all the textbooks. His candidate? David Temple, a former teacher now on the staff of Sen. Hickenlooper (R. Iowa), one of the loudest non-friends of labor.

Now listen to one George B. Howell, a Tampa, Fla., businessman. This is what he wrote to Constance G. Dall:

"Frankly I was quite shocked at the attitude of many of the faculty members at Cornell, especially as regards not only our economic situation but the inroads which communism is making in many of our larger universities. If the men who are teaching these boys take the attitude that they should tell them everything and let the student make up his own mind, we are certainly doomed. I always thought it was the purpose of a teacher to guide young men in their thinking along the right lines. From the number of educators among the 'fringe' group, it looks as though too many brains call for too much free thinking."

Constance Dall is assistant to Merwin K. Hart, head of the National Economic Council, a violently anti-labor, anti-farmer, anti-Fair Deal group, exposed by the Buchanan Committee of the House which investigated lobbying.

People like Walbin, Lee and Howell would be indignant if they were told their ideas are un-American. But they are. What's more, they're foolish.

LISTEN TO Peter F. Drucker, a management consultant for big business. In addressing a recent meeting of the Public Relations Society (the boys who write the slick propaganda for big corporations and organizations) Drucker called their stuff "nonsense."

He said "blatant propaganda" is based on "a false assumption" that the public, and especially workers, are ignorant people whose heads are full of "un-American" ideas.

It assumes, he said, that many members of the public "are hostile to the American free enterprise system, and are at least slightly infected by collectivist doctrines."

"Management has the queer belief that we are dealing with people," he said, "who have to be 'cured.' That is utter nonsense, as anyone who has had any contact with the American worker knows."

Maybe Walbin, Lee and Howell will now sleep easier of nights. But that desn't solve the question. Is it the function of education (including television) to present both sides of all issues, or just "guiding along the right lines?" We are now in a battle for survival against Stalin.

Under his rule the people are "guided along the right line."

Organizationally Speaking

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

The turn of the half century marks tremendous achievements by organized labor, especially of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. The CIO has established itself as a dynamic, moving, ever-growing institution. The CIO has helped millions of workers in industry, not only those in the CIO, but all workers. It has provided our people with the good things in life, improved wages, greater security, social benefits, opportunity for all workers of America. The CIO has not only influenced the domestic policies of our great country, its influence in foreign affairs is being felt.

Allan Haywood

It is our hope that our achievements will assist in achieving universal peace and attainment of our democratic ideals. We, the workers of America, must be prepared at all times to defend and if necessary to fight for our way of life. The best way of protecting our democratic ideals is by building our unions stronger, by creating a stronger bond of fraternal feeling among all the working people of America.

To you all I wish each and every one the merriest of Christmases and a happy and prosperous New Year.

Adolph Germer, director of organization, International Woodworkers, reports that in a representation election at the Marenakos Logging Co., Inc., Yacolt, Wash., the workers voted in favor of the IWA-CIO by the following vote: Eligible 64, IWA-CIO 33, no union 13.

Reg. Dir. Irwin DeShetler reports that Amalgamated Retail Local 55, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, won a representation election among employes of the Federal Department Stores, Los Angeles, Calif., by a vote of RWDSU 20, AFL 8. Leonard Levy, business manager, was in charge.

Field Rep. Ben Stahl reports that agents of the Quaker City Life Insurance Co., Philadelphia, Pa., voted in favor of the Insurance and Allied Workers Organizing Committee, CIO, in a union shop election by 99 for the union shop, 1 against.

Reg. Dir. Frank Bonacci reports that in a representation election at Arch Browning, Inc., Salt Lake City, Utah, employes voted in favor of the CIO Auto Workers by a vote of UAW 30, no union 0.

Pres. Thomas Andert of the United Optical Workers of America-CIO reports that in a union shop election at the Simpson Lens Co., Chicago, Ill., the workers voted 140 for the union shop, 18 against. Natl. Rep. Bill Widman was in charge.

GM Stages Brief 'Hold Back' Against Roll Back

THE General Motors Corp., which last year made more money than any corporation in history—and is making even more this year — last week started industry's first "sit-down strike" of the current crisis.

The "hold-back" didn't last long, however.

GM's answer to an Economic Stabilization Agency order to roll back its prices to the Dec. 1 level was to direct its 12,000 dealers to stop selling 1951 models of its Cadillacs, Pontiacs and Chevrolets until it could examine the directive and determine its possible effect.

Prices of the three brands of automobiles were increased when the 1951 models went on the market. The company's other 1951 models have not yet been offered for sale, and 1950 models are still available.

A FEW DAYS later, GM asked for modification of the roll back order. It proposed that it be permitted to sell the cars it had taken off the market at its original prices, with the understanding that it make rebates if the order is ultimately upheld. Alan Valentine, ESA administrator, rejected the request and pointed out to GM that it "certainly must realize the impossibility of handling price control" in the manner suggested.

Then GM yielded. On Dec. 21 it told its dealers to resume sales.

On Dec. 20 the Wage Stabilization Board held a closed hearing with several auto manufacturers and a delegation from the CIO Auto Workers headed by Pres. Walter P. Reuther. The session was called to consider wage stabilization in the industry as a follow-up to the price control order.

Reuther warned that "pin Point" controls will not work and will lead to unrest in the auto industry.

GM and Ford took substantially the same stand. GM claimed abrogation of the agreements with the UAW would cause "industrial unrest," and asserted that its employes are entitled to higher wages if the cost of living increases. When, all living costs are controlled, including those for food and shelter, the cost of living provision in the contract "is no problem," it added.

FORD OFFERED a five-point formula for price changes since the Communists invaded Korea in June. It included adjustments to cover higher cost of materials, adjustments to cover automatic wage increases, other adjustments to cover about 75% of the higher production cost caused by lower volume, adjustments for changes in design, and relief for special hardship cases.

The ESA on Dec. 19 asked all business voluntarily to freeze prices at their Dec. 1 levels and in some cases to roll them back still further. The only alternative to voluntary compliance, the nation was told, is a mandatory roll back order. While there was no request for a voluntary freeze on wages, the matter was said to be under study.

AMONG THE first large manufacturers to announce compliance with the price request were Ford and Intl. Harvester. Officers of the latter claimed an immediate hardship would result and asked a hearing.

The Senate last week confined unanimously President Truman's appointment of Charles E. Wilson, president of General Electric, as head of the new Defense Production Administration. His appointment followed the President's proclamation of a state of national emergency.

Wilson wrote his own job description and has almost unlimited powers. The office he heads will have complete jurisdiction over production, including the National Security Resources Board, the National Production Authority of the Dept. of Commerce, and the new defense agencies in the Depts. of Agriculture and Interior, the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Reconstruction Finance Corp. In addition, it will govern manpower, wages, prices, transportation and defense buying.

—From St. Louis Post-Dispatch

Strange Traffic Control

Packing Unions Ask Voice in Control Talks

Representatives of the country's organized packinghouse unions filed strong protests last week with Economic Stabilizer Alan Valentine against being excluded from conferences on price controls in the industry.

Pres. Ralph Helstein of the CIO Packinghouse Workers and Pres. Earl W. Jimerson of the AFL Meat Cutters demanded "participation at policy-making levels so that the voice of the working and consuming public may be heard." The experiences of the last war, they reminded him, proved that "short-sightedness and inefficiency" arose from ignoring the opinion of labor in framing stabilization measures in the meat industry.

Hoover Refuses To Recognize Changes In World Since 1920s

A VOICE FROM the past—that of Herbert Hoover — was added last week to those of other Republicans who have been sniping at America's foreign policy.

The former President said the nation's first line of defense must be the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Responsibility for defending Western Europe, he added, rests upon Western Europe.

He, in effect, damned the program of internationalism and aid to allies which the U. S. has been following for years.

But Hoover said he wasn't advocating isolationism.

The former President's speech was in sharp contrast with views expressed a short time earlier by another Republican leader—Thomas E. Dewey—who said the Truman administration wasn't going far enough and fast enough in its campaign against the Reds.

THE TWO speeches sharply illustrated the wide differences of opinion within the GOP. Hoover shot at the administration from one side, Dewey from the other.

And both came at about the same time some Republicans in the House and Senate intensified their campaign against Secy. of State Dean Acheson.

First reaction from Europe indicated Europeans didn't like the Hoover proposals.

Said the Manchester Guardian, liberal British newspaper:

"Hoover's record as a prophet and seer has not perhaps been remarkable for sustained wisdom."

Wire services quoted a French government source as saying, "The speech comes at a very bad time—just when the nomination of Gen. Dwight Eisenhower had brought hope to Europe that the speeches would give way to coordinated action and that something concrete would be done."

The Hearst newspapers, on the other hand, thought the Hoover plan was wonderful.

First labor reaction was what could have been expected: Union leaders said it looked as if the elderly ex-President was peddling the old-line GOP isolationism.

'Final Payment' Is Made By Alcoa

The CIO Steelworkers have signed a "final payment" agreement with the Almuinum Company of America covering 17,000 workers in 10 plants.

In addition to a "down payment" 10% pay raise won last October, the final settlement provides for six paid holidays and further wage increases of 2c an hour for workers at Alcoa, Tenn., Badin, N. C., Bauzite, Ark., and Mobile, Ala. A 3c an hour hike was won at Point Comfort, Tex.

The union and the company had been negotiating for several weeks since shortly after the Steelworkers signed with U. S. Steel. The increases in October averaged betwen 14 and 15c hourly.

CIO Aids AFL To Win Strike

Refusal of 8000 members of 19 CIO and AFL unions to cross the picket lines of another union last week helped win a 29-day strike of 500 delivery drivers at three of the largest department stores in Pittsburgh.

Local 249, General Teamsters, Chauffeurs & Helpers Union, struck the stores of Joseph Horne Co., Gimbel's and Kaufmann's, a division of the May Co.

The agreement, which settled the strike, was retroactive to Nov. 1. It granted the union's demands for an immediate 5c hourly increase, in addition to a 15c pay boost won in a three-day walkout two weeks earlier. Also provided in the contract is an insurance program valued at 3c an hour, effective March 1, 1951.

CWA Asks Recognition Once Held By ACA

After a vigorous organizing campaign, the CIO Communications Workers have demanded recognition and bargaining rights for employes of the Globe Wireless Corp.

The company, a subsidiary of the Dollar Steamship Lines, is an international carrier of wireless messages. It has 100 employes in San Francisco, New York, Honolulu and Manila.

The employes once were represented by the American Communications Association, which was booted from the CIO because its leaders preferred the Communist line to CIO policies. They left the ACA after what the CWA describes as "a poorly handled strike which was lost."

Living Cost Clauses 'Tools For Stability,' Says Reuther

THE WAGE Stabilization Board, on "objective and careful" examination of all factors in the stabilization program, can only conclude that continuation of cost-of-living and improvement factor clauses in labor agreements is sound, Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers said in Washington last week after a WSB hearing on wage stabilization in the auto industry.

Such clauses are not only just to wage earners, but "are essential tools with which we can achieve economic stability and maximum defense and essential civilian production," he claimed.

"The industries in which the UAW-CIO has more than one million members covered by its contracts are all key industries in our nation's mobilization for defense," he said.

"Our long range contracts provide the basis for economic stability, harmonious labor-management relations and continuous production for the next five years in a major section of America's basic defense industries. The long-range agreements worked out between the UAW-CIO and the various corporations and plants under contract are the results of the collective bargaining efforts of years of practical experience of labor and management.

To set aside these contracts would undo years of joint labor-management efforts and would defeat the very purposes of the Defense Production Act. One of the purposes is stated in the title, as follows, 'to facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security.'"

HE RECALLED that in its first statement the WSB listed wage stabliization as but one of 18 needed stabilization steps. He said:

"We shall successfully meet the challenge of Communist tyranny and make freedom secure in the world only if we achieve all-out mobilization of our human and material resources. This will require overall long-range planning and use of our total resources.

"Unrelated pin-point attacks and improvisation on the anti-inflation front will complicate, not facilitate, the job."

CSC Continues Drive For Korea

The campaign of the National CIO Community Services Committee for funds for work in Korea is continuing despite the recent turn of events there, Leo Perlis, committee director, announced last week.

"We shall be able to use the funds at the appropriate time," he said, "or to help trade union refugees or to implement the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions' Asiatic report which calls for the establishment of regional offices in Korea.

"In any event, the funds will be expended in consultation with the CIO International Committee and the ICFTU."